Theological Workshop: A flexible program for lay leaders in Spain

Osmundo Ponce has been a mission co-worker with the PC(USA) since 1989. His most recent assignment began in April 2007 when he was invited by the Evangelical Church of Spain and the Reformed Episcopal Church of Spain to teach at the United Evangelical Theological Seminary in Madrid.

He writes, "When I came, I found great expectations about the proposed theological education program of lay church leaders. We quickly devoted ourselves to this task and the creation of the Theological Workshop."

The Theological Workshop provides tools for leaders to enrich their ministries and can be completed in two years. One of the key characteristics of this program is its flexibility. It allows participants to complete the course of study within lifestyle constraints such as a heavy work schedule.

From the beginning, this program has been a success. The faculty members at the seminary write all the materials and Rev. Ponce edits them. The teachers were the first to participate in the program because of the impact of their work.

From the beginning, this program has been a success. The faculty members at the seminary write all the materials and Rev. Ponce edits them. The teachers were the first to participate in the program because of the impact of their work.

"It is a very exciting task," continues Rev. Ponce. "In the places that we have visited, the pastors have said to us, 'This is what we need.'" The Theological Workshop now serves those in Madrid, Barcelona, Pamplona, Bilbao, Valencia and in the Balearic Islands. The Evangelical Presbyterian Church of Portugal has also expressed interest in introducing the Theological Workshop.

"But I do not do this alone," concludes Rev. Ponce. "We have formed a work team, with one person in the north of the country and another in the south. This allows us to attend to different church traditions. Presently, the Methodist, Presbyterian, Anabaptist and Pentecostal churches are participating."
