

Liturgical Index of Commonly Used Praise Songs, 2008–2009

Introduction to the Online Resource

Kati Salmons

We have provided an online index of popularly used worship songs available at www.pcusa.org/calltoworship. The index was compiled from information supplied by Church Copyright License International (CCLI) from church reports of copy activity during 2008–2009. We hope this list will supply you with many new songs, though it is not intended to be a resource for the newest songs for “contemporary worship” (the websites listed below can be helpful for that purpose). This list does demonstrate, however, what praise songs have been sung in the past year in cross-denominational congregations. The index supplies suggestions for how we, as Reformed worshipers, might successfully use praise songs as a part of our liturgy.

All of the songs listed in the index can be obtained from the CCLI website (www.ccli.com). The type of downloads available depend on the level of license you purchase and range from lyrics and chord charts to hymn sheets with choral parts. Most of the songs also are available through Praise Charts (www.praisecharts.com), which offers a comprehensive search engine to find sheet music, lead sheets with harmony, and sound files. Praise Charts can be helpful for finding specific songs, samples of sound files, and sheet music, as well as arrangements for small and large ensembles. Both websites provide multiple printing options, such as piano/vocal sheets, lead (chord) sheets, and choral music with multiple key options.

Both websites offer credible arrangements and assist with abiding by copyright laws. As with the performance and printing of music and lyrics, users must have permission from the publisher. If you are printing music for a variety of musicians, it is important to use resources such as these to ensure the legal copyright requirements are being met.

Several other resources exist for mass reproduction of materials within the copyright laws. A few are listed below.
