1001 Worshipping Communities Video Competition

Moderator Presa recognized Philip Lotspeich, coordinator for Church Growth in the Presbyterian Mission Agency, who introduced the 1001 Worshipping Communities video competition. The assembly viewed the top five videos.

Voting Procedures

Moderator Presa guided commissioners and advisory delegates through three trial runs of the keypad voting system. None were successful.
RECOGNITION OF HEIDELBERG CATECHISM

Moderator Presa announced that the amendment process had been successfully completed and the common translation of the Heidelberg Catechism would now be added to the PC(USA)’s Book of Confessions. Moderator Presa then led the assembly in the affirmation of faithfulness from the Heidelberg Catechism. See pages 72, 75, 391.

1001 WORSHIPPING COMMUNITIES VIDEO COMPETITION

Moderator Press instructed commissioners and advisory delegates to use the keypad voting system to choose their top three videos. After the vote, Philip Lotspeich announced that Composing Community, the video from New Hope Presbyterian Church in Orange, California (Los Ranchos Presbytery), garnered the most votes.

ELECTION OF THE MODERATOR

Moderator Presa called for the election of the Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as required by Book of Order, G-3.0501, and Standing Rule H.

Moderator Presa recognized Elder Vince Thomas, the moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, who reported on Moderator candidate expenses.

Stated Clerk Parsons described the procedure for the election.

Moderator Presa asked all nominees to come to the area at the back of the platform and meet with Assembly Assistant Conrad Rocha and Landon Whitsitt, Vice Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Moderator Presa announced that three candidates had declared their intention to stand for election. There were no nominations from the floor.

Three candidates were placed in nomination. John Wilkinson, Presbytery of Genesee Valley, was nominated by Robin Lyn Valdez of the Presbytery of Grace and Emily Stevens of the Presbytery of Genesee Valley. Heath Rada, Presbytery of Western North Carolina, was nominated by Trip McKinnon of the Presbytery of Savannah. Kelly Allen, Presbytery of Mission, was nominated by Drew Harrison of the Presbytery of Mission.

Each candidate was afforded an opportunity to address the General Assembly for five minutes.

Stated Clerk Parsons then explained the use of the speaker-recognition system, and the candidates responded to questions from the floor for forty-five minutes. At the expiration of the time allotted for this process, the candidates met former Vice-Moderator Landon Whitsitt backstage at the docket coordinator’s desk.

Stated Clerk Parsons called for a test of the keypad voting system for commissioners only. Because the total number of votes did not equal the number of keypads that had been distributed to commissioners at the start of the plenary (630), Stated Clerk Parsons declared that commissioners would vote for Moderator using paper ballots. Moderator Presa first asked advisory delegates to show their preferences for Moderator by holding up large red cards. Then, paper ballots were distributed to commissioners.

Heath Rada was elected Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014) on the first ballot, receiving a total of 331 votes. Of the total votes cast John Wilkinson received 157 and Kelly Allen received 143.

These minutes are posted on PC-biz under the business for Committee 2 (Bills and Overtures), Items 02-03 and 02-04, and two copies are posted on the bulletin boards near the registration booths.

B. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures has reviewed and found in order the minutes of the Mid Council Commission and the Mid Council Commission II (02-Info). (See p. 166.)

ECUMENICAL GREETINGS

Moderator Rada recognized the Reverend Dr. Setri Nyomi, general secretary of the World Communion of Reformed Churches; the Reverend Dr. John Gibaut, representative of the general secretary of the World Council of Churches; and James Winkler, general secretary and president of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., who brought greetings to the assembly.

STATED CLERK’S ORIENTATION II

Moderator Rada recognized Stated Clerk Parsons for an update on voting procedures. Stated Clerk Parsons announced that electronic voting would be conducted using keypads or “clickers,” and he explained how to use the keypads. Moderator Rada called for a test vote to calibrate the voting system.

Moderator Rada called on Stated Clerk Parsons to explain how the assembly would respond to the request from Business Meeting III for a division of the house on the vote to poll presbytery executives for advisory votes. Moderator Rada then called for the vote. The motion was defeated.

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS UPDATE:
REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

Moderator Rada recognized Gene McEvoy, moderator of the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures, for a report on the financial implications on the per capita budget of actions taken at this assembly. Moderator McEvoy presented a per capita apportionment of $7.02 for 2015 and $7.02 for 2016 (the same per capita apportionment as 2014) and announced that the total financial implications of actions recommended by assembly committees amounts to: $14,800 for 2014; $146,065 for 2015 ($.08 additional per capita); and $80,725 for 2016 ($.05 additional per capita). On Saturday morning, the committee will present to the assembly its final recommendation for balancing the per capita budget for 2015 and 2016.

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS UPDATE:
REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

Moderator Rada recognized Linda Scholl, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination, for a report on financial implications to the mission budget of actions taken at this assembly. Scholl reported the total financial implications of actions under considerations by the assembly for the mission budgets were: $276,619 for 2015, and $68,418 for 2016. On Saturday morning, the committee will present to the assembly its final recommendation for balancing the mission budget for 2015 and 2016.

NOMINATIONS INFORMATION

Moderator Rada recognized Stated Clerk Parsons who reported there have been no challenges to the nominees of the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) found in Item 00-02; therefore, per the Standing Rules, these unchallenged nominations in Item 00-02 are now included in the consent agenda. Additional nominations have been made and are listed in Moderator’s Report, Item 00-03, and GANC report, Item 00-04. Floor nominations for these positions are due Thursday, June 19, 2014, by 2:00 p.m.
Moderator Rada introduced the Wednesday Consent Agenda, titled in PC-biz as 02-WCA (for Wednesday Consent Agenda). The Wednesday Consent Agenda includes recommendations from committees that have been approved by 75 percent or more of the committee members. Items that were approved by less than 75 percent will be voted on individually in plenary. When the consent agenda is presented to the body for a vote, the assembly will be voting for all the items included, without any alterations, in a single vote.

Moderator Rada recognized Susan Orr, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, and Raul Santiago-Rivera, Vice-Moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures. Moderator Rada announced that all commissioners have the right to remove an item from the consent agenda for any reason. He said it is good to keep in mind that the process was put in place by the last General Assembly as a way to streamline procedural work and to allow time for discussion and discernment on the more complex issues before the church.

On behalf of the committee, Susan Orr moved that items listed in Item 02-05 (items that had met criteria for inclusion on the consent agenda) be exempt from the Standing Rules so that they could be acted upon later in the assembly. The motion was approved.

Having added and removed items as requested, the assembly approved 02-WCA, which included:

Item 03-03. On Amending G-3.0501 and G-3.0503 to Give YAAD’s Voice and Vote and to Rename Them as “Young Adult Commissioners”—From the Synod of the Covenant.

Disapproved with comment. [See p. 170.]

Comment: While the committee recognizes the value of the YAAD program, the input these advisors give us, the perspective they bring to our discussions, and the experiences it gives our emerging church leaders, we recommend Item 03-03 not be approved for the following reasons: 1) There is flexibility within the current Book of Order for this intent to happen. 2) The overturing actually could work counter to the intent of the overture in that there would be no prior vote for advice; their voice would be blended with all other votes with no distinctions as to how the younger commissioners were thinking. 3) We also wish to honor and respect the advice of COGA and the ACC that offer serious considerations on how to include young adults in the whole life of the church. 4) The 221st General Assembly (2014) encourages the COGA to continue the discussion of how to include young adults in all levels of the life and ministry of the PC(USA) including the encouragement of sessions and presbyteries to affirm the call of young adults to the office of ruling elder, while encouraging persons who have served as YAADs as well as other advisory delegates to the 221st General Assembly (2014) to be included in this discussion and discernment.

[Like with the original Accompanying Letter, while not of constitutional character, whenever the Confession of Belhar is printed in the Book of Confessions, it should be accompanied by the Accompanying Letter from the 221st General Assembly (2014) to explain the context of the confession for the PC(USA). 3. Call upon all congregations, councils, seminaries, and denominational conferences to engage in serious and prayerful study of the Confession of Belhar and the [two] accompanying Letters of Belhar during the next twelve months, making use of the variety of resources produced by the special committee and others, which can be found at www.pcusa.org/belhar.

This process would allow COTE to make any needed corrections prior to the start of the committee.

MEMORIAL MINUTE FOR SARA B. MOSELEY

Moderator Rada recognized Dan Klein who presented the memorial minute to celebrate the life of Sara B. Moseley.

Sara Bernice Honea (“HOE nee”) was born August 9, 1917, in Anson, Texas. She joined the Church Triumphant on July 18, 2013. And she was a Presbyterian every day of her life. In 1936, at a Synod of Texas youth conference, Sara Bernice met John D. Moseley. They soon married and spent the rest of the twentieth century at the center of the life of the Presbyterian Church and Church-Related Higher Education.

Sara Bernice served the Presbyterian church through Presbyterian Women and at the presbytery, synod, and General Assembly levels. In 1978, she became the first woman to serve as Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

She later served as co-chair of Friends for Reunion and as the ecumenical delegate from the PCUS to the 1982 United Presbyterian Church General Assembly that approved the Plan for Reunion. After the reunion in 1983, Mrs. Moseley served as the first chair of the PC(USA) General Assembly Council.

She had an unmatched resume as a Presbyterian leader. But that resume doesn’t begin to describe her. To use a biblical image: As much as anyone we will ever know, Sara Bernice Moseley was Mary and Martha. All of us who knew her knew that she was always both as gracious as Martha and as devoted as Mary. Her graciousness was legendary. Austin College—where she served as First Lady from 1953 to 1978—and Grace Presbytery are full of stories about her hospitality and warmth. Sara Bernice was every bit as gracious and genuinely concerned about others as Martha in Luke 10. And—unlike Martha—she did it all without whining.

She was also every bit as devoted as Mary. All the way through last Spring, just a few months before she died, remember at age 97, Sara Bernice attended most of the cultural, academic, and religious events on the Austin College campus. She faithfully read every issue of Presbyterian Outlook, Presbyterians Today, and Christian Century. She maintained correspondence with friends throughout the church and hosted numerous General Assembly Moderators (including Neal Presa in March of 2013). She did this because she was devoted to her beloved Presbyterian church and to Austin College (especially Austin College students). Like Mary who “sat at the Lord’s feet and listened,” Sara Bernice was devoted to the things that mattered most to her. Sara Bernice used the adjective “grand” in normal conversation more than anyone else I have ever known. She talked about “grand days,” “grand circumstances,” “grand holidays,” “grand performances,” “grand friends,” “grand times,” and “grand surprises.”

As we pause today to remember and give thanks to God for the grand life and grand legacy of this grand woman, the best way for us to honor Sara Bernice Mosley is to strive—in our individual lives and in our life together—to follow her example:

- to be as grand as we can;
- to live fearlessly (and without complaint) in the face of obstacles;
- to devote ourselves to the people and communities that matter most to us; and
- to live each day with unfailing graciousness.

Like the other former Moderators we remember this week, Sara Bernice Moseley was an amazing gift and blessing to us and to our whole denomination.

She will be missed.
She will be remembered.
She should be celebrated.
She should be emulated.
Thanks be to God for Sara Bernice Moseley.

I. Plenary Action

10-01. On Amending W-4.9000 Concerning the Church’s Role in Legal Marriage and Services of Christian Covenant—From the Presbytery of Lehigh.

Approved with amendment. [See pp. 780–81.]

1. Amend Paragraph 5 to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“If they meet the requirements of the civil jurisdiction in which they intend to marry, a couple may request that a service of Christian marriage be conducted by a teaching elder in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), who is authorized, though not required, to act as an agent of the civil jurisdiction in recording the marriage contract. A couple requesting a service of Christian marriage shall receive instruction from the teaching elder, who [shall] [may] agree to the couple’s request only if, in the judgment of the teaching elder, the couple demonstrate sufficient understanding of the nature of the marriage covenant and commitment to living their lives together according to its values. In making this decision, the teaching elder may seek the counsel of the session, which has authority to permit or deny the use of church property for a marriage service.”

2. Add a new paragraph at the end to read as follows: [Text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“[Nothing herein shall compel a teaching elder to perform nor compel a session to authorize the use of church property for a marriage service that the teaching elder or the session believes is contrary to the teaching elder’s or the session’s discernment of the Holy Spirit and their understanding of the Word of God.]”

3. Amend Paragraph 3 to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. 10-03. On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000 to Affirm Pastoral Discretion in Performing Marriage Ceremonies—From the Presbytery of Heartland.

Amend the recommendation as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“Worship is a central element of the pastoral care of the people of God (W-6.3001, W-6.3010) in which a teaching elder’s discernment of the leading of the Holy Spirit is indispensable. The necessity of ensuring the exercise of freedom of conscience in the interpretation of Scripture (G-2.0105) in the planning and leadership of worship has deep roots in our Reformed tradition and theology. Because a service of marriage is one form of such worship, when a couple requests the involvement of the church in solemnizing their marriage as permitted by the laws [of the civil jurisdiction in which the marriage is to take place] [of the place where the couple seek to be married], teaching elders* have the pastoral responsibility to assess the capabilities, intentions, and readiness of the couple to be married (W-4.9002), and the freedom of conscience in the interpretation of Scripture (G-2.0105) to participate in any such marriage they believe the Holy Spirit calls them to perform.

“Exercising such discretion and freedom of conscience under the prayerful guidance of Scripture, teaching elders may conduct a marriage service for any such couple in the place where the community gathers for worship, [if] [so long as it is] approved by the session; or in such other place as may be suitable for a service of Christian worship. In no case shall any teaching elder’s conscience be bound to conduct any marriage service for any couple except by his or her understanding of the Word, and the leading of the Holy Spirit. The authoritative interpretation of this section by the 203rd General Assembly (1991) (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395, paragraphs 21.124–128), and the subsequent authoritative interpretations of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission relying upon it, are withdrawn and replaced with this authoritative interpretation.’

“*As in other places in the Directory for Worship, the use of “teaching elders” in this paragraph should be understood to include ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service.”

Answered with action on Item 10-02. [See p. 814.]

10-06. On Rescinding the 1991 Authoritative Interpretation Concerning Teaching Elders Performing Marriages for Same-Gender Couples and Sessions Permitting Such Ceremonies in their Facilities—From the Presbytery of New Castle.

Answered with action on Item 10-03. [See p. 816.]

10-07. On Creating a Task Force to Identify Common Ground and Reconcilable Differences with Respect to Same-Gender Marriage—From Eastern Korean Presbytery.

Disapproved. [See pp. 817–18.]

10-08. Commissioner Resolution. On Theological Diversity Concerning the Definition of Marriage.

[Determined to be out of order in accordance with Standing Rule A.8.d.]

10-NB. New Business. Recommend the 221st General Assembly (2014) direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to establish a way to bring reconciliation to the church that would involve visiting each presbytery and serving as a resource for each presbytery’s discussion of these actions in congregations and the presbytery at-large and present voices of reconciliation for the unity of the church.

Amend the recommendation as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with gray highlight (denotes plenary action), with brackets, and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with gray highlight(denotes plenary action), with brackets, and with an underline.]

“Recommend that the 221st General Assembly (2014) direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to establish a way to bring reconciliation to the church that would involve] [engage in the process of working together with churches in the task of reconciliation, starting with] visiting each presbytery and serving as a resource for each presbytery’s discussion of these actions in congregations and the presbytery at large and present voices of reconciliation for the unity of the church.”

MEMORIAL MINUTE FOR CYNTHIA J. BOLBACH

Moderator Rada recognized Teri Thomas, teaching elder and pastor of Northminster Presbyterian Church in Indianapolis, Indiana, who presented the memorial minute to celebrate the life of Cynthia J. Bolbach.

Ruling Elder Cynthia J. Bolbach began her service as Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010) by telling a story from the Gospels. It was the story of a person who was bedridden, sick, paralyzed, in need of healing. Jesus was in town but the crowd prevented anyone from getting to him. So a group of this invalid’s friends carried his cot to the place where Jesus was staying. They hoisted him onto the housetop, cut a hole in the roof, and lowered him down into the presence of his Lord.

I cannot hear this story without thinking of Cindy. She saw herself as one of those faithful friends, carrying the church she loved to a place of wholeness, healing, and health. She challenged each of us to join the faithful in that task. She said it this way.

“The Gospel tells us: we have to rely on others to help us. We have to rely on those who we know and on those who we don’t know. We have to rely on those with whom we agree, and on those with whom we don’t agree. We have to rely on anyone who is committed to following Jesus and who can think creatively, like those in the Gospel story, to help us see Jesus….Our challenge, our calling, is to get our paralyzed denomination to Jesus so that Jesus can start the healing. Let’s do just that. Let’s break through this roof. Let’s see Jesus.”

I will also never be able to sing the hymn—"A Mighty Fortress Is Our God”—without thinking of Cindy. I have never liked that hymn, but it was her favorite and I can certainly see why.

Cindy was a fortress for so many during her life. The way she cared for family and friends was powerful. She had strength and gentleness, determination and commitment, reliability and loyalty that never wavered.

Born and raised a devout Lutheran, Cindy had deep appreciation for the reformed tradition. She eventually became a Presbyterian in part, I believe, because she liked the notion that ruling ELDERS RULE.

She loved the polity of our church enough to lead the task force charged with reforming it. She could lead. She could listen. She could learn. She could bend. But the mighty fortress and never failing bulwark were forever at her core.

I will never hear the song Kum ba Yah without laughing with Cindy. This was all it took to bring out her utter disdain for anything syrupy or schmaltzy. She had a ferocious sense of humor and a brilliant wit. They sometimes overshadowed her deep compassion and her unfailing generosity.

So whenever you look up and see a hole in the roof, I invite you to remember Cindy and her vision for our church. Look for the friends gathered, trying to help—the young and the old, gay and straight, men and women, the teaching and the ruling elders.

Cindy did not ask us to fix holes. She challenged us to make them, so we could bring others to Jesus, to heal them and to heal the church.

In the end the healing story took a turn Cindy had not predicted. She became the one in the bed and she found herself being lifted by the church she loved into the presence of her Lord. She left a hole so we can continue to bring others to Jesus. She left the hole to remind us that we too will be lifted up to join her and all the saints in the inclusive, diverse, loving, awesome realm of God.

Thanks be to God for the life and ministry of Cynthia Jean Bolbach, a true ruling elder.

With humility, recognize that people from traditions other than ours, and Christians from other parts of the world can also be our teachers for this work. Among these new resources would be “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” and an accompanying study guide.

“7. 14-01. 1001 New Worshiping Communities—PMA.

Approved with comment. [See p. 995.]

Comment:

These recommendations are in response to the following referrals:

The 1001 New Worshiping Communities movement has the potential to make new disciples and revitalize the whole of the church; this has become one of the key directional goals of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The strategies for accomplishing the goal are outlined below and the progress to date is summarized. The recommendations summarized above will enhance the denomination’s commitment to the initiative and widen the base of participation. The 1001 New Worshiping Communities movement is a grassroots movement that is best implemented on a regional basis. Therefore, widespread understanding of and commitment to the movement is desirable. Local commitment can be cultivated if each presbytery and synod participates in planning an event tailored to its specific regional culture.

New worshiping communities are local and contextual. They will differ in style and strategy depending on the location. They are best planned, nurtured, and sustained at a local level. Starting something brand new has the potential to transform the entire body of Christ, including traditional congregations and councils. The possibility for transformation multiplies to the extent that it reaches each corner of the denomination. The goal is for every presbytery to experience firsthand the impact of new growth and missional ministry.

Strategies:

• Communicate the vision through producing videos and writing stories about innovative, creative communities.
• Employ a variety of communication tools such as Facebook, website, Twitter, newsletters, and YouTube to cast the vision.
• Recruit potential leaders for New Worshiping Communities (NWC) through visits to seminaries, presbyteries, conferences, colleges, and gatherings, meeting with potential leaders, helping them to discern a call to NWC leadership.
• Support NWC leaders with training, coaching, internships, and assessments through Presbyterian Centers for New Church Innovation.
• Continue to add regional Centers for New Church Innovation until there are six regional centers with national impact (currently two are fully functional and another two are in formative stages).
• Resource mid councils by visiting presbytery and synod meetings and presenting workshops at national conferences such as Big Tent, Triennium, New Wilmington Mission Conference, Wee Kirk, and Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant conferences.
• Present “Get in the Game” (vision casting) events at presbyteries, seminaries, conferences, and other gatherings.
• Provide resources such as Starting New Worshiping Communities to help leadership teams get started with solid theological and strategic foundations.
• Provide training and assessment for leaders.
• Provide some financial support for NWCs through Mission Development Resource Committee grants.
• Train prospective NWC leaders through offering internships for college and seminary students.

The initiative was launched during the 220th General Assembly (2012), and as of December 2013 the following milestones have been reached:

• Number of New Worshiping Communities launched to date: 173.
• Presbyteries with at least one new worshiping community: 89.
• Seed Grants given by the Presbyterian Mission Agency to encourage innovation: 73.
14-02. Educate a Child, Transform the World—PMA.

Amend the recommendation by adding a new Recommendation 7. to read as follows: [Text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“[7. Urge those developing this initiative and its metrics to build upon values, traditions, and analysis embodied in previous General Assembly policy on public education and the impacts of poverty, and to consider ways that this initiative continues the work of child advocacy approved by previous assemblies.]”

Approved with comment. [See pp. 998–99.]

Comment:

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a historical commitment to joining Christ’s mission in local and global communities and many have discussed and written about the concept of the missional church in recent years. The Presbyterian Mission Agency, in its 2013–2016 Mission Work Plan, has made engaging young adults through mission and volunteer service a priority and believes shaping multigenerational, faith-based relationships dedicated to service in local communities and the world will help the church better follow Christ’s mission.

For nearly 200 years, the Presbyterian church has served as one of the greatest forces for mission in the world. The church is called to minister to the immediate needs and hurts of people. The Book of Order states: “In the life of the congregation, individual believers are equipped for the ministry of witness to the love and grace of God in and for the world. The congregation reaches out to people, communities, and the world to share the good news of Jesus Christ, to gather for worship to offer care and nurture to God’s children, to speak for social justice and righteousness, and to bear witness to the truth and to the reign of God that is coming into the world” (G-1.0101).

Presbyterians have sought to be a mission-centered church from their inception and have a strong, unwavering belief that there is no other way truly to be the church. Many have discussed and written about the concept of the missional church in recent years. One Presbyterian scholar, Darrell Guder, has written on this vital topic for the church today. In his book, Missional Church: A Vision for the Sending of the Church in North America, Guder and his colleagues provide key insights into the recent missional church movement.

Guder and his colleagues discuss three themes that are important to this proposal: the shift the church must make, the purpose of the church, and the role of denominational structures. Guder argues that to be missional the church must “move from church with mission to mission church.” Most churches articulate a commitment to mission and have a mission program. If they are large enough, they likely will have a specific pastor devoted to mission. Many churches support several overseas missionaries and are probably contributing money and service to a local mission, homeless shelter, or food bank. In this construct, mission is seen as one of the many activities and programs of the church. The purpose of the local church is not to be what Guder calls “vendors of religious services and goods,” with mission merely being one of a myriad of programs. Rather, doing mission is central to what it means to be the church. This is the shift that the church must make.

The second major theme in Guder’s work challenges the very definition of what it means to be the church. Guder argues that it is “a new understanding of the church as a body of people sent on a mission.” The church is thus not only a body that gathers for a worship service. The church is also a group of people organizing together so they can serve the community around them most effectively. The purpose of gathering is to be sent. Guder states, “The public worship of the mission community always leads to the pivotal act of sending. The community that is called together is the community that is sent. Every occasion of public worship is a sending event.” To be a missional church, worship is driven more by what must happen after the service.

What it truly means to be the church, according to Guder, is “the people of God who are called and sent to re-present the reign of God. This vocation is rooted in the good news, the gospel: in Jesus Christ the reign of God is at hand and is now breaking in.” For Guder, the focus of the staff and the commitment of the resources are directed toward helping people to re-present Christ to their neighbors in their everyday lives. They do this through normal, day-to-day interactions with friends, family members, and colleagues. The activities of the church should model these forms of everyday interactions. Guder writes: “The ecclesial practices are never exotic or supernatural but involve ordinary human behavior: joining and sharing, eating and drinking, listening and caring, testing and deciding, welcoming and befriending.” To do this effectively, the church must know its neighbors and understand what things they care about, so as to cultivate authentic, genuine friendships.
This initiative seeks to inspire Presbyterian congregations to reach out to their communities through acts of service that lead to connectivity with local communities and demonstrates the love of Christ to their neighbors such as:

- Every congregation would determine a number of volunteers and volunteer hours they would commit to their community and fulfill that commitment for the year.
- Adopt a community in need of refurbishing in the U.S.
- Actively engage youth and young adults in volunteer opportunities.
- Support young adults and others called to serve in God’s mission in the U.S. and abroad.
- “Re-presenting” Christ in their everyday lives through normal, day-to-day interactions with friends, family members, and colleagues.
- Support the Living Missionally initiative in prayer.
- Actively engaging at least 1,000 PC(USA) congregations each year (2014–2016) to focus on becoming “Missional Churches” through acts of service in communities around the world.

S14-04. Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth Consultation Committee Report—PMA.

Approved with comment. [See p. 1000.]

Comment:

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2012 Referral: Item 16-06, Growing a Diverse Church: A Call for Unity and Reconciliation. Recommendation. Direct the GAMC (Office of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW, the Office of Evangelism and Church Growth) and the Office of the General Assembly to Hold a National Consultation to Develop Strategies and Policies to Support Racial Ethnic, Multicultural, and New Immigrant Church Growth in the PC(USA)—From the General Assembly Special Task Force to Study Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 48, 49, 1454–62 of the CD; p. 291 of the print copy).

This report and its recommendations address the four areas to which the 220th General Assembly (2012) requested response: (1) Assess the effectiveness of church growth and evangelism programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) at national, regional, and local levels in integrating racial, ethnic, and new immigrants into the church; (2) Create measurable goals for racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth; (3) Develop a cohesive coordinated strategy for realizing the goals and mechanisms for deploying resources at the presbytery and local congregational levels; and, (4) include a strategy to encourage presbyteries to recognize and receive ministers of new immigrant fellowships and congregations as authorized in the Book of Order, G-2.0505a(1).

The consultation upon which these recommendations are based concluded that our efforts have borne fruit when we have recognized the racial and cultural shifts in society and have sought to embrace them. We have also seen fruitful efforts when we have gone directly to the people affected by our efforts and sought to work alongside them. Thus, our recommendations are premised upon the belief that we can become an even more fruitful denomination if we learn to live more fully into these cultural shifts, as in that way our life together becomes more relevant and faithful. Rather than seeking ways to assimilate our racial ethnic and new immigrant sisters and brothers into the PC(USA) we must learn to embrace and embody, the diversity of which we are a part.

REPORT

Biblical and Theological Foundations

*All Scripture references are New Revised Standard Version

God is diverse and communal by nature. The triune God is Creator, Son, and Holy Spirit, one God, three persons, distinct, yet equal in substance (Book of Confessions, The Scots Confession, 3.01). Consistent with God’s nature, God creates a world of diversity and calls it good (Genesis 1). Our Brief Statement of Faith states, “In sovereign love, God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community” (Book of Confessions, 10.3, lines 29–32). Presbyterians make a commitment to racial ethnic diversity as a good and faithful response to God’s affirmation of diversity revealed in the triune God and mirrored in creation.

The call to diversity is not only underlined in God’s very being and inherent in creation, but affirmed in the ministry of the Old Testament prophets. The prophets taught Israel to “love the alien as yourself” (Lev. 19:34, Deut. 10:19, Exodus 22:21; 23:9), and to consider “foreigners” as “citizen[s] among you” (Lev. 19:34). Our Lord Jesus Christ fulfilled the law of the prophets, preaching the kingdom of God and calling us to observe the kingdom in our brothers and sisters. Boldly practicing a ministry of inclusion, Jesus broke down the barriers of exclusivity, as he shared life with diverse persons and challenged systems of economic, racial, and gender segregation. In the inauguration of his public ministry, Jesus quotes the prophet Isaiah to announce his mission to proclaim good news to those who are poor, imprisoned, and suffering oppression (Isa. 61:1–2, Lk. 4:18–19). A first century Palestinian Jew, Jesus ministered to a Roman officer (Mt. 8:5–13), a Canaanite woman (Mt. 15:21–28), and a Samaritan woman (Jn. 4:7–30), in addition to the “lost sheep of the house of Israel” (Mt. 10:6). In the parable of the Good Samaritan, Jesus challenged the long-standing enmity between Jews and Samaritans when he calls the Samaritan “good,” in appreciation for the Samaritan’s benevolence towards a Jewish neighbor (Lk. 10:25–37). Before Jesus ascended to heaven, he commissioned his followers to go and “make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit” (Mt. 28:19, emphasis added). Baptism is the invitation to all who would become part of the body of Christ. Likewise, in the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper, Christ offers the invitation to commune to all who trust in him.
“By the indwelling of the Holy Spirit all believers ... [are] united to Christ ... [and] united one to another in the Church (Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.054). On the day of Pentecost, the disciples were gathered in one place when suddenly, they were filled with the Holy Spirit who enabled them to speak in various languages (Acts 2:4). When people from diverse multinational and multilingual backgrounds heard the preaching of the gospel in their own languages, they responded and three thousand people were baptized.

Presbyterians seek to be faithful to what God affirms, what Jesus’ ministry exemplifies, and what the Holy Spirit empowers—that is, unity in diversity. Yet, we struggle to be a community that reflects the diversity God desires. Sunday morning still remains a largely segregated hour. Our denomination has opportunity to be a more faithful witness of the body of Christ with its diverse parts (1 Corinthians 12). Informed by the witness of Scripture and our confessions, we seek to be obedient to the will of God when we embrace difference, intentionally build diverse communities of faith, and humbly and faithfully pray for the Holy Spirit to empower us. To this end, we make a commitment to develop strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA).

The Process

In response to the directive from the 220th General Assembly (2012) that a consultation be held for the purpose of developing strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA), the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through the office of Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women convened a small group for the purpose of devising such a consultation.

The group charged with designing the consultation had two purposes: (1) to convene a consultation that would respond to the issues that the General Assembly wanted addressed; and, (2) to identify the persons who should attend such a consultation, keeping in mind that such a gathering should include representatives of specific offices within the General Assembly, experienced leaders in racial ethnic and new immigrant churches, and mid council executives. To that end, thirty persons were invited (see Appendix 1, List of Attendees to the Consultation). In addition, the agenda of the consultation was fashioned in such a way as to produce responses to Recommendations 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6 of the action of the General Assembly in response to the report from the 219th General Assembly’s (2010) Special Task Force to Study Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth: Appendix 2, Item 16-06, Minutes, 220th General Assembly (2012).

The agenda of the consultation began with worship at the Presbyterian Center Chapel in celebration of Pentecost, followed by opening remarks, a panel discussion on “Fulfilling the Promise and Hope of Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Ministries,” and a description of what our ecumenical partners are doing in this area. The core of the consultation was fashioned around the attendees entering into conversations related to: (1) Signs of Hope; (2) Measures of Success; (3) Resources; (4) Challenges; and (5) Strategies. (See Appendix 3, Learning/Sharing Process, Leaders’ Guide). These conversations began with generating ideas around those five topics, and then moved to sorting and summarizing those ideas.

The final step led the group in discerning the most important insights from those conversations. The attendees self-selected into smaller groups that could address, more deeply, one of the five topics. Each group was charged with discussing the key ideas presented, summarizing the wisdom of the group, filling in any gaps, adding new ideas, and preparing a statement for consideration by the entire body in plenary. Each group then reported their work results and responded to comments and questions.

The group then discussed the best way to fashion a final report of the consultation, and determined that a writing team would be given the task of putting all these pieces together in a cohesive and cogent report; a draft would then be circulated to the consultation attendees for additional comment, before finalizing the report for submission to the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Following the consultation, four individuals and one staff were identified to draft the initial report. This “writing team” subsequently met over a two-day period to discuss what had been written, heard, and said during the consultation and to begin the process of actually drafting the report. The report addresses these four particular areas raised by the 220th General Assembly (2012): (1) Assess the effectiveness of church growth and evangelism programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) at national, regional, and local levels in integrating racial, ethnic, and new immigrants into the church; (2) Create measurable goals for racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth; (3) Develop a cohesive coordinated strategy for realizing the goals and mechanisms for deploying resources at the presbytery and local congregational levels; (4) Include a strategy to encourage presbyteries to recognize and receive ministers of new immigrant fellowships and congregations as authorized in G-2.0505a(1).

Assess the effectiveness of church growth and evangelism programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) at national, regional, and local levels in integrating racial, ethnic, and new immigrants into the church.

It is clear that there have been many instances of effective programs and initiatives that bear celebration—1001 New Worshiping Communities; New Beginnings, Engage, and Triennium to name a few. Thus, assessing the effectiveness of these church programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) is a relatively simple task. We identify those programs and initiatives, review their stated goals, and determine their effectiveness. In pursuing that task, however, it becomes abundantly clear that nothing we do as a church can be particularly effective unless and until we change the language we use to measure the efficacy and effectiveness of our programs and initiatives. Changing the language certainly means changing ourselves, as well.

In making such an assessment, however—and given that our efforts have borne fruit in numerous instances—the larger question is this: Why have we been unable to meet our goals for increasing the percentage of racial ethnic persons within our denomination? That question looms even larger at a time when the society around us has itself changed so dramatically over the past decade or more. Stated differently, the question is and should be: What in those initiatives and programs has spurred fruitfulness? The consultation concluded that our efforts have borne fruit when we have recognized the racial and cultural shifts in society and have sought to embrace them. Thus, an initiative such as the 1001 New Worshiping Communities bears fruit because it recognizes the need to use new language and new approaches as it exhibits the Kingdom of God to people outside our church walls. Likewise, new immigrant fellowships are fruitful when they recognize and address the actual needs of those whom they seek to reach. Rather than deciding from “on high” how to approach future congregants, they have, instead, gone directly to the people, asking, “How can we work alongside you?”

The instances of bearing fruit in our efforts to exhibit the Kingdom are, for the most part, the result of local initiatives; those realities deserve to be acknowledged and celebrated! Yet we believe that we would become even more fruitful as a denomination if we learn to live more fully into these cultural shifts; in that way, our life together becomes more relevant and faithful as well. We need to relinquish our customary habit of asking, “How do we assimilate our racial ethnic and new immigrant sisters and brothers into the PC(USA)?” Rather, the PC(USA) must ask, “How do we become a community that embodies the diversity God desires?” Implicit in that question are other questions such as “What do we need to learn about being faithful from our sisters and brothers outside the PC(USA)?” and “How can we enter more fully into their lives and circumstances?” and “How do we need to change the dominant culture so that there are places in the community of faith for everyone?”

In Tucson, Arizona, a Middle East Presbyterian Fellowship is composed of persons who share a common language, Arabic; though the group includes Muslims as well as Christians, they come together each week to worship the living God. So, too, a new worshiping community in a southern California trailer park has begun to witness to the love of Jesus Christ among transient, broken, lonely people. A newly ordained pastor in Colorado Springs serves as an evangelist to unchurched young people there. Even though we have built much of our denominational identity on chartered congregations, these fellowships may well never fit that mold; even so, if we fail to embrace them as part of our fold, we fail to exhibit the Kingdom of God to the world—a fundamental and essential part of our calling as a church.

We have 1001 New Worshipping Communities. We have the Middle East Presbyterian Fellowship. We have myriad other stories of sowing seeds for the Kingdom, and seeing them begin to grow up around us. Now we must find the language and the will to embrace them and to build on their fruitfulness. We must find a way for our dominant racial and cultural membership—the 91 percent—to learn how to embrace our changing context. We need to do this not as a way merely to increase our numbers. More importantly, we need to do it in response to Christ’s great commission. We are called to “go and make disciples”—not to go and make clones.

As we reach out to our brothers and sisters in the racial ethnic and new immigrant communities—and indeed to all our sisters and brothers in this world—we may well risk our corporate life. As we engage those instances of fruitfulness, we need to know that doing so will surely be at the cost of our comfortable identity and familiar life as the PC(USA). For many of us that will feel like a death; so we can expect resistance—sometimes very powerful resistance.

As a resurrection people, however, we have the powerful promise that God’s love has conquered death. That is why our Book of Order can acknowledge that we are called “to be a community of faith, entrusting itself to God alone, even at the risk of losing its life” (F-1.0301). That promise frees us and empowers us to engage the risks and to embrace the new life that will surely come to us as we welcome, encourage, and join in the lives and the faith of our racial ethnic and new immigrant sisters and brothers in Christ.

Create measurable goals for racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth. If our church is to be faithful to the calling to participate in God’s work of transforming the world around us, then we must first be open to the Spirit transforming us. The church has said repeatedly that it wants genuine and sustainable growth in ministries with racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant groups; likewise it has stated a desire for full inclusion of such other underrepresented populations as young adults and persons with disabilities. The first key to full inclusion of each of these constituencies is transformation of the church’s own corporate culture.

Such transformative changes will in turn necessitate changes in our customary, habitual means of numerical measurement, e.g., membership rolls, monetary contributions, operational and benevolence budgets, Sunday school enrollment, average attendance at Sunday morning worship. Instead, we will need to learn how to recognize and measure indicators of faithfulness and fruitfulness, rather than signs of success.

In that regard, the consultation offers the following four goals for consideration, along with strategies and key questions, as indicators of our faithfulness to God’s call that we be transformed:

GOAL ONE: MAKING DISCIPLES

Is the focus more on discipleship and less on formal membership? Are we sustaining the current emphasis on creating new worshipping communities, as distinct from establishing chartered congregations? Are we raising up—and equally importantly supporting—leaders who embody new understandings of what ordination does and should mean? How have we aligned our preparation-for-ministry process with that reformed understanding?

Since poverty is a reality of life, either present or imminent, for a great many racial ethnic and new immigrant communities, as it is for a majority of persons with disabilities, how is our educational tradition preparing, and expecting, ordained church leaders to live and work among the realities of poverty? What new things do the church need to do to prepare leaders for standing among persons and communities in poverty?

GOAL TWO: TRANSFORMING CHURCH CULTURE

Are we transforming the church’s culture from regulatory to relational, from directional to collaborative? Are we able to allow the still new Form of Government to create possibilities rather than restrictions?

Are we able to avoid returning to the comfortable habit of endlessly amending the Book of Order?

Are we moving from institutional maintenance towards community relevance? Are we being faithful stewards of God’s resources within God’s world?

GOAL THREE: REFORMING STANDARD OPERATING PROCEDURES

How have we reformed our understanding of what ordination does and should mean? How have we aligned our preparation-for-ministry process with that reformed understanding?

Are we able to reform theological education to include a focus on missional, racial ethnic, and multicultural contexts? Have we struck a healthy balance in theological education between technical proficiency and creative imagination?

Have we created programs for developing lay ministry that bridge the leadership gap for racial ethnic and new immigrant communities?

GOAL FOUR: BEARING EVANGELICAL WITNESS

Are we bearing witness to the power of the Gospel, as distinct from bearing witness to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)? Are we establishing ministries of reconciliation, such as interfaith dialogue, doing racial justice, advocating for the excluded, the oppressed, the marginalized, and the vulnerable? How open are we to the Spirit doing really new things among us?

Develop a cohesive coordinated strategy for realizing the goals and mechanisms for deploying resources at the presbytery and local congregational levels.

The consultation’s vision for the church is colorful and friendly. Led by authentic leaders reflecting the changing demographic of America, worship participants also reflect a diverse America. Everyone is welcome. The church embodies radical hospitality to everyone: racial and ethnic minorities, new worshipping communities, people with disabilities. New forms of worship and mission are valued. To morph from the culture of the current church with its strong history of technically proficient leaders, to the radically imaginative, open, and accepting nature of the envisioned church will require comprehensive changes to the church body at all levels: from local congregational levels though the presbyteries, and at the General Assembly and our seminaries.

The consultation had wide-ranging discussions around the roles of local congregations, presbyteries, synods, the General Assembly, and those involved in theological education regarding how they might best support enhanced racial ethnic and new immigrant outreach:
Local congregations

- Form full partnerships with racial and ethnic ministries and new worshipping communities where the gifts and talents of each group have equal weight. Rethink the use of church buildings so that they are open, attractive beacons in the community used daily and fully for ministry by diverse groups.
- Expand the role and empower formalized lay ministries.

Presbyteries and Synods

- Clarify their own vision of faithful mission, particularly as it relates to inclusive ministries.
- Create a network of coaches and peer mentors to clarify and implement the vision for inclusive ministries.
- Create lay leadership programs, including internships, coaches and peer mentors, to prepare culturally sensitive and theologically grounded leaders for new inclusive ministries.

The General Assembly

- Identify funds that can be utilized to support a variety of inclusive ministries.
- Commit as a corporate body to the distribution of all official documents in culturally sensitive language.
- Lead the church in the important work of engaging in conversations and in making opportunities available for discussing white privilege and racial prejudice in the church.
- Investigate new methods of developing and nurturing leadership for more inclusive ministries.

Those Involved in Theological Education

- Establish a perpetual dialogue with the entire theological education community, focusing on ministry in diverse contexts.
- Identify those functions, historically carried out by synods, e.g., first call programs and early ministry initiatives that might need to be included within initial and continuing theological education settings.
- Cultivate the innovative ministry skills demanded by a changing context within teaching communities that focus on continuing education and lifelong learning.
- Investigate new methods of developing and nurturing leadership for more inclusive ministries.
- Develop specific skill sets for working with persons living in poverty and integrate those skills into theological education.
- Develop alternative, practical forms of education such as internships, coaching teams, and peer mentors to provide emerging leaders with hands-on training and support, so that they can relate effectively to their particular church family and context, as well as to the broader denomination.

The time is now to commit to developing strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA), to embody unity in diversity and to be a church for all people.

Include a strategy to encourage presbyteries to recognize and receive ministers of new immigrant fellowships and congregations as authorized in G-2.0505a(1). Along with the approval of the 1001 New Worshipping Communities initiative, the language of G-2.0505a(1) presents a new opportunity for expanding the reach of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and celebrating our diversity. Section G-2.0505a(1) is a tool for presbyteries hoping to encourage and nurture new worshipping communities under their jurisdiction, permitting presbyteries to receive teaching elders who have been ordained by other denominations into membership of the presbytery. The most qualified leader for a new immigrant community possesses cultural and language fluency as well as theological training. Finding a qualified teaching elder of the PC(USA) able to communicate in the language of a new immigrant congregation may be difficult or impractical. Each partner denomination throughout the world determines its requirements for ordination. Many of our new immigrant leaders have been educated and have served faithfully in the denomination of their ordination and have been called by God and by the congregation to be the pastor for the community.

Section G-2.0505a(1) gives authority to a presbytery to accept qualified leaders to be received as teaching elders when the mission of the presbytery requires it. The language of “may” is meant to provide options, not to make requirements that would overstep a presbytery’s authority to make mission decisions. The following questions are designed to provide a presbytery with some guidance in applying the authority granted to it. Each situation needs to be considered on its own merits. There is no formula for inclusion.

The questions below are provided to stimulate appropriate conversations.

Some considerations:

Does the new immigrant ministry fit into the mission plan for evangelism and ministry of the presbytery? Who provides oversight and guidance to this new ministry? Is there a relationship of nurture and accountability with the presbytery or with a congregation of the presbytery?

Is the leader ordained as a teaching elder (or equivalent)? What is the denomination of membership? Does this denomination have any historic relationship to the PC(USA)? Denominations in correspondence with the PC(USA) can be found at http://oga.pcusa.org/section/departments/ecumenical-relations/list-churches-correspondence/. The presbytery may ask the candidate to provide proof of ordination such as an ordination certificate or a letter from the denomination of membership.

What kind of education or training for ministry has the candidate received? The presbytery may ask the candidate to provide transcripts, diploma, or other confirmation of the training.

What ministry experience has the candidate had? The presbytery may ask the candidate to provide a resume or personal information form and letters of reference.

Does the candidate demonstrate satisfactory knowledge and competence in areas of study that the presbytery deems relevant to faithful ministry? Areas may include: theology, church history, worship and sacraments, polity, Bible content, exegesis, or others.

Has the presbytery had opportunity to get to know and to examine the candidate? The presbytery may require further training or mentoring as a condition for reception into the presbytery.
Note on immigration status: A religious worker visa allows mid councils and churches to call religious workers who are not residents of the U.S. to serve the church. The Office of Immigration in the PC(USA) can help explore eligibility and guide petitioners through the process of application.

In all cases the attitude toward the leaders of new worshiping communities ought to be one of warm hospitality and collegiality.

Study the successes of other denominations.

The desire of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to be intentional about developing racial/ethnic and new immigrant church growth resonates with several of the denominations in the United States. The United Church of Christ and the Disciples of Christ, for example, both have longstanding Hispanic/Latino, African American, and Asian ministries that, like PC(USA), are in the discernment and goal setting stage of racial/ethnic and immigrant church growth.

The United Methodist embraced the important role the racial/ethnic and immigrant community will play in the future of the church, and the more cross-cultural ministries are emerging. In response, the Unified National Plans for Strengthening Ethnic/Racial Ministries was initiated within the United Methodist structure. The five racial/ethnic/immigrant national plans include: Hispanic and Latino, African American, Asian, Native American, and Pacific Islanders. The primary goals are: (1) leadership development that will cultivate disciple who can reach a racially diverse mission field, (2) foster growth in membership and worship attendance, and (3) ensure the presence of a younger generation.

[The assembly approved Item 16-06 with amendment. See pp. 48, 49.]

Growing a Diverse Church: A Call for Unity and Reconciliation—From the General Assembly Special Task Force to Study Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth

The General Assembly Special Task Force to Study Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) direct the General Assembly Mission Council (specifically, the Office of Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries/Presbyterian Women and the Office of Evangelism and Church Growth) and the Office of the General Assembly (specifically, the Mid Council Commission in the Office of the Stated Clerk) to hold a national consultation to develop strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA). This consultation shall bring together representatives of these offices, experienced leaders in racial ethnic and new immigrant churches, and mid council executives. [The consultation shall be held in coordination with the African American Church Growth Strategy consultation.] The consultation shall:

1. Assess the effectiveness of church growth and evangelism programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) at national, regional, and local levels in integrating racial ethnic and new immigrants into the church.
2. Create measurable goals for racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth.
3. Develop a cohesive coordinated strategy for realizing the goals and mechanisms for deploying resources at the presbytery and local congregation levels.
4. [Designate a monitoring group to assess progress toward these goals that shall report at each General Assembly.] [Designate the GAMC to monitor and report on the progress toward these goals at each General Assembly.]
5. Include in its strategies a plan to encourage presbyteries to recognize and receive ministers of new immigrant fellowships and congregations as authorized in G-2.0505a(1).
7. Study the successes of other denominations.

Conversation Questions:
- Signs of Hope: Where do you see signs of life/hope in RE/NI ministry? Where is RE/NI ministry happening effectively? What specific success stories can you identify? What programs are working effectively?
- Measures of Success: What do we mean by “success” in RE/NI ministry? How will we know if we are effectively growing and making disciples? What measurements/benchmarks would indicate success?
- Resources: What resources do we currently have to support RE/NI ministries? How helpful are they? What do we need?
- Challenges: What are the challenges ahead? What are the obstacles to growth and sustainability?
- Strategy: What is your vision for the future? What does the denomination need to do to nurture growth and health in RE/NI ministry? What do presbyteries and synods need to do? What do congregations need to do?

Process

Part I—Generating Ideas

Ideas and Inspiration: Each person will spend ten minutes at each of five tables participating in brainstorming sessions around the five topics. Ideas will be written on sticky notes and added to a piece of newsprint. A leader will time the event and move people from table to table. A process will be devised to make sure the groups are mixed up at each table.

Leader’s Task: Table leaders will stay at the table same table throughout this part of the exercise instead of moving around to other tables. Encourage participants to stay on task. Ask follow-up questions using the suggestions above. Ask for input from quiet or reserved participants.
Sorting and Summarizing: At the final table the group will sort and summarize the comments at that table by combining the comments that are similar, removing repeats, and eliminating responses that are not relevant. At the end of this time the newsprint sheets will be hung on the walls.

Leader’s Task: Try to consolidate the suggestions without losing valuable input. Perhaps 2 or 3 responses can be combined into one.

Discerning and Voting: After a time of silence and listening to the Spirit, each person will be given 10 dots or stars which they can place on any ideas or comments that they think are particularly important to the conversation.

Part II—Going Deeper

Small Group Work: Each person will elect to be part of one of the five groups, each addressing one of the Conversation Questions. The group will be given the newsprint sheets generated during Part I. During Part II, the group will attempt to come up with a statement in which they summarize what the whole team has brainstormed and use that information as the basis for going deeper. Each small group will come up with a statement that can be presented to the whole group for review and comments. The goal of each team will be to contribute to a denomination-wide strategy for the long-term health and growth and sustainability of RE/NI ministry. The process followed by each small group will be:

- Discuss the key issues presented
- Summarize the wisdom of the group
- Fill in the gaps
- Add new ideas
- Prepare a statement

Leader’s Task: Help the group go beyond just summarizing the input from the brainstorming process. This is an opportunity to think deeply about significant issues. Encourage one participant to take notes. Lead the group to make a decision about how they will report to the whole gathering.

Reporting: Each group will have 15–20 minutes to report to the whole group and respond to questions and comments.

Part III—Recommending

Summarizing: The whole body will do this section. Leader will ask: What message do we have for the denomination? What strategies, resources, and benchmarks will result in health and sustainability? What do we expect the denomination and its constituent organizations to do as a result of our work? There should be a focus on new behaviors.

Leader’s Task: Review the purpose of the consultation. Are all the assigned tasks being addressed? Will the suggestions make a real difference in the life of the PC(USA)? (Rationale from Item 14-04. See pp. 1000–1008.)

Comment: The Assembly Committee on Mid Council Issues (5) gives thanks for and celebrates the historic and ongoing witness of the churches of Hanmi Presbytery and their important role in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We regret that the recent work of the Administrative Commission has not been successful in resolving long-standing concerns, and we share the grief, the disappointment, and the loss with the congregations, the presbytery, the Administrative Commission, and the synod that this action has been taken. We look forward to discovering new ways of welcoming the Korean congregations into the life of the Synod and presbyteries, to the greater ministry of the church of the future. We recommend this action, aware that it presents the presbyteries with an important opportunity to welcome the congregations and gratefully to receive their contributions to the life and ministry of the PC(USA).

“The Presbytery of Southern New England overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to affirm the vital importance of sustainable development [through faithful stewardship of natural resources] and the Precautionary Principle.1 [It is] [Such methods of preventing irreversible ecological impacts are part of] the basis for [a] responsible, moral, and [scientifically-informed human flourishing,] [ethical means of working and being. Additionally, [we ask that the PC(USA)] [the General Assembly directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to] commission a study group [of three to five persons] to

“[1.] review [this] [the precautionary or prevention] principle [in relation to emerging biotechnical developments and existing Presbyterian social witness policy on environmental ethics.] and

“The Presbytery of Seattle overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to affirm the decision of [state concerns related to the ongoing and expanding extraction and export of fossil fuels, particularly coal, from the U.S. for use in Asia, and approve the following measures for public health and climate stewardship:]

“[1. Urges] civil authorities to conduct [promptly] a full, programmatic review and assessment of the impact of expanded coal export projects in Washington and Oregon on human health and the well-being of communities along the Northwest rail lines. [This should include full Environmental Impact Statements (EIS) produced by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), and the studies should be conducted at multiple locations along the proposed expansion route so as to assess the impact on vulnerable communities.]

“[2. Commends the Washington State Department of Environmental Quality (WA DEQ) for its decision to conduct a full EIS along the route within its jurisdiction and directs the Stated Clerk to communicate this approval to WA DEQ.]

“[3. Recognizes that regional issues of extraction, pollution, transportation, and export have interstate, national, and global implications, both for environmental justice concerns and for global climate disruption/change. Such impacts range from coal dust pollution, diesel particulates, potential for derailments, negative impacts on real estate, and public health and safety concerns, to global climate change, sea level rise, acidification of oceans, severe weather events, and the ethical dilemma of profiting from the export of coal and other fossil fuels for use in countries whose environmental and pollution restrictions are less stringent.

“[4. Affirms that civil authorities are called upon to require full disclosure and consideration of the combined effect of all coal export projects taken together on the poorest and most vulnerable communities, locally and globally. The General Assembly further affirms that the evaluation of coal export involves moral choices, in which key considerations are caring for the creation that God has made and with careful stewardship and justice for those who depend on a stable climate and water supply for survival.

“[5. Directs the Stated Clerk to write to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the EPA, and the governors and congressional delegation of Washington, Oregon, Montana, and Idaho, urging comprehensive Environmental Impact Statements (EIS) along proposed routes for expanded export of fossil fuels, including analysis from the National Transportation Safety Board and other bodies as necessary.
“[6. Commends the presbyteries of Seattle, Cascades, and North Puget Sound for their environmental awareness and advocacy, and encourages other Presbyterians and councils of the church to consider the impact of resource extraction, transportation, and use in their regions and to work with state and national ecumenical bodies and the Office of Public Witness of the Presbyterian Mission Agency in addressing concerns.]”

“The Presbytery of New Covenant overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to:

[The PC(USA) has a long standing commitment to peace in Israel and Palestine. We recognize the complexity of the issues, the decades-long struggle, and the pain suffered and inflicted by policies and practices of both the Israeli government and Palestinian entities. We further acknowledge and confess our own complicity in both the historic and current suffering of Israeli and Palestinian. Yearning for justice and reconciliation, the 221st General Assembly (2014) recommends the following:]

“[3. Reject any proposed divestment and economic sanctions against the state of Israel or any application of the PC(USA)’s corporate engagement policies toward such ends.] [Instruct the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions of the PC(USA), to divest from Caterpillar, Inc., Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions, in accord with our church’s decades-long socially responsible investment (SRI) history, and not to reinvest in these companies until the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee of the PC(USA) is fully satisfied that product sales and services by these companies are no longer in conflict with our church investment policy. This action on divestment is not to be construed or represented by any organization of the PC(USA) as divestment from the State of Israel, or as alignment with or endorsement] [does not mean an alignment with the overall strategy] of the global BDS (Boycott, Divest and Sanctions) movement.]

“[4. Call] [Reaffirm PC(USA)’s commitment to interfaith dialogue and partnerships with American Jewish and Muslim friends and Palestinian Christians, and call] for all presbyteries and congregations within the PC(USA) to include interfaith dialogue and relationship-building as part of their own engagement in working for a just peace.
“[4.][5.] Call for all foreign aid given by the U.S. government—including aid to Israel and the Palestinian Authority—to be comprehensively and transparently accounted to the American people and held to the same standards of compliance with all applicable laws.

“[5.][6.] Call for church advocacy for foreign-aid accountability to be directed toward its universal adherence rather than targeted for selective application to some recipients and not others.

“[6.][7.] Encourage Presbyterians to travel to the Holy Land, and give broad support to the Christian[, Jewish, and Muslim] communities throughout the Middle East.

“[7.][8.] Affirm the importance of economic measures and cooperation between Israelis and Palestinians that support and advance a negotiated two-state solution. [To that end, the 221st General Assembly (2014) does not endorse boycotts of Israeli or Palestinian products.]

“[8.][9.] Urge all church institutions to give careful consideration to possible investments in Israel-Palestine that advance peace and improve the lives of Palestinians and Israelis.”

The minority report for Item 04-04 was perfected. Moderator Rada put the question to the assembly, “Shall the minority report become the main motion?” The minority report was defeated. MEMORIAL MINUTE FOR AL WINN
MODERATOR OF THE 119TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (1979), PCUS

Moderator Rada recognized Sid Batts from Salem Presbytery who presented the memorial minute to celebrate the life of Al Winn.

I am Sid Batts, pastor of First Presbyterian in Greensboro, North Carolina, and a commissioner from Salem Presbytery. I have the privilege to say a word about Al Winn, Moderator of the General Assembly of the PCUS in 1979.

It would be hard to overstate the influence that Al Winn had on Presbyterians and the Presbyterian church in the second half of the 20th century. He was the author of eight books, taught systematic theology at Louisville Seminary, and then became its president. His journey included being valedictorian at Davidson College, and he earned degrees at Princeton Seminary and Union Seminary in Virginia. In addition to Louisville, he taught at Davidson and Stillman College and was a visiting professor at Columbia Seminary and Union, Virginia. At the end of World War II, he was a Navy chaplain. He served as pastor of the Potomac Rural Parrish, of Second Presbyterian in Richmond and North Decatur Presbyterian in Atlanta. Al died in July of 2012 at the age of 91, his wife of fifty-five years, Grace Neely Walker, having preceded him in death by a dozen years. They were the parents of four children. Al’s life was his witness. He was a humble hero, teaching as a Bible professor at the “historically Black” Stillman College in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in the 1950s, and throughout his ministry embodied scholarship, leadership, and a spiritually rooted social activism. He was an advocate for peace and justice in the church and in the world. He worked for civil rights, equal opportunity for women, and the full inclusion of gay and lesbian Presbyterians. People loved and respected Al, not only for his leadership but for his demeanor, which was welcoming and affirming. One of Al’s significant contributions to the church was his work as chair of the committee that produced “A Declaration of Faith” for the PCUS in 1976. Though it was never officially adopted, many think it is the most widely used Reformed Confession for worship in the Presbyterian church today. And we also hope that one day it will be included in our Book of Confessions. Al Winn’s influence of humility, faith, and hope (intertwined with his Reformed perspective) is seen all through this extraordinary document. I will conclude with words from Chapter 8 of The Declaration of Faith.

God sends the church into the world.

God has not taken his people out of the world, but has sent them into the world to worship him there and serve all humankind.

We worship God in the world by standing before the Lord in behalf of all people. Our cries for help and our songs of praise are never for ourselves alone. Worship is no retreat from the world; it is part of our mission.

We give thanks to God for such a humble hero who consistently showed Presbyterians a faithful way of being the church.

Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance (Recommendation A).

Amend the first paragraph of Recommendation A. as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

   “Drones used by the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and United States Armed Forces for national security can easily penetrate enemy lines and linger to conduct surveillance, which enables them to isolate and identify targets more accurately, choose blast trajectories, and use lower-yield weapons. Because they can attack with less collateral damage than other weapons and without jeopardizing the lives of U.S. military personnel, military officers and civilian leaders are tempted to use them frequently, sometimes in ways that violate national sovereignty and human and constitutional rights. Because they arouse resentment among local populations, even when used sparingly, military drones may undermine strategic objectives (such as winning support of a population facing an insurgency). Because drone programs have been secret, they cripple the capacity of citizens to interpret the ‘blow-back’ they arouse and to exercise democratic oversight over foreign policy. And because they are already receiving substantial research and development funding in the U.S. and elsewhere, they are increasingly ‘the new face of war.’”

2. Amend Recommendation A.2. through A.4. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]
“2. Opposes in principle the targeted killing or assassination of suspects [without warrant or due process outside of the context of declared military engagement or observed terror activity] and grieves the [collateral] deaths [of civilians that are inevitable, if less than with some other weapons, and the deaths of our enemies themselves] [these weapons facilitate].

“3. Urges the United States Congress to pass legislation governing military drones. These laws should articulate procedures that put checks on executive power and establish civilian oversight. The goal is to ensure that in any justification of targeting human beings that the [Constitutional rights of U.S. citizens] [fundamental rights of all humans] are protected, international law upheld, noncombatants safeguarded, [U.S. strategic goals served], and the larger goal of peace and justice advanced. To these ends, the Central Intelligence Agency should not run any part of the weaponized drone program and should focus on intelligence collection as its primary mandate.

“4. Urges the U.S. to make public and submit its rules for military drones to institutions of the international legal community for analysis and evaluation[,] [so that, t]ogether with other nations, we may develop international conventions governing their use and prevent a ‘drone race.’ Under the Law of Armed Conflict (LOAC), the United States and other nations should be held responsible for drone uses that violate the rules of war or human rights such as acts of terrorism; assassination (killing without due process); destruction of natural resources, habitat, and infrastructure; and other crimes.”

Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance (Recommendation B).

Approved with amendment. [See p. 848.]

Amend Recommendation B.2. as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“2. Recommends that the United States Congress[, other Federal, state, and/or local agencies, as appropriate,] pass legislation [and/or regulations] governing the use of domestic drones so that Constitutional rights are upheld.”

Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance (Recommendation C).

Amend the second paragraph of Recommendation C. to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“In the development of cyber warfare capability and use, we urge full consideration of the civilian and other collateral consequences of attacks on military or nuclear computer systems and electronic/communications infrastructure, and affirm that such covert warfare [be subject to the same considerations as in Recommendation A above] [respect the rights of humans and the responsibilities of Christians to respect the lives and freedoms of sovereign peoples].”

Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance (Recommendation D).

Approved with amendment. [See p. 849.]

Amend Recommendation D. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The church’s emphasis on spiritual freedom of conscience and the work of the Holy Spirit in community lead us to maintain that congregational life is protected from governmental and commercial intrusion. In order to uphold both privacy rights and the separation of church and state, we regard all spaces of worship as surveillance-free zones. Aware of the potential for abuse by both government agencies and criminal enterprises, surveillance of individuals should only intrude into congregational life under extraordinary circumstances and in each case should require a warrant or court order. [Recognizing the role of technology in facilitating overreaching surveillance, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) encourages the church to examine its own technological choices and, where feasible, use hardware and software, such as Free and Open Source software, that allows us to avoid participation in this surveillance except under extraordinary circumstances with a warrant or court order.]”

Amend the “Process of Discernment for Presbyteries section, Recommendations 1.–5. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“Process of Discernment for Presbyteries: As the next stage in a six-year process of discernment, the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directs the Stated Clerk to send to each presbytery, electronically and in print, the following five affirmations and supporting rationale with the request that they discuss and take an advisory vote on each affirmation and send the results of those votes, along with a summary of the floor discussion, back to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy [by July 1, 2015] to help guide the preparation of a report on peacemaking directions for the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

“The affirmations for churchwide discussion and advisory vote:

1. We affirm that peacemaking is essential to our faith in God’s reconciling work in Jesus Christ, whose love and justice challenge hatred and conflict, and whose call gives our church a mission to present alternatives to violence[,] fear, [unjustified force,] and misused power.

2. We confess our complicity in the world’s violence even as we pray for the Spirit’s courage to ‘unmask idolatries,’ to speak truth about war and oppression, and to stand with those who suffer[,] and to respond to acts and threats of violence with ministries of justice, healing, and reconciliation.

3. We reclaim [the power and authority of] Jesus [Christ,] as Prince of Peace, [Christ the] [and] Reconciler[,] who proclaims God’s reign, who inspires the prophetic church, forgiving, healing, and undoing violence, and who overcomes evil through the cross and resurrection.

4. We seek to understand the nonviolent revolutions and armed struggles of our time [through the Gospel of Peace] by drawing on the traditions of [Christian pacifism,] just war, just peacemaking and active nonviolence, and by cultivating moral imagination through prayer, study, and engagement with friends and enemies. [Even as we actively engage in a peace discernment process, we affirm our responsibility of continuing the long tradition of support by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for our sisters and brothers who serve in the U.S. military, veterans, and their families.]

5. As disciples of Jesus Christ, we commit ourselves [to work first for nonviolent change in our personal and communal lives,] [earnestly to seek and promote loving, nonviolent responses to conflict in our daily lives, in our communities, and in our world, and] to risk calling our nation back from the practices of empire to the highest ideals of our heritage, and to practice boldly the things that make for peace.”

RECESS

The assembly recessed at 11:59 p.m.

BUSINESS MEETING XII

The 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Heath Rada, Moderator, 221st General Assembly (2014), in Hall D of the COBO Center, Detroit, Michigan.

Jeff Moles, young adult volunteer alumna who served in Nashville, led the assembly in the convening prayer.
Moderator Rada recognized Moderator Susan Orr and Vice-Moderator Raul Santiago-Rivera of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures for a report from the committee.

Moderator Orr reported that minutes of business meetings from Thursday June 19 and Friday morning, June 20, had been reviewed and found in order. It was announced that minutes of business meetings from Friday afternoon, Friday evening, and Saturday morning would be approved by a subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures after adjournment.

Moderator Orr reported that the committee had discussed abstaining votes and recommended continuing the practice of not taking time to ask for and record abstaining votes during assembly business meetings.

Protests found to be in decorous language are recorded in the Minutes as follows:

Protest regarding MRTI’s groundwork/introduction prior to vote on Item 04-04—From Katherine Nyberg, commissioner from the Presbytery of Detroit: “I respectfully file this protest regarding the groundwork/introduction offered by MRTI prior to the vote on divestment.

“We all know that visuals convey both conscious and subconscious messages.

“The choice of visuals was decidedly one-sided, as each frame was composed of Israeli military power.

“Where were the visuals of the families of the three Israeli children recently kidnapped? Or of the families grieving their loved ones riding the bus recently blown up?

“The choice was emotionally biased and manipulative.”

“Our constitution contains two parts: The Book of Confessions and the Book of Order. The Book of Order acknowledges that “while the confessional standards are subordinate to Scripture, they are, nonetheless, standards. They may not be ignored or dismissed” (F-2.02). Moreover the process for changing the confessions of the church is deliberately demanding, requiring a high degree of consensus across the church. If then it can be shown that the Confessions speak with uniformity and in multiple places on the nature of marriage, then constitutionally a high degree of consensus should be required. (See below.) Also, the definition of marriage is not a matter of polity primarily but secondarily. It belongs to the realm of ethics and theology and thus the Book of Order should reflect the teaching of the Book of Confessions.

“The Book of Order states that business of the church shall be carried out in accordance with Robert’s Rules of Order (G-3.0105). Robert’s Rules of Order states that any motion that is in conflict with an organization’s constitution is out of order (Chapter 5, P. 111, 11th edition).

“This amendment that changes the definition of marriage from a man and a woman to two persons rejects the clear teaching in the Book of Confessions. Some of our confessions do differ in some areas. However, it speaks with a singular, united voice on the issue of marriage. This amendment is out of order. It violates the Book of Confessions, The Book of Order, and Robert’s Rules of Order.

“In adopting this amendment the General Assembly has rejected the clear teaching of Scripture, the plain and unified voice of the Book of Confessions, our own Book of Order which looks to the confessions for its standards, and its own adopted processes for making decisions decently and in order.

“Jesus Christ, as he is attested for us in Holy Scripture, is the one Word of God which we have to hear and which we have to trust and obey in life and in death. We reject the false doctrine, as though the Church could and would have to acknowledge as a source of its proclamation, apart from and besides this one Word of God, still other events and powers, figures and truths, as God’s revelation’ (Barmen, 8.11–12).

Norton, Presbytery of de Cristo; Louise Schoppe, commissioner from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh; Ben Sloan, commissioner from the Presbytery of Trinity; Jo Ann Thetford, commissioner from the Presbytery of Palo Duro; Neil Zampella, commissioner from the Presbytery of Redstone: “I formally protest the action of the General Assembly changing the Book of Order’s definition of marriage, W-4.9000.

Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03—From Ronald L. Hawkins, commissioner from the Presbytery of Grand Canyon: “The Authoritative Interpretation of 10-03 seems to be, from my humble perspective, unwise and uncaring at best, and unethical and out of order at worst. To interject meaning that changes the clear intent of the original language does not seem appropriate for an A.I. The original intent of ‘man and woman’ means just that. ‘A couple’ clearly is meant to change the ‘man and woman’ to allow for ‘man and man’ or ‘woman and woman.’ Something that is clearly different from the original intent.”
Protest on assembly action on authoritative interpretation, [Item 10-03]—From Eva-Maria Barr, commissioner from the Presbytery of Beaver-Butler: “Authoritative Interpretation is in conflict with the Constitution.”

Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03 and Item 10-02—From Earl A. Bland, commissioner from the Presbytery of Charleston-Atlantic: “10-03 AI was unconstitutional in approving it. 10-02 was against the Constitution, Book of Confessions and the Holy Scriptures.”

Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03 [10-03]—From Andrew Gerhart, commissioner from the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley: “My protest concerns the ruling, and subsequent action on 10-04 [10-03] that an Authoritative Interpretation can change substantially the plain and ordinary meaning of a word—especially in 10-04 [10-03]. I think the action was out of order and the result will be confusion as to the meaning of W-4.9000.”

Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03—From Bruce A. Jones, commissioner from the Presbytery of Milwaukee: “On Item 10-03 the assembly approved a new authoritative Interpretation on the Book of Order definition of marriage. The current W-4.9000 is clear and unambiguous. An AI is to give clarity. This AI changes the Book of Order is a grievous error and an inappropriate action. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution ruled in materially to the assembly this AI out of order. Their verbal comments to the floor changed this understanding. This AI is out of order and not done decently.”

Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03—From Maurice Smith, commissioner from the Presbytery of Beaver-Butler: “I believe the vote on this Authoritative Interpretation was unconstitutional.”

Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03—From Jeffrey Kintner, commissioner from the Presbytery of South Dakota: “I formally protest the action of the General Assembly to approve a new Authoritative Interpretation (Item 10-03) of the Book of Order definition of marriage, W-4.9000. If it stands, this new Authoritative Interpretation ‘permits teaching elders to participate in any such legal marriage they believe the Holy Spirit calls them to perform.’ W-4.9000 is clear that its limits on marriage is between a man and a woman. Because these statements are clear and unambiguous they cannot be interpreted in a manner that rejects their plain and ordinary meaning.

“To call this an interpretation is to permit the changing of the Book of Order in an unconstitutional way. This is not an interpretation; it is a change. For the General Assembly to deceive the church in this way is a grievous error and an illegitimate way to change our church’s position on marriage. Our own foundational principles of order and government say clearly that no opinion can either be more pernicious or more absurd than that which would make truth and falsehood equal and make it seem that it does not matter what man’s opinions are. Instead there is an inseparable connection between faith and practice, truth and duty. Otherwise it would be of no consequence either to discover truth or to embrace it (F-3.0104).

“This Authoritative Interpretation changes the meaning of the clear definition of marriage into something it can never say.

“By adopting this Authoritative Interpretation, the General Assembly violates the plain meaning of the Book of Order, it ignores the standards set out in the Book of Confessions and it openly rejects the teaching of Scripture.

“If such an interpretation is allowed to stand as if it were legitimate, this action nullifies constitutional governance in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Because we love this Church and because we are loyal to the God who gives us his Word Written in Scripture and authoritatively interpreted by the Confessions, we do hereby protest in the strongest possible terms.

“‘Jesus Christ, as he is attested for us in Holy Scripture, is the one Word of God which we have to hear and which we have to trust and obey in life and in death. We reject the false doctrine, as though the Church could and would have to acknowledge as a source of its proclamation, apart from and besides this one Word of God, still other events and powers, figures and truths, as God’s revelation’ (Barmen, 8.11–12).’”

Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03—From William Ward, commissioner from the Presbytery of the Inland Northwest: “I formally protest the action of the General Assembly to approve a new Authoritative Interpretation (Item 10-03) of the Book of Order definition of marriage, W-4.9000. If it stands, this new Authoritative Interpretation permits teaching elders to participate ‘in any such marriage they believe the Holy Spirit calls them to perform.’ W-4.9000 is clear that the limits for marriage is between a man and a woman as God designed it. Because these statements are clear and unambiguous they cannot be interpreted in a manner that rejects their plain and ordinary meaning.

“To call this an interpretation is to permit a drastic change in the application of our constitution without a change in the text of our constitution, without the consensus of the Presbyteries (the changing of the Book of Order in an unconstitutional way). This is not an interpretation; it is a change. This is an illegitimate way to change our church’s position on marriage. (Our own foundational principles of order and government say clearly that no opinion can either be more pernicious or more absurd than that which would make truth and falsehood equal and make it seem that it does not matter what man’s opinions are. Instead there is an inseparable connection between faith and practice, truth and duty. Otherwise it would be of no consequence either to discover truth or to embrace it (F-3.0104).)

“This Authoritative Interpretation contradicts the description of marriage rather than interpreting or clarifying it. This is an incorrect use of an Authoritative Interpretation.
By adopting this Authoritative Interpretation, the General Assembly violates the plain meaning of the Book of Order, it ignores the standards set out in the Book of Confessions and it openly rejects the teaching of Scripture.

If such an interpretation is allowed to stand as if it were legitimate, this action nullifies the confessional nature of (constitutional governance in) the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and usurps the right and responsibility of the larger body in constitutional change. Because we love this Church and because we are loyal to the God who gives us his Word Written in Scripture and authoritatively interpreted by the Confessions, we do hereby protest in the strongest possible terms.

Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03—From Chris Nelson, commissioner from the Presbytery of Pueblo: “I formally protest the action of the General Assembly to approve a new Authoritative Interpretation (Item 10-03) of the Book of Order definition of marriage, W-4.9000. Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03—From E. Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03—From James D. Miller, commissioner from the Presbytery of Eastern Oklahoma: “I consider myself a moderate, but the A.I. vote is a simple, obvious, and flagrant violation of our constitution. The Action will only fuel the perception that GA dances to a golden calf of its own making. This Action was shameful.

“‘The church comes under the judgment of God and invites the rejection [of] man when it fails to lead men and women into the full meaning of life together, or withholds the compassion of Christ from those caught in the moral confusion of our time’ (9.47).

“By adopting this Authoritative Interpretation, the General Assembly violates the plain meaning of the Book of Order, it ignores the standards set out in the Book of Confessions and it openly rejects the teaching of Scripture.

“If such an interpretation is allowed to stand as if it were legitimate, this action nullifies constitutional governance in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Because we love this Church and because we are loyal to the God who gives us his Word Written in Scripture and authoritatively interpreted by the Confessions, we do hereby protest in the strongest possible terms.

“‘Jesus Christ, as he is attested for us in Holy Scripture, is the one Word of God which we have to hear and which we have to trust and obey in life and in death. We reject the false doctrine, as though the Church could and would have to acknowledge as a source of its proclamation, apart from and besides this one Word of God, still other events and powers, figures and truths, as God’s revelation” (Barmen, 8.11–12).”

Protest on assembly action on Item 10-03—From Neil Zampella, commissioner from the Presbytery of Redstone: “I formally protest the action of the General Assembly to approve a new Authoritative Interpretation (Item 10-03) of the Book of Order definition of marriage, W-4.9000. If it stands, this new Authoritative Interpretation ‘permits teaching elders to participate in any such legal marriage they believe the Holy Spirit calls them to perform.’ W-4.9000 is clear that its limits on marriage is between a man and a woman as God designed it. Because these statements are clear and unambiguous they cannot be interpreted in a manner that rejects their plain and ordinary meaning.

“To call this an interpretation is to permit the changing of the Book of Order in an unconstitutional way. This is not an interpretation; it is a change. For the General Assembly to deceive the church in this way is a grievous error and an illegitimate way to change our church’s position on marriage. Our own foundational principles of order and government say clearly that no opinion can either be more pernicious or more absurd than that which would make truth and falsehood equal and make it seem that it does not matter what man’s opinions are. Instead there is an inseparable connection between faith and practice, truth and duty. Otherwise it would be of no consequence either to discover truth or to embrace it (F-3.0104).

“This Authoritative Interpretation changes the meaning of the clear definition of marriage into something it can never say.

“In addition, it totally violates Robert’s Rules of Order chp 5, pg 111, 11th Ed. That any motion in conflict with an organization’s constitution is out of order. If adopted it is null and void pg 343.”

General Assembly Nominating Committee 2014 Nominations

The General Assembly Nominating Committee recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) elect the following nominees:

Commissioners to the 221st General Assembly (2014) will vote to elect many people to positions on the various entities of the General Assembly. In accordance with the Book of Order, G-3.0111, and to ensure careful nominations of members to these entities, the General Assembly Nominating Committee proposes a slate of nominees for election. Positions to be filled are listed on the attached pages.

Biographical Information: A short descriptive paragraph for each nominee being presented by the General Assembly Nominating Committee can be found by May 23 on the GA Nominations website—www.pcusa.org/nominations.

Inclusive Representation: The nominations made by the General Assembly Nominating Committee are responsive to and reflective of the principles of participation and representation expressed in the Book of Order, F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. This report provides diversity information following the name of each nominee as well as a chart describing inclusiveness information for each committee to which the General Assembly is electing members.

Nominations Process: The process for nominations proposed to the General Assembly is a long and thorough one. As of April 25, the General Assembly Nominating Committee has on file approximately 260 Application for Nomination forms. The names of these persons were gathered through

- self-nomination
- suggestions from sessions, presbyteries, and synods
- and other Presbyterians who suggested the nominations of persons they knew or with whom they’ve worshipped and worked

Application for Nomination forms are received by the General Assembly Nominations office and a copy of each form is shared with all members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee. In addition a copy of the application is sent to the committee or entity itself.

Each applicant is asked to solicit references from three persons of their choosing. In response to the action of the 208th General Assembly (1996) an appraisal is also solicited from the applicant’s council of membership—presbytery for teaching elders and session for ruling elders and church members. The General Assembly Nominating Committee will not nominate a person unless it has received three appraisals, one of which must be an appraisal from the applicant’s council of membership.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation has encouraged persons, particularly those in underrepresented categories, to consider serving the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on General Assembly entities and to submit an application for nomination form for the General Assembly Nominating Committee consideration. The General Assembly Committee on Representation has reviewed this report.

Although the majority of nominations are proposed for “at-large” positions, some people are nominated as representatives of specific presbyteries or synods to a particular entity. Entities that have such representational positions include the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People. In these cases, the General Assembly Nominating Committee requests presbyteries and synods to send the names of no less than three persons for consideration. The General Assembly Nominating Committee may select only from the pool suggested by the synod or presbytery—through its regular nominating process—when filling a mid council representation slot in these instances.
This report lists the names of persons being proposed for nomination and distinguishes between those positions that are at-large (AL), those that are synod (S) or presbytery (P) representation slots, etc. and those that are filled by representatives from other General Assembly agencies or ecumenical bodies.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee also needs to take into account the inclusiveness requirements outlined in the Book of Order or mandated by the General Assembly: racial ethnic, geographic, physical, theological, and age diversity. The committee is also sensitive to the needs for expertise expressed by the entities themselves. It is a balancing act that the General Assembly Nominating Committee takes seriously and faithfully as it attempts to discern the call of Presbyterians to service on committees at the General Assembly level.

Persons who are elected to service on General Assembly committees and entities are, in most cases, eligible to be reelected to a second term. The 219th General Assembly urged “General Assembly entities to consider renominations as the exception, rather than the rule and applied only to those members whose continued service is clearly beneficial to on-going or projected work in order to assist the GANC in making its careful nominations.” However, many of the persons who are proposed in the report are renominations.

Descriptions for each committee have been developed by the entity and adapted from the Entity Lists and Descriptions page of the General Assembly nominations website. Nomination information for the 2014–2016 cycle are available at the General Assembly Nominating Committee booth in the exhibit area.

This report has been submitted to the office of the Stated Clerk by the 45-day deadline.

Procedure for Nominations from the Floor: The procedure for nominations from the floor is described in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, F. General Assembly Plenary Meeting, 6.c. Nominating from the Floor:

When any nomination for service on a General Assembly committee, council, or board comes from the floor of the assembly, the commissioner making the nomination will provide the General Assembly Nominating Committee, no later than 48 hours after the convening of the General Assembly, with pertinent information about the person whose name is being presented, as well as the name of the particular person nominated by the nominating committee whose nomination is being challenged. Such information shall be provided on the “Nomination by Commissioner Form” provided for use at the assembly and available from the Stated Clerk. The availability of the pertinent information provided by the person challenging the nominating committee’s nominee shall be announced to the assembly at least twenty-four hours in advance of the nomination being made from the floor.

The name of the specific person being challenged must be stated on the “Nomination by Commissioner” form. Please return this form, completed in full on all sides, to the ASSEMBLY INFORMATION CENTER located in the Atrium of the Cobo Center no later than 1:30 p.m. on Monday, June 16, 2014, so that it may be verified for eligibility and the Stated Clerk may prepare for a ballot. Thank you.

This report containing the General Assembly Nominating Committee “Proposed Nominees” will be reported for action on Friday, June 20. Commissioners and advisory delegates will need the following pages for action at that time.

A. Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Book of Order at G-6.02 provides for the establishment of an Advisory Committee on the Constitution. The committee is composed of nine (9) voting members, teaching elders and ruling elders in numbers as nearly equal as possible. The General Assembly provides its own rule for the qualifications of members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), IV.C.3.a., states the qualifications of members:

The committee is composed of nine (9) voting members who shall be stated clerks or former stated clerks of synods or presbyteries, former members of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly, polity professors, or other qualified persons with knowledge of and experience with the Constitution and polity of the church.

All questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order, including items of new business related to the Book of Order, but with the exception of those pertaining to matters pending before a judicial commission, are referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution. The advisory committee reports its findings to the General Assembly along with its recommendations and proposals for constitutional change.

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly refers all timely filed proposals to amend the Book of Order to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which examines the proposed amendments for clarity and consistency of language and for compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution. At least sixty days prior to the meeting of the General Assembly, the Advisory Committee reports its findings to the General Assembly along with its recommendations, which may include an amended version of any proposed constitutional changes as well as advice to accept or decline the proposals referred to the committee.

Skills & Expertise Needed:

- Experience and knowledge of polity and history of the church, including experience interpreting the Constitution within the councils of the church
- Good writing and computer skills
- Interest and ability to conduct extensive research
- Ability to communicate effectively and make oral presentations
- Ability to put in long work days
- Ability to use electronic communications and access the Internet
- Demonstrated willingness to work collegially and work through disagreements

Time Requirements: The workload varies over a two-year cycle. During the year following a meeting of the General Assembly, the time requirements are light, and the work can be accomplished in a couple of conference calls, which may take from 2 to 5 hours each.

During the year leading up to the adjournment of the next General Assembly, the time commitments are moderate and some work will be done in conference calls during this year. During this year the committee requires about sixteen long days of work. The fall meeting during the year before a General Assembly is typically accomplished over a weekend. The spring meeting before a General Assembly lasts six days to consider proposed constitutional amendments and requests for interpretation of the Constitution. In addition, all members are ordinarily expected to be present through the session of the General Assembly to advise the assembly and its Moderator on constitutional questions. General Assembly attendance requires an eight-day time commitment.

In addition to attendance at meetings, the work of the committee includes extensive preparation in the form of research and writing of draft responses to proposed constitutional amendments and requests for interpretation by the General Assembly. Assignments need to be completed and submitted before each meeting.

9 at-large; 3 PMAB; up to 2, four-year term

This committee develops and recommends social witness policy to the General Assembly. Social witness policies apply the Gospel to ethical concerns in the social order and in the church’s own life. Thus, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy helps the General Assembly and Presbyterian Mission Agency maintain and strengthen the prophetic voice of the church; provides them with a regular capacity to study the theological and ethical dimensions of emerging issues; gives them advice and counsel on overtures, reports, and actions recommending policy direction or action on social witness; and assists them to guide the whole church toward a better understanding of Christian social responsibility, both personal and corporate. The committee’s three primary functions are (1) to prepare policy statements, resolutions, study papers, and social involvement monitoring reports for consideration by the General Assembly and its council; (2) to provide advice and counsel to all mid councils—especially to the General Assembly and its council—on possible positions to take on social policy questions and to interpret the General Assembly record on these matters; and, (3) to help the PMA and mid councils evaluate and explore new forms of social witness, including the use of an interactive cyber journal. Twelve (12) members, nine (9) elected at-large, and three (3) members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Up to two, four-year terms.

Skills & Expertise Needed: Social ethics professor; prison chaplain; union or grass-roots organizer; political scientist; persons with human rights and international perspective. Persons should be able to write with skill and insight on theological/public policy matters.

Time Requirement: Meets three times annually for a three-day meeting. Additional committee and task group meetings/assignments plus travel time can bring the total up to 15–22 days per year.

D. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) works with the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and its staff, the Office of the General Assembly, and other entities related to the General Assembly to keep a strong prophetic voice for racial justice before the church. The committee has access to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the General Assembly directly by means of reports, resolutions, and advice and counsel.

ACREC’s Primary Functions:

1. The committee is an advocate within the denomination maintaining an active witness for racial justice in the church. The ACREC may address any issue that significantly impacts the quality of life for people of color, such areas as civil rights, housing, employment, healthcare, public education, affirmative action, environmental racism, economic justice, criminal justice, and immigration policy.

2. The committee recommends to the General Assembly new policy and timely revisions to existing policies and monitors the implementation of policies approved by the church. The ACREC strives to identify and challenge practices that adversely affect the quality of life and restrict full participation of people of color in the life of the church.

Committee Composition: The committee is composed of twelve (12) members normally eligible to serve two, four (4) year terms. Members of the five racial ethnic caucuses (African American, Asian American, Hispanic, Middle Eastern, and Native American) shall select one member from each caucus to be elected through the General Assembly Nominating process to serve a four-year term with eligibility for one additional term.

Six members (one from each racial ethnic constituency group listed above, plus one more) are nominated at-large by the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC), ensuring geographic, racial and gender diversity. One member is appointed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee.

Skills & Expertise Needed:

- Demonstrated commitment to social and economic justice as an expression of Christian discipleship and faith;
- Understanding of the systemic and structural nature of racism;
- Willingness to work collectively to articulate a theological understanding of racial justice and combat racism both in the church and in the world;
- Familiarity with or a willingness to become familiar with the church’s public policy witness;
- Knowledge and expertise in a wide range of social justice issues;
- Skills in social analysis;
- Writing ability;
- Regular access to email.

Time Requirement: The committee meets three times in a non-assembly year, four times in an assembly year. Committee members may serve as liaisons to other entities and/or serve on a task force or subcommittee requiring additional travel. The total time commitment may range from an average of 15 to 25 days per year. Committee members are also required to participate in occasional conference calls between meetings.

Nominated by GANC: Five (5) at-large persons from designated racial ethnic categories; and one (1) at-large person, race and ethnicity unspecified, for balance and diversity within the committee, are nominated to serve on ACREC for a term of four-years.

E. Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is called by the General Assembly to its work in a world where women experience injustice and oppression because of their gender. Affirming our Reformed tradition, Presbyterians recognize “the human tendency to idolatry and tyranny, which calls the people of God to work for the transformation of society by seeking justice and living in obedience to the Word of God” (Book of Order, F-2.05). The church is motivated by the painful recognition of sexism, and has explicitly articulated in the Articles of Agreement (Section 5.6) its commitment to work against gender-based discrimination. The ACWC is the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s contemporary fulfillment of this historic commitment.

The ACWC is housed in the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director’s Office. The ACWC has direct access to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the General Assembly. The committee’s three primary responsibilities include:

1. serving as a voice of advocacy on existing and emerging issues of justice both within the church and society;
2. evaluating and monitoring policies, procedures, programs and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women; and
3. giving the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency advice and counsel via overtures, resolutions, and reports recommending policy direction or action on justice issues.

The committee carries out these advocacy and monitoring functions in collaboration with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Committee Composition:

The ACWC is made up of twelve (12) members, including:
- two clergy women
- one female church lay employee
- the Presbyterian Women Church-wide Coordinating Team Vice Moderator for Justice and Peace
- one Presbytery Mission Agency Board Executive Committee member
- seven at-large members chosen to balance the committee with regards to geography, race ethnicity, age and expertise.

At least four members are racial ethnic, and at least two, but not more than three, are men. Members may serve up to two, four-year terms.

Skills & Expertise Needed:

- Critical faith perspective on sexism and gender justice
- Passion for seeking justice for women
- Advocacy experience
- Skills in social analysis
- Knowledge in women’s issues and commitment to remaining informed on current events relevant to gender justice
- Familiarity with or willingness to become familiar with Presbyterian policy
- Writing ability
- Access to email is also necessary as this is the primary means of communication for the committee.

Time Requirement: The ACWC meets three times annually for three days each meeting. A few members will also attend Advice and Counsel meetings in April of General Assembly years and the General Assembly. Additional committee and working group assignments plus travel time can bring the total to 12–20 days per year. Much of the work of the committee occurs between meetings, so committee members should expect to devote some individual time to the work of ACWC. Members should also be prepared to participate in occasional conference calls and regular email correspondence between meetings.

Nominated by GANC: 10 At-Large (7 At-Large; 3 At-Large from designated categories)—For a four year term.

S. Presbyteries Cooperative Committee on Examinations

This Committee prepares and administers the written examinations that comprise one of the requirements for ordination to the Ministry of Word and Sacrament in the Presbyterian Church (USA). [See G-2.0607d] The Committee has twenty-four (24) members. Twelve (12) members of the Committee are elected (on a rotating basis) from among readers in six regional groupings of presbyteries. The other twelve (12) members are elected by the General Assembly, with consideration being given to areas of needed expertise, to gender and racial/ethnic representation, to an approximate balance of ruling and teaching elders, and to various sub-cultures within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with regard to the overall composition of the PCC. There is particular need for persons who have post-graduate expertise in one of the four areas tested by the four senior ordination examinations: Biblical Exegesis (including use of biblical texts in their original languages), Theological Competence (with special emphasis on Reformed theology), Church Polity, and Worship and Sacraments. The focus of the four senior ordination examinations is to determine one’s entry-level readiness for ministry in the Presbyterian Church (USA). The exams present pastoral challenges whereby candidates may demonstrate how they integrate their faith and theological education in practical ministry.

Skills & Expertise Needed: The members of the Committee are expected to have training/expertise and/or significant practical experience in at least one of the four areas of examination. Members must have the ability to write resource papers to be used for preparation by the reading groups and give online presentations on the examinations as a part of training for readers. The ability to read and assess someone else’s work without imposing one’s own point of view is critical. The work of the PCC is greatly facilitated by members who are bilingual in Korean/English or Spanish/English.

Time Requirement: Annual Meeting of six days in April/May; participation in review of reader comments during four exam evaluation periods each year (first week of February, May, August, and November, working from home using online technologies); preparation of resource papers, questions and presentations for training of readers (seven to ten days total on flexible scheduling)

Nominated by GANC: 12 at-large members in two staggered classes of six members each, serving four-year terms.

Collegiate Ministries Progress Report:

The Office of Collegiate Ministries (OCM) is well established with a full-time staff associate, administrative assistant, and communications director. UKirk (meaning University Church) is gaining traction nationally with more than sixty-one... campus ministries incorporating the UKirk brand with another fifty connected to the UKirk network. The UKirk structure is in place as follows: the UKirk Leadership Board acting as an advisory committee; a UKirk Network helping to resource and connect collegiate ministry workers; and UKirk Ministries who are reaching, loving, and teaching college students to be lifelong followers of Jesus Christ. The following UKirk resources were created to help those working with college-age young adults: Bible studies; Worship Resource; Fundraising Resource. Internship Grants were established to help congregations and campus ministries train and give practical experience in collegiate ministry and to start UKirk. There is a UKirk website (www.ukirk.org) and an active social media community.

The OCM has committed to starting 101 New Worshiping Communities (NWC) focused on the college campus community. We have exceeded our two-year goal as more than twenty NWC’s have started with many receiving 1001 NWC funding.

In 2013, the OCM planned with the Ecumenical Campus Ministry Team a national ecumenical conference and training for collegiate ministry workers in Chicago called “Shared Space” with Presbyterian collegiate ministry workers attending. The OCM consulted with Columbia Theological Seminary in establishing a Doctor of Ministry in Collegiate Ministries that will begin in 2015. The future for collegiate ministries in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is hopeful and we look forward to making a full report at the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

II. Final Responses to Referrals

A. Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) Final Responses to Referrals

   Response: The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy developed and circulated a print resource, also downloadable, of the policy statement, a cover letter from the Stated Clerk, study questions from an economist member of the study team, liturgical suggestions for adapting a communion service from the Theology & Worship unit, a resource list, and a copy of the Social Creed to situate the treatment of the economy within a broad Christian social vision.

   Response: The above resource includes specific treatment of racial ethnic and immigrant communities in its section, “The Plight of Our Neighbors Today,” and was distributed with a cover letter highlighting key themes to a range of offices in the Center, a mailing to approximately 125 ethics professors in the seminaries and colleges (including Presbyterian members of the Society of Christian Ethics), and a mailing to approximately 200 pastors active in social witness for economic justice. Workshops on it were presented at Big Tent and the CPJ Training Day in 2013. Two articles in the online journal, Unbound, lifted up the document and an ecumenical consultation was held at the Washington Office of Public Witness on taxation including World of Hurt, Word of Life as context.

   Response: This referral is answered by Item 09-16, “Tax Justice: A Christian Response to a New Gilded Age,” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 663.)

Response: This referral is answered by Item 11-11, “Risking Peace in a Violent World: Affirmations for Presbyterian Consideration,” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 860.)

Response: This referral is answered by Item 11-11, “Risking Peace in a Violent World: Affirmations for Presbyterian Consideration,” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 860.)

Response: This report was printed, posted, and widely distributed in cooperation with the Middle East, Europe, and Central Asia office of World Mission, including to our mission partners overseas. (Its cover includes pictures taken by mission coworkers.) No negative feedback has been received although there has been debate on the progress of the Syrian and Libyan instances of the Arab Awakening in relation to articles posted in the online journal Unbound (www.justiceUnbound.org). The booklet has been displayed in a reception area for Compassion, Peace, and Justice and World Mission in the Presbyterian Center, and also mailed to the Presbyterian ethics professor organization, Social Ethics Network.

Response: This referral is answered by Item 08-07, “Fairness in Ministerial Compensation: Incentives and Solidarity, a Response to Two Referrals,” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 495.)

Response: This referral is answered by Item 08-07, “Fairness in Ministerial Compensation: Incentives and Solidarity, a Response to Two Referrals,” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 495.)

B. The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Final Responses to Referrals

Response: The Board of Pensions submitted its plan in advance of the deadline.

Response: As part of its plan to address cultural competency, in 2013, the Board of Pensions contracted with a well-known consultant in this arena, who performed a cultural competency assessment with the Board of Pensions’ management group (approximately 85 of 190 staff), reviewed the individual and group results, and conducted specific training with the management group about the leadership competencies necessary to manage effectively with a more diverse workforce. The consultant subsequently conducted mandatory cultural competency training and with all other staff.

Response: The Board of Pensions submitted comprehensive reports with requested information to the appropriate committees of the General Assembly as it has done in the past.

Response: The Board-wide assessment of, and training conducted on, cultural competency was a significant goal for the Board of Pensions in 2013, and the review and evaluation of that program was part of the 2013 Report of Management. Executive management has reviewed the data on affirmative action and supplier diversity with the board of directors as part of the annual Human Resources Report.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Directors of the BOP reviews the CEO’s annual performance, which focuses on the effective management of the organization, including issues of relationships with staff and plan members, and specifically includes a component called Employee Morale and Development. This component evaluates the morale and productivity of all staff and the ability of all employees to work harmoniously with equal opportunity to grow and develop.

In recent employee opinion surveys, conducted every two years, the Board of Pensions’ diverse staff gave very positive ratings to the organization for workplace environment and development opportunities.

The elected Board of Directors of the Board of Pensions has had an extended dialogue about cultural competency in the last two years and is exploring this in greater detail as it considers future topics for education of all members of the board of directors. A component of cultural competency will be part of the training and orientation of new board members beginning in 2014.

Response: The Board of Pensions maintains a comprehensive new employee orientation program that includes a component on the values of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and provides instruction on sensitivity to issues of diversity. As so few of its staff purchase for the organization—and these individuals have served in their positions for an extended time—the values of supplier diversity have been reinforced with this group.

Response: As a benefits organization, the Board of Pensions is not typically called on for theological reflections and the board has not been a party to any discussions with other agencies on this matter. However, believing that the contributions of all who serve the church are valuable to the building up of the ministry of the church, the board has traditionally structured its plans and programs, with very few exceptions, to be inclusive of both teaching elders and other church workers. Taken as a comprehensive plan, the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is designed so that members do not have to worry about benefits, freeing them to focus on their calls. Finally, the Presbyterian CREDO program has been a vehicle for many who serve the church to undertake the prayerful discernment called for in this referral.

7. 2012 Referral: Item 20-03. On Instructing the Board of Pensions to Consider the Possibility of Adding to the Disability Benefits the Option of Partial Disability Benefits—From the Presbytery of San Gabriel (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 36, 1628 of the CD; p. 333 of the printed copy).

Response:

Background, Including Overview of Current Disability Benefit

The disability provisions in question are part of the Death and Disability Plan, one component of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Employing organizations are responsible for the payment of dues for coverage under this plan. The disability program is designed to provide plan members with a source of income in the event of total long-term disability.

The Board of Pensions’ disability benefit, as it is currently designed, not only serves as an income replacement tool, but it offers many unique features not traditionally covered by standard disability programs, including:

- A non-standard ninety-day benefit waiting period (or elimination period, defined as the time that a member must be away from work due to the disability before benefit payments commence). Most plans include a 180-day elimination period.
- Return to work provisions that, in some circumstances, permit the continuation of disability benefits during a period of limited rehabilitation, trial work, or a partial return to work.
- A formula for calculating income replacement benefits that is based on the greater of a member’s effective salary or the median salary (providing lower-paid members more than 60 percent, and in some cases up to—but never more than—100 percent of pre-disability income).
- Continued participation in the full Benefits Plan as an ACTIVE member, with no dues obligation by either the member or the employing organization (the Disability Plan absorbs this entire dues expense for the duration of disability). This includes the provision of medical benefits for the member and all eligible dependents, continued pension benefit accrual, and continued death benefit protection.
- The ability for teaching elders to classify their disability income as housing allowance.
- Social Security Disability application assistance.
- Board-provided Medicare Part B premium for the disabled.

This plan design, specifically the short elimination period and return to work provisions, permit flexibility in administration not found in most commercial disability plans. The return-to-work provisions in particular reflect one of the Plan’s principal objectives—returning members who become disabled to meaningful employment to which they might be suited by education, training and/or experience.

Study Approach and Findings

In response to this referral, the Board of Pensions, in partnership with a consulting organization that specializes in disability benefits for faith-based organizations, initiated a study of partial disability benefits. The study was designed to examine the prevalence of such coverage and the estimated expense of providing benefits to members deemed “partially disabled” for some amount of time before reaching an inevitable long-term disability status. This work included surveying other denominational plans as well as reviewing common practices of private employer plans.

A consistent definition of “partial disability” is elusive, with the term meaning different things in different contexts. Sometimes the term is applied to provisions that provide more flexible elimination periods in a disability plan, other times the reference is to a plan that provides a prorated benefit for someone not totally disabled. Although some plans do provide variations of something called “partial disability” benefits, it is not prevalent in faith-based plans: only two of seven denominations surveyed provide such benefits as a precursor to eventual long-term disability benefits.

Providing for a partial disability benefit would create some significant risks to the Board of Pensions’ Plan:
• Administrative Complexity: The determination of “partial disability,” given the extreme variability in functional abilities from one member to the next, even with the same diagnosis, would be challenging for Liberty Mutual. The ultimate determination of work capacity would require considerably more contact with members, treating physicians, employing organizations, and the Board of Pensions, likely resulting in the need for more specially trained staff, both at Liberty Mutual and at the Board of Pensions.

• Higher Costs: Any expansion to the current definition of disability will increase the cost of the Death and Disability Plan. With additional members qualifying for benefits, the plan’s liabilities would be increased, requiring a corresponding increase in plan assets. This could trigger the need to raise the amount of dues currently assessed to all employing organizations.

Human Costs: A Compromised Employment Relationship

When considering issues related to those who serve the church, it is important to remember that the larger church—the General Assembly or the Board of Pensions, for example—is not the employer in the relationship with the member. The relationship between the employing organization (often a local congregation) and the employee is of central importance. One of the questions asked of a congregation at the time a teaching elder is installed as pastor illustrates this well, as members of the church are asked: “Do we promise to pay him (her) fairly and provide for his (her) welfare as he (she) works among us; to stand by him (her) in trouble and share his (her) joys? ...” (Book of Order, W-4.4006(b)(3)).

The Disability Benefits provided under the Benefits Plan today are specifically designed (and funded) to provide protection at the time when an individual can no longer perform the material duties of his or her work. At that time and only at that time, when a plan member is declared totally disabled, the PC(USA) has found it appropriate for the Benefits Plan to relieve the congregation of its economic and social responsibility. The idea of shifting part of that responsibility from the employer to another party, whether the Board of Pensions or some other institution, in the case of a member who meets some definition of “partially disabled” puts at risk this foundational principle of employment relationships in the church—that we are to stand by each other in trouble.

Recommendations

Recognizing that any additional benefit offered under the Death and Disability Plan would increase the plan’s cost, add complexity to the plan’s administrative processes, and profoundly impact the vital relationships between individual members of the Benefits Plan and their employers, the Board of Pensions does not believe that implementing a partial disability benefit would be advisable at this time.

8. 2012 Referral: Item 20-04. On Instructing the Board of Pensions to Switch Mental Health Providers—From the Presbytery of Central Nebraska (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 36, 37, 1630 of the electronic file; pp. 36, 37, 333 of the printed copy).

Response: Through CIGNA Behavioral Health, the Board of Pensions’ mental health claims administrator, active recruitment efforts have been made to secure additional network providers. CIGNA has also signed single-case agreements with providers in many circumstances to facilitate care for members of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Response: The Board of Pensions has supported the Stated Clerk in these conversations as requested. The result is that the Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC) and Covenant Order of Evangelical Presbyterians (EC) are not interested in participating in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

10. 2012 Referral: Item 21-01. On Instructing MRTI to Be in Conversation with the BOP to Ensure the PC(USA) Health Plan Submits to the Same Standards That PC(USA) Asks of Other Insurers; the Foundation and the BOP Are Requested to Report on Their Actions to the 221st and 222nd General Assembly (2014) and (2016)—From the 220th General Assembly (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 64, 1687 of the electronic copy; pp. 64, 341).

Response: Please see the final response of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, on this item (II. Final Responses to Referrals, F. Presbyterian Mission Agency Final Responses to Referrals, Final Response 78).

11. 2012 Referral: Item 21-02. On Instructing the General Assembly to Take Action to Implement the PC(U.S.A.)’s Policy on Inclusion of People with Disabilities. Recommendation 2. Direct the Stated Clerk to Form a Working Group That Includes Human Resources Staff from General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Foundation, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, and the Board of Pensions to Form a Working Group That Includes Human Resources Staff from Each Entity and Representatives from Presbyterians for Disability Concerns (PDC) and the Disability Consultants in Order to Develop Cost-Effective Training Materials (Web-Based or Otherwise) and to Develop a Plan for Training All Entity Staff. Commissioners to GAMC, and All Commissioners to General Assembly in Disability Awareness and Inclusion—From the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 64, 65, 1692–98 of the CD; pp. 64, 65, 341–42 of the printed copy).

Response: Senior human resources staff of the Board of Pensions has participated in the working group. From that work, background materials from Living into the Body of Christ have been circulated with various operating teams of the Board of Pensions’ staff with encouragement to maintain in their work appropriate sensitivities to the concerns raised in the materials.

Awareness and inclusion of those living with disabilities was one component of the Board of Pensions’ cultural competency assessment and training in 2013.

C. General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations Final Response to Referral

The Environmental Ministries office of the Presbyterian Hunger Program participates actively in Creation Justice Ministries. It also has developed “Earth Care Congregations” network. Started in 2010, The Earth Care Congregation (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/environment/earth-care-congregations/) certification program supports holistic environmental justice concerns, including education and action on climate change. Currently there are 125 certified Earth Care Congregations that holistically integrate caring for God’s creation throughout the life of their congregation—in worship, education, facilities, and outreach.

The Environmental Ministries program continues to work with ecumenical partners to support local congregations as they encourage youth and young adult involvement in environmental ministry. It also has a strong ecumenical presence and joins in promoting a unified voice as the ecumenical community addresses concerns about climate change and other environmental issues. It also distributes ecumenically developed resources to Presbyterian congregations as appropriate. Through representation at the Creation Justice Ministries, the PC(USA) is in conversation with the environmentally focused programs with other ecumenical partners and their green church certification programs.

D. General Assembly Committee on Representation Final Responses to Referrals in Progress

Response: GACOR shared reports in 2013 and has a mechanism for continuing to share data with these partners.

Response: The GACOR created a working group in 2012 and 2013 to address referrals from Item 11-17. In February 2013, the committee hosted an initial meeting with the leadership of all six agencies to clarify the referrals and receive input from the agencies. Data forms were distributed for the agencies to report employment and supplier diversity data. All six agencies submitted reports on 2012 data by the deadline in 2013. After review, these forms are in the process of being revised and will be distributed in 2014 (for 2013 data). In 2014, the committee will begin its review and recommendation of revision of benchmarks/goals in employment and supplier diversity by fitting into an established pattern of other reviews directed by the General Assembly. Employment and Supplier Diversity reviews of the six agencies will fit into the established pattern in a six-year cycle. Therefore, reporting to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) are the reviews set to happen in: 2014—Presbyterian Mission Agency and 2015—Office of the General Assembly. Reporting to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) are the reviews set to occur in 2016—Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) and 2017—Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP). Reporting to the 224th General Assembly (2020) are the reviews set to occur in 2018—Presbyterian Foundation (FDN) and 2019—Board of Pensions (BOP). Having been reviewed once, the agency reviews will resume on a six-year cycle as a “regular and recurring basis.”

Response: The GACOR determined that each agency has cultural particularities that need to be taken into consideration when establishing benchmarks. The data sets used to evaluate employment pools will need to be developed in the first review of each agency. Federal statistics may inform a larger context but may not be directly comparable. This will be an ongoing project.

Response: This referral is answered by Item 09-19 (p. 735) and by GACOR Final Response to Referral 2, above (p.122), being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Response: This referral is answered by Item 09-19 being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 735.)

E. Committee on the Office of the General Assembly Final Responses to Referrals

Response: The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly has worked through a deliberate process in response to the issues raised in Item 03-02. That process has succeeded in reducing the General Assembly per capita budget through staff reductions and other means. This process has not ended but will continue through 2016.

The presbyteries’ struggle to pay their per capita is born in the confluence of several factors including: a weak economy, issues inside the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the changing nature of congregations. The General Assembly determined in 1999 that:

A presbytery has the responsibility to remit per capita allocations to synod and General Assembly, even though a congregation does not pay the per capita allocated to it by the presbytery … as long as funds are available within the presbytery (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p.107)

While providing a relief valve for presbyteries that do not receive the full allocation of per capita from their congregations, the General Assembly was also asserting a basic governance issue at the heart of this determination. The General Assembly is comprised of commissioners elected by their presbytery This is part of a fundamental understanding that governance in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is through its councils.

These presbyters shall come together in councils of regular gradation. These councils are sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly. All councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution. The councils are distinct, but have such mutual relations that the act of one of them is the act of the whole church performed by it through the appropriate council. The larger part of the church, or a representation thereof, shall govern the smaller. (Book of Order, F-3.0203)

The commissioners elected by their presbytery gather together at the General Assembly to discern decisions of behalf of the whole church. One of those decisions is to approve financial commitments, thus obligating the whole church to these expenditures. Many of those obligations come from constitutional mandates created with the approval of the presbyteries. An example would be the meeting of the General Assembly itself. The combination of the obligations approved by the General Assembly commissioners, in addition to those required constitutionally, constitutes the per capita budget.

Similarly the Mission budget too is approved through the discernment of the commissioners to the General Assembly. It likewise becomes an obligation made by the General Assembly for the whole church. The PCUSA, through its councils, has chosen to develop mission funding through a variety of appeals to individuals, congregations, and presbyteries for general, special, and extra-commitment giving.

Thus the General Assembly expresses the voice of its elected presbytery commissioners in making commitments for the life of the church and its mission. These commitments are, by General Assembly authority, obligations of the whole church.
As a hallmark of covenantal community, the councils of the church are mutually accountable to one another within the whole in meeting these obligations through diverse strategies of stewardship.

Once the per capita budget is approved the per capita rate is calculated. That rate, too, is approved by the commissioners of the General Assembly on behalf of the whole church. This rate is then communicated to the presbyteries and in each instance their presbytery commissioners determine the best way forward to interpret per capita giving to their respective congregations. The General Assembly does not directly communicate the per capita asking to congregations. In 2012, one hundred and five of the presbyteries added their own per capita rate to the General Assembly rate and sent the resulting per capita asking to their congregations. In 2012, sixty-eight presbyteries included the per capita rate in their total mission budget asking from their congregations.

It is the presbyteries that determine how best to raise the funds to meet the obligations made by the presbyteries and the General Assembly. Consistent with the active role the presbyteries take in creating these obligations, it would seem inconsistent for presbyteries to opt for a passive role in funding these obligations by only submitting such monies as sessions may choose to send. Consistent with the role of councils’ mutual accountability, it is incumbent upon presbyteries to continue to obligate themselves to raise the funds through whatever method they may choose to support the functions they helped to identify as priorities. That discretion is within the powers of the presbytery in the Constitution. It would be the response of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to not sever the creation of obligation to expenditures from the obligation to raise funds for those expenditures.

F. Office of the General Assembly Final Responses to Referrals

   Response: The Stated Clerk issued an invitation to the Evangelical Presbyterian Church and the Evangelical Covenant Order of Presbyterians (ECO) to a consultation on sharing benefits plans. The invitation was accepted by the Evangelical Covenant Order of Presbyterians. A discussion was held with Board of Pensions representatives. Because of the contracts ECO already has in place, there is not a possibility of a joint medical plan. Future discussions about possibilities with the optional retirement plans may be held.

   Response: By requiring the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to include gender and race in its annual statistics on salary and benefits paid to individual exempt church workers, the General Assembly may be harming the people it intends to benefit. Employment lawyers commonly advise employers not to include boxes on application forms seeking information on the race and gender of applicants, as well as information on age, disability, national origin, and other information. Such information can be used to make unlawful and discriminatory decisions in the hiring process.

   In addition, federal law prohibits pre-employment inquiries as to gender unless based upon a bona fide occupational qualification:

   29 CFR 1604.7—Pre-employment inquires as to sex, provides in pertinent part:

   Any pre-employment inquiry in connection with prospective employment which expresses directly or indirectly any limitation, specification, or discrimination as to sex shall be unlawful unless based upon a bona fide occupational qualification.

   By directing OGA to identify exempt church workers by name, gender, and race, potential employers can find these church workers and use that information to make potentially unfair, unlawful discriminatory decisions in the hiring process.

   Response: The Presbyterian Historical Society (PHS) has added the Reverend Elijah Parish Lovejoy to the list of honored names, which also includes the Reverend Dr. Donald McClure. The list of honored names will be featured on the new PHS website when it debuts this spring. PHS senior staff have established policies and procedures for adding names to this list in the future.

Response: The Presbyterian Hunger Program (PHP) Joining Hands Initiative—in collaboration with the Office of Public Witness (OPW)—has engaged this overture:

a. The PHP and OPW provided the following through which more than 1,000 Presbyterians engaged in work to stop both the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) and implementation of the fast track process by the administration, due to the additional powers given corporations within the agreement, according to leaked documents, in partnership with Red Unido Manos in Peru.

(1) More than 1,000 “Take Action” letters were sent to President Obama via CapWhiz on the TPP itself.

(2) More than 3,000 postcards to date have been sent to members of the House of Representatives opposing fast track.

(3) Many letters and cards were followed up with telephone calls within presbyteries and by letters from presbytery execs drafted by PHP.

(4) Individual pastors and presbytery reps visited elected officials in approximately thirty district offices.

(5) The focus is now shifting to senators.

b. The PHP produced trade reform posters and postcards utilized in churches and by secular groups, such as the Citizens Trade Campaign. Ninety Presbyterians participated in a webinar on the TPP and forty more on a webinar on fast track; both are lodged on the trade page, www.pcusa.org/trade. The PHP is also working on a Bible study that addresses trade issues through scripture (available in March 2014). Trade game is being developed and piloted and will be available Spring 2014.

c. The OPW is visiting congressional leaders on fast track alongside the Interfaith Committee on Trade Justice.

d. PHP staff preached at least seven times this year on texts related to trade in U.S. congregations.

e. The Trade Reform, Accountability, Development and Employment Act was not introduced into Congress as planned; similar legislation is under development and the OPW and PHP are tracking its progress.

f. Jed Koball—PC(USA) mission co-worker—visited congregations speaking on trade issues and its impact in Peru and the U.S.

g. The Office of Immigration Issues of the General Assembly monitors trends in U.S. immigration and the numerous factors, including trade, that impact the flow of immigration. The office coordinates with Presbyterian Mission Agency partners to advocate for comprehensive immigration reform that accounts for this and all causes of immigration.

Response: The Office of Immigration Issues signed onto a letter to elected officials regarding “legislative principles” that include: passing the DREAM Act, reform detention standards, and end programs like Secure Communities and 287(g) where local law enforcement cooperate with federal immigration officials.

The Stated Clerk sent a letter to officials at the Department of Homeland Security, Customs, and Border Patrol, and to President Obama to urge them to end the ATEP program (lateral repatriation).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a member of the Interfaith Immigration Coalition and it is a signatory to the Interfaith Platform on Humane Immigration.

In a January 2013 letter to Presbyterians, the Stated Clerk called for reform that included the principles set forth by the General Assembly and called that this reform not happen at the expense of border communities. In a statement issued July 3, 2013, the Stated Clerk expressed concern about the build up at the border and in a letter written on September 27, 2013, to members of the House, the Stated Clerk lifted up border communities and the needless militarization of our borders.

Response: The Stated Clerk issued a pastoral letter to Presbyterians on December 11, 2012, urging them to contact their representatives and encourage the support of The Indonesian Family Refugee Protection Act.

Response: The Office of the General Assembly sent reminders to the worship planning committee ahead of Big Tent and General Assembly to remind them of this mandate.

Response: The Office of the General Assembly held two roundtable discussions on immigration reform where staff could discuss the possibility of reform and share information on recruiting Presbyterians to work for reform as well as resources to educate about the need for reform.

Response: Representatives from ACREC were invited to meet with each agency review committee during their initial meeting.

Response: Added to the Agency Review Manual before current cycle of agency reviews.

Response: Continued to focus on gathering information during the registration process to identify special needs and updated equipment which is used to provide for full participation.

Response: Instructions to COLA and COLA manual amended to make explicit the instructions of the assembly.

Response: The parties responsible for worship planning at the 2013 Big Tent and the 221st General Assembly (2014) considered the proposal. Neither felt that this opportunity as right for the direction they were led to take worship. Immigrant stories were highlighted in the reports on emerging worshipping communities and integrated into exhibit hall and programs at both Big Tent and the 221st General Assembly planning.

and Racial Ethnic Equity as It Relates to Inquirers and Candidates in the Call Process—From the General Assembly Council, on Behalf of Women of Color Consultation Committee (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 61, 75–76, 854 of the electronic copy; pp. 61, 75–76, 230 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of the General Assembly, through Vocational Ministries, reviews all resources on a regular basis, updating as necessary, in areas of content and inclusiveness.

Response: As part of the restructuring of the Office of the General Assembly, some duties of the former Office of Vocation were transferred to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Responsibilities for the Racial Ethnic Seminary Conference, which includes racial ethnic women, was one of the events transferred. In addition, the Office of the General Assembly continues its work in facilitating the discernment of call for all Presbyterians, including racial ethnic women, through the Church Leadership Connection, training events, and resources.

Response: As part of the restructuring of the Office of the General Assembly, some duties of the former Office of Vocation were retained by the Office of the General Assembly and placed in Vocational Ministries. Bi-vocational ministry remains one of the emphases of the work of this area. The Church Leadership Connection, the on-line program through which call seekers and calling organizations can meet, was recently enhanced and includes the ability to facilitate bi-vocational ministry.

Response: The Office of the General Assembly, as part of the restructure, has created a programmatic emphasis for ruling elders. The work will include a renewed emphasis on the unique and substantial role that ruling elders play in the life of the church and how, through partnership with deacons, teaching elders and members, the priesthood of all believers manifests itself.

Response: The 220th General Assembly (2012) approved a resolution that urged a variety of action around Secure Communities or S.Comm. This is a federal program developed in 2008 and under the jurisdiction of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS), that, where implemented, allows local law enforcement agencies to run the fingerprints of all persons arrested for any crime through a federal immigration database. If there is a match, federal immigration officials may issue a detainer requesting local law enforcement hold the person for a full forty-eight hours after that person would normally be released. The forty-eight hours excludes weekends and holidays. In some jurisdictions individuals are held much longer than forty-eight hours. After disagreement about whether the program was optional or mandatory for local law enforcement, many have refused to participate in the program by either not honoring detainers or developing procedures about when a person’s fingerprints would be entered into the immigration database. The Office of the General Assembly has closely watched the debate around Secure Communities and worked with our interfaith partners to take action to end the program. This includes educating Presbyterians about this program and its impacts on communities. Specifically, the Stated Clerk sent a letter in 2013 to the Obama Administration and the Department of Homeland Security requesting the end of this program and other programs that essentially designate local law enforcement agencies as agents of federal immigration agencies. The Presbyterian-ian Church (U.S.A.) also joined the Interfaith Immigration Coalition (IIC) in their “Champion Legislative Principles” letter, which was sent multiple times to Congress and called for the end of S.Comm. and similar programs. While the Office of the General Assembly has not been aware of litigation surrounding S.Comm. after the 2012 assembly, advocates continued to watch the reports published by DHS after Representative Zoe Lofgren called on the agency to clarify the goals and requirements of the program and how the Supreme Court’s decision on Arizona's SB 1070 would impact local law enforcement activities around immigration. In late 2013 a new report was issued that argued detainers were a violation of the United States Constitution. The Office of the General Assembly will continue to monitor activities around S.Comm. including litigation and join as appropriate in amicus curiae.

Response: The Office of Vocation took the following actions to improve and shorten the call process. Training was provided to mid councils, search committees, and call seekers in effectively using the Church Leadership Connection System (CLC). Included in the training were instructions in evaluating Personal Information Forms (PIF) and Ministry Information Forms (MIF) to assess greater compatibility and fit between call seekers and calling organizations. The CLC was revised in August 2013. The new system improves and shortens the call process by incorporating more quantitative search options into the system, which reduces the number of applications received for positions available. The new forms include leadership competencies, optional links for sermons and lessons plans, narrative questions that solicit outcome responses, and additional matching fields that ensure greater compatibility in the call process. Online tutorials are available for all CLC users to assist in using the revised system. The call process will be shortened as a result of a more effective matching process that allows call seekers and calling organizations to be more specific about their leadership competencies and needs. Training to encourage an openness to call and understanding how leadership impacts mission and ministry is included in all CLC training.

Response: In February 2014, the Office of the General Assembly sent a survey to all presbytery stated clerks asking questions about presbytery and congregational activities around the study and discernment concerning the meaning of Christian marriage.

One hundred four of the 172 presbyteries responded. Due to the reporting deadline for General Assembly reports, there were several presbyteries who reported that they will be engaging in some study at some date beyond the reporting deadline.

Several congregations also reported directly to the OGA. Those reports are available from the Office of the General Assembly. These are the presbytery reported results:

- 15.84 percent Presentation by prepared individuals, including sermons:
- 5.19 percent Other

10. Comments:

- In the midst of other significant issues gripping the presbytery’s attention, including but not solely uncertainty about the 221st GA, this topic was not addressed by presbytery but may have been studied in congregations; there were no reports to the presbytery about any studies done.

- At a presbytery meeting we heard from representatives of three congregations who had done the entire PC(USA) study and recommended it. Then at the meeting we completed one of the lessons from the study.

- Washington State voters approved same sex marriage in 2012.

- Our unity is in Jesus Christ. Discussing this topic would have fractured our unity, since no one is seeking “to” discern; our presbyters have already discerned and our (sic) firm (though of different discernments) in their beliefs.

- EP asked the Christian Education Committee to address this topic and encountered some reluctance. The committee has scheduled a workshop in March.

- Two items from Council (now Cabinet) minutes:

  1. June Council Minutes Stated Clerk’s Report
     In his report to presbytery the clerk proposes to present the Office of the Stated Clerk’s Advisory Opinion 7 “Marriage and Same Gender Ceremonies” with a Q & A time.

  2. Marriage Study Guides
     There was a discussion regarding whether to conduct regional gatherings or a study in conjunction with a presbytery assembly using the brief guide. There was no particular energy or interest for doing so, particularly since the guides do not directly address the hot-topic of same sex marriage. We will continue to make both guides available, for churches or groups who may wish to use the, but will report to GA that we did not feel that the study guide directly addressed the issues.

- We are doing all we can to keep our congregations in the PC(USA). We don’t encourage congregations to study issues that could or would cause division at this time. We did give the congregations a list of resources regarding several issues that they could study if they desire.

- Some folks were interested in studying the material, most were not. Sorry!

- I was very disappointed in the PC(USA) study. VERY thin soup. Gave little insight, little to work with. I expect much more, and we need it.

- We continue to hold that it is up to the individual and individual congregation to determine their beliefs and practices in regards to the meaning of Christian marriage.

- We have been so busy finishing up with gracious dismissals, dealing with the closing of two congregations and dealing with a complete change in presbytery staff that there has not been time for Foothills to engage this study.
• Parliamentary solutions (technical) are not able to resolve this “adaptive” issue. We need more discussion and less “voting”

• The study brought out major conflicts among people who had known each other for years. Not a good prediction for the ability of the Assembly or the denomination to deal with the issue this year.

• A small group in the church I serve is working through the study. The experience has been one of the best we’ve had: good and sustained attendance, evidence of study/reflection between sessions, and energy for the conversations. It is well-conceived and well done. The final question each session brilliant! It allows sharing without judgment of any observation or opinion, and engages a powerful question: What difference does it make? Thank you.

• Baltimore Presbytery has been studying this topic at least since 2004. During the last four years my sense is that we are tired of talking about it.

• We used Table Talk format organized by the Peacemaking Committee. There were three sessions that churches could attend. Material from the Office of Worship were made available at presbytery meetings.

• Our more conservative congregations were, for the most part, not interested in conversation. Those who participated were more open minded. Preaching to the choir.

• From one person who participated…The passage of 10-A started an exodus of churches form the PC(USA). The passage of an overture on same sex marriage this summer will open the flood gates of churches leaving the PC(USA). The churches not leaving the PC(USA) will suffer major losses of members who cannot continue to be associated with the PC(USA).

• The Leadership Team was presented with the study resources developed by the PC(USA) but felt no energy, given the difficulties over 10-A to engage in this topic.

• The leadership of Cimarron Presbytery felt that the study provided by the Office of Theology and Worship was lacking and therefore, not usable. There was an overwhelming amount of background material to cover and absorb, especially for members who have not been closely following the topic of marriage. In contrast, the discussion questions themselves seemed rather shallow. Regrettfully, Cimarron Presbytery did not have the time or resources to seek out or develop other study resources on this important topic.

• Things are settling down in our Presbytery and we may be of a mind to engage such a study next year.

• There was little energy for this conversation as a whole but individual churches were interested.

• At a Presbytery Leaders Training Event, a workshop was offered to help those wanting to learn how best to use the prepared materials from the Office of Theology and Worship. Those who attended they were able to return to their respective congregations to offer either small group or large group discussion on the topic.

• In Minnesota, a proposed constitutional amendment banning same-gender marriage was the focus of public and church discussion, and tended to put the issue more into a discussion of public law than church position. That campaign absorbed most of the interest in the issue.

• I am a new Stated Clerk so I did not participate in discussion regarding this, but I believe that our focus has been on stability. This very topic has the potential to produce instability at this time.

• Our presbytery has scheduled a presbytery-wide study session, probably using the two-hour module, for a gathering in May. We think the marriage issues will continue to be important to PC(USA) and our country, and two of our 221st GA Commissioners are preparing to lead the May discussion. Too late for the survey, but we will engage one another on the issues. Materials at first read are excellent.

• I’m sorry. We’ve just had other stuff preoccupying us for a while.

G. Presbyterian Mission Agency Final Responses to Referrals

Response: Presbyterian Mission Agency’s associate for Cultural Proficiency consulted with and assisted all agencies in the creation of Six-Year Cultural Proficiency Plans for each agency. All Six-Year Plans were submitted to the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), and the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) in 2012.

Response: Cultural proficiency and antiracism training is required for all new hires of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and all current staff must attend updated cultural proficiency and antiracism training at least once in a three-year cycle. On December 5, 2012, and December 6, 2013, cultural proficiency and antiracism training opportunities were provided for all staff at Staff Development Day, as well as through scheduled courses and sessions as part of individual ministry staff development workshops.

Response: The Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012), the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency affirmed the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God. They encouraged congregations, presbyteries, synods, and seminaries to recognize the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God and to incorporate it into worship, conferences, training events, and other activities in a press release published and distributed by the Presbyterian News Service.

4. 2012 Referral: Item 10-20. A Resolution to Recommit to Celebrating the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God. Recommendation 3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to Provide Annual Funding in the Amount of $7,000 for the Joint Working Group (Up to Eight Members) to Meet Independently of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns Once Each Year, to Be Incorporated into the Per Capita Budget Every Year—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 61, 75, 871–73 of the CD; p. 235 of the printed copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Mission Agency provided funding from its per capita budget in the amount of $7,000 for the Joint Working Group, which consists of two members of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and two members of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, to meet independently of those respective committees. The Joint Working Group met with the associate for Gender and Racial Justice, who consulted with the group in planning the Women of Color Consultation held in October 2013.

Response: The associate for advocacy committee support and an administrative assistant provide staff support for the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns. The staff members’ offices are lodged within the Office of the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. This exact staffing pattern has been in place since 2010.

The associate and the administrative assistant report to the manager of Racial Ethnic Leadership Development. From time to time, the associate for advocacy committee support may enlist the expertise of other staff such as the director of Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries, the associate for Gender and Racial Justice, the manager of Racial Ethnic Leadership Development, Human Resources managers, and other Presbyterian Mission Agency staff in addressing issues of concern to the advocacy committees.

The coordinator for the General Assembly Committee on Representation and ruling elder resources/Assistant Stated Clerk provides staff support for the General Assembly Committee on Representation. The coordinator for the General As-

Recommendation 5. The General Assembly Mission Council to Create a Process to Raise Funds to Invest in the West Bank, Investment (MRTI) of Its Engagement with Corporations Involved in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank.

General Assembly (2012) Study Committee Opportunities for Positive Investment, with a Report Back to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Middle East Foundation, and the General Assembly Mission Council) and Appropriate Counterparts in the American Ecumenical, Presbyterian Church (USA), the Presbyterian Church USA, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and the Presbyterian Foundation attended a session in cultural proficiency and antiracism conducted by the same consultant used by the Board of Pensions to educate their staff. The Presbyterian Mission Agency’s associate for cultural proficiency left the organization in early 2013. Following her departure, the director of Human Resources along with other outside consultants began developing a new training program around cultural proficiency and antiracism that builds on the topic from introduction to deeper levels of understanding. One of the contributing consultants is David Esterline, a recognized expert in the field, professor at McCormick Seminary, and member of ACREC. The updated program will be rolled out to all staff and new hires in 2014. The new program will be shared with ACREC, and feedback will be requested.

Response: The six General Assembly-related entities (Board of Pensions—BOP, Presbyterian Mission Agency—PMA, Office of the General Assembly—OGA, Foundation, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc.—PILP, Presbyterian Publishing Corporation—PPC) provided Biennial Status Reports on the Representation of Women and Persons of Color in Employment to GACOR through the Reverend Molly Casteel, Assistant Stated Clerk and coordinator, Representation, Inclusiveness and Ruling Elder Training by May 31, 2013, as directed by Deborah Fair, moderator, and Hector Rivera-Velez, vice moderator, General Assembly Committee on Representation chair of the AA/EEO Task Group.

Response: In 2013, the leadership and/or key staff of the Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Mission Agency, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, and Presbyterian Foundation attended a session in cultural proficiency and antiracism conducted by the same consultant used by the Board of Pensions to educate their staff. The Presbyterian Mission Agency’s associate for cultural proficiency left the organization in early 2013. Following her departure, the director of Human Resources along with other outside consultants began developing a new training program around cultural proficiency and antiracism that builds on the topic from introduction to deeper levels of understanding. One of the contributing consultants is David Esterline, a recognized expert in the field, professor at McCormick Seminary, and member of ACREC. The updated program will be rolled out to all staff and new hires in 2014. The new program will be shared with ACREC, and feedback will be requested.

Response: On March 28, 2013, the report was published on CenterNet, the intranet system accessible by employees of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation published the report to its employees on its intranet system on May 2, 2013. On March 25, 2013, the Board of Pensions published the report to its employees on BoardConnection, the BOP intranet system.

9. 2010 Referral: Item 14-08. Breaking Down the Walls. Recommendation 3.e. Urges a Visit to Israel/Palestine by a High-Level Joint Delegation of Presbyterians (Including Representatives from the Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Foundation, and the General Assembly Mission Council) and Appropriate Counterparts in the American Ecumenical, Jewish, and Muslim Communities, with Costs Shared Among the Participating Faith Groups, for the Purpose of Identifying Opportunities for Positive Investment, with a Report Back to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Middle East Study Committee (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 50, 52, 1021–1119).

Response: Leaders of the Presbyterian Foundation and the Presbyterian Mission Agency took a joint trip to Israel/Palestine in March 2013 for the purposes of developing a positive investment program, as directed by the 219th General Assembly (2010). The program builds on efforts by congregations, seminaries, and other church institutions; and follows an additional directive from the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The project team developed criteria for investments (based on prior General Assembly actions), consulted with faith and business leaders in the region to identify investment opportunities that fit the criteria, reviewed business plans and supporting documentation from numerous opportunities, then visited a number of the projects and businesses that seemed to best fit. The criteria for the projects call for investments that will:

- Make a difference in the lives of those most vulnerable.
- Preserve an effective witness to peace in the entire region.
- Be invested in West Bank owned/sponsored initiatives or companies.
- Result in sustainable economic development (without supporting the occupation).
- Engage Christians in the West Bank around issues of job creation and economic development.
- Confine business activity solely to peaceful pursuits, and refrain from allowing their products or services to support or facilitate violent acts by Israelis or Palestinians against innocent civilians, construction and maintenance of settlements or Israeli-only roads in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory, and construction of the Separation Barrier as it extends beyond the 1967 “Green Line” into Palestinian territories.
- Minimize or eliminate Palestinian dependence on Israel or others.
- Offer transparency of use and impact.
- Provide direct engagement with those who ultimately benefit.

Two initial investments have been placed:

- A loan to complete construction of a continuous education building at a Christian college in Bethlehem. The building will house two restaurants and a training kitchen for the college’s culinary school, along with classrooms for the college’s tour-guide training program. These are key areas of job creation in Bethlehem.
- A loan to construct a renewable energy installation for an industrial park near Bethlehem.
- Investment to create a microfinance initiative in partnership with a Ramallah-based bank. The program will offer loans in the $1,500–$20,000 range to create and/or expand micro-small businesses, mostly in the agricultural sector. The program has a target of 80 percent women borrowers, with a required minimum of 51 percent women borrowers. Loans will be made at rates significantly below those charged by other microfinance institutions in the region.

Work continues on a third potential investment in renewable energy.

Initial funding for the investments came from the Creative Investment Funds designated by prior assemblies, which are held by the Foundation for the benefit of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Additional funds have been raised from congregations, which are able to participate in the program through a revocable charitable trust established with the Foundation’s subsidiary New Covenant Trust Company.

While this Presbyterian work has been done in partnership with individual Palestinian Christians, Palestinian Muslims, and Israeli Jews, it has not been possible to have a high-level joint delegation with appropriate counterparts in the American ecumenical, Jewish, and Muslim communities.

Congregations interested in investing in peace through this effort should contact Rob Bullock at the Presbyterian Foundation (800-858-6127 or rob.bullock@presbyterianfoundation.org).

Response: Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA) was awarded the remaining $25,000 of a $100,000 grant to complete the work begun by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Communications and Funds Development office. PHEWA created a fund-raising task force that developed a comprehensive fund-raising plan that was adopted by the PHEWA board and presented to an all-network leadership gathering in March 2013. Implementation of this plan began in the Fall 2013. The fund-raising plan follows.
PHEWA FUNDRAISING STRATEGY AND IMPLEMENTATION PLAN

Introduction

As a hybrid organization, PHEWA relies on two separate sources of revenue: the national church, in the form of a funded position and limited staff support within the office of Social Witness Ministries and PHEWA, the independent 501(c)3 nonprofit. This fundraising plan is focused on PHEWA the nonprofit. Its goal is to strengthen PHEWA’s financial stability so that PHEWA might continue to interpret and implement General Assembly policy in those areas where individual and community health and justice intersect.

There are two distinct but related component parts to this comprehensive plan: strengthening and increasing the reach of the relational infrastructure on which PHEWA is built; and engaging in direct fundraising strategies. Both will require dedicated work groups to achieve these goals—dedicated both in the sense of commitment and willingness to lead by example as well as the sense that this will be the sole focus of work group members with no other PHEWA related tasks assigned to them.

1. Strategy I: Relational infrastructure enhancement includes:
   a. Congregational and mid council outreach and membership retention;
   b. Individual membership communication and outreach;
   c. Identification of and outreach to potential major donors;
   d. Marketing and publicity;
   e. The development and upgrade of our member/donor database.

2. Strategy II. Direct fundraising includes:
   a. Board giving;
   b. Establish endowment fund, design and implement strategy;
   c. Grants—identify and apply for available grants;
   d. Major gifts;
   e. Solicit institutional and individual membership, initial and continuing;
   f. Special appeals;
   g. Online giving.

Strategy I: Build Relational Infrastructure

Relational infrastructure upholds and sustains PHEWA. Network leaders and members, and former leaders, all contribute to PHEWA’s effectiveness and sustainability through in-kind and financial donations. The task of the Relational Infrastructure Enhancement Team (RIET) is the development of a multipronged plan of outreach and support to the individuals, congregations, and mid councils that constitute the core of PHEWA.

The following five categories of activity were identified by the Funding Strategy Task Force as critical to PHEWA’s health and sustainability.

1. Congregational and Mid Council Outreach, Membership Retention
   a. 2013 Goals:
      • Compile lists of all synods and mid councils in the PC(USA), including email addresses.
      • Personal contact with every synod executive and presbytery.
      • Identify congregational members of PHEWA.
      —Personal contact.
      • Identify one congregation in each presbytery that is not yet a PHEWA member for direct solicitation.
   b. What networks can do:
      • Encourage your own congregation and mid-council to become a PHEWA member
2. Individual Membership Communication and Outreach

a. Purpose: healthy membership base.

b. 2013 Goals:

   • Contact every PHEWA member with a phone call.
   • Upgrade membership database to include emails.

c. Tasks to achieve goals:

   • Phone interview sheet available by April 1
   • Member contact assignments made
   • Results of outreach turned in (May 15)

d. What your network can do:

   • Keep a current network membership list and maintain a regular schedule of contacting them.
   • Welcome new members within a week of being notified of their joining.
   • Notify staff of questions or concerns.

3. Identification of Potential Major Donors and Outreach

a. Purpose: potential funding stream; opportunity to leave legacy.

b. 2013 Goals:

   • Pull names of everyone who has given over $100 in a one year period within the last three years.
   • Develop a personal contact schedule.
   • Identify individuals who need to receive a personal visit.

c. What your network can do:

   • Identify potential major donors within your network.
   • Coordinate visits and/or “asks” with fundraising team.

4. Marketing and Publicity

a. Purpose: To increase congregational and mid council awareness of network activities including effective distribution of resource materials.

b. 2013 Goals:

   • Publish articles on PHEWA/PHEWA network activities in 25 percent of the presbyteries that distribute e-newsletters.
   • Submit articles to denominational communications staff.
   • Present information about PHEWA and PHEWA Networks at twenty-five congregations.
   • Contact pastors of current PHEWA member congregations offering to lead an adult forum on PHEWA and PHEWA.

c. Networks:

   What your network can do:

   • Take pictures at events, presentations etc., send them to Susan Stack and Trina Zelle.
   • Report on PHEWA/network activities (i.e. display booth at presbytery, leading a workshop on network issue).
   • Write articles about your network’s activities for your church newsletter.
   • Ask your church webmaster to create a link to both PHEWA websites.
   • Download a copy of the PHEWA PowerPoint and use when making network presentations.
5. Upgrade Member/Donor Base
   a. Purpose: To ensure accurate records of membership, contributions, and membership contacts.
   b. 2013 Goals:
      - Identify most appropriate software program for PHEWA needs
      - Purchase dedicated PHEWA laptop and software
      - Transfer information from denominational software to proprietary PHEWA database
   c. What your network can do:
      - Maintain a supply of PHEWA membership forms for distribution and collection
      - Distribute them and, when possible, collect them. Keep information for your own records as well then send them to Louisville.

Strategy II: Implement Direct Fundraising

Direct fundraising builds on the work of relational infrastructure development and maintenance. The Funding Strategy Task Force identified the following categories for direct fundraising.

1. Board Giving
   a. 2013 Goals:
      - Articulate expectation of giving and/or fundraising for executive committee and network leadership.
      - Option to include PHEWA in will.
      - 100 percent participation at any level of giving.
   b. What your network can do:
      - Raise awareness with new network leadership

2. Establish Endowment Fund
   a. 2013 Goals:
      - Set up endowment fund with Presbyterian Foundation.
      - Design and launch an endowment campaign.
   b. What your network can do:
      - Raise awareness with network leadership; include in presentations

3. Grant Development/Fee for Service Opportunities
   a. 2013 Goals:
      - Complete Guide Star profile.
      - Develop five projects in line with PHEWA/CPJ work goals.
      - Fill out common grant form and keep available.
      - Approach three synods with fee for service opportunity.
      - Submit potential grant possibilities to grants working group to determine appropriateness with PHEWA and network project goals.
   b. What your network can do:
      - Decide on a couple of projects that your network has the capacity to complete if you had adequate funding.
      - Keep projects on file with national office.
      - Notify national office if an opportunity has arisen. PHEWA will have to sign off on any grant that is submitted, since PHEWA serves as fiscal agent for all of the networks.
4. Major Gifts
   a. 2013 Goals:
      • Identify ten potential major gift givers.
      • Set up visitation schedule and goals.
      • Prepare for visit in consultation with staff and board members who have a history with given individuals.
   b. What your network can do:
      • Keep in touch with all of your network members. Never assume that someone is not capable of giving.
5. Institutional and Individual Membership
   a. 2013 Goals:
      • Make personal contact with institutional memberships (mid councils and congregations) including a personal visit if possible.
      • Make personal contact with individual members preferably from a designated network representative.
        –Encourage automatic renewals on an annual basis.
   b. What your network can do:
      • Each network team lead asks own congregation/presbytery to join.
      • Encourage membership at every presentation that you make.

      • Raise awareness among membership
7. Special Appeals
   a. 2013 Goals:
      • Design and schedule fund-raising campaigns based on PHEWA/network accomplishments, projects, or designated Sundays.
   b. What your network can do:
      • Keep network membership informed.
      • Provide easy ways for membership to promote campaigns in their own ministry settings.

Response: This referral is answered by Item 13-02, “Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Directory for Worship,” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 956.)

Response: The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations has published God’s Unity ... Our Journey: A Bible Study and Reflections on the Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This resource is available for download from the PC(USA) website: http://www.pcusa.org/resource/gods-unity-our-journey/.

Response: The Office of Theology and Worship created a website that includes the full agreement, a summary of its recommendations, a summary of its theological affirmations, and a set of discussion questions. It can be found at: http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/worship/these-living-waters-common-agreement-mutual-recogn/. News of this website has been released on the PC(USA) website, Facebook, and Twitter. It has also been mentioned in the e-newsletter “Font and Table,” which is sent to more than three thousand subscribers interested in sacramental renewal, and in Call to Worship.

Response: The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations (GACEIR) has developed a list of Frequently Asked Questions for the Episcopal/Presbyterian agreement and has distributed it throughout the PC(USA). In addition, GACEIR has begun work on two initiatives to help presbyteries understand this agreement and to facilitate partnership:

- GACEIR has begun the identification of congregations where there is PC(USA)/Episcopal shared ministry.
- GACEIR has made connection between the 1001 New Worshipping Communities in the PC(USA) with the corresponding movement in the Episcopal Church.

Response: An instrument will be prepared by June 1, 2014, and will be located on the PC(USA) website at: www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/just-compensation.

Response: The Environmental Ministries Program has created an energy fund to help congregations reduce their carbon footprint (see http://www.presbyterianmission.org/donate/H000142/). This fund has been advertised through social media and e-newsletters. When it has received enough financial support, a process will be created to allow congregations and other organizations to apply for funds to reduce carbon footprint in the ways outlined above. Meanwhile, other funding is compiled and communicated on occasion by Environmental Ministries to Presbyterians, such as through this blog posting: http://www.pcusa.org/blogs/eco-journey/2013/6/17/financial-resources-converting-renewable-energy/.

Response: Despite good faith efforts, the process of revision recommended by the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and approved by the assembly has not borne fruit, largely due to the ever heightening tensions within the PC(USA) over Israel/Palestine. This tension has overwhelmed the process of producing a contemporary and comprehensive theological statement on the relationship between Christians and Jews reflective of the diverse perspectives within both the Presbyterian and Jewish American communities.

However, in an effort to fulfill the mandate of the 216th General Assembly (2004) to “reexamine and strengthen the relationship between Christians and Jews and the implications of this relationship for our evangelism and new church development,” the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Office of Theology and Worship, offers, “Christians and Jews, People of God: A Contribution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the Interfaith Conversation” as a resource for study. The study can be found on the PC(USA) website. Although the study is not comprehensive of all of the themes and perspectives that continue to develop in nuance throughout both our respective religious communities, it reflects a significant effort to reexamine and strengthen our relationships. Therefore, the resource in its current revised form is not offered as a policy statement seeking General Assembly approval but rather as a resource to encourage the furthering of conversation and building of healthy relationships between Christians and Jews.

As the Office of Interfaith Relations and Theology and Worship continues to reexamine and strengthen the commitments of Presbyterians and American Jews to one another in expansive ways and invites the wider church to join the process, we will:

a. continue to be guided by the document, A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews (1987),

b. further the work of Interfaith Relations through councils, schools, and congregational life in order to strengthen the relationship between American Presbyterians and American Jews as well as deepen already significant relationships with and commitments to Palestinian Christians in the U.S. and in Israel/Palestine, and

c. continue to participate in, support, and encourage the work of American Presbyterians and American Jews who strive to work together for God’s justice while upholding the integrity of our unique traditions and perspectives.

Response: The Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) held a consultation at Stony Point Conference Center on February 17–19, 2012. Interactive presentations were made by Presbyterians with expertise and experience in criminal justice issues, as well as by ministry partners from the United Church of Christ and the United Methodist Church. An interim network leadership team was established at this consultation. On September 6, 2012, the PHEWA Board of Directors voted to accept the Presbyterian Criminal Justice Network (PCJN) as the newest grassroots ministry network of PHEWA.

20. 2010 Referral: Item 10-10. Report, Neither Poverty Nor Riches: Compensation, Equity, and the Unity of the Church. Recommendation 2.e. Request the Committee on Theological Education (COTE) to Convene an Appropriately Structured Discussion Among the Seminaries on the Matter of Compensation Ranges and Sharing Economic Burdens During Recession Response: The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) is staffed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency in the Theology, Worship, and Education ministry area but reports directly to the General Assembly, and will include a response to this referral in the COTE narrative report to the 221st General Assembly (2014) (see Item 13-Info, Committee on Theological Education Agency Summary, I. Overview, B. Accomplishments).

Response: Congregational Ministries Publishing (CMP) has developed a webpage located at http://www.presbyterianwetlands.org that provides free, downloadable resources for youth and adults that explore ways in which Presbyterians can share in caring for creation. This website also points constituents to the Extra Commitment Opportunity (ECO) created by the office of environmental ministries. This enables Presbyterians to have a convenient mechanism to give funds to the Presbytery of Louisiana to support their efforts to protect the wetlands. The ongoing commitment of CMP is to work with the Presbytery of Louisiana to keep the webpage current with information about caring for the wetlands and linking to any other educational resources that have, or will be, developed to educate constituents on the importance of the wetlands ecosystem.

Response: The Environmental Ministries Program has created a fund to garner financial support (see http://www.presbyterianmission.org/donate/H000141/). Environmental Ministries is also in conversation with presbytery leaders of the emerging Theological Wetlands Education Center to find out how best to support them.

23. 2012 Referral: Item 09-03. Review of the World Council of Churches. Recommendation 9. Direct the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to Continue and/or Increase Participation on the Various Committees, Commissions, and Leadership of the WCC as Invited; Request OGA and GAMC to Inform the WCC of Internal Structural Changes or Changes in Personnel so That Invitations May Be Appropriately Offered—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 9, 769–78 of the CD; p. 208 of the printed copy).

Response: Working collaboratively with the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency (formerly General Assembly Mission Council) has informed the World Council of Churches of internal structural changes so invitations may be appropriately offered.

Response: The Presbyterian Mission Agency has implemented the Lund Principle, launching several new initiatives with full communion and covenant partners since the 220th General Assembly (2012). Some highlights of these efforts include: initiating a relationship with the Church of England to learn about and dialogue around church development and redevelopment; planning a joint regional training event/conference about evangelism with the United Methodist Church, Disciples of Christ, United Church of Christ, Church of the Brethren, Episcopal Church, African Methodist Episcopal Zion, Presbyterian Church of Canada, and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America; expanding the West Africa Initiative, a post-civil war sustainable development project that includes the United Methodist Church, the United Church of Christ, and the Disciples of Christ. These efforts are in addition to existing ecumenical efforts in responding to disasters, caring for creation, hunger and poverty alleviation, corporate engagement, collegiate and youth ministries, and equipping people to engage in advocacy with elected leaders.

25. Alternate Resolution to 2012 Referral: Item 10-03. On Supporting Young Adults in Mission and Leadership Development for the Future of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Recommendation. Direct the GAMC to Increase Promotion of This Vital and Dynamic Program to Mid Councils—From the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 61, 75, 797–99 of the CD; p. 212 of the printed copy).

Response: The Young Adult Volunteer (YAV) Program is working hard to achieve the goals set out in the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s 2013–2014 Directional Goals, to triple the size of the YAV program in four years. In our first year under this plan, we have achieved strong success, placing seventy-three YAVs for national and international service in 2013/2014, a 33 percent increase over the year prior.

In response to Item 10-03 from the 2012 General Assembly (2012), the Young Adult Volunteer program has undertaken several specific areas of promotion in support of the YAV program and to increase the mission funding of the program by mid councils and congregations. First, we have created the position of associate for Recruitment and Relationship Building for the YAV program. This position has a focus on building the visibility and awareness of the Young Adult Volunteer program at all levels of our church, from individuals, congregations, and mid councils. This includes both recruiting participants for the program as well as inviting the wider church to support and partner with YAV participants through existing funding vehicles such as the Pentecost Offering.

In the past year, the YAV program has increased its promotion of the Pentecost Offering, inviting all levels of the church to participate in that offering at the increased rate (additional 10.01 percent) to meet the goals set forth in this overture. Particularly with the increase in collection time over the summer months, we are hoping for a significant increase in the participation and quantity of fundraising from congregations and mid councils.

Additionally, the YAV program is in the process of initiating a funds development effort that will support the long-term sustainability of the YAV program. This effort will have specific efforts at targeting individuals, congregations, and mid councils to partner with and share in the ministry of sending young adults into a year of transformative service.

Response: Congregational Ministries Publishing (CMP) develops and publishes curriculum for all ages of Presbyterians. The denominational curriculum We Believe is in the recycle phase of production, meaning that the quarterly curriculum for 2014–15 is being modified and updated from previous years with adjustments to art, activities, and format. A new denominational curriculum is being developed and will release in Fall 2015. For the first time, CMP is developing a Spanish-language version of this new resource simultaneously. The general editor for English resources and the general editor for Spanish-language resources serve as co-leaders on this project. Co-leadership will ensure that the voices of racial ethnic women are represented in both the English and Spanish language versions.

Feasting on the Word curriculum is a joint project between Presbyterian Publishing Corporation and CMP. Based on the award winning commentary by the same name, this innovative resource integrates the essays into the curriculum by providing the biblical background for teachers. With more than one hundred contributors to the series, many of whom are racial ethnic women, diverse voices are helping to shape the faith formation of the participants as well as those leading the sessions.

The editorial staff of CMP work with the Racial Ethnic Leadership Development manager to identify racial ethnic women who display the skills necessary to write technically and theologically for a denominational curriculum.

27. 2012 Referral: Item 10-16. Women of Color Consultation Committee Report. Recommendation 4. Direct the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW Ministry Areas, in Consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, to Plan a Women of Color Consultation (WoCC) That Focuses on the Inclusion of Women of Color of All Ages in Leadership and Decision-Making in Presbyteries and Synods, and/or Their Successor Bodies. the Next WoCC Shall Be Held No Later Than the Fall of 2013 and Be Reported on to the 221st General Assembly (2014)—From the General Assembly Mission Council (Minutes, Part I, pp. 61, 75–76, 854–57 of the CD; p. 230 of the printed copy).
Response: This referral is answered by Item 08-10, “Measure for Measure: Assessing the Effectiveness of ‘Hearing and Singing New Songs to God’” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 518.)

Response: The Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area, specifically the Office of Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support, in collaboration with the Office of Resources and Relationships in the Theology, Worship and Education ministry area, created the Hispanic/Latino Youth and Young Adult network, which held its inaugural meeting on July 31, 2013. The network held two training events, one in July 2013, and one in November 2013. The network has empowered its youth and young adult participants to lead the group and to mentor other youth and young adults.

Response: Representatives from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, the National Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian Caucus, Hispanic/Latino-a organization moderators, clergy, church members, theological seminars, and mid council representatives held a National Hispanic/Latino-a consultation on October 30–November 1, 2012, in Louisville, Kentucky, for the purpose of creating and coordinating a strategy plan that could provide direction and guidance for an effective implementation of the Strategy for Ministry with the Hispanic-Latino Constituencies in the Presbyterian Church, approved by the 215th General Assembly (2003). A draft of an action plan was created at this consultation. On January 20–21, 2014, a core group of those who participated in the consultation met to finalize the strategic plan and to put into place steps to help with its implementation.

Representatives from Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries and Theology, Worship and Education also discussed the National Hispanic Strategy at the Fall Polity Conference in November 2012, and copies of the Hispanic National Strategy and the implementation manual were sent to Hispanic/Latino-a Presbyterian pastors, churches, regional caucuses, Latina women’s groups, and Latino men’s groups, with a request to hold training events on the strategy. A copy of the strategy report is available for online download in English and Spanish at http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/hispanic/hispanic-resources. A Hispanic strategy presentation was also held in Orlando at the Hispanic Latin Presbyterian Women “Encuentro” gathering and at the Continuing Education Seminar for Hispanic/Latino-a pastors, the tri-annual National Hispanic/Latino-a Presbyterian Caucus assembly, the bi-annual assembly of the Synod of Puerto Rico, the Presbyterian Mission Agency board (at its February 2013 and April 2013 meetings), and at mid councils across the church.

Response: The Joint Working Group planned the Women of Color Consultation, which was held October 11–13, 2013, in Louisville, Kentucky, and entitled “Measure for Measure: Assessing the Effectiveness of ‘Hearing and Singing New Songs to God.’” The Joint Working Group approved the keynote presenters and provided the framework for the four themes of the consultation (“intersectionality,” “the Church as a system of privilege and discrimination,” “commitment to inclusivity with justice,” and “making visible the leadership of women of color”) from the Women of Color Consultation Task Force Report, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Singing New Harmonies, approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008). A member of the Joint Working Group also attended the consultation as a participant.

Response: Presbyterian News Service has published various news and announcements items on the web on Celebrating a Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, and it has also been posted on websites in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area. The decade has also been lifted up in print publications, including Presbyterianans Today, the Racial Ethnic Torch, and in the Mission Yearbook for Prayer and Study.

Response: The Office of Public Witness has been very engaged in the Farm Bill reauthorization, including emphasis on conservation and sustainable agriculture. These issues make up a constant component of our environmental and agriculture advocacy. The Stated Clerk sent a letter to this effect to members of Congress on July 26, 2013.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW), in consultation with the Presbyterian Hunger Program and ecumenical and interfaith partners, has been very engaged in the Farm Bill reauthorization. The PC(USA) signed “Faithful Farm Bill Principles” with our ecumenical and interfaith colleagues, and these principles touch on most of these points. Since the 220th General Assembly (2012), the OPW has published twenty-six blog posts, nine email action alerts, and countless Facebook posts and tweets on the Farm Bill (as of November 2013). OPW staff has also given presentations on the Farm Bill and the PC(USA)’s priorities for a fair food and farm system. In addition, our major annual events, Compassion, Peace, and Justice (CPJ) Training Day Conference and Ecumenical Advocacy Days had a theme of food justice. Likewise, the Big Tent CPJ Partner conference focused on food justice, where participants learned about these priorities, engaged in education, advocacy, and reflection on what a just food system should be.

Response: This referral is answered by Item 08-09, “For-Profit Prisons, Jails, and/or Detention Centers Be Added to the List of Companies for Divestment and/or Proscription of Investment Ownership” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 516.)

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been active in supporting the authority and budget of the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). Through our budget and appropriations work, we have worked to protect the EPA’s budget. We have also done blog posts on EPA issues since the 220th General Assembly (2012), with more planned. The topic of one of the OPW’s Second Tuesday briefings was on EPA budget and oversight authority. The OPW also participated in the EPA’s public hearing on carbon pollution, authority under the Clean Air Act, on November 7. OPW staff helped to plan a prayer service outside the EPA as the hearing began and the director for the Office of Public Witness offered testimony during the hearing.

Response: This letter from the Stated Clerk was sent to Congress in Fall 2013. The Office of Public Witness also includes concern for the waters of the U.S. in its environmental advocacy and in its 2012 celebration of the 30th anniversary of the Clean Water Act.
Reentry strategies developed at the Pittsburgh consultation, PLACE-MAKING: Creating Community After Incarceration, held January 24–26, 2014, were shared with mid councils and churches working with reentry issues, resulting in the collaborative development of replicable models.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) is advocating on these issues with the Samuel L. Proctor Conference and Washington Interreligious Staff Community (WISC) Partners through the larger context of ending mass incarceration. OPW has participated in on-going organizing efforts to reduce sentencing on minor drug possession charges and nonviolent offenses with both grassroots leaders (Proctor Conference) and the interfaith community of WISC.

Response: A web page listing PC(USA) resources that address our role in helping implement God’s community as a place that is open for all and embraces all with forgiveness will be available by June 1, 2014, to be found at: www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/racism-incarceration-restoration. Rather than develop a paper, resources for congregations are being developed by the Presbyterian Criminal Justice Network. These resources include an analysis of the possibilities and challenges of this ministry.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) work with Interfaith for Worker Justice (IWJ) and Comprehensive Immigration Reform addresses Advocacy for Collective Bargaining for All Workers. These coalitions bring the OPW in touch with both faith and labor organizations. Advocacy on the issue of protecting the middle class is being done on many fronts since this struggle is lodged between many issues including budget, employment and immigration.

Response: Deborah’s Daughters Women’s Listening Visits were held in 2013. A listening visit with women seminarians was held at Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary in February 2013, and with young women participants at the Big Tent in August 2013. In April 2013, the associate for Gender and Racial Justice in Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women consulted with Research Services and developed a survey instrument to capture data for Deborah’s Daughters clergywomen listening visits throughout the church. This survey instrument was completed in the fall of 2013, and a Deborah’s Daughters visit was subsequently held in the Presbytery of Boston in November 2013. Deborah’s Daughters listening visits are planned for 2014 and 2015.

Response: Devotions from the Words Matters project were posted on the AllWomen in the Church Website in 2012 and 2013. The Word Matters project was also featured on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s website carousel of rotating features. The National Council of Churches Justice for Women Working Group ceased meeting in 2013, and a restructuring occurred at the National Council of Churches, which eliminated the program area responsible for the Words Matters project. The Words Matter project ended and has not had active updates since the fall of 2012. The value of the project, since the fall of 2012, resides solely as an archival resource.

Response: A bulletin insert promoting the Words Matter project was posted on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s website as a resource available for download for Advent preparation. The Words Matter project has not had active updates since the fall of 2012. The value of the project, since the fall of 2012, resides solely as an archival resource.

Response: Financial support in the amount of $4,000 was provided to the National Council of Churches by the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area in the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The National Council of Churches Justice for Women Working Group ceased meeting in 2013, and a restructuring occurred at the NCC, which eliminated the program area responsible for the Words Matters project. The Words Matter project ended and has not had active online updates since the fall of 2012.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been active in educating Presbyterians about sexual assault and relationship violence through its work on the Violence Against Women Act. OPW Summer Fellow devoted significant time to research on next steps and creating educational material. The OPW will continue to engage on issues of sexual assault, violence against women, and relationship violence.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been actively engaged in the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), in which the Sexual Assault Forensic Evidence Reporting (SAFER) Act (not the bill named in this overture, but similar to it) to reduce rape kit backlogs was included. The bill was approved by Congress in early 2013, in a stunning bipartisan vote in both chambers of Congress. No data is yet available as to the effectiveness of these new provisions. From the 220th General Assembly (2012) until July, 2013, the OPW published eleven blog posts about VAWA, sent six email action alerts, and posted countless Facebook posts and tweets. The OPW also requested and received Presbyterian Mission Agency permission to join and participate in the Interfaith Domestic Violence Coalition, which is a good partner on these and many other issues related to sexual and relationship violence. The OPW is also considering what are the best ways to support military victims of sexual assault through legislation or executive order.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) is actively engaged in the congressional debate over comprehensive immigration reform. Immigration is a top priority for the OPW in the 2013 legislative year, which is incredibly timely with the congressional action on immigration reform. The OPW annual issues brochure identifies “Welcoming Our Immigrant Brothers and Sisters” as a key priority. We have devoted 100 percent of the time of our Bill Emerson Hunger Fellow (six-month term in the office) to immigration reform issues, and she has been very engaged in the debate. She and other office staff are also intentional about collaborating with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Office of Immigration Issues in the Office of General Assembly. From January to July, 2013, the OPW published sixteen blog posts, four email action alerts, and countless Facebook posts and tweets. The immigration debate slowed down after the activity in the Senate over the summer, 2013, and movement in the House is slow. The OPW will continue, in concert with the Office of Immigration Issues, to monitor this issue and to invite Presbyterians to action.

OPW has worked closely with the Office of Immigration Issues in order to engage Presbyterians around the justice issues involved in comprehensive immigration reform, focusing on a pathway to citizenship, family unity, and human rights concerns over militarization of our southern border. We have been in touch regularly with the Office of Immigration Issues to make sure that our strategy is correct and that we are on message.

Response: In consultation with World Mission, a letter was sent to all members of congress in support of the Christian Indonesians, advocating a just resolution to their immigration status. After discussing the issue with immigration staff of Church World Service, the OPW decided that the best course of action would be to advocate for a provision to be included in the immigration reform bill that would alleviate the current impasse and allow the Indonesian Christians to apply for asylum. The specific legislation that was mentioned in this referral only has one cosponsor who is deceased. As it is highly unlikely that this legislation will move forward, taking action to include something in the immigration reform bill seemed the wiser path to take.

The Office of Public Witness (OPW), in collaboration with the Office on Immigration Issues, prepared a letter for the Stated Clerk to communicate to President Obama, Director of Homeland Security, Director of Immigration, Customs and Enforcement, and the United States Congress, calling for the termination of the S-Comm Program, detailing the detrimental impact of S-Comm on the security of our families and our communities. The letter was posted in the denomination's web site at http://www.pcusa.org/resource/opposing-hr-2278/. The OPW remains committed to advocating for Comprehensive Immigration Reform and working closely with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Office of Immigration Issues and the Stated Clerk.

Assembly (2012) and the 221st General Assembly (2014) and the Office of Theology and Worship Prepare and Distribute educational Materials to All Presbyteries and Congregations (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 46, 47, 1300 of the CD; p. 273 of the print copy).

Response: A number of resources have been developed and are available at www.pcusa.org/marriage. These include a six-week study for congregations and councils, a two-hour study specifically for councils, past general assembly statements, and other resources. The availability of these resources has been made widely known through news articles, social media, mid council communications, and the web platforms. The Office of the General Assembly will report any responses to the assembly.

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations worked with the Office of Public Witness and the Office of the Stated Clerk to send a letter with these calls to the persons in the United States Government identified in 2012 Referral: Item 14-01.

61. 2012 Referral: Item 14-02. On Support for the People of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). Recommendation 2. Direct the Stated Clerk to Communicate to the President of the United States, the U.S. State Department, and Appropriate Congressional Leaders the Need to Ensure That the Fundamental Human Rights and the Political Will of the Congolese People Are Fully Respected by the Strengthening of Transparent, Accountable, and Effective Democratic Institutions in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) and to Call Upon the Government of the United States to Do the Items Listed in a. Through g.—From the Presbytery of Boston (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 61, 63, 1304–08 of the CD; pp. 275–76 of the print copy).

Response: In consultation with the World Mission Africa Office, a letter from the Stated Clerk advocating for the items in 2012 Referral: Item 14-02 was sent December 1, 2013.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has advocated for the human rights of the Congolese people; transparent, accountable, and effective democracy in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) and conditions conducive to free, fair, and credible elections; transparency in extractive industries; the minimization of the impact of conflict minerals; and quality primary and secondary education in the DRC with Congress and the administration. The OPW has organized an advocacy day for members of the Congo Mission Network. The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations (PMUN) has done similar advocacy in meetings with representatives of the United Nations Security Council. Action alerts inviting Presbyterians to contact Congress in support of these positions have been created and shared with members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Staff from the OPW and the PMUN are in frequent contact with the Congo Mission Network.

Response: The Office of Public Witness has advocated for policies consistent with the listed affirmations with Congress and the administration. The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations has advocated for policies consistent with the listed affirmations in meetings with representatives of the United Nations Security Council and within the United Nations community. Both offices have consulted with other ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and with the Office of General Assembly in their advocacy work.

64. 2012 Referral: Item 14-NB. Recommendation. The 220th General Assembly (2012) directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), Presbyterian Ministry to the UN, and Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to Study and Consider Actions to Bring Justice to the Disputed Territory of Western Sahara, Considered by Many International Jurists to Be Illegally Occupied by Morocco, Including the Issue of Corporate Engagement and the Renewal of Diplom-matic Efforts to Support Self-Determination, and Report to the 221st General Assembly (2014)—From the 220th General Assembly (2012). (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 61, 64, 1347 of the CD; p. 280 of the print copy)

Response: This referral is answered by Item 11-08, “Western Sahara: Occupied, Non-Self-Governing Territory, and Test Case for International Law” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (See p. 840.)

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, in consultation with the Office of the Stated Clerk and the World Mission area coordinator for the Middle East, Europe, and Central Asia, shared this call in a statement that went to the member states of the United Nations on the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People.

66. 2012 Referral: Item 15-02. On Boycotting Ahava Dead Sea Laboratories and Hadiklaim (an Israeli Date Growers Cooperative). Recommendation 2. Call for the Boycott of All Israeli products Coming from the Occupied Palestinian Territories, Including AHAVA Dead Sea Laboratories Beauty Products and All Date Products of Hadiklaim, the Israel Date Growers Co-Operative Ltd, Often Marked by the Brand Names: King Solomon Dates and Jordan River (Not Israeli Products from Israel.)—From the Presbytery of San Francisco (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 41, 1366–70 of the CD; p. 281 of the print copy).

Response: A staff team comprised from the Office of Public Witness (OPW), Presbyterian Ministry to the United Nations (PMUN) and the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) conducted research on consumer products and goods produced in the illegal Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. By June 2014, a website will be developed and provide General Assembly policies, information on settlements and why they are an obstacle to a just peace, lists of products to boycott, and campaigns individual Presbyterians can support. This information served as a basis for a communication by the Stated Clerk inviting mid councils, congregations, and individual Presbyterians to support the boycott.

In addition, a consultation was held at the PMUN for various Presbyterian church groups and staff to increase coordination of boycott activities. Also, in partnership with other faith-based investors, MRTI engaged several retailers selling consumer products from the illegal Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

Response: Considerable attention has been given to the situation in Israel and Palestine. Mission Personnel remained in the region until late 2013, and work was done to strengthen the bonds with ecumenical partners in the region. This work was augmented by several visits by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) members and staff, church members involved in congregation to congregation partnerships, and tours led by Presbyterians permitting participants to encounter the people and the reality within which they live.

Work was done by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation in partnership with the Presbyterian Mission Agency to identify investments in the West Bank that would contribute to the economic well-being of Palestinians without normalizing or strengthening the Israeli Occupation of Palestinian Territories, or being seen as a substitute for a political solution to the conflict. In addition, corporate engagement with companies operating in Israel and Palestine urged the companies to practice equal employment opportunity in hiring to promote integration and better understanding across religious and ethnic lines.

Response: This referral is answered by Item 14-01, “1001 New Worshipping Communities” being presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). See p. 995.)

Response: An African American Church Growth Consultation was held in Louisville, Kentucky, on May 23–25, 2013. Forty participants including mid council executives, leaders from the National Black Presbyterian Caucus (NBPC), African American leaders with experience in evangelism and church growth, and staff from the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly met to review the African American Church Growth Strategy and collaborate on growing new African American worshiping communities and transforming existing congregations.

Response: The Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area, specifically the Office of African American Congregational Support, provided training for African American church growth coaches in coordination with the Evangelism and Church Growth ministry area in May 2013. An additional training was held October 28–30, 2013. The coaches will be deployed to five regions and will collaborate with mid councils and congregations to analyze needs, access the potential for mission and ministry, and work toward African American church growth.

Over the past six years Evangelism and Church Growth has been actively pursuing alternative means for funding the work of new church development and new worshiping communities. In partnership with the Presbyterian Foundation, and Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., we have been diligently working to convert funds originally used for brick and mortar to fund new church developments and new worshiping communities with great success. See the Presbyterian Foundation’s video on this work: http://vimeo.com/46238777. Through the Office of Mission Program grants, we have created a new delivery system for funding new worshiping communities. See the Presbyterian News Service article—http://www.pcusa.org/news/2012/11/2/new-mission-program-grants-1001/. The topic of funding and sending local missionaries is under discussion with world mission and mid council leaders. Local congregations have been encouraged to participate in the new worshiping communities’ movement by sending individual and multiple leader church plant teams in collaboration with mid councils.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) has worked collaboratively with the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to develop a plan that will ensure the translation of essential documents in both Korean and Spanish. Recognizing that interpretation of the term essential could be different for both constituencies, PMA staff hosted a one-day meeting for... each constituency. The participants devised a working document that outlined which existing documents and resources take precedence to be translated and determined which future documents should be included. For both constituencies, it was imperative that the lists include submittals submitted to the General Assembly and statements and media releases produced by the Stated Clerk. Other items are not mutual to both constituencies and therefore may be translated in one of the stated languages. Participants of both meetings agreed to act as ongoing advisers to the translators should the need arise.

To facilitate the work of translation, the PMA has hired two translators: one for Spanish language and one for Korean language. Both translators were hired in summer 2013 and are actively translating documents. While the translators are employed by the PMA, the costs associated with these new positions are shared with the OGA.

Two web pages (one for each constituency) are being developed. Both web pages will serve as aggregated sites that will link to all respective language-specific resources, announcements, and documents that are being translated. The completion of the web pages is scheduled for spring 2014.

Response in Spanish: El informe del comité especial acerca de la naturaleza de la Iglesia en el siglo XXI. 5. Instruya al Concilio de misión de la Asamblea General y a la Oficina de la Asamblea General a trabajar en el desarrollo de planes específicos para proporcionar accesibilidad básica de información esencial del Concilio de misión de la Asamblea General para los principales grupos de idiomas diferentes al inglés. El Concilio de misión de la Asamblea General informará a la 221va Asamblea General.

La Agencia de misión presbiteriana (PMA por sus siglas en inglés) ha trabajado en colaboración con la Oficina de la Asamblea General (OGA por sus siglas en inglés) para desarrollar un plan que asegure la traducción de los documentos esenciales en coreano y español. Al reconocer que la interpretación de la expresión esencial podría ser diferente para los dos grupos, el personal del PMA organizó una reunión de un día para cada grupo. Las personas que participaron elaboraron un documento de trabajo donde describen los documentos existentes y los recursos que tienen prioridad para ser traducidos y determinaron que documentos se deberán traducir en el futuro. Para ambos grupos, fue imperativo que las listas incluyeran menciones presentadas a la Asamblea General y las declaraciones y comunicados de prensa producidos por el secretario permanente. Hay otros artículos que no se adecuan para ambos grupos, por lo que se pueden traducir en una de las lenguas indicadas. Las personas que participaron de ambas reuniones acordaron actuar como grupo asesor en curso a los traductores en caso de necesidad.

Para facilitar el trabajo de traducción, PMA ha contratado a dos traductores: una para el idioma español y uno para el idioma coreano. Ambos traductores fueron contratados en el verano de 2013 y están traduciendo activamente documentos. A pesar de que los traductores son contratados por PMA, los costos asociados con estas nuevas posiciones son compartidos con la Oficina de la Asamblea General.

Se están desarrollando dos páginas web las cuales servirán como sitios agregados que estarán conectadas con todos los recursos, anuncios y documentos de los idiomas en los cuales se está traduciendo. El término de las páginas web está programado para la primavera del 2014.

GAMC와 총회 사무국(OGA)에 지시하여 비 영어권 주요 그룹들이 총회 선교 위원회(GAMC)의 필수(essential) 정보들을 접근할 수 있는 특별 계획들을 개발할 수 있도록 해주기 바탕이다. GAMC는 이것에 대해 제 221차 미국 장로교 총회에 보고하도록 해주기 바탕이다.

Response: A web page will be developed by June 1, 2014 to be found at www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/just-compensation that links to a number of Presbyterian resources on the nature of compensation, economic justice, and potential practices.

Response: The 211th General Assembly (2012) charged the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the other five agencies of the PC(USA) to articulate a renewed call for the Priesthood of All Believers, moving away from models of church that rely on an unhealthy dependence on professionalized ministry and ignore the call of believers for mission and ministry in daily life. This call is consistent with the description of membership and ordered ministries in our Form of Government.

Membership is “a commitment to participate in Christ’s mission.” And that members are therefore responsible to proclaim “the good news in word and deed,” work “in the world for peace, justice, freedom, and human fulfillment,” and participate “in the governing responsibilities of the church” (Book of Order, G-1.0304).

In addition, deacons are called, in particular, to engage in “caring for members in need, handling educational tasks, cultivating liberality in giving, collecting and disbursing monies to specific persons or causes, or overseeing the buildings and property of the congregation” (Book of Order, G-2.0202). Ruling elders are called, in particular, “to discern and measure its fidelity to the Word of God, and to strengthen and nurture its faith and life. Ruling elders, together with teaching elders, exercise leadership, government, spiritual discernment, and discipline and have responsibilities for the life of a congregation as well as the whole church, including ecumenical relationships” (Ibid, G-2.0301).

The Presbyterian Mission Agency commits to continue to attend to the important roles in the church of members, deacons, and elders and to integrate this into our work. In keeping with the General Assembly mandate, we commend this charge to the other agencies and ask them to consider joining the Mission Agency in this commitment.

Response: Great Commission Churches equipping and nurturing people to follow Jesus in their communities by reaching new people and doing justice.

GREAT COMMISSION—Matthew 28:18–20: “And Jesus came and said to them, ‘All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me. Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them to obey everything that I have commanded you. And remember, I am with you always, to the end of the age.’”

a. Light of Hope Presbyterian Church, Marietta, Georgia

Light of Hope Presbyterian Church is the prayerful result of three struggling churches coming together to be one church to serve their community. Each church was originally developed due to “white flight” in the Atlanta, Georgia, area. Each of these churches experienced their neighborhoods once again radically changing. But this time, instead of leaving, they made a commitment to serve people where God had planted them. To serve their neighborhood, they decided to sell the three church properties and start from scratch. They called Edwin Gonzalez-Gertz as the pastor to lead them in this fresh start. They are using the “Engage” curriculum as a resource to help them be the church in their community and share their faith grounded in God’s redeeming work in Jesus. Their ministry is taking them into the lives of people they never dreamed of reaching. Max, a homeless man in the community, has found a home in the Light of Hope Church and has experienced hope for the first time in his life. He was baptized by the church and is now a growing disciple of Christ. http://www.lohpc.com

b. CN Jenkins Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, North Carolina

Under the leadership of Jerry Cannon, CN Jenkins is making disciples, reaching new people, and serving others in their community. This growing, vibrant church sends out volunteers into their community and is a place in which people can not only receive spiritual nurture and care but also experience their physical needs being met through a health clinic, a clothes closet, and free haircuts. Through serving Charlotte and CN Jenkins members following Jesus into the community, this church has experienced many people making professions of faith and joining their faith community.

c. North Avenue Presbyterian Church, Atlanta, Georgia

Scott Weimer, pastor of NAPC, states, “We are praying mightily that God will use us as a Great Commission Church.” Their ratio of baptisms to deaths is 3-1, and in the past few years have baptized eighty mainland Chinese students, almost all “doc” and “post-doc” students. Their growth over the past three to five years is nearly 40 percent multiethnic and multinational. The congregation has developed three worship services, each in a different style of worship, without falling into “worship wars.” Recently, they have held Dave Ramsey Financial Peace courses for middle class folks, and the church is currently offering a newly developed financial management course for the working poor. They continue to help people follow Jesus in ways that involve sharing faith in authentic ways and doing justice.

d. The Open Door, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

The Open Door is a church planted in a community with a vision to not only reach the people in their neighborhood but to make their neighborhood a better place to live by partnering with other local ministries and through developing an Urban Farm that supports the working poor and brings people into the loving presence of Jesus. They have a vibrant worship service each week and an intentional process for faith development. There is artistic development happening all over their neighborhood. New galleries, artist’s lofts, cafés, ethnic restaurants, and other types of businesses are moving into the East End on a weekly basis. This activity is an indicator of a grassroots movement among 20–30 year olds and artists to move into this section of Pittsburgh. The Open Door sees the community redevelopment initiatives already in place as fertile ground for sharing the Gospel. They are a church with a heart to connect, partner, and develop relationships with young artists and organizations in the neighborhood. As a result, many young people are being reached and are on mission to share the love of Jesus and do Justice in their neighborhoods. At the heart of the BJ Woodworth’s (pastor) vision is making disciples.

e. Hope for Life Chapel (1001 New Worshiping Community), Los Angeles, California

Tamara John is the pastor of one of our 1001New Worshiping Communities. Her ministry flows directly from what God is doing in her life. As she has experienced God working in the beauty and difficulty of her life, she has felt a call to do ministry with people who have been wounded by life. Her call is lived out in an RV ministry in a park with fifty-two RVs, with each housing one to six people. Through worship and care, she is ministering to people often forgotten by the local church. She works with and serves people who have lost jobs, are addicted, and have been bruised by life. Tamara states, “I get to baptize people now, to bring them down into the water and to raise them up into new life in Jesus Christ. That is my hope for everyone I meet—for Jesus to make them new, with all the old gone.”

f. New Hope Presbyterian Church, Orange, California

New Hope is growing followers of Jesus Christ who are equipped and nurtured in the body of Christ to serve people in Orange, California. Some of them are called to go door-to-door in neighborhoods talking with people about the needs of the community and the needs in their own lives. They present the gospel as the foundation by which the church is meeting those needs. They also support music in the local schools by raising the money to provide the music program and by offering lessons to fifty-two students. They make an effort to meet the needs of their community by serving children in need and offering hope where there has been little hope. New Hope’s pastor, Chineta Goodjoin, has a heart to see her community transformed through God’s love revealed in the body of Christ.

Response: Presbyterian Mission Agency Staff, along with staff from the Office of the General Assembly, have worked with the Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar. The report from that special committee will go directly to the General Assembly. See Item 13-01, Report and Recommendations from the General Assembly Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar to the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) A web page has been developed at www.pcusa.org/belhar.

78. 2012 Referral: Item 21-01. On Instructing MRTI to Study and Report Corporate Practices of Health Insurance Companies and Possible Divestment of Same. Recommendation 2. The MRTI Committee Is Instructed to Be in Conversation with the PC(USA) Board of Pensions to Ensure the PC(USA) Health Plan Submits to the Same Standards That PC(USA), Response: The Board of Pensions was reviewed by a General Assembly Review Committee as part of the normal periodic review process. These discussions included the healthcare insurance program and other benefits offered by the Board. The report of the review committee will be presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014) for its examination and action. See Item 12-A, General Assembly Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Board of Pensions.

Response: The designated funding of $10,060 in 2013 and $6,360 were used to bring the Working Group to a face-to-face meeting in Louisville, Kentucky, and cover expenses related to curriculum development.

Response: By June 2014, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s website will link to the policy “Living into the Body of Christ: Towards Full Inclusion of People with Disabilities” accompanied by words of encouragement that congregations and mid councils study and implement the policy.

Response: The entities designated as working group participants have developed and implemented a plan that fulfills the recommendations of 2012 Referral: Item 21-02 at every level of participation. The Office of the General Assembly will provide a report to the 221st General Assembly (2014). See I. Referrals in Progress, E. Office of the General Assembly, Referral in Progress 2, above (p. 115).

Response: The Office of Public Witness, the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations and the Presbyterian Church, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) through Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Options have utilized their resources to support full access to reproductive health care. This includes advocacy for the full implementation of health care reform, written support for Medicaid expansion and the requirement that employer health plans include contraception, and collaboration with international nongovernmental organizations (NGO) and ecumenical partners to ensure universal access to reproductive care.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) and the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) have demonstrated support for the Healthy Families Act, the Family and Medical Insurance Leave Act, and other federal programs that meet these goals, through direct communication with Congress and through action alerts inviting Presbyterians to advocate on these issues. Essential to this advocacy is support for federal programs to provide workers with paid sick leave and parental leave, preserve worker/family protections, and create a universal pre-K early education program. The OPW called on Presbyterians to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the Family Medical Leave Act and supported a bill in Congress to provide federal workers with paid parental leave. Because the federal government is the nation's largest employer, changes in its own practices and policies toward its workers frequently lead the way to new industry and professional standards.

Response: Implementation plans are being developed by entities within Compassion, Peace and Justice, including the Office of Public Witness, the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, and Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA).

Response: An Extra Commitment Opportunity Account E051409 (http://www.presbyterianmission.org/donate/E051409/) now exists to be utilized to support Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN) in the development of and to expand participation in certification of an AIDS competent church and church leaders programs and to distribute information to mid councils and congregations to better educate the church to the existence of this opportunity.

Response: In 2013 and 2014, unrestricted funding in the amounts of $266,000 and $247,000, respectively, were added to the Office of Theological Education. These amounts were added to offset the impact of applying cost recovery.

Response: A resource guide will be available First Quarter 2014 on the Presbyterian Mission Agency website that can be accessed by employees, General Assembly agencies, presbyteries, and synods.

Response: Beginning January 2014, supplier diversity training for new employees has been added as part of new employee orientation. In addition, supplier diversity training is being presented as one of the classes available at annual staff development day.

On Issuing a Request to Teaching Elders to Participate in the Administrative Costs of the Church by Paying Per Capita—From the Presbytery of Albany.

The Presbytery of Albany overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to ask all teaching elders\(^1\) to assume the moral responsibility of participating in the administrative costs of this church by paying per capita each year, as other church members do, being assessed by their presbyteries of record.

Rationale

Teaching elders are by definition members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Teaching elders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are members, not of local congregations, but of presbyteries.

Presbyteries have not been assessed “per capita” for these member teaching elders in the same manner that other church members are, without regard to whatever tithes and offerings they may donate to local churches.

As a matter of parity, teaching elders should be participating in the burdens of the administrative costs of our self-governing polity.

[The assembly disapproved Item 03-02 with comment. See p. 18.]

[Comment: We respectfully remind presbyteries of the flexibility available under the 1999 authoritative interpretation. We also respectfully remind sessions of their respective covenantal responsibilities to both the presbytery and General Assembly.]

On Amending G-3.0106 to Allow Presbyteries to Limit Payments of Per Capita—From the Presbytery of Detroit.

The Presbytery of Detroit overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall the last paragraph of G-3.0106 be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“Each council above the session shall prepare a budget for its operating expenses, including administrative personnel, and may fund it with a per capita apportionment among the particular congregations within its bounds. Presbyteries are responsible for raising their own funds and for raising and timely transmission of per capita funds to their respective synods and the General Assembly. Presbyteries may direct per capita apportionments to sessions within their bounds, but in no case shall the authority of the session to direct its benevolences be compromised. Where a presbytery has directed per capita apportionments to sessions, and sessions do not submit their full assessments, the presbytery may remit to the synod and General Assembly only those per capita finds actually received.”

Per capita apportionments are a traditional means of funding General Assemblies, and have evolved over the years into a method for supporting various ecclesiastical and administrative expenses of presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly. The term per capita is used because the amount apportioned is based on the membership (head count) of the presbytery.

Since The Presbytery of Detroit v. Westminster Church Port Huron in 1976, presbyteries have been forbidden from punishing churches for their failure to pay per capita apportionments. The matter has been addressed and litigated many times over the years, and the prohibition has never been removed, so that a presbytery has no way to require its churches to pay when they do not pay, even when they do it as protest to actions of the church. Repeated attempts to give presbyteries the authority to require congregations to pay per capita over the years have failed on the grounds that for sessions, per capita is a benevolence, and a presbytery cannot tell a session how to allocate benevolences. Recent attempts have all been opposed in the assembly committee by the Office of the General Assembly and/or the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC), with the result that the assembly committee has never recommended the assembly approve a change:

\(^1\) Office of the General Assembly statistics, www.pcusa.org, as of 2011 there were 21,064 teaching elders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
• In 1999, the General Assembly was asked whether presbyteries are required to pay per capita even if the churches do not pay, and if yes, whether they could pay from “general benevolence funds.” On advice of the ACC, the General Assembly responded yes to both questions. (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 65, 107);

• A request in 2002 on advice from the ACC and COGA was answered by the following:

Resolved, That presbyteries are urged (1) to partner with those churches who struggle financially to pay per capita and (2) to work pastorally with those sessions who choose to withhold their per capita. Individual sessions are reminded that to withhold per capita puts at jeopardy the connectional and covenantal nature of our church that is affirmed by our ordination vows.

We call on the General Assembly agencies and presbyteries to work to alleviate the problems that lead to withholding so that the church may proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ to the whole world. We believe that at such a time as this, it is not wise or prudent to change the current understanding of the way per capita is collected and transmitted. Nevertheless, presbyteries are encouraged to raise per capita payments from churches through voluntary payments in the spirit of 2 Corinthians 9:7: “Each of you must give as you have made up your mind, not reluctantly or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver” (NRSV). (Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 41).

• In 2006, on the advice of the ACC and COGA, the General Assembly refused a request for an authoritative interpretation that would require churches to pay per capita, which refusal was justified by the following comment:

We strongly encourage all congregations to take seriously their commitment to the connectional nature of the church. One evidence of that commitment is the per capita contributions that help provide for the church’s shared ministry beyond the congregation. We recommend that presbyteries exert pastoral care with congregations that choose to withhold per capita. Such pastoral care could be extended through their committees on ministry or other committees as designated by the presbytery council. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 47–48, 157)

• In 2010, however, the General Assembly approved an authoritative interpretation proposed by the Office of the General Assembly and recommended by the assembly committee that said, “A presbytery is required to remit to the General Assembly and the synod per capita funds remitted by the session of member churches for per capita, even if the presbytery lacks sufficient funds to pay its own expenses” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 205). For presbyteries, per capita is not a benevolence, it is a required payment that is an increasing burden.

• A proposal in 2012 to allow presbyteries to pay only per capita they receive from churches was considered by the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) both submitted written reports opposing the overture. At the hearing, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly assured the assembly committee that they were very concerned about per capita, so the assembly committee referred it back to the Committee on the General Assembly for its consideration. (See Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 79, 170.) The COGA has done nothing with the referral.

Since presbyteries are required to pay the full apportionment to higher governing bodies from their mission budgets when not received from the churches, the effect is to reduce the amount available for the mission of the presbyteries to their own regions. In effect, it forces presbyteries to pay per capita from their benevolence monies (mission budgets) (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 65, 107). Many presbyteries report that they are making serious cuts to their budgets, laying off staff, drawing on their reserves in order to pay their full per capita apportionment. Meanwhile, the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) operations, significantly funded by per capita, have for decades been protected from the financial crises faced by the presbyteries.

In recent years increasing numbers of congregations have refused to pay per capita apportionments as a way of expressing dissatisfaction with actions of the church, often citing actions of the General Assembly. In 2010, fifty presbyteries did not pay their per capita apportionment in the amount of some $950,000. Sixty-seven presbyteries did not pay their full 2011 per capita payments in the amount of $1,220,037.50. Records show that forty of those presbyteries specifically said they are paying only what was received. One presbytery said it just did not have the funds.

No reported action has been taken by the General Assembly or any synod to enforce the requirement that presbyteries pay the full assessments, except in a 2012 case where a ruling elder filed a remedial case against his own presbytery, resulting in the synod PJC’s decision requiring his presbytery to change its policy that it would pay only what it received. These are times when respect for the Constitution is in increasing jeopardy, and insisting on a rule that is frequently flouted does serious damage to our polity.

The “new” Form of Government places support for their congregations as the first priority for presbyteries, G-3.0301, but the effect of the requirement to pay per capita for the ecclesiastical expenses of their synods and the General Assembly is to place support of higher councils above their own churches. The requirement reduces their ability carry out their primary duty. The intention that the presbyteries play important parts in generating missional congregations is thus seriously damaged. Furthermore, declining payments present a great temptation for synods and the General Assembly, to increase per capita assessments to take the decreased receipts into account.

Since 39 percent of presbyteries paid 2011 per capita only what they have received or can afford—up from 29 percent the year before—the effect is that those presbyteries that are loyal to the rules of our polity are penalized. To remove the penalty for faithfulness seems equitable. Moreover, where it is forbidden for presbyteries to require the payment of benevolences from their churches, it also should be forbidden for higher governing bodies to require presbyteries to pay per capita from their benevolences, which is exactly what is done when presbyteries must take from their mission dollars to pay per capita assessments.

Therefore, the Presbytery of Detroit petitions the General Assembly to send this overture to the presbyteries so they can decide the matter. In the past, on the recommendation of its committees, General Assemblies have exerted their authority to keep this decision from the councils that are most affected by it. It is time now for the presbyteries who pay this assessment to be given a say in how it is administered.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 03-02

Advice on Item 03-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 03-02, which would amend G-3.0106.

This item is very similar to overtures the General Assembly received in 2004 (Item 03-17, Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 200) and 2012 (Item 03-02, Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 170), both of which were disapproved. The 2012 recommendation was disapproved with comment to refer the matter to the Committee on the Office of General Assembly. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) reminded the assembly both times of the relevant authoritative interpretations concerning per capita and pointed out that the overture erroneously assumed that presbyteries used uniform practices in raising per capita funds.

This current overture requests that the Book of Order, G-3.0106, be amended by adding the words “Where a presbytery has directed per capita apportionments to sessions, and sessions do not submit their full assessments, the presbytery may remit to the synod and General Assembly only those per capita finds actually received.” This added language clearly indicates that the proposed amendment only applies to those presbyteries that apportion per capita to sessions, but not to the other presbyteries that use other methods of raising per capita funds. This creates a two-tier system of per capita payments—one where presbyteries are required to pay per capita and one where presbyteries only pay what sessions submit.

In addition, this “optional” amendment is contrary to the intent of the earlier portion of G-3.0106 stating presbyteries: “…are responsible … for raising and timely transmission of per capita funds to their respective synods and the General.” As interpreted, the presbytery, not sessions, are responsible for payment of per capita. An “optional” system would disregard the unity and interdependence of the councils of the church.

... These councils are sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly. All councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution. The councils are distinct, but have such mutual relations that the act of one of them is the act of the whole church performed by it through the appropriate council. The larger part of the church, or a representation thereof, shall govern the smaller. (Book of Order, F-3.0203)

The administration of mission demonstrates the unity and interdependence of the church, in that councils share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers (F-3.0203). Through their members and elected commissioners, lower councils participate in planning and administration of the work of higher councils, and in consultation between bodies concerning mission, budget, staffing and fair employment practices, and matters of equitable compensation.

The funding of mission similarly demonstrates the unity and interdependence of the church. The failure of any part of the church to participate in the stewardship of the mission of the whole church diminishes that unity and interdependence. All mission funding should enable the church to give effective witness in the world to God’s new creation in Jesus Christ, and should strengthen the church’s witness to the mission of God. (Book of Order, G-3.0106)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to remind the assembly of the relevant authoritative interpretations concerning per capita. It also presents the following options (a) to disapprove the overture (which is the ACC’s recommendation); (b) to approve the overture; (c) to propose a constitutional amendment that would give the presbyteries the power to require the sessions to pay per capita (which would necessarily limit the authority of the session to determine the distribution of the church’s benevolences); (d) to remind presbyteries of the flexibility available under the 1999 authoritative interpretation and to remind sessions of their respective covenantal responsibilities; (e) to remove the mandatory provisions of this section of the constitution; or (f) to direct that a comprehensive study be conducted of the funding system at work in the denomination.

Comment on Item 03-02—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The COGA respectfully advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to answer Item 03-02 with its (COGA’s) final response to referral to 2012 Referral: Item 03-02. On Amending G-3.0106 to Allow Presbyteries to Forward Only Per Capita Funds Received to Their Synods and the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of Detroit (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 10, 79, 170 of the electronic copy; pp. 10, 79, 155). See Item 01-02, II. Final Responses to Referrals, E. Committee on the Office of the General Assembly Final Responses to Referrals. [COGA answer to referral of Item 03-02 from 220th General Assembly (2012)].

[Comment: While the committee recognizes the value of the YAAD program, the input these advisors give us, the perspective they bring to our discussions, and the experiences it gives our emerging church leaders, we recommend Item 03-03 not be approved for the following reasons: 1) There is flexibility within the current Book of Order for this intent to happen. 2) The overture actually could work counter to the intent of the overture in that there would be no prior vote for advice; their voice would be blended with all other votes with no distinctions as to how the younger commissioners were thinking. 3) We also wish to honor and respect the advice of COGA and the ACC that offer serious considerations on how to include young adults in the whole life of the church. 4) The 221st General Assembly (2014) encourages the COGA to continue the discussion of how to include young adults in all levels of the life and ministry of the PC(USA) including the encouragement of sessions and presbyteries to affirm the call of young adults to the office of ruling elder, while encouraging persons who have served as YAADs as well as other advisory delegates to the 221st General Assembly (2014) to be included in this discussion and discernment.]

On Amending G-3.0501 and G-3.0503 to Give YAAD’s Voice and Vote and to Rename Them as “Young Adult Commissioners”—From the Synod of the Covenant.

The Synod of the Covenant overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote.

1. Shall the first paragraph of G-3.0501 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The General Assembly is the council of the whole church and it is representative of the unity of the synods, presbyteries, sessions, and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It shall consist of equal numbers of ruling elders and teaching elders elected by presbyteries and reflective of the diversity within their bounds (F-1.0403 and G-3.0103). In addition, each presbytery shall elect one young adult commissioner (ages 18–25). The ruling elders and teaching elders elected shall serve as commissioners according to the following proportions:”

2. Shall the second paragraph of G-3.0503 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A quorum of the General Assembly shall be one hundred-twenty commissioners, fifty of whom shall be ruling elders and fifty teaching elders, and twenty young adult commissioners (ages 18–25), representing presbyteries of at least one fourth of its synods.”

Rationale

The purpose of this overture is to allow the elected young adult advisory delegates to have the right to vote. The implication would also be a name change from young adult advisory delegate to young adult commissioners.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) states in G-3.0501 that the General Assembly should be “reflective of the diversity within their bounds.” Young adults within the ages of 18 and 25 represent an important voice in the church and are important for the future of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Presently the age of YAADs is 17 to 23. This proposal would change that by a few years and would provide an increased possibility that the young adult commissioners could be either a ruling elder or a teaching elder.

As we work to create 1,001 new worshiping communities, young adults should and will be an important part of the success of those communities.

If we want to be true to goals of inclusiveness and representation within the larger church, giving the young adults voice and vote would be a step in that direction. Presently the YAADs do have voice and vote in the committees. This overture would acknowledge those gifts for the assembly meeting as well.
By creating young adult commissioners instead of YAADs, we welcome, embrace, and listen to our younger Presbyterian generations. They have been unintentionally disenfranchised and unrepresented on our councils, and hence, we are opening ourselves up to the voices of the future being able to discern and vote in the present.

The sooner we make the young adults in our church voting stakeholders, the more they will feel welcomed and valued. The sooner we recognize their leadership, the sooner our young adults will have ownership in the life and decisions of the church. This overture will say to the young adults in our midst this is your church too. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) needs and values your voice and trusts your discernment.

This proposed overture would change the historic balance of an equal number of teaching elders and ruling elders. The young adult commissioners may be ruling elders, teaching elders, deacons, or lay church members. The current Book of Order is more permission-giving than in the past. This overture is consistent with this approach and with our theology and ecclesiology since commissioners are guided by the Holy Spirit, Holy Scriptures, and faith, and not informed by ordination or older age. In addition, young adult commissioners have unique perspectives and life experiences, which are rarely heard and understood by the church. As we as a denomination move into a more flexible approach, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should acknowledge the need to include the voice and vote of young adult commissioners who are currently disenfranchised from voting in church councils while their right to vote in civil elections has been granted and protected by the United States Constitution.

This change will not have added cost and has no per capita implications, but will further enhance the General Assembly meetings.

Concurrence to Item 03-03 from the Presbytery of Geneva.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 03-03

Advice on Item 03-03—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 03-03. This overture seeks to amend Section G-3.0501 and G-3.0503 of the Form of Government to change the composition of the General Assembly by adding a new classification of commissioner elected by each presbytery entitled “young adult commissioner.” The purpose of this change is to increase the number of young adults, ages 18–25, having both voice and vote at General Assembly meetings.

The proposed amendment would omit the requirement that young adult commissioners be a presbyter, a ruling elder, or a teaching elder. It would thereby significantly alter an element of church governance of foundational and historical importance. The value of having General Assembly commissioners comprised of ruling elders and teaching elders who are accountable to the church on the basis of their ordination vows cannot be overstated. Ruling elders and teaching elders have received a call to ordered ministry. “The call to ordered ministry in the Church is the act of the triune God. This call is evidenced by the movement of the Holy Spirit in the individual conscience, the approval of a community of God’s people, and the concurring judgment of a council of the Church” (G-2.0103). This call uniquely prepares individuals for the arduous discernment required of General Assembly commissioners. “The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness” (G-3.0501). To include a new class of General Assembly commissioners that have not received a call to an ordered ministry as either a ruling elder or teaching elder would fail to equip them with the required preparation needed to carry out the responsibilities of their commission.

Another issue to be considered is the effect this amendment will have on the representation of presbyteries that vary significantly in size and number of young adult members. The proposed amendment will give each presbytery one additional commissioner, regardless of size, resulting in disproportionate representation among the presbyteries.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) considers youth and young adults as a vital and vibrant constituency of the church and has provided an opportunity for their voice and influence to be expressed at General Assemblies dating back to 1970. One mechanism that has been used over the last several assemblies is representation of youth as youth advisory delegates (YADs) that have had a voice but no vote on the floor of the assembly (see the 1970 G-13.0100(1), Minutes, UPCUSA, 1969, Part I, pp. 771, 65, Ref. 18; cf. Minutes, PCUS, 1979, Part I, pp. 123, 178; Minutes, PCUS, 1970, Part I, pp. 94, 102; Minutes, UPCUSA, 1973, Part I, pp. 466, 64; Minutes, UPCUSA, 1970, Part I, pp. 100, 1005; Minutes, UPCUSA, 1969, Part I, pp. 771, 65). The participation of advisory delegates (including youth advisory delegates—now “young adult advisory delegates”) is provided for in the Standing Rules of the assembly. The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR), over a period of ten years, has evaluated the pools of persons selected by their presbyteries to serve as commissioners, and recognize “that it is very rare (sometimes one per assembly out of nearly 700) for commissioners to be elected who are under the age of 25 and not too much more frequent when commissioners are selected who are under the age of 35. This reality may be a negative consequence of the young adult advisory delegate positions each presbytery has (aged 17–24, many are ordained ruling elders and some have been teaching elders)” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 251, GACOR comments on Item 04-01, Recommendation 5).
There have been a number of different recommendations to increase the number of youth and young adult commissioners and increase their participation to include a vote on the floor of General Assembly such as Recommendation 5 of the Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Ibid, p. 243). The final recommendation from that committee concluded that while the “young adult demographic has been and continues to be an underrepresented group as commissioners to General Assembly,” the proper implementation of increasing their representation in vote should be referred back to the Special Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies (Ibid, p.73).

We further note that the first paragraph of G-3.0501 of the Form of Government provides in part:

The General Assembly is the council of the whole church and it is representative of the unity of the synods, presbyteries, sessions, and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It shall consist of equal numbers of ruling elders and teaching elders elected by the presbyteries and reflective of the diversity within their bounds (F-1.0403 and G-3.0103) … [emphasis added].

This section of the Form of Government was changed to include the requirement that the delegates elected to General Assembly from the presbyteries be “reflective of the diversity within their bounds” (G-3.0501). This new requirement not only affects the young adult advisory delegates (YAADS) but also other diverse constituencies within the bounds of the presbyteries.

The election of commissioners by presbyteries has been a right afforded to the presbyteries under the Constitution, with the manner of election left to the discretion of the presbyteries (former G-13.0102b). Historically there has not been a constraint regarding whom the presbyteries could elect other than the requirement that the delegation consist of equal numbers of ruling elders and teaching elders. Under the current Form of Government there is an explicit requirement that the delegation “[reflect] … the diversity [of the] bounds” (G-3.0501). This introduces the potential for a number of competing interests that must be taken into consideration with regard to diversity, of which age—in this case, youth—may be one. Other areas of diversity may include race, ethnicity, disability, and gender. To require the election of a young adult commissioner from each presbytery would elevate the importance of youth over other underrepresented groups such as racial minorities and women. The ability to elect young adults from presbyteries now exists and well may be required under the revised G-3.0501.

If the 221st General Assembly (2014) decides to accomplish the stated intent of Item 03-03, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the General Assembly require that the new designation of young adult commissioner require the young adult to be a ruling elder or teaching elder and take into consideration the disproportionate impact of this amendment on presbyteries that vary significantly in number of young adult members. The issue of parity between ruling elders and teaching elders would also have to be addressed.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 03-03

The COGA respectfully advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 03-03.

Item 03-03 seeks to transform, in a manner fundamentally inconsistent with the nature of Presbyterian polity, the nature of the General Assembly, by giving young adult advisory delegates vote in the General Assembly’s plenary. As its rationale concedes, nothing in the overture requires that such individuals, to have vote, be presbyters (e.g., teaching or ruling elders). Thus, the overture directly contradicts the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity (F-3.0202), which reaffirms in the new Form of Government the historic and theological understanding of our church’s way of making decisions: “This church shall be governed by presbyters, that is, ruling elders and teaching elders.” Further, given the age range suggested by the overture for young adult commissioner (ages 18–25), is very likely that those elected to such service who are presbyters would be ruling elders, given the educational requirements to become a teaching elder. Thus, the overture is further inconsistent with the principle that councils shall consist, in as equal a number as is possible, of teaching and ruling elders. Contrary to the overture’s rationale, the new Form of Government reaffirmed rather than diminished these principles. The assertion in the overture’s rationale that the flexibility of the new Form of Government justifies departure from the fundamental principles of Presbyterian decision-making is belied by the intentional reaffirmation of those principles in F-3.02.

Further, the stated goal of the overture—strengthening the voice of young adults throughout the denomination—would not be accomplished by the constitutional revision the overture proposes. The COGA urges that the real answer to assuring that young adults having a voice in our denomination begins in our congregations, and rises through our presbyteries and synods: a deeper awareness of the strength the theology underlying the offices of ruling and teaching elder bring to our polity; an intentional effort to seek out young adults, and youth, for election by congregations as ruling elders; and encouragement of young adult and youth involvement in presbytery and synod life by their election as commissioners to those councils.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 03-03

Comment on Item 03-03—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully advises that the assembly consider the following comment.
At the 220th General Assembly (2012), of the 688 commissioners, there were no ruling elders or teaching elders under the age of 25. While 93 (11 percent) commissioners were age 26–45, nearly 90 percent of commissioners were over the age of 45.

It is instructive to examine more closely the representation of young adult commissioners under age 25 and adult commissioners age 25–45 in the 219th, 220th, and 221st General Assemblies (2010), (2012), (2014). Here are some statistics:

It is also instructive to examine the representation of young adults under age 25 and adults age 25–45 for teaching elders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Age data for ruling elders is not available. Here are the statistics:

 Indicates that the data is reported in the Session Annual Statistical Form and not all congregations complete it. An active ruling elder is a person currently serving on session.

 All teaching elders under 25 in the PC(USA) are persons recording their ethnicity as White.

The Book of Order in second paragraph of F.1.0403 sets forth our principles of unity and diversity. It states,

The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological convictions. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution.

Had this overture been in effect in 2012, the proportion of commissioners under age 25 would have increased from 0 percent to 18 percent. Even so, since 11 percent were between 26 and 45, more than 70 percent of commissioners would still have been over 45.

This overture is an attempt to address the lack of inclusion, representation, and participation of young adult commissioners under age 25. It would have a profound positive influence on the age distribution of commissioners. And it would give greater responsibility and access to young adults while not increasing the cost of the assembly.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

Item 03-04

Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies Report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

The Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the following recommendations:

[The assembly approved Item 03-04, Recommendations 1.–2. with amendment. See pp. 12, 19.]

1. That the Standing Rules be amended by inserting the following text as an Introduction:

   “Introduction

   “Values Present at General Assembly

   “Now there are varieties of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are varieties of services, but the same Lord; and there are varieties of activities, but it is the same God who activates all of them in everyone. To each is given the manifestation of the Spirit for the common good. ... If one member suffers, all suffer together with it; if one member is honored, all rejoice together with it. Now you are the body of Christ and individually members of it. (1 Cor. 12:4–7 and 26–27)

“The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love and witness. (G-3.0501)

“With glad and grateful hearts, we affirm these core values in our worship, work, and witness together in gatherings of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

“• That the common life of the whole church, as evidenced in our meetings, will reflect the mind of Christ, demonstrating consolation, spiritual sharing, compassion and sympathy, and doing nothing from selfish ambition or conceit, but in humility regarding others as better than ourselves. We will be in full accord and strive to model the faithful, obedient, humble, and self-emptying witness of Jesus Christ.

“• That our engagement with one another in the ministry of the gathered church will reflect the transforming love of God, enabling us to discern God’s will together. We will use our gifts on behalf of one another and the world, giving glory to God. We will love genuinely and hold fast to all that is good. We will rejoice in hope, be patient in suffering, and persevere in prayer. We will live in harmony with one another and overcome evil with good.

“• These values will enable us

"• to engage with one another in love, humility, grace, and servant discipleship, as the council of the whole church;

"• to encourage and increase collaboration within and among all councils of the church;

"• to participate in discussion, deliberation, and discernment in ways that are fair and honest and open;

"• to focus each meeting of the General Assembly to encourage the full and prayerful participation of those seeking the mind of Christ for the whole church.

“We acknowledge these core characteristics of gatherings of the General Assembly:

“• Affirming the Presbyterian distinctives that God is sovereign and God alone is Lord of the conscience;

“• Encountering and learning from Presbyterians and many others from across the United States and around the world;

“• Gathering again with old friends in the family reunion that is General Assembly;

“• Creating and expanding generative relationships with fellow Christians;

“• Learning from individuals who are quite different from one another;

“• Witnessing with joy and thanksgiving the emergence of new leaders for the church; “• Experiencing an intentional, faithful process for discernment and decision making;

“• Experiencing God’s presence through worship, devotions, hallway prayers, and Christ-centered conversations;

“• Hoping and yearning together that our mutual witness will point to the reign of God;

“• Demonstrating the church is not focused on any one cause or individual;

“• Growing in our understanding of Christ and the church;

“• Meeting sisters and brothers in Christ who represent a particular perspective and who listen and share with care and respect;

“• Making decisions through contemplation, prayer, and heartfelt sharing;

“• Continuing a history and heritage together since 1789.

“We demonstrate and sustain our core values through these central commitments.

“• Reflect the Body and Seek the Mind of Christ

“In all things, the General Assembly reflects the body of Christ and seeks the mind of Christ through worship, prayer, discernment, and action.

“• A Broad Context for Christ’s Broad World

“The General Assembly provides a helpful, faithful context for understanding the beauty and diversity of the body of Christ in the world.
“• Expansive and Spiritual Deliberation

“The General Assembly embraces an easily understood and accessible process that creates opportunities for questions, prayer, and God’s unexpected movement, rather than hurrying to yes/no votes.

“• Order and Flexibility

“The General Assembly deliberates with fairness, attention to process, order, and the encouragement of minority voices, while creating space for decision making grounded in discernment and dialogue and for the emergence of new leadership.

“• Reunion and Affirmation

“The General Assembly encourages the best of our Presbyterian tradition and friendships new and old.

“• Faithful Stewardship

“The General Assembly demonstrates faithful stewardship of human and financial resources.”

2. That Standing Rule A., Sources of Business for the Meeting, be amended as follows:

a. Amend Standing Rule A.1.a., Papers in General, as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. The General Assembly shall consider only those papers delivered to the Stated Clerk in compliance with Standing Rule A and any other papers whatsoever that have been delivered to the Stated Clerk. Ordinarily, such papers shall have been forwarded to the Stated Clerk postmarked, or electronically delivered, no later than sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly.”

b. Amend Standing Rule A.2. be amended by inserting new text as “e.” to read as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown as italic.]

“Reports with Recommendations

e. All reports that bring recommendations shall use the following form:

“The [name of agency, commission, or committee] requests the [# of the assembly] General Assembly [year] of the PC(USA) to [state the specific action or actions the General Assembly is being asked to take].”

To this shall be appended a rationale, stating the reasons for submitting the requests and/or the report of the entity, commission, or committee.”

c. Amend Standing Rule A.3.a., Overtures, as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. Overtures are items of business that must have been approved by a presbytery (with concurrence of another presbytery) or a synod and shall request the General Assembly to take a particular action, or approve or endorse a particular statement or resolution. (See Book of Order, G-3.0302d.)”

d. Amend Standing Rule A.3.e., Overture Advocates, as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“(1) Each presbytery or synod that submits an overture shall notify the Stated Clerk of the name of a commissioner or some other person in attendance at the General Assembly who has been designated as the advocate for the overture. The an overture advocate who shall be available to provide information on the background and intent of the overture to any assembly committee to which the overture may be referred. (See Standing Rule E.2.)

Each council who submits an overture or concurrence may appoint only one overture advocate who shall be a teaching or ruling elder from that council. (See Standing Rules A.3.(c)(6) and E.2.)

“(2) In the event that the assembly refers an overture to a General Assembly entity for further consideration (and not simply for implementation), the presbytery or synod submitting the overture shall be invited by the Stated Clerk to designate an overture advocate for the assembly meeting at which the entity’s response to the overture is presented. The overture advocate shall be available to provide information on the background and intent of the overture to any assembly committee to which the overture may be referred. (See Standing Rule E.2.)

e. Move “4. Communications and Resource Material” and “5. Advisory Committee on the Constitution and Communications and Resource Material” to the end of Standing Rule A. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]
“6. 4. Entity and Synod Minutes [Text remains unchanged.]

“7. 5. Presbytery Reports [Text remains unchanged.]

“8. 6. Commissioners’ Resolutions [Text remains unchanged.]

“4. 7. Communications and Resource Material [Text remains unchanged.]

“5. 8. Advisory Committee on the Constitution Report [Text remains unchanged.]”

Rationale for Recommendation 2.

The changes made to Standing Rule A. fall into two categories. The first group of changes, which includes changes to Standing Rule A.1.a, A.2.e, and A.3.a, is non-substantive in nature and can be seen as necessary. The deletion in A.1.a removes a loophole, which renders the guidelines put forth in Chapter A meaningless. The rest of the non-substantive changes acknowledge technological realities and change Standing Rules in accordance with decisions of the last assembly.

The other group of changes is substantive in nature, which includes the second part of Recommendation 2.b and Recommendation 2.d and 2.e. These changes can be seen as advantageous in that they assist commissioners in conducting the business of the assembly.

The second part of Recommendation 2.b. standardizes reports (of agencies, commissions, or committees), on which the assembly is to act, using the same format required of overtures. Additionally, this change will clarify the sometimes confusing parliamentary question about whether the assembly approves/receives/hears a report or acts on the recommendations of the report.

Recommendation 2.d. limits the quantity and explicates the purpose of overture advocates. Overture advocates are people appointed by a council to the assembly to provide additional background information and answer questions regarding the overture as they arise. The recommended change in the Standing Rules closes a loophole that has been used by some councils in an attempt to gain extra voices by appointing multiple overture advocates and specifies that the purpose of an overture advocate is to explain the action of the council making the overture, not to be an expert witness to the issues the overture might raise.

Eliminating paragraph A.3.a.(2) further reinforces the role of the overture advocate in supporting the original overture and the role of the assembly to own a motion once it is initially offered. If, after the overture has been considered in committee and plenary, the whole assembly should decide to commit the overture to further study, the requirement in A.3.e.(2) for subsequent consultation is a redundancy.

Recommendation 2.e. reorders Standing Rule A in a more intuitive way. This change would make the chapter organized so that after “Papers in General,” the rules regarding business on which the assembly is asked to act precede rules regarding non-action information before the assembly, e.g. advisory committee reports and resource material. This recommendation doesn’t change the rules substantively, but rather makes the rules flow more logically.

3. That Standing Rule B (Commissioners, Delegates, and Other Participants at the Meeting) of the Standing Rules be amended as follows:

   a. Amend Standing Rule B.1.b. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “List Delivered by 420 180 Day Deadline

   “b. Presbyteries shall elect commissioners in sufficient time to permit the list of commissioners to be delivered to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 420 180 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are commissioned.

Rationale for Recommendation 3.a.

The deadline for reporting the names of commissioners elected by the presbyteries, which corresponds with the first deadline for business, was not changed with the move to biennial assemblies. This creates a very tight schedule for recruiting and training committee leadership and naming the committee membership. Only after receiving the entire list of the names of commissioners can the Moderator begin the 4–6 week process of selecting committee leadership. Committee assignments cannot be made and announced until committee leadership is selected and confirmed. Communications from the leadership to the committee members cannot commence until the leadership has been oriented to the work of assembly committees.

Over the years a recurrent suggestion has been to use electronic mediums to bring the committees together before the assembly is convened. The recommended change in the Standing Rules would allow committee leadership to be selected and oriented early enough in the year of the assembly to allow a season of preparation for each committee. Committee membership could be assigned near the 120 deadline for business and committee leadership trained soon afterward.

If this recommendation were in effect for the 221st General Assembly (2014), it would have looked like this:

b. Amend Standing Rule B.2.b. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“b. There shall be four categories of advisory delegates: youth, theological student; missionary, and ecumenical. When the ratio of advisory delegates to commissioners exceeds one to three, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall be authorized to make changes to the Standing Rules to create a ratio of less than one to three. The expenses of each advisory delegate shall be paid by the General Assembly (see Standing Rule I.3.) on the same basis as the expenses of commissioners (see Standing Rule B.2.f.2 below for exception).”

Rationale for Recommendation 3.b.

The General Assembly has long valued bringing many voices to the table in their deliberations and has accomplished that with a commitment to the role of advisory delegates who sit as full members on committees and voice at plenary. The number of advisory delegates is stable as detailed in the Standing Rules, but the number of commissioners is flexible as presbytery size and number fluctuates.

In the course of the last few decades, the total percentage of advisory delegates in the whole number of commissioners and advisory delegates has remained near 25 percent—or one advisory delegate for every three commissioners. In order to maintain the balance between our Foundational Principle of Presbyterian Government described in F-3.02 and the vitality that the voices of advisory delegates bring to the General Assembly, it is our opinion that the 1:3 ratio should be maintained.

The conversation on how best to maintain this balance in a particular assembly is put upon the hearts of the elected representatives on the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly when an imbalance appears. They could bring solutions, including (but not limited to) constitutional changes in the number of commissioners (if adopted by the standard protocol for changing the constitution, or adjustments in the Standing Rules in the number of advisory delegates.

c. Amend Standing Rule B.2.d. by striking B.2.d.(2) and re-numbering (3) and by amending (3) [now (2)] as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“(2) Each presbytery will request each candidate for young adult advisory delegate to submit an application/questionnaire and be interviewed by an appropriate presbytery committee in order to ensure the selection of the best qualified person to serve as young adult advisory delegate. The youth ministries staff shall prepare and distribute to each presbytery a sample/suggested questionnaire for use in reviewing candidates for election as young adult advisory delegates.

“(3) Presbyteries shall elect young adult advisory delegates in sufficient time to permit the list of advisory delegates to be delivered to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 120 180 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected.”

[d. Amend Standing Rule B.2.e. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

"[e. Theological Student Advisory Delegates and Assembly Student Assistants

One of these students shall be designated by the institution as delegates and the other student shall be designated as the alternate. Such a student must be either an inquirer or a candidate in preparation for ministry under care of a presbytery, or a student nominated by the Presbyterian School of Christian Education. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 120–180 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected, who shall transmit the names of the two students to be delegates to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. "[(6) In addition to theological student advisory delegates, the Stated Clerk shall solicit as many theological students to serve as assembly assistant (assembly assistants) as are necessary to facilitate the work of the assembly.]"

Rationale for Recommendation 3.c.–d.

This change in the Standing Rules reflects two current assembly realities: (1) a decline in membership has meant fewer commissioners and an imbalance in the ratio of commissioners to advisory delegates. In 2012 there was almost one advisory delegate for every three commissioners. And (2) the increased use of student assistants (primarily seminary students) has given more seminary students the opportunity to be intimately involved in the life of the assembly.

As the nature of the assembly has changed, the Office of the General Assembly has been recruiting more student assistants and giving them great responsibility in committee and plenary. These student assistants universally report that they gain a broad knowledge of the work of the assembly and a better understanding of our polity. Giving seminary students the opportunity to encounter the national nature of the church at an assembly is a high value for the Office of the General Assembly. In 2012 there were twenty-four theological student advisory delegates (TSADs) and an additional eighteen student assistants for a record number of seminary students involved in the assembly.

The recommended changes in the Standing Rules seek to decrease the number of advisory delegates by changing the formula for TSADs and bringing the role of student assistant explicitly into the planning of the assembly. Instead of two students from each of the denominational theological schools, there will be at least one from each and one from seminaries with a covenant relationship, not to be fewer than the number of assembly committees. Filling all of the necessary positions for student assistant will require solicitations from all of the denominational, covenant and corresponding theological schools giving ample opportunity for assembly participation to those interested and able.

e. Amend Standing Rule B.5.b. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“b. Ecumenical representatives are individuals sent at the initiative of another church to be the official representative of that church. The Stated Clerk shall may announce to member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches the date and place of the next meeting of the General Assembly. When officially certified through appropriate ecclesiastical channels at least forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, these persons shall be welcomed as guests of the General Assembly and introduced to the council through the report of the assembly committee addressing ecumenism. The assembly shall may assume the expense and housing of such guests on the same basis as the expense of commissioners, but shall not reimburse any travel expenses to the assembly site.”

f. Amend Standing Rule B.5.f. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“f. Interfaith Representatives—Three observers of other faiths or religious traditions, who shall be representatives chosen by recognized religious bodies of non-Christian religious traditions and/or faith communities shall be present at the assembly at the invitation of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations.
The interfaith representatives shall be present with the church in its deliberations, and to speak to the assembly for the purpose of conveying greetings or messages, or bringing information germane to the decision-making process. The assembly shall may assume the expense of housing and on the same basis as the expense of commissioners, but shall not reimburse any travel expenses to the assembly site.”

4. That Standing Rule C (Formation of Committees and Referral of Business) be amended as follows:

a. Amend Standing Rule C.1.c. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “c. The Moderator of the preceding General Assembly shall appoint a commissioner to be moderator and a second to be vice moderator to each committee. The moderator positions are filled by commissioners [from the next General Assembly or may be from an assembly within the last six years. All vice moderator positions shall be filled by commissioners to the upcoming General Assembly. Final appointment shall be made only after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and then also with representatives of the General Assembly Committee on Representation regarding the inclusively mandated in the Book of Order, F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees, including any committees dealing with finance and budgets, shall be ruling elders. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees should be women. The moderators of at least two-thirds of the assembly committees shall be current commissioners. No more than one person from any one presbytery may be appointed to serve as a moderator or vice moderator. All synods shall be equitably represented.”

Rationale for Recommendation 4.a.

The core values of our gatherings as the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as described in Recommendation 1, profess that “the common life of the whole church, as evidenced in our meetings, will reflect the mind of Christ, demonstrating consolation, spiritual sharing, compassion, and sympathy, and doing nothing from selfish ambition or conceit, but in humility regarding others as better than ourselves.”

Moderating a General Assembly committee can be a complex and daunting task. It is increasingly difficult as committees grow in size. Responsibilities for formulating agendas, facilitating discussion, and maintaining neutrality, when coupled with the demands placed on all commissioners, can be particularly overwhelming. Thus, this change opens the possibility for the Moderator to appoint persons familiar with the workings of the assembly who have documented experience as skilled moderators to lead committees, ensuring that debate, discussion, and discernment happen in fair and decent order.

b. Amend Standing Rule C.3.c. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “c. How Business Is Referred

   “(1) for consideration by an assembly committee and recommendation for action by the General Assembly;

   “(2) for consideration and action by an assembly committee with a report of the action to the General Assembly;

   “(3) for consideration by the General Assembly through its inclusion in a consent agenda when the committee has approved a motion by 75 percent or more;

   “(4) for consideration by the General Assembly in a plenary business session.”

Rationale for Recommendation 4.b.

The majority of business that comes to the floor of the assembly has been overwhelmingly approved or disapproved by the committee that has considered it. This change proposes to streamline plenary business so that time might be used to develop consensus on items where there are a variety of viewpoints and convictions, and makes this section consistent with Standing Rule F.5.b.

5. That Standing Rule D (Beginning of the General Assembly Meeting) be amended as follows:

   Amend Standing Rule D.1.c. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“c. The Stated Clerk shall assign each commissioner, advisory delegate, and corresponding member to a seat in advance of the meeting. They shall occupy the assigned seats during each meeting of the General Assembly at which business may be transacted. An assistant to commissioner who has been certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance shall be assigned a seat adjacent to the commissioner. The Stated Clerk shall assign seats to commissioners and delegates in a manner that shall assure that the most favorable seats, with regard to the platform, will be assigned to delegations from the various presbyteries in turn through an annual rotation of space assignments.”

6. That Standing Rule E (Committee Meetings) be amended as follows:

a. Amend Standing Rule E.1.a. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. The moderator shall presides over the committee’s deliberations. The moderator may request the vice moderator or others to preside and to assist in the work of the committee.”

Rationale for Recommendation 6.a.

The core values of our gatherings as the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as described in Recommendation 1, profess “that the common life of the whole church, as evidenced in our meetings, will reflect the mind of Christ, demonstrating consolation, spiritual sharing, compassion, and sympathy, and doing nothing from selfish ambition or conceit, but in humility regarding others as better than ourselves.”

Committee moderators have varying degrees of experience and skill in moderating meetings, particularly when the issues are complex and/or highly charged and the committee is very large. This amendment gives moderators greater flexibility in inviting others to facilitate portions of the committee proceedings, while still maintaining overall control of the committee.

b. Amend Standing Rule E.2. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Open Meetings

“a. Meetings of assembly committees shall be open to the public (as space permits) provided, however, that the committee may go into executive session at any time in accordance with the Open Meeting Policy printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Ordinarily, the committee assistant will be expected to remain with the committee in executive session.

“Time of Worship and Prayer

“b. Each meeting of the committee shall include a time of worship and opportunity for prayer.

“Parliamentary Procedure

“b. c. The deliberations of the committee shall be conducted in accordance with Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised. Committee meetings shall be conducted in accordance with Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised except when in contradiction to the Constitution of the PC(USA). Prior to a vote, methods of deliberation shall be consistent with the principles of Presbyterian government. (F-3.02 and G-3.0305)

“Use and Preparation of Resources Material

“e. d. Use and Preparation of Resource Material:

“(1) Each committee shall determines the use to be made of the resource material or resource persons available to assembly committees. Each assembly committee shall determines whether or not to permit the distribution of particular materials to the committee members.

“Preparation of Resource Material

“(2) Resource material (except for previously published books or interpretive brochures), including advice and counsel memoranda, that provides background or advice on items of new business, including commissioners’ resolutions, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred. This material shall be submitted to the assembly committee leadership team prior to presentation to the assembly committee to which the business has been referred. A hard copy of this resource material, accompanied by a disk copy, shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall consider any request that is made to distribute this resource material to the full assembly.
“Reports of Special Committees

“e. When business has been referred by a previous assembly to a special task force, committee, or commission created for that purpose, the assembly committee receiving that report shall set aside no less than ½ hour (30 minutes) to hear a presentation by the special task force (or committee or commission) giving background on their report. Each committee shall determine if additional time is required for presentation.

“Privilege to Speak

“e. During the deliberations of the committee, in contrast to public hearings, only the following persons, having been recognized by the moderator, may speak:

“(1) Members of the committee;
“(2) Committee assistant;
“(3) Persons with special expertise, including elected members or staff members of General Assembly entities;
“(4) Members of special committees, task forces, commissions created by previous assemblies (see E.2.d and K.1.f), Overture advocates, and signers of commissioners’ resolutions;
“(5) Persons invited by the committee through a majority vote of the committee; and
“(6) Representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, who may speak to overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, or other business on which the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has presented advice or recommendations, or matters that propose amendments to the Constitution, or that affect compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution.

“(7) In the event that business being considered by an assembly committee has been referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution for advice, representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall be entitled to speak.

“(8) The committee moderator shall provide that the total time allotted to persons, other than members of the committee, who speak for or against a recommendation be equal so far as possible except as outlined in E.2.d.

“Overture Advocates/Signer of Commissioners’ Resolution

“f. [Text remains unchanged.]

“Responsibilities of Overture Advocate

Rationale for Recommendation 6.b.

Open Meetings—The core values of our gatherings as the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as described in Recommendation 1, include encouraging “the full and prayerful participation of those seeking the mind of Christ for the whole church,” and suggests that the gathered body experience “God’s presence through worship, devotions, hallway prayers, and Christ-centered conversations.” Including worship and prayer in committee meetings will bear witness to our core values and help us to better discern God’s will together.

Parliamentary Procedure—While Robert’s Rules is the traditional parliamentary process through which decisions are made, decision-making bodies at various levels throughout the PC(USA) have discovered many other effective models for group discernment. The core values of our gatherings as the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as described in Recommendation 1, include commitments to “participate in discussion, deliberation, and discernment in ways that are fair and honest and open … making decisions through contemplation, prayer, and heartfelt sharing.” These core values will be demonstrated and sustained when “the General Assembly deliberates with fairness, attention to process, order, and the encouragement of minority voices, while creating space for decision making grounded in discernment and dialogue and for the emergence of new leadership. This amendment allows moderators and committees to adopt discernment processes other than/in addition to Robert’s Rules.

Reports of Special Committees—When an assembly commits (or refers) an item of business to a special committee, it is as Robert’s Rules says “so that the question may be carefully investigated and put into better condition for the assembly to consider” (RRNR 11th ed. p 168). The special committee is in effect a continuing part of the previous assembly and their report the continuation of the previous debate.

There has been little clarity and some inconsistency on how the reports of special committees are received in the committees of the assembly. Is their report subject to the equal-time requirement of E.2.e.(8) that “The committee moderator shall provide that the total time allotted to persons … who speak for or against a recommendation be equal so far as possible”?
This amendment to the Standing Rules recognizes the unique nature of special committees and the importance of giving the assembly time to hear and discuss the reports of the special committees (to which a great deal of PC(USA) time, talent, and financial resources have been committed). While a committee may grant more time for the report of a special committee (especially in complex reports), the changes in the Standing Rules ensures at least thirty minutes of report time and does not link the report to E.2.e.(8), which addresses those who wish to speak for or against specific recommendations before the assembly committee.

   c. Amend Standing Rule E.4.a. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “4. Organizational Meeting

   “a. Ordinarily, the initial meeting of each assembly committee shall be an organizational meeting in private session for up to one hour for the purpose of developing intragroup dynamics and determining procedural matters, such as approval of the committee’s agenda and consideration of the style in which the committee plans to operate.”

7. That Standing Rule F (General Assembly Plenary Meeting) be amended as follows:

   a. Amend Standing Rule F.2. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “2. Reports of Assembly Committees

   “Distribution

   “a. Electronic copies of the written reports of assembly committees (print or electronic) shall ordinarily be distributed to commissioners no later than the close of the meeting prior to the one at which they are to be considered. When necessary, the Stated Clerk shall arrange for the reproduction and distribution of reports.

   “Adequate Docket Time

   “Committee Moderators

   “c. Committee moderators should move the approval of recommendations with minimum comment, and material in the commissioners’ printed resources shall not be read.

   “Financial Implication

   Rationale for Recommendation 7.a.

   Electronic transmission of committee reports is an efficient and environmentally sustainable method of information distribution and should be utilized when appropriate. This amendment does not prevent the distribution of physical copies when necessary.

   b. Amend Standing Rule F.5.a. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “Debate

   “a. In debate on any pending matter, no commissioner or delegate shall be allowed to speak more than two minutes until all other commissioners or delegates who desire to speak on the pending matter have been heard.”

   Rationale for Recommendation 7.b.

   Streamlining the work of the General Assembly has been a consistent goal of this committee. During plenary deliberation, the time allotted for commissioners to speak to an issue is generally curtailed once debate becomes contentious, repetitive, or as time becomes scarce. However, motions to reduce speaking time, though normally passed, often require debate that further reduces already limited time. It is the opinion of this committee that two minutes is an adequate amount of time to make a concise point on the plenary floor and this amendment will preclude avoidable debate about limiting time.
c. Amend Standing Rule F.5.e. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Cellular Telephones Electronic Devices

e. Use of cellular telephones is prohibited during meetings of the General Assembly and meetings of the assembly committees. During these meetings, pagers may be used only in the silent mode. Commissioners are expected to be present when meetings are in session both physically and mentally. The use of electronic devices for purposes other than those directly related to the current topic is therefore discouraged when meetings are in session. Commissioners are also expected to adhere to the General Assembly Social Media Policy.”

Rationale for Recommendation 7.c.

The use of electronics devices at General Assembly provides increasing utility while simultaneously creating new avenues of possible abuse. This amendment modernizes and expands the reference beyond pagers and cell phones to electronic devices generally and affirms the proper role of electronic devices as tools to aid discernment.

d. Amend Standing Rule F.7.a. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Head of Communion

“a. When the Head of Communion of a member church of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the World Council of Churches, or the National Council of Churches is in attendance at a session of the General Assembly as an ecumenical advisory delegate or as an ecumenical representative, and proper notice is provided, the assembly shall provide up to five three minutes of docket time to each such Head of Communion to present a greeting to the assembly.”

Rationale for Recommendation 7.d.

Streamlining the work of the General Assembly has been a consistent goal of this committee. While maintaining the importance the ecumenical representation, three minutes is an adequate amount of time to present a greeting to the assembly.

e. Amend Standing Rule F.8.b. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Nonofficial Printed Material

“b. Ordinarily, printed materials that are not official business before the General Assembly may only be distributed at authorized booths in the General Assembly Exhibit Hall. Other distribution is permitted in the mailboxes provided for commissioners and advisory delegates, and also can be handed out twenty-five feet or more from entrances to the building in which the General Assembly meets.”

Rationale for Recommendation 7.e.

Mailboxes are no longer provided for commissioners and advisory delegates and this change is reflected in the amendment.

8. That Standing Rule H (Persons in Ordered Ministry and Elections) be amended as follows:

Amend Standing Rule H.1. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Each proposed Vice-Moderator candidate who wishes to be included may send biographical information and a photograph in electronic format.
“(4) The Moderator of the General Assembly shall be elected in the following manner:

“(i) ‘Moderator, I place in nomination for the office of Moderator of the ___ General Assembly Ruling/Teaching Elder _____ from the Presbytery of _______ and Ruling/Teaching Elder ____ from the Presbytery of _____.’

“(ii) If the assembly votes to use paper ballots, the Stated Clerk shall provide ballots and assign no fewer than ten commissioners to act as tellers, collecting and counting the ballots. “(3) The Moderator may request the Vice Moderator to preside and to assist in the performance of other functions of the Moderator during and following the General Assembly.

d. e. Vacancy in the Office of the Moderator or Vice Moderator

Rationale for Recommendation 8.

The Introduction in Recommendation 1. begins with words from 1 Corinthians “Now there are varieties of gifts ….” Recommendation 8.a. recognizes that just as people have a variety of gifts, there are also a variety of ways those gifts can be expressed. This proposal expands the possibilities in how the Moderator position can be expressed.

There are numerous examples of successful co-pastor arrangements that allow two people to bring their unique skills to the position and as a result benefit both themselves and the congregation. In the same way, we believe that providing the option for co-moderators can bring these same benefits to the individuals as well as the General Assembly.

The changes proposed to the Moderator election process accomplish three goals: support the addition of the co-moderator option, simplify some wording, and create additional flexibility in the process.

Combining the Moderator and Vice Moderator elections into a slate election provides a more consistent election process in light of the new co-Moderator option.

Providing more flexibility in how the Moderator election is conducted simplifies the language in the Standing Rules and at the same time reflects the core values listed in the new Introduction, most explicitly Expansive and Spiritual Deliberation and Order and Flexibility.

9. That Standing Rule K (Commissions, Special Committees, and Special Administrative Review) be amended as follows:

Amend Standing Rule K.1. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“1. Commissions and Special Committees

“Purpose

“a. Unless otherwise specified in the assembly’s action, any body or group established by the General Assembly to carry out decisions of the assembly, or instructed to report to the assembly, or make recommendations to the assembly, or both, shall be known as a commission or special committee (see Book of Order, G-3.0109). The purposes of a special committee must be ones that cannot be undertaken by the work of an existing corporation or entity under its assigned responsibilities. Due to the financial and staffing implications, before authorizing the establishment of a special committee, the assembly shall hear a report from the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, which shall have consulted with the most closely related entity and a member designated from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, as to whether the work to be assigned to the special committee could more effectively and economically be assigned to that entity. The General Assembly may establish special committees and commissions to carry out decisions of the assembly or make recommendations to the assembly on matters that cannot be undertaken or accomplished by an existing entity. (Book of Order, G-3.0109)

“Considerations for Creating

“b. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall be notified by any assembly committee whenever there is discussion about the creation of a special committee. In discussing the possible creation of a special committee, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall hear from related corporation or entity representatives as well as representatives from the assembly committee considering the proposal. Financial implications of special committees should accompany any recommendation for action by the assembly. The written comment of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures must be incorporated as background in the report of the assembly committee containing a recommendation to create a special committee. In considering the creation of a special committee or commission the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall hear from relevant agencies as well as from the assembly committee considering the proposal. Financial implications of special committees or commissions shall accompany any recommendation to the assembly.

“Appointed by Moderator

“c. Any commission or special committee authorized by the General Assembly, unless otherwise designated, shall be appointed by the Moderator in collaboration with the General Assembly Nominating Committee and the General Assembly Committee on Representation. The Moderator is also authorized to fill by appointment any vacancies that may occur in any of such commissions or committees. No teaching elder, ruling elder, or other person shall be appointed to serve on more than one such commission or committee except by consent of the General Assembly. The Moderator of the General Assembly appoints members of special committees or commissions, unless otherwise designated, in collaboration with the General Assembly Nominating Committee and the General Assembly Committee on Representation. The Moderator is authorized to fill any vacancies that may occur. No person appointed may serve on more than one committee or commission unless otherwise designated by the assembly.

“Length of Existence and Reports

d. Special committees shall complete their work within two years unless the General Assembly that authorized its establishment specifies a different period. Special committees shall submit a written report to the General Assembly that shall include a recommendation to extend its existence (if beyond the period authorized), or, at the conclusion of its work, a recommendation for dismissal. Special committees shall also publish interim reports, no less than annually, by electronic or print means. Such interim reports shall indicate the progress made by the special committee on its assigned tasks and offer a timeline and process for completing its work. When a special committee requests an extension of its existence, the request shall be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. After consultation with the most closely related assembly entity, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly will recommend to the assembly whether the project shall be reassigned to the entity, remain with the special committee, or be terminated. Any extension to its existence shall require a two-thirds vote of the commissioners. Special committees or commissions shall normally complete their work within two years. Requests for an extension of work shall be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. An extension shall require a two-thirds vote of the assembly.

“Review

c. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall review the work of each special committee and include in its report to each session of the General Assembly a summary of the work being carried out by each special committee, including any recommendation to transfer the work assigned to a special committee elsewhere, or to dismiss the committee. A special committee shall not consider matters currently referred to another special committee or entity. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall review the work of each special committee or commission.

“Representation at General Assembly and Funding

f. The expenses of one member of a special committee or commission to attend the General Assembly session to make any oral presentation of the report of the committee or commission that may be docketed, and to respond to questions concerning that report shall be paid by the General Assembly through the regular budget of the committee or commission. This member shall be designated as the corresponding member. The exceptions to this rule are as follows:

“(1) At the General Assembly meeting in which the final report of the committee or commission is presented, the moderator, who shall serve as the corresponding member of the committee or commission, and one other designated member of the committee or commission shall attend to present the report and serve as resource to the committee considering the report. Unless otherwise approved in advance by the Moderator of the preceding General Assembly in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (due to special circumstances), only the expenses of these two authorized representatives shall be reimbursed by the General Assembly through the regular budget of the committee or commission.

“(2) In the event of a minority report, a designated member of the committee’s or commission’s minority shall also be invited to attend. The expenses of this member shall be reimbursed by the General Assembly through the regular budget of the committee or commission.

“(3) Other members of special committees or commissions, not otherwise referred to in this standing rule, shall be reimbursed for attendance at a General Assembly session only if they are individually involved in hearings or other official purposes.

f. When the report of the special committee or commission is presented, its moderator shall serve as a corresponding member of the assembly and may be accompanied by one other member of the committee or commission. The expenses of these authorized representatives shall be reimbursed through the committee or commission’s budget.

“In the event of a minority report, a designated member of the minority shall also be invited to attend the assembly. The expenses of this member shall be reimbursed through the committee or commission’s budget.

The Stated Clerk shall provide staff services and other assistance to special committees and commissions. The work of the special committees and commissions shall be funded through the per capita budget of the Office of the General Assembly.

Rationale for Recommendation 9.

In concert with our review of the other sections of the Standing Rules, we offer these recommended changes in order to simplify the language.

Overall Rationale

INTRODUCTION

These recommendations are in response to the following referrals:

The Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies was established by action of two previous assemblies. The 214th General Assembly (2002) in recommending biennial General Assemblies to the PC(USA) requested a review of the biennial concept following the 219th General Assembly (2010.) A committee was to be appointed by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council—now the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Item 03-18 to the 219th General Assembly (2010) from the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy requested an expansion of the scope of the review committee to include all matters related to the form and function of the meeting of the General Assembly.

The following persons were named to the original committee: Glen Bell, then of Indianapolis, Indiana, now of Sarasota, Florida; Theresa Cho, San Francisco, California; Thomas Evans, Atlanta, Georgia; Glen Alberto Guenther, Denver, Colorado; Marcus Lambricht, Princeton, New Jersey; Kathy Lueckert, Seattle, Washington; Carol McDonald, Indianapolis, Indiana; Matthew Schramm, Bay City, Michigan; David Van Dyke, St. Paul, Minnesota. Carol McDonald was appointed moderator and Thomas Hay, Associate Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, was named as staff resource.

Actions proposed to, and approved by, the 220th General Assembly (2012) (see Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 241ff.) were:

1. The affirmation of continued biennial meetings of the General Assembly.

2. That the docket of each biennial meeting of the General Assembly contain plenary sessions focused on prayer, Bible study, and community building.

3. That the dockets for the next three successive General Assemblies (2014, 2016, 2018) be constructed around the Great Ends of the Church, the Marks of the Church, and the Notes of the Church (F-1.0302, F-1.0303, and F-1.0304).

4. Each overture sent from a presbytery to the General Assembly must receive concurrence from at least one additional presbytery.

5. Commissioners’ resolutions must be signed from two commissioners representing two different presbyteries.

6. All decisions made by assembly standing committees by a ¾ (supermajority) vote shall be placed on the General Assembly Plenary Consent Agenda to be considered as the first order of plenary business following committee meetings.
Any actions requesting constitutional change must be considered in plenary. In addition to all consent items from assembly committees, the following items shall be placed on the General Assembly Plenary Consent Agenda: (a) all unchallenged nominations from the General Assembly Nominating Committee; (b) unanimous recommendations from assembly agencies and entities for confirmations of those offices that, according to the Manual of the General Assembly, require General Assembly confirmation. In all cases, the right of any commissioner to remove an item from the General Assembly Plenary Consent Agenda shall be preserved.

7. The practice of pre-election Moderatorial booths was eliminated.

8. Moderatorial nominating speeches were eliminated.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) also extended the work of the Biennial Review Committee for two years. The following persons were appointed to serve by Moderator Neal Presa: Ruling Elder Conner Clark, Heartland Presbytery (YAAD to the 220th General Assembly [2012]); Teaching Elder Rhonda Kruse, Hudson River Presbytery; Ruling Elder Lee Tan, Milwaukee Presbytery; Teaching Elder Reggie Weaver, then of Chicago Presbytery (commissioners to the 220th Assembly [2012]). With the resignations of Tom Evans and Reggie Weaver, the Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies consists now of eleven persons plus Tom Hay, staff resource. Carol McDonald has continued to serve as moderator.

Throughout the four years of its endeavors, the committee has kept before it these words: “The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness” (G-3.0501).

As we present our recommendations to the 221st General Assembly (2014), we want to say to the whole church:

• The way we have worked together as a committee reflects our hope and dream for this and all future meetings of the General Assembly. We have been a community of faith, hope, love, and witness. We have reflected on Scripture, prayed together, listened to one another, celebrated one another’s professional and personal joys and challenges, and walked with one another in life-changing events and circumstances.

• We affirm the value of Robert’s Rules of Order as our guide for doing business and making decisions together. Yet we have listened to the church and have heard a yearning for dialogue and conversation that focuses on issues and ideas rather than on rules and regulations.

• We have studied, with diligence, the Manual and Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

• We have worked carefully to identify and articulate values we believe are, and should be, visible in the worship, work and witness of every meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) It is our recommendation that this Values Statement become the Introduction to the Manual and Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

• We are proposing several changes to the Manual and Standing Rules of the General Assembly. We believe our recommendations reflect the hopes of those who crafted the Form of Government adopted by the church in 2011.

May the recommendations contained in this report further the capacity of each future General Assembly to live as a community of faith, hope, love, and witness.

COTE COMMENT ON ITEM 03-04

Comment on Item 03-04—From the Committee on Theological Education.

The Committee on Theological Education encourages the 221st General Assembly (2014) to not approve Recommendation 3.d. concerning Standing Rule B.2.e. [as found in the Manual of the General Assembly] on theological student advisory delegates.

The opportunity to serve the PC(USA) as a theological student advisory delegate (TSAD) can be formative for the faith and life of seminarians. The experience of serving as a TSAD often nurtures in these seminarians a deeper understanding of the way the denomination functions in ministry and mission. The presence and witness of TSADs is also helpful and healthy for other commissioners, advisory delegates, and the General Assembly as a whole, especially those who may not regularly be exposed to students of one of our PC(USA) theological institutions.

The experience TSADs gain at General Assembly shapes their future education and ministry. These seminarians return home with a broader perspective of the denomination and its work and worship and share this perspective in the seminary classroom and with their own congregations.

The financial cost of bringing twenty-four TSADs to General Assembly is not insubstantial. The COTE believes, however, that the positive and long-term benefits gained from the presence of TSADs at the assembly far surpass the overall fi-
In summary, the COTE advises against voting for this particular recommendation as we believe theological student advisory delegates (TSADs) are an investment in the future of the church, providing hope and future leadership and guidance to the PC(USA).

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 03-04

Comment on Item 03-04—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) has particular responsibility for advising the assembly regarding actions that will affect representation and participation in its life together. The GACOR respectfully advises that commissioners consider the following comment.

The original tasks given to the Biennial Review Committee required an extension of their service to bring the final recommendations. We provided input to them where they allowed access. The final report was not distributed for consultation.

Many of the recommendations make adjustments that seek to provide adequate time for deliberation and preparation for an assembly. Having commissioners elected and reported earlier will allow for more time in selecting and preparing leaders as well as allowing for earlier appointment to committees (allowing for longer time for commissioners to prepare for the work before the assembly).

Recommendation 4.a. has significant impact and needs careful consideration. GACOR has concerns regarding constraints on participation and narrowing representation. The proposed changes to Standing Rule C.1.c. will alter the nature of assembly committee leadership. There are two major changes being proposed:

1. Allows up to 1/3 of assembly committee moderators to be selected from beyond the pool of commissioners elected to that assembly. GACOR asks, what is the standing of the proposed non-commissioner moderators? Are they added as commissioners to the assembly (incurring additional costs) in addition to the elected commissioners from their presbyteries? With parallel recommendations to require reporting of commissioners earlier, there should be sufficient time to determine leadership qualities and recommend persons for service.

2. Removes the guideline of “no more than one person from any one presbytery” being appointed to serve as vice moderator, allowing duplication of presbytery representation. It may limit geographic distribution of assembly committee leadership. For example: There are 14 committees for the 221st General Assembly (2014) and 28 leaders selected. Of 656 commissioners, 28 presbyteries (of 172) have a commissioner serving as a committee leader. Removing this guideline allows for an even narrower geographic distribution of committee leaders to serve future assembly committees.

Respectfully, there seems to be a spelling error in Recommendation 4.a. GACOR suggests the simple correction may be to replace the word “inclusively” with the word “inclusivity.”

GACOR applauds the changes asked for in Recommendation 6.b. This recommendation suggests necessary Standing Rule changes so that assembly committees are given flexibility in selecting deliberative processes. GACOR observes assembly committees with an interest of measuring access to participation of commissioners and advisory delegates within different deliberative processes. They are looking for patterns of participation for differing methods of discernment and provide feedback to the Stated Clerk. This action allows for greater experimentation. Having observed two assemblies, already it is clear that the use of Robert’s Rules privileges some commissioners voices in deliberation and final actions. The expanding of processes will affect those patterns differently and result in wider participation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

Joint COGA/PMA Budget Proposals for General Assembly Per Capita Budgets 2014–2016

[The assembly approved Item 03-05, Recommendations 1.–2.a. See pp. 13, 21.]

1. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMA) recommend that the 221st General Assembly (2014) incorporate into the Minutes the Comparative Balance Sheet for 2013 and 2012, along with the 2013 Actual Performance in the Per Capita Statement of Activities.
2. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMA) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014)

a. Approve the Revised 2014 General Assembly Per Capita Expense Budget totaling $12,891,246;

b. Approve the total Expenditure Budget for 2015 totaling $12,279,103 and for 2016 totaling $12,262,898.

c. Approve that there be an increase in the General Assembly Per Capita rate of $0.05 in 2015 to $7.07, and that the previously approved rate of $7.02 for 2014 be also approved for each year 2015 and 2016.

3. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMA) recommend that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve that an amount of $1,354,306 be designated from the 2015 per capita budget (about half the cost of the General Assembly meeting), and be reserved for use in the year of the General Assembly meeting (2016).

Rationale for Recommendations 1.–3.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMA) continue to be grateful to the whole church for their faithfulness in meeting their per capita obligations (about 90 percent collection rate) for 2012. We believe that these funds have enabled the General Assembly to carry out its core ecclesial functions so that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can carry out its ministry in faithfulness to Scripture and our Constitution.

Building the per capita budgets for 2015 and 2016 continues to be a challenge. The total revenue level is impacted by variables as diverse as a slow-moving economy, stock market fluctuations, value of assets held, levels of membership loss, and the ability of presbyteries to fully meet their per capita obligations. Most of these factors impact the overall per capita budget negatively. On the expenditure side, challenges besides annual inflation include added costs due to increase in number of commissioners to the General Assembly since 2010, as well as added costs to carry out an assembly at different locations.

Given these dynamics, both OGA and PMA faced the reality that major reductions would be necessary unless there was to be a very substantial increase in the per capita rate, which we determined would create a real hardship in the church. Recognizing that the challenges mentioned are adversely impacting governing bodies at every level, and in order to hold to a minimum increase in the per capita rate, hard choices had to be made relative to staffing levels, the consolidation of expenses, and limiting merit increases to staff compensation. In fact, the OGA and PMA made several adjustments reducing the previously approved budget for 2014 by almost $1,437,000, and are now proposing a revised budget for 2014. In order to ease the burden at every level, we are also proposing that we maintain the General Assembly Per Capita rate at the current rate of $7.02, without any increase for 2015, and 2016, although annual inflation is around 3 percent. We have budgeted to utilize a reasonable amount of reserves each year, after carefully reducing budgets, in order to eliminate any increase in the per capita rate for the next two years.

The details behind these calculations can be found on the attached sheets. We believe that such restraint in holding the per capita rate without increase and reduced expenditure levels are necessary for the well-being of the church and the fiscal integrity of the per capita budget. We would encourage a similar spirit of restraint by commissioners as you consider other proposals that might have financial implications at the 221st General Assembly (2014), and consequently impacting the proposed budgets and the General Assembly per capita rate.

4. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMA) recommend that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the attached allocation of designated funds for OGA, and PMA task forces, totaling $2,059,774 for 2014, $1,899,815 for 2015, and $2,192,093 for 2016.
Rationale for Recommendation 4.

The allocation of designated funds, are reserved for specified expenditure planned to augment the per capita budget so that steep increases to the per capita apportionment rate may be cushioned. The primary items include part of the Presbyterian Historical Society operations, General Assembly session, ordination examinations, the production and distribution of OGA publications, and OGA/PMA task forces. The sources of these funds are mostly from independently generated revenue, including gifts and endowments. Some meetings and conferences generate revenue for expenses, independent of the per capita budget and are accounted through the designated funds.

REVIEW BUDGET PERFORMANCE (JAN–DEC) 2013

The 2013 General Assembly Per Capita Budget was revised to have total revenue of $13,413,919, and a total expenditure of $13,792,598, thus ending with a draw on reserves of ($378,679). The actual figures for 2013 performance indicate that we ended the year with a draw of only ($132,441) from reserves, resulting from a total revenue of $13,507,990, and a total expenditure of $13,640,431.

During March 2013, the Office of the General Assembly undertook a reorganization/restructure program, which resulted in reduction of staff and realignment of functions serving the larger church. This necessitated severance costs that totaled about $700,000 in 2013. In spite of this additional expense, the draw on reserves at end year has been reduced to a level close to $132,000, which is far less than that originally budgeted and approved by the last General Assembly (original $659,711). This was made possible by reduced budgets during revision and under expenditure.

[The assembly approved Item 03-06 with amendment. See pp. 13, 21.]

A Resolution to Support Hotel and Hospitality Workers Through the Adoption of Just Policies in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of General Assembly to include protective language in every hotel contract so that if there is a labor dispute at the contracted hotel, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can pull out of the contract without penalty.

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of General Assembly to adopt a policy that gives preference to hotels where [workers are organized] [workers’ rights are protected either by organization, or through the fair practices of their employers], and commits to honoring and upholding boycotts that are directly related to workers’ wages and working conditions.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk to write a pastoral letter, to be distributed electronically, to every presbytery and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) interest group, encouraging adoption of a similar policy that includes incorporating protective language in every hotel contract, giving preference to hotels where [workers are organized] [workers’ rights are protected either by organization, or through the fair practices of their employers], and committing to honoring and upholding boycotts that are directly related to workers’ wages and working conditions.”

Rationale

The Scriptures and our confessional standards uphold Christians to just compensation for workers and fair working conditions. As such, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a long-standing commitment to workers’ rights, fair wages, and humane working conditions, affirming that, “All conditions of paid employment, including compensation and working conditions, should sustain and nurture the dignity of individuals, the well-being of households and families, the social cohesiveness of communities, and the integrity of the global environment.” Currently, however, the PC(USA) does not have a policy that helps us support and stand with hotel and hospitality workers when their rights are being violated by their employers.

In 2013, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) had a contract with the Hyatt Hotel for the Big Tent gathering in Louisville, Ky. When leaders of the PC(USA) learned that Hyatt workers, in collaboration with the organization Unite Here, had called for a global boycott of the Hyatt due to their unjust practices, they decided to break the contract for all common space (such as meeting, meal, and workshop space) in order that those Presbyterians who desired to observe the global boycott could do so without missing any events at Big Tent. Sleeping rooms that had been contracted were retained, but attendees could choose alternate hotels for their accommodations. Unfortunately, breaking this contract cost the church financially. It was the right thing to do, and the church should be proud of the sacrifice it made for the sake of justice. The reality is, however, if protective language had been included in the contract, there would not have been a cost.

This incident revealed that no policy is currently in place to help guide our leaders and conference-planners through the process of formulating contracts with hotels and other vendors with the rights of workers in mind. This recommendation seeks to provide that kind of guidance through the following three steps:

1. Including protective language into every hotel contract will ensure that we can break a contract if necessary without the financial loss we incurred in 2013. Protective language allows an organization to break contracts without penalty, including reasons involving labor disputes. Not only will this protect the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), it will send a message to hoteliers that our church supports and cares about hotel and hospitality workers. The PC(USA) can also include language that requires hoteliers to disclose any labor disputes that arise, so that the church is duly informed and able to make these decisions when necessary. Resources on how to include such language are available at the website of Interfaith Worker Justice, and could be utilized by the legal counsel of the PC(USA).4

2. Officially stating that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), “gives preference to hotels where workers are organized and commits to honoring and upholding boycotts that are directly related to workers’ wages and working conditions” would provide clear guidelines for which hotels will be considered first when booking meetings and rooms and would enable conference planning teams to make sound logistical decisions that adhere to the church’s commitment to justice.

3. Directing the Stated Clerk to communicate and encourage adoption of our denominational policies to the presbyteries and the church’s interest groups ensures that the whole church is aware of this commitment and has the tools to go and do likewise.

We are called as a church to advocate and stand for worker justice. Our theology of work and labor must be reflected in how we make financial decisions and which businesses we choose to support. We have already clearly stated with our words and our actions that the church values the dignity of workers, and this resolution helps us to do so more efficiently and strategically. Doing so also contributes toward reaching the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s directional goal of compassionate prophetic discipleship, demonstrating and proclaiming God’s justice, peace, and love.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 03-06 be approved.

The purpose of the recommendations from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns is to establish more specific strategies for carrying out the church’s long-standing policies in support of workers’ rights, including the right to organize, the right to fair wages, and the right to safe working conditions. As quoted in the ACWC’s rationale, the church’s policies on justice for workers are grounded in its understanding of the gospel’s message of human dignity, human equality, and abundance of life for families and communities that God intends for all. For the faithful, worker justice cannot be sacrificed to economic expediency nor defined by market rates and practices.

4 Faith Community Guide to Supporting Hospitality Workers,” Interfaith Worker Justice, <http://www.iwj.org/resources/hospitality-workers-guide#protectivelanguage> (23 January 2014) provides guidelines on language that can be used in contracts for this purpose. The following is a sample of Protective Language:

Notwithstanding anything in this Agreement to the contrary, if performance hereunder would foreseeably involve Group] in or subject it to the effects of a boycott, strike, lockout, picketing or other labor dispute and [Group] therefore withholds, delays or cancels performance, it shall have no liability therefrom, provided that [Group] may not withhold, delay or cancel performance based upon a labor dispute involving its own employees. In the event of a cancellation under this Section, neither [Group] nor its members shall have any future obligation under this Agreement, and any deposits or other payments made to the Hotel by [Group] or its members to reserve rooms or other space for use, and/or for services to be provided, shall promptly be refunded to [Group] or its members. This Section shall supersede all other provisions of this Agreement and shall be construed and enforced in accordance with the laws of the State of [Group’s home state here].

The Hotel agrees to notify [your Group] in writing within ten (10) days after it becomes aware of any labor relations dispute involving the Hotel and its employees including, but not limited to, union picketing, the filing of an Unfair Labor Practice charge by a union, the expiration of a negotiated labor contract, an existing or impending strike or lockout or any other matter which could reasonably be construed as a labor-management relations dispute.
The recommendations apply the church’s policies to an area in which the church has a specific presence: the use of hotels for conferences, meetings, and General Assemblies. The church is a direct consumer of the labors of hotel workers. As such, the church impacts the working conditions and life possibilities of hotel workers through its use of consumer power. The question before the assembly is whether the proposed recommendations use the church’s power faithfully.

To answer that question, it is important to understand clearly who is affected by the church’s decisions. In a recent study of five companies that provide more than 70 percent of U.S. full-service hotel rooms, 80 percent of the workers were Black, Latino/a, and Asian women and men. They perform work as housekeepers, banquet servers, stewards and dishwashers, cooks and kitchen workers. The study found that as a group, hotel workers are 40 percent more likely to be injured on the job than all other service sector workers; they are more likely to sustain more severe injuries requiring time off and medical treatment or medically restricted work, or transfers. The poor working conditions of housekeepers, who are 25 percent of hotel workers, and 90 percent of whom are women of color (Latina, Black, and Asian women), were clearly described by the academic researchers: “In hotel workers specifically, guest room cleaning work is marked by time pressure, low job control, low wages, increasing use of contingent employees without job security, and few opportunities for career advancement.”

Data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics clearly documents the higher wages of unionized workers whether measured by industry or by workers’ characteristics. In the leisure and hospitality industry, the bureau reports that full-time unionized workers earn on average $611 a week compared to $487 for non-unionized workers. It also reports that the average number of hours worked in a week in April 2014, was only 26. Full-time work is not offered to many. On the basis of wages alone, a preference for unionized hotels is clearly supported by the data.

However, the church’s support for workers’ right to organize is based on its belief in participatory employment: that is, the dignity of workers is expressed, supported, and maintained by workers’ freedom to organize in order to represent their concerns and interests to employers, “to participate actively in economic decision making that affects them.” Understood in this way, good employers providing good working conditions are as much in need of this relationship with their employees as are problematic employers. Worker participation in decision making is an expression of their dignity as equal human beings. Thus, for the church to approve a preference for hotels with organized employees, as in Recommended 2, is consistent with, and perhaps required by, the church’s existing policies.

Recommendation 1 is, as ACWC explains, a way to protect the church from financial losses in the case of a hotel involved in labor activities clearly contrary to the policies of the PC(USA) and its members, resulting in a labor action. The ACSWP has consulted with two organizations that share the PC(USA)’s positions on worker rights: the Society of Christian Ethics and the American Academy of Religion. The Society of Christian Ethics, with an annual meeting involving 500–600 attendees, has required the inclusion of protective language in its hotel contracts for the past eight years without incident, according to its executive director. The American Academy of Religion, with an annual meeting of as many as 10,000 attendees, has adopted a similar policy after experiences with the Hyatt boycott. Examples of relevant contract language would be available from these and other professional organizations. In addition, each of these organizations uses the contract negotiation process to question the hotel about its treatment of workers and its relationship with their unions.

Recommendation 2 would also commit the PC(USA) “to honoring and upholding boycotts that are directly related to workers’ wages and working conditions.” The comment of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) expresses concern that this would keep the church from using other methods of engagement and subject the church to the opinions of others in place of its own discernment process. However, boycotts are an action of last resort. It is much to the advantage of workers to negotiate with employers to work out agreements, avoiding strikes or boycotts. Workers sacrifice their own income and job security when forced to take these measures. Some may remember the call of Black South Africans to boycott their country in their struggle against apartheid. Some may remember the calls to boycott during the civil rights movement. The church is not blocked from studying, investigating, and witnessing before or during the long negotiating period. The ACSWP advises that the church, in developing its policies on workers’ rights, has indeed done these studies and investigations. It has concluded that wages and working conditions should support the dignity of persons, families, and communities. Nor is the church blocked from entering negotiations with management, as MRTI does. The ACSWP believes that the power to consume creates such an opportunity to negotiate that should be used. Now the General Assembly must decide whether it is prepared, if called, to take actions on behalf of a group of workers whose unjust laboring conditions we already know and we can affect. Will we boycott if asked? We are reminded of Martin Luther King’s answer from a Birmingham jail:

You may well ask, “Why direct action, why sit-ins, marches, and so forth? Isn’t negotiation a better path?” You are exactly right in your call for negotiation. Indeed, this is the purpose of direct action. Nonviolent direct action seeks to create such a crisis and establish such creative tension that a community that has consistently refused to negotiate is forced to confront the issue. It seeks so to dramatize the issue that it can no longer be ignored.”

The ACSWP advises that if the General Assembly approves these recommendations, the conditions that lead to boycott may well be avoided.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 03-06.

As Reformed Christians, in the light of the Bible and our confessional standards, we believe in just compensation for workers and fair working conditions for all human beings. For many years, the PC(USA) has been committed to supporting the rights of workers, fair wages, and decent working conditions.

As a denomination we cannot be co-participants of unjust situations by supporting hotels that are violating the rights of their employees.

This resolution will help us avoid penalties by being good stewards of our resources while at the same time being consistent with what we believe, preach, and do. We cannot host meetings that talk about justice while still reinforcing unworthy work conditions.

We can preach, with our example, that we care about other human beings, loving them as ourselves, and that we are a church committed to justice and peace.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recommends the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 03-06, noting the following.

As a matter of clarification, ACWC offers the following counsel:

In Recommendation 2, by “give preference,” ACWC does not mean to assert that right-to-work states such as Kentucky cannot be included in consideration for meetings. Rather, the intent is that meeting planners always start with hotels where workers are organized wherever and whenever possible.

Further, ACWC recommends that comments from legal counsel be considered in relation to the theological basis for advocating for hotel workers rights. Stories in the Gospels teach us that Jesus ate with tax collectors, sinners, outcasts, and women and is remembered to have shared parables about treating workers in the vineyard (Mt. 20:1–16) with fairness. There is no testimony regarding Jesus seeking legal counsel for his own prophetic mission. We recognize that we are living in a different time and age, but the strong theological basis to argue for justice for workers comes through in our tradition and therefore calls the church in certain circumstances to speak prophetically from that tradition.

OGA & PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 03-06

Comment on Item 03-06—From the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (“PMAB”) and the Office of the General Assembly (“OGA”) stand strongly behind the values for fair employment practices expressed by the ACWC but hold reservations about the details required by this recommendation. Speaking up for just compensation and reasonable working conditions is a part of our scriptural and confessional mandate and true to our historical witness.

Our concern is that, as currently presented, the resolution does not take into account the comprehensive ministry of the church and prior actions of the assembly.

Recommendation 1 directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency (“PMA”) and OGA to include protective language in every hotel contract. Any contract in the hospitality industry is a negotiation between skilled meeting planners and hotel managers who give and take to create an agreement that is beneficial to both. It is already practice of the OGA and the PMA to insert language very similar to that proposed in the recommendation into any contract at the beginning of negotiations. In the course of negotiation, this contractual language may prove to be unworkable or other reassurances take on greater relevance. It is sometimes the judgment of the agency to drop the protective language in lieu of other considerations in order to complete the contract. To require every contract to include specific language puts those who confer on our behalf in a bind that may not meet our comprehensive missional and justice goals.

We would propose that if the General Assembly approves this recommendation, it consider inserting language such as “attempts to” before the words “include protective language…” in order to encourage meeting planners in the negotiation stages.

Recommendation 1 also makes reference to “a labor dispute at the contracted hotel” without defining what constitutes a labor dispute. Such general language is not useful when it comes as a directive from the General Assembly. Staff is left parsing what constitutes a labor dispute and who qualifies as a party in the dispute.

We would propose that, if the General Assembly approves this recommendation, it might be more helpful for the recommendation to use language such as “…so that if the contracting entity of the PC(USA) determined that the hotel violated the missional goals of the church, it could pull out of the contract.”

Recommendation 1 would then read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of General Assembly to [attempt to] include protective language in every hotel contract so that if [there is a labor dispute at the contracted hotel, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can] [the contracting entity of the PC(USA) determined that the hotel violated the missional goals of the church, it could] pull out of the contract without penalty.”

Of greatest concern are the implications of Recommendation 2, which “commits [the PMA and OGA] to honoring and upholding boycotts …” Such a policy abdicates to other bodies (such as Unite Here) our missional responsibility to engage in a prayerful, thoughtful process of engagement before initiating a boycott. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a vital history, going back almost a century, of joining strategically in boycotts. In 1979, the church established eight criteria before entering into a boycott. Among those criteria is to ask if “… other approaches to correcting the injustice [have] been seriously undertaken?” Furthermore the assembly instructed: “There are many methods of seeking social change, and boycott should rarely, if ever, be the strategy of first resort. Discussion and persuasion, exposure to public opinion, legislative remedy, and legal action are only a few of the options” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1979, Part I, p. 253, “Boycotts: Policy Analysis and Criteria”).

As currently written, the PMA and OGA would be required to respect a boycott declared by other institutions without engaging in our own process of study, persuasion, negotiation, or witness. We would be relinquishing our own policies and the discernment of our councils to bodies with no connection or responsibility to our membership. The final conclusion of these boycotts would not be determined by the church, but by other entities for us.

One of the strengths of our Mission Responsibility Through Investment (“MRTI”) program is the way it opens avenues for the church to engage businesses in concrete, thoughtful conversations before moving toward any consideration of divestment. A boycott should be the end of the conversation between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and an institution, not the beginning.

Different language would instruct all the agencies of the church, when made aware that a hotel has been targeted for boycott by some organization, to initiate an investigation of the issues, conversation with the parties, and determination of how the PC(USA) might best contribute to the issues of justice before entering into a contract.

Recommendation 2 also instructs the PMA and OGA to “adopt a policy that gives preference to hotels where workers are organized …” without recognizing the many hotels whose workers are treated with justice but are not currently organized. Are good managers and the workers employed by them to be bypassed for preferential treatment for unions? This standard would imply that all of the hotels in Louisville and in many whole states (and all of our conference centers) do not meet the justice goals of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) because their workers are not organized.

Amendment to Standing Rule H.1.b.(3) (Moderatorial Election Expenses)—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) amend Standing Rule H.1.b.(3) as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“(3) The following campaign guidelines are intended to create an equal and open opportunity for moderatorial candidates. To this end, the following procedures shall be observed:
“(a) Candidates should budget campaign spending of no more than $1,500, excluding travel and meeting expenses related to their candidacy shall covenant not to spend in excess of $2,000 in making their candidacy known to the church. This $2,000 includes out-of-pocket expenses as well as the estimated value of in-kind contributions, but does not include travel and meeting expenses.

“(b) Each candidate shall submit to the Stated Clerk an itemized statement of expenses, including travel and meeting expenses related to his/her candidacy and in-kind contributions. This statement shall be submitted to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly prior to the convening of the General Assembly. This information shall be distributed to commissioners and advisory delegates prior to the election of the Moderator. The statement of expenses of all candidates shall be kept on file in the Office of the General Assembly following the meeting of the General Assembly.

“(c) The Office of the General Assembly shall not reimburse a candidate for campaign expenses, but shall assume expenses involved in printing and distributing material submitted for information packets as outlined in Standing Rule H.1.b.(3)(e)(g).

Rationale

In order to create a level opportunity for individuals seeking to run for Moderator of the General Assembly, the General Assembly approved limitations on moderatorial election expenses, which are found in the Manual of the General Assembly at Standing Rule H.1.b.(3)(a). When the limitations were placed in the Manual of the General Assembly, provision was made for the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to review the candidates’ statements of expenses in order to assure the commissioners that the limitations were being observed. However, the rules are vague on the issue of in-kind donations, which could create disparity among candidates, depending upon their willingness and ability to seek donations. The COGA suggests that language be framed that would encourage equal and open opportunity rather than framing more regulations. Since the current spending limit did not specify that in-kind donations were part of that limit, the recommendation is that the overall limit be raised to $2,000 and include in-kind donations.

Standards of Ethics for Commissioners and Advisory Delegates to the General Assembly—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve “Standards of Ethics for Commissioners and Advisory Delegates to the General Assembly” as a code of ethics for commissioners and advisory delegates to the General Assembly:
1. Foundations. The standards of ethical conduct for commissioners and advisory delegates to the General Assembly are founded in our calling as disciples of Jesus Christ and the witness of Scripture. Commissioners and advisory delegates to the General Assembly should find particular guidance in the Standards of Ethical Conduct for Ordained Officers in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In fulfilling the particular responsibilities of service as commissions and advisory delegates to the General Assembly, particular ethical obligations arise from the nature of the assembly and the role commissioners and advisory delegates play in it. Among the foundational principles of our polity that lead to particular ethical responsibilities for commissioners and advisory delegates are that:

a. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is governed by presbyters exercising “shared power … by presbyters gathered in councils” (Book of Order, F-3.0208 & F-3.0202).

b. “Presbyters are not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ” (Book of Order, F-3.0204).

c. “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (Book of Order, F-3.0205).

All commissioners and advisory delegates have a responsibility to act in a manner that preserves these principles. These specific aspects of these responsibilities are set forth below.

2. Independent Judgment. All commissioners and advisory delegates shall avoid actually or potentially compromising the exercise of their independent judgment in seeking to discern the will of Christ in the decisions made by the General Assembly, and situations that give even the appearance of compromising the exercise of their independent judgment.

   “a. Definition. ‘Compromising independent judgment’ means any situation in which the commissioner or advisory delegate may be influenced or appear to be influenced in decision-making by any motive or desire for personal advantage or obligation to others with an interest in the decisions of the General Assembly. [Such situations can arise not only during the meeting of the General Assembly, but at any time after an individual has been selected as a commissioner or advisory delegate. Accordingly, any commissioner asked to serve in a committee leadership position shall disclose prior to accepting such an appointment any matters and relationships that have the potential for giving rise to the appearance of compromising his or her independent judgment.] Personal advantage means a financial interest or some other personal interest, whether present or potential, whether direct or indirect. [When in doubt, the commissioner or advisory delegate is to assume there might be at least the appearance of a compromise of his or her independent judgment, and should raise the question pursuant to these standards.] [Such situations can arise not only during the meeting of the General Assembly, but at any time after an individual has been selected as a commissioner or advisory delegate.]

   “b. Potential Compromises of Independent Judgment. [Any commissioner asked to serve in a committee leadership position shall disclose prior to accepting such an appointment any matters and relationships that have the potential for giving rise to the appearance of compromising his or her independent judgment.] All commissioner or advisory delegates are likewise to disclose promptly, in writing, matters and relationships that have the potential for giving rise to the appearance of compromising his or her independent judgment in the business before the General Assembly. Examples include, but are not limited to, financial interests in a decision of the assembly, acceptance of gifts or trips provided by those with an interest in or who are advocating for or against a recommendation or overture before the assembly. All disclosures are to be made promptly in writing to the moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures. [When in doubt, the commissioner or advisory delegate is to assume there might be at least the appearance of a compromise of his or her independent judgment, and should raise the question pursuant to these standards.]

   “c. Gifts and Relationship Building. To avoid even the appearance of impropriety, any gifts, gratuities, special favors, and hospitality to a commissioner or advisory delegate shall not be accepted by any commissioner or advisory delegate from any person or organization that sells, delivers, or receives any goods, materials, or services to or from any entity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or from any person or entity who are advocating for or against a recommendation or overture before the General Assembly. This prohibition includes those persons or organizations that desire to enter into such relationships with any entity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). There are four exceptions to this rule:

5 While not all advisory delegates will have been ordained to the ordered ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the standards set forth therein are appropriate guidance to all who have accepted service as an advisory delegate to the General Assembly.
(1) Gifts, meals, outings, and relationship-building activities provided by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) churches, middle councils, partner churches or related organizations. Commissioner or advisory delegate shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

(2) Gifts that primarily benefit the General Assembly and not an individual commissioner or advisory delegate, such as gift cards, gifts of complimentary rooms given to the General Assembly by hotels, conventions, and conferences in relation to official General Assembly business.

(3) Occasional small gifts (less than $50 in value, such as flowers or foodstuffs) to an individual commissioner or advisory delegate. Where gifts are shared with other commissioner or advisory delegates or other General Assembly participants (e.g., foodstuffs set out for all to partake), then the gift is not deemed to be to an individual commissioner or advisory delegate.

(4) Luncheons, dinners, outings, and relationship-building activities in connection with General Assembly business may be received. If an activity permitted under this paragraph results in a value of more than $100 to the commissioner or advisory delegate, the commissioner or advisory delegate shall promptly report this in writing to the General Counsel of the PC(USA) and the moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures. The written report will include a description of the activity, the dollar value, the name of the person/organization providing it, and the business that person/organization does with an entity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or the recommendation before the General Assembly that the person/organization is advocating for or against. The Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures shall maintain a log that includes all of the written reports submitted under this Section (4).

d. Process and Resolution. All disclosures, reports, or questions regarding actions that might actually or potentially compromise a commissioner’s or advisory delegate’s independent judgment are to be made promptly and in writing to the moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures. The Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures will consult with the Stated Clerk and with the General Counsel of the General Assembly or designee as appropriate. After consultation, the Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures will make a recommendation to the General Assembly. The General Assembly makes the final decision as to whether any action of a commissioner or advisory delegate has compromised a commissioner’s or advisory delegate’s independent judgment.

3. Confidentiality of General Assembly Information. In the rare circumstance in which the General Assembly meets in executive session, commissioners or advisory delegates shall not disclose information disclosed in the course of such a session that is not known outside of the General Assembly or is not known by public means (Standing Rule F.5.g.)

4. Preservation of the Deliberative Process. Each commissioner and advisory delegate should act in a manner that preserves the rights of other commissioners and advisory delegates to participate in the deliberative process.

a. Cellular telephones. “Use of cellular telephones is prohibited during meetings of the General Assembly and meetings of the assembly committees. During these meetings, pagers may be used only in the silent mode” (Standing Rule F.5.e.).

b. Demonstrations. “Spontaneous or planned demonstrations by individuals or groups are prohibited inside the building where the General Assembly meets” (Standing Rule F.11.b.).

5. Violations. Allegations of any violation of these standards during the course of a General Assembly shall be brought to the Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures. The Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures shall give the accused reasonable opportunity to be heard. If it finds a violation of these standards has occurred after giving the accused due process (RONR §61), the Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures may bring to the General Assembly a motion to reprove the accused commissioner or advisory delegate. A decision by the Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures not to bring a motion to reprove to the General Assembly is not appealable to the General Assembly. Violation or noncompliance with this policy may also result in discipline by the council with jurisdiction over the commissioner or advisory delegate.

6. Amendments. These standards may be amended from time to time. In consultation with the General Counsel of the General Assembly, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly is authorized to periodically review this policy and to recommend reasonable and necessary changes to these standards.

7. Designees. Where these standards assign a duty to a particular officer or staff position, that officer or staff position may use the General Counsel or its designee to complete the duties.

8. No Waiver by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Nothing in these standards shall be construed to waive any claim, assertion, or defense of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to exemption or exclusion from applicability of a statute and/or regulation or lack of jurisdiction of a civil court or governmental agency.
9. Trainings. Trainings to familiarize the commissioner or advisory delegates with these standards and its related forms and procedures will be posted on the General Assembly website in advance of each meeting of the General Assembly. Commissioners assigned to the Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures will receive training regarding their responsibilities under this policy.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly was charged by the 220th General Assembly (2012) as follows:

The 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directs the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in consultation with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, to develop and bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) a Code of Ethics Policy for all commissioners and advisory delegates that reflects the intent and content of the Ethics Policy for Elected and Appointed Members of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that was approved in 2009. (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 188–89 of the electronic file; p. 160 of the print copy)

The rationale for the commissioners’ resolution that was the basis for this action indicates that the underlying concern was “the attempt to influence the actions and vote of commissioners and advisory delegates through the offer and acceptance of expensive gifts or experiences” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 189). However, the commissioners’ resolution itself and the rationale reference the PMA-COGA Ethics Policy as the model COGA should use in developing a policy for commissioners and advisory delegates.

The COGA sought to model these standards on the PMA-COGA Ethics Policy, while recognizing that commissioners and advisory delegates to the General Assembly serve in a different role than elected members of COGA and the Presbyterian Mission Agency. These standards are therefore premised on the need to protect the integrity of the General Assembly’s deliberative process and the ability of commissioners and advisory delegates to seek the will of Christ unfettered by actions that might compromise their independent exercise of judgment on matters before a General Assembly, as well as ensuring that commissioners and advisory delegates do not interfere with the General Assembly’s deliberations. Accordingly, the proposed standards begin with a statement of the foundational principles that govern the ethical responsibilities of individuals called to service as commissioners and advisory delegates. It then sets forth three areas of ethical duty: avoiding even the appearance of any action that would compromise the independent exercise of a commissioner’s or advisory delegate’s judgment, maintaining confidences, and preservation of the integrity of the deliberative process. The remaining provisions (§§ 5-9) concern administration of these standards.

Approve Appointment and Terms of Associate Stated Clerks—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, with the concurrence of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Elect Teaching Elder Sue Davis Krummel, Teaching Elder Joyce Lieberman, and Ruling Elder Kerry Rice to a first, four-year term as Associate Stated Clerks of the General Assembly.

2. Elect Teaching Elder Thomas Hay to a second, four-year term as Associate Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

3. Elect Teaching Elder Robina Winbush and Ruling Elder Loyda Aja to a fourth, four-year term as Associate Stated Clerks of the General Assembly.

Rationale

The Standing Rules of the General Assembly at H.2.d. states the following:

The General Assembly may elect one or more Associate Stated Clerks as the General Assembly shall determine. The Stated Clerk shall nominate persons to fill each such office after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The term of office shall be four years, subject to reelection at the pleasure of the General Assembly.

These six persons give exemplary service as leaders of the major ministry areas of the Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), are in good standing as ruling elders and teaching elders, and are faithful Christian leaders who serve the church with “energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.” The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly enthusiastically nominates these six persons for election or reelection as Associate Stated Clerks of the General Assembly.

Recommendation for Site and Date of 224th General Assembly (2020)—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) accept the invitation of the Presbytery of Baltimore for the 224th General Assembly (2020) to meet in Baltimore, Maryland, from June 20–27, 2020.

Rationale

Standing Rule I.1.d gives instructions for rotating the place of the meetings of the General Assembly between four areas of the United States. Under the plan assemblies are scheduled for Detroit, Michigan (2014—Area C); Portland, Oregon (2016—Area A); and St. Louis, Missouri (2018—Area B). This rotation places the 224th General Assembly (2020) in Area D, which includes the synods of South Atlantic, Puerto Rico, the Northeast, Trinity, and the Mid-Atlantic. Possible convention cities were identified in this area and the presbyteries represented by those cities were contacted about invitations.

General Assembly Meeting Services of the Office of the General Assembly then sent requests for proposals to the convention bureaus of those cities whose presbyteries also offered invitations. After review, five cities provided opportunities worth further investigation: Rochester, Atlanta, Baltimore, San Juan, and Tampa. All five cities offered very attractive possibilities.

Site visits were made to four of the five cities, and ten criteria for evaluation were developed, including financial commitments, ease of facility use, hotel convenience, and the spiritual and emotional impact of a particular site on commissioners and advisory delegates.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly heard a recommendation from the General Assembly Meeting Services and is excited to recommend Baltimore for much that it offers.

The assembly last met in Baltimore in 1991. Since then the convention center—located in a thriving downtown and a block from the Inner Harbor—has been expanded and there is ample space for the official meetings. Various discounts and contributions from local firms brought the convention center rent down to about $25,000. There are more than 1,900 hotel rooms within a few blocks of the convention center at rates as low as $119.

In making their recommendation, COGA recognized Baltimore’s location on the eastern corridor making it easily accessible by train or car as well as by air. The dates were also an important fact for COGA, which appreciated that these dates are after Pentecost, most graduations, and before the 4th of July holiday.

The Presbytery of Baltimore has a long tradition of engagement and support for the General Assembly. Seven times in our history they have hosted a General Assembly. Seven times the assembly has elected a member of the Presbytery of Baltimore to serve as their Moderator. Their strong leadership will be a genuine asset to the OGA in planning and hosting the 224th General Assembly (2020).

Overall we believe that the city and the Presbytery of Baltimore offer the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) an outstanding location for holding a General Assembly and that commissioners, advisory delegates, staff, and visitors will be excited to be in Baltimore.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) instructs the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) to establish a policy for the process of selecting host sites for future General Assemblies, and that in developing such a policy the following points are to be considered:

1. Providing to presbytery leadership basic information helpful in considering the possibility of offering an invitation to host a General Assembly (e.g. Manual of Operations and budgets of previous General Assemblies, FAQ document, one-page summary of expectations of host presbytery, timeline for key decisions/actions by host presbytery once selection is approved by General Assembly);

2. Laying out a timeline for receiving invitations from presbyteries to host a General Assembly, including sufficient time for a presbytery to consider such an invitation at a stated meeting and the timing for requesting proposals from prospective city convention bureaus;

3. Consulting with presbytery leadership and councils prior to proposals being presented to COGA;
4. Immediate notification to presbytery leadership once COGA has decided to recommend a presbytery as a host for General Assembly.

Rationale

The councils of the church exist to help congregations and the church as a whole to be more faithful participants in the mission of Christ (Book of Order, G-3.0101).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) has the responsibility to recommend to a General Assembly a site for a future General Assembly.

A presbytery serving as a host for a General Assembly engages as many as 2,000 volunteers, provides hours of staff and volunteer time in planning and preparation, and raises as much as $200,000 in funding.

There was no consultation with presbytery leadership in the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy [site of the 223rd General Assembly (2018)] or the Presbytery of Baltimore [proposed site of the 224th General Assembly (2020)] following a request to consider the possibility of being considered as a host for General Assembly until after COGA approved the recommendation.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 03-12

Comment on Item 03-12—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly welcomes the opportunity to assure that clear communications occur with potential host presbyteries during the process of selecting sites for future meetings of the General Assembly. Accordingly, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly advises that this item be referred to COGA for action and response to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Childcare at General Assembly.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) directs the Office of the General Assembly to ensure that childcare and child-friendly spaces are provided at all General Assembly meetings, following models used for other Presbyterian meetings, such as Presbyterian Women’s Gatherings and Big Tent.

Rationale

The PC(USA) continues to emphasize the importance of the involvement of young adult members. In order to support the participation of many of these Presbyterians, childcare must be provided.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 03-13.

The rationale of the overture rightly points out that the PC(USA) is strongly emphasizing the involvement of young adult members in the life of the church and seeks to increase both the numbers and levels of young adult participation. Childcare and child-friendly spaces at all General Assembly meetings would make participation much more feasible for young parents.

The ACSWP notes providing childcare would not only be a support to young adults but particularly to women. We confess in our Brief Statement of Faith that the Holy Spirit “calls women and men to all ministries of the church.” Provision of childcare and child-friendly spaces would help align our actions with what we confess in our faith.

Finally, the provision of childcare at all General Assembly meetings would contribute to the health of marriage and families, decreasing the financial and emotional burden of church members with children when travel is required to attend General Assembly meetings.

eral Assembly meetings. The 216th General Assembly (2004) of the PC(USA) approved the policy statement Transforming Families, reaffirming in many ways the importance of the family in Christian faith.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 03-13.

To offer adequate childcare at churchwide events like the General Assembly meetings it is very important to support young adults, clergy couples, single parents, and racial ethnic immigrants’ participation and leadership.

For young adults, clergy couples, and single parents with kids, it is needed to offer childcare if we want to support younger parents to participate in the life and decision-making process of our denomination.

In the case of clergy couples, it is a challenge to leave their kids at home when both of them have responsibilities, are participating and assuming leadership roles in our church. So they need also the support with care for the younger members of their family.

For immigrants representing racial ethnic groups of the denomination, it is a challenge to attend the General Assembly meetings without their kids since as immigrants many of them do not have extended family members near to them to take care of their kids while they are away.

Additionally, to pay for childcare services during a whole week of business meeting it is extremely expensive. Despite there is a policy from the Presbyterian Mission Agency to pay for childcare services, it is only valid for staff and elected members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Activities, childcare, and child-friendly spaces for toddlers and kids are needed during important business at the General Assembly if we want to have a fair representation of all races, gender, and ages according to the General Assembly Committee on Representation and as it is stated in our Book of Order (G-3.0103, Participation and Representation, F-1.0403, Unity in Diversity).

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 03-13.

The ACWC has long supported adequate childcare at churchwide events.

Ensuring that childcare is available is essential to raising a new generation of leaders as well as supporting parents. While business is central to the meetings, alternatives should be considered such as flexible sharing of a single commissioner position and/or flexible voting schedule to encourage younger parents to participate.

While childcare is emphasized in this overture, other caregivers could be included, to open up an opportunity for participation by those with responsibilities to care for people with disabilities, elder care, etc.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 03-13

Comment on Item 03-13—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly advises that Item 03-13 be referred to COGA for further study with instructions to report its recommendations to the 222nd General Assembly (2016). There are a variety of factors that need to be considered with respect to this item, including state law limitations on the time period children of various ages can be kept in childcare and the demand for such childcare by commissioners. Allowing further study of this issue by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly may allow development of alternatives that better meet the underlying goals of this item.

[The assembly disapproved Item 03-14. See pp. 18, 23.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Amending Standing Rule B.3.a. to Designate Presbytery Executives as Corresponding Members of the General Assembly.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) amends Standing Rule B.3.a. to designate presbytery executives corresponding members of the General Assembly, beginning at the 222nd General Assembly (2016). The amended Standing Rule B.3.a. would read as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown as italic.]
“a. The following persons shall be corresponding members: Moderators of earlier General Assemblies; the Stated Clerk, Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks, and other members of the staff of the Office of the General Assembly as designated by the Stated Clerk; the members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly; the members of the PMA Executive Committee and staff of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and of the divisions and related entities designated by the council; all members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution; the executives of synods; the executives of presbyteries; one person designated by each entity reporting directly to the General Assembly, including permanent, special, and advisory committees (additional persons may be designated by such bodies if authorized by the Moderator of the preceding General Assembly in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly); and the presidents (or their designee) of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and seminaries related by covenant agreement.”

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 03-14

Comment on Item 03-14—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly advises the General Assembly in addressing this item to consider the impact of the significant increase in the number of corresponding members this item would create. The General Assembly currently has approximately 120 corresponding members, many of whom are limited in the right of voice to issues relevant to their particular entity. This item would add approximately 170 more individuals to the number of corresponding members, which could create practical problems in such a large number of individual seeking to comment on items of business before the General Assembly during periods of debate.

A. General Assembly Nominating Committee Agency Summary

The notion that we are called to be together has led Presbyterians to conclude that this is how we should make decisions: not independently or unilaterally, but together. This is as true within the life of a local congregation as it is for the denomination as a whole. Decisions are shared among the various members or governing bodies for the good of the whole, because together we are the body of Christ. (Presbyterian Polity for Church Officers, Third Edition, Gray & Tucker, p. xii).

Introduction

Through the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s comprehensive nominations process, the General Assembly is afforded the opportunity to select, from the varied gifts and services of Presbyterians, the most qualified persons to serve on General Assembly entities with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.

Assigned Responsibilities

The General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) is charged with providing careful nominations of persons to serve in elected membership on more than thirty on-going boards, committees, councils, and commissions designated by the General Assembly. The GANC does its work in conformity with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to full participation and representation of the rich diversity of the church in its governance.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee itself is broadly representative of the constituency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The committee consists of sixteen members, women and men from each of the synods of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). They represent various racial ethnic identities, age groups, different theological perspectives, and include persons with disabilities. The Moderator of the previous General Assembly nominates GANC members for election by the ensuing General Assembly.

The General Assembly nomination process is application based and is open and accessible to the broad membership of the church. Persons who wish to be considered for nomination must complete and submit an application form and solicit personal references. In addition to providing a way to gather consistent demographic data, the application form allows for personal and creative narrative responses to a variety of questions about the applicant’s sense of call to service, qualifications, and experience. Applicants can be confident every application is reviewed during the nomination process.

Accomplishments

The GANC continues to connect with Presbyterians corporately and individually—through meetings of presbytery and synod nominating committees, participation and attendance at national and regional conferences, engagement and correspondence with leaders at all councils of the church and other official Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) groups—in order to inform Presbyterians of the many and diverse opportunities for service.

In addition to face-to-face engagements, individuals, congregations, presbyteries, and synods can find a listing of positions open for election on the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s website www.pcusa.org/nominations.

About a year before it meets to make nominations, the GANC mails to each presbytery and synod the list of vacancies to be filled. Additionally, the GANC website provides instructions, information about the nominations process, and committee descriptions. These descriptions contain information on the skills and expertise needed and time requirements for service. The descriptions are a useful tool for candidates as they determine whether or not their particular gifts and abilities are a match with the identified needs of a specific entity.

Persons interested in being considered for service on a General Assembly level committee must do so by submitting an application for nomination form. Until the 2012–2014 nomination cycle, the General Assembly Nominating Committee utilized an online application process. Delays in the conversion and upgrade of the nominations online application and database systems resulted in applicants in this cycle having to apply via an electronic Word document. Even so, as of February 15, 2014, approximately 225 applications were received for about eighty-five at-large vacancies. Applications remain active for two General Assembly cycles. In the 2012–2014 cycle, the General Assembly Nominating Committee has utilized a paperless system for its nominations process. The conversion of the online application process and database is to be completed in fall 2014.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee continues to further its efforts to deepen cultural competence and proficiency by providing educational opportunities for its members. Its February 2013 meeting included three presentations for this purpose: Rob Fohr and Abigail Heimach, Young Adult Catalyst Office, Presbyterian Mission Agency on Creating Space for Young Adults; James Hudson, president, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program on Generational Theory; and Dr. Mordean Taylor-Archer, vice provost for diversity, University of Louisville on Recruiting Persons of Color.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee works in concert with the General Assembly Committee on Representation to ensure that membership on all General Assembly entities is broadly representative of the membership of the whole church.

Through participation at conferences, conversations, and engagement with the General Assembly Committee on Representation, racial ethnic caucuses, affinity groups, individual contact at all mid council levels as well as with pastors and ruling elders across the denomination, the General Assembly Nominating Committee strives to increase the number of racial ethnic persons and persons with differing theological perspectives in its pool of applicants.

In its efforts to provide the General Assembly Committee on Representation quantifiable information about the theological diversity of the pool of nominees, the GANC added the following question to its nomination form: “Which terms describe your stand on theological issues facing the church today?” Applicants are provided with the following categories (listed in alphabetical order on the form): Conservative, Evangelical, Liberal, Moderate, Orthodox, Progressive, and I prefer not to answer. Applicants are encouraged to check all that apply and a space is provided for comments. In addition, the GANC has removed a question on its form, “To assist the General Assembly Nominating Committee in addressing the Presbyterian Church’s commitment to theological diversity, please briefly describe your theological perspective,” replacing it with, “Please name one key theological issue facing the church today and explain your perspective on this issue.”

The General Assembly Nominating Committee notes that many applicants do not identify themselves as persons with disabilities even when a disability does exist. Thus, we believe that the number of persons with disabilities serving the church on committees at the General Assembly level is actually higher than reported. In an effort to encourage persons to self-identify the GANC sought the advice of Presbyterians for Disability Concerns. As a result, the GANC revised a question on its form from, “Are you a person living with a disability?” to “The GA Nominating Committee is dedicated to ‘engaging people living with disabilities into active service governing body [council] service’ (from Living Into the Body of Christ, PC(USA) 2006). Are you living with a disability? If yes, please describe the accommodations needed for your participation... in this entity’s work. The General Assembly Nominating Committee will continue to seek ways to encourage persons living with disabilities to make this information available.”

Members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee relate actively to mid councils and General Assembly entities throughout the year. Each General Assembly Nominating Committee member serves as a liaison to the nominating committee of the synod in which the member resides. Each member attends at least one synod or synod nominating committee meeting every other year to explain the nominations process.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee invites all General Assembly entities to send a written report biennially concerning the specific needs of the entity regarding nominees presented to the General Assembly. In addition, the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s liaison member is available to meet with the entity or be in contact by telephone or mail at the entity’s invitation, so that the nominating process may be explained and that the skills and expertise needed by the entity are identified. This information, along with advice and counsel received from the General Assembly Committee on Representation, assists the General Assembly Nominating Committee in its work.

Since the 220th General Assembly (2012) there have been five meetings of the General Assembly Nominating Committee: February 28–March 2, 2013, in Louisville, Kentucky; November 6, 2013 via conference call; February 26–March 1, 2014, in San Diego, California; and video conferences on March 12 and March 31, 2014. An orientation for new members was held November 29–December 1, 2012, in Fort Worth, Texas.

There are sixteen members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee—one member residing in each of the sixteen synods. The General Assembly, upon the nomination of the General Assembly Moderator, elects the members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee; members serve a six-year term. The following officers were elected and served from July 2012 to June 2014: Warner R. Durnell (teaching elder), Synod of Living Waters, moderator; Tully M. Fletcher IV (teaching elder), Synod of the Southwest, vice moderator; and Lita Simpson, (ruling elder) Synod of the Sun, secretary. Other members of the committee are: Victor Aloyo Jr. (teaching elder), Synod of the Northeast; Joan Carpenter (ruling elder), Synod of Southern California and Hawaii; Juanita D. Holley (ruling elder), Synod of Lincoln Trails; Roger B. Howell (ruling elder), Synod of the Covenant; Yena K. Hwang (teaching elder), Synod of Mid-Atlantic; Bertram G. Johnson (teaching elder), Synod of Alaska-Northwest; Amy Kim Kyremes-Parks (church member), Synod of the Rocky Mountains; Judy Lussie (ruling elder), Synod of the Pacific; Danny C. Murphy Sr. (teaching elder), Synod of the South Atlantic; Judith North (ruling elder), Synod of Lakes and Prairies; Bob Riggs (ruling elder), Synod of Mid-America; Marta T. Rodriguez (ruling elder), Presbiteriano Borinquén en Puerto Rico; John M. Willingham (teaching elder), Synod of the Trinity.

The office of the General Assembly Nominating Committee is located in the Office of the General Assembly, 100 Witherspoon Street, Louisville, KY 40202-1396. Assistant Stated Clerk Valerie Kiriishi Small, ruling elder, serves as the coordinator for General Assembly Nominations (part-time).

The Reverend Dr. Neal D. Presa

THE GOSPEL: Our Common Faith

“May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, so that you may abound in hope by the power of the Holy Spirit” (Rom. 15:13, NRSV).

1. We gather in Detroit, Michigan, for the 221st General Assembly (2014) with the theme from Romans 15:13, “Abound in Hope.” The hope we have been given by God in Jesus Christ through the Holy Spirit is grounded in God’s action, in God’s continual being for us, and in the enduring promise that the good work that God began in us, God will carry it to completion to the day of Christ Jesus (Phil. 1:6).

2. As followers of Jesus Christ in the part of the Reformed tradition called the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), we confess that in the life, death, resurrection, ascension, and promised return of our Lord, there is the Gospel, the power of God to salvation to all who believe (Rom. 1:16).

3. Our hope abounds not because of anything we can muster up in ourselves, but because God’s power, presence, and promise in Christ through the Holy Spirit abounds and abides toward us. Even then, the power, presence, and promise are not abstract entities that God gives. God’s power, presence, and promise is a short-hand way of saying that what is given, what is revealed … or rather, who is given, and who is revealed is the triune God Himself.

4. When we speak of hope, or faith, or love—the trifecta gifts of the Holy Spirit—what we as Christians are given are not quantifiable doses of commodities that can be measured or instrumentalized for our use and abuse; the trifecta gifts are biblical descriptions of the self-revelation, self-giving of the triune God, the fullness of the triune God. The Gospel is personal because the Gospel is the self-giving and self-revealing of the person of the triune God who reveals Himself to be One God in three personalities.

5. We as Reformed Christians join our confession to that of all Christians in all times and in all places who have found a common articulation of faith in the Apostles’ Creed—that ancient creed has summarized for more than two millennia for worshiping communities around the world the common faith, the common hope that anchors and propels us in worship and in witness, prayer, and in praise, in song, and in sacrament.

The creed expresses that the Good News is God Himself. The fact that we can describe the triune God in such and such a way: “I believe in God the Father Almighty … in Jesus Christ His Only Son our Lord. … I believe in the Holy Spirit…” We can make such a confession only because the triune God has come toward us, has pursued us, has revealed to us who God is. Such revelation comes by acts of God, words of God, as God moved through the joys and struggles, the trials and travails, the best and worst moments and circumstances of our common humanity, and in the messiness of our histories and the beauties of our cultures, the triune God showed His character, His will, His ways, and how our common humanity had and continues to have a proclivity to go away from God, to inflict wounds and violence against ourselves, against our neighbors, and against God’s own heart. We sin, and desperately need the renovating power of God to unshackle us from ourselves and being shackled to ourselves.

6. God’s yearning and longing for us has and will continue to be that we would delight in His heart and in His life. God takes the initiative, becomes as one of us in the person of Jesus Christ, and in His life, death, and resurrection, we are set free—free to love God, free to love neighbor, free to live lives that pulse after God’s own heart, to delight in what God desires. As God desires for all of creation to be reconciled to Himself, such a radical vision is imparted to us by the giving of the Holy Spirit, who teaches us daily what Jesus Christ Himself teaches, who Himself sought to do the will of the heavenly Father: “For God so loved the world. …” (Jn. 3:16).

7. Our common covenant in community in being the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is to worship together; worship that assumes that we will be sent to testify of the Good News that God in Christ through the Holy Spirit has come, has set us free, has reconciled us to Himself and to one another. Presbyterian pastor Tim Keller succinctly described the Good News that captivates our hearts: “We are so thoroughly sinful and flawed more than we ever dared believed; but at the same time, we are so thoroughly loved and accepted in Jesus Christ more than we ever dared hope.”

8. That’s why we gather for worship, read and meditate on Scripture, and pray: the Holy Spirit comes to us to remind us of the Good News, to recalibrate us to the Good News, so that we would praise God for God’s wonderful works in Christ, that we would be propelled in faith, hope, and love, to testify in words and in deeds of the Good News, that our common vocation Sunday through Saturday would humbly but confidently proclaim the sinfulness of our common lot, and the saving grace of our common Lord.

9. The Gospel, when metabolized in the fibers of our common life together, result in the community being committed to and engaging in what the six Great Ends of the Church describe:

the proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of humankind;
the shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God;
the maintenance of divine worship;
the preservation of the truth;
the promotion of social righteousness; and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world (Book of Order, F-1.0304)

COMMUNITY: Our Common Life

10. In the 2012–2014 biennium, our life together has been marked by deep struggle and committed hope: deep struggle of grappling with the realities that the church we were two years ago/ten years ago, is not the church we are today, and certainly not the church we will be moving forward; committed hope in that there are multiple places that I have seen and heard where Presbyterians are serving the Lord as faithfully and fully as God’s grace provides. Liturgically adapted from author Anne Lamott, the following has summarized moderatorial service in this biennium: how do we live in the power, possibilities, and promise of the Holy Spirit of Pentecost, as an Easter people in a Good Friday world?

11. Across the country, numerous presbyteries have been and continue to struggle with the realities of dwindling resources, challenged budgets, smaller staff, and congregations that have been dismissed, are being dismissed, or will be dismissed to other ecclesial communions. These are real challenges that affect our life together, that reveal to us what we value, and that place before us opportunities to respond in ways that can advance the cause of the Gospel or stifle its very witness because of responses that are more retributive rather than redemptive.
12. When Hunter Farrell (director of World Mission in the Presbyterian Mission Agency) and I traveled to Cuba to visit with our mission, ecumenical partners, the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba (La Iglesia Presbiteriana Reformada en Cuba, IPRC), the IPRC leadership shared with us a gift: that the IPRC will continue relationship with many congregations that have been dismissed to the Evangelical Covenant Order of Presbyterians (ECOP) and that the IPRC continues its strong relationship with the PC(USA). The IPRC offered to be that common partner between us and ECOP, that perhaps, in the future, God may bring visible reunion and reconciliation among our two communions.

13. In December 2012 at Stony Point Conference Center in upstate New York, Vice Moderator Tom Trinidad and I convened a table of representatives of the various interest groups in the PC(USA): Fellowship of Presbyterians, Covenant Network of Presbyterians, More Light Presbyterians, NEXT Church, Presbyterian Voices for Justice, That All May Freely Serve, Presbyterian Welcome. Our intent was to provide space where mutual affirmation of one another’s Christian faith, development of mutual friendships and genuine relationships, engagement with the points and roots of theological agreement and theological disagreement, and development of a mode of discourse that sought to “dignify difference” rather than settle for coexistent tolerance. The table met for three days and the various groups have continued to meet in the last two years. I am deeply grateful for the wise counsel provided by former U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and former U.S. Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, who individually gave of their time to discuss with me ways in which to frame and conduct conversations under tense circumstances.

14. There’s a committed hope in the way presbyteries respond to the challenges they face. The Presbytery of Alaska, while confronted with the challenges of a number of congregations dismissed to ECO, has since merged with the Presbytery of North Puget Sound, offering a vital witness in the Pacific Northwest and Alaska, and the continuation of faithful mission. The Yukon Presbytery, whose congregations are separated by geographical distance, exhibit a supportive and loving community as they enact the laying on of hands, sharing the joys and struggles of their respective congregations, and embrace one another in encouraging one another in ministry. The Presbytery of Los Ranchos, while confronted with several congregations in the dismissal process, models a strong, vibrant presbytery that takes teaching and ruling elders leadership development to new heights, a deep commitment to new church development, and “flipping the presbytery” so that presbytery gathers are not staid affairs, but life-giving, centered on worship, prayer, and sharing of ideas and practices. The Presbytery of Transylvania, as with several other presbyteries, has moved toward a virtual presbytery staff office, where staff work in virtual space, but meet face-to-face in various congregations to exhibit the connectional nature of our life together. The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta realigned its staff to have a series of congregational mentors and consultants—modeling in a tangible way that the presbytery exists for the congregations, to equip and assist congregations for vitalized ministries. The Presbytery of Tres Rios engages the Gospel in impoverished areas, serving with immigrant families, working collaboratively with ecumenical, interfaith, and civic partners to provide affordable housing, healthcare, afterschool care, and education.

15. There’s a committed hope in the longtime faithful ministry of Presbyterian Women (PW). Even as PW discerns the future that will include a new generation of women, racial ethnic women, and continuing relationships with regional and local PW chapters affected by dismissed congregations, PW continues to be a strong supporter of national and global mission work. Presbyterian Women, at their Churchwide Triennial Gathering in 2012, resolved to focus global mission efforts with the Sudan and South Sudan. Presbyterian Women’s historic efforts continue to bear fruit as witnessed to by a moderatorial delegation that visited the Yodogawa Christian Hospital and the Presbyterian Japan Mission in Osaka, Japan. The Yodogawa Christian Hospital is regarded as one of the finest private hospitals in Japan, offering high-quality care, seeking the healing and wholeness and mind, body, and heart as daily Christian worship occurs in one of their three chapels. The hospital opened the first-ever in Southeast Asia a hospice facility for terminally-ill children and their families. Yodogawa Christian Hospital was founded in the early 20th century with seed money from the PW Birthday Offering.

16. A handful of young adult advisory delegates (YAADs) of the 220th General Assembly (2012) gathered for a first-ever, post-assembly reunion gathering in the summer 2013 at Nashville, Tenn., with the theme “Reunite, Renew, Respond” as we engaged in the Scripture texts of the 220th General Assembly (2012) and the 221st General Assembly (2014): Isaiah 40:31 and Romans 15:13, respectively. This was done through worship, Bible study, songs, development of liturgies, prayer, fellowship, and service at Room at the Inn, a ministry that serves with homeless populations of Nashville, empowering them to break out of addictions and life circumstances that were self-destructive. With the support of the Presbytery of Middle Tennessee, First Presbyterian Church Nashville, Westminster Presbyterian Church of Nashville, and several other sponsors, this YAAD event showed the power of community. Some of the liturgies and prayers can be found at this link: https://www.dropbox.com/sh/ghrjgziy67q7e3z/8eg3zf268B.

17. The Presbyterian Youth Triennium held in the summer 2013 at Purdue University once again brought together in one place well more than 5,000 youth and young adults for worship, Bible study, energizers, song, and service as they engaged the theme, “I Am”—seeking to understand and engage their God-given identities as children of God. Packed over 150,000 meals, they made local impact, and inspired nationwide and global Presbyterians.

18. The launch of the long-awaited new hymnal, Glory to God, has been well-received and widely-acclaimed across the church and in ecumenical circles. Being regarded as one of the finest contemporary hymnals developed, pre-orders and current orders have far exceeded expectations. What a gift and a treasure as a present-generation sings songs of the faith, and prays the liturgies contained therein. Vice Moderator Tom Trinidad was present at all six launch events of the new hymnal as he shared our passion for music and liturgy and as he discussed our Reformed ecclesiology. Thanks be to God! Glory to God!

19. The work of the General Assembly Mid-Council Commission will bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) key recommendations that will help guide discussions of our life together in councils. How might presbyteries and synods engage in conversations that not merely limit the number of synods from 16 to 8, but find ways in which we can articulate 8 missional priorities, not merely 8 geographical configurations. How might congregations and presbyteries partner with one another across geography, to engage in 8 mission priorities over the next decade, 8 mission priorities that are hands-on, practical, and grounded in the biblical witness for a better and just world? Imagine what our General Assemblies would be like if we spent one week engaging in prayer, sharing in best practices, around 8 missional priorities, such as ministries for clean water (as the Synod of Living Waters does), alternative energy (as the Synod of the Sun does)? What about a mission priority that addresses poverty, human trafficking, urban ministry, etc.? Having an agreed upon 8 missional priorities would enable collaboration and conversation beyond geographical boundaries of synods and presbyteries, but based on passion and interests.

20. The work of the General Assembly Special Committee on the Belhar Confession will bring a necessary recommendation to the 221st General Assembly (2014) that the PC(USA) adopt the Belhar Confession. We need to face the reality that the church still has a problem with institutional racism and power. The Belhar Confession, from the voices of struggle of our South African sisters and brothers, speaks a prophetic word to our life together of undoing racism, of living into the radical reconciliation in Jesus Christ, and confessing the ways in which we have been complicit in creating and perpetuating racial violence in words and in deeds, both explicitly and implicitly.

21. The work of the National Racial Ethnic Ministry Task Force calls the 221st General Assembly (2014) to a comprehensive consideration of racial ethnic ministries at all levels of the church, and how intentional commitments and resources can come to bear on our entire life together, and not just pockets of the country or in isolated programmatic units.

22. The work of the General Assembly Special Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies brings to the 221st General Assembly (2014) key recommendations on how our gathering in national council might be enhanced to create community, enable collaboration beyond responses and votes to overtures and reports.

23. The “For Such a Time as This” program places recent seminary graduates to serve as teaching elders in congregational contexts that would not otherwise be able to call a full-time ministry due to financial challenges or geographical preferences by the pool of candidates searching for calls.

24. The Big Tent Conference held in the summer 2013 brought together once again major national conferences in one setting for excellent worship, and the commissioning of mission co-workers.

25. Our ten theological seminaries—Princeton Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary, Columbia Theological Seminary, Union Presbyterian Seminary (Richmond, Va., and Charlotte, N.C.), Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, McCormick Theological Seminary, University of Dubuque Theological Seminary, Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary, and San Francisco Theological Seminary—and the two seminaries that are in covenant agreement with the General Assembly (the Evangelical Theological Seminary in Puerto Rico and Auburn Theological Seminary)—each and collectively bring faithful witness to the Gospel in preparing women and men for ministry in the church and world. Even as the landscape of the church is changing, so it is with theological education. Our seminaries are committed to contextualizing theological education, adapting to changing times, and engaging the global and local in ways that enhance teaching, learning, and research.

26. We are blessed to be in historic relationships with sixty-three colleges and universities. Each of them relate to the PC(USA) in different ways, but all of them take faith and learning seriously, preparing women and men to be responsible citizens in the nation and world, through worship, Bible study, community service, and spiritual formation.

27. Our camp and conference centers provide important programs and space for spiritual formation, education, recreation, theological reflection, and mission service.

28. The “1001 New Worshipping Communities” initiative has well more than 200 communities and more in the pipeline as many presbyteries and a few synods embrace the challenge to establish 1001 new worshipping communities in the next decade—inspiring, equipping, and supporting that wherever two or three are called to gather for worship, study, prayer, and service in Christ’s name, the Church will offer support.

29. There are numerous congregations that bring faithful Gospel witness. Consider the Utqiagvik church in Barrow, Alaska, in the northern slope which is the key Christian presence in that icy desert, as singing and fellowship can be heard and seen. What about Hormigueros Presbyterian Church in Puerto Rico, a community of many ages as they offer powerful and passionate worship, young people in liturgical dance, excited to know about Jesus Christ and serve in His name? Or the Christ the King Church in Maryland, an African American congregation whose choir collected and delivered toiletries and bottled water and brought it to my congregation in Middlesex, N.J., following Hurricane Sandy. Or what about First Presbyterian Church in Ossining, N.Y., which shares the Gospel with the prison inmates of Sing Sing Prison.
30. Our ecumenical and global relationships are essential for our life together and the Gospel witness. A sizable PC(USA) delegation traveled in September 2012 to the Centenary Celebration of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Korea (PCK) and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the Republic of Korea (PROK). We witnessed the deep faithfulness of our Korean sisters and brothers as they have become over the last century a significant “sending church” of thousands of missionaries throughout the world, gathering for daily early morning prayers, fervent in the Gospel, and working for the hoped-for reunification of the Korean peninsula and reconciliation of the North and South and families separated since the Korean War. One of the outcomes of that trip was the hosting by the PC(USA) in April 2013 of a mission consultation where the principal leaders of the PCK traveled to Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary as we jointly crafted a framework that lays out a mutual commitment of our mission and ecumenical partnerships in the next century.

31. The Presbyterian World Mission Asia-Pacific Office, Theology and Worship office in the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the General Assembly Moderator office supported a theological education consultation of seminary partners in Southeast Asia hosted by the Silliman University in Dumaguete, Philippines, in April 2013. With the Asian, Asian American population in the United States as the fastest growing immigrant group, and our deep, historic relationships of partners in the Southeast Asia region, sharing of perspectives from each other’s vantage points as both sides of the Pacific engage Gospel and cultures in our respective contexts in a 21st century world provided significant learnings and outcomes. A shared covenant that resulted from that gathering was endorsed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board; the covenant also provided a model for global/regional consultations and mission frameworks for inter-seminary collaboration and partnership to which the Committee on Theological Education has blessed and which at least one of our seminaries, San Francisco Theological Seminary, established an official relationship with the Silliman University Divinity School. This theological education consultation has catalyzed interest and demonstrated necessity for other global regions to embark on similar theological consultations to consider contextual realities of theological education and formation in a 21st century world.

32. A moderatorial delegation to Lebanon and Egypt in May 2013 was an expression of solidarity with our partners: the National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon, the Evangelical Presbyterian Church of Egypt (Synod of the Nile), and the Coptic Orthodox Church. Our delegation lamented the harsh realities of the nearly 2 million people displaced from Syria since war broke out nearly four years ago. In the midst of destruction of buildings and various terrorist acts, faithful Christians continue to worship and service, often at great cost to themselves and their families. Christians and moderate Muslims in Lebanon work together for the common good and in mutual dialogue and relationships. In Egypt, on the brink of the second revolution that brought down the Morsi regime and the Muslim Brotherhood, Egyptian Presbyterians and Coptic Christians serve faithfully, offering a critical witness of the Gospel, and in many cases, under dire circumstances. The Evangelical Theological Seminary in Cairo developed a unique center to engage and advance Christian-Muslim scholarship, study, and dialogue.

33. The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland met in May 2013. There was in one setting in the city of Edinburgh the confluence of the richness of the Scottish Reformed tradition and history, the royal crown of Her Majesty the Queen, the Church of Scotland’s ecclesiastical delegates, and ecumenical delegates from all over the world. The realities and issues of ordination for ministers in same-gender relationships and the question of same-gender marriage and civil unions were prominent areas of debate and consideration, as with our own context in the PC(USA).

34. Three Colloquia on Ecclesiology: What is the nature and purpose of the Church? Who is the Church? Why the Church? To engage these questions that shape the present-future of the PC(USA), Vice Moderator Tom Trinidad and I convened three Moderator’s Colloquia on Ecclesiology—April 2013, December 2013, and March 2013—at Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Princeton Theological Seminary, and Fuller Theological Seminary, respectively. I am deeply grateful to Presidents Ted Wardlaw, Craig Barnes, Mark Labberton, and their faculties, staff, and students for their hosting and support, together with the strong endorsement of the Committee on Theological Education and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation. Each of these colloquia had seven presenters (pastors, seminary professors, mid council or national staff), together with respondents from the host seminary and area teaching/ruling elders, as we collectively considered what does it mean for the Church to be Christ’s gathered-sent community, worshipping-witnessing communities; or to put it theologically, the Church as being liturgical-missional. Each of the twenty-one presenters considered this question from various angles—Eucharist, baptism, ecumenism, mission, justice, multiculturalism, liturgical theology, liturgical reform, salvation, the Holy Spirit. The presentations will be published in an edited volume by Wipf and Stock, tentatively titled, Liturgical-Missional: Essays on a Reformed Ecclesiology.

35. Three Gatherings on Unity with Difference: How do we live into the unity that is already effected by the triune God in Christ through the Holy Spirit, notwithstanding our experience of deep theological disagreement and ecclesiastical division? How do we engage in genuine discourse that does not merely tolerate difference but dignifies difference? To engage these questions, Vice Moderator Tom Trinidad and I convened three Moderator’s Conversation on Unity with Difference—December 2012, December 2013, March 2013—at Stony Point (NY) Conference Center, Princeton Theological Seminary, and Whitworth University, respectively. I am deeply grateful to Stony Point co-directors Kitty and Rick Ufford-CHASE and their staffs, Princeton Seminary president Craig Barnes, and Whitworth University president Beck Taylor and their respective staffs, faculty, and students for their support, along with the assistant of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation. On the first gathering with the various interest groups, see paragraph 13 above. The Princeton gathering was a focused conversation on the nature and purpose of the Reformed confessions, their relationship with the Book of Order, and how they relate to current discussions on Christian marriage. The Whitworth gathering was a focused conversation on “Race, Gender, and Religious Identities,” specifically how do we as North American Christians speak of the Gospel contextually embodied and lived in such a way that dignifies historical and theological realities concerning racial identities, cultural messaging and encoding of gender roles and expectations, and the Gospel’s engagement with peoples of other faith traditions. The learnings and methodologies of these three gatherings will be published as a co-authored piece under the aegis of Witherspoon Press as a web-based resource for congregational and presbtery use, tentatively titled, Unity with Difference: Resources for Our Life Together.

36. Working with staff of the Office of the General Assembly and Presbyterian Mission Agency, particularly Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons and Executive Director Linda Valentine and their staffs, on calls to action and prayer following such events as Hurricane Sandy, Oklahoma shooting, Hurricane Haiyan, the trial of George Zimmerman and the death of Trayvon Martin, the release of Meriam Ibrahim and the tragedy of human rights in Sudan and South Sudan, and several others.

37. With the ratification of the necessary 2/3 majority of presbyteries for the new common translation and Scripture citations of the Heidelberg Catechism, the 221st General Assembly (2014) will be asked to give final approval. This new translation is the result of the ecumenical collaboration we have with the Reformed Church in America and the Christian Reformed Church in North America. Following the 450th anniversary of the catechism last year, our adoption of this new translation amplifies the significance of this beloved expression of our Reformed faith, the consequence of ecumenical relationships, and, most supremely, the confident affirmation of Q/A 1, that “in life and in death, we belong to God.”

THE TRIUNE GOD: Our Common Hope

38. There are so many staff in the national offices, in mid councils throughout the church, in seminaries, colleges, and universities throughout the U.S., ecumenical offices in various countries whom I thank for your generous support of the office of General Assembly Moderator, and of me and my family, personally. There are the many hundreds of thousands (if not a few million) of people who have prayed these last two years, the thousands of hands I have shaken, and the many thousands of faces with whom I have looked at eye-to-eye. From these, I must name Stated Clerk of the General Assembly Gradye Parsons, Associate Stated Clerks Tom Hay and Loyda Aja, and OGA staff Molly Williams, Angie Stevens, Randy Hobson, Toya Richards, Sharon Youngs, Valerie Small, and PMA staff Mienda Uriarte for their near weekly if not daily patience with me as the present and outgoing occupant of the moderatorial office, their support and assistance and wise counsel through and through. My deep gratitude to my support network of trusted friends and colleagues in the church and outside, particularly the so-called “Quadrumvirate.” I am deeply grateful for the faithful service of and enduring friendship with Tom Trinidad, Vice Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012). In these last two years, he has shared in the travels, travels, and joy of this shared ministry. My thanks, too, go to his family—Kyndra, his wife, children Huston and Jordan—and his congregation, Faith Presbyterian Church of Colorado Springs, Colorado, for sharing Tom with all of us and the entire church.

39. My gratitude to four communities with whom I have been blessed to serve and presently serving in ministry over the course of this moderatorial term: Middlesex (N.J.) Presbyterian Church (2003–April 2014), New Brunswick Theological Seminary (2011–April 2014), Village Community Presbyterian Church of Rancho Santa Fe, Calif. (since May 2014), North-West University of Potschefstroom, South Africa (since November 2013).

40. My deepest and profound gratitude and love to my family—my wife of twelve years, Grace, my sons Daniel and Andrew—for the many days I missed baseball and basketball games, FaceTiming and Skype connections from airports and hotel rooms, for your patience, love, and resilience. I am truly and immensely blessed.

41. This report concludes as it began: with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We enter the 2014–2016 biennium with fewer congregations and fewer members and fewer dollars, with deep anxiety in many corners of the church, with real challenges that confront us in every place. Yet, it has always been that way, with varying measures and degrees. In every age and in every place, the people of God encounter trouble and calamity, at the personal, national, organizational, cultural, systemic, global, and even cosmological level. Yet, in every age and in every place, as the Scriptures testify and to which our confessions/creeds/catechisms are living expressions and expositions, the triune God who has revealed and given Himself as the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the power and presence of the Holy Spirit does not cease from saving, does not desist from pursuing us, does not pause from redeeming the world, does not ignore the plight and conditions of our individual lives nor of the world. In fact, quite the opposite. What we know, what we believe, and what we trust is in the Who … . who we know, who we believe, and who we trust is that the Triune God who created us, who came as Jesus Christ, by whose life, death, resurrection, ascension, eternal priestly intercession, and promised return in glory, will accomplish all things in all ways, to the glory of God. How do we know, believe, and trust? By the person and work of the Holy Spirit who testifies through the holy testimony of Scripture of this reality, the living faith to which we have been given, and the sacred calling to which every generation has been summoned to—to testify of what we have seen, heard, tasted, and freely received.

That is the story to which 1.8 million followers of Jesus Christ called the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have been called together.

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

C. Revised Covenant of Understanding, Setting Forth the Delegation of Authority of Responsibilities from the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the PC(USA) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) to the Presbyterian Historical Society (PHS) Board of Directors.

REVISED COVENANT OF UNDERSTANDING
March 2014

This Revised Covenant of Understanding is entered into for purposes of setting forth the delegation of authority of responsibilities from the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (Stated Clerk) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) to the Presbyterian Historical Society Board of Directors (PHS Board). It should be understood that the PHS Board is not the corporate board of directors of the Presbyterian Historical Society, but is a board implementing that authority delegated to it by the Stated Clerk and COGA.

Context

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Part II, Book Of Order 2013–2015, (Book of Order), and the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), (Organization for Mission), are the foundational documents essential for understanding the authority of the Stated Clerk and COGA, as well as their authority to delegate powers to the Presbyterian Historical Society and the PHS Board. The powers and authority delegated by the Stated Clerk and COGA to the PHS Board are embodied in this Covenant of Understanding entered into by these three entities. Excerpts from those foundational documents are set forth below that pertain to the Stated Clerk and the authority delegated to the PHS Board.

The Book of Order, Form of Government:

CHAPTER THREE COUNCILS OF THE CHURCH

G-3.01 GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF COUNCILS

G-3.0101 Councils as an Expression of Unity of the Church

The mutual interconnection of the church through its councils is a sign of the unity of the church. Congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), while possessing all the gifts necessary to be the church, are nonetheless not sufficient in themselves to be the church. Rather, they are called to share with others both within and beyond the congregation the task of bearing witness to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in the world. This call to bear witness is the work of all believers. The particular responsibility of the councils of the church is to nurture, guide, and govern those who witness as part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to the end that such witness strengthens the whole church and gives glory to God.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is governed by councils composed of presbyters elected by the people (F-3.0202). These councils are called the session, the presbytery, the synod, and the General Assembly. All councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution. The councils are distinct, but have such mutual relations that the act of one of them is the act of the whole church. The jurisdiction of each council is limited by the express provisions of the Constitution, with the acts of each subject to review by the next higher council. Powers not mentioned in this Constitution are reserved to the presbyteries.

Councils of the church exist to help congregations and the church as a whole to be more faithful participants in the mission of Christ. …

G-3.0104 Officers

Each council shall elect a clerk who shall record the transactions of the council, keep its rolls of membership and attendance, maintain any required registers, preserve its records, and furnish extracts from them when required by another council of the church. Such extracts, verified by the clerk, shall be evidence in any council of the church. The clerk of the session shall be a ruling elder elected by the session for such term as it may determine. The clerk of a presbytery, a synod, and the General Assembly shall be called stated clerk, shall be elected by the council for a definite term as it may determine, and must be a ruling elder or teaching elder. A stated clerk may be removed from office prior to completion of his or her term of service through the use of the process outlined in G-3.0110.

G-3.0106 Administration of Mission

Councils higher than the session may provide examples of policies and procedures that may be gathered into advisory handbooks. These examples illumine practices required by the Constitution but left to councils for specific implementation. Such handbooks may also offer information that enhances or secures the ministry of the particular council.

Each council shall develop a manual of administrative operations that will specify the form and guide the work of mission in that council. …

A council may delegate aspects of its tasks to such entities as it deems appropriate, provided that those entities remain accountable to the council. …

G-3.0107 Records

Each council shall keep a full and accurate record of its proceedings. Minutes and all other official records of councils are the property in perpetuity of said councils or their legal successors. When a council ceases to exist, its records shall become the property of the next higher council within whose bounds the lower council was prior to its cessation. The clerk of each council shall make recommendation to that body for the permanent safekeeping of the body’s records with the Presbyterian Historical Society or in a temperature and humidity controlled environment of a seminary of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)…

G-3.0109 Committees and Commissions

Councils may designate by their own rule such committees and commissions as they deem necessary and helpful for the accomplishment of the mission of the church, and may create such structures jointly with other councils, in consultation with the next higher council. In appointing such committees and commissions councils shall be mindful of the principles of unity in diversity consistent with the provisions of this Constitution (F-1.0403, G-3.0103).

A committee shall study and recommend action or carry out decisions already made by a council. It shall make a full report to the council that created it, and its recommendations shall require action by that body. Committees of councils higher than the session shall consist of both teaching elders and members of congregations, with at least one half being members of congregations.

The Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (The Organization for Mission), among the many other functions assigned to the Stated Clerk, explicitly places responsibility for the Presbyterian Historical Society under the Stated Clerk and Office of the General Assembly, as follows:

The Stated Clerk is responsible for maintaining the archives and records management facilities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), for the supervision of an agency for the preservation of the history of American Presbyterianism and for the promotion of the study of Presbyterian history. The Stated Clerk shall assure the implementation of a records management program. (Section B (2)(m))

Records and History in the Office of the General Assembly shall be under the direction of a person appointed by the Stated Clerk. The general administration of the Presbyterian Historical Society and Records and History shall be carried out from Philadelphia, which will be the location of the office of the Associate for Records and History. (Section B(3)(c) [Emphasis added.]

The following will be related to the Office of the General Assembly for staffing and budgeting purposes: Permanent Judicial Commission; Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Historical Society; Committee on Representation; Advisory Committee on the Constitution; Advisory Committee on Litigation; General Assembly Nominating Committee; Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates, and commissions and special committees of the General Assembly (see Standing Rule K.1) (Section B(3)(c)) [Emphasis added.]

The Organization for Mission also provides:

The Stated Clerk is the chief executive officer of the Office of the General Assembly.

The Stated Clerk shall have available personnel to assist in performing the assigned functions. (Section B (2)(i)) [Emphasis added.]

The Stated Clerk shall submit to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, for its actions and recommendation to the General Assembly, a proposed budget. This budget shall provide for the funding of the session of the General Assembly, the Office of the General Assembly and all bodies related to it, the funding of the participation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in ecumenical bodies, and other expenses deemed necessary. (Section B (2)(ii)) [Emphasis added.]

The action of the 216th General Assembly (2004) established a board of directors as a part of the governance structure of the Presbyterian Historical Society, stating its mission as follows:

The Board exists to assure that the mission of the PHS—to collect, preserve, and share our history—is achieved in the most effective and efficient manner, in support of the mission of the PC(USA), and in faithfulness to God’s call.

We do this as committed stewards, anticipating changing environments, By:

1) Setting strategic directions and measuring effectiveness and outcomes;
2) Providing oversight and accountability to the church at large;
3) Ensuring financial stability;
4) Advocating, promoting, and serving internal and external stakeholders, now and in the future. This is the description of the responsibilities of the PHS Board of Directors under the Committees of the General Assembly section of the current Organization for Mission (Section IV (C.7))

The Understandings

This Covenant of Understanding is by and between the following: the Stated Clerk, COGA, and the PHS Board. The following enumerated duties of the PHS Board shall be carried out on behalf of the Stated Clerk and COGA:

1) Strategic Direction of PHS. The executive director and senior staff of PHS, working under the oversight and direction of the PHS Board, shall be responsible for developing a strategic plan for the direction and future of PHS, updating such plan as changing conditions may warrant. Because of the new economic realities caused by the impact of declining per capita funding for PHS operations, the Parties recognize that increased efforts for funds development for PHS, including an increased level of direct contact with mid councils, individual Presbyterian congregations, and members, must be an important part of any strategic plan to enable PHS to continue fulfilling its mission of collecting, preserving, and sharing the history of American Presbyterianism. All strategic plans shall be communicated by the PHS Board to the Stated Clerk and COGA for review and approval.
(2) Annual Assessment of Outcomes. The PHS Board, in conjunction with the PHS staff, shall annually measure and assess the outcomes and effectiveness of PHS in fulfilling its strategic plan in carrying out its mission to collect, preserve, and share the story of the American Presbyterian experience with Presbyterians, congregations, and mid councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the scholarly community, and the general public. By March 31st of each year, the PHS Board will provide a report based on the findings of this assessment to the Stated Clerk and COGA.

(3) PHS Funds Development. The PHS Board shall provide oversight and strategic direction to funds development activities of PHS. In addition, each member of the PHS Board shall be expected, to the extent of their ability, to participate in and support the funds development activities of PHS, including making personal financial contributions to support the annual operating and capital needs of PHS.

(4) PHS Programs. Consistent with its strategic plan, PHS will develop programs that connect PHS directly with congregations, mid councils, and members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and provide materials that will inform congregations of the history of American Presbyterianism and the services available from PHS to serve their needs.

(5) OGA Policies. The PHS Board shall adhere to all operating, ethics, and personnel policies of the Office of the General Assembly.

(6) PHS Executive Director and Associate for Records and History.

   (i) Annual Evaluation. The PHS Board shall name representatives of the Board to participate with the Stated Clerk’s office in the annual evaluation of the PHS executive director.

   (ii) Executive Director and Other Senior Staff Level Staff Vacancies. In searches to fill any vacancy in the position of the PHS executive director, the PHS Board shall name representatives to participate with the Stated Clerk or the Stated Clerk’s designee in the search process for a new executive director. The PHS Board’s representatives will have significant input regarding those qualities that relate to the responsibilities delegated to the PHS Board in this Covenant of Understanding. In addition, the PHS Board shall be advised by the PHS executive director of vacancies in senior staff level PHS staff positions and provide input on decisions to fill those vacancies.

   (iii) Reporting Obligations of the PHS Executive Director. The PHS executive director shall report regularly to the PHS Board on those matters that relate to the areas of responsibility delegated to the PHS Board. Reporting to the PHS Board shall be in addition to the executive director’s regular reporting responsibilities to the Stated Clerk and COGA.

(7) Budgets. The PHS staff shall develop a consolidated operating budget that includes the per capita budget as it applies to PHS as a part of the regular Office of the General Assembly (OGA) budget process and the PHS designated budget. Subsequent to the development of the budget by the PHS senior staff, it shall be presented to the PHS Board for its approval. Subsequent to the PHS Board’s approval, the PHS Board shall (a) forward the Per Capita Budget to COGA for approval and submission to the General Assembly for approval; and (b) forward the Designated Budget to COGA for receipt and transmission to the General Assembly for final approval.

(8) Non-Financial PHS Assets and Collections. The PHS Board shall provide oversight for PHS’ building, property, and collections. The PHS Board and PHS senior staff shall develop a capital facilities plan that shall be approved by the Stated Clerk and COGA. The PHS Board shall report at least annually to COGA on these and other issues as required by the Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

(9) PHS Endowment and Income Funds. In cooperation with the Stated Clerk and the Presbyterian Foundation, the PHS Board shall ensure PHS compliance with the donors’ intent for all PHS endowment and income funds.

(10) Communications and Bylaws. The PHS Board shall have the authority to issue regular communications, such as press releases and written reports, and to establish bylaws for the conduct of its business.

(11) PHS Board Nominations Process. The PHS Board’s Nominations and Governance Committee shall consist of at least three members of the PHS Board, and the Executive Director shall serve in an ex officio capacity on that committee.

(12) PHS Board and COGA. COGA shall appoint a liaison to the PHS Board, who shall serve as a member of the PHS Board with voice and vote. Any term limitations upon membership on the PHS Board shall not apply to such a liaison while he or she is a member of COGA. The chair of the PHS Board shall attend at least one COGA meeting a year. As frequently as is feasible, but not less than once every two years, the entire PHS Board shall meet with COGA.

(13) Number of PHS Board Members. The PHS Board shall consist of not less than eight (8) and not more than twenty-four (24) persons.

(14) Covenant of Understanding Review. This document may be reviewed and amended from time to time by the Parties but reviewed not less than every three years.

USING THE FOLLOWING ASSUMPTIONS:

- Projected Rev and Exp for 2013 & 2014
- Number of members for 2012-2014 is as follows: please note that apportionment revenue is based on the membership reported two years prior to the current year; that is 2013 apportionment revenue is based on membership reported at end of 2011:

  - (2012): 2,004,192
  - (2013): 1,921,240
  - (2014): 1,849,496

For 2015 & 2016 projected membership reduction of 100,000 each year.

OPPORTUNITIES:

- Manage expenditures to be less than budgeted
- Planned use of reserves after holding 30% of Budget

RISKS

- Actual membership declines more than projected
- Actual expenditures exceed budgeted expenses
- Church and economic related issues impacting Revenue & Investment values
- General Assembly financial implications increases expenditure
- The level of available funds from reserves (after the 30% provision) declining

Item 04-01

[The assembly approved Item 04-01. See pp. 58, 60.]

On Reviewing General Assembly Policy Regarding the Two-State Solution in Israel Palestine—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Instruct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to do the following:

a. Provide a comprehensive history of the establishment of General Assembly policies favoring a two-state solution in Israel Palestine.

b. Prepare a report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016), utilizing the report of the Middle East Study Committee approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010)—Breaking Down the Walls (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 1021ff); the subsequent follow-up report by the Middle East Monitoring Group to the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 1413ff); and relevant and recent reports by the United Nations General Assembly Human Rights Council, the World Council of Churches, other corresponding ecumenical partners, and reliable human rights organizations that achieves the following:

(1) Provides the most up-to-date information regarding all aspects of the Israeli occupation of Palestine including

(a) the present status and pace of illegal settlement building;

(b) the appropriation of Palestinian land and natural resources;

(c) the restriction of movement on Palestinian citizens in Palestine;

(d) the extent to which human rights are denied to the Palestinian people.

(2) Examines present General Assembly statements about the viability of a Palestinian state and honestly evaluates these statements in light of the most recent developments regarding the true facts on the ground in Palestine;

(3) Makes a recommendation about whether the General Assembly should continue to call for a two-state solution in Israel Palestine, or take a neutral stance that seeks not to determine for Israelis and Palestinians what the right “solution” should be.

(4) Makes other policy recommendations related to findings from this report.

c. Consult with responsible parties representing the concerns of both Israelis and Palestinians in preparation of this report.

d. Consult also with appropriate, official PC(USA) General Assembly entities in the preparation of this report, including staffing teams, mission networks, and national caucuses.

2. Provide a study guide for the report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) that will help inform the whole church of the situation on the ground in Palestine, pointing out the enormous difficulty of helping “in the development of a viable infrastructure for a future Palestinian state” (action taken by the 220th General Assembly-2012). This study guide should honestly point out that:

a. For every two-year period occurring between General Assembly meetings, Palestinians are suffering an increasing loss of their human rights, freedom, livelihoods, property, and even their lives;

b. Simple, financial investment in a completely occupied land where the occupiers are relentless and unwavering regarding their occupation is not enough to dismantle the matrix of that occupation or dramatically change the vast majority of communities or individual lives that are bowed and broken by systematic and intentional injustice.

[Financial Implications: Per Capita—$19,200 (2015); $5,460 (2016)]
A. Official Policy Statements on the Two-State Solution by PC(USA) General Assemblies

1. The 214th General Assembly (2002) urged “all the parties involved in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict to work toward a just sustainable peace by... an affirmation by Israel that it will work with Palestinians toward the establishment of a viable, contiguous Palestinian state with the same sovereign rights as those of the State of Israel” (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 732–33).

B. The Two-State Solution Then and Now

Palestinian loss of land 1946 to 2013

The green areas are under Palestinian Control

Map 1: Palestinian Loss of Land 1946-2013

The green area shows land under Palestinian control.
These maps clearly delineate the present status of the so-called “two-states” of Israel and Palestine. Map 1 shows the erosion of the Palestinian territory, over six decades, which was to provide for a viable state. In the panel outlining the U.N. Partition Plan in 1947, as well as the panel showing a significant loss of territory from 1949–1967, a two-state solution still appeared viable. As can be seen in the panel showing the present state of Palestine since 2005, it is hard to look at this portion of the map and think that a two-state solution can ever be achieved. It is important to remember that all the white space in what once was a contiguous West Bank (named because it is west of the Jordan River) represents land now controlled by the Israel in March 2013 points out where the numerous illegal Israeli settlements presently exist. The settlements are called “illegal” for the simple reason that international law clearly prohibits occupying nations from creating permanent settlements on the land they occupy for the purpose of transferring their population to occupied regions. Bear in mind that for each black dot on the map, there is a system of walls, fences and checkpoints separating the settlements from Palestinian populations. In order to accommodate this, large sections of Palestinian land have been confiscated to provide what the Israeli government considers to be an adequate buffer zone between its citizens and Palestinians. In addition, from the Palestinian land that has been confiscated for this purpose, Israel draws out the natural resources necessary to support the settlements. This includes sources of Palestinian water, greatly reducing the water supply of Palestinians in the areas where they are still permitted to live.

At the present time, Israeli settlement expansion continues at a fast pace and in five to ten years there will be more black dots on the map than there are today. In light of these facts on the ground, it seems unrealistic, and perhaps even naïve, for the PC(USA) to maintain a policy of calling for a two-state solution when no real possibility of that seems to exist. The commissioning of this report is intended to provide the church with precise and accurate information to help it shape its policy on this conflict for the future. It is important to note that this is not a call for creating policy to support a different kind of solution (one-state, for instance). Rather, it is an effort to examine how our church can continue to be relevant in the discussion about the situation as it presently stands. This first requires an honest appraisal of the rapidly changing facts on the ground and whether past policies adequately address those facts.

C. Recent Developments

The 220th General Assembly (2012) called upon the General Assembly Mission Council to “create a process to raise funds to invest in the West Bank” to be inaugurated at this 221st General Assembly (2014) (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1400). The purpose of this is to fund “active investment in projects that will support collaboration among Christians, Jews, and Muslims and help in the development of a viable infrastructure for a future Palestinian state” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1396).

As virtuous as this statement sounds, its fundamental flaw comes in the fact that no one knows what a “viable infrastructure for a future Palestinian state” looks like, nor how to achieve that even though our church has been calling for this since 1967. The reason for this is simply because every policy and every action taken by the Israeli government in regard to Palestine is dedicated towards the non-existence of a viable infrastructure in the Occupied West Bank. There can be no denial, in accordance with the approval of the Middle East Study Committee report by the 219th General Assembly (2010) that the facts on the ground in present-day Palestine point toward the destruction of everything required to ensure that a viable Palestinian state can ever exist. In that sense, the Middle East Study Committee report, known as Breaking Down the Walls, as well as the study guide of the Kairos Palestine Document developed by the Middle East Monitoring Group (2012), are clear warnings that the viability of a sovereign Palestinian state, if not impossible already, is in extreme danger.

In March 2013, the Israeli newspaper, Ha’aretz, quoted Dr. Mustafa Barghouti, head of the Palestinian National Initiative movement: “The passivity of international diplomacy and that of the Americans in particular is especially dangerous and unacceptable in the face of the establishment of an even more extremist, settlement-expanding Israeli government than its predecessor. This Obama policy speeds up the end of the two-state solution.” The article points out: “At the beginning of his presidency Obama raised expectation when he called for a halt to construction in the settlements, but he quickly abandoned this demand and now only expects that the Palestinians renew the barren negotiations that have gone on for 20 years. All that Israel expects from the Palestinians in the negotiations is to agree to self-rule in Bantustans—something no Palestinian or none of their leaders will accept.”

With this said, and in light of the fact the 220th General Assembly (2012) voted to put a plan for investment in Palestine in place, we call upon the General Assembly to not receive the General Assembly Mission Council plan for investment without seriously considering what is truly required to bring Christians, Jews, and Muslims together in a way that would actually create a viable infrastructure in a land where the policies of the occupier are dedicated towards not only preventing that, but destroying what little infrastructure presently exists. Accepting such an investment plan at this General Assembly must be coupled with an action that takes seriously the present condition of the Palestinian state, honestly asks hard questions about standing General Assembly policy regarding the two-state solution, and fully informs all Presbyterians (as well as our ecumenical partners) about these conditions and facts. The purpose of this overture is to not derail recommendations asked for by the 220th General Assembly (2012), but to simply point out that this is not enough. We need to completely understand all the conditions under which we are investing Presbyterian funds, and consequently, the barriers to overall success from the standpoint of human justice.

It is our contention that the best entity to study this issue, from our historical positions up through our contemporary concerns, is the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, which understands the full breadth and depth of this issue as well as General Assembly policy statements as they have been discussed and debated in our denomination throughout the decades.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this overture be approved as amended below: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The [Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the] 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [to]:

“[A. With regard to the ‘peace process’ between Israel and Palestine,

“[1. respectfully urges the president of the United States, with congressional approval as necessary, to request that the Security Council of the United Nations take responsibility for any further peace negotiations between the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (or other appropriately representative body); to recommend that the Security Council designate an envoy to lead future negotiations and to determine and report publicly on obstacles to the implementation of Resolution 242 and subsequent agreements and accords; and to recommend measures to end the occupation of all territories ruled by Israel since 1967, to ensure equal citizenship rights for all inhabitants under Israeli control, and to ensure that Jerusalem is a shared capitul where historic sites and free exercise of all three historic monotheistic faiths are protected; all based on previous internationally agreed upon terms of reference (including UN Resolution 338 following the 1973 war, and respecting the 1967 borders, E. Jerusalem, rights of refugees, security, and other final status issues);

“[2. approves in principle the position that no U.S. military, security, or intelligence aid, assistance, or cooperation be given to any government that practices or permits systematic religious, racial, or ethnic discrimination;

This study guide should [consider whether] [honestly point out that]:

“b. [Direct] [Simple] financial investment in a completely occupied land where the occupiers are relentless and unwavering regarding their occupation is not enough to dismantle the matrix of that occupation or dramatically change the vast majority of communities or individual lives that are bowed and broken by systematic and intentional injustice.”

The presbyteries sponsoring this overture are correct in identifying the plausibility of a “two-state solution” as the basic question facing any peace process. Further, they correctly cite Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) policy and outline the components of a study of the material feasibility of a two-state solution. The maps provided are generally accurate approximations of a process by which land has been annexed, encircled by the Separation Wall, classified as public land and given to settlements, or, as in Area C, declared off-bounds to Palestinians for security reasons. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy comments on the very real economic obstacles to Palestinian self-determination in its Advice & Counsel memorandum on Item 04-06, Occupation-Free Investment, and the resolution proposed as Item 04-09.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy believes that the study proposed could be carried out by a small team of persons at reasonable cost, building on the extensive policy developed in 2010, and that this would be a reasonable and customary expenditure of per capita funds that General Assemblies normally allocate for studies and public witness.

The purpose of such a focused study would be enhanced, in the committee’s view, by greater attention to the diplomatic dynamics that would themselves be improved by the second section suggested. The recommendation for a change in framework for negotiations is strongly in line with the church’s support for a two-state solution. It recognizes that any internationally recognized solution would in large part be a political decision or direction, not simply a matter of facts on the ground. Commissioners may wish to separate the committee’s recommendation, but it would not affect the need for a study nor the need for nonviolent economic witness as the end of the recent peace process demonstrates.

The depth to which Israeli identity and worldwide support are anchored in the concept of a homeland for Jewish people, and the tensions between religious preferences and democratic values of all parties, require careful understanding as there are several entwined narratives within the larger picture of Israeli power and Palestinian dispossession.

There are also significant differences among Palestinian positions vis-à-vis civic and religious freedom, alongside de jure and de facto recognition of Israel’s presence on 78 percent of Palestinian territory prior to 1948. The basic acceptance of Israel’s claim to land within the 1949 armistice lines—the basis of the 1967 Green Line—was made by the Palestine National Congress in 1988; all subsequent negotiations simply focus on how the remaining 22 percent will be apportioned. Some official refusals to recognize Israel by Palestinian groups relate to their concern that Israel has never declared its borders, while some Israeli parties in the governing coalition deny any rights of Palestinians to a state.

Thus the obstacles to a two-state solution reflect both the physical “facts on the ground” identified in the overture, and the diplomatic imbalance of relying on Israel’s primary ally also to function as mediator. In light of the collapse of the second set of peace talks in five years (the George Mitchell process, then John Kerry’s effort), and the failure of the Oslo Accords to halt the continuing growth of settlements (more than 550,000 settlers over the Green Line since 1995, in addition to approximately 50,000 prior to those agreements), the argument for a more objective international process seems strong. Despite weaknesses in some UN peacemaking efforts, where there is international consensus there have been successes (Libya, Syria’s chemical weapons, many regional cease-fires and international treaties). There may be other international methods better than the Security Council envoy proposed, but the fact is that maintaining U.S. custodianship of the process recalls the saying about trying the same thing again and again and expecting different results. Not likely.

Shifting the key venue of negotiation to the highest level of the United Nations would allow the international consensus in favor of freedom for the Palestinians (as seen in the vote for Palestine’s status as a non-member observer state) to help create a fairer balance in negotiation between the vastly unequal parties of Israel and Palestine. By going to the Security Council (rather than the Human Rights Council or the “Quartet” with its monitoring and marketing role), the United States would retain its role (and veto) but would share more broadly the moral responsibility for the on-going denial of human rights in occupied Palestine. A UN process would also necessarily involve the application of international law as a common standard for Palestinian and Israeli actions.
A summary of three standard positions on negotiations over peace in the Middle East may be taken from a review by Philip Wilcox of books by Jimmy Carter, Benny Morris, and Daniel C. Kurtzer and Scott B. Lasensky in 2009, as the first Obama administration effort began (Wilcox, Philip C., Jr. “Brokering Mideast Peace,” The Christian Century, July 28, 2009, pp. 31–33). Wilcox, a former ambassador to the region, contrasts Carter’s relative optimism (in We Can Have Peace in the Holy Land), Morris’ pessimism (in One State, Two States: Resolving the Israel/Palestine Conflict), and the realism of another ambassador and U.S. Institute for Peace Fellow on the need to focus on U.S. strategic interests and stop serving as “Israel’s lawyer,” in Aaron David Miller’s phrase. Carter argued that Hamas had shown it could cooperate, that the U.S. should work with the 2002 Arab League Peace Initiative (which offered normalization across the region if the occupation ended) and that a multinational peace force could be offered to allay Israeli security concerns. Morris, an Israeli “new historian” who had debunked many myths about the creation of Palestinian refugees in the 1940s, had come to fear and distrust Palestinians generally, based partly on blaming Yassir Arafat for Camp David’s failure. He favored giving the West Bank to Jordan and Gaza to Egypt, neither of which is desired by the would-be recipient countries, which already have many Palestinians. The third book, Negotiating Arab-Israeli Peace: American Leadership in the Middle East, argued that “Washington must be tougher by insisting on the parties’ accountability to their previous commitments and by penalizing violations....” This has not happened, and seems increasingly unlikely given the role of special interest money in U.S. politics.

Rather than seeing mutual accountability, in fact, during the recent nine month “peace talks” sponsored by the United States, the Israeli government announced more than 14,000 new housing units in the settlements, often timing the announcements to undercut visits of U.S. government officials. Secretary of State John Kerry has testified that Israel’s refusal to curtail settlements and finally to release a fourth group of only twenty-five Palestinian prisoners led to a “poof” that ended the process—and that process had become one of simply trying to find a framework for continuing to talk. There were no significant achievements during the 9 months, and in fact a growing number of “price tag” desecrations of Christian and Muslim sites, increased number of shootings of nonviolent Palestinian protesters and farmers trying to harvest alongside “security zones,” and numbers of Palestinians denied identity cards in Jerusalem. The growth of settlements, however, seems the clearest marker of a systematic disregard for the feasibility of a Palestinian state.

The actual complexity of negotiations may thus be overstated, as Mahmoud Abbas signaled Palestinian willingness to allow Israeli security forces in the Jordan valley in a non-militarized Palestinian State. While the division among Palestinians in Gaza and the West Bank and East Jerusalem was criticized, a plan for rejoining governance of the two enclaves has been equally criticized by the current Israeli government. Prime Minister Netanyahu used Palestinian unity as a reason to blame Palestinians for the latest failed peace process. It may thus be helpful to remember Prime Minister Netanyahu’s response to the Oslo process. To quote from Wikipedia, noting its own citations:

“In a 2001 video, Netanyahu, reportedly unaware he was being recorded, said: “They asked me before the election if I’d honor [the Oslo accords]... I said I would, but [that] I’m going to interpret the accords in such a way that would allow me to put an end to this galloping forward to the ’67 borders. How did we do it? Nobody said what defined military zones were. Defined military zones are security zones; as far as I’m concerned, the entire Jordan Valley is a defined military zone. Go argue.”[10] Netanyahu then explained how he conditioned his signing of the 1997 Hebron agreement on American consent that there be no withdrawals from “specified military locations”, and insisted he be allowed to specify which areas constituted a “military location”—such as the whole of the Jordan Valley. “Why is that important? Because from that moment on I stopped the Oslo Accords”, Netanyahu affirmed.”[11]http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Declaration_of_Principles Commissioners may wish to approve this overture with or without the proposed amendments, or to decline the call to study this matter, or to ask that the study be done on another basis. In general, it has been the position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that policy recommendations be made by people elected to committees commissioned for that purpose. Either the small expert task force recommended, or a purely staff or consultant arrangement, would both be guided by prior General Assembly policy, consult with church partners, and report through the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, which consists of Presbyterians elected to develop ways to respond to and nurture the conscience of the church.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-01

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 04-01.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns recommends approval of this item because we are in need of a comprehensive report that recap our church’s positions over the decades vis-à-vis Israel and Palestine, and helps Presbyterians understand the historical basis for the current scene and facts on the ground. Additionally, it is vitally important for the church to review its decades-old policy on the two-state solution, which has not been informed by the most recent developments in the region and the latest rounds of peace negotiations.
The ACREC believes the right to self-determination is a fundamental right and in today’s post-colonial era, it is paternalistic and even patronizing for one nation or people to tell another nation or people what kind of government or state is right for them.

The ACREC believes that after decades of the PC(USA) supporting a “two-state solution,” it is time for us to leave that decision to the people who live in the region and have to handle the day-to-day obstacles. Both Israelis and Palestinians are very capable of determining what type of state and government they desire. Even with our long history of partnership in the region, for an American denomination in another hemisphere to profess that a particular type of “solution” is ideal harkens back to a colonial mindset and era.

The ACREC strongly believes that, yes, Presbyterians do need to know the facts on the ground and question the occupation of Palestine, now nearing fifty years, but ACREC also believes we should not support one type of solution over another. The Israelis and Palestinians should determine what type of solution is right for them, not us.

The ACREC strongly urges the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve this overture.

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Women have long been invested in peacemaking initiatives and cooperative and collaborative leadership. The ACWC stands in solidarity with international women’s ecumenical and interfaith groups advocating for women’s voices to be heard regarding ongoing conflicts in Israel-Palestine and against war and militarism. In addition, ACWC is aware that the current debate among Presbyterians over the best way to speak to the oppression of Palestinians is highly polarized, even among advocates for justice. In light of this fact, ACWC recommends that the committee leadership be asked to use the 1992 statement, “Seeking to Be Faithful Together: Guidelines for Presbyterians During Times of Disagreement,” as a guide for their discussions. (The statement can be accessed by following this link: https://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/peacemaking/pdf/guidelines.pdf.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-01

Comment on Item 04-01—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly requests that commissioners and advisory delegates carefully consider any items of business that would raise the per capita rate. The COGA made a commitment to bring no increase to the per capita rate to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by making significant reductions in the per capita budgets, which included reductions in staff. We would ask that other means be found within existing committee structures to accomplish the same task.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-01

Comment on Item 04-01—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

PC(USA) mission partners in the Middle East agree that the current “facts on the ground” and the slim chance of success for the current peace process render a two-state solution unattainable at the current time. It is their view that the long-standing PC(USA) policy, reaffirmed as recently as 2010, supporting a two-state solution is unrealistic in light of the continued expansion and intractability of Israeli settlements and the obstinacy of the Israeli military occupation of Palestine.

Item 04-02

[The assembly answered Item 04-02 by the action taken on Item 04-04. See p. 60.]

On Divestment from Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

In service to God’s love and justice for all of the people of Palestine and Israel, and in accord with international law concerning self-determination and human rights, the Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:
1. Instruct the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to disinvest from Caterpillar, Inc., Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions, in accord with our church’s decades-long socially responsible investment (SRI) history, and not to reinvest in these companies until the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee of the PC(USA) is fully satisfied that product sales and services by these companies are no longer complicit in
   a. the building and security of illegal Israeli settlements, which U.S. foreign policy, and most recent U.N. fact-finding mission determine to be an obstacle to peace;
   b. the construction and maintenance of walls and fences that illegally encroach upon Palestinian lands, destroying Palestinian rights to own property and pursue livelihoods;
   c. the management of checkpoints that dehumanize Palestinians and cut off innocent civilians from their property and natural resources;
   d. contributing to and profiting from the relentless, five decade long, military occupation of the Palestinian territories.

2. Affirm that this action underlines the worsening situation in Palestine, calling attention to
   a. the occupation of Palestine, which destroys lives and entire cultures, and for the sake of justice between Jews, Christians, and Muslims, that it needs to end;
   b. the violation of Palestinian human rights; through home demolitions, constricting movement for work, school, personal needs, business, essential (and emergency) medical care; and the illegal mass political imprisonment of Palestinians;
   c. the disproportionate impact on the Christian minority due to restrictions on family unification, housing, the isolation of Bethlehem and other conditions of occupation;
   d. the failure to attract investors to Palestinian businesses choked by the occupation matrix, the blockade of Gaza, and restrictions on the West Bank economy, which adds more than 20 percent to business costs in Palestine.

3. Recognize that while the 220th General Assembly (2012) called upon the church to pursue only nonviolent investment in Palestine and Israel, we still profit from companies engaged in violent pursuits in Palestine, by providing equipment and materiel supporting illegal occupation, contrary to our church position.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk to:
   a. Communicate this action to all other PC(USA) councils and entities, and invite and strongly encourage those groups and organizations that hold assets in Caterpillar, Inc., Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions to disinvest as well.
   b. Inform our ecumenical partners of this action, nationally and globally—particularly within Israel and Palestine—encouraging them to hear this witness and to also consider applying socially responsible, human rights criteria to other companies in their portfolios that are complicit in the occupation of Palestine.

5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to monitor developments in international law and related to the occupation, to continue to advocate conditioning foreign aid for Israel to compliance with human rights law, and to support all measures designed to provide for viable statehood and a shared Jerusalem, including protection for Christian and Muslim as well as Jewish holy places.

Rationale

This rationale is in four parts:

I. Activity of the 220th General Assembly (2012) with highlights of the report of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) concerning its decades-long corporate engagement with companies profiting from non-peaceful pursuits in Israel/Palestine.

III. Key maps showing current conditions in Palestine, as well as the conditions that led up to this point.

IV. Concluding statement of our responsibility as a church that proclaims the Lordship of Jesus Christ.

I. Activity of the 220th General Assembly (2012)

The 220th General Assembly (2012) (GA) was the first time the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) had brought a recommendation to disinvest from companies—Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions—engaged in Israel’s occupation of Palestine and non-peaceful pursuits in Palestine, and the first time a GA standing committee ever recommended such action to the plenary. The recommendation to disinvest, approved by the Assembly Committee on Middle East and Peacemaking Issues (#15), was sent to the plenary floor by a 36-11-1 margin. Assembly Committee 15 had listened to hours of hearings and debate, and had at its disposal maps, resources, and experts to sufficiently discuss Israel’s occupation of Palestine, as well as our investment history in the three companies engaged in non-peaceful pursuits in the Holy Land. The morning of plenary debate, the Rabbi bringing interfaith greetings after being asked not to do so, said disinvestment may irreparably fracture relations with the Jewish community and implored voting against Assembly Committee 15’s recommendation http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GZpRQBHQoB8. Commissioners lodged complaints with the denominational leadership. The 220th General Assembly (2012) vote for disinvestment failed by a two vote margin (333-331) in favor of a minority report (369-290-8), which instead called for positive investment.

Later the 220th General Assembly (2012) voted overwhelmingly (457-180-3), calling for a boycott of all products coming from illegal Israeli settlements in the West Bank. The arguments in support of this action in both Assembly Committee 15 and on the plenary floor, were in essence, the same arguments in support of disinvestment delineating how occupation and the nonstop expansion of settlements were destroying Palestinian life and culture. In both cases, Assembly Committee 15 understood the logic and consistency of those arguments, voting for both disinvestment and boycott. Though that same dynamic occurred on the plenary floor, the General Assembly chose to support boycott and vote against disinvestment.

Further confusing the issue, the plenary later voted to provide teaching elders and church workers participating in the programs of the Board of Pensions a “relief of conscience” clause so that at their request their pension funds would not be invested in these companies. The plenary voted to do this even after an official from the Board of Pensions said it could not be done, and the Moderator of the General Assembly responded by saying that with God all things are possible. Following a break the Moderator returned to the podium to announce that he was ruling the action out of order. This further indicates that the plenary, after hearing of the truth of illegal Israeli occupation of Palestine, did everything short of disinvestment to send a clear signal that non-peaceful activities by companies supporting occupation cannot be tolerated.

Since the 220th General Assembly (2012), nothing constructive regarding corporate practices in Palestine has occurred on the part of Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, or Motorola Solutions. Also, there has been no sign that Presbyterians employed by them have sought to bring change from within so that the business practices of their employers are consistent with the clear moral investment strategies of their church.

To review the entire Mission Responsibility Through Investment record of corporate engagement with these companies, commissioners are strongly urged to read its report to the 220th General Assembly (2012), which can be located at http://www.pc-biz.org/IOBView.aspx?m=ro&id=4021.

Here are highlights of that report:

A. Caterpillar

An article in Haaretz, an Israeli newspaper, dated March 11, 2009, reported on the close relationship between Caterpillar’s Israeli dealership and the Israeli military. This includes selling the Caterpillar D-9 bulldozers to the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) who has them weaponized by an Israeli company. The article notes that the IDF has used these bulldozers from the mid 1980s, and has hundreds of them in its arsenal. After that, the Caterpillar dealer provides maintenance work. The dealership’s mechanics provided maintenance in the recent Gaza war (these dealership employees maintained and serviced Caterpillar equipment near the battlefield during the Gaza War of January 2009, when more than 1,300 civilians were killed and the entire civilian infrastructure of the territory was destroyed) and the Second Lebanon War. The dealership noted publicly its close working relations with the IDF, according to an article dated March 17, 2009, the IDF also “is planning to draft civilian bulldozer-maintenance personnel for reserve duty, marking the first time the army will be conscripting the staff of a private firm in wartime.” This would permit the IDF to use Caterpillar dealership employees on the battlefield in future operations.

The dialogue clarified several issues, but did not produce any progress. Company officials made it clear that the company took no responsibility for the use of its products even by its dealers (the only party considered to be a customer), had no procedure in place for monitoring or ensuring compliance with Caterpillar’s stated expectations even in a situation with a documented historic pattern of the equipment being used in human rights violations, and no desire to develop such a procedure. Further, they indicated that Caterpillar, although a global company doing business in virtually every country except where prohibited by U.S. law, had no capacity to evaluate whether particular actions are in accord with human rights conventions or international humanitarian law. Finally, Caterpillar did not provide information on whether its dealership was selling equipment to major construction companies building the illegal settlements, the separation barrier, or the Jewish Israeli-only roads in the occupied territories as requested.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) action called for continued engagement within the context of the following clear and public policy denouncing the company from profiting from involvement in serious human rights violations and obstacles to a just peace in Israel and Palestine: “… the [General Assembly] strongly denounces Caterpillar’s continued profit-making from non-peaceful uses of a number of its products. We call upon Caterpillar to carefully review its involvement in obstacles to a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine, and to take affirmative steps to end its complicity in the violation of human rights. We hope that, by God’s grace, Caterpillar will come to exercise its considerable power and influence in the service of a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 363 of the printed version, p. 986 of the electronic version).

While the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010) denouncing the company’s continued profiting from its involvement in human rights violations was designed in large measure to convince Caterpillar that the church was serious about the gravity of this complicity, the company remained unresponsive. On April 19, 2011, MRTI sent its own letter to new CEO Douglas Oberhelmer, expressing hope for a new spirit of conversation around these issues and requesting dialogue (see Appendix 2 in game-mrti-recommendations-appendix1.pdf under “Additional Resources”, see p. 311, electronic copy). There was no response. On July 26, 2011, the United Methodist Board of Church and Society retransmitted the 2010 letter (see above) from eight religious shareholders to the new CEO requesting a meeting to discuss the issues described in the correspondence. Again, there was no response.

B. Motorola Solutions

The dialogue on June 18, 2007, focused on human rights standards and conventions, and explored the company’s involvement in the occupation through sales of military communications products, fuses for bombs, security technology for Jewish Israeli settlements on the West Bank, and operating a cell phone business in the West Bank. Motorola denied that any of its activities implicate it in the Israeli occupation, or raise human rights concerns. A shareholder resolution addressing broader human rights issues was filed by several religious shareholders in the fall of 2007. In response, Motorola requested a follow-up meeting, which occurred on January 7, 2008. The company indicated its intent to review and amend its policies but would not specify the particular changes under consideration and made clear that its human rights policies would not be applied to their business relationships with foreign governments. This lack of clarity and limited scope led the religious investors, including MRTI representatives, to decline to withdraw their resolution, which went to a vote at the annual shareholders meeting on May 5, 2008. It received more than 12 percent of the shareholder vote, enough to be resubmitted in 2009. Although the conversation with Motorola has been less productive than hoped, religious shareholders agree that more in-depth dialogue on corporate social responsibility and human rights might potentially create a more productive arena for analyzing the Israel-Palestine conflict and other world situations and ought to be continued.

A shareholder resolution similar to the one from 2008 was filed with Motorola requesting that the company amend its human rights policies “to conform more fully with international human rights and humanitarian standards…” The resolution was co-filed by the General Board of Pensions and Health Benefits of the United Methodist Church, Mercy Investment Program, and the Episcopal Church. The company did not respond to a request in the filing letter for a meeting to discuss the resolution. When the filers tried to set one up following the annual meeting, the company declined, but offered to answer written questions. The stockholder meeting was held on May 4, 2009. Speaking in support of the resolution, which received 9.7 percent of the vote, were representatives of the United Methodist Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Following the 2009 annual meeting, religious shareholders requested another dialogue, but on June 12, an e-mail from Motorola’s legal department refused to meet in person saying the company would only answer questions in writing. Questions were submitted, but answers did not adequately respond to the concerns expressed. In an email of January 13, 2010, the company also declined to facilitate a meeting with Motorola Israel during the February 2010 visit of religious shareholders to Israel and Palestine. The 2010 shareholders meeting was held on May 3 where the human rights resolution was voted on again. It received a vote of 11.8 percent. Motorola also announced that it would be splitting into two new companies by the end of 2010: Motorola Solutions and Motorola Mobility.

Meanwhile, the involvement of Motorola in the Occupation lessened in some important ways. The sale of armaments work by Motorola Israel meant that it no longer made bomb fuses for the Israeli military. Motorola also announced its intention to sell its Israeli cell phone company, and has sought bids from potential buyers. The company supplied cell phones to the Israeli soldiers operating in the Occupied Territories, and built cell towers in the illegal settlements. However, the company maintained its stance of no face-to-face dialogues, but would answer some written questions.

On November 4, 2010, in the filing of the shareholder resolution on human rights for the 2011 annual meeting, MRTI expressed its hope that the company would respond positively through constructive dialogue. The company did not respond. The corporate restructure was completed on schedule. The shareholder resolution was voted on at the annual meeting of Motorola Solutions on May 2, 2011. However, this time it received a lower vote total (5.4 percent), and could not be resubmitted for 2012. At the meeting, the CEO of Motorola Solutions announced that the company would be concentrating on the Middle East for its integrated communications products. Following the meeting, MRTI sought to determine how the restructuring had affected the company’s business in Israel-Palestine. Motorola Mobility confirmed that the Israeli cell phone company had been sold to a French company, and that its business was now limited to marketing cell phones in civilian markets. It also confirmed that the business lines with the Israeli government remained with Motorola Solutions. Motorola Solutions did not respond to MRTI’s information request of July 11, 2011.

C. Hewlett-Packard

The company sells hardware to the Israeli Navy, and as a contractor manages all Information Technology (IT) including its operational communications, logistics, and planning including the ongoing naval blockade of the Gaza Strip. This blockade has included interdicting humanitarian supplies by attacking or turning back international vessels carrying the supplies, and attacks on Palestinian fishermen.

The company also is involved through its ownership of Electronic Data Systems in providing electronic biometric identification scanning equipment to monitor only Palestinians at several checkpoints inside the West Bank, including as part of the separate road system, restricting Palestinian movement. At these checkpoints, the 2.4 million West Bank Palestinians are required to submit to lengthy waits as well as the mandatory biometric scanning, while Israelis and other passport holders transit without scanning or comparable delays.

Hewlett-Packard also has extensive involvement with the Israeli Army. Soldiers in the IDF are issued a Tadiran Communications ruggedized personal digital assistant (RPDA) based on the Hewlett-Packard IPAQ (handhelds and smart phones) as part of Israel’s Anog soldier modernization program. This equipment is used to enforce the Occupation. In July 2009, Hewlett-Packard won a contract for the installation of software products in a three-year IDF virtualization tender worth an estimated $15 million, with a two-year option to extend.

Hewlett-Packard also has business relationships with the illegal settlements in the West Bank. A subsidiary, HP Invent, outsources information technology services to Matrix and to its subsidiary Talpiot, which has its main outsourcing center in the illegal West Bank settlement of Modi’in Illit. By using Talpiot’s services, clients of the company are profiting from the company’s relationship with an illegal settlement and are helping solidify the occupation.

In addition, Hewlett-Packard worked with the government of the illegal settlement of Ariel in the occupied West Bank to develop specialized solutions for government data storage, and used this project in marketing publicity. Despite the fact that Ariel is deep in the Occupied West Bank, the company’s published description of this work claims that Ariel is within Israel, including the use of a map making no reference to the West Bank as a separate occupied territory.

In addition, as with Motorola Israel, its Israeli subsidiary does not disclose its equal employment opportunity record of its hiring practices.

A shareholder resolution was developed requesting a review of Hewlett-Packard’s human rights policies, and a report on their implementation. It was filed by the PC(USA), United Methodist General Board of Pensions and Benefits, and four Roman Catholic religious orders. The filing letters requested an opportunity for dialogue, and prompted a positive response by the company. On October 28, 2009, several religious participants met with company officials by conference call. The discussion reviewed Hewlett-Packard’s policies and procedures, and identified issues of concern for further discussion. Participants were grateful for the positive atmosphere, and willingness to cooperate. As the company agreed to initiate a board of directors level review of its human rights policy, and committed to positive follow-up to the issues identified in the dialogue, the shareholders decided to withdraw the resolution.

However, the follow-up was spotty in some areas, and nonexistent in others. One positive aspect of the engagement though was meeting with a representative of HP Israel in Jerusalem in February 2010. The discussion was informative about the extent and variety of Hewlett-Packard’s businesses. Requested information on the company’s employment practices and how the human rights policy influences the company’s business with governments was not provided.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) directed MRTI to continue its efforts to engage Hewlett-Packard on these issues. Although efforts began to schedule dialogue with company management in November 2010, the company repeatedly deferred and postponed this meeting. Attempts to schedule conference calls met with delays, but one was finally held on April 19, 2011. Unfortunately, it was not a productive dialogue. While the religious shareholders had communicated clearly their desire for an in-depth discussion of the biometric scanners at the checkpoints, Hewlett-Packard’s representatives, including its person in charge of implementing its human rights policy, said that they were not knowledgeable on the issue and could not discuss it. They also did not offer to set up a subsequent call with Hewlett-Packard representatives who could. In addition, they announced that the human rights assessment they were conducting (which would include Israel-Palestine) would concentrate on systems evaluation, and any specifics would not be included in Hewlett-Packard’s public reporting. Indeed, Hewlett-Packard’s public report contained no reference to its business operations in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

Hewlett-Packard produced a Global Citizenship Report for 2010, its most recent one. It states in its Global Issues section: “At HP, we believe technology is a driver of social progress, environmental sustainability and economic opportunity. We’re committed to helping individuals everywhere use technology to connect and create a better world.” The company reviews its involvement in the United Nations Global Compact, and its support for the Universal Declaration on Human Rights. It notes that it is one of eight founding members of the Global Business Initiative on Human Rights (GBI). However, nowhere does Hewlett-Packard discuss the relationship of its policy commitments to its involvements in non-peaceful pursuits in Israel-Palestine.

II. Recent United Nations Findings

Since the adjournment of the 220th General Assembly (2012), the twenty-second session of the United Nations General Assembly Human Rights Council issued its report regarding the “Human rights situation in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories” (February 2013) and brought these conclusions:
Conclusions

100. The facts brought to the attention of the mission indicate that the State of Israel has had full control of the settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory since 1967 and continues to promote and sustain them through infrastructure and security measures. The mission notes that, despite all pertinent United Nations resolutions declaring that the existence of the settlements is illegal and calling for their cessation, the planning and growth of the settlements continues of existing as well as of new structures.

101. The establishment of the settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem (see annex II), is a mesh of construction and infrastructure leading to a creeping annexation that prevents the establishment of a contiguous and viable Palestinian State and undermines the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination.

102. The settlements have been established and developed at the expense of violating international human rights laws and international humanitarian law as applicable in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, as recognized notably by the International Court of Justice in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004.

103. The settlements are established for the exclusive benefit of Israeli Jews, and are being maintained and developed through a system of total segregation between the settlers and the rest of the population living in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. This system of segregation is supported and facilitated by a strict military and law enforcement control to the detriment of the rights of the Palestinian population.

104. The mission considers that, with regard to the settlements, Israel is committing serious breaches of its obligations under the right to self-determination and certain obligations under international humanitarian law, including the obligation not to transfer its population into the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The Rome Statute establishes the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court over the deportation or transfer, directly or indirectly, by the occupying Power of parts of its own population into the territory it occupies, or the deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside that territory. Ratification of the Statute by Palestine may lead to accountability for gross violations of human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law and justice for victims.

105. The existence of the settlements has had a heavy toll on the rights of the Palestinians. Their rights to freedom of self-determination, non-discrimination, freedom of movement, equality, due process, fair trial, not to be arbitrarily detained, liberty and security of person, freedom of expression, freedom of access to places of worship, education, water, housing, adequate standard of living, property, access to natural resources and effective remedy are being violated consistently and on a daily basis.

106. The volume of information received on dispossession, evictions, demolitions and displacement points to the magnitude of these practices. These are particularly widespread in certain areas and acute in East Jerusalem.

107. The mission noted that the identities of settlers who are responsible for violence and intimidation are known to the Israeli authorities, yet these acts continue with impunity. It is led to the clear conclusion that institutionalized discrimination is practiced against the Palestinian people when the issue of violence is addressed. The mission believes that the motivation behind this violence and the intimidation against the Palestinians and their properties is to drive the local populations away from their lands and allow the settlements to expand.

108. The mission is gravely concerned at the large number of children who are apprehended or detained, including for minor offences. They are invariably mistreated, denied due process and a fair trial. In violation of international law, they are transferred to detention centres in Israel.

109. Children endure harassment and violence, and encounter significant obstacles in attending educational institutions, which limits their right to have access to education. The occupying Power, Israel, is failing in its duty to protect the right of access to education of the Palestinian children and failing to facilitate the proper working of educational institutions.

110. Information gathered by the mission showed that some private entities have enabled, facilitated and profited from the construction and growth of the settlements, either directly or indirectly.

111. Women alone in their homes, the Bedouins and other vulnerable groups are easy targets for settler violence, creating a sense of insecurity in Palestinian society in general.

The writers and endorsers of this overture are convinced that as circumstances presently stand, we can do no less than become part of a global human rights movement (ecumenical, interfaith, and secular) to disinvest from corporations whose business practices violate the human rights of the Palestinian people through occupation by the Israeli government. It is unconscionable that the PC(USA), which has already called upon Presbyterians to boycott products made in the illegal settlements, continues to invest in and profit from corporations engaged in activities that are not peaceful and labeled illegal by the United Nations Human Rights Council. If the actions of Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions in regard to their business practices with the Israeli government do not violate PC(USA) policy regarding its prohibition on investments that benefit from non-peaceful pursuits, what actions ever would? It is our plea that through faithfulness towards the justice taught by our Lord Jesus Christ, the investment policies and decisions of our denomination will be consistent with the following statement: We are the Church of Jesus Christ. When the powers of the world decide that they will conduct business as usual, and that business is contrary to the teachings of Christ and the will of God for humanity, then it is time for the church to end its complicity in this sinful behavior.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 04-02.

The ACREC acknowledges MRTI’s careful and methodical ten-year process and thanks them for their faithful service. The ACREC agrees with MRTI that

1. the church has exhausted all avenues to bring about changes in the policies and practices of Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions through corporate engagement;

2. as long as the denomination’s policy is that we should not profit from “non-peaceful pursuits,” and as long as these three U.S. companies identified by MRTI remain deeply involved in “non-peaceful pursuits,” then as a matter of integrity, the church should end our investment in these companies.

New information on Caterpillar, Inc. not in the MRTI report:

On April 1, 2014, The New York Times reported that Caterpillar used a Swiss subsidiary to reduce its taxes by $2.4 billion.¹ This tax-avoidance scheme was developed by PricewaterhouseCoopers who was paid $55 million “for helping [CAT] transfer $8 billion of profits to the Swiss subsidiary from 1999 to 2012. The transfers had no economic substance and were made solely to take advantage of the lower tax rate Caterpillar negotiated with Switzerland, according to Senator Carl Levin, chairman of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.” (The same article mentions HP also transferring profits offshore to avoid U.S. taxes).

During this time, CAT imposed a six-year wage freeze on its hourly workers, and awarded the current CEO massive pay increases.

• Caterpillar Chief’s Pay Jumps 60%—Wall Street Journal article, April 2012.³
• SEC Action Puts Caterpillar Resolution on Sudan Up for Shareholder Vote—NY State Comptroller press release.⁴

In this light, ACREC believes CAT’s human rights record in Sudan and Israel/Palestine demonstrates its “Code of Corporate Conduct” is selective and only goes as far as the company prefers it to go and does not apply evenly across the board.

The ACREC believes that the same standards that have guided votes on MRTI recommendations over the last forty-two years of corporate engagement by the committee, should continue to guide the General Assembly on this vote, no matter who is committing the human rights violations, where, and against whom. To use different standards to judge the evidence is at best, discriminatory, and at worst, sets a bad precedent of exceptionalism that will diminish the effectiveness of MRTI’s future work.

The ACREC sees the following reasons for the General Assembly to approve the MRTI report and NOT to apply exceptions to it:

1. The MRTI report does not target Israel, but U.S. corporations who are profiting from a military occupation. Charging MRTI and the PC(USA) with holding Israel to different standards is a misrepresentation of the ten-year history and MRTI’s careful engagement with the three American corporations.

   - The PC(USA) will continue to hold shares in companies that do business in Israel, but are not profiting from non-peaceful pursuits, including McDonald’s, Procter & Gamble, Coca Cola, IBM, etc.

2. While it is true that some Jewish groups and organizations have said our corporate engagement process has “damaged relationships between Presbyterians and Jews,” not all Presbyterians and not all Jews agree with this statement. In fact, in some cases, the opposite is true. The call for not profiting from the occupation has strengthened relationships between some Presbyterians and some American and Israeli Jewish groups and individuals who oppose the occupation. This is evidenced by the support for MRTI from

   - The Israeli Committee Against House Demolition (ICAHD)⁵.
   - The Rabbinic Council of Jewish Voice for Peace. The rabbis of Jewish Voice for Peace maintain that the human rights violations of CAT, Inc., H-P and Motorola Solutions are not in accord with Jewish Values.⁶

The very claim that this has affected our relationships with all Jews in a blanket way commits the serious error of classifying an entire people into one monolithic category. General stereotyping can and often does lead to racism in situations where decisions are made by assuming all people of one race or ethnicity hold the same viewpoints.

Hewlett-Packard is involved in questionable human rights issues in China and Syria as well as in Israel/Palestine as cited in a shareholder resolution voted on at their 2014 Annual Meeting. Both H-P and Motorola Solutions have wholly-owned subsidiaries in Israel whose record of equal employment opportunity is deficient.

   - While more than 20 percent of the Israeli population is non-Jewish, the high-tech industry, obligated by law not to discriminate, employs between 0.5 to 5 percent non-Jewish Israelis. Neither company will disclose its employment record.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this overture be approved with amendment to Recommendation 1 as shown below: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“1. [Instruct] [Urge] the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to disinvest from Caterpillar, Inc., Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions, in accord with our church’s decades-long socially responsible investment (SRI) history, and not to reinvest in these companies until the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee of the PC(USA) [is fully satisfied that] [recommends their removal from the divestment listing. The Committee on MRTI is urged to consider the following factors in determining when the] product sales and services by these [and potentially other] companies are no longer complicit in ['non-peaceful pursuits' and in]” [The rest of the recommendation section remains unchanged.]

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy supports the recommendations of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) in its Advice & Counsel memorandum to Item 04-08. In that memorandum we present the theological and policy bases for supporting corporate social responsibility work, including the recommendation to divest of securities in the three named corporations. This overture performs a valuable function in examining and affirming the record from outside MRTI and, in our view, proposes considerations that may be helpful going forward if the commissioners approve the divestment and occupation-free investment MRTI recommends. Hence the amendments suggested, which also recognize that the compliance of the investment bodies of our church is voluntary, although they are agencies of the General Assembly and to be guided by the theology and ethical direction of the assembly.

The overture presents past General Assembly policy and past actions correctly, including the favorable vote of commissioners in 2012 to ask the Board of Pensions to establish a separate investment portfolio that would not hold the securities of Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions, a vote that was subsequently ruled out of order.

Regarding the human rights situation in Israel and Palestine, the overture’s data from the United Nations could be supplemented by similar findings from the U.S. State Department’s annual Human Rights reports, the reports of Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch, and other nongovernmental organizations, and the reports of human rights organizations within Israel such as B’Tselem.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 04-02

Comment on Item 04-02—From the Board of Pensions.

Item 04-02, an overture from the Presbytery of San Francisco, and Item 04-08 from the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) recommend that Caterpillar, Inc., Motorola Solutions, and Hewlett-Packard be added to the General Assembly Divestment List. The Board of Pensions offers this comment, originally approved by the Board’s Executive Committee in May 2006, to clarify its practice when corporations are added to that list.

Comment of The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on the several recommendations relating to Divestment and Affirmative Investment

In all its corporate actions, the Board of Pensions strives to support the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including the social witness policies approved by the General Assembly. Sometimes there is apparent conflict between the social witness desires of the denomination and our legal duties to members of the Benefits Plan. It is clear that our mutually approved long-term policies and procedures have worked well to avoid conflict and we urge the General Assembly to take no actions that would displace these very helpful policies and procedures.

The General Assembly has delegated oversight responsibility for Benefits Plan and Assistance Plan monies to the Board of Pensions. This responsibility makes the Board a “fiduciary,” a status that carries both certain duties and the potential for certain liabilities if carried out improperly. This delegation and separation of oversight duties is intended to relieve the General Assembly from both fiduciary duties and liabilities. The Board, acting through its Board of Directors, chooses the actual investment managers and determines how the money is allocated among various classes of securities to achieve the long-term investment objectives required of the Plans. The Board does not select specific investments (either to buy or to sell): security selection is the job of the investment managers themselves.

As indicated below, managers of individually managed portfolios are made aware of our social witness policy and are required to justify to the Board of Pensions any deviation from that policy.

These are all important separations of roles and responsibilities that are in the best interests of commissioners, of the denomination, of the Benefits Plan and of Plan members. For these reasons, the General Assembly does not direct the Board of Pensions to divest the portfolio of an investment held by the Benefits Plan and does not direct that the Board of Pensions affirmatively invest in any specific security.

The General Assembly does, however, determine the social witness policies of the Church, including how they pertain to investments of money held by or under the aegis of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It does advise the Board (and the Foundation) and it does urge us to take certain actions from time to time. We in turn are mindful of the General Assembly’s wishes.

To confuse this important definition of roles and responsibilities, would risk potential liability to the General Assembly, and possibly incur more investment risk for the Pension Trust and other benefits and assistance assets than would otherwise be desirable. We cannot, and the General Assembly would not have us avoid or compromise our legal duties and threaten the security of the Benefits Plan and Assistance Program.

First, the Board of Pensions has a “duty of loyalty” to act in the sole and exclusive interests of the Benefits Plan members. That means our decisions must be in the interests of that group taken as a whole, not in the interests of the Board, and not in the interests of some other group or some special part of the Church. The Board of Pensions has established procedures that it believes are completely faithful to this obligation.

Second, the Board has a “duty of care” to see to it that sufficient funds are available to keep the promises made to Plan members, both current and future. Selling or buying securities based on social witness principles alone could easily translate into taking too much or too little risk at any given point in time. The Board of Directors has adopted detailed investment policies governing the allocation of the Plan’s investments in various asset classes and the selection of managers for those asset classes. This allocation is the primary way we manage investment risk. The investment managers are responsible for the selection of individual investment holdings. We are responsible for selecting the investment managers, and this selection process is another of our risk management tools, and is an equally important separation of duties. The result is that the Board of Pensions must make its own, independent judgments based on its legal duties of loyalty and care.

Having said that, it is our often-expressed objective to support the declared social witness policies of the denomination as best we can. Fortunately, specific policies on divestment adopted by the General Assembly in 1984 have served our mutual interests well, have promoted a united voice and have avoided conflicts within the denomination.

Divestment

The Board of Pensions participates in the Church’s MRTI activities. Under the 1984 policies of the General Assembly, the denomination’s Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment recommends that a company be added to the General Assembly’s divestment list after several steps. Three of those steps include (a) undertaking a thorough and comprehensive research of the company’s involvement in an objectionable practice, (b) engaging the company in constructive dialogue about those practices through meetings and submission of shareholder resolutions; and (c) it is determined that no lesser alternative to divestment is available. Ultimately the General Assembly determines, upon receiving such a recommendation, what is the effective social witness action for the Church and its entities to undertake (including divestment or affirmative investment). The General Assembly has long recognized that the divestment practice of the Board of Pensions is one of a “prohibition of ownership” rather than one of an “immediate sale” of securities listed for divestment.

When and if a security is added to the prohibited securities list (there are currently 428 securities on the list), the Board of Pensions has adopted a formal process to ensure that the failure to own the security will not harm the financial soundness of the Plan. At this point, there are two levels of decision because of the differing responsibilities and accountabilities of the decision-makers. The first decision is for an investment manager. The Investment Manager must decide whether not owning a divestment list security will harm their portfolio results. If it decides that failure to own will not harm results, there is no issue as to portfolio performance, and the security is not held. Since, as a general rule our investment policies provide for observance of the General Assembly’s divestment policies, if the manager decides that failure to own will harm portfolio performance, it must ask us and provide justification for an exception.

The second decision now becomes one for the Board of Pensions. It is inappropriate for us to fail to act. In other words, we are obligated to independently decide whether or not to initiate divestment, or to grant an exception. In the event of a request for exception, if the Investment Committee determines that the request is reasonable and appropriate in the context of our duty of care, it may grant the exception. Currently, there is only one security held by the Board of Pensions under an approved exception request.

For example,

Stock A is placed on the divestment list for the first time. Manager X owns Stock A. When the divestment list is updated, we advise Manager X that Stock A may be held as a part of their normal investment program until such time as the security becomes part of the manager’s sell discipline for all clients. Any subsequent purchase requires an exception from the Board of Pensions.

If a Manager does not own the stock, any purchase requires an exception.

From time to time, securities are removed from the divestment list, and managers are so advised.

Affirmative Investment

The duties of care and loyalty apply equally as limitations on the purchase of securities. In addition, the separation of roles and responsibilities between the Board and our investment managers is breached when we begin telling our investment managers to actively purchase specific securities. At that point we become portfolio managers ourselves, and to date that is not a responsibility we have undertaken because it would impose additional regulatory burdens and administrative expenses on the Plan that we have chosen to avoid.
Shareholder Resolutions and Proxy Voting

We do hold a small portfolio of securities outside the Benefits Plan specifically at the request of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment in order that the Church can use these shares to propose shareholder resolutions from time to time. These holdings are at minimum levels required to submit shareholder resolutions.

It is also appropriate to note that the Board of Pensions does vote all shares held by or through us in accordance with the actions of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment. The Board of Pensions respectfully requests that the General Assembly take this comment into account when considering the several recommendations on Divestment or Affirmative Investment proposed to the General Assembly. The processes in place have served us well for over twenty years, and will continue to serve us well going forward.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-02

Comment on Item 04-02—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

This overture supports the recommendation from the Presbyterian Mission Agency, approved at its February 2014 board meeting, calling for Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions to be added to the General Assembly’s list of companies whose stocks and bonds are proscribed from investment (commonly known as the General Assembly Divestment List).

This recommendation is based upon the comprehensive report by the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), http://www.pcusa.org/resource/mrti-report-and-recommendations-israel-palestine-c/, on its multiyear engagement of corporations involved in non-peaceful pursuits in Israel and Palestine as defined by the General Assembly.

On Engaging Presbyterian to Witness for Palestinian Human Rights and for Ending the Occupation of Palestine—From the Presbytery of Grace.

The Presbytery of Grace overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Affirm the prophetic witness of Jesus Christ against all forms of racism and powers of oppression with courage, honesty, and love; affirm that through the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus, God has called the church into a ministry of repentance, reconciliation, and hope, working towards cooperation and peace among all nations; and recognize through these affirmations that the love of God for all peoples, includes Israelis, Palestinians, Christians, Jews, and Muslims.

2. Respect the human rights of the Israeli people and oppose all forms of anti-Semitism, and deplore the violation of the human rights of Palestinians by the government of Israel, which includes but is not limited to
   a. systematic expropriation of Palestinian land and water for Jewish-only settlement colonies;
   b. deportation and forcible transfer of Palestinian populations;
   c. imprisonment and torture of Palestinians;
   d. construction of a separation wall/barrier deep into the militarily occupied Palestinian territories;
   e. building Israeli-only bypass roads to connect the Jewish-only settlement colonies together and to Israel;
   f. destruction of Palestinian agricultural lands and homes and expropriation of Palestinian property not justified by military necessity; and
   g. daily humiliation at numerous checkpoints deep within the Palestinian territories.

3. Recognize that Israeli practices, infrastructure, and the military occupation confine Palestinians to live in isolated enclaves and deny Palestinians freedom of movement, freedom of residence, a right to a nationality, and the right to leave and to return to their country of origin.

4. Acknowledge that Israel’s noncompliance with international law and numerous United Nations resolutions is assisted by the government of the United States through its annual gift of at least three billion dollars and its veto within the United Nations Security Council of resolutions condemning Israel’s violations of the human rights of Palestinians, and Israeli violence against its neighboring countries.
5. Acknowledge that the actions of the Israeli government listed above meet and surpass the United Nations definition of apartheid as defined by International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid (1973) and as defined by the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (2002).

6. Strongly urge the government of the United States to pursue policies that treat both Israelis and Palestinians with equal regards and end its policies that favor Israel and allow it to continually violate the human rights of Palestinians (Christians and Muslims) within its borders and within the territories it militarily occupies.

7. Direct the Stated Clerk to urge President Obama and our Congress to act courageously in urging the government of Israel to cease and desist in its discrimination and violence against its Christian and Muslim citizens and to end the military occupation of the Palestinian territories, and the blockade of the Gaza Strip.

8. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to all other PC(USA) councils and entities and invite and strongly encourage those groups and organizations to engage in constructive, peaceful, and nonviolent actions to bring about reconciliation between Christians, Jews, and Muslims living within the former Mandate Palestine.

Rationale

A. Purpose

This overture is pursued with the hope it will lead to a peaceful reconciliation between the people of Israel and Palestine. It is only through reconciliation that peace with justice will be realized.

B. Why Presbyterians Must Act

As Presbyterians we believe the prophetic mission of the church is to speak the Word of God courageously, honestly, and lovingly; following the example of Jesus. The church is called to stand alongside the oppressed to help bring about justice for them, leading to peace and reconciliation with their oppressors. Christians spoke out in the 1950s against racial segregation in the United States and later on against apartheid in South Africa. They must again raise their voices and speak out against Israel’s violations of Palestinian human rights.

In the twentieth century, Christians of the West did not speak out loudly enough to stop the profound suffering and discrimination that the Jewish people of Europe experienced during World War II culminating in the Jewish Holocaust. Are we to remain silent in the twenty first century to the suffering of Palestinian people who are living under military occupation, encirclement, and blockade by the State of Israel? If we are to heed the prophetic mission of the Church to speak the Word of God, we must speak out and act to end this suffering.

To solve a problem, one has to honestly recognize and acknowledge that the problem exists. The rationale section of this overture will demonstrate how Israel’s practices and actions against the Palestinian people, both Christians and Muslims, and Israel’s physical changes to the land and infrastructure of the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and its blockade of the Gaza Strip constitute (as defined by the 2002 Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (RSICC)) elements of crimes against humanity that include apartheid and more. In other words, Israeli policies and practices are worse than just apartheid. Jimmy Carter, former president of the U.S. and Nobel Peace Prize winner said: “Israel does occupy this territory deep within the West Bank, and connects 200-or-so settlements with each other, with a road, and then prohibits the Palestinians from using that road, or in many cases even crossing the road. This perpetrates even worse instances of apartness, or apartheid, than we witnessed even in South Africa” (2006).

First, consider the testimony of the “Russell Tribunal on Palestine,” which was composed of eminent people from various countries, including Israel.” The legitimacy of the Russell Tribunal on Palestine comes “from the prestige, professional interests, and commitment to fundamental rights of the Members that constitute this Tribunal.” Members of the Jury included Alice Walker, author and poet, U.S.A.; John Dugard, professor of international law, former special rapporteur for both UN Commission on Human Rights and International Law Commission; Mairead Corrigan Maguire, Nobel Peace laureate 1976, Northern Ireland; and many other distinguished persons. A complete list of the jury is available in the endnotes.

- Russell Tribunal: “In its Cape Town session, the Tribunal found that Israel subjects the Palestinian people to an Institutionalized regime of domination amounting to apartheid as defined under international law. This discriminatory regime manifests in varying intensity and forms against different categories of Palestinians depending on their location. The Palestinians living under colonial military rule in the Occupied Palestinian Territory are subject to a particularly aggravated form of apartheid. Palestinian citizens of Israel, while entitled to vote, are not part of the Jewish nation as defined by Israeli law and are therefore excluded from the benefits of Jewish nationality and subject to systematic discrimination across the broad spectrum of recognized human rights. Irrespective of such differences, the Tribunal concluded that Israel’s rule over the Palestinian people, wherever they reside, collectively amounts to a single integrated regime of apartheid.” (2013)

- Ramzy Baroud, editor of the Palestine Chronicle, in his article, “Fighting Apartheid in Palestine: South Africa’s Unfinished Business” said: “the recent approval by South Africa’s cabinet to distinguish between products made in Israel and those made in illegal Jewish settlements in the West Bank. It was also a natural progression of South Africa’s policies, which have reflected impatience with Israel through the years. Israel’s policies have long been geared towards decimating Palestinian society, along with any chances for a just peace. It was clear that Israel has chosen the Apartheid option, not just as a de facto outcome of its policies, but through a decided legal and political pattern.” (2012)

- Ronald Kasrils, a member of the Russell Tribunal on Palestine Jury and of the National Executive Committee (NEC) of the African National Congress (ANC) (1987–2007) said: “Travelling into Palestine’s West Bank and Gaza Strip, which I visited recently, is like a surreal trip back into an apartheid state of emergency. It is chilling to pass through the myriad checkpoints—more than 500 in the West Bank. They are controlled by heavily armed soldiers, youthful but grim, tensely watching every movement, fingers on the trigger. … The West Bank, once 22% of historic Palestine, has shrunken to perhaps 10% to 12% of living space for its inhabitants, and is split into several fragments, including the fertile Jordan Valley, which is a security reserve for Jewish settlers and the Israeli Defense Force. Like the Gaza Strip, the West Bank is effectively a hermetically sealed prison. It is shocking to discover that certain roads are barred to Palestinians and reserved for Jewish settlers. I try in vain to recall anything quite as obscene in apartheid South Africa.” (2007).

- Yossi Sarid, former Israeli minister of education, said: “What acts like apartheid, is run like apartheid and harasses like apartheid, is not a duck—it is apartheid. … What should frighten us, however, is not the description of reality, but reality itself.” (2008)

- Michael Ben-Yair, former Israeli attorney general, said: “Passionately desiring to keep the occupied territories, we developed two judicial systems: one—progressive, liberal—in Israel; and the other—cruel, injurious—in the occupied territories. In effect, we established an apartheid regime in the occupied territories immediately following their capture. That oppressive regime exists to this day.” (2002)

- Shulamit Aloni, former Israeli minister of education, said: “Jewish self-righteousness is taken for granted among ourselves to such an extent that we fail to see what’s right in front of our eyes. It’s simply inconceivable that the ultimate victims, the Jews, can carry out evil deeds. Nevertheless, the state of Israel practices its own, quite violent, form of Apartheid with the native Palestinian population.” (2007)

- Henry Siegman, former director of the American Jewish Congress & Synagogue Council of America, said, “Successive Israeli governments have long sought to preclude the two-state solution. Israel has crossed the threshold from ‘the only democracy in the Middle East’ to ‘the only apartheid regime in the Western world.’” (2007)

- Ilan Pappe, Israeli and former Haifa University history professor said, “Israel is now one of worst apartheid regimes in the world. It controls almost all of Palestine (apart from Gaza which it imprisoned hermetically since 2005). It has the largest number of apartheid laws and regulations than any country in the world and the longest imposition of emergency laws and regulations that rob citizens of their most basic human and civil rights.” (2011)

- Nelson Mandela said “We know too well that our freedom is incomplete without the freedom of the Palestinians.” (1997)

- Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the South African Nobel Peace prize winner said “I have been to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and I have witnessed the racially segregated roads and housing that reminded me so much of the conditions we experienced in South Africa under the racist system of Apartheid. I have witnessed the humiliation of Palestinian men, women, and children made to wait hours at Israeli military checkpoints routinely when trying to make the most basic of trips to visit relatives or attend school or college, and this humiliation is familiar to me and the many black South Africans who were corralled and regularly insulted by the security forces of the Apartheid government. It is not with rancor that we criticize the Israeli government, but with hope, a hope that a better future can be made for both Israelis and Palestinians.” (2010)

- Israeli human rights group B’Tselem said: “Israel has created in the Occupied Territories a regime of separation based on discrimination, applying two separate systems of law in the same area and basing the rights of individuals on their nationality. This regime … is reminiscent of distasteful regimes from the past such as the Apartheid regime in South Africa.” (2002)

- The Human Sciences Research Council of South Africa, after two years of studying Israeli practices towards the Palestinians, concluded that Israel practices the “three pillars” of apartheid in the occupied territories in a manner calculated to prevent Palestinians from participation in the political, social, and cultural life of their country. (2009)

C. PC(USA) Statements Acknowledging Israeli Human Rights and International Law Violations

The church is seriously disturbed by the social injustice and oppression experienced by Palestinians living under Israeli occupation. The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved the following statements concerning Israel’s occupation of the West Bank and Gaza. Please consult Appendix A for a more complete listing of PC(USA) statements.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved the Middle East Study Report, which states that:

- The Israeli occupation leads to the denial of human rights for Palestinians and violation of international laws.
Military aid to Israel to be contingent upon Israel eliminating human rights abuses in the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) passed a policy calling upon all nations to prohibit the import of products made by enterprises in Israeli settlements on Palestinian land until significant progress toward Palestinian rights and independence could be reported to the General Assembly or General Assembly Mission Council.

These statements and others found in Appendix A portray facts on the ground that are irrefutable and acknowledged by Israel.

D. What Are Crimes Against Humanity and What Is Apartheid?

The 2002 Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (RSICC), ratified by the United Nations as international law effective July 1, 2002, defines crimes against humanity in Article 7 which states:

For the purpose of this Statute, “crime against humanity” means any of the following acts when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack:

a. Murder;
b. Extermination;
c. Enslavement;
d. Deportation or forcible transfer of population;
e. Imprisonment or other severe deprivation of physical liberty in violation of fundamental rules of international law;
f. Torture;
g. Rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, enforced sterilization, or any other form of sexual violence of comparable gravity;
h. Persecution against any identifiable group or collectivity on political, racial, national, ethnic, cultural, religious, gender … or other grounds that are universally recognized as impermissible under international law, in connection with any act referred to in this paragraph or any crime within the jurisdiction of the Court;
i. Enforced disappearance of persons;
j. The crime of apartheid [see Appendix B for a definition of apartheid];
k. Other inhumane acts of a similar character intentionally causing great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health.

Note that in part J of Article 7, the U.N. Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court declares that apartheid is a “crime against humanity” because it is an act committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population. The crime of apartheid is defined as “inhumane acts committed in the context of an institutionalized regime of systematic oppression and domination by one racial group over any other racial group or groups and committed with the intention of maintaining that regime.

Furthermore, the U.N. defines “racial discrimination,” as “any distinction, exclusion, restriction, or preference based on race, color, descent, or national or ethnic origin that has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life.”

This rationale will demonstrate that in addition to apartheid, Israel’s policies and practices include additional elements of crimes against humanity.

E. Israel’s Laws, Polices, and Practices Towards Palestinian Citizens of Israel and Palestinians in the Occupied West Bank, Gaza Strip, and East Jerusalem

Israel has created a system where one ethnic group, Israeli Jewish nationals, have a superior status and another ethnic group, non-Jewish Arabs (Christians and Jews) living in Palestine and Israel, have an inferior status. Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically take actions to prevent Palestinians from participating in the political, social, economic, and cultural life of their country. The expropriation of Palestinian land, restrictions on the freedom of movement and residence, confining Palestinians to ghettos, arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of Palestinians, the restriction or denial of Palestinian rights to work, education, peaceful assembly, and religious practices are all part of Israeli measures calculated to prevent Palestinians from full participation in the economic, environmental, and social life of their country. This discriminatory system benefits Israeli Jews and causes irreparable harm to non-Jews both in Israel itself and in the occupied Palestinian territories.

This section highlights the following eight areas in which the state of Israel’s laws, policies, and practices violate the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid (ICPSCA) ratified by the United Nations.

1. Denial to the Right to Life and Liberty of Person (In Violation of ICPSCA, Article II.a.)

Palestinian human rights defenders, political representatives, and civil society activists have been targeted and imprisoned as a technique of silencing and containment. Palestinian prisoners have routinely been subject to coercive interrogation techniques, excessive use of solitary confinement and isolation, medical neglect, and physical and mental abuse amounting to ill-treatment and torture. Conditions of detention, particularly with regard to hygiene, nutrition, and access to health care, typically fail to meet minimum standards, and family visits are routinely denied. The circumstances of Palestinians in detention have been brought back to the forefront of international concern in recent times through the initiation of widespread hunger strikes by prisoners. The Tribunal expresses its solidarity with the Palestinian political prisoners, and condemns in the strongest possible terms:

- the use of military law to criminalize political expression;
- the prosecution of Palestinian civilians, including children, by military courts in violation of international standards for fair trial;
- the systemic torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian detainees;
- the pervasive policy of intermittence without charge or trial.

Torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian detainees is also in violation of the 2002 Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (RSICC, Article 7 [Crimes Against Humanity], e, f).

2. Deliberate Imposition of Living Conditions Calculated to Cause the Physical Destruction of Palestinians in Whole or in Part (In Violation of ICPSCA, Article II.b.)

The physical wellbeing of any people is determined in large part by their access to adequate housing, drinking water, agricultural irrigation water, food, agricultural areas, utilities, employment, education, and wastewater treatment. The laws, policies, and practices of Israel systematically deprive many Palestinians adequate living conditions in some or all of the above categories. Israeli practices deliberately impose on Palestinians living conditions calculated to make life intolerable. Israel exploits Palestinian natural water and land resources through restricting water supply to Palestinians, not investing in infrastructure for economic development, uprooting olive and fruit trees of Palestinian farmers, and preventing the freedom of commerce for Palestinian farmers and workers.

- Over one and a quarter million olive and fruit trees and thousands of acres of farmland have been destroyed in Palestinian territories since 1967. Nearly 465,000 olive trees were uprooted between 2000 and 2005.
- Since the beginning of the occupation in 1967, Israel’s strict control of the water sector in the occupied territories has prevented water development to meet Palestinian water needs, and caused shortages and a water-quality crisis.
- Israel has neglected construction of infrastructure to connect the Palestinian rural population to a running water network as well as proper maintenance of existing networks. In 2008, 227,500 Palestinians in 220 towns and villages were not connected to a water network. Another 190,000 Palestinians are only partially served.
- Of the water available from West Bank aquifers, Israel uses 83 percent, (10 percent for illegal Israeli settlers in the West Bank and 73 percent residents in Israel). West Bank Palestinians use the remaining 17 percent.
- Israel generally restricts Palestinian water use to the municipal and limited commercial and industrial sectors by limiting the extraction of groundwater for agricultural irrigation purposes.
- In the West Bank, about 50 groundwater wells and more than 200 cisterns have been destroyed or isolated from their owners by construction of the separation barrier, affecting the domestic and agricultural needs of more than 122,000 people.
- Only 7 percent of the water in the Gaza Strip meets World Health Organization standards.
- West Bank Palestinian water consumption is 40 liters per day less than the minimum global standards set by the World Health Organization.
- Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem pay taxes, but receive few benefits. The municipality has failed to invest significantly in infrastructure and services, such as roads, sidewalks, and water and sewage systems, in East Jerusalem’s Palestinian neighborhoods.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and deliberately imposes living conditions calculated to cause the physical destruction of the Palestinian people in whole or in part, in violation of the International conventions on apartheid.

3. Expropriation of Landed Property Belonging to Palestinians (In Violation of ICPSCA, Article II.c., d.)

- Under the 1947 United Nations Palestine partition Resolution 181, 56 percent of the land area of Palestine was designated for a Jewish state and 44 percent for an Arab state. This resolution stipulated that the equal rights of minorities within each state must be protected. However, in the war that followed Israel’s declaration of independence in May 1948, Israel occupied 78 percent of the land thereby expropriating much of the land designated by the United Nations for an independent Arab state. (See Map 1 below.)
- In 1947–48, 750,000 non-Jewish residents of land designated by the U.N. for the Jewish state and much of the Arab state were either forcibly removed from their landed property or not allowed to return to their homes in defiance of international law. The land was expropriated by Israel for Jewish housing, farms, roads, businesses, parks, and cemeteries.
- In June 1967, East Jerusalem was occupied by the Israeli military. Twenty-seven square miles of East Jerusalem were annexed to Israel. More than 30 percent of the land in East Jerusalem has been expropriated to build new settlements where approximately 200,000 Israeli’s reside in 47,000 units of housing.
Between 1967 and 2009, vast areas of West Bank land have been expropriated to allow more than 121 settlements and 100 outposts for Jewish residents. Nearly half a million settlers now live in the occupied West Bank, including 190,000 in East Jerusalem.

Separation walls/barriers are constructed on land in the West Bank and will expropriate an additional 11.9 percent of Palestinian land in the West Bank when completed.

The agricultural Jordan Valley area, about 30 percent of the West Bank, is now off limits to most Palestinians.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually expropriates the landed property of Palestinians in violation of the International conventions on apartheid.

4. Denying Palestinians Right to Freedom of Movement (in Violation of ICPSCA Article II.c., d.)

- Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically deny Palestinians the right to movement. Israel uses a number of means to restrict Palestinian movement in the West Bank, which include: permanent and temporary checkpoints, physical obstructions, the Separation Wall, roads on which only Israelis can drive, and the movement-permit regime.

- Checkpoints: In 2009, more than 600 checkpoints and roadblocks in the occupied West Bank restricted Palestinians’ freedom of movement to their homes, businesses, schools, jobs, hospitals, and farms. Palestinians routinely suffer indeterminate waiting, humiliating treatment, uncertainty, and denial of passage at checkpoints.

- Segregated roads: Segregated roads, which Israel euphemistically calls “bypass roads.” link settlement colonies with one another and with Israel. The 493 miles of bypass roads provide unrestricted access to Israeli vehicles but restrict or prohibit Palestinian travel. These roads cut off Palestinians from their agricultural land, schools, hospitals, markets, and extended families and carve up the West Bank into isolated enclaves.

- Separation Wall: In the West bank much of the Separation Wall extends well beyond the internationally recognized border and separates Palestinian homes from their farmland, businesses, schools, hospitals, and the homes of family and friends. In East Jerusalem the Separation Wall is constructed through the middle of a once contiguous city, much like the Berlin Wall. The wall’s main purpose is not security, but rather to separate Palestinians from Israeli settlement colonies constructed on illegally expropriated Palestinian land. The separation Wall cuts deeply into the West Bank in several locations. There is creeping confiscation of land in the areas between the 1967 West Bank border and the Wall, where severe movement restrictions continue to result in the inability of Palestinian landowners to gain access to their farm land. Along this zone between the Green Line and the Wall thousands of Palestinians on both sides of the barrier are being driven into poverty by restrictions on residency, lack of access to farm lands, inability to market their crops, and confiscation of land. By implementing these means, Israel has split the occupied territories into five geographical areas: North, Center, South, the Jordan Valley, and northern Dead Sea. Movement between the sections and within each section has become, in recent years, hard, slow, and sometimes impossible. Israel almost completely forbids the movement of Palestinians between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and impedes Palestinians from entering Israel and going abroad:

- These restrictions significantly affect the daily lives of Palestinians in commerce, in access to medical treatment and educational institutions, and in conducting social activities. Simple actions such as going to work in a nearby town, marketing farm produce, obtaining medical treatment, and visiting relatives entail bureaucratic procedures creating great uncertainty.

- Israel’s restriction on freedom of movement for non-Jewish Palestinians is discrimination based on ethnic origin since these restrictions apply only to Palestinians. Jewish residents are permitted to enter and leave settlements without restriction.

The net result is that the State of Israel systematically and continually denies the freedom of movement to Palestinians in violation of the International conventions on apartheid.

5. Dividing the Population Along Racial Lines by the Creation of Separate Reserves and Ghettos for the Palestinians (in Violation of ICPSCA. Article II.d.)

Sections E.3., 4., and 5., and Maps 1 through 5 show how Israeli laws, policies, and practices in the West Bank combined with the infrastructure of illegal settlements, bypass roads, checkpoints, and the separation wall/barrier systematically create separate reserves or ghettos for Palestinians. Palestinians are forced to live in isolated enclaves that in turn eviscerate the Palestinian economy, and prevent the creation of a viable, contiguous, sovereign, and independent Palestinian state.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually divides the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos for the Palestinians in violation of the International conventions on apartheid.

6. Denying Palestinians the Right to a Nationality (in Violation of ICPSCA. Article II.c.)

On November 29, 1947, the United Nations adopted a Partition Plan for Palestine that divided the League of Nations’ British Mandate of Palestine. In this partition plan, 44 percent of the land was allocated for an Arab state and 56 percent was allocated for the Jewish state. While Israel did become an independent state in 1948, the independent Palestinian state did not come into existence because the land designated as an independent Palestinian state was militarily occupied by Israel.

- Between 1948 and 2009, the state of Israel has systematically occupied and/or annexed most of the land that had been designated by the United Nations for an independent Palestinian state. In doing so, Israel has denied the Palestinians a right to a nationality.
  - In 1967, Israel annexed East Jerusalem in violation of international law.
  - Between 1967 and 2009, Israel has controlled the rural undeveloped part of the West Bank, called Area C in the Oslo Peace agreement. Through the construction of settlement colonies, bypass roads, the separation wall/barrier, buffer zones, and the creation of land reserves, Israel has left Palestinians in control of only 13 percent of the land area of the British mandate of Palestine.
  - Israel has failed to implement the November 22, 1967, United Nations Resolution 242 requiring Israel to withdraw its forces from the West Bank and Gaza.
  - In 1978, Israeli Menachem Begin signed the Camp David Accords, which stated, “The Israeli military government and its civilian administration will be withdrawn as soon as a self-governing authority has been freely elected by its inhabitants.” By not implementing this agreement to end its occupation of the West Bank and Gaza, Israel has denied the Palestinians right to a national homeland.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually denies Palestinians the right to a nationality in violation of the International conventions on apartheid.

7. Enacting Legislative and Other Measures Calculated to Prevent Palestinians from Participation in the Political, Social, Economic and Cultural Life of Their Country (in Violation of ICPSCA. Article II.d.)

Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically take actions to prevent Palestinians from participating in the political, social, economic, and cultural life of their country. The expropriation of Palestinian land, restrictions on the freedom of movement and residence, confining Palestinians to ghettos, arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of Palestinians, the restriction or denial of Palestinian rights to work, education, peaceful assembly, and religious practices are all part of Israeli measures calculated to prevent Palestinians from full participation in the economic, environmental, and social life of their country. This discriminatory system benefits Israeli Jews and causes irreparable harm to non-Jews both in Israel itself and in the occupied Palestinian territories.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually enacting legislative and other measures calculated to prevent Palestinians from participation in the political, social, economic, and cultural life of the country, in violation of the International conventions on apartheid.

8. How Do Israeli Laws, Practices and Policies Surpass Apartheid and Meet the Definition of Crime Against Humanity?

a. Deportation and forcible transfer of populations (in violation of RSICC, Article 7, d). Examples are the Nakba (the forcible evacuation of over 750,000 Palestinians from their homes and villages in 1947-48), the Naksa (the forcible evacuation of over 250,000 Palestinians after and during the 6 day war in 1967), and more recently the Bedouins from the Negev in Israel and the OPT and the pressure on Palestinians to leave the Jordan Valley in area C – purportedly as preparation for Israel to annex the Jordan Valley in violation of the fourth Geneva convention.

b. Persecution (in violation of RSICC, Article 7, h):

Persecution involves the intentional and severe deprivation of fundamental rights of the members of an identifiable group in the context of a widespread and systematic attack against a civilian population. Following deliberations in its Cape Town session, the Russell Tribunal concluded that the evidence supports a finding of persecution against the Palestinians in relation to the following acts:

- the siege and blockade of the Gaza Strip as a form of collective punishment of the civilian population;
- the targeting of civilians during large-scale military operations;
- the destruction of civilian homes not justified by military necessity;
- the adverse impact on the civilian population effected by the Wall and its associated regime in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem;
- the concerted campaign of forcible evacuation and demolition of unrecognized Bedouin villages in the Negev region of southern Israel.
9. Responsibility of the United States of America

The US has demonstrated a commitment to Israel’s establishment and viability as an exclusionary and militarized Jewish State at the expense of Palestinian human rights. While US administrations initially offered moral support, since the Six Day War in 1967 the US has provided unequivocal economic, military, and diplomatic support to Israel in order to establish and maintain a qualitative military superiority over its Arab neighbors in violation of its own domestic law: Israel being the largest recipient of US foreign aid since 1976 and the largest cumulative recipient since World War II in the amount of approximately $115 billion; and via diplomatic support such that between 1972 and 2012, the US has imposed the sole veto on UN resolutions critical of Israel forty-three times (thirty of which concerned the Occupied Palestinian Territories (OPT)) and via pressure on Member States to prevent efforts to pass or enforce General Assembly resolutions holding Israel accountable; and receipt of 60% of US Foreign Military Financing (FMF) funding, making it the largest recipient of US military funding.

The US has not only failed to ensure that Israel respects International Human Law (IHL) but it has exerted little or no influence on Israel to stop key violations of IHL. On the contrary it has on occasion encouraged Israel to violate IHL. The US has acquiesced in, and indirectly encouraged, the construction of both settlements and the Wall. In the case of Israel’s assaults on Gaza its (US) support has been more direct and could be said to constitute encouragement.

International responsibility is incurred by a State that aids or assists another State in the commission of internationally wrongful acts (Article 16 of the International Law Commission Draft Articles on State responsibility). The US undoubtedly assists Israel in the commission of internationally wrongful acts by providing military, material and political support to Israel.

The US must cease its unequivocal economic, military, and diplomatic support to Israel that makes the US directly complicit in a very wide range of Israeli violations of international law. In particular the US must cease its destructive veto policy at the UN Security Council, most notably on the issue of Israel’s colonial settlements, which the US itself acknowledges as unlawful.

10. Why Christians Cannot Be Silent

The Israeli policies in the West Bank and the infrastructure of the illegal Israeli settlements, bypass roads, checkpoints, and separation wall/barrier that constitute an apartheid system in the Occupied Palestinian Territories are in plain view for all to see. However, even for Christians and Americans that personally recognize this apartheid system, it is difficult for some of them to speak out and acknowledge it publicly. One reason may be fear of disturbing our relationships with some of our Jewish or Christian brothers and sisters. It is difficult for many Christians to publicly criticize the policies of Israel’s government for fear that even legitimate criticism may be seen as anti-Israel or anti-Semitic or characterized as “picking on Israel” among many countries in the Middle East with human rights violations. Some Christians believe they must silence their criticism of Israel’s policies because of the history of the Holocaust and the failure of many Christians to speak out at the time. Some believe that using the word “apartheid” has a harsh or jarring effect that can hamper constructive dialog.

Our call as Christians means we must sometimes get out of our comfort zone and risk controversy and criticism from people or organizations with which we are in relationship. It is because of this call that we must recognize what we witness in occupied Palestine, which is that Israel’s laws, practices, and policies constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people.

In 2011, a ninety-year-old Israeli Holocaust survivor did a speaking tour of the U.S. entitled the “Never Again to Anybody” tour. He said what some Jews learned from the Holocaust was “never again to us.” But what other Jews learned was “never again to anybody.” After World War II, Christians too vowed that never again would they be silent if a government passed laws establishing and maintaining the domination by one ethnic group over another ethnic group through systematic separation, oppression, and denial of basic human rights. Silence in the face of evil was wrong then, and it is wrong now.

Appendix A
Recent PC(USA) Statements on Israel-Palestine

The PC(USA) respects the human rights of the Israeli people and opposes all forms of anti-Semitism. The General Assembly (GA) recognized the daunting and mounting obstacles to reconciliation and peace with justice for both Israelis and Palestinians and affirmed with great urgency the historic Presbyterian stances with specific regard to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, calling for:

The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved the Middle East Study Report’s statements that:

- The Israeli occupation leads to the denial of human rights for Palestinians and violation of international laws.
- One of the hopes of the Oslo interim agreement was settlement growth would cease, however the opposite has occurred, resulting in the current population of 285,000 in the West Bank and 198,700 in East Jerusalem. (Maps 3, 4, 5)
- The growth of the number of settlements and settlers is perceived by many as an attempt by Israel to prevent the establishment of an economically viable Palestinian State. (Maps 3, 4, 5)
The number of housing demolitions is alarming and shocks the human conscience. It is estimated that some 24,145 Palestinian homes have been demolished in the occupied territory since 1967.

Another concern of the occupation is the numerous “Israeli-only” bypass roads that carve up the Palestinian homeland and connect one settlement to another. This has a devastating effect on the ability of normal Palestinians to live out a normal life—to visit family, to farm family property, to seek medical treatment, to secure employment; and to travel freely in one’s own country. (Map 2)

While few would deny the right of a government to put a barrier on its own property line, three-quarters of this barrier is inside the West Bank on Palestinian land. This is often perceived by Palestinians as an effort to secure an illegal settlement, claim water resources, and annex Palestinian land. The location of the barrier is a violation of international law and is thus perceived as a means to preempt a just peace. (Map 3)

These statements portray facts on the ground are irrefutable and acknowledged by Israel. The settlement colonies, the bypass roads that connect them, and the separation wall/barrier imprison Palestinians in isolated enclaves, eviscerate the Palestinian economy, and prevent the creation of a viable, contiguous, sovereign, and independent Palestinian state.

a. an immediate cessation of all violence, whether perpetrated by Israelis or Palestinians;

b. the end of the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories and diversion of water resources;

c. an immediate freeze both on the establishment or expansion of Israeli settlements in the West Bank and on the Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land and buildings in East Jerusalem;

d. the relocation by Israel of the Separation Barrier to the 1967 border;

e. the withholding of U.S. government aid to the state of Israel as long as Israel persists in creating new West Bank settlements;

f. continuing corporate engagement through the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment with companies profiting from the sale and use of their products for non-peaceful purposes and/or the violation of human rights;

g. a shared status for Jerusalem;

h. equal rights for Palestinian citizens of the state of Israel;

i. the cessation of systematic violation of human rights by any party, specifically, practices of administrative detention, collective punishment, the torture of prisoners and suspects, home demolitions and evictions, and the deportation of dissidents;

j. the immediate resumption by Israel and Palestine of negotiations toward a two-state solution;

k. military aid to Israel to be contingent upon Israel eliminating human rights abuses in the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) passed a policy calling upon all nations to prohibit the import of products made by enterprises in Israeli settlements on Palestinian land until significant progress toward Palestinian rights and independence can be reported to the General Assembly or General Assembly Mission Council.

Appendix B: Definition of Apartheid

International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid (ICSPCA)

The U.N. “International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,” ratified by the United Nations an international law on November 30, 1973, declared that apartheid is a crime against humanity. Article II of this convention defines “apartheid” as follows:

Article II

For the purpose of the present Convention, the term “the crime of apartheid”, which shall include similar policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination as practiced in southern Africa, shall apply to the following inhuman acts committed for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial group of persons over any other racial group of persons and systematically oppressing them:

(a) Denial to a member or members of a racial group or groups of the right to life and liberty of person:

(i) By murder of members of a racial group or groups;

(ii) By the infliction upon the members of a racial group or groups of serious bodily or mental harm, by the infringement of their freedom or dignity, or by subjecting them to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

(iii) By arbitrary arrest and illegal imprisonment of the members of a racial group or groups;

(b) Deliberate imposition on a racial group or groups of living conditions calculated to cause its or their physical destruction in whole or in part;

(c) Any legislative measures and other measures calculated to prevent a racial group or groups from participation in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the country and the deliberate creation of conditions preventing the full development of such a group or groups, in particular by denying to members of a racial group or groups basic human rights and freedoms, including the right to work, the right to form recognized trade unions, the right to education, the right to leave and to return to their country, the right to a nationality, the right to freedom of movement and residence, the right to freedom of opinion and expression, and the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association;

(d) Any measures, including legislative measures, designed to divide the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos for the members of a racial group or groups, the prohibition of mixed marriages among members of various racial groups, the expropriation of landed property belonging to a racial group or groups or to members thereof

(e) Exploitation of the labor of the members of a racial group or groups, in particular by submitting them to forced labor;

(f) Persecution of organizations and persons, by depriving them of fundamental rights and freedoms, because they oppose apartheid.

Appendix C:

Responding to Critics Who Believe Using the Word “Apartheid” Is too Harsh

Recognizing that Israel’s laws, practices, and policies in the West Bank constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people is merely acknowledging the facts on the ground and how they compare to the United Nations definition of apartheid. However, some supporters of this apartheid system may say using the word apartheid is “too harsh” or falsely accuse those who use the word as anti-Israel or anti-Semitic. These accusations are often made to deflect legitimate criticism of Israeli policies in order to divert attention from the facts on the ground. Those who support this overture may receive such criticism. Below are responses to such criticism.

This overture is not anti-Israel.

This overture intentionally focuses on Israel’s laws, practices, and polices that promote the occupation of Palestinian territories and not Israel’s right to exist. Most critics of Israel’s occupation of Palestine also strongly support the right of Israel to exist within the internationally recognized 1967 borders and emphatically condemn violence against civilians by all parties. Israel, like all nations, has the right to provide security for their citizens by taking appropriate measures that are consistent with international law. Holding Israel accountable to these same global standards is not anti-Israel.

Many Israeli and American Jews oppose settlement colonies on Palestinian land, all of which are illegal under international law. Within the Israeli and U.S. Jewish communities there is a growing, active, and passionate debate about whether Israel’s occupation of the West Bank and Gaza is in the best interest of Israel. Each side in this debate is pro-Israel, trying to discern how to assure a secure, viable, and sustainable state. Christians must support the pro-Israel positions that advocate for human rights and justice for the Palestinian people and reject the positions that promote the systematic oppression of the Palestinian people. When patriotic Americans spoke out against slavery, racial segregation, or the Vietnam and Iraqi wars some Americans falsely accused them of being anti-American. Critics of Israel’s occupation of Palestine may also be falsely accused of being anti-Israel, but they are not. They are pro-human rights.

This overture is not anti-Semitic.

Anti-Semitism is discrimination against or prejudice or hostility toward Jews. This overture is not critical of Jews as people or of Jewish religion or culture. It intentionally states it is Israel’s laws, polices, and practices towards the Palestinian people that constitute apartheid. Many Jewish individuals and human rights organizations in Israel and the U.S. recognize that Israeli actions in the West Bank and Gaza constitute apartheid. Christians must, with confidence, reject any politically motivated charges of anti-Semitism that are made to silence legitimate criticism of Israel’s apartheid practices. This kind of hyperbolic language is untrue, harms civil discourse, and serves to hamper efforts to monitor, and prevent Israeli human rights violations. Not engaging in morally responsible action when faced with the clear findings of human rights organizations and the international community is morally indefensible.

This overture is part of an honest interfaith dialog between Jews and Christians.

Building strong interfaith relationships with our Jewish brothers and sisters is important for many Christians and churches. They are built on mutual interest, honesty, and integrity. Interfaith conversations encompass social justice issues such as hunger, homelessness, poverty, discrimination, human rights, war, and peace. Israel’s policies in occupied Palestine are but one issue. The Jewish community itself is divided on it. An honest dialog ultimately builds stronger relationships while silence erodes them. Through honest dialog we may find some Jewish people who support the occupation and some who agree it must end. We must have confidence that the interfaith relationships we have built on many social justice issues are strong enough to sustain a disagreement on the wisdom of Israel’s continued occupation of the West Bank and Gaza. Some relationships may be strengthened and some may be strained, but they are unlikely to break if they are based on honoring each other’s call to be faithful to their interpretation of Scripture.

Is it appropriate to criticize Israel’s human rights violations?

There are human rights violations and injustices in many countries in the Middle East besides Israel, and all such violations should be equally condemned. However, one reason to focus on Israel is that it receives more than one-third of all U.S. foreign aid. Americans, therefore, have a special responsibility to make sure that money is used to prevent social injustice, not to perpetuate it. Israel is the sixteenth richest country in the world; it is one of the world’s largest arms producers and nuclear powers, and it refuses to sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, and has defied seventy United Nations Security Council resolutions seeking peaceful reconciliation between Israelis and Palestinians. United States’ complicity with Israel obligates us to speak out.

Israel’s militarily occupation of Palestine is not needed for security reasons.

At any time since 1967, Israel could have allowed the United Nations to occupy the West Bank and provide security. United Nations peacekeeping missions have been successful in dozens of other countries. However, if the U.N. had occupied Palestine to provide security in 1967 or anytime thereafter, it would have preserved the land for residents of a Palestinian state and not allowed Israel to expropriate Palestinian land to build Jewish settlement colonies. Israel does not need to occupy the West Bank for security reasons. Israel chooses to occupy the West Bank so it can expand its borders and dominate the Palestinian people.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 04-03.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns strongly supports this item because we agree with B’Tselem, The Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, who state “Israel has created in the Occupied Territories a regime of separation based on discrimination.” The facts on the ground display a high level of discrimination for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial ethnic group over another, and on that basis, result in oppressing an entire ethnicity.

Palestinians are denied nationhood and nationality, while Israeli Jewish nationals (settlers on occupied land) have a superior status over Christians and Muslims living in Palestine on the basis of racial ethnic reasons. i.e., because they are Jewish. These Jewish settlers live in the Occupied Palestinians Territories (OPT) under civil law, while the indigenous people live under military law. Two separate legal systems apply based on identity. The separation is complete.

On Defining “Race” and Basing Privileges on It

- Contrary to common belief, “race” is a social and political reality, not a biological or genetic reality. There is widespread agreement among scholars that race, as understood in the United States, is a social construct. Race is not an objective, scientific, or biological consistent characteristic of a person or group of persons. (The ACREC resource person can speak more to this issue.)

- The evidence that race is not biological is the fact that the amount of genetic variation within so-called race groups is much greater than variation between groups. i.e., an African person can have more common DNA with an Asian person than with another African. “The genetic diversity within any historically defined race, swamps the small amount of difference between such groups, making the boundaries of these categories entirely arbitrary. Therefore, race in humans does not have a biological meaning” (Angie K. Huxley, http://www.biologyreference.com/Ar-Bi/Biology-of-Race Jan 23, 2014).

- The American Anthropological Association says “Present-day inequalities between so-called ‘racial’ groups are not consequences of their biological inheritance but products of historical and contemporary social, economic, educational, and political circumstances.” The ACREC reminds the 221st General Assembly (2014) that “ethnicity” has to do with blood and belonging, while “race” has to do with power, privilege, and prejudice. Which groups have “access to power and privilege” defines the boundaries, not biological differences.

- Racism, however, is a social system in which some are advantaged and others are disadvantaged because of skin color, or perceived “race.” Racism is a system of advantage that is perpetuated when its existence is not acknowledged.

On Inequality and Racism in Israel and the OPT

In Israel proper, according to The Abraham Fund, an initiative working since 1989 “to promote coexistence and equality among Israel’s Jewish and Arab citizens,” there is great inequality in Israel’s population, which is far worse in the OPT. This wide inequality gap is foundational for keeping Israel’s official policy of Hafrada (“separation” in Hebrew) in place. (apartheid means separation in Afrikaans).

The Abraham Fund: “Although Israel’s Arab citizens account for one-fifth of the country’s population, the economy of Israel is largely oriented toward its Jewish population. The Poverty Report (National Insurance Institute, 2006) indicates that over 54% of the country’s Arab citizens were living in poverty in 2006, compared to 14.7% of the country’s Jewish citizens. The widespread poverty among Arab families is attributed, for the most part, to the low employment rate of Arab citizens.”

The ACREC points to this data as foundational to attitudes that have developed in Israel and the OPT, which contribute to keeping the populations separate and unequal. According to a 2014 Israeli survey, “68% of Israelis believe the Arab population was subject to racism.” http://www.jpost.com/National-News/Survey-Who-suffers-from-racism-in-Israel-345603. (The figure is 79% for racism against Ethiopian migrant workers.)

* http://www.abrahamfund.org/en
Reported in Israeli Newspaper, Ha’aretz, a 2012 survey provides an even bleaker picture, showing that “most of the Jewish public in Israel supports the establishment of an apartheid regime in Israel if it formally annexes the West Bank.” Some of the survey results:

- 59 percent of the Jewish respondents want preference of Jews over Arabs in admissions to jobs in government ministries
- 49 percent of Jews want the state to treat Jewish citizens better than Arab citizens, 42 percent don’t want to live in the same buildings as Arabs
- 42 percent don’t want their children in the same classes as Arab children
- 33 percent want to bar Arabs from voting for the Israeli parliament
- 69 percent would object to giving Palestinians in the West Bank the right to vote if the West Bank was annexed by Israel
- 74 percent is in favor of separate roads for Israelis and Palestinians in the West Bank.

The ACREC reminds the church that these Arabs who are, according to the survey, “subject to racism,” are indigenous people who deserve nothing less than equal rights, guaranteed by whatever government is in place.

In The Jewish Daily Forward, August 2013, Larry Derfner writes on racism in Israel:

The ADL [Anti-Defamation League] goes after anti-Semitism with a fist, it goes after Israeli racism with a sigh. As a matter of fact, the ADL and the entire American Jewish establishment should suspend their campaigns against anti-Semitism indefinitely and take a look at what’s going on in Israel.

http://forward.com/articles/182171/israels-everyday-racism-and-how-american-jews-tu/#ixzz2xdzNqUEV

The ACREC holds on to the belief that God created all people good. To deny some people (because of skin color or language) the privileges other have, is to deny God’s good creation. To allow this system—in which some receive advantages simply because of perceived “race”—to go unchecked is to deny that God made all people in God’s own good image.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of Item 04-03 with amendment to Recommendations 4–6 as shown below: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“4. Acknowledge that Israel’s noncompliance with international law and numerous United Nations resolutions is assisted by the government of the United States through its annual gift of at least three billion dollars and its [repeated] veto within the United Nations Security Council of resolutions [condemning] [opposing] Israel’s violations of the human rights of Palestinians, and Israeli [violence] [military operations] against [Gaza and] its neighboring countries[,] particularly Lebanon].

It is hard to look at a multibillion dollar, twenty-foot concrete wall erected mainly on confiscated land that extends around settlements and isolates Palestinian communities, roughly twice the length of Israel’s 1967 border, and not realize that something other than security is involved. This overture provides detailed documentation of the systematic dispossession and control of the Palestinian people, followed by discussion of what measures the church and other persons of good will should take to try to reverse this train wreck of international policy.
The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) acknowledges the temptation to deny these realities and to avoid unpleasant discussions of these systematic patterns that are now hardening attitudes for a second or third generation and are affecting the moral standing of both Israel and the United States. The ACSWP has compared the documentation given in the overture with U.S. State Department reports on both Israel and the Occupied Territories, which are not without human rights violations (http://www.state.gov/j/drl/rls/hrrpt/humanrightsreport/index.htm?dynamic_load_id=220358&year=2013#wrapper), and with reports from another UN agency that investigates discrimination, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (http://unispal.un.org/UNISPAL.NSF/0/4DC9430BE04D596885257C2700565A0D). The committee has also reviewed other Israeli, Palestinian, and international human rights organization reports. It is hard to argue with the facts and laws presented in the overture. The question for commissioners is whether the measures recommended are the best response.

The basic approach of this overture is to challenge the temptation to denial, and to address the enabling policies of the U.S. government as well as the State of Israel. All recommendations but Recommendation 5 do this in a forthright way that is consistent with the policies of previous General Assemblies, which are correctly cited in the overture. Commissioners need to determine whether the suffering and lack of hope of the Palestinian people merits our church challenging the status quo. In light of the repeated failure of “peace processes” and the de facto ethnic cleansing involved in settlement expansion, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises approval, with the amendments noted.

Recommendation 5 of the overture proposes that the term, “apartheid,” be recognized as an accurate word for the systemic nature of what the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has generally called, “occupation.” “Occupation” does not address the second-class citizenship of Arab Israelis within the 1967 boundaries of Israel, nor does it fully address the State of Israel’s unilateral claims to annex all of Jerusalem and other territory. But “occupation” has characterized the military rule, control, and surveillance of movement, separate court system, and denial of citizenship rights in the “occupied territories.” After forty-seven years, however, measures that might be justified in the short term take on another character. “Apartheid” is a word increasingly used within Israel and around the world, often in relation to the “separation barrier” described above, and “apartheid” is in fact the Afrikaans word for “separation.”

On a factual level, commissioners may consider whether the Rome Statute’s emphasis on systemic discrimination rather than race alone in defining “apartheid” is accurate. The relevant provision cited in the overture is “racial discrimination,” as “any distinction, exclusion, restriction, or preference based on race, color, descent, or national or ethnic origin that has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life.”

Yet the force of the word, “apartheid,” is undeniably emotional and commissioners may want to modify its force, as in “resemble apartheid,” or “amount to a form of apartheid,” or avoid the word altogether. Use of the word would not imply an exact comparison with South African practice, which generally wanted Black labor along with their land and used “passes” rather than “permits.” Without a substantial change in the conditions Israel imposes on Palestinian life, however, it will become harder and harder to avoid using the “A” word for an intense form of ethnic and religious discrimination that does not contribute to peace or democracy.

Item 4-03 stands with or without Recommendation 5, and use of the term “apartheid” does not affect measures of nonviolent economic pressure, such as boycott or divestment.

On Supporting Middle East Peacemaking—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to:

The PC(USA) has a long standing commitment to peace in Israel and Palestine. We recognize the complexity of the issues, the decades-long struggle, and the pain suffered and inflicted by policies and practices of both the Israeli government and Palestinian entities. We further acknowledge and confess our own complicity in both the historic and current suffering of Israeli and Palestinian. Yearning for justice and reconciliation, the 221st General Assembly (2014) recommends the following:

[2.] [Reject any proposed divestment and economic sanctions against the state of Israel or any application of the PC(USA)’s corporate engagement policies toward such ends.] [Instruct the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions of the PC(USA), to divest from Caterpillar, Inc., Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions, in accord with our church’s decades-long socially responsible investment (SRI) history, and not to reinvest in these companies until the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee of the PC(USA) is fully satisfied that product sales and services by these companies are no longer in conflict with our church investment policy. This action on divestment [is not to be construed or represented by any organization of the PC(USA) as divestment from the State of Israel, or as alignment with or endorsement] [does not mean an alignment with the overall strategy] of the global BDS (Boycott, Divest and Sanctions) movement.]

[3.] Call [Reaffirm PC(USA)’s commitment to interfaith dialogue and partnerships with American Jewish and Muslim friends and Palestinian Christians, and call] for all presbyteries and congregations within the PC(USA) to include interfaith dialogue and relationship-building as part of their own engagement in working for a just peace.

[4.] Call for all foreign aid given by the U.S. government—including aid to Israel and the Palestinian Authority—to be comprehensively and transparently accounted to the American people and held to the same standards of compliance with all applicable laws.

[5.] Call for church advocacy for foreign-aid accountability to be directed toward its universal adherence rather than targeted for selective application to some recipients and not others.

[6.] Encourage Presbyterians to travel to the Holy Land, and give broad support to the Christian, Jewish, and Muslim communities throughout the Middle East.

[8.] Urge all church institutions to give careful consideration to possible investments in Israel-Palestine that advance peace and improve the lives of Palestinians and Israelis.

Rationale

Two States for Two Peoples

The two-state solution remains the best path to sustainable peace, but requires a renewed commitment to peacemaking by Israelis, Palestinians, and the international community. The Presbyterian community can help this renewed effort by continued advocacy of our core peacemaking principles: that the rights and aspirations of both Palestinians and Israelis be respected, that both parties have legitimate grievances, and that both parties have obligations that must be met for the peace process to move forward.

For Israel, there is no military solution to the conflict. Without progress toward a two-state solution, the violence may subside for periods of time but will inevitably return. The security concerns of Israel are legitimate, proven by hostile actions by its neighbors, and Israel’s security must be assured. At the same time, Israeli actions that constrain the ability of Palestinians to build a peaceful and free society hinder the cause of a democratic Jewish homeland. Unilateral actions by the parties are counterproductive. In 2012, the unilateral move by the Palestinian Authority for U.N. recognition, in violation of previous peace agreements between the Palestinian Authority and Israel, was met with another Israeli announcement of West Bank settlement expansion that many in the international community contend hinders the creation of a viable and contiguous Palestinian state. Israel also suspended tax transfers to the Palestinian Authority (PA), redirecting taxes collected to cover unpaid electric power obligations of the PA. Both parties need to return to bilateral negotiations, as a better path to peace.

For Palestinians to become effective negotiators representing their majority view and interests, they need to resolve internal political divisions within Palestinian society. While polling shows most Palestinians support peaceful coexistence and the two-state solution, powerful Palestinian factions, most notably Hamas, remain openly committed to violence and the destruction of Israel. The 2012 launching of rockets and missiles from Gaza at Israeli homes and schools set back the cause of a Palestinian state, and innocent Palestinians ended up suffering from the response as rockets were launched from the midst of densely populated civilian areas in Gaza. We hear endlessly within our church about the need to “end the occupation.” However, if Israelis believe the West Bank could become another launching pad for rocket attacks in the manner Gaza has, they will, understandably, not end their military presence in the West Bank. Until the rocket attacks and other violence end permanently, and Palestinians as a people come together and abandon the idea of destroying Israel, there can be no free and independent Palestinian state.

The path to a two-state peace may be long and rough, but as long as there are ordinary Israelis and Palestinians of good will who yearn for peace, and there are many, their hopes and aspirations must not be abandoned. Hamas and other violent factions are barriers to peace. It should not be forgotten, however, that over the last several years the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank has made important progress in discouraging violence, establishing the rule of law, and improving the lives of ordinary Palestinians. There have been no rockets launched at Israel from the West Bank, and 95 percent of West Bank Palestinians are subject to Palestinian police and security, not Israeli.

A statement we often hear is that “the window for peace is about to close” and “urgent action is needed.” The truth is that there are no fast solutions to these kinds of protracted challenges. Negotiations between Palestinian and Israeli leaders are “frozen” because neither side yet has a powerful enough consensus from their people to negotiate a final and definitive peace agreement. Such a consensus is built one person at a time.

Our role, as a church, should be to support grassroots dialogue and bridge-building toward that end, especially with young Palestinians and Israelis, and support positive economic cooperation between Palestinian and Israeli enterprises. When such social and economic efforts are successful, both Palestinian and Israeli leaders are more empowered to take the risks necessary to achieve sustainable peace.

Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions (BDS) Efforts That Target Israel Are Fundamentally Unjust, Do Not Advance Peace, and Should Not Be Supported

The Boycott, Divestment, Sanctions (BDS) effort is a coordinated international movement targeting Israel. Most of the world sees the Israeli-Palestinian conflict as the conflict it is. Many BDS advocates try to frame the problem as one that is caused by the “occupation,” with one party (Israel) oppressing another (the Palestinians). Many BDS advocates refuse to acknowledge the legitimacy of Israeli security concerns. To the Palestinian leaders of the BDS movement, all of Israel is considered “occupied Palestinian territory.” By their own statements, the prospect of a two-state solution that recognizes Israel’s right to peace and security along with the Palestinian right to freedom and self-determination is not what they really want. For them, only a “one-state” of Palestine will satisfy their long-range goals. Long-standing PC(USA) policy supports a two-state solution, making support of the international BDS movement incompatible and counterproductive.

When BDS activists claim that they only want Israel to end the occupation of the disputed territories, many are disguising their long-range objectives. When Israel voluntarily ended the occupation of Southern Lebanon, Hezbollah took over and now has more than 50,000 rockets aimed at Israeli cities. Hezbollah openly calls for the complete destruction of Israel. Israel unilaterally ended the occupation of the Gaza Strip. Hamas now controls Gaza, and openly calls for the annihilation of Israel. If Israel were to unilaterally pull out of the West Bank area before a negotiated settlement is achieved as the result of political and economic pressure from the international BDS movement, it is likely that armed groups like Hamas would take over the West Bank just as they took over Gaza and put millions of innocent lives at risk.

In recent years the BDS movement, in a coordinated effort, solicited all four of the mainline Christian denominations to join the BDS movements’ efforts to divest from specific U.S. companies that do business with Israel. These efforts were rejected by all four denominations.

The Lutherans refused to join the BDS effort, explicitly stating at their churchwide assembly that they would not go down the divestment path. The presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church has come out against divestment and in favor of positive investment. The United Methodist Church’s pension board concluded that the three companies targeted for divestment by the BDS movement (Hewlett Packard, Caterpillar, and Motorola Solutions) have positive human rights records and codes of conduct and that divesting from them would render the church unable to raise any concerns that might arise in the future. The Methodist’s general conference agreed, overwhelmingly rejecting divestment by a two-to-one margin. The 220th General Assembly (2012) of the PC(USA) rejected divestment, as did three consecutive General Assemblies before it who refused to approve BDS overtures sent to them. The most recent head of the National Council of Churches also opposed BDS.

Fair and Consistent Treatment of Foreign Aid Recipients

Fair, consistent, and unbiased treatment implies that the human rights record of Israel should be judged alongside the human rights records of the Palestinian group Hamas, which governs the Gaza Strip, and the Palestinian Authority (PA), which governs the West Bank. (The United States provides direct aid to the PA, and indirect aid to Hamas-governed Gaza through the U.N.).

In 2012 the widely respected organization Human Rights Watch issued a comprehensive report on the extent of human rights violations by Hamas in the Gaza Strip. The report documented a pervasive practice of beatings, torture, and executions by firing squad without fair trial. The Charter of Hamas calls for the destruction of Israel and claims that Muslims have a religious obligation to kill Jews. Hamas openly describes the intentional killing of Israeli civilians as a legitimate tactic of “resistance.” Since Israel unilaterally ended the occupation of Gaza in 2005, thousands of rockets have been launched from Gaza at Israeli homes and schools.

In the West Bank, the Palestinian Authority has made important strides establishing the rule of law, discouraging violence, and advancing the welfare of ordinary Palestinians. Nonetheless, Palestinians have been arrested for nothing more than criticizing PA leadership. In 2012, a Palestinian man in the West Bank, Muhammad Abu Shahala, was sentenced to death for selling land to a Jew, a capital crime under Palestinian Authority laws, which was a clear violation of human rights.

Human rights must be a priority. A peaceful and secure Middle East is an equally important priority. Decisions balancing these essential priorities must be made thoughtfully and carefully, and, unfortunately, are not simple and easy. The faith community can play an important and constructive role, but only if all people of good will work together.

A Model for Peacemaking

Many thought that the violent confrontation between Catholics and Protestants in Northern Ireland would never end peacefully. It did—with the help of the PC(USA). Rather than picking a side, PC(USA) peacemakers sent to Northern Ireland became trusted intermediaries able to work with both sides of the battle. Our peacemakers were quick to condemn injustice perpetrated by either side and equally quick to affirm the aspirations for peace that existed in the hearts of people on both sides.

This model for peacemaking not only is effective, it is consistent with biblical commands that we work for justice. This overture moves the PC(USA) in the direction of the Northern Ireland model and away from a model that is transparently partisan for one side in the Israel-Palestine tragedy.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) of the PC(USA) (GA) reaffirmed and reinforced the decades-long Presbyterian commitment to peacemaking in the Middle East. Despite an intense and well-funded lobbying campaign by BDS advocates from both within and outside the PC(USA), the GA rejected a recurring proposal to divest from three companies doing business with Israel: Caterpillar Tractor, Hewlett Packard, and Motorola Solutions. Sadly, BDS advocates within our denomination, affiliated with the global Boycott, Divest, and Sanction (BDS) movement, seem unwilling to accept the fact that our church has time after time chosen a different path toward advancing peace.

Instead of divestment, the 220th General Assembly (2012) called for positive investment in peace. General Assembly commissioners wisely chose to stay the course embraced by the PC(USA) consistently for decades: to engage in dialogue and cooperation with all people of good will, to act as peacemakers and not parties to the conflict, and to invest in peaceful endeavors of both an economic and social character. This coincided with recent actions by the Lutherans, Methodists, and Episcopalians all soundly rejecting divestment and embracing positive investment for peace.

In 2010, close to 35,000 West Bank Palestinians were employed by Israeli companies with operations in the West Bank, supporting more than 200,000 Palestinians financially (Ha’aretz December 2010). In a landmark agreement, the Histadrut (Israeli Trade Union Council) and the Palestine General Federation of Trade Unions (PGFTU) signed an agreement in August 2008 to base future relations on negotiation, dialogue, and joint initiatives to advance “fraternity and co-existence” (Israeli and Palestinian trade unions cooperate). An example of this cooperation was evident in October 2007 when the Histadrut successfully petitioned Israel’s High Court of Justice for Israeli labour law to be applied in the occupied territories, something that was previously denied. Nine judges ruled that Palestinians working for Israeli employers in West Bank settlements should be given the same work benefits provided by Israeli law. The ruling set an important precedent that benefits thousands of Palestinians working for Israelis and Israeli companies throughout the West Bank. Palestinians who work for Israeli companies earn twice as much on average as those who work in areas controlled by the Palestinian Authority. For many, the difference in wages is even higher (Your Middle East, 2012).

SodaStream is an example of an Israeli company targeted by the BDS movement. Sodastream has operations in the Maaleh Adumim settlement block adjacent to Jerusalem, which is widely expected by both Palestinians and Israelis to be part of Israel proper once final borders (with fair and sensible land swaps) between Israel and Palestine are established. Sodastream’s settlement operations are an example of successful coexistence with its 160 West Bank employees and Israeli Jews, Christians, Russians, Ethiopians, and Bedouin. The company celebrates the holidays of all and fosters cultural exchange. When BDS activists pressured a Swiss company to sever ties with SodaStream, the company reestablished its business ties after doing its own investigation of SodaStream policies.

According to a study conducted by Israeli researcher Issa Smeirat as part of his M.A degree, more than 16,000 Palestinians from the West Bank have established businesses and firms inside Israel and its settlements. This includes establishing several factories and companies, many of which have numerous branches (Ha’aretz, Nov. 22, 2011).

A good case in point is the Atarot industrial zone adjacent to Jerusalem. Before 2001, more than 200 companies were located in the zone. About forty of them were Arab-owned, and two-thirds of the 4,000 employees were East Jerusalem or Palestinian Arabs. Today, even the Palestinian Authority does not describe the Atarot industrial park as an “illegal settlement” because Palestinians have more than $500 million of investments in the area, including the print headquarters for the Palesti-
Economic development and Palestinian-Israeli cooperation in the West Bank is an essential foundation for peace. Efforts are already underway at the grassroots level and can be furthered by political leaders engaged in ongoing dialogue. This past May, 300 Palestinian and Israeli business leaders met at the World Economic Forum meeting in Jordan and formed a new initiative called Breaking the Impasse (BTI). The goals of BTI are twofold: to press Palestinian and Israeli political leaders to move forward on the two-state solution, two states for two peoples, and to advance commerce that will benefit both parties and bolster the peace process.

The Israeli-Palestinian Chamber of Commerce is focused on the same objective of economic growth and cooperation. In 2012, two-way trade between Israel and Palestinian-governed areas totaled $4.3 billion. While the majority of this trade was the purchase of Israeli products by Palestinians, $816 million was spent by Israelis on Palestinian-produced goods and products. Palestinian sales to Israel were up 18 percent from the prior year and moving in the right direction. In addition to the economic benefit, this commerce creates more opportunity for Israelis and Palestinians to simply know each other and relate on a person-to-person basis.

Israel can speed economic development in the West Bank by providing increased freedom of movement and permitting development of needed infrastructure. Many security checkpoints have been closed as violence in the West Bank has subsided, but more can still be done. Better roads in Israeli-administered areas of the West Bank are needed to efficiently link Palestinian population centers. An example of this the new Palestinian city of Rawabi, currently under construction, which needs a good road connecting to Ramallah that must pass through Israeli administered territory. Israeli approval for this road has yet to be finalized, and should be a high priority topic in the peace negotiations.

This overture calls on Presbyterians to act as peacemakers in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, a conflict that has gone on too long, must end, and will end when people of good will in Israel and Palestine prevail. The overture recognizes the necessity of foundation building for peace through grassroots collaboration, person-to-person contact, mutual respect, and cooperation. It calls on Presbyterians to be active and constructive participants in these efforts, as growing numbers of ordinary Israelis and Palestinians demand the peaceful future they deserve.

The overture also calls on the General Assembly to make clear that the PC(USA) is not a part of the international Boycott, Divest, and Sanction (BDS) movement. Proposals seeking divestment from companies doing business with Israel have been rejected at the last four consecutive General Assemblies in 2006, 2008, 2010, and 2012, yet they keep coming back as if none of these previous considerations, and subsequent rejections, had happened. Official committees of the PC(USA), like the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), have failed to recognize the spirit and intent of prior General Assembly actions and have continued to promote the very kind of negative approach to peacemaking that prior General Assemblies have rejected. This is wrong and must end.

We all want to see an end to the conflict and the occupation, but here a moment of truth is called for: the occupation will not and cannot end until the Palestinian people and their leaders choose a viable, democratic, Palestinian state, committed to living peacefully alongside the Jewish state of Israel. This is the hope of all of us, but this point has not yet been reached.

We wish to thank in advance all of those commissioners, advisory delegates, and staff coming to the PC(USA)’s 221st General Assembly (2014) with a biblical commitment to a more just and peaceful world.

ACSWP Advice and Counsel on Item 04-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises disapproval of this overture for the following reasons:

1. This overture is essentially the opposite of prophetic challenge and would restrict the witness of the church and the hopes of the Palestinian people. Next to its innocence about power and sin, it is the voices of Palestinian Christians that are most lacking in this overture. The overture echoes Israeli government attacks on the Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions (BDS) movement. About 40 percent of Prime Minister Netanyahu’s annual speech this spring to AIPAC, the American Israeli Public Affairs Committee, comprised attacks on BDS (http://mondoweiss.net/2014/03/netanyahu-denouncing-travelers.html). The large amounts of money and time spent by representatives and supporters of the Likud-led Israeli government attacking Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions, strongly suggests that they understand that their own policies of occupation are the source of their “de-legitimation.” The effectiveness of nonviolent economic pressure was also confirmed by Secretary of State John Kerry, who pointed to the growing worldwide strength of BDS in one of his efforts to keep the “peace process” going.
2. That this overture echoes so much of the Netanyahu government party line should give commissioners pause. Clearly most international supporters of nonviolent economic pressure on Israel to end the occupation understand that the Palestinians accepted the existence of Israel in 1988, one reason why the Oslo process could begin in the early 1990s. The overture follows the defenders of occupation in repeatedly insinuating that what supporters of divestment “really want” is a “one state,” and that “many are disguising their long-term objectives.” Well, some may regard a two-state solution impossible at this point due to settlements, and others may oppose Israel’s existence, but that has never been the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s position. Even Hamas, for example, demonized throughout the overture, effectively accepts Israel’s existence despite its rhetoric, which mirrors the language of Israeli extremist parties. Further, while any settlement must include justice for the Palestinian refugees, it is scare-mongering to suggest that fair compensation would involve their mass return to Israel within the Green Line of 1949/1967. Far from opposing the safety and freedom of Israel, efforts at nonviolent economic pressure are intended to prevent it from forever being defined as an occupier.

3. While the General Assembly supports what is referred to as the two-state solution, based on United Nations resolutions, the capacity of the U.S. government to “broker” peace—even while preventing a broader UN-backed process of negotiation—must be backed by fair nonviolent economic pressure if it is ever to be successful. By urging the abandonment of corporate social responsibility—an area the Presbyterian and other “mainline” Protestant churches pioneered—Item 4-04 would deny the church the use of its investments for mission and damage the church’s integrity. Basic to that integrity is putting our investments where our witness is. Being a peacemaker does not only mean calling for a peace process when there is no peace process. And frankly, caring about people under occupation carries a sense of urgency missing from this overture. It is not partisanship to seek justice by refusing to cooperate with oppression, and divestment and boycott are basic forms of noncooperation.

4. Effective peacemaking understands power and resistance and is not conflict-avoidance. There is a strong strand of Christian realism in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s peacemaking work, a realism that started the corporate responsibility process before other denominations. It is that realism that must judge this overture as naïve about the effective power of a nuclear-armed state that practices “asymmetric containment” over a powerless and divided population. Peacemaking requires justice which requires equalizing power. In Northern Ireland, the United States helped the Roman Catholic minority gain standing with Great Britain while also insisting on respect for human rights and voting for all. In Israel and Palestine, the United States has sided with the more powerful party and has echoed the Israeli government in condemning and blocking as “unilateral” efforts by Palestinians to get their rights respected through international law at the United Nations.

5. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s advice & counsel memorandum on Item 4-06, “Occupation-free” investment presents sources of data on the strangulation of the Palestinian economy, including the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and the Quartet (U.S., UN, European Union, and Russia). The arguments of this overture are very similar to those that supported the role of U.S. companies in South Africa during apartheid. The economists and bankers in those multilateral institutions are very clear that the Palestinian economy cannot grow within the thicket of restrictions around isolated sectors and deprived of both natural resources, including water, and developed resources, such as steady electricity and full “3G” radio frequencies. Commissioners interested in a hardheaded look at the economics of the occupation are encouraged to read those resources that look at the big picture of desperation that drives Palestinians to work at almost any task to support their families.

6. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy appreciates the statement that “For Israel, there is no military solution to the conflict.” Yet the overture prioritizes Israel’s security and underlines the flaws of Hamas and other “hostile” neighbors without noting the constant violence of the occupation. Past General Assemblies and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy are also concerned about Israel’s security, and wish it were less dependent on the constant exercise of military might. The methods of nonviolent witness recommended by MRTI do not endorse human rights violations by anyone. Where the overture itself is most deeply partisan, however, is in denying Palestinians, Muslim and Christian, a voice. Brave Christians, under constant pressure to maintain residency and unable to get permits to build, are being forced out of Jerusalem. Muslims and Christians are unable to worship freely and their properties are under constant threat of encroachment, and yet they ask for nonviolent economic pressure—just as did the South African black population. Despite its rhetoric, this overture asks the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to choose a side: the side of occupation. In the struggle for South Africa, and in the Central American struggles, as in the civil rights struggle here at home, the church stepped up. We think it is that time again.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 04-04.

The ACREC commends the general peacemaking stance of this overture but sees multiple places of misreadings and misrepresentations. The ACREC urges the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove this overture because it continues the enabling paradigm of occupation that has been in place for almost fifty years.
This overture is completely lacking the reality of the occupation. Nothing in the recommendations of this overture will eliminate the conditions of living under occupation. The ACREC sees no prescription for a way forward through elimination of injustice in this overture.

The false descriptions provided of the economic picture are not actually helpful in eliminating the restraints that are holding down the Palestinian economy. No Palestinian prefers to work under an occupied government and would prefer to work for a free Palestine, even if their standards of living might suffer for a time.

Further, the overture is missing any reference to the current racism that is rampant in Israeli society, as evidenced in recent data, linked below. ACREC sees no prescription for the elimination of racism in this overture, and believes that support of this form of misrepresentation of the realities in Israel/Palestine would be enabling the occupation to continue.

Data on discrimination in Israel:

The Abraham Fund: “Although Israel’s Arab citizens account for one-fifth of the country’s population, the economy of Israel is largely oriented toward its Jewish population. The Poverty Report (National Insurance Institute, 2006) indicates that over 54% of the country’s Arab citizens were living in poverty in 2006, compared to 14.7% of the country’s Jewish citizens. The widespread poverty among Arab families is attributed, for the most part, to the low employment rate of Arab citizens.”

The ACREC points to this data as foundational to attitudes that have developed in Israel and the OPT, which contribute to keeping the populations separate and unequal. According to a 2014 Israeli survey, “68% of Israelis believe the Arab population was subject to racism” (http://www.jpost.com/National-News/Survey-Who-suffers-from-racism-in-Israel-345603). (The figure is 79 percent for racism against Ethiopian migrant workers).

Reported in Israeli Newspaper, Ha’aretz, a 2012 survey provides an even bleaker picture, showing that “most of the Jewish public in Israel supports the establishment of an apartheid regime in Israel if it formally annexes the West Bank.” Some of the survey results:

- 59 percent of the Jewish respondents want preference of Jews over Arabs in admissions to jobs in government ministries
- 49 percent of Jews want the state to treat Jewish citizens better than Arab citizens, 42 percent don’t want to live in the same buildings as Arabs
- 42 percent don’t want their children in the same classes as Arab children
- 33 percent want to bar Arabs from voting for the Israeli parliament
- 69 percent would object to giving Palestinians in the West Bank the right to vote if the West Bank was annexed by Israel
- 74 percent is in favor of separate roads for Israelis and Palestinians in the West Bank.

http://www.haaretz.com/news/national/survey-most-israeli-jews-wouldn-t-give-palestinians-vote-if-west-bank-was-annexed.premium-1.471644

The ACREC reminds the church that these Arabs who are, according to the survey, “subject to racism,” are indigenous people who deserve nothing less than equal rights, guaranteed by whatever government is in place.

In The Jewish Daily Forward, August 2013, Larry Derfner writes on racism in Israel:

The ADL [Anti-Defamation League] goes after anti-Semitism with a fist, it goes after Israeli racism with a sigh. As a matter of fact, the ADL and the entire American Jewish establishment should suspend their campaigns against anti-Semitism indefinitely and take a look at what’s going on in Israel.

http://forward.com/articles/182171/israels-everyday-racism-and-how-american-jews-tu/#ixzz2xdzNqUEV

The ACREC holds on to the belief that God created all people good. To deny some people (because of skin color or language) the privileges other have, is to deny God’s good creation. To allow this system—in which some receive advantages simply because of perceived “race”—to go unchecked is to deny that God made all people in God’s own good image.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-04

Comment on Item 04-04—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has worked in close collaboration with ecumenical partners throughout the Middle East for nearly two centuries, listening attentively to their expression of their witness, lives, hopes, and needs. This overture in its rationale and recommendations is at sharp variance with the lived experience of our ecumenical partners in Israel-Palestine. Whether they are Palestinian citizens of Israel suffering from discrimination in almost every aspect of their lives or Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza enduring a multi-decade military occupation and economic colonization, their reality reflects an enormous imbalance of power.

Strategies and programs seeking a just peace based on a two-state solution that fail to acknowledge and account for this reality on the ground will be ineffective if not counterproductive.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency has worked and is working to promote General Assembly policy affirming universal human rights and international humanitarian law applying the same ethical standards and moral principles to all nations. This involves public policy advocacy in international arenas such as the United Nations and domestically with the U.S. government, economic development and humanitarian relief, and engagement with transnational corporations to conform their practices with respect for human rights, international law, and economic and social justice.

On Calling for a Boycott of All Hewlett-Packard Products—From the Presbytery of New Brunswick.

The Presbytery of New Brunswick overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Call for the boycott of all products manufactured and sold by Hewlett-Packard until the company ceases to profit from all non-peaceful pursuits in the Occupied Palestinian Territories and the violation of Palestinian human rights.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to

   a. communicate this action to all other PC(USA) councils and entities and strongly encourage these groups and organizations to endorse this boycott, calling upon all Presbyterians to be led by their conscience in the face of human rights violations, ongoing oppression, and injustice;

   b. inform our ecumenical partners of this action, both nationally and globally, encouraging them to do the same.

Rationale

THE HISTORY OF HEWLETT-PACKARD (HP)

Hewlett-Packard (HP) began in 1938 as the creation of good friends, Bill Hewlett and Dave Packard. In that year they invented their first product: Oscillators for Walt Disney (model 200B). By 1942 the company became a health insurance pioneer. After entering the microwave field in 1943, HP incorporated in 1947, went public in 1957, and global in 1959. During this time the company developed Fast Frequency Counters and the first Oscilloscopes. In 1962 it made the Fortune 500 list and would reach the top of that list in 1984. In the 1970s, HP took the lead in laser technology and became a leader in business computing. In the 1980s, the company introduced the Touchscreen Personal Computer, the LaserJet printer, and the DeskJet printer. By 1993, ten million LaserJet printers had been sold throughout the world and the company introduced the Omnibook 300 laptop computer. The very first commercial all-in-one device went to market in 1994. By 2005 HP was called “the most trusted” industry leader. From 2005–2011, Hewlett Packard acquired these companies: Mercury Interactive Corporation, EDS, Palm Inc. and ArcSight (http://www8.hp.com/us/en/hp-information/about-hp/history/history.html).

ON THE ONE HAND—HP’S POLICY STATEMENTS

HP Global Citizenship Statement

“At HP, we embrace our role as a global citizen. As one of the world’s largest information technologies companies, what we do and how we do it matters. That’s why we use global citizenship to help shape and advance our business strategy… We

HP Statement on Corporate Ethics

“We use our size and influence to promote respect for human rights in all our business dealings. We do this by working with organizations such as the Global Business Initiative on Human Rights (GBI) and BSR, which promote awareness of the U.N. Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights” (http://www8.hp.com/us/en/hp-information/global-citizenship/governance/ethics.html and see also those guiding principles as set forth in the document found at http://www.ohchr.org/Documents/Publications/GuidingPrinciplesBusinessHR_EN.pdf).

ON THE OTHER HAND—FACTS ON THE GROUND

HP Business Practices in Regard to Palestine

“The company sells hardware to the Israeli Navy, and as a contractor manages all Information Technology (IT) including its operational communications, logistics, and planning including the ongoing naval blockade of the Gaza Strip. This blockade has included interdicting humanitarian supplies by attacking or turning back international vessels carrying the supplies, and attacks on Palestinian fishermen.

The company also is involved through its ownership of Electronic Data Systems (EDS) in providing electronic biometric identification scanning equipment to monitor only Palestinians at several checkpoints inside the West Bank, including as part of the separate road system, restricting Palestinian movement. At these checkpoints, the 2.4 million West Bank Palestinians are required to submit to lengthy waits as well as the mandatory biometric scanning, while Israelis and other passport holders transit without scanning or comparable delays.

Hewlett-Packard also has extensive involvement with the Israeli army. Soldiers in the IDF are issued a Tadiran Communications ruggedized personal digital assistant (RPDA) based on the Hewlett-Packard IPAQ (handhelds and smart phones) as part of the Israel’s Anog soldier modernization program. This equipment is used to enforce the occupation. In July 2009, Hewlett-Packard won a contract for the installation of software products in a three-year IDF virtualization tender worth an estimated $15 million, with a two-year option to extend.

Hewlett-Packard also has business relationships with the illegal settlements in the West Bank. A subsidiary, HP Invent, outsources Information Technology services to Matrix and to its subsidiary Talpiot, which has its main outsourcing center in the illegal West Bank settlement of Modi’in Illit. By using Talpiot’s services, clients of the company are profiting from the company’s relationship with an illegal settlement and are helping solidify the occupation.

In addition, Hewlett-Packard worked with the government of the illegal settlement of Ariel in the occupied West Bank to develop specialized solutions for government data storage, and used this project in marketing publicity. Despite the fact that Ariel is deep in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, the company’s published description of this work claims that Ariel is within Israel, including the use of a map-making no reference to the Palestine as a separate occupied territory."

This information comes from the report of the PC(USA) Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) to the 220th General Assembly (Pittsburgh, 2012) and can be found at: http://www.pc-biz.org/IOBView.aspx?m=ro&id=4021.

PRESENT GENERAL ASSEMBLY POLICY ON BOYCOTT REGARDING PALESTINE

The 220th General Assembly (2012) approved the following action by a 457-180-3 vote:

1. Call upon all nations to prohibit the import of products made by enterprises in Israeli settlements on Palestinian land.

2. Call for the boycott of all Israeli products coming from the occupied Palestinian Territories, including AHAVA Dead Sea Laboratories Beauty Products and all date products of Hadiklaim, the Israel Date Growers Co-operative Ltd., often marked by the brand names: King Solomon Dates and Jordan River (not Israeli products from Israel).

3. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to all other PC(USA) councils and entities and invite and strongly encourage those groups and organizations to endorse this boycott until significant progress toward Palestinian rights and independence can be reported to the General Assembly or General Assembly Mission Council.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk to inform our ecumenical partners of this action, both nationally and globally, and call upon them to join the boycott of these companies. (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 41; see also http://www.pc-biz.org/IOBView.aspx?m=ro&id=3775)

In approving this boycott of all Israeli settlement goods, it was the intent of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to send a clear message that it will not tolerate the profiting of companies through military occupation, ethnic cleansing, the illegal appropriation of land and natural resources, and policies promoting displacement and disenfranchisement in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. Along with the United Methodist Church, which took the same action in 2012, Presbyterians have become leaders in what has become an international interfaith boycott movement. Through its Israel Palestine Mission Network, for instance, the PC(USA) has been a significant player in the U.S. Campaign to End the Occupation Interfaith Coalition’s boycott of So- dastream, which is a product manufactured by an Israeli company in the illegal settlement of Ma’ale Adumim outside of Bethle- hem. This boycott effort is in full accordance with the actions of the 220th General Assembly (2012).

This is only part of the equation, however. At the same time that we are telling Israeli companies that they must not prof- it from the occupation of Palestine, we are still supporting American corporations that are doing the same through the sale and service of products in support of the occupation of Palestine by the Israeli government and military. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has longstanding policy and practice in which it does not invest in corporations that profit from non-peaceful pursuits, but also has a strong history of calling upon the consciences of individual Presbyterians to not purchase products from companies that through their business practices actively engage in the violation of human rights in our nation and the world. Through boycott, Presbyterians have been an important part of the successful fight against apartheid in South Africa, ending the sales of Nestles’ infant formula to impoverished mothers in developing nations that caused infant affliction and death, and ensuring the human rights of exploited farm workers in Immokalee, Florida, through the Taco Bell boycott, to name only a few.

The time for Presbyterians to stand up against a U.S. company that is seriously violating the rights of all Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territories is now upon us. As seen on its own website, HP takes pride in making statements about its global citizenry and corporate ethics in our nation and in the world. As a Church of Jesus Christ, seeking to be a moral agent in, and prophetic voice to a fallen creation, it is our great responsibility to call upon HP to make good on its own moral and ethical claims. Hewlett-Packard has been a great American company since 1938 and we can be proud of its innovation throughout the decades. Hardly any of us are able to do business, personal or otherwise, without exposure to and usage of HP products, which makes this particular boycott so challenging. We acknowledge that this is a hard decision to make because large numbers of us like their products and even have them in our homes, including the author of this overture. In that way, HP has been like a corporate friend to American businesses and households for a long time. It is now time, however, to tell our corporate friend that it is violating human rights in terrible ways and that we can no longer purchase its products until such time that it ceases to profit from this violation through an occupation that is causing and continuing the hardship, suffering and pain, and even death of innocent Palestinians.

Concurrence to Item 04-05 from the Presbyteries of Greater Atlanta and Palisades.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-05—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

This overture requests the Presbyterian Church to be a witness for the need for human rights for Palestinians and for an end to the Israeli occupation.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of Item 04-05.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) approved a boycott of all products produced in Israeli settlements, naming several well-known consumer brands (such as Ahava cosmetics) and also noting that such products are often labeled, “made in Isra- el.” The European Union is increasingly requiring more accurate labeling, and an Israeli human rights group produces a thorough list of companies and products of the settlements. Hewlett-Packard certainly operates in and helps sustain Israeli settlements, even if its products are made and services provided in many different places. And most U.S. consumers are more likely to encounter Hewlett-Packard products than the products of Caterpillar Tractor and Motorola Solutions, the two other companies whose engagement in non-peaceful pursuits is detailed in the divestment recommendations of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI).

One question before commissioners is whether they should recommend the Hewlett-Packard boycott to encourage personal choices to purchase consistent with any shared decision of the General Assembly as a body to recommend divestment. Such a boycott would not only be consistent but have a different kind of impact on both the purchase-avoider and the company. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy speaks to the nature of boycott and selective purchasing in general below.

A second question has to do with the focus on Hewlett-Packard rather than the other two corporations recommended for divestment based on their strategic and instrumental role in the occupation of Palestine. It may be that commissioners would want to recommend broadening the number of firms to be boycotted, or to recommend study of broader boycott choices regarding the occupation. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy believes there is an element of urgency in any witness related to the situation in Palestine and supports the boycott of Hewlett-Packard products partly for that reason, but that sense of urgency regarding the fate of a two-state solution and other conditions could support adding Caterpillar and Motorola Solutions as well, given the thorough process already conducted with regard to both.

With regard to boycotts as a strategy of nonviolent economic pressure, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has approved boycott positions in the past, including two dealing with food products: the Nestle Boycott (concerning improperly marketed infant formula in countries lacking adequate clean water) and the Taco Bell Boycott (to increase farm worker wages). In the case of Nestle, boycott was chosen partly because few U.S. investors held securities in the Swiss-based firm and partly because its chocolate products were well-known. (Other infant formula companies were subject to corporate engagement).

The Presbyterian church’s history of “selective patronage” and consumer boycotts is presented more fully in the booklet commended for study by the General Assembly Mission Council in 1979: “Boycotts: Policy and Criteria” (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/boycotts-policy-analysis-and-criteria/). That study notes that all “consumer spending reflects personal and group values,” and is thus broadly selective, while what it terms “selective patronage” is reflected in decisions not to patronize discriminatory businesses (such as in “Project Equality”) as well as alcohol, tobacco, and gambling enterprises.

The basic moral logic of not supporting or profiting from activities contrary to Christian values comes through in a General Assembly action in 1937: “We favor the adoption by the Congress of legislation … which forbids the shipments of Child Labor goods in interstate commerce, and which requires informative labels to be attached to Child Labor goods” (such labels would assist boycotting).

Because the assembly has already approved a broad boycott of settlement products, it would be clear that Hewlett-Packard and any other firms named were not being focused on in isolation from other enterprises taking advantage of the conditions of occupation. Purchasers would be encouraged to look carefully at all settlements and companies connected with them.

The 1979 study provides criteria for engaging in boycotts and some theological reflection on how the church takes moral stands. In terms of criteria, these include: consistency with church policy, lack of other alternative means of influence (such as shareholding and U.S. legislation), timeliness, effectiveness, impact on other aspects of our mission, and provision for review. The ACSWP finds that these criteria are generally met by the boycott of Hewlett-Packard, and believes that such non-violent economic pressure would be consistent with the call for economic solidarity from both Palestinian civil society and the broad ecumenical and evangelical groups of Palestinian Christians (in the Kairos Palestine document and the “Christ at the checkpoint” conferences). Commissioners may recognize the action called for in this overture as the addition of Hewlett-Packard to an existing and broadly supported boycott rather than a new campaign in itself.

In terms of effectiveness, the Israeli government has passed various measures to prevent or hamper the boycott of settlement products, such as “The Prevention of Harming the State of Israel by Boycott Law (5771-2011), which has been in an appeals process (http://unispal.un.org/UNISPAL.NSF/0/4DC9430BE04D596885257C2700565A0D#$qhash.PqQ71zK4.dpuf). Clearly such measures would infringe on free-speech rights, but one approach is to attempt to provide standing for affected corporations to sue boycott practitioners.

With regard to the legitimacy of economic pressure overall, both the Gaza blockade by Israel and its restrictions on East Jerusalem and the West Bank constitute boycott and sanctions against Palestinian goods and services. This economic “hard-ball” may make official Israeli criticisms of the boycott, divestment, and sanctions efforts appear hypocritical.

In fact, all words-only efforts have not deterred the Israeli government from expanding settlements, including the purported “legalization” of three once “illegal” settlements in late April. Thus the boycott strategy remains an effective and very participatory way to support greater justice for the Palestinians, and seems to be regarded by the Israeli government and its supporters as a danger to their control. Even when companies do not lose major market share, they are concerned about damage to their reputation and its influence on retailers who carry their products. The principle behind boycott would continue to hold: purchasing Hewlett-Packard products contributes to that company’s support of a military occupation that deprives Palestinians of their land and freedom. Thus not purchasing those products is a form of practical integrity that applies moral standards to market relationships. Overall, in relation to all efforts of advocacy by the church, it is important not to confuse the church’s calling to be a truthful place with efforts to make it a neutral place, and that extends to purchasing as well as investment.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-05—from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 04-05.

The ACREC agrees with this overture that it is time for Presbyterians to act where possible to help end the almost fifty-year occupation of Palestinian lands. The ACREC agrees fully with the rationale of the overture, particularly, that we have a long and proud history of successful boycotts and that boycotts are a tried and true nonviolent tool for change. Boycotts are a personal way of making a difference in which every consumer can participate.

Hewlett-Packard (HP) profits from the dehumanizing checkpoints that ravage the daily lives of Palestinians through racially-profiled bio-scanning of handprints. Only Palestinians are subject to this daily humiliation; tourists and Israelis are allowed through with no delay. The daily humiliation of standing in line for hours at checkpoints, which has been called “the cattle cage” by poet Susan Abulhawa, should be considered beyond the pale for all people of conscience. HP profits from this kind of inhumane racial profiling.
To see what happens daily in “the cattle cage,” ACREC commends to you this four-minute video that is poet Susan Abulhawa reading her poem Wala, which is set at a checkpoint line that ends at an HP hand scanner: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=oUIqhxMdfIE.

The ACREC prayerfully urges the 221st General Assembly (2014) to stop personally supporting the company who makes these bio-metric checkpoints possible and profitable.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-05

Comment on Item 04-05—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has historically supported boycotts as a nonviolent economic strategy to counter unjust practices and/or promote social change.

These efforts have included boycotting table grapes and fast-food companies on behalf of farm workers, Nestle for selling infant formula in the developing world, and J.P. Stevens sheets and towels to support textile workers.

Most recently, the 220th General Assembly (2012) endorsed the consumer boycott of all Israeli products coming from the Occupied Palestinian Territories, http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/mrti/boycott/.

Item 04-06

[The assembly approved Item 04-06 with amendment. See pp. 13, 61–62.]

On Affirming Occupation-Free Investment in Palestine—From the Presbytery of Mackinac.

Believing that Christians and Muslims, as well as Jews of Palestine and Israel, deserve the freedom for full human development, and honoring the request of Palestinian mission partners for foreign investment and aid that does not strengthen the occupation or contribute to the denial of rights, the Presbytery of Mackinac overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to do the following:

1. Affirm the commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its constituent bodies to engage in investments in the West Bank in ways that support the rights under international law of the Palestinian people and contribute to their welfare. We affirm our intention to undertake such investments in ways that do not contribute to the continuation of Israel’s occupation, annexation, or blockade of those areas, with specific attention to the illegal Israeli buildings, settlements, and barriers built on Palestinian land in East Jerusalem and the West Bank.

2. Commend to the church the work of the Presbyterian Foundation, in cooperation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), identifying principles, approaches, and specific ways in which denominational agencies and entities, presbyteries, congregations, and individual members can engage in such occupation-free investments. We affirm the actions of those who have chosen to make new investments consistent with these approaches.

3. [Affirm and commend to all the work of the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship (PPF) in establishing an Occupation-Free Fund, so that individuals, congregations, presbyteries, and other entities can make gifts to PPF that will be invested in enterprises that do not benefit financially from the work of occupation, including the expansion of settlements.] The General Assembly further commends other investment vehicles that prohibit investments in corporations that profit from and normalize the economic disadvantaging and dispossession of Christian and Muslim Palestinians denied full citizenship rights. [One example of such an approach is the Occupation Free Fund of the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship (PPF), which excludes any investment in enterprises that benefit financially from the operations of the occupation, including the expansion of settlements. Investment entities are encouraged to use the terms, “occupation-free,” “transformational,” or “Palestinian ‘development investment,’” to indicate the care taken for investment placements to benefit Palestinians directly, and congregations, presbyteries, and individuals are encouraged to consider such investment.]

Because these matters cannot be fairly dealt with by simple slogans like invest, don’t divest, we look to our biblical core and the painstaking work of previous General Assemblies. We also seek to be guided by the witness of Palestinian Christians who struggle to endure economically while also calling for all forms of nonviolent pressure to end the occupation.

Foundations: Biblical Bases

The prophet Isaiah (Isa. 65:17–25) clearly expresses a vision of the Glorious New Creation that God envisions for the world, a vision that stretches throughout the scriptures and challenges us to participate in bringing that new creation to fruition. In that new vision, God will establish Jerusalem as a joy, where:

- They shall build houses and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and eat their fruit.
- They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat. (Isa. 65:21–22)

In the Gospel according to Luke (Lk. 10:29–37), a lawyer asks Jesus, “Who is my neighbor?” Jesus defines the neighbor by telling the story of the Good Samaritan. Jesus is commending acts of mercy when there are those who are oppressed. In the face of Israel’s continuing occupation with its oppression, occupation-free investment is one way we can participate in the mercy that Jesus commends.

In his second letter to the church in Corinth (2 Cor. 8:3–15), the Apostle Paul offers a model of the global church investing in and supporting the needs of the Christian community in Palestine. Paul lifts up the model of the Macedonians, a poor community abundant in generosity, and frames the investing in Christians in the Holy Land as a question of a fair balance between your present abundance and their need, so that their abundance may be for your need, in order that there may be a fair balance (v. 13).

Foundations: Past Presbyterian Actions, and the Way Forward

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has repeatedly affirmed that the occupation of East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the expansion of settlements in those areas, and the continuing blockade of Gaza by Israel are morally and theologically wrong and are a hindrance to a just peace. Past General Assemblies have pointed to the denial of citizenship rights and self-determination and, listening to the voices of Palestinians themselves, have affirmed the role of nonviolent economic pressure, given the failure of moral suasion to slow the steady expansion of control of Palestinian land and resources. The 216th General Assembly (2004) initiated a process of corporate engagement (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 66). This has led to continuing study and engagement with companies represented in our portfolio as to the extent to which their products and services enable the occupation.

In 2008, re-affirming the church’s commitment to invest only in companies engaged in peaceful pursuits, the assembly also affirmed the Amman Call (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1137), which affirmed economic pressure (as proved effective for South Africa). In 2012, the assembly approved a boycott of products of Israeli settlements (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 41, 1366) but narrowly defeated a motion to divest of securities in companies profiting from the occupation (Ibid, pp. 42–43, 1400). The assembly also passed a motion, later ruled out of order, that requested the Board of Pensions to develop a separate fund for ministers who did not want their pensions profiting from the occupation.

The extensive 2010 policy statement on the Middle East, Breaking Down the Walls (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 1021ff), recognized the desperate need for economic development for Palestinians, whose economy is systematically weakened by restrictions on human freedom to travel and access to electricity, water, up-to-date technology, communications, etc. In fact, the Palestinian economy is sustained by foreign aid, while the biggest assistance possible would simply be lifting the restrictions and preventing the Israeli government or settlers from taking Palestinian land and water, which clearly discourages investment. Among that report’s recommendations, the assembly “calls on denominational agencies and entities, presbyteries, congregations and individual members to invest positively, after due vetting, in sustainable economic development projects for the West Bank and Gaza (that do not support the occupation) sponsored by Palestinians or jointly by Palestinians and Israelis in equitable partnership” (Ibid, p. 1023, Recommendation 3.d.). The Presbyterian Foundation has been seeking to implement this recommendation since before the action of the 2012 assembly.

As this is written, the latest peace process seems stalled, partly due to Israel’s continuing settlement programs. Today, the prospects for a viable two-state solution are questionable. Recognizing the continuing pressure on Palestinians to leave their ancestral lands, this overture affirms a both/and approach, including both investing in Palestine, done in ways that do not support or validate the ongoing occupation of Palestinian lands, and also denominationally approved actions of boycott, divestment, and sanctions (BDS).
Focusing on the investment side of that dual approach, this overture affirms and commends to the church the work of the Presbyterian Foundation, which provides details of how the denomination will undertake such investments, including criteria and specific investment opportunities appropriate for our denomination. It also commends to the church the Occupation Free Fund put in place by the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship and encourages others to engage in similar investments. As Jesus commended the work of the good Samaritan who came to the assistance of someone in need, and as Paul commended the Macedonians for coming to the aid of needy Christians in the Holy Land, so are we called on to provide support for the Palestinians as they seek to maintain their rightful place in a land where they have lived for many generations.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of Item 04-06 with amendment to Recommendation 3 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

"3. [Affirm and commend to all the work of the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship (PPF) in establishing an Occupation Free Fund, so that individuals, congregations, presbyteries, and other entities can make gifts to PPF that will be invested in enterprises that do not benefit financially from the work of occupation, including the expansion of settlements.] The General Assembly further commends other investment vehicles that prohibit investments in corporations that profit from and normalize the economic disadvantage and dispossession of Christian and Muslim Palestinians denied full citizenship rights. [One example of such an approach is the Occupation Free Fund of the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship (PPF), which excludes any investment in enterprises that benefit financially from the operations of the occupation, including the expansion of settlements. Investment entities are encouraged to use the terms, ‘occupation-free,’ ‘transformational,’ or Palestinian ‘development investment,’ to indicate the care taken for investment placements to benefit Palestinians directly, and congregations, presbyteries, and individuals are encouraged to consider such investment.]"

That the Palestinian economy is dominated by the restrictions of Israeli military occupation is too little understood by most U.S. citizens. Lack of freedom of movement, lack of access to water, intermittent electricity, punishing waits at checkpoints, and, for Israeli Arab citizens, many discriminatory laws, many based on exclusion from service in the Israeli military. Lack of military service, in fact, may be one of the chief reasons Palestinians are rarely found above the bottom rungs in any corporations or government organizations.

The matter of investment is important, though it is disputed how much Palestine would suffer from lack of capital if the occupation were ended. Because of the lack of permits for construction in many areas, the separation of Palestinians from their agricultural land by the separation fence or Wall, and the free rein given settlers to take land and water resources, economic growth is deliberately stunted. The importation of workers from Thailand and other non-Middle Eastern countries is also designed to eliminate the need for Palestinian labor and to emphasize the acquisition and use of land without Palestinians on it. It is for these structural reasons that simply calling investment in Palestine, “positive,” is a form of propaganda, designed to make efforts of nonviolent economic solidarity seem “negative,” and to imply that Palestine has a normal economy.

The endowment fund of the Peace Fellowship is one of a number of funds using investment screens that exclude companies based in settlements or otherwise benefiting directly from the occupation. Clearly many other US based transnational corporations carry on business in Israel and trade with businesses in the occupied territories.

The overture is correct in its policy citations and in noting that Palestine’s economy is highly dependent on foreign aid, primarily from Europe, with approximately $500 million from the United States, to which many strings are attached. (This is between one sixth and one ninth what Israel receives in U.S. aid, though the average Israeli has an income twenty times that of a Palestinian).

In addition to foreign aid to sustain the Palestinian Authority and some basic services, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund have made efforts to improve the Palestinian economy, the Quartet (a monitoring group with representation from the U.S., European Union, the UN, and Russia) has proposed plans, and as part of the Kerry-led peace process a management consulting firm was hired to look at blockages to growth in eight sectors of the Palestinian economy. The results of their efforts are reported below. The point is to emphasize that until the occupation is ended or a different “matrix of control” allows Palestinians more freedom or even citizenship, the need for “occupation-free” investment will remain.

The World Bank’s basic study of the effects of restrictions of the Palestinian economy comes from 2008: http://siteresources.worldbank.org/INTWESTBANKGAZA/Resources/AHLCSept15_08.pdf. A more recent report, looking particularly at the effects of Israeli control of all of “Area C,” the Jordan valley, was published in October of 2013:

To quote from a section summary (p. 23):

Core impediments on the expansion of private sector activity and investment remain, including on access to the West Bank’s — Area C, export restrictions, and import controls on private investment inputs in the WBG (West Bank and Gaza).

Political uncertainties: In addition to the above factors, the stalemate in the peace process and an increasingly uncertain domestic and regional political environment are bound to further inhibit private sector confidence and investment. The absence of concrete indications that restrictions will be lifted any time soon, or of a rise in donor aid that will address the PA’s fiscal difficulties, have also dimmed the economic growth outlook and prospects for a reduction in unemployment, thus raising the potential for social tensions.

The most recent March 2014 Quartet Economic Initiative proposal can be found here: http://blair.3cdn.net/a0302ab9e588825b29_1bm6yhjay.pdf

“The Economic Initiative looks to replace incremental change with transformative change. We have analysed eight sectors of the Palestinian economy and prepared detailed plans for implementation of such change. The eight key sectors include construction, building materials, agriculture, tourism, telecommunications and IT, power, water, and light manufacturing.”

The Wall Street Journal’s blog by Joshua Mitnick sums up some of the problems:

“If there’s one nagging reminder for Palestinian information technology professionals about the tenuous state of the Kerry economic initiative, it’s the persistent refusal by Israel to give Palestinian network providers access to 3G network frequencies despite a recommendation by the Quartet that such a move is necessary to boost the fledgling IT industry – which currently accounts for 6.1 percent of the Palestinian economy.” (http://blogs.wsj.com/middleeast/2014/03/03/benefits-of-palestinian-economic-initiative-slow-to-show/)

On 2 March 2014, Acting Head of Mission of the Office of the Quartet Representative, Mark Singleton, spoke to the Expotech conference in Jericho, organized by the Palestine Information Technology Association, admitting as much and referring to the IMF’s analysis:

In its September 2013 AHLC report, the IMF concluded that “the situation is not sustainable and implies risks to both macro-economic and social stability.” We are also well aware of the causes and constraints. The World Bank’s most recent AHLC report is very clear, stating that “the most significant impediment to economic viability in the Palestinian Territories is the multi-layered system of restrictions imposed by the Government of Israel. Restrictions on access and movement constrain investment, raise costs for doing business, and hinder economic cohesion. Despite some relaxation of certain measures, stronger measures are required, coupled with enhanced domestic reforms.” (http://www.quartetrep.org/quartet/news-entry/ict-Palestine-Information-Technology-Association/)

Without adding additional documentation from the United Nations and other sources, the economic dimensions of the State of Israel’s domination of the Palestinian territories involves the systematic exploitation of natural resources, toleration of high unemployment, and restriction of economic initiatives by Palestinians, punctuated by withholding of tax monies and arbitrary periods of intense security restriction. The intended result would appear to be not the development of the Palestinian economy, but the emigration of as many Palestinians as possible. Occupation-free investment is one small way to provide opportunity for Palestinians to remain on their land, without ignoring the pressures against them.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 04-06.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns supports this overture because we believe that it is important to support the economy of Palestine, even as the people struggle under occupation. All parts of Palestine’s economy are under Israeli government control, making all successful investments in Palestine subject to Israeli backing and approval.

Investing in an economy under a military occupation where people are subject to military, not civilian law, will not help end the infrastructure of occupation and the “matrix of control,” but is a temporary stop-gap measure to help ease living conditions under occupation. A just peace will be one that includes full and equal rights for all the people who live in Israel/Palestine, no matter their identity, ethnicity, or religion.

The ACREC thanks the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Presbyterian Foundation for their work in identifying some “bread on the table” opportunities where we can invest funds to help Palestinians living under occupation, while at the same time, we work to end support for the infrastructure that enables occupation.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concern offers the following advice and counsel to the 221st General Assembly (2014) on Item 04-06.
FOUNDATION COMMENT ON ITEM 04-06

Comment on Item 04-06—From the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation.

The Presbyterian Foundation is grateful for this overture and its commendation of the Positive Investment Program. In partnership with the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Foundation has developed several opportunities for investment in the West Bank that aim to promote peace through economic development and sustainable job creation. The investments are in education, microfinance, and renewable energy—all key drivers of the Palestinian economy.

To date, the Foundation has invested more than $1 million from the PC(USA)’s Creative Investment funds, in addition to more than $200,000 of funds from participating congregations. Additional churches have also expressed interest.

We recognize that positive investment is one tactic among many needed to resolve the longstanding conflicts in this troubled part of the world. Yet it is one that is having an immediate and positive impact, and we invite congregations, seminaries, and other PC(USA) institutions to join us in this work.

[The assembly answered Item 04-07 by the action taken on Item 04-04. See pp. 60, 62.]

On Adopting the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) Recommendation on Divestment—From the Synod of the Covenant.

The Synod of the Covenant overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

2. Approve MRTI’s recommendation to add Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions to the General Assembly divestment list until such time as the companies change their corporate practices, and confine their operations in Israel, East Jerusalem, Gaza, and the West Bank solely to peaceful pursuits.

Rationale

Since 1971, the Presbyterian church has pursued a policy to use the church’s investments to promote the General Assembly’s mission goals, and to reflect the ethical dimensions of the church’s theology, social teachings, and moral values.

The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) was created in 1972 to implement this General Assembly policy.

For more than forty years, MRTI has followed an engagement with corporations in which investments are held to seek changes in corporate policies and practices to promote the pursuit of peace; respect for human rights; social, economic, and racial justice; securing the rights of women, and environmental responsibility.

The corporate engagement process includes correspondence, dialogues, proxy voting, the filing of shareholder resolutions, public appeals, and, as a last resort when all of this has failed, recommending divestment to the General Assembly.

From time-to-time, the General Assembly has directed MRTI to engage corporations regarding serious, and often controversial, issues such as apartheid in South Africa, forced labor in Burma, oil production in Sudan, health care and private insurance companies, operation of prisons by publically traded companies, operation of sweatshops, human trafficking, child sex exploitation, financial practices, and environmental issues such as toxics and climate change.

Previous General Assemblies since 2004 have directed MRTI to use its customary corporate engagement process, as defined in General Assembly policy in 1976, with corporations involved in non-peaceful pursuits in Israel, East Jerusalem, Gaza and the West Bank. In the case of three companies—Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions—MRTI has concluded that years of corporate engagement have not changed their persistent involvement in non-peaceful pursuits, and that further corporate engagement is not likely to be successful. Therefore, regrettably MRTI has recommended to the 221st General Assembly (2014) that these three corporations be added to the General Assembly’s divestment list as they have decided to reject the General Assembly’s urging that they confine their business activities solely to peaceful pursuits.
The Synod of the Covenant believes that for nearly a decade MRTI has carried out its assignment faithfully with professional due diligence, has applied General Assembly policy consistently and fairly to the situation in Israel and Palestine, and that the recommendation from MRTI seeks to preserve the integrity of the church’s witness for a just peace.

Therefore, the Synod of the Covenant urges the 221st General Assembly (2014) to commend MRTI for its faithful implementation of the General Assembly’s directive, and to approve MRTI’s recommendation to add Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions to the General Assembly divestment list until such time as the companies change their corporate practices, and confine their operations in Israel, East Jerusalem, Gaza and the West Bank solely to peaceful pursuits.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this overture be answered by the response to Item 04-08 and directs commissioners to its Advice & Counsel memorandum attached to that item.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 04-07.

The ACREC acknowledges MRTI’s careful and methodical ten-year process and thanks them for their faithful service. The ACREC agrees with MRTI that

1. the church has exhausted all avenues to bring about changes in the policies and practices of Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions through corporate engagement;

2. as long as the denomination’s policy is that we should not profit from “non-peaceful pursuits,” and as long as these three U.S. companies identified by MRTI remain deeply involved in “non-peaceful pursuits,” then as a matter of integrity, the church should end our investment in these companies.

New information on Caterpillar, Inc. not in the MRTI report:

On April 1, 2014, The New York Times reported that Caterpillar used a Swiss subsidiary to reduce its taxes by $2.4 billion.10 This tax-avoidance scheme was developed by PricewaterhouseCoopers who was paid $55 million “for helping [CAT] transfer $8 billion of profits to the Swiss subsidiary from 1999 to 2012. The transfers had no economic substance and were made solely to take advantage of the lower tax rate Caterpillar negotiated with Switzerland, according to Senator Carl Levin, chairman of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.” (The same article mentions HP also transferring profits offshore to avoid U.S. taxes).

During this time, CAT imposed a six-year wage freeze on its hourly workers, and awarded the current CEO massive pay increases.

• At Caterpillar, Pressing Labor While Business Booms—NY Times article, July 2012.11
• Caterpillar Chief’s Pay Jumps 60%—Wall Street Journal article, April 2012.12

In this light, ACREC believes CAT’s human rights record in Sudan and Israel/Palestine demonstrates its “Code of Corporate Conduct” is selective and only goes as far as the company prefers it to go and does not apply evenly across the board.

The ACREC believes that the same standards that have guided votes on MRTI recommendations over the last forty-two years of corporate engagement by the committee, should continue to guide the General Assembly on this vote, no matter who is committing the human rights violations, where, and against whom. To use different standards to judge the evidence is at best, discriminatory, and at worst, sets a bad precedent of exceptionalism that will diminish the effectiveness of MRTI’s future work.

13 http://www.osc.state.ny.us/press/releases/mar13/032113.htm
The ACREC sees the following reasons for the General Assembly to approve the MRTI report and NOT to apply exceptions:

1. The MRTI report does not target Israel, but U.S. corporations who are profiting from a military occupation. Charging MRTI and the PC(USA) with holding Israel to different standards is a misrepresentation of the ten-year history and MRTI’s careful engagement with the three American corporations.

   - The PC(USA) will continue to hold shares in companies that do business in Israel, but are not profiting from non-peaceful pursuits, including McDonald’s, Procter & Gamble, Coca Cola, IBM, etc.

2. While it is true that some Jewish groups and organizations have said our corporate engagement process has “damaged relationships between Presbyterians and Jews,” not all Presbyterians and not all Jews agree with this statement. In fact, in some cases, the opposite is true. The call for not profiting from the occupation has strengthened relationships between some Presbyterians and some American and Israeli Jewish groups and individuals who oppose the occupation. This is evidenced by the support for MRTI from

   - The Israeli Committee Against House Demolition (ICAHD).

   - The Rabbinic Council of Jewish Voice for Peace. The rabbis of Jewish Voice for Peace maintain that the human rights violations of CAT, Inc., H-P and Motorola Solutions are not in accord with Jewish Values.

The very claim that this has affected our relationships with all Jews in a blanket way commits the serious error of classifying an entire people into one monolithic category. General stereotyping can and often does lead to racism in situations where decisions are made by assuming all people of one race or ethnicity hold the same viewpoints.

Hewlett-Packard is involved in questionable human rights issues in China and Syria as well as in Israel/Palestine as cited in a shareholder resolution voted on at their 2014 Annual Meeting. Both H-P and Motorola Solutions have wholly-owned subsidiaries in Israel whose record of equal employment opportunity is deficient.

   - While more than 20 percent of the Israeli population is non-Jewish, the high-tech industry, obligated by law not to discriminate, employs between 0.5 to 5 percent non-Jewish Israelis. Neither company will disclose its employment record.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, upon recommendation from the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

2. Direct the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment to continue the corporate engagement process with corporations operating in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, together with ecumenical partners, as part of MRTI’s regular work plan, in accordance with the previously identified positions and priorities of the General Assembly, and report back on MRTI’s engagements, along with any recommendations, to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

14 http://icahdusa.org/an-open-letter-from-jeff-halper
15 http://www.rabbisletter.org/
16 http://whereshouldthebirdsfly.org/
3. Affirm the selection criteria developed by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Inc., in collaboration with the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), for investment in West Bank owned/sponsored initiatives or companies: economic development, sustainable job creation, peaceful pursuits, Palestinian investments must minimize or eliminate dependence on Israel or others, transparency of use and impact, and the possibility of direct engagement with the people and organizations involved in the investments.

4. Commend the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Inc., in collaboration with the Presbyterian Mission Agency, for its successful efforts to identify three investments in the Occupied Palestinian Territories that help in the development of a viable infrastructure for a future Palestinian state, and encourage greater engagement with Christians in the West Bank around issues of job creation and economic development.

5. Approve the following resolution:

“The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment has been seeking to engage companies profiting from non-peaceful pursuits in Israel-Palestine since the directive of the 216th General Assembly (2004) and the reaffirmations and actions of subsequent assemblies. This process of engagement has, in the case of three companies, produced no substantive change and, in the judgment of this assembly, is likely not to do so in the future. Under the church’s regular process of corporate engagement (approved by the 116th General Assembly [1976] of the PCUS and reaffirmed as policy after reunion), the final step is to recommend divestment from companies where engagement is not resulting in any change. Therefore, in accordance with the actions of prior assemblies, we direct that Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions be placed on the General Assembly Divestment List until such time as they have ceased profiting from non-peaceful pursuits in Israel-Palestine, as defined by prior General Assembly actions.”

Rationale

MRTI REPORT EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Several General Assemblies since 2004 have given clear directives to the Committee on MRTI regarding corporations doing business in Israel and the Palestinian Territories (East Jerusalem, Gaza, and the West Bank). All corporations are urged to confine their business activities solely to peaceful pursuits. This means no involvement in roadblocks to a just peace as identified by the General Assembly. Investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)) should be only in corporations involved solely in peaceful pursuits. The MRTI corporate engagement process is the proper vehicle for determining whether a corporation is involved solely in peaceful pursuits.

Since 2004, MRTI developed a clear corporate engagement process consistent with General Assembly (GA) policy on divestment as an ethical investment strategy, and conducted research to identify corporations involved in the non-peaceful roadblocks to a just peace. Working with an interfaith coalition, MRTI engaged several corporations urging them to confine their business activity solely to peaceful pursuits; thus ending their complicity in and profiting from human rights violations.

After several years of corporate engagement by MRTI and its interfaith partners, utilizing all the tools available to investors (correspondence, dialogues, proxy voting, and filing shareholder resolutions), three corporations—Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions—remain entrenched in their involvement in non-peaceful pursuits, and regretfully show no inclination to change their behavior. In fact, if anything, these three corporations have deepened their non-peaceful involvement. As a result, MRTI regretfully informs the 221st General Assembly (2014) that Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions are not in compliance with GA policy, and recommends that these three corporations be added to the GA’s proscription/divestment list until such time as their corporate activities are confined solely to peaceful pursuits.

NARRATIVE OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY DIRECTIVES SINCE 2004

A. General Assembly Initiated and Set the Context for the Divestment Process

The 216th General Assembly (2004) instructed the Committee on MRTI to begin a process of “phased, selective divestment” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 66) related to corporations doing business in Israel. Following the assembly, MRTI initiated a process consistent with GA policy. First, MRTI reviewed the 1984 GA policy on the use of divestment as a strategy for socially responsible investing, and the criteria for consideration of any recommendation for divestment. Also reviewed was the 1985 GA policy describing the process of phased, selective divestment.

In November 2004, at its first meeting following the GA, MRTI identified GA policy positions on the obstacles to a just peace in Israel and Palestine. These included the ongoing violence perpetrated by Israelis and Palestinians against innocent people; the Israeli occupation of the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem in violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations resolutions; the presence of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories; the construction of the separation barrier; and the need for a viable Palestinian economy to enhance the possibility of a successful Palestinian state. These GA policies were incorporated into criteria to focus the research into corporations that may be profiting from involvement in any of the obstacles to a just peace. MRTI also adopted a clear statement on the process of progressive engagement of any such companies that affirmed the cycle of dialogue, shareholder resolutions and proxy voting and more dialogue before MRTI would be in any position to consider recommending possible divestment action to the GA. This was reported to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) in 2005, and publicized widely through the PC(USA) web site.

B. General Assembly Called for Financial Investments to Be Only in Peaceful Pursuits

The 217th General Assembly (2006) responded to numerous overtures regarding corporate engagement on Israel-Palestine issues, and approved a statement urging that “… financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 944).

C. General Assembly Called Upon Corporations to Confine Business Solely to Peaceful Pursuits

The 218th General Assembly (2008) received a comprehensive report on MRTI work that included the committee’s belief that more engagement was the appropriate course of action at that time. The GA also called upon corporations doing business in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank “… to confine their business activity solely to peaceful pursuits, and refrain from allowing their products or services to support or facilitate violent acts by Israelis or Palestinians against innocent civilians, construction and maintenance of settlements or Israeli-only roads in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory, and construction of the Separation Barrier as it extends beyond the 1967 “Green Line” into Palestinian territories” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1223).

D. General Assembly Urging of Pro-Active Efforts to Promote Human Rights and a Just Peace

All General Assemblies since 2004 have emphasized a commitment to a just peace based upon a safe and secure Israel living alongside a viable, contiguous Palestinian state where both can exercise their right to self-determination and build societies that provide for the well-being of their citizens. All General Assemblies have supported strategies designed to make a positive and proactive contribution toward that goal. The PC(USA)’s witness has incorporated these positive and proactive strategies accordingly.

The investing agencies of the PC(USA) have been invested and will remain invested in many companies operating in Israel-Palestine that confine their business to peaceful pursuits that do not entangle them in roadblocks to a just peace.

In addition, from the beginning, MRTI has supported economic development of the Palestinian economy in the belief that a viable economy is essential to the success of a Palestinian state. As noted in the historical narrative, MRTI met with Mr. James Wolfensohn who was charged by the Quartet to promote economic cooperation and growth. His efforts were followed by the work of Mr. Tony Blair that included increased economic development funding from the United States and others. Unfortunately, the ultimate success of such efforts depended upon reaching a political agreement that would end the illegal Occupation of the Palestinian Territories that prevents a viable economy from developing. Several studies have pointed to this reality. Most recently, the World Bank concluded that the Occupation was costing the Palestinian economy more than $3 billion annually. Palestinian business leaders are clear that increased economic activity is no substitute for a political solution that ends the Occupation. Another PC(USA) effort supported by MRTI was the work of Donald Mead, development economist, to identify potential investments or activities that would contribute to a stronger Palestinian economy thus permitting more Palestinians to remain on their land. Three potential areas were identified including housing, tourism, and marketing of Palestinian crafts and products. As a result, Presbyterian sponsored tourism using Palestinian tour agencies, hotels, guides, etc. have increased, and sales by PalCraft Aid and olive oil marketing efforts have delivered increased income into Palestinian families. Most recently, the PC(USA) Foundation, Inc., in collaboration with the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), has spearheaded an effort to identify proactive investment opportunities that contribute to Palestinian independence and do not normalize the Occupation. The initial investments involved microcredit lending, a solar power project, and a continuing education center.

Finally, through MRTI’s work of corporate engagement carried out with ecumenical partners, corporations have been encouraged to respect human rights and international humanitarian law and practice equal employment opportunity. This promotes the building blocks for a just peace.

What we have learned is that the roadblocks to a just peace in Israel-Palestine could not be sustained or be so effective without the complicity of private corporations and their involvement in the infrastructure of violence and occupation that violates human rights and degrades human dignity. Accordingly, the GA has stated that the church’s investments in companies doing business in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank be in companies involved in only peaceful pursuits. For nearly a decade, the PC(USA), through its Committee on MRTI and other ecumenical partners, has worked diligently to engage several companies about their involvement and complicity in non-peaceful pursuits and human rights violations.

While this corporate engagement has taken place, the situation in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories has deteriorated. The obstacles to a just peace identified in 2004 remain, and have become more intractable. The continued building of Israeli settlements in the West Bank, illegal under international law, has picked up renewed speed leading to the number of Israeli settlers in the West Bank (excluding East Jerusalem) increasing 57 percent from 191,000 to 297,000 between 2000 to 2009 [Peace Now] while the Israeli population as a whole increased only 19 percent between 1999 to 2009 [Israel Central Bureau of Statistics]. The total number of Jewish settlers living on Palestinian land is nearly a million, including 191,960 in East Jerusalem [Jerusalem Institute for Israel Studies]. With the illegal settlements comes the construction of Israeli only roads on Palestinian land, and continued construction of the Separation Barrier beyond the 1967 borders, known as the “Green Line.” This leads to a deterioration of Palestinian life as access to agricultural land in restricted, Palestinian land is confiscated, housing permits for Palestinians are denied while home demolitions increase, Palestinian movement on the West Bank is further limited through check points, barriers, and prohibition of using some roads. Increased settler violence against Palestinians grows as settlements expand, and Israeli military and police action increases. Access to water is restricted as allocations to the illegal settlements far outstrips allocations for Palestinians. For example, the water allocation to the illegal settlements in the Jordan Valley and the Northern Dead Sea regions (for less than 10,000 illegal settlers) is almost one-third of the quantity of water that is accessible to the 2.5 million Palestinians living in the West Bank [B’Tselem: May 2011]. All of the companies being engaged continue to profit from their involvement in the occupation and the violation of human rights in the region.

III. CHRONOLOGY OF MRTI’S CORPORATE ENGAGEMENT WITH CATERPILLAR, HEWLETT-PACKARD, AND MOTOROLA SOLUTIONS

A. The Corporate Engagement Process

MRTI conducted research to determine which corporations, if any, were involved in non-peaceful pursuits. In August 2005, MRTI reviewed the research to select from among the identified companies an initial group to engage. Corporate engagement is a deliberate process outlined in the basic policies of the GA on socially responsible investment, dating to 1971, 1976, and 1984. Elements of this process include research, correspondence, dialogue, proxy voting, and the possible filing of shareholder resolutions. Only after all other options fail to achieve the desired results, the Committee on MRTI, through the PMA Board, may recommend to the GA divestment from particular corporations.

The initial corporations were Caterpillar, Citigroup, ITT Industries, Motorola, and United Technologies. As the corporate engagement process unfolded, some corporations were removed from engagement (Citigroup and ITT Industries), and others were engaged (Hewlett-Packard and Microsoft). MRTI also maintained contact with various ecumenical partners that were committed to engaging companies on the issue of their involvement in Israel and Palestine. These included the Episcopal Church, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the United Methodist Church, the United Church of Christ, and several Roman Catholic religious orders.

After years of effort, MRTI concluded that three corporations (Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions) have rejected all appeals to confine their business activities solely to peaceful pursuits. In fact, they have deepened their involvement in roadblocks to a just peace. MRTI concluded that further corporate engagement would be unlikely to bring about the positive change in their corporate behavior. A chronology of the corporate engagement with the three companies follows.

B. Caterpillar, Inc.

Caterpillar sells heavy equipment used by the Israeli government in military and police actions to demolish Palestinian homes and agricultural lands. It also sells heavy equipment used in the Occupied Palestinian Territories for the construction of illegal Israeli settlements, roads solely used by illegal Israeli settlers, and the construction of the Separation Barrier extending across the 1967 “Green Line” into the East Jerusalem and the West Bank.

MRTI’s first contact with the company regarding its involvement in the Occupation actually was in 2003 after a young American, Rachel Corrie, was killed by a D-9 bulldozer operated by the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) in Gaza. The Peace and Justice Committee of the Synod of the Trinity contacted MRTI requesting that a letter be sent to Caterpillar regarding the death.

Beginning in 2007, corporate engagement intensified. A shareholder resolution at Caterpillar was submitted in the fall of 2007 for consideration at the 2008 annual meeting. It requested the board of directors to review the company’s human rights policies and amend them where applicable. Caterpillar also received a resolution on foreign military sales from a coalition of shareholders including several Roman Catholic religious orders and Jewish Voice for Peace.

In addition, several religious shareholders sent a letter to the company requesting a meeting to discuss non-military sales of company products in Israel and Palestine. The company replied by letter on December 13, 2007. While not responding to the request for a meeting, the company said for the first time that “As an industry leader, Caterpillar advocates responsible use of our equipment. We expect our customers to use the products they purchase from us in environmentally responsible ways and consistent with human rights and requirements of international humanitarian law.”

The resolution submitted by the PC(USA) and the Dominican Sisters produced a dialogue on January 30, 2008. Caterpillar representatives reviewed their Worldwide Code of Business Conduct. Discussion focused on the human rights dimensions of the code, what it included or omitted, and who beyond the company’s employees it affected or not. Religious shareholders, including MRTI representatives, raised the need to address the end-use of company products, particularly in countries with human rights challenges. After further discussions, the shareholders agreed to withdraw the resolution from consideration at the 2008 annual meeting in exchange for an ecumenical dialogue with the company on human rights and the end use of Caterpillar products.

The dialogue was held in July 18, 2008, on the subject of the end-use of Caterpillar products in light of the company’s statement on its expectations for the use of its products. The dialogue included the Episcopal Church, Mercy Asset Management, the Passionists, United Church of Christ, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and three boards of the United Methodist Church. The discussion focused on human rights and humanitarian law and conventions, and the company’s expectation that its customers would abide by these standards. The company considers its dealers as its customers. While it meets with its dealers regularly, and would terminate this relationship if it learned that a dealer was offering bribes, it has no mechanism for enforcement of its human rights expectations. The company also requested information from Caterpillar on the customers of its Israeli dealer, particularly major construction companies that are involved in building the illegal settlements and roads that Palestinians are prohibited from using in the Occupied Territories, the construction of the separation barrier on Palestinian land and the demolition of Palestinian homes.

A second dialogue was held on September 10, 2009, to continue the discussion of the previous year. Additional information had become public that was added to the agenda for discussion. An article in Haaretz, an Israeli newspaper, dated March 11, 2009, reported on the close relationship between Caterpillar’s Israeli dealership and the Israeli military. This included selling the Caterpillar D-9 bulldozers to the IDF who had them armored and weaponized by an Israeli company. The article noted that the IDF has used these bulldozers from the mid-1980s, and has hundreds of them in its arsenal. After that, the Caterpillar dealer provides maintenance work. The dealership’s mechanics provided maintenance in the recent Gaza war (these dealership employees maintained and serviced Caterpillar equipment near the battlefield during the Gaza War of January 2009, when more than 1,300 civilians were killed and the entire civilian infrastructure of the territory was destroyed) and the Second Lebanon War. The dealership noted publicly its close working relationship with the IDF, according to Haaretz in an article dated March 17, 2009, the IDF also “is planning to draft civilian bulldozer-maintenance personnel for reserve duty, marking the first time the army will be conscripting the staff of a private firm in wartime.” This would permit the IDF to use Caterpillar dealership employees on the battlefield in future operations.

The dialogue clarified several issues, but did not produce any progress. Company officials made it clear that the company took no responsibility for the use of its products even by its dealers (the only party Caterpillar considers to be a customer), had no procedure in place for monitoring or ensuring compliance with Caterpillar’s stated expectations even in a situation except where prohibited by U.S. law, had no capacity to evaluate whether particular actions are in accord with human rights. Further, they indicated that Caterpillar, although a global company doing business in virtually every country except where prohibited by U.S. law, had no capacity to evaluate whether particular actions are in accord with human rights conventions or international humanitarian law. Finally, Caterpillar did not provide information on whether its dealership was selling equipment to major construction companies building the illegal settlements, the separation barrier, or the Jewish Israeli-only roads in the occupied territories as requested.

Meanwhile, a shareholder resolution requesting a report on foreign military sales was refiled by Jewish Voice for Peace and several Roman Catholic religious orders for consideration at the 2009 stockholders meeting in June. The resolution garnered slightly less than six percent of the shareholder vote, and failed to requalify automatically for the 2010 meeting. Thus, the resolution for the 2010 shareholders meeting was altered to call for the company to review and amend its human rights policy to bring it into greater conformity with human rights and international humanitarian law. The company did not take advantage of this additional opportunity to discuss the resolution, and also declined to facilitate a requested meeting in February 2010 between church members of the Ecumenical Action Group and Caterpillar’s dealer in Israel. When the annual meeting was held in June 2010, the resolution received 24.9 percent of the proxy vote.

Under pressure from non-shareholder interest groups, Caterpillar announced that it was instructing its European dealerships not to sell any Caterpillar products that might then be transshipped to Iran. This violated Caterpillar’s previous statements to religious shareholders that the company did not have the authority to tell its dealers where and to whom they could sell Caterpillar products. A letter from the United Methodist Board of Church and Society on behalf of eight religious shareholders (including PC(USA)) to the then-CEO James Owens was sent on June 8, 2010, seeking clarification of this contradiction. There was no response.

The action of the 219th General Assembly (2010) called for continued engagement within the context of the following clear and public policy denouncing the company from profiting from involvement in serious human rights violations and obstacles to a just peace in Israel and Palestine: “...the [General Assembly] strongly denounces Caterpillar’s continued profiting from non-peaceful uses of a number of its products. We call upon Caterpillar to carefully review its involvement in obstacles to a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine, and to take affirmative steps to end complicity in the violation of human rights. We hope that, by God’s grace, Caterpillar will come to exercise its considerable power and influence in the service of a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 363).

While the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010) denouncing the company’s continued profiting from its involvement in human rights violations was designed in large measure to convince Caterpillar that the church was serious about the gravity of this complicity, the company remained unresponsive. On April 19, 2011, MRTI sent its own letter to new CEO
Douglas Oberhelmer, expressing hope for a new spirit of conversation around these issues and requesting dialogue. There was no response. On July 26, 2011, the United Methodist Board of Church and Society retransmitted the 2010 letter (see above) from eight religious shareholders to the new CEO requesting a meeting to discuss the issues described in the correspondence. Again, there was no response.

These attempts at correspondence were carried out against the backdrop of ongoing submission of shareholder resolutions in 2010 and 2011, each of which presented an opportunity dialogue. There was no response; indeed, the shareholder resolution on human rights submitted by faith-based investors was challenged by company management with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). Their challenge was rejected, and the resolution received another strong vote: 25.2 percent. However, despite the strong shareholder votes in 2010 and 2011, new CEO Oberhelmer reiterated to shareholders that Caterpillar has not changed its policies regarding involvement in Israel-Palestine. Because the number of votes significantly exceeded the required threshold, the resolution was resubmitted for 2012.

In 2012, in the run-up to the GA, a meeting was arranged with Mr. Jim Dugan, Caterpillar’s chief corporate spokesperson, on April 16, 2012, in Chicago. MRTI representatives were joined by Mr. Mike Kruse, chairperson of the General Assembly Mission Council (now Presbyterian Mission Agency Board), and two representatives of the United Methodist General Board of Church and Society. Mr. Dugan made it clear that Caterpillar was fully satisfied with its policy, and saw no reason to change how it was doing business in Israel-Palestine. Regarding the recently released United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights developed under the leadership of Dr. John Ruggie, the United Nations Secretary-General’s Special Representative for Business and Human Rights, Mr. Dugan noted that the company might review them, but that any decision to include them, or make reference to them, in Caterpillar’s policy would likely take some time, and if they were incorporated into the policy, it would not make any difference in how Caterpillar does business in any case. The shareholder resolution was voted on at the 2012 annual stockholders meeting held on June 13th. Again, there was a strong proxy vote of 25.4 percent.

On April 22, 2013, Mr. Dugan wrote to several faith-based investors, including the MRTI chairperson and staff, informing them that Caterpillar had reviewed the United Nations Guiding Principles. He noted that Caterpillar remained fully satisfied with its policy, and found no need to include, or refer to, the Global Principles in the company’s code. On June 12, 2013, the company’s annual meeting was held in Greensboro, North Carolina. The resolution received 26.81 percent of the proxy vote. As usual, several faith-based investors co-filed the resolution.

During the meeting, Mr. Oberhelmer responded to a written question from a shareholder about the company’s business in Israel-Palestine. He reiterated once again that the company took no responsibility for how its products are used, and would not alter its business practices.

Through this multiyear process, MRTI met several times with representatives of the Presbytery of Great Rivers where Caterpillar is headquartered. A listening session was held in 2005 at the outset of the process, and presbytery staff and leadership have met with the full committee and separately with staff. Throughout, MRTI has kept the presbytery informed of the filing of resolutions and the status of communications with the company.

Caterpillar’s serious involvement in non-peaceful pursuits led the 219th General Assembly (2010) to denounce the company’s profiting from involvement in human rights violations. Sadly, despite significant support for the shareholder resolution calling for a review of its human rights policy, Caterpillar has become even more intransigent. It has cut off all communication with the religious shareholders. Caterpillar continues to accept no responsibility for the end use of their products. Over many years, the company has not indicated a willingness to review its policies for distribution or sales in conflicted areas like Israel-Palestine, and does not acknowledge a responsibility for its dealers’ adherence to human rights law in these areas. Caterpillar’s stated commitment to global citizenship is being undermined by its unwillingness to critically self-assess its own conduct in Israel-Palestine. It is the conclusion of MRTI that further efforts to engage Caterpillar through ordinary means (including shareholder resolutions, and written and oral communications) will not be successful.

C. Hewlett-Packard

Hewlett-Packard (HP) has a wholly-owned subsidiary in Israel (Hewlett Packard Israel). The company sells hardware to the Israeli Navy, and as a contractor manages all Information Technology (IT) including its operational communications, logistics, and planning including the ongoing naval blockade of the Gaza Strip. This blockade has included interdicting humanitarian supplies by attacking or turning back international vessels carrying the supplies, and attacks on Palestinian fishermen.

The company also is involved through its ownership of Electronic Data Systems in providing electronic biometric identification scanning equipment to monitor only Palestinians at several checkpoints inside the West Bank, including as part of the separate road system, restricting Palestinian movement. At these checkpoints, the 2.4 million West Bank Palestinians are required to submit to lengthy waits as well as the mandatory biometric scanning, while Israelis and other passport holders transit without scanning or comparable delays.
HP also has extensive involvement with the Israeli Army. Soldiers in the IDF are issued a Tadiran Communications ruggedized personal digital assistant (RPDA) based on the Hewlett Packard IPAQ as part of Israel’s Anog soldier modernization program. This equipment is used to enforce the Occupation. In July 2009, HP won a contract for the installation of software products in a three-year IDF virtualization tender worth an estimated $15 million, with a two-year option to extend.

HP also has business relationships with the illegal settlements in the West Bank. A subsidiary, HP Invent, outsources information technology services to Matrix and to its subsidiary Talpiot, which has its main outsourcing center in the illegal West Bank settlement of Modi’in Illit. By using Talpiot’s services, clients of the company profit from the company’s relationship with an illegal settlement and help solidify the illegal Occupation of Palestinian Territories.

In addition, HP worked with the government of the illegal settlement of Ariel in the occupied West Bank to develop specialized solutions for government data storage, and used this project in marketing publicity. Despite the fact that Ariel is deep in the Occupied West Bank, the company’s published description of this work claims that Ariel is within Israel, including the use of a map making no reference to the West Bank as a separate occupied territory.

In addition, as with Motorola Solutions Israel, its Israeli subsidiary does not disclose its equal employment opportunity record of its hiring practices.

As continuing research indicated involvement by HP in non-peaceful pursuits, MRTI and other faith-based investors recognized the need to engage the company. On March 5, 2009, several religious shareholders were scheduled to hold a conference call with HP, and had submitted a detailed list of questions for the discussion. The company then cancelled the call saying it would respond in writing, and only then consider a meeting. The shareholders reviewed the company’s written answers, and noted that they were vague or incomplete. The General Board of Pensions and Health Benefits of the United Methodist Church contacted the company to renew the request for a dialogue. HP again declined saying they would only respond in writing. Two rounds of letters produced only vague answers to the shareholders’ questions.

A shareholder resolution was developed requesting a review of HP’s human rights policies, and a report on their implementation. It was filed by the PC(USA), United Methodist General Board of Global Ministries, and four Roman Catholic religious orders. The filing letters requested an opportunity for dialogue, and prompted a positive response by the company. On October 28, 2009, several religious participants met with company officials by conference call. The discussion reviewed HP’s policies and procedures, and identified issues of concern for further discussion. Participants were grateful for the positive atmosphere, and willingness to cooperate. As the company agreed to initiate a board of directors level review of its human rights policy, and committed to positive follow-up to the issues identified in the dialogue, the shareholders decided to withdraw the resolution.

However, the follow-up was spotty in some areas, and nonexistent in others. One positive aspect of the engagement though was meeting with a representative of HP Israel in Jerusalem in February 2010. The discussion was informative about the extent and variety of HP’s businesses. Requested information on the company’s employment practices and how the human rights policy influences the company’s business with governments was not provided.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) directed MRTI to continue its efforts to engage HP on these issues. Although efforts began to schedule dialogue with company management in November 2010, the company repeatedly deferred and postponed this meeting. Attempts to schedule conference calls met with delays, but one was finally held on April 19, 2011. Unfortunately, it was not a productive dialogue. While the religious shareholders had communicated clearly their desire for an in-depth discussion of the biometric scanners at the checkpoints, HP’s representatives, including its person in charge of implementing its human rights policy, said that they were not knowledgeable on the issue and could not discuss it. They also did not offer to set up a subsequent call with HP representatives who could. In addition, they announced that the human rights assessment they were conducting (which would include Israel-Palestine) would concentrate on systems evaluation, and any specifics would not be included in HP’s public reporting. Indeed, HP’s public report contained no reference to its business operations in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

HP produced a Global Citizenship Report for 2010, which stated in its Global Issues section: “At HP, we believe technology is a driver of social progress, environmental sustainability and economic opportunity. We’re committed to helping individuals everywhere use technology to connect and create a better world.” The company reviewed its involvement in the United Nations Global Compact, and its support for the Universal Declaration on Human Rights. It noted that it was one of eight founding members of the Global Business Initiative on Human Rights (GBI). However, nowhere did HP discuss the relationship of its policy commitments to its involvements in non-peaceful pursuits in Israel-Palestine.

In late 2012, a shareholder resolution was filed requesting a review of the company’s human rights policy. This filing led to a dialogue on January 23, 2013, which included several ecumenical organizations. Prior to the dialogue, a copy of the HP marketing brochure on its work with the Ariel settlement was shared with the company. Unfortunately, as in the past, no one from the company was prepared to respond to how the brochure was produced, and its relationship to corporate policy. In addition, the company declined to confirm what its role was currently in the biometric scanners at the checkpoints, or other business with the Israeli military or the settlements citing “customer confidentiality” for the first time.
Motorola also announced its intention to sell its Israeli cell phone company, and sought bids from potential buyers. However, the company maintained its stance of no face-to-face dialogues, but would answer some written questions. Motorola’s legal department refused to meet in person saying the company would only answer questions in writing. Questions were submitted, but answers did not adequately respond to the concerns expressed. In an email of January 13, 2010, the company also declined to facilitate a meeting with Motorola Israel during the February 2010 visit of religious shareholders to Israel and Palestine. The 2010 shareholders meeting held on May 3 included another vote on the human rights resolution. It received a vote of 11.8 percent. Motorola also announced that it would be splitting into two new companies by the end of 2010: Motorola Solutions and Motorola Mobility.

MRTI also kept the San Jose Presbytery, where HP is headquartered, informed about shareholder resolution filing, and the status of dialogue with HP.

Although HP has been open to meet with religious shareholders on an annual basis, the discussions have been very disappointing. The company declines to engage the serious issues of its involvement in non-peaceful pursuits. It has never addressed the issue of how its human rights policy, about which the company is very proud, informs its decisions about its business with governments, especially governments involved in serious human rights violations. Contrary to the company’s stated policy of transparency in how it implements its human rights policies, no information is shared on its application to the numerous involvements in non-peaceful pursuits. Without a major change in HP’s willingness to engage in serious discussions, corporate engagement is not likely to achieve positive results. Regretfully, MRTI concluded that there is no indication at present that HP will change its course.

D. Motorola Solutions

Motorola Solutions has a wholly owned subsidiary in Israel, Motorola Solutions Israel. The company provided an integrated communications system, known as “Mountain Rose,” to the Israeli government, which uses it for military communications. It also provided ruggedized cell phones to the IDF utilized in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. The company also sold wide-area surveillance systems for installation in the illegal Israeli settlements. Prior to corporate restructuring, it operated a cell phone company that placed cell phone towers in the illegal settlements, and sold fuses used in Israeli bombs. The company also will not disclose information about workforce composition and hiring practices.

A second dialogue on June 18, 2007, focused on human rights standards and conventions in relation to the company’s involvement in the Occupation of the Palestinian Territories. Motorola officials denied that any of its activities implicated it in the Israeli occupation, or raised human rights concerns. A shareholder resolution addressing broader human rights issues was filed by several religious shareholders in the fall of 2007.

In response, Motorola requested a follow-up meeting, which occurred on January 7, 2008. The company indicated its intent to review and amend its policies, but would not specify the particular changes under consideration, and made clear that its human rights policies would not be applied to their business relationships with foreign governments. This lack of clarity and limited scope led the religious investors, including MRTI representatives, to decline to withdraw the resolution, which went to a vote at the annual shareholders meeting on May 5, 2008. It received more than 12 percent of the shareholder vote, enough to be resubmitted in 2009. Although the conversation with Motorola had been less productive than hoped, religious shareholders agreed that more in-depth dialogue on corporate social responsibility and human rights might create a productive framework for analyzing the Israel-Palestine conflict and other global situations.

A shareholder resolution similar to the one from 2008 was filed with Motorola requesting that the company amend its human rights policies “to conform more fully with international human rights and humanitarian standards. …” The resolution was co-filed by the General Board of Pensions and Health Benefits of the United Methodist Church, Mercy Investment Program, and the Episcopal Church. The company did not respond to a request in the filing letter for a meeting to discuss the resolution. When the filers tried to set one up following the annual meeting, the company declined, but offered to answer written questions. The stockholder meeting was held on May 4, 2009. Speaking in support of the resolution, which received 9.7 percent of the vote, were representatives of the United Methodist Church and the PC(USA).

Following the 2009 annual meeting, religious shareholders requested another dialogue, but on June 12, in an email, Motorola’s legal department refused to meet in person saying the company would only answer questions in writing. Questions were submitted, but answers did not adequately respond to the concerns expressed. In an email of January 13, 2010, the company also declined to facilitate a meeting with Motorola Israel during the February 2010 visit of religious shareholders to Israel and Palestine. The 2010 shareholders meeting held on May 3 included another vote on the human rights resolution. It received a vote of 11.8 percent. Motorola also announced that it would be splitting into two new companies by the end of 2010: Motorola Solutions and Motorola Mobility.

Meanwhile, in the run-up to corporate restructure, the involvement of Motorola in the Occupation changed in some ways. The sale of armaments work by Motorola Israel meant that it no longer made bomb fuses for the Israeli military. Motorola also announced its intention to sell its Israeli cell phone company, and sought bids from potential buyers. However, the company maintained its stance of no face-to-face dialogues, but would answer some written questions.
On November 4, 2010, in the filing of the shareholder resolution on human rights for the 2011 annual meeting, MRTI expressed its hope that the company would respond positively through constructive dialogue. The company did not respond. The corporate restructure was completed on schedule. The shareholder resolution was voted on at the annual meeting of Motorola Solutions on May 2, 2011. However, this time it received a lower vote total (5.4 percent), and could not be resubmitted for 2012. At the meeting, the CEO of Motorola Solutions announced that the company would be concentrating on the Middle East for its integrated communications products. Following the meeting, MRTI sought to determine how the restructure had affected the company’s business in Israel-Palestine. Motorola Mobility confirmed that the Israeli cell phone company had been sold to a French company, and that its business was now limited to marketing cell phones in civilian markets. It also confirmed that the business lines with the Israeli government remained with Motorola Solutions. Motorola Solutions did not respond to MRTI’s information request of July 11, 2011.

When the vote on a shareholder resolution fails to reach a threshold established by the SEC, it cannot be refilled for a two-year period. As that waiting period had expired, the human rights policy review resolution was resubmitted for the 2014 annual shareholders meeting. MRTI hoped that there will be a new openness to dialogue and sharing of information regarding the company’s business in Israel-Palestine.

Unfortunately, on December 31, 2013, Motorola Solutions signed a fifteen-year communications contract with the Israeli Ministry of Defense to provide the company’s next generation of ruggedized smartphones to the IDF and the Ministry of Defense. The contract will cost $100 million with half provided by United States military assistance to cover the cost of adaptation, development, and production of the devices for the IDF, by Motorola Solutions US. The other half of the program will be funded from the Israeli military budget, primarily covering maintenance of the system over 15 years by Motorola Solutions Israel.

The Motorola Solutions smartphone eventually will replace the encrypted communications system currently in use by the IDF, Mountain Rose, which was also developed and manufactured by the company. The Israeli army estimated that some military units will be supplied with the new system’s smartphones in about two years, including for operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. Until the new system is fully integrated, the IDF will continue to use the Mountain Rose system.

As noted, representatives of the Presbytery of Chicago attended the first dialogue with Motorola, and have been kept apprised of subsequent engagement, filing of shareholder resolutions, and MRTI decisions related to the company.

With Motorola’s separation into two companies, the problematic involvements in non-peaceful pursuits are now confined to Motorola Solutions. These involvements remain significant, and are now locked in for another fifteen years at least. Motorola Solutions has been unresponsive to all efforts by religious shareholders to engage in serious discussions about its involvement in non-peaceful pursuits. MRTI has concluded that there is no indication that the company’s position will change through continued corporate engagement.

IV. CORPORATE ENGAGEMENT WITH OTHER COMPANIES

A. Citigroup

The Citigroup dialogue of February 2, 2006, was highly productive. The primary concern with Citigroup involved an allegation that Citigroup had provided insufficient controls to prevent the transfer of funds to Palestinian organizations supporting violence. In conversation with MRTI representatives, the company provided assurance that the bank had robust controls in place to monitor and prevent questionable money transfers. There have been no subsequent reports alleging inappropriate funds transfers by Citigroup. In addition, Citigroup expressed willingness to assist the religious community with exploring how to increase microcredit lending in the region to address the lack of adequate investment opportunities in Palestine. Therefore, in June 2007, MRTI removed Citigroup from its focus list of companies for corporate engagement.

B. ITT Industries

ITT Industries supplied communications and night-vision equipment to the IDF used in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. ITT Industries officials met with MRTI on February 3, 2006. The company would not discuss its business with the Israeli military with any specificity. Between 2008 and 2011, a shareholder resolution was submitted requesting a report on foreign military sales. It received roughly a 7 percent proxy vote each year. MRTI, along with ecumenical partners and representatives from the Presbytery of Hudson River, met periodically with ITT officials. Nothing of substance came of the discussions except a general discussion about ITT’s new corporate ethics program.

In 2011, ITT Industries announced that it would split into three separate companies at the end of that year. One of the new companies, ITT Excelis, would focus solely on its military-related business including its night vision and communications equipment. When the corporate restructure occurred, the new military-related company, ITT Excelis, was added to the GA divestment list in 2012. ITT Excelis, a top-100 military contractor, has received more than 50 percent of its revenue from military contracts averaged over three years. As a result, MRTI dropped corporate engagement with the company from its work plan.
C. United Technologies

The resolution to United Technologies requested that ethical criteria be applied to foreign military contracts, and, with the Episcopal Church as the primary filer, was supported by 23.8 percent of shareholders voting at the annual meeting; a very strong showing, considering resolutions of this nature submitted to major defense contractors routinely receive 3 to 5 percent of the shareholder vote. The vote was sufficient to qualify the resolution for automatic reconsideration at next year’s annual meeting. The Episcopal Church had a brief phone conversation with company officials, and received a commitment to a dialogue on developing a human rights policy. The dialogue has been integrated into a regular conversation between the company and members of the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility. MRTI noted that the involvement of United Technologies has been in the form of a sub-contractor on some military equipment. The primary responsibility lies with a company already on the GA divestment list.

D. Microsoft

In the past two years, initial letters were sent to Microsoft regarding its human rights policy and the company’s provision of specialized software to the Israeli Navy and the government of the illegal settlement of Ariel. After no response was received, a shareholder resolution was filed requesting a review of the company’s human rights policies. The United Church Funds served as the lead filer of the resolution with several faith-based investors, including the PC(USA). This resolution produced the first dialogue on July 15, 2013, and as a result the resolution was withdrawn. The first dialogue covered the company’s process for policy development and conducting a human rights assessment. In this context, the company’s operations in Israel-Palestine were discussed, and follow up questions were developed and conveyed to Microsoft. A second dialogue on November 11, 2013, was held to review the company’s 2013 Citizenship Report including its human rights section. A schedule of conference calls every six months has been set.

V. ECUMENICAL COLLABORATION AND OTHER ADVOCACY

An essential commitment in the General Assembly’s 1984 policy on the use of divestment as an ethical strategy is to work ecumenically. Since 2004, MRTI has devoted considerable time to fostering ecumenical cooperation on engagement. To that end, an informal table called the Ecumenical Action Group: Investment for a Just Peace in Israel-Palestine (EAG) was created. As a result, corporate dialogues and filing resolutions were expanded to include participation by representatives of other Protestant denominations and Roman Catholic religious orders. These have included the Episcopal Church, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, United Church of Christ, United Methodist Church (General Board of Global Ministries, General Board of Church and Society, General Board of Pensions and Benefits, and the New England Conference), Mercy Asset Management, the Passionists, Ursuline Sisters, Maryknoll Sisters, Benedictine Sisters, Congregation of Divine Providence, Sisters of Providence, Sisters of the Holy Name of Jesus and Mary, Convent Academy of the Incarnate Word, American Friends Service Committee, and the Dominican Sisters. Also participating internationally has been KAIROS Canada, the United Church of Canada, the Ethical Council of the Swedish National Pension Funds, and the World Council of Churches.

Another important development is the creation of “Occupation-Free” screening tools for portfolio management, and increased attention to the Israel-Palestine situation in advocacy on human rights and corporations. Accelerated growth of illegal Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territories has prompted increased pressure on companies involved in non-peaceful pursuits. In Europe, churches in the Netherlands have reported on engagements with Heineken. The Dutch company owned 40 percent of Tempo Beer Industry whose Israeli subsidiary subsequently moved its facilities out of the Barkan Industrial Zone in the occupied West Bank, and back into Israeli proper. Swedish churches were instrumental in convincing Assa Abloy, a locksmithing company, to move its facility out of the Barkan settlement in the West Bank to the other side of the Green Line. This ecumenical cooperation has helped identify several European and other companies with extensive ties to the Occupation including Veolia, AIG, Ahava, and Alstom. In September 2013, Royal Haskoning DNV, a Dutch engineering firm withdrew from a sewage treatment project for illegal Israeli settlers in East Jerusalem. In December 2013, Vitens NV, a Dutch water company, severed ties with Mekorot Water Company, an Israeli firm, due to the latter’s business activities in the illegal Israeli settlements. The European Union also announced in 2013 increased restrictions on grants to companies with business operations in the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the report of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment.

The recommendations in MRTI’s report are the result of a methodical, well-researched, and ecumenical process that considers the importance of high technology from Motorola Solutions and Hewlett-Packard in the enforcement of control of the Palestinian population, including the protection of illegal settlements and blockade of Gaza, as well as the role of Caterpillar armored bulldozers in destroying Palestinian property and constructing settlements and a separation wall, 85 percent on confiscated Palestinian land. Attempts at reaching even low levels of agreement with all three companies have gone on for more than six years while all have been expanding their strategic business relationships with the occupation and refusing to address human rights concerns in any depth.
The basic argument for divestment is that words-only approaches have simply failed to halt the growth of Israeli settlements and the intensification of the occupation, steadily eroding the prospect of a two-state solution and hastening the de-Christianization of Palestine. The repeated failure of a U.S. sponsored “peace process” suggests that the political leadership of the more powerful party, the State of Israel, has no intention of allowing the Palestinians a viable state. Several items before the General Assembly address other aspects of the political impasse, including social discrimination, restrictions on religious and civil liberties, and efforts to magnify “terrorist” threats of Hamas, Hezbollah, and Iran. Overall, however, only a deliberate naïveté on the church’s part can ignore the deliberate subversion of the peace process since the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzak Rabin by a Jewish settler in 1995.

The goal of divestment and other nonviolent economic pressure is to help the Palestinian population by ending the occupation of their 22 percent of historic Palestine. The goal is not to end the State of Israel, despite efforts by opponents of divestment to claim that this is the church’s “true” motivation. The goal of helping the Palestinian “captive economy” is addressed by Recommendations 3 and 4 of MRTI’s report (further comment on the economics of the occupation is in ACSWP’s Advice & Counsel on Item 4-06). The church has carefully and repeatedly stated that its’ concern is for Israel and Palestine both to exist in safety and freedom, and that it is in Israel’s interest not to deny another people their rights. Although some American Jewish groups critical of the Presbyterian and other churches taking divestment and boycott actions claim to oppose the settlements, they have not had any success in influencing Israeli policy and generally support continued US military aid and the denial of recognition of Palestinian statehood at the United Nations. In contrast, divestment focused on the occupation embodies the key values of integrity, effectiveness, and solidarity in witness for justice.

Commissioners considering the overall divestment recommendations may consider three dimensions of this act of witness:

1. Is it consistent with the theology and policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)?
2. Is it an act of investment responsibility that reflects the three key moral criteria of integrity, effectiveness, and solidarity?
3. Does it support other witness to the key problem of the occupation and the failure of political, diplomatic, and violent measures to affect the situation?

A strong theological and ethical basis for divestment in support of freedom for Palestinian Christians and Muslims can be found not only in The Confession of 1967 (the basis for the 1971 mandate for MRTI itself), but in the Barmen Declaration and A Brief Statement of Faith. In its resolution on the Middle East in 2008, the General Assembly:

Affirms the obligation of the church to speak to the governments of the United States and all other nations where it sees those governments violating the commandments of God. In the words of The Theological Declaration of Barmen, which speaks to the dependence of the Church on the Word of God and its independence from any state or ideology, “we reject the false doctrine, as though there were areas of our life in which we would not belong to Jesus Christ, but to other lords... . The state has by divine appointment the task of providing for justice and peace ....” (The Book of Confessions, 8.15, 8.22). The sovereignty of God thus judges all claims of sovereign nationhood, all boundaries, all exercises of force, and all uses of resources by human beings. The Church is thus called to help discern where the Spirit is working in the world, guided by Scripture and its confessions.

In A Brief Statement of Faith, we affirm that:

In a broken and fearful world the Spirit gives us courage to pray without ceasing, to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace. [emphasis added] (Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 65–71)

The words in italics, in this case, may refer particularly to the Christians of Palestine and Israel whose voices are often disregarded in deliberations focused on the attitudes of Jews or Muslims.

In terms of policy, the Middle East report approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010), “Breaking Down the Walls,” introduced its recommendations with several summary statements:

We deeply value our relationships with Jews and Muslims in the United States, Israel, and the predominantly Muslim countries of the Middle East. Yet the bonds of friendship must neither prevent us from speaking, nor limit our empathy for the suffering of others. Inaction and silence on our part enable actions we oppose and consequences we grieve. ...

We also recognize that our concern to end support for both violence in all its forms and the ongoing occupation and settlement of Palestine places demands of integrity on how the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) uses its own resources and investments. Let us be clear: we do affirm the legitimacy of Israel as a state, but consider the continuing occupation of Palestine (West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem) to be illegitimate, illegal under international law, and an enduring threat to peace in the region. Furthermore, we recognize that any support for that occupation weakens the moral standing of our nation internationally and our security. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1027 of the electronic version)

2. The Board of Pensions’ comment affirms the compatibility of its primary fiduciary responsibility to Plan members with the participation of Board members and staff with the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) policy and process, which include Military-Related Investment Guidelines (1982) and an extensive study, The Divestment Strategy: Ethical and Institutional Context (1984). The 1982 guidelines led the church to restrict its investments in nuclear warhead makers and the largest military contractors, whose securities continue to be proscribed for church investment agencies. The 1984 study focuses on the two values of effectiveness and integrity, analyzed in light of trusteeship and Christian mission (https://www.pcusa.org/resource/divestment-strategy-principles-and-criteria/). These values led to a range of strategic criteria that guided the church in the “selective, phased divestment” of securities in thirteen companies as part of the larger campaign against apartheid. In broad strokes, then, there were three key values undergirding considerations such as impact on those suffering, urgency, technical feasibility, coordination with partners, limitation of other strategies, and clarity of message.

In terms of effectiveness, historically, church-led nonviolent economic pressure of all kinds, including divestment, contributed to the eventual departure of 214 of the 324 U.S. corporations operating in South Africa in 1981, representing an equity decline from $2.6 billion to $714 million, a substantial move toward isolating South Africa economically. As is well known, after the 1994 end of apartheid, figures such as Nelson Mandela, Desmond Tutu, and Allan Boesak credited the churches with decisive impact, as did studies such as Robert K. Massie’s Loosening the Bonds: The United States and South Africa in the Apartheid Years (Doubleday, 1998).

The 1984 study describes how divestment of securities, through removing access and influence “inside” a corporation as a stockholder, may have more impact on corporate policy from the “outside.” Divestment’s effectiveness is not primarily financial but impacts the reputation and legitimacy of the behaviors focused on in ecumenical and sometimes international campaigns. Vigorous opposition to divestment by the Israeli government and its supporters indicates a real fear of being associated with the occupation and oppression of Palestinians, affirming that divestment carries an effective message that justice is needed.

In terms of the second criterion, integrity, this is not to be seen as a purity or “cleansing the portfolio.” The Reformed tradition does not favor separation from the world or a position of moral perfection, unattainable in any event. We do, however, affirm that our principles should be backed up by action, lest we profit from practices we decry. The phrase in the Preliminary Principles of the Book of Order is that “truth is in order to goodness,” with the implication that the church should be a truth-teller and a truth-doer.

The church’s action, from this perspective, is less about strictly economic consequences and more about the prophetic nature of the church, acting in obedience and without being compromised. Yet seeking integrity can also make for effective witness against practices accepted by majorities or those in power.

The nature of Christian mission in the Middle East involves the church in acts of solidarity with the remaining Christians, and with all who seek a peace with justice. Although support for divestment and other forms of economic pressure is strongly discouraged by the Israeli government, an unprecedented ecumenical group issued the Kairos Palestine affirmation in December of 2009. Among the nonviolent methods of resistance to the occupation that they endorse is divestment:

4.2.6 Palestinian civil organizations, as well as international organizations, NGOs and certain religious institutions call on individuals, companies and states to engage in divestment and in an economic and commercial boycott of everything produced by the occupation. We understand this to integrate the logic of peaceful resistance. These advocacy campaigns must be carried out with courage, openly sincerely proclaiming that their object is not revenge but rather to put an end to the existing evil, liberating both the perpetrators and the victims of injustice. The aim is to free both peoples from extremist positions of the different Israeli governments, bringing both to justice and reconciliation. In this spirit and with this dedication we will eventually reach the longed-for resolution to our problems, as indeed happened in South Africa and with many other liberation movements in the world.

4.3 Through our love, we will overcome injustices and establish foundations for a new society both for us and for our opponents. Our future and their future are one. Either the cycle of violence that destroys both of us or peace that will benefit both. We call on Israel to give up its injustice towards us, not to twist the truth of reality of the occupation by pretending that it is a battle against terrorism… (From Kairos Palestine Document: A Moment of Truth: A Word of Faith, Hope, and Love from the Heart of Palestinian Suffering: http://www.kairosperadise.ps)

As to overall Palestinian views of the occupation and divestment as a strategy, the position of the Kairos church leaders seems to articulate a broad desire for resistance. An April 22, 2012, report by 60 Minutes confirms that Christians view the occupation as the primary impetus to their departure (http://mondoweiss.net/2012/04/60-minutes-profiles-palestinian-christians-michael-oren-falls-on-his-face-defending-israel.html).

As a strategy, then, the divestment of securities in three key corporations would strengthen the integrity of the church’s moral opposition to the occupation, focus attention effectively on the means by which the occupation is profitably maintained, and be a clear sign of support for the Palestinian Christians and others seeking peace with justice. It would also be an action consistent with international law and a witness against the political failures that enable an oppressive situation to continue.

3. Relation of divestment to the “peace process.”

Since the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzak Rabin by a fundamentalist Jew in 1995, the Oslo peace process has never recovered. See the ACSWP Advice & Counsel memorandum on Item 4-01 for Benjamin Netanyahu’s efforts to stop the Oslo process. The Second Intifada included suicide bombings and severe punitive raids on Palestinians, acts of terrorism fueled by increasing Islamist and Jewish fundamentalism. Settlement growth continued through the 1990s and 2000s, despite purported suspensions and the removal of 7,500 settlers from Gaza in 2005. Rockets by radical groups—a terrifying, if largely inaccurate, threat—were a cause or pretext for a one-sided war on Gaza (http://www.uruknet.info/?p=74717). Repeated UN and other international reports maintain that Israel’s strict control over Gaza’s borders amounts to collective punishment of its inhabitants.
The failure of the second Camp David process in 2000, though blamed largely on Yasser Arafat by Israeli and U.S. sources, reflected a substantial Palestinian willingness to concede land colonized by the major settlement cities, but an unwillingness to give up on a coherent Palestinian state with some shared sovereignty in Jerusalem. With the separation wall extensions, continued annexations and removals in East Jerusalem and Area C (60 percent) of the West Bank, strangulation of Palestinian land such as at the Tent of Nations (http://www.tentofnations.org), and violent responses to peaceful Palestinian protests, little hope was seen for a renewed peace process.

Public policy advocacy by the churches and human rights groups has been massively outgunned by well-funded groups dedicated to the defense of all Israeli interests, despite the emergence of more critical groups in the U.S. Jewish community. Diplomatically, although the US sponsored renewed negotiations, it has blocked international efforts to allow Palestine membership in the United Nations and has vetoed efforts to hold Israel accountable to international law more than thirty times, while continuing more than $3 billion in military aid every year. This one-sided support for the State of Israel and its occupation, along with the U.S.-led wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, has weakened the international reputation of the United States, particularly among the world’s 1.4 billion Muslims.

General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and many other good people have called repeatedly for an effective end of the occupation since 1974, only to see both nonviolent and violent liberation efforts of the Palestinians suppressed. While interfaith dialogue has had some value during this time, the U.S. political and media context allows relatively little debate over the nature of the occupation of Palestine, much less opposition to its continued support. Similarly, the exodus of Christians from the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem, will continue unless voices coupled with action are raised challenging the conditions that are designed to push Arabs out of desirable areas.

For the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to back its moral concerns with divestment would be a dramatic act of conscience and leadership. Although 2009 Presbyterian Panel survey data indicate that a majority of Presbyterians support divestment for human rights reasons, considerable pressure will be applied and allegations of anti-Semitism are to be expected, encouraging conflict in the church. Thus commissioners have to determine how important it is to act on a clear matter of justice in the face of open opposition.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 04-08.

The ACREC acknowledges MRTI’s careful and methodical ten-year process and thanks them for their faithful service. The ACREC agrees with MRTI that

1. the church has exhausted all avenues to bring about changes in the policies and practices of Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions through corporate engagement;

2. as long as the denomination’s policy is that we should not profit from “non-peaceful pursuits,” and as long as these three U.S. companies identified by MRTI remain deeply involved in “non-peaceful pursuits,” then as a matter of integrity, the church should end our investment in these companies.

New information on Caterpillar, Inc. not in the MRTI report:

On April 1, 2014, The New York Times reported that Caterpillar used a Swiss subsidiary to reduce its taxes by $2.4 billion.17 This tax-avoidance scheme was developed by PricewaterhouseCoopers who was paid $55 million “for helping [CAT] transfer $8 billion of profits to the Swiss subsidiary from 1999 to 2012. The transfers had no economic substance and were made solely to take advantage of the lower tax rate Caterpillar negotiated with Switzerland, according to Senator Carl Levin, chairman of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.” (The same article mentions HP also transferring profits offshore to avoid U.S. taxes).

During this time, CAT imposed a six-year wage freeze on its hourly workers, and awarded the current CEO massive pay increases.

SEC Action Puts Caterpillar Resolution on Sudan Up for Shareholder Vote—NY State Comptroller press release.20

In this light, ACREC believes CAT’s human rights record in Sudan and Israel/Palestine demonstrates its “Code of Corporate Conduct” is selective and only goes as far as the company prefers it to go and does not apply evenly across the board.

The ACREC believes that the same standards that have guided votes on MRTI recommendations over the last forty-two years of corporate engagement by the committee, should continue to guide the General Assembly on this vote, no matter who is committing the human rights violations, where, and against whom. To use different standards to judge the evidence is at best, discriminatory, and at worst, sets a bad precedent of exceptionalism that will diminish the effectiveness of MRTI’s future work.

The ACREC sees the following reasons for the General Assembly to approve the MRTI report and NOT to apply exceptions:

1. The MRTI report does not target Israel, but U.S. corporations who are profiting from a military occupation. Charging MRTI and the PC(USA) with holding Israel to different standards is a misrepresentation of the ten-year history and MRTI’s careful engagement with the three American corporations.

   • The PC(USA) will continue to hold shares in companies that do business in Israel, but are not profiting from non-peaceful pursuits, including McDonald’s, Procter & Gamble, Coca Cola, IBM, etc.

2. While it is true that some Jewish groups and organizations have said our corporate engagement process has “damaged relationships between Presbyterians and Jews,” not all Presbyterians and not all Jews agree with this statement. In fact, in some cases, the opposite is true. The call for not profiting from the occupation has strengthened relationships between some Presbyterians and some American and Israeli Jewish groups and individuals who oppose the occupation. This is evidenced by the support for MRTI from

   • The Israeli Committee Against House Demolition (ICAHD).21

   • The Rabbinic Council of Jewish Voice for Peace. The rabbis of Jewish Voice for Peace maintain that the human rights violations of CAT, Inc., H-P and Motorola Solutions are not in accord with Jewish Values.22

The very claim that this has affected our relationships with all Jews in a blanket way commits the serious error of classifying an entire people into one monolithic category. General stereotyping can and often does lead to racism in situations where decisions are made by assuming all people of one race or ethnicity hold the same viewpoints.

Hewlett-Packard is involved in questionable human rights issues in China and Syria as well as in Israel/Palestine as cited in a shareholder resolution voted on at their 2014 Annual Meeting. Both H-P and Motorola Solutions have wholly-owned subsidiaries in Israel whose record of equal employment opportunity is deficient.

   • While more than 20 percent of the Israeli population is non-Jewish, the high-tech industry, obligated by law not to discriminate, employs between 0.5 to 5 percent non-Jewish Israelis. Neither company will disclose its employment record.

Comment of The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on the several recommendations relating to Divestment and Affirmative Investment

In all its corporate actions, the Board of Pensions strives to support the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including the social witness policies approved by the General Assembly. Sometimes there is apparent conflict between the social witness desires of the denomination and our legal duties to members of the Benefits Plan. It is clear that our mutually approved long-term policies and procedures have worked well to avoid conflict and we urge the General Assembly to take no actions that would displace these very helpful policies and procedures.

The General Assembly has delegated oversight responsibility for Benefits Plan and Assistance Plan monies to the Board of Pensions. This responsibility makes the Board a “fiduciary,” a status that carries both certain duties and the potential for certain liabilities if carried out improperly. This delegation and separation of oversight duties is intended to relieve the General Assembly from both fiduciary duties and liabilities. The Board, acting through its Board of Directors, chooses the actual investment managers and determines how the money is allocated among various classes of securities to achieve the long-term investment objectives required of the Plans. The Board does not select specific investments (either to buy or to sell): security selection is the job of the investment managers themselves.

As indicated below, managers of individually managed portfolios are made aware of our social witness policy and are required to justify to the Board of Pensions any deviation from that policy.

These are all important separations of roles and responsibilities that are in the best interests of commissioners, of the denomination, of the Benefits Plan and of Plan members. For these reasons, the General Assembly does not direct the Board of Pensions to divest the portfolio of an investment held by the Benefits Plan and does not direct that the Board of Pensions affirmatively invest in any specific security.

The General Assembly does, however, determine the social witness policies of the Church, including how they pertain to investments of money held by or under the aegis of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It does advise the Board (and the Foundation) and it does urge us to take certain actions from time to time. We in turn are mindful of the General Assembly’s wishes.

To confuse this important definition of roles and responsibilities, would risk potential liability to the General Assembly, and possibly incur more investment risk for the Pension Trust and other benefits and assistance assets than would otherwise be desirable. We cannot, and the General Assembly would not have us avoid or compromise our legal duties and threaten the security of the Benefits Plan and Assistance Program.

First, the Board of Pensions has a “duty of loyalty” to act in the sole and exclusive interests of the Benefits Plan members. That means our decisions must be in the interests of that group taken as a whole, not in the interests of the Board, and not in the interests of some other group or some special part of the Church. The Board of Pensions has established procedures that it believes are completely faithful to this obligation.

Second, the Board has a “duty of care” to see to it that sufficient funds are available to keep the promises made to Plan members, both current and future. Selling or buying securities based on social witness principles alone could easily translate into taking on too much or too little risk at any given point in time. The Board of Directors has adopted detailed investment policies governing the allocation of the Plan’s investments in various asset classes and the selection of managers for those asset classes. This allocation is the primary way we manage investment risk. The investment managers are responsible for the selection of individual investment holdings. We are responsible for selecting the investment managers, and this selection process is another of our risk management tools, and is an equally important separation of duties. The result is that the Board of Pensions must make its own, independent judgments based on its legal duties of loyalty and care.

Having said that, it is our often-expressed objective to support the declared social witness policies of the denomination as best we can. Fortunately, specific policies on divestment adopted by the General Assembly in 1984 have served our mutual interests well, have promoted a united voice and have avoided conflicts within the denomination.

Divestment

General Assembly’s divestment list after several steps. Three of those steps include (a) undertaking a thorough and comprehensive research of the company’s involvement in an objectionable practice, (b) engaging the company in constructive dialogue about those practices through meetings and submission of shareholder resolutions; and (c) it is determined that no lesser alternative to divestment is available. Ultimately the General Assembly determines, upon receiving such a recommendation, what is the effective social witness action for the Church and its entities to undertake (including divestment or affirmative investment). The General Assembly has long recognized that the divestment practice of the Board of Pensions is one of a “prohibition of ownership” rather than one of an “immediate sale” of securities listed for divestment.

When and if a security is added to the prohibited securities list (there are currently 428 securities on the list), the Board of Pensions has adopted a formal process to ensure that the failure to own the security will not harm the financial soundness of the Plan. At this point, there are two levels of decision because of the differing responsibilities and accountabilities of the decision-makers. The first decision is for an investment manager. The Investment Manager must decide whether not owning a divestment list security will harm their portfolio results. If it decides that failure to own will not harm results, there is no issue as to portfolio performance, and the security is not held. Since, as a general rule our investment policies provide for observance of the General Assembly’s divestment policies, if the manager decides that failure to own will harm portfolio performance, it must ask us and provide justification for an exception.

The second decision now becomes one for the Board of Pensions. It is inappropriate for us to fail to act. In other words, we are obligated to independently decide whether or not to initiate divestment, or to grant an exception. In the event of a request for exception, if the Investment Committee determines that the request is reasonable and appropriate in the context of our duty of care, it may grant the exception. Currently, there is only one security held by the Board of Pensions under an approved exception request.

For example,

Stock A is placed on the divestment list for the first time. Manager X owns Stock A. When the divestment list is updated, we advise Manager X that Stock A may be held as a part of their normal investment program until such time as the security becomes part of the manager’s sell discipline for all clients. Any subsequent purchase requires an exception from the Board of Pensions.

If a manager does not own the stock, any purchase requires an exception.

From time to time, securities are removed from the divestment list, and managers are so advised.

Affirmative Investment

The duties of care and loyalty apply equally as limitations on the purchase of securities. In addition, the separation of roles and responsibilities between the Board and our investment managers is breached when we begin telling our investment managers to actively purchase specific securities. At that point we become portfolio managers ourselves, and to date that is not a responsibility we have undertaken because it would impose additional regulatory burdens and administrative expenses on the Plan that we have chosen to avoid.

Shareholder Resolutions and Proxy Voting

We do hold a small portfolio of securities outside the Benefits Plan specifically at the request of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment in order that the Church can use these shares to propose shareholder resolutions from time to time. These holdings are at minimum levels required to submit shareholder resolutions.

It is also appropriate to note that the Board of Pensions does vote all shares held by or through us in accordance with the actions of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment. The Board of Pensions respectfully requests that the General Assembly take this comment into account when considering the several recommendations on Divestment or Affirmative Investment proposed to the General Assembly. The processes in place have served us well for over twenty years, and will continue to serve us well going forward.

Resolution on Equal Rights for All Inhabitants of Israel and Palestine and on Conversations with Prophetic Voices

Despite decades of General Assembly and other international support for the freedom and self-determination of the Palestinian people, yet recognizing that the right to vote and personal freedoms have been denied or limited for most Palestinians under occupation and within Israel, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approve the following measures (a) to support equal rights and unblocked economic development for all inhabitants of Israel and the occupied territories including Jerusalem, the West Bank, and Gaza, and (b) to support the open and faithful discussion of this need for equal rights and legal standing within congregational and other forums:

A. Regarding the provision of equal rights, the General Assembly supports:

1. The establishment and protection of equal human rights for all inhabitants of Israel including:
   - the establishment and protection of equal human rights for Palestinian citizens of Israel, giving them parity with “Jewish Nationals;”
   - freedom of travel and worship, including legal protection for non-Jewish sites;
   - full protection of property rights without penalty for absence from Israel for business, education, family, or personal reasons;
   - unhindered opportunities for economic development; and
   - benefit from U.S. of financial aid without identity-based discrimination or exclusion.

2. The establishment and protection of equal human rights for all inhabitants of the occupied territories including Jerusalem, the West Bank, and Gaza including:
   - fair due process for all Palestinian inhabitants of the occupied territories who are arrested, convicted, and imprisoned either by the Israeli Defense Force or the Palestinian Authority;
   - the ability to marry residents of other Palestinian areas without losing residency;
   - special care in protecting the human rights of children;
   - freedom of travel and worship;
   - full protection of property rights, including freedom from arbitrary or unjust home demolitions;
   - unhindered opportunities for economic development, including full access to international economic aid without identity-based discrimination; and
   - access to tax revenues illegally sequestered.

3. Measures to ensure free and fair elections within the Palestinian territories, Israeli zones of control or in whatever political realities may be created by the current peace process, with the provision of election and human rights observers as necessary.

B. Regarding open and prophetic discussion of Palestinian human rights within congregational and other forums:

1. Affirms the position of the 219th General Assembly (2010) that “Views with respect the integrity of the religious faiths of Jews, Muslims, and other peoples, the value of non-coercion in religious life, and the benefits of public toleration of religious diversity to diminish extremism, discrimination, and bigotry” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1025) and encourages congregations to host conversations that include diversity within as well as among religious traditions represented;

2. Encourages Presbyterian congregations to reach out to neighboring synagogues, temples, and mosques as possible to explore nonviolent ways to promote peace with justice in Israel and Palestine, and recommends the shared reading of texts from the Hebrew prophets as a particular starting point in conversation with New Testament and Quranic texts on the nature of human dignity, the shared image of God, and universal human rights;

3. Recommends the inclusion of a full range of Jewish, Muslim, and Christian viewpoints in conversations, including the increasing number of prophetic voices committed to nonviolence and equal rights [such as Jewish Voice for Peace, Israeli Committee Against Home Demolitions, Kairos Palestine U. S., Friends of Saheel North America, Muslims for Progressive Values, and coalitions like the U.S. Campaign to End the Israeli Occupation];

4. Requests the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Middle East office and other Presbyterian Mission Agency offices, to produce suitable resources for such conversations.

Rationale

While peace talks are periodically undertaken to address the continuing problem of the occupation of Palestinian lands and the status of refugees from Israel going back to the 1947–49 period, Palestinians suffer continuous deprivation of human rights and reduction in the viability of any future state. This resolution does not address the question of one or two states (an important but larger question), but focuses on the need for legal status and voting rights to protect human beings, primarily Muslim and Christian Arabs, whose capacity for redress of the violation of their rights is blocked by lack of citizenship, among other legal handicaps. During each peace process these rights are further deferred, though they are the responsibility of the power with sovereignty to ensure. (For concerns about the current peace process, see samples from the International Crisis Group, such as: http://www.crisisgroup.org/en/regions/middle-east-north-africa/israel-palestine/147-leap-of-faith-israel-s-national-religious-and-the-israeli-palestinian-conflict.aspx)

The key role of citizenship as a human right is contained in principle in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to which the Government of Israel is a signatory (http://www.ohchr.org/en/professionalinterest/pages/ccpr.aspx).

Article 25 of that Covenant states:

Every citizen shall have the right and the opportunity, without any of the distinctions mentioned in article 2 and without unreasonable restrictions:

(a) To take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives;

(b) To vote and to be elected at genuine periodic elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret ballot, guaranteeing the free expression of the will of the electors;

(c) To have access, on general terms of equality, to public service in his (her) country.

It should be noted, however, that the covenant does not convey the rights to be a citizen of any particular state.

Insofar as Israeli government policy continuously expands the confiscation of Palestinian land and water; destroys Palestinian homes and infrastructure; cuts Palestinians off from livelihood and enforces daily humiliation by a massive wall built primarily on Palestinian land; imprisons thousands of prisoners, including minors, without fair due process; denies fundamental rights of movement and enforcement of contract for those in occupied territories; keeps Gaza effectively in a state of collective punishment (since the election of Hamas representation in an open election); and maintains a second-class citizenship status for Arab Christians and Muslims who are not “Jewish Nationals” within pre-1967 Israel, the Government of Israel demonstrates a systematic and frequently violent identity-based denial of human rights.

This state of affairs has been documented repeatedly by the United Nations, the U.S. State Department, human rights organizations inside and outside of Israel, and is very difficult to justify on the basis of security; enforcing the dispossession of millions of people creates resentment, fear, occasional violence, and continuous trauma among the occupied population. (See as example, Situation of Human Rights in territories occupied since 1967: http://daccess-dds-ny.un.org/doc/UNDOC/GEN/N13/469/94/PDF/N1346994.pdf?OpenElement.) The World Bank and other bodies have documented the blockages to Palestinian economic development caused by the occupation, creating dependency on Israel and adding to the costs of virtually all products. (See West Bank and Gaza, Area C and the Future of the Palestinian Economy: http://hlrn.org/img/violation/Area+C+Report+Oct-13.pdf) Israeli and Palestinian human rights organizations have also documented the costs of occupation on human development: (See Kerem Navot (Naboth’s Vineyard) report on impacts of Israeli Settlers’ agriculture: http://rhr.org.il/eng/2014/01/report-agriculture-as-a-means-of-land-grab/) The recommendations in this resolution address the lack of rights underlying continued Palestinian dispossession, regardless of the outcome of peace talks, and would help address violence and abuses within Palestinian jurisdictions and among Palestinian as well as Israeli groups.

With regard to conversations about General Assembly policy positions and the views of Jewish, Christian, and Muslim neighbors and fellow U.S. citizens, this resolution proposes conversations that reflect the growing diversity in the Jewish community on the question of Israel’s expansion and treatment of the Palestinians, as well as the diversity of the Muslim community, itself torn by conflict overseas. This proposal does not propose comprehensive interfaith dialogue (which involves many topics), but a focus on peaceful change and human rights, subjects that may also allow for secular participants. The degree to which congregations or presbyteries would look at the scriptural bases for these would depend on participants.

The social witness policy on the Middle East approved by the General Assembly in 2010, Breaking Down the Walls (2010), included an encouragement of “local dialogues and shared projects with American Jews and Muslims …” as well as “study of Reformed theological understandings of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and of historical understandings that encompass various narratives and verifiable sources” (Minutes, 2010, Part 1, p. 1023). Examples of different viewpoints from Christian, Jewish, and Muslim conversation partners were added as a supplement to that policy in 2012 (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/report-middle-east-study-committee).

That policy statement also included an initial statement of principles based in long Presbyterian support for the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, self-determination, and opposition to all identity-based forms of discrimination, including "equal rights for Palestinian citizens of the state of Israel" (Ibid), and “the cessation of systematic violation of human rights by any party, specifically, practices of administrative detention, collective punishment, the torture of prisoners and suspects, home demolitions and evictions, and the deportation of dissidents” (Ibid). This resolution provides measures to move forward on that larger policy.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 04-09.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns strongly supports this item because we agree with B’Tselem, The Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, who state “Israel has created in the Occupied Territories a regime of separation based on discrimination.” The facts on the ground display a high level of discrimination for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial ethnic group over another, and on that basis, result in oppressing an entire ethnicity.

Palestinians are denied nationhood and nationality, while Israeli Jewish nationals (settlers on occupied land) have a superior status over Christians and Muslims living in Palestine on the basis of racial ethnic reasons. i.e., because they are Jewish. These Jewish settlers live in the Occupied Palestinians Territories (OPT) under civil law, while the indigenous people live under military law. Two separate legal systems apply based on identity. The separation is complete.

On Defining “Race” and Basing Privileges on It

- Contrary to common belief, “race” is a social and political reality, not a biological or genetic reality. There is wide-spread agreement among scholars that race, as understood in the United States, is a social construct. Race is not an objective, scientific, or biological consistent characteristic of a person or group of persons. (The ACREC resource person can speak more to this issue.)

- The evidence that race is not biological is the fact that the amount of genetic variation within so-called race groups is much greater than variation between groups. i.e., an African person can have more common DNA with an Asian person than with another African. “The genetic diversity within any historically defined race, swamps the small amount of difference between such groups, making the boundaries of these categories entirely arbitrary. Therefore, race in humans does not have a biological meaning” (Angie K. Huxley, http://www.biologyreference.com/Ar-Bi/Biology-of-Race Jan 23, 2014).

- The American Anthropological Association says “Present-day inequalities between so-called ‘racial’ groups are not consequences of their biological inheritance but products of historical and contemporary social, economic, educational, and political circumstances.” The ACREC reminds the 221st General Assembly (2014) that “ethnicity” has to do with blood and belonging, while “race” has to do with power, privilege, and prejudice. Which groups have “access to power and privilege” defines the boundaries, not biological differences.

- Racism, however, is a social system in which some are advantaged and others are disadvantaged because of skin color, or perceived “race.” Racism is a system of advantage that is perpetuated when its existence is not acknowledged.

On Inequality and Racism in Israel and the OPT

In Israel proper, according to The Abraham Fund, an initiative working since 1989 “to promote coexistence and equality among Israel’s Jewish and Arab citizens,” there is great inequality in Israel’s population, which is far worse in the OPT. This wide inequality gap is foundational for keeping Israel’s official policy of Hafrada (“separation” in Hebrew) in place. (apartheid means separation in Afrikaans).

The Abraham Fund: “Although Israel’s Arab citizens account for one-fifth of the country’s population, the economy of Israel is largely oriented toward its Jewish population. The Poverty Report (National Insurance Institute, 2006) indicates that over 54% of the country’s Arab citizens were living in poverty in 2006, compared to 14.7% of the country’s Jewish citizens. The widespread poverty among Arab families is attributed, for the most part, to the low employment rate of Arab citizens.24

The ACREC points to this data as foundational to attitudes that have developed in Israel and the OPT, which contribute to keeping the populations separate and unequal. According to a 2014 Israeli survey, “68% of Israelis believe the Arab population was subject to racism.” http://www.jpost.com/National-News/Survey-Who-suffers-from-racism-in-Israel-345603. (The figure is 79% for racism against Ethiopian migrant workers.)

Reported in Israeli Newspaper, Ha’aretz, a 2012 survey provides an even bleaker picture, showing that “most of the Jewish public in Israel supports the establishment of an apartheid regime in Israel if it formally annexes the West Bank.” Some of the survey results:

- 59 percent of the Jewish respondents want preference of Jews over Arabs in admissions to jobs in government ministries
- 49 percent of Jews want the state to treat Jewish citizens better than Arab citizens, 42 percent don’t want to live in the same buildings as Arabs

24 http://www.abrahamfund.org/en
• 42 percent don’t want their children in the same classes as Arab children
• 33 percent want to bar Arabs from voting for the Israeli parliament
• 69 percent would object to giving Palestinians in the West Bank the right to vote if the West Bank was annexed by Israel
• 74 percent is in favor of separate roads for Israelis and Palestinians in the West Bank.

http://www.haaretz.com/news/national/survey-most-israeli-jews-wouldn-t-give-palestinians-vote-if-west-bank-was-annexedpremium-1.471644

The ACREC reminds the church that these Arabs who are, according to the survey, “subject to racism,” are indigenous people who deserve nothing less than equal rights, guaranteed by whatever government is in place.

In The Jewish Daily Forward, August 2013, Larry Derfner writes on racism in Israel:

The ADL [Anti-Defamation League] goes after anti-Semitism with a fist, it goes after Israeli racism with a sigh. As a matter of fact, the ADL and the entire American Jewish establishment should suspend their campaigns against anti-Semitism indefinitely and take a look at what’s going on in Israel.

http://forward.com/articles/182171/israels-everyday-racism-and-how-american-jews-tu/#ixzz2xdzNqUEV

The ACREC holds on to the belief that God created all people good. To deny some people (because of skin color or language) the privileges other have, is to deny God’s good creation. To allow this system—in which some receive advantages simply because of perceived “race”—to go unchecked is to deny that God made all people in God’s own good image.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concern offers the following advice and counsel to the 221st General Assembly (2014) on Item 04-09.

Please see ACWC’s counsel offered on Item 04-01.

Item 04-10

[The assembly approved Item 04-10 with amendment. See pp. 13, 62.]

The 221st General Assembly (2014) declares that Zionism Unsettled does not represent the views of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [and directs all Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) entities to express this statement in all future catalogs, print or online resources] [, and directs the staff of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to no longer distribute Zionism Unsettled and have the document removed from the church web store immediately].

Rationale

In January 2014, the Israel Palestine Mission Network (IPMN) of the PC(USA) issued a “congregational study guide” on the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict titled Zionism Unsettled. This four-color book and DVD was made for sale on the PC(USA) store for $10, and purports to be used by congregations to study the issues involved in peacemaking in the Middle East. While not an official report of the church, it is marketed in such a way that it appears to have the stamp of approval of the whole church when it is actually a product of a mission network.

Using politically charged rhetoric, including calling Israel as being “towards a single Jewish, apartheid state, Zionism Unsettled presents a one-sided view of the conflict and is not a study guide, but instead, a polemic that distorts issues rather than educates. As such, it is in direct opposition to established General Assembly policy calling for the legitimate rights of both Palestinians and Israelis to be recognized. The study guide reveals a desire by some in our denomination to deny the right of the Jewish people to a homeland in Israel.

Through its placement on the PC(USA) website and store, Zionism Unsettled appears to represent the position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and has been viewed that way in several press reports.

Presbyterians are called to support and encourage diverse points of view and vigorous discussion on a variety of issues. When crafting materials for a study guide, it is essential that issues are presented in a way in which those studying the issue can fairly examine as many sides of an issue as possible. A study guide should not be one-sided; nor should it denigrate one party. Zionism Unsettled fails in that it appears as propaganda attempting to sell itself as an unbiased study. Yet, it demonizes the Israelis and distorts complex issues.
The “Statement of the Ecumenical and Interreligious Work Group of Chicago Presbytery on Zionism Unsettled” captures the problems with the study guide quite clearly. They identified three main issues:

First, IPMN chose to argue its case outside of the bounds of the historic principles as laid down by the General Assembly over the years, equally affirming the creation and security of the State of Israel and the peoples within her, and the validity and necessity of a Palestinian state, sovereign and sustainable within negotiated and safe borders. Furthermore ... this document gives the appearance that it formally represents the PC(USA).

Second, to critique certain policies of the Israeli government is a practice supported by the Jewish and Israeli community itself, and is needed in all free societies, including the United States. But it is a different thing to lift up the stereotypical image of “the Zionist,” “Zionism” or “Israel” in which the description turns to scape-goating and the imagined stereotype is described as embodying humanity’s worst traits and motives, exhibiting long term machinations of destruction. ...

Third, to offer a critique of Israeli policies is, in and of itself, not inherently anti-Judaic. So, it is unfortunate the document is riddled with statements and allusions to Jewish people that fall under that rubric. (http://www.chicagopresbytery.org/wp-content/uploads/2008/07/EIRWG-Statement-on-Zionism-Unsettled.pdf)

“The Statement on ‘Zionism Unsettled,’” by Dr. Katharine Henderson, president, Auburn Theological Seminary, captures more of the biased and damaging nature of the report.

... The premise of the document appears to be that Zionism is the cause of the entire conflict in the Middle East and the root of all its problems. For its authors, Zionism functions as the original sin, from which flows all the suffering of the Palestinian people.

One of the important consequences of this polemic is to undermine the legitimacy of the state of Israel and contradict policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) over several decades. Our denomination has consistently supported the needs and aspirations of both Israelis and Palestinians; it has advocated for justice, security, and reconciliation for all, while acknowledging the complexity of the problem and the difficulty in reaching a just and lasting peace. (http://pfmep.org/press-releases/138-auburn-seminary-statement-on-zionism-unsettled)

The Reverend Doctor Christopher Leighton also captures the problems of this document in his “Open Letter to the Presbyterian Church.”

[The IPMN’s] agenda threatens to polarize our community, betray relationships with our Jewish colleagues, and ultimately undermine our credibility as “peacemakers.” Despite the resolution approved at the 218th General Assembly “to avoid taking broad stands that simplify a very complex situation into a caricature of reality where one side clearly is a fault and the other side is clearly a victim,” IPMN’s congregational study guide, “Zionism Unsettled,” [conflicts with] the ideals and the practices that our Church has striven to uphold. It turns us from peacemakers to polemicsists, and from honest dialogue partners to partisan ideologues. (http://www.icjs.org/featured-articles/open-letter-presbyterian-church-0)

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) disapprove Item 04-10.

It is not the usual policy of General Assembly to vote on resources sold by the online store. The sale of any particular resource and the use of facilities of the church by organizations and individual Presbyterians does not represent an endorsement of those resources or a particular privilege of use. Yet this is not simply a matter of an effort to suppress discussion of controversial matters. People of good faith do often disagree on issues of conscience. The following two citations are therefore relevant:

F-3.0101 God Is Lord of the Conscience

a. That “God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men which are in anything contrary to his Word or beside it, in matters of faith or worship.”

b. Therefore we consider the rights of private judgment, in all matters that respect religion, as universal and unalienable: We do not even with to see any religious constitution aided by the civil power, further than may be necessary for protection and security, and at the same time, be equal and common to all others.

F-3.0105 Mutual Forbearance

That, while under the conviction of the above principle [Truth and Goodness F-3.0104] we think it necessary to make effectual provision that all who are admitted as teachers be sound in the faith, we also believe that there are truths and forms with respect to which [people] of good characters and principles may differ. And in all these we think it the duty both of private Christians and societies to exercise mutual forbearance toward each other.”

The ACSWP does not believe it helpful to compare voices commending and voices condemning, Zionism Unsettled, the resource in question. The resource is seen quite differently from this resolution by many Presbyterians and other people of faith. It is our understanding that this collection of essays represents an effort to answer the question of why settlements continue to be built, or the occupation continues, in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. Others may have different answers. The General Assembly is not called to endorse or condemn this resource as it is not a proposed official policy statement and is not being sent out by the General Assembly.
Advice and Counsel on Item 04-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) disapprove Item 04-10.

The ACREC does not agree with the spirit or content of this resolution. Presbyterians have a time-honored tradition of study and dialogue and we value looking at difficult issues of our times from all sides and through different lenses. We have a longstanding tradition of not running away from difficult conversations, accepting that there are people of faith on both sides of any issue who deserve to be heard.

This quote from February 13, 2014, by Linda Valentine, Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency regarding the publication of Zionism Unsettled affirms:

Our church has a long history of engaging many points of view when it comes to dialogue on critical issues facing the world around us — it’s who we are, part of our DNA,” said Linda Valentine, executive director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. “There are likely as many differing opinions as there are Presbyterians—and, like many denominations, we don’t always agree.”

... In 2004, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) formed the Israel Palestine Mission Network (IPMN) to help move the church toward the goal of a just peace in Israel/Palestine. The independent group—which speaks to the church and not for the church—recently published a study guide, Zionism Unsettled: A Congregational Study. The guide is intended to prompt discussion on the ever-changing and tumultuous issue of Israel-Palestine. The IPMN booklet was neither paid for nor published by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

“There are myriad voices within congregations, and some would like to see the church go beyond that stance,” added Valentine. “But we remain guided by the policies of the General Assembly, seeking peace for Israelis and Palestinians alike.”

There are a variety of voices and opinions within the Jewish community on this issue as well. Jewish Voice for Peace advocates for a peaceful and just solution among Palestinians and Israelis that respects human rights for all. (http://www.pcusa.org/news/2014/2/13/presbyterian-church-us-remains-committed-peace-ist/)

Walter Brueggemann, professor emeritus, Columbia Theological Seminary, has praised Zionism Unsettled: “The urgency of the Palestinian plight in the face of Israeli intransigence indicates that intentional, concrete, and sustained public action is necessary to respond credibly to the crisis. Zionism Unsettled is a welcome study guide. It will prove an effective vehicle for helping to mobilize public opinion so that both attitudes and policies can be transformed in the face of an imperious and exploitative ideology.” Comments like these from well-known scholars and advocates for justice clearly demonstrate how this resource opens needed conversation. More praise for the booklet is posted by the network that has published it here.

On May 19, 2014, Gradye Parson, Stated Clerk, wrote the following pastoral letter to Presbyterians as we approached our 221st General Assembly (2014):

In Presbyterians and Politics: Disturbers of Government*, I recalled the first General Assembly in 1789, where commissioners engaged with government by approving a letter to be written to President George Washington expressing delight in his appointment to the “first office in the nation.”

I also wrote,

On one hand, it would appear that those of the Reformed tradition have been defenders of the role of government, and on the other hand, disturbers of governments. Presbyterians have argued with the government about many issues, such as slavery, education, temperance, labor conditions, segregation, war, and the environment. At times, the General Assembly has spoken for the vast majority of the church, and at other times, the assembly has spoken a prophetic word to itself and the world.

Today we continue our rich tradition of engagement in the public sphere. (http://pres-outlook.org/2014/05/call-prophetic-witness-letter-stated-clerk-gradye-parsons/) (*www.pcusa.org/resource/presbyterians-and-politics/)

The ACREC believes in open wide discussion of the issues of our times and urges the assembly to refrain from shutting down debate on issues that may not be widely agreed upon.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-10

Comment on Item 04-10—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Israel Palestine Mission Network was established by a directive of the 216th General Assembly (2004), “for the purpose of creating currents of wider and deeper Presbyterian involvement with Palestinian partners, aimed at demonstrating solidarity and changing the conditions that erode the humanity of Palestinians living in Jerusalem, the West Bank, and Gaza.”

Item 04-11

[The assembly approved Item 04-11 with amendment. See pp. 13, 62.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On the Tragedy at Tent of Nations.

Responding to the unwarranted and illegal attack by the Israeli military on the Nassar family farm near Bethlehem on May, 19, 2014, the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) takes the following steps:
1. Condemns the May 19, 2014, bulldozing by the Israeli military of 1,500 to 2,000 mature, fruit-bearing apricot and apple trees and grapevines growing on land owned by the Daoud Nassar family in the West Bank of the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

2. Commends and thanks the Nassar family for establishing on their land Tent of Nations, a peace project that has hosted thousands of international visitors who have visited the farm, worked as volunteers, held workshops and conferences in the facilities there, worked in the summer youth camps, and have taught in the Women’s Education Center they established in the nearby village of Nahalin.

3. Encourages Presbyterians to visit Tent of Nations and to work to end the senseless destruction of farms, homes, and businesses in the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

[4. Endorses legal efforts at redress and protection of the “Tent of Nations” and invites Presbyterians and others of good will to help this family preserve and rebuild upon their ancestral land.]

Rationale

On May 20, 2014, Friends of Tent of Nations North America (FOTONNA) posted the following appeal on their web site (fotonna.org):

This petition letter is being written in protest of the actions by the Israeli Military Courts against the Nassar family and their Tent of Nations Peace Project. This family has documentation of ownership for their 100-acre farm, located just six miles southwest of Bethlehem in the West Bank, dating back to the Ottoman Empire. They have been working through the Israeli Military/Civil Courts and the Israeli Supreme Court since 1991, defending their ownership rights to this land called Daher’s Vineyard. So far, they have been able to hold back serious threats with legal challenges/appeals through the courts. In December 2012, new demolition orders were issued for 10 structures on the farm (including animal pens, compost toilets, temporary tent structures, cisterns, etc.) and three more structures were added in January 2013. None of these structures poses a security threat to neighboring Israeli settlements.

The family protested these actions through their lawyer; they applied for new building permits for all 13 structures. In addition, they submitted the following information by February 24, 2013:

- Additional land survey maps: one topographical map which shows the farm location in the region; two technical maps, one at 1/250 scale and the other 1/50,000 scale, which show the new structures and their locations and dimensions;
- Plans for sources of providing electricity and water to the land from the village and for provisions for gray water and filtration systems;
- Approval/signature of the Israeli Ministry of Agriculture, certifying that the land is agricultural land.

As of mid-April 2014, there had been no word from the Military Court as to their decisions regarding these matters; the family never knows what to expect or when to expect it. In late April/early May 2014, however, the Military Authorities placed a warning on the land declaring that the trees were planted on “State Land” and, therefore, constituted a trespass and should be “evacuated”! On May 5, the Nassar family filed an appeal with the Military Court against this order and clarified that the land was not “State Land” and that the trees were planted on the family land. Furthermore, they clarified that the Supreme Court had declared that the Nassar family should continue with the “re-registration” process of their land.

According to the law, no demolition or evacuation is allowed once an appeal is filed and until a final verdict has been delivered. In spite of this fact, however, they rushed to destroy the land and uproot the trees. On May 19, 2014, the Israeli Military brought in bulldozers and, unannounced, illegally destroyed between 1,500 and 2,000 mature, fruit-bearing apricot and apple trees and grape vines in the lower valley on the land as well as reducing the terraced land to rubble. We would like you to look into this situation as soon as possible and help us prevent any additional destructive action on the part of the Israeli Military from taking place. This family lives by the motto “We Refuse to be Enemies” and is committed to solving issues in a non-violent manner. This 22-year struggle must come to an end in a just and legal manner and we urge you to use your influence to ensure that justice does prevail in this case. On June 3, 2014, Presbyterian Peace Fellowship (PPF) Executive Director Rick Ufford-Chase issued the following statement (presbypeacefellowship.org):

I have visited the Tent of Nations twice, and have told my friends that I believe it to be the most powerful, authentic example of a commitment to Christian, principled nonviolence anywhere in the world. I consider the Nassar family my friends. On the PPF Delegation’s visit in January, my son Teo and I planted several small trees together, which was among the most meaningful things we have ever done together.

When I grow weary of the struggle for justice, or question my own commitment to nonviolence as a strategy of resistance to powerful forces of violence and oppression, I think of the Tent of Nations. If decision-makers in the State of Israel believe that they can demoralize the Nassar family – or thousands of us who are their supporters around the world – they have seriously miscalculated. When Jesus said to his disciples “I say to you, listen – love your enemies,” he was crazy like a fox. In the face of overwhelming military might backed by the power of empire, in Jesus’ time and in our own, the most powerful response to oppression and destruction and violence and death is the power of love.

I hope you’ll take a few moments to sign this petition and let them know that this travesty is a historical pivot-point, a turning point. Illegal expansion of settlements must stop. The occupation must stop! Bulldozing olive groves and Palestinian homes must stop.

Then—please write a note of hope to the Nassars to thank them for their witness and their faithfulness to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

May the peace that passes all understanding be upon each of us.
Advice and Counsel on Item 04-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 04-11 with amendment by adding Recommendation 4 to read as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

This commissioners’ resolution is consistent with existing Presbyterian policy and pursuits of peace affirmed by previous assemblies.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 04-11.

The Nassar family has a long history of living out The Good News. The Tent of Nations is a fulfilled dream of Bishara Nassar, a Palestinian Christian who lived all his life in Bethlehem and on the land itself and died in 1976, after which his family carried on with his work to uphold his vision. According to the Tent of Nations, this vision seeks “to bring people of various cultures together to build bridges of understanding, reconciliation, and peace.” Importantly, Tent of Nations “brings together youth from around the world, especially from areas of conflict for face-to-face interaction.” So it is especially tragic for such a peacemaking presence so close to the birthplace of Christ to be under constant threat of destruction and to have borne such a loss last month.

The ACREC urges the General Assembly to support this Christian family in Palestine who have remained on their land near Bethlehem in the West Bank as all other land circling them has been turned into illegal Jewish settlements. The recent tragedy of the loss of mature fruit trees is documented with several photographs on this Israeli news site: http://972mag.com/photos-israeli-authorities-destroy-palestinian-families-valley-of-fruit-trees/91701/.

Isaiah 55:12–13: “For you shall go out in joy, and be led back in peace; the mountains and the hills before you shall burst into song, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the cypress; instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle; and it shall be to the Lord for a memorial, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.”

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Reaffirming the Rights of Children and Attention to Violence Against Children in Israel and Palestine.

[Heeding the call of Christ to care for the welfare and safety of children, truly “the least of these,” and to advocate for them in situations of crisis or abuse, the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Israel Palestine Mission Network, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to do the following:

Rationale

“Take care that you do not despise one of these little ones; for, I tell you, in heaven their angels continually see the face of my Father in heaven. What do you think? If a shepherd has a hundred sheep, and one of them has gone astray, does he not leave the ninety-nine on the mountains and go in search of the one that went astray? And if he finds it, truly I tell you, he rejoices over it more than over the ninety-nine that never went astray. So it is not the will of your Father in heaven that one of these little ones should be lost.” (Mt. 18:10–14)

Because we believe that all children depend upon adults for safety and security. In a world that does not always value children; All children are affected first and most deeply by those things that work against health and wholeness:

Therefore we hope for a world where all children can find a safe place; where all ages, races, genders, creeds, and abilities are recognized, valued, and celebrated; where all adults hear the voices of children and speak with as well as for them; where all children have “first call” on the world’s resources and first place in the minds and hearts of the world’s adults. ("A Vision for Children and the Church,” adopted 1993)

Hundreds of cases of human rights abuses against Palestinian children (under the age of 18) documented each year by UNICEF, Save the Children, Defense for Children International Palestine (DCI-Palestine), and other organizations. In many cases, children are forcibly removed from their homes, often in the middle of the night, and taken to detention centers or prisons. In some cases there is deliberate sleep deprivation as part of their detention experience.

Often the children and their parents are not told the reasons for the arrest, and parents have no idea where their children are being taken. The most common accusation against these children is stone-throwing. While interrogated in detention, children are routinely asked questions about individuals in their families and communities, are shown photos of individuals that they are required to identify, and asked to make reports on the activities of persons around them.

During 2013, according to statistics from the Israeli Prison Service, an average of 199 children were detained and three out of four Palestinian children arrested from the West Bank experienced some form of physical violence during arrest, transfer, or interrogation. Some estimates place the number of children who have been detained and prosecuted in the system at 8,000 since the year 2000.

Following a ten-year study, UNICEF released a March 2013 paper, “Children in Military Detention,” which reports that more than 700 Palestinian children, ages 12–17, are detained each year by Israeli army, police, and security agents. “Ill-treatment of Palestinian children in the Israeli military detention system appears to be widespread, systematic, and institutionalized,” the paper says.

The Defence of Children International—Palestine website introduction reports that:

Since the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory in 1967, Palestinians have been charged with offences under Israeli military law and tried in Israeli military courts. It is estimated by the UN that since 1967, over 700,000 Palestinian men, women and children have been detained under Israeli military orders.

The Israeli military detention system consists of a network of military bases, interrogation and detention centres, and police stations in the West Bank, East Jerusalem and in Israel, where Palestinians, predominantly from the West Bank, are initially taken for questioning and temporary detention. Some of these facilities are inside settlements in the West Bank. Palestinians, including children, remain at these facilities while awaiting sentencing by the military courts, or are transferred to prisons, most of which are located inside Israel, where they wait to be sentenced, or to serve out their prison terms. It should be noted that transferring children out of the Occupied Palestinian Territory violates Article 76 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

An Israeli juvenile military court was established in September 2009, following mounting criticism relating to the prosecution of children as young as 12 years in the same military courts used to prosecute adults. In practice, the juvenile military court convenes every Monday and Thursday, using the same facilities and court staff used by the adult military courts. Children continue to be brought into court in groups of twos and threes, wearing leg chains around their ankles and dressed in the same brown prison uniforms worn by adults.

Military Order 1651 establishes a minimum age of criminal responsibility at 12 years, and sets out the maximum penalties that can be imposed on children in various age categories for a number of listed offences. (http://dci-palestine.org/content/child-detention)

Given the commitment of the PC(USA) to studying, advocating, and taking action on behalf of children at risk, with particular attention to those most vulnerable to the effects of poverty, violence, and denial of basic rights, this resolution asks that the PC(USA) begin its own study of the situation of children in Palestine and Israel and to create a report with recommendations to be brought to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) with its findings and recommendations.
Mindful of the need to conserve denominational resources, this study shall be conducted in digital formats and will use available on-line meeting sites in order to do its work. Should some funding be needed to complete the study, this resolution suggests that the study team approach the Israel Palestine Mission Network for a grant to support the work of the study. As those grants are awarded on an annual basis at the network’s annual meeting, a grant request should be made as soon as possible after the study team is named.

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 04-12.

The ACREC agrees that study materials with attention to violence against children in Palestine and Israel are needed resources. The church also needs to learn about the ill-treatment of children in Israeli military detention; this is an area of information that very little is known about.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 04-12.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recognizes the many occasions on which the PC(USA) has urged the ratification of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child and the social witness policies approved by General Assembly cited in the rationale section of the commissioners’ resolution.

While the resolution mentions no disaggregated statistics on the gender of children under age eighteen who are detained, it is safe to say there are young girls detained as well as boys. In such detention, girls are particularly powerless and vulnerable. Because children do not have access to families and representation, there is no way to determine whether or not sexual or physical abuse is occurring.

Strengthening the church with information and resources will provide concerned members ways to advocate for the rights of children in this specific context. ACWC committee members are grateful to the commissioners for calling this human rights violation to our attention.
Item 04-13

Commissioners’ Resolution. On a Commitment to Prayer for Peace, Justice, and Reconciliation in Israel and Palestine.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) calls for the following actions from the Stated Clerk and our presbyteries concerning a call to community engagement and prayer for peace, justice, and reconciliation in Israel/Palestine:

1. [Along with the actions of this General Assembly on Israel and Palestine,] the Stated Clerk shall invite persons from within American Jewish and Palestinian communities (both Christian and Muslim) who represent broad perspectives and concerns regarding conflict between people in Israel and Palestine, to gather for a common day of prayer on the diverse interfaith community and PC(USA) partners for a season of prayer for justice and peace in Israel/Palestine, encouraging gatherings on regional and congregational levels that may include off-the-record discussions. Prayer will be followed by a time of listening for the purpose of deeper understanding of one another. Guests are invited to a closed-door conversation to share their hopes and concerns for peace in Israel/Palestine, the emotions they may have experienced in relation to the conflict, and their understanding of what makes for peace in the region. This time of listening shall close with a time of prayer.

2. Likewise, the Stated Clerk shall write to mid councils, urging them to create a similar day of prayer and listening in their own communities (encouraging pastors to gather with Jewish leaders and “Arab Christians and/or Muslims” given the demographic realities reflected in their context).

3. Mid council facilitators shall be urged to model a form of listening with participants that encourages mutuality and confidentiality, so that deep concerns and commitments may be spoken and heard though they may not be resolved.

4. Facilitators shall be directed to resources from the Reconciliation Program of Presbyterian World Mission and the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Interfaith Relations Office that promote constructive conversation and meaningful dialogue.

5. Presbyteries shall be urged to send a report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to share what has taken place within the presbytery to promote such prayer gatherings.

Rationale

As the Apostle Paul reminds us, in Christ we have known the reconciling God and those who have been called to follow Christ have been entrusted with the message of reconciliation (2 Cor. 5:11–21). The Confession of 1967 asserts that at the heart of the gospel in any age is the reconciling work of Jesus Christ (Book of Confessions, 9.06), and the church is called to be an example of reconciliation and freedom, even amongst the nations (Book of Confessions, 9.45). The theological claims in the Confession of 1967 were reaffirmed in a time of great division: the growing Cold War, the fervor of the civil rights movement, the rise of the women’s movement, and the confession was published in the year of the Six-Day war, also known as the 3rd Arab-Israeli war. The call of this confession has shown itself to be both salient and prescient. In it, we are reminded that disciples of Christ are not called to engage the world by patterning our use of power after the world. By contrast, our model for engagement is Jesus Christ, who showed power in the form of a servant, humbling himself even to death on a cross.

For ten years, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been debating overtures regarding boycott, divestment, and sanctions (BDS). Whether or not the overtures regarding BDS are approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014), people on all sides of the debate are eager to end this culture of conflict (both within and beyond the church). Many are eager to seek new paths that lead toward justice, peace, and reconciliation for all people in Israel and Palestine. Prayer and bridge building through active listening at the national and local level may be a key to that new path.

Last month Pope Francis visited the Holy Land and the world watched as he prayed with both Palestinians and Israeli Jews with his words, his hands, and his feet. In the spirit of the reconciling Christ and in the posture of Pope Francis, this overture is an invitation to the PC(USA) to enter into a season of prayer and listening. Presbyterians believe that the reconciling Christ is at work in the world, even in the midst of conflict between people. In prayer, we listen for God’s guidance, expect God’s transformation, and discover new ways to align ourselves most faithfully with God’s healing and reconciling work in the world. Joining together with Jews, Christians, and Muslims to listen and to pray together for a just and lasting peace, could not only open new avenues for reconciliation between our traditions, but cultivate the trust, imagination, and commitment necessary to find new ways to work together concretely for justice and peace for all peoples in Israel/Palestine.

The General Assembly has long committed its support to grassroots peacemaking efforts. Supporting such a resolution opens the door to greater discernment for Presbyterians as they develop relationships, grow in compassion, and pray that... wounds might be healed, chains of fear and hatred loosed, and new paths toward a lasting peace discovered. Our faith compels us to be rooted in prayer and rooted in relationship. By so doing, we live into the Great Commandment Jesus commends: to love God and love our neighbor. Let us lay claim to the hope and the promise that the God who created the cosmos and unleashed the Spirit in the world, intercedes on our behalf in prayer, and will transform hearts and minds, bodies and souls. May God’s Spirit continue to lead us as reconciling people.

“[5. Presbyteries shall be urged to send a report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to share what has taken place within the presbytery to promote such prayer gatherings;]"

The approach of this resolution effectively confuses the struggle for human rights and the suffering experienced in Palestine with the emotional experiences and sharing of U.S. citizens. While it is essential to recognize the validity of a range of feelings, the “closed door” context suggests either trust-building and possibly therapeutic exercises or negotiating sessions. In either case, the choice of participants would inevitably be selective and objectives unclear if unrelated to the stated goals of a just peace achieved by nonviolent action. Item 11-09 in fact recommends sincere interfaith discussions among congregations but with a scriptural and policy basis for discussion and prayer.

If decisions on policy matters were in fact to be taken by a group convened by the Stated Clerk, then the “open meetings” policy could apply, but informal discussions are certainly currently within the purview of the Stated Clerk. The cost of such an interfaith gathering might be more merited if related to actions of the General Assembly, but the amendments encourage simply the recognition that prayer and discussion may be merited, not as a substitute for addressing particular measures to help bring justice and peace, but as an accompaniment to them. This would be the choice of participants on each local or regional level, perhaps with the goal of friendship building and truth telling. Further, a confession of complicity might well be more important than a sharing of aggrieved feelings, given the role of the United States in supporting a very unfair situation of real suffering for many.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 04-13.

The ACREC supports the spirit of reconciliation and healing of this resolution. It is important to have prayer and healing when there have been issues that have divided justice advocates.
Comment on Item 04-13—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Item 04-13 asks, in part, for the Presbyterian Mission Agency for resources related to prayer with and among persons of different religious traditions. The Office of Interfaith Relations has developed and published several resources created for the purpose of accompanying congregations and mid councils in their interfaith engagements. In particular, Respectful Presence: An Understanding of Interfaith Prayer and Celebration From A Reformed Christian Perspective was commended to the congregations and governing bodies of the PC(USA) by the 209th General Assembly (1997). Respectful Presence offers rationale and guidelines for prayer with interfaith neighbors. It includes a congregational study guide and a sample service called “A Service of Prayer for Peace in the Middle East.” The Office of Interfaith Relations also has available for download these additional resources helpful to interfaith prayer and worship:

Commissioners’ Resolution. Support for a Just and Peaceful Compromise of the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict.

The 221st General Assembly (2014)

1. Endorses as a “third way” approach to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict the discussion paper written by the Ecumenical and Interreligious Work Group of the Presbytery of Chicago, “Perspectives on Presbyterian Church (USA) Support for a Just and Peaceful Compromise of the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict.” (See the attachment, CR_17%20Background%20Attachment.pdf.)
2. Directs that this paper be distributed to every presbytery of the PC(USA), be made available through the PC(USA) website, and urges presbyteries and congregations to study it and engage in conversations around it.
3. Encourages presbyteries and congregations of the PC(USA) to engage in the following types of actions to promote the conditions necessary for a just and peaceful future for Palestinians and Israelis:
   - Support Israeli and Palestinian peacemakers and their initiatives;
   - Seek partnerships;
   - Encourage understanding of opposing views;
   - Establish relations locally;
   - Get information firsthand from those working for a just and peaceful compromise;
   - Visit Israel, East Jerusalem, the West Bank, and Gaza together and listen to the full range of perspectives from people on the ground.

Rationale

In the midst of contentious debate over selective divestment from companies profiting from the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, calls for more expansive participation in the boycott/divestment/sanctions movement as a strategy to pressure Israel to change its occupation and settlement policies, and in light of the controversial study document Zionism Unsettled, we believe that there is a hopeful and humanizing perspective from which to view and engage the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. We believe that divestment will ultimately do more harm than good and alienate Presbyterians from partners that we must be in relationship with if we hope to make any constructive contribution to peacemaking in the Middle East. While we understand the sense of urgency that many Presbyterians feel about this issue, we reject the notion that our only alternatives are divestment or doing nothing. The discussion paper offered by the Ecumenical and Interreligious Work Group of the Presbyterian Church of Chicago is a “third way” approach that prioritizes balanced relationship building and partnerships and encourages concrete actions that promote the conditions necessary for a just and peaceful future in the Middle East.

The following key understandings are necessary for such a compromise to be viable:

- The current situation is intolerable for Palestinians, and unsustainable for Israel.
- Presbyterians must listen to and honor the tragic histories and cherished aspirations of each people, as they understand it themselves. We must not seek to deny or diminish the incongruity of these two stories, nor try to equate the struggle and suffering conveyed in each.
- Despite the singularity of each people, their lives and destinies are intertwined. Any just and peaceful compromise of the conflict must be credible and real for both.
- Such a compromise can only be achieved through the self-determination of each people, coupled with a non-negotiable commitment to human rights and communal recognition for all concerned.
- Whatever form the final compromise may take, it will only be achieved through the actions taken by, and decisions made by, the two peoples directly involved.
- We propose that Presbyterians actively support on-the-ground efforts for self-determination, human rights, and respectful co-existence, in order to create the conditions for an achievable, just and peaceful compromise, and lay the groundwork of the harder task of communal reconciliation, undertaken by, and for, both Israelis and Palestinians.

Any stances or actions taken by the PC(USA) must seek to ensure Israel’s right to exist and the end of the military occupation of the West Bank; to resolve the question of East Jerusalem; and to reverse the economic embargo of Gaza by both Israel and Egypt. Conversely, opposing measures that create obstacles to a two-state compromise—such as “normalizing” the occupation, or threatening the safety and well-being of Israeli citizens—must also be a part of the calculation.

As a denomination, Presbyterians are compelled to work on behalf of both sides for a just and peaceful compromise. We should create the conditions that enable the pursuit of an equitable two-state compromise and eliminate the obstacles to such an agreement in pursuit of achieving the desired goal.

We call upon the PC(USA) to consider concrete actions such as these:

Support Israeli and Palestinian peacemakers and their initiatives

Presbyterians—in cooperation with local Jewish, Palestinian Muslim, and Christian communities—can identify and support initiatives in the region and the U.S., where Israelis and Palestinians are working for the economic and social development of Palestinians, and reconciliation on behalf of both peoples. For example:

- Work of the Children of Ibillin and Fr. Elias Chacour;
- Palestinian Children’s Relief Fund.

Seek partnerships

Presbyterians can seek partnerships—regardless of ideological differences—with Jews and Palestinians in service to any aspect of securing a just and peaceful compromise of the conflict. For example:

- Oppose the sale of products from contested settlements in the West Bank;
- Petition Hamas to revise its charter in recognition of Israel as a Jewish state;
- Provide humanitarian aid to Gaza, refugee camps in Lebanon, and residents of Sederot.

Encourage understanding of opposing views

Presbyterians can get to know all the communities involved—Palestinian Muslim and Christian, and Jewish. They can respectfully engage those in any community who do not share their stance on resolving the conflict. Presbyterians should speak up when any of these communities are defamed or demonized. For example:

- Regularly visit and listen without comment to their concerns and hopes for a just and peaceful future in the Middle East;
- Collect and disseminate human-interest stories about the pain and suffering the conflict has inflicted on both Palestinians and Israelis;
- Collect and disseminate stories from those on the front lines working for empowerment and reconciliation.
Establish relations locally

Establish relations with local Jewish, and Palestinian Muslim and Christian, neighbors. Interreligious encounter is no substitute for working towards justice and peace, but it can pave the way for cooperation towards that end. Specifically:

- Visit each community during their religious and cultural celebrations;
- Express solidarity with each community in the midst of their own struggle or suffering;
- Encourage study groups focused on initiatives for empowerment and reconciliation.

Get information first-hand from those working for a just and peaceful compromise

Seek out information from those working for the benefit of both Israelis and Palestinians, with a vision for an equitable future—no matter how unsettling those reports may be. For example, connect with Rabbis for Human Rights.

Visit Israel, East Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza together

Visit the region together with unlikely ideological co-travelers who are committed to the principle of self-determination for both Israelis and Palestinians. Seek to travel and meet with those who challenge your perspective. For example:

- Plan trips with mainstream members of all four communities—Jewish, Palestinian Muslim and Christian, and Presbyterian;
- Visit locations determined by each of the participating communities;
- Identify initiatives for empowerment and reconciliation to support jointly;
- Return to educate and mobilize their respective communities.

Presbyterians must join together with their local Jewish, Palestinian Muslim and Christian communities, to actively and practically support empowerment of the Palestinian people; reconciliation between Israelis and Palestinians, from the grassroots up; and efforts by individuals and communities willing to take on this extraordinary task, in a courageous and selfless way….before it is too late.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-14

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-14—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following on Item 04-14: ACSWP advises disapproval of Recommendations 1 and 2, and affirms Recommendation 3 as consistent with General Assembly policies.

Item 04-14 has three sections: Section 3, which “encourages presbyteries and congregations of the PC(USA) to engage in the following types of actions ...” is consistent with current General Assembly policy and recommends steps that may be helpful in “promoting the conditions necessary for a just and peaceful future for Palestinians and Israelis.”

Recommendations 1 and 2 are problematic in that they call upon the General Assembly to endorse a particular document created by a small group in the Presbytery of Chicago, which they self-describe as offering a “third way.” For the General Assembly to endorse such a document out of hand, and send it to the presbyteries for study, as well as post it on the PC(USA) website, without adequate opportunity for the assembly to review and critique it or to determine the degree to which it actually offers a new, “third way,” would be presumptuous. It is not in fact an overture that was approved by the presbytery, and, among other debatable assertions, mistakenly characterizes the nonviolent economic measures endorsed by past General Assemblies (boycott, corporate engagement, and divestment) as violent.

It may, in fact, simply be appropriate for commissioners to disapprove this resolution, as the matters are also before the assembly in actions of General Assembly committees and in overtures approved by presbyteries after careful debate.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-14

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-14—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) disapprove Item 04-14.

While ACREC encourages study and agrees with some of the recommendations of this resolution, members of ACREC have not had access to the paper recommended by the resolution for endorsement and distribution. We are concerned about the content of the paper, its seeming lack of support for divestment, and the process by which this resolution has come to us.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY MISSION COUNCIL

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)

COMPASSION, PEACE AND JUSTICE

VIA OVERNIGHT DELIVERY

April 19, 2011

Mr. Douglas R. Oberhelman
Chairman and Chief Executive Officer
Caterpillar, Inc.
100 NE Adams Street
Peoria, IL 61629-1430

Dear Mr. Oberhelman:

Greetings to you. My name is Brian Ellison, I’m a pastor of a Presbyterian church in the Kansas City area. I’ve served for twelve years here and during that time have also served on a variety of committees at the national level of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). I am serving currently as chair of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), and I am a director of the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

As you are probably aware, at the direction of our General Assembly, our committee has been working for the past seven years with several companies in whom we invest, including Caterpillar, Inc., to address a number of concerns about the ways those companies are profiting from certain pursuits in Israel and Palestine that we believe have contributed, directly or indirectly, to suffering in that troubled region. The conversations between CAT and our committee have not always been productive. Indeed, our representatives and predecessors—yours and mine—have made very little progress in finding common ground or achieving even modest agreement on ways the company’s otherwise positive commitments to human rights could be lived out in this part of the world. The negative outcomes of past attempts at conversation (or, sometimes, the absence of conversation) have adversely affected both the company and the church, including the thousands of Presbyterians in the Peoria area whose families and congregations include Caterpillar employees at every level of the company.

I would like for us to try to change that, and I’m asking you for the opportunity to meet. I’d like to meet with you personally or with representatives at a high enough level of the company who have the ability to speak with authority on matters of company policy and, potentially, help bring about real change. Our committee is willing to have this conversation with a new openness to the company’s efforts when they are undertaken sincerely and forthrightly.

This is not to diminish the depth or seriousness of our concerns. As you may know, last summer’s General Assembly (our church’s highest governing body) committed to continued dialogue with Caterpillar (rather than the divestment that some regional bodies within the church were calling for), but also denounced the company’s “continued profit-making from non-peaceful uses of a number of its products.” The Assembly called upon the company “to carefully review its involvement in obstacles to a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine, and to take affirmative steps to end its complicity in the violation of human rights.” The Assembly’s statement also lifted up Caterpillar’s many examples of positive leadership in the community, state and nation, noting its donation of resources and equipment and its deserved recognition in the Dow Jones Sustainability World Index. The statement continued, “But these positive acts do not excuse the severity of the particular injustice that is being done to the Palestinian people through the use, in part, of certain Caterpillar products and from which Caterpillar profits directly or indirectly.”

This contrast between, on the one hand, Caterpillar’s stated commitments and historic record, and on the other, its present involvement in the region, is what we hope to discuss. And we hope to do so in a positive and productive way. Can we speak soon? Please feel free to contact me by telephone at 816-741-1641 or by email (PTSBrian@aol.com). I will make myself available (along with other staff and elected representatives from the PCUSA) to travel to Peoria, to Chicago (as in the past) or some other location as needed.

I’m grateful for the opportunity to be in dialogue, and I look forward to moving forward in this conversation.

Blessings,

Item 05-01

On Consultation Before Possible Reorganization of Synod or Presbytery Boundaries—From the Presbytery of Homestead.

The Presbytery of Homestead overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to respond to any plan for comprehensive reorganization of synod or presbytery boundaries by encouraging presbyteries, either individually or jointly, to consult with their synod and surrounding presbyteries regarding what functions are appropriate within their respective synod and whether boundaries of their synod or any of the affected presbyteries should change to meet the needs of congregations in the affected region, pursuant to G-3.0403c and G-3.0404.

Rationale

There appears to be widespread recognition that the needs of presbyteries and congregations across the nation varies greatly and that “one size does not fit all.” The functions ascribed to synods are necessary to the efficient and effective functioning of the whole system of governance, and if a particular synod’s functions are reduced or eliminated, it is the affected presbyteries in that synod that must “take up the slack.” Hence, it is those same presbyteries who should initiate any needed change in their region, not the General Assembly determining one solution for the whole church.

It was presbyteries and not the General Assembly that first created synods and it is reasonable that decisions regarding the appropriate functions, operations, and boundaries of synods are best left to the affected presbyteries and their synod(s).

The current Form of Government allows for considerable flexibility in synod function and structure within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), up to and including the reduction of function to only judicial process and administrative review of presbyteries (G-3.0404). This Form of Government has been in effect since 2011 and has not had a chance to be tested by mid councils as they discern the best way to meet their needs and the needs of their congregations. It is obvious from recent actions (with reference particularly to the Synod of Alaska-Northwest) that synods and presbyteries can use the current Form of Government to reduce the functions of a synod when they feel it is appropriate, and are able to accomplish it without a directive from the General Assembly.

The Form of Government allows presbyteries and/or synods to overture the General Assembly to divide, unite, or otherwise combine synods (G-3.0502d) if those councils believe it is in their best interest to do so.

The Form of Government allows two or more synods to form a shared permanent judicial commission (D-5.0101) when those bodies believe it is in their best interest to do so.

Concurrence to Item 05-01 from the Synod of Alaska-Northwest and the Presbyteries of Eastern Oregon, Huntingdon, John Calvin, Minnesota Valley, Northern Waters, Prospect Hill, Santa Fe, South Dakota, and the Twin Cities Area.

Concurrence to Item 05-01 from the Presbytery of Northern Plains (with Additional Rationale):

The current Form of Government allows for the reduced function of synods within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (G-3.0404).

The current Form of Government has been in effect for less than two years and has barely had a chance to be understood and put into effect.

There appears to be widespread recognition that the needs of presbyteries and congregations across the nation varies greatly and that “one size does not fit all.”

It is felt that decisions of the appropriate function of synods is best left to the presbyteries and synods in a “bottom up” approach rather than a “top down” approach.

The Presbytery of the Northern Plains feels that the Synod of Lakes and Prairies provides a great deal of support to this presbytery and other presbyteries in the synod in the following ways:

• Provide training and resourcing for —new committee on ministry (COM) and committee on preparation for ministry (CPM) moderators annually and on request;
  —presbytery office support staff;
ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 05-01.

From a theoretical standpoint, valuing the voices and experiences from a “bottom up” approach allows for the voices of those who are at risk of being disenfranchised or oppressed to be given a voice at the table and decreases their vulnerability to being silenced. Often, women’s voices and needs are at the “bottom” in regards to hierarchical decision-making and therefore are not heard unless there is an intentional inclusion of them in the process, as is indicated in this overture. In addition, consultation with involved parties will not only benefit the communities that are affected by such reorganization but will also help set up a restructured system that is sustainable.

Item 05-02

[The assembly approved Item 05-02. See pp. 53, 54.]

On the Reconfiguration of Synod Boundaries—From the Synod of Puerto Rico.

The Sinodo Presbiteriano Boriquen en Puerto Rico (Synod of Boriquén) overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct that the Synod of Puerto Rico remain as a synod no matter how many synods are decided upon as a result of the recommendations of the Mid Councils Commission II.

Rationale

The United States of America is rapidly transforming into a culturally diverse society. This diversity influences our church growth and future, as evidenced by the growing numbers of Hispanic/Latinos and Spanish-speaking members joining our congregations. The Synod of Boriquén and its presbyteries (the Presbytery of the Southwest of Puerto Rico, the Presbytery of the Northwest of Puerto Rico, and the Presbytery of San Juan) are the only governing bodies within the PC(USA) that fulfill entirely in Spanish the mission given by our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ in Matthew 28:19 to “Go therefore and make disciple of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit.” Our language and heritage are essential to carrying out our ministry.

We reaffirm, in our historical identity as the PC(USA) in Puerto Rico, that Jesus Christ is Lord, Savior, and the head of the Church. Following the theological and biblical perspective of our reformed tradition, we continue to strive to bear witness to the Gospel of Jesus Christ through the many parts of our denomination, including: the active work of the Presbyterian Women, the generative ministry of our synod and presbyteries’ youth groups, the preparation of teaching elders at the only Spanish-speaking seminary endorsed by our denomination (Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico), and our strong public participation with other ecumenical bodies in Puerto Rico, Latin America, and the Caribbean.

While the ecumenical and interdenominational relations of G-3.0401a apply to all synods, the Synod of Puerto Rico is unique in it; moreover our geographical location and the language and heritage shared with our brothers and sisters of the Caribbean and Latin American regions have developed alliances and ecumenical relations that continue to mutually enrich our ministry and mission in Puerto Rico and other Caribbean countries. Our alliances, relations, and active memberships in the Alliance of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in Latin-America (AIPRAL) and the Latin-American Churches Council (CLAI) allows us to carry the ministry and mission of the PC(USA) beyond the shores of the island.

Furthermore, our teaching and ruling elders, members, and leaders, have served and continue to serve in different positions at the national Office of the General Assembly, General Assembly committees, commissions, and task forces contributing significantly to the mission within the PC(USA).

If, as a result upon recommendations of the Mid Council Commission II to reconfigure synod boundaries and to reduce the number of synods from sixteen to eight by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), the Synod of Boriquén and its constituent presbyteries petition the General Assembly to retain the Synod of Boriquén as one of the configured synods.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 05-02.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns supports this overture because we believe that to maintain the Synod of Puerto Rico is to keep a part of the body of Christ participating as equal within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

At the end of the Spanish American-Cuban War in 1898, Puerto Rico, having been invaded on July 25, 1898, by the Americans was given away to the United States as compensation for the war. After 116 years of U.S. presence and significant political changes (American citizenship in 1917, creation of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico in 1952), Puerto Rico had maintained its Spanish language, its culture, and its traditions. As the Spanish American-Cuban War came to an end, the different Protestant denominations descended into this new American colony. The Presbyterian church made its entrance and in 1899 the Reverend Milton E. Caldwell began its evangelizing ministry in the City of Mayaguez. The first Presbyterian Church in Puerto Rico was chartered on April 1, 1900, with eighteen members. There’s no doubt that the Presbyterian Church had left a profound mark on Puerto Rico’s soil, especially in the educational and health fields. The Presbyterian church established the Instituto Politecnico, today the Universidad Interamericana (Inter-American University), the largest private university in Puerto Rico. The Ashford Presbyterian Hospital was founded in 1904. Until 1973 there was only one presbytery, the Presbytery of Puerto Rico which belonged to the Synod of New York. Presbyterians in Puerto Rico celebrated in 1973 the establishment of the Synod of Puerto Rico and the three new presbyteries: San Juan, Noroeste, and Suroeste. The creation of these three presbyteries and the Synod of Puerto Rico provided the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. with much needed diversity as these presbyteries and synod were able to send representatives to different committees at the General Assembly. The Synod of Puerto Rico has the honor of having the first female synod executive, Dr. Ana Ines Braulio in the PC(USA).

According to the Form of Government of the PC(USA), Councils as an Expression of Unity of the Church, G-3.0101, first paragraph:

The mutual interconnection of the church through its councils is a sign of the unity of the church. Congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), while possessing all the gifts necessary to be the church, are nonetheless not sufficient in themselves to be the church. Rather, they are called to share with others both within and beyond the congregation the task of bearing witness to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in the world. This call to bear witness is the work of all believers. The particular responsibility of the councils of the church is to nurture, guide, and govern those who witness as part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); to the end that such witness strengthens the whole church and gives glory to God.
The Synod of Puerto Rico had been true to its calls by providing resources and leadership to presbyteries and congregations in Puerto Rico in Spanish and culturally appropriated.

The Synod of Puerto Rico plays an important role in maintaining ecclesiastical ecumenical relations with other bodies in the Caribbean and Latin America. Our Form of Government on 3.0401a states:

provide that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard. This responsibility may include developing, in conjunction with its presbyteries, a broad strategy for the mission of the church within its bounds and in accord with the larger strategy of the General Assembly; assisting its member presbyteries when requested in matters related to the calling, ordaining, and placement of teaching elders; establishing and maintaining, in conjunction with its presbyteries, those ecumenical relationships that will enlarge the life and mission of the church in its region; facilitating joint action in mission with other denominations and agencies in its region; facilitating communication among its presbyteries and between its presbyteries and the General Assembly; providing services for presbyteries within its area that can be performed more effectively from a broad regional base.

Exercising this right, the Synod of Puerto Rico had established alliances and membership in some ecumenical bodies such as the Alliance of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in Latin America (AIPRAL), and the Latin American Council of Churches (CLAI) among others. If the Synod of Puerto Rico is dismantled, Puerto Rican Presbyterians would lose these important ecumenical and connectional ties that have been a blessing to the unity of the body of Christ to this day.

Furthermore, ACREC states that to dismantle the Synod of Puerto Rico would mean a backward step in the history of the PC(USA). The voice of Presbyterians from Puerto Rico would be diminished given the fact that it would become a minority within the synod to which it would be assigned. To dismantle the Synod of Puerto Rico would represent a geographical challenge. This would mean that the representatives of Puerto Rico would need to leave the island to attend the meetings, etc, placing an extra burden on representatives.

For all these reasons ACREC encourages commissioners to approve Item 05-02.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 05-02

Comment on Item 05-02—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully offers this comment on Item 05-02:

The Sínodo de Boriquén is geographically unique, language specific, and culturally diverse. It is faithful to attending to diversity within its council life (as mandated in G-3.0103 and F-1.0403). Absorption into a larger synod where offices may be in a U.S. state will create additional barriers and limitations for relationship, mission, and accountability. Attention to providing wide access to decision-making will be required and may result in other burdens on the new synod. Concerns would center on how issues raised from this synod may be received and responded to in the newly created synod(s) and whether there would be adequate support regarding language, travel/communication, and culture.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

Item 05-03

On Transferring Han Yang Presbyterian Church from the Presbytery of Hanmi to the Presbytery of San Fernando—From the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii.

[The assembly approved Item 05-03. See pp. 13, 54.]

The Synod of Southern California and Hawaii overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014), at the request of Han Yang Presbyterian Church and of the Presbytery of San Fernando, to

1. transfer Han Yang Presbyterian Church from Hanmi Presbytery to the Presbytery of San Fernando; and

2. approve of this transfer to be effective at the conclusion of the 221st General Assembly (2014), meeting in Detroit. No boundary changes are required to effect this transfer.

Concurrence to Item 05-03 from the Presbyteries of the Pacific, San Fernando, and Santa Barbara (with Additional Rationale)

This overture is to request the transfer of a church from the nongeographic Hanmi Presbytery to the geographic Presbytery of San Fernando. This is not a request that any presbytery bounds be shifted. The congregation known as Han Yang Presbyterian Church, a member church of Hanmi Presbytery, is located at 13500 Branford St. Arleta, CA 91331. They have been worshiping in this space for years. The property is within the bounds of the Presbytery of San Fernando.

The Session of Han Yang Presbyterian Church voted on September 15, 2013, and reported to the congregation shortly thereafter to request the transfer of the congregation to the Presbytery of San Fernando.

The Hanmi Administrative Commission, acting as the presbytery with jurisdiction over Han Yang Presbyterian Church, voted on January 14, 2014, to approve the transfer of Han Yang Presbyterian Church to San Fernando Presbytery pending approval by the congregation and the Presbytery of San Fernando.

The congregation of Han Yang Presbyterian Church, at a congregational meeting on January 26, 2014, voted to approve the transfer of Han Yang Presbyterian Church from the Hanmi Presbytery to the Presbytery of San Fernando pending approval by the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii and the General Assembly of the PC(USA).

The Presbytery of San Fernando voted on February 11, 2014, to receive this congregation into the membership of the Presbytery of San Fernando, pending an action by the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii and the General Assembly of the PC(USA).

The Han Yang Presbyterian Church’s rationale for requesting this transfer is this:

Han Yang Church has enjoyed a growing, mission centered ministry since 1978. However, ministry has been increasingly difficult to plan and engage due to conflicts within the Hanmi Presbytery. The Presbytery has not worked cooperatively with the congregation and is not equipped to care for its pastors. The decision making processes of the Hanmi Presbytery officers are not in line with the Presbyterian way of doing things as outlined in the Book of Order and one remedial complaint after another interferes with mission giving, outreach, and implementation of programs.

Geographically, Han Yang Presbyterian Church is more suited to belong to the San Fernando Presbytery whose offices are only blocks away with a full staff and resources that will enhance our ministry in the community as called by Jesus Christ.

The Presbytery of San Fernando is committed to being a missional presbytery. The presbytery’s vision statement is “Every church a mission center.” San Fernando Presbytery currently has one church that is primarily racial ethnically Korean. It would benefit the Presbytery of San Fernando and make it more diverse by bringing Han Yang Presbyterian Church into the Presbytery of San Fernando.

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 05-03. We support the request of the Han Yang Presbyterian Church to be transferred from the nongeographic Hanmi Presbytery to the geographic Presbytery of San Fernando. We believe in the importance of physical community and the support that is enhanced when people have the opportunity to work side-by-side. In addition, diversity within our churches and presbyteries is highly valued and important for creating healthy communities and to represent the body of Christ, and this move would create more diversity in interactions for both the Presbytery of San Fernando and the Han Yang Presbyterian Church. Diversity in various aspects of leadership allow for women to have more of a voice in systems that have historically silenced them.

$Item 05-04

[The assembly approved Item 05-04 with amendment. See pp. 53, 54.]

Mid Council Commission II Report

The Mid Council Commission 2 (MCCII) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Direct that a new configuration of synod boundaries be established [based on an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call] through a collaborative process between the synods and presbyteries resulting in no more than [eight larger regional] [10–12] synods, each with an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call. The synods shall report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

2. Inform all synods and presbyteries that designated members of MCC 2 will be available for conversation, clarification, and collaboration during the synods’ and presbyteries’ two-year process of reconfiguring synods.

3. Recommend that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) direct its Moderator, in consultation with the Stated Clerk, to appoint an administrative commission for the following purposes:
a. To assist synods and presbyteries who have been engaged in a substantive plan for reconfiguration but have been unable to resolve particular issues in their process.

b. To recommend to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) the boundary changes necessary to achieve a total of no more than [eight] [10–12] synods, if there remain synods and presbyteries that have been unable or unwilling to engage in a collaborative process of reconfiguration.

4. In order to ensure that the responsibilities listed in G-3.0502 are fulfilled, establish a “Committee on Mid Councils” and charge it to engage in a process for the ongoing strengthening and nurturing of the mid councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), with particular emphasis on collaborating with the synods of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to support clarity as to their ecclesial and missional identity, purpose, structure, and strategies by amending Standing Rule C.1.a. as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“a. The Stated Clerk shall propose the number and designation of assembly committees to the General Assembly, which shall include a Committee on Mid Councils. The Stated Clerk shall present the proposed committee structure to the General Assembly for consideration and ratification at the first assembly meeting at which business is transacted. In making these proposals, the Stated Clerk shall consult with the appropriate General Assembly entity or entities, and may consult with other persons.”

5. Continue the Mid Council Commission II through the meeting of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) with the following authority:

a. Pursuant to G-3.0502d, to organize new synods, or divide, unite, or otherwise combine previously existing synods or portions of synods [upon request of the synods]; and

b. Pursuant to G-3.0502e, to approve the acts of synods to organize, divide, unite, or combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries.

6. Accept this report as the commission’s answer to the items referred to it by the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: Item 05-12. Mid Council Report, Refer Recommendations 1–4 to a Task Force to Further Discuss, Refine, and Bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) Recommendations Considering the Composition and Organization of the Mid Councils—From the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 21–22, 274ff).

I. Introduction

We invite the General Assembly to envision:

• A church whose existing mid councils come together at a bigger table or multiple tables to aspire to what God is calling them to do, to aspire to what God is calling us to be.

• A church with mid councils that engage in conversations about collaborating, partnering, and networking, as they define their purpose and the best way to live out a new identity.

• A church whose mid councils may focus on relationships or mission, leadership development, administrative support, or essential ecclesiastical functions as the glue that helps presbyteries be in covenantal community with one another.

• A church whose mid councils are prepared to engage in significant structural change for the sake of enabling adaptive and creative change within broader borders.

The Mid Council Commission created by the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Mid Council Commission II) was charged to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) recommendations concerning the future of synods in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). After thorough and prayerful study, conversation, and debate, the Mid Council Commission II finds that synods continue to have a vital role within our life as a denomination. However, the time has come for fewer synods within a structure of mutual accountability that encourages each synod to discern God’s call to find its unique role in affirming the creativity that already resides in our mid council system.

II. The Charge to the Commission

The commission was charged by the 220th General Assembly (2012) with the following responsibilities:
1. Respond to Recommendations 1–4 of the Mid Council Commission Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) by discussing, refining, and bringing to the 221st General Assembly (2014)” recommendations that consider the composition and organization of the mid councils in ways that reinvigorate their capacity to support missional congregations, and advance the ecclesial nature and character of those presbyteries, within the unity of the church” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 21).

2. Exercise commission authority regarding organizing, uniting and dividing synods and presbyteries and changing the boundaries of presbyteries through the transference of congregations from one presbytery to another.

3. Review the nature and function of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) with respect to their relationship with and support of mid councils. (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 21–22)

III. Membership, Meetings and Work of the Commission

A. Membership

The following members of the commission were appointed by the Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012):

C. Work

1. Debate Over the Role of Synods Has a Long History

The role of synods in our denominational structure has long been a source of debate. Looking back at the last two decades, in 1993, an overture from the Presbytery of Southern New England proposed the creation of a special committee, among other things, to create a plan to eliminate synods and to divide synod property between presbyteries and the General Assembly. The overture was not approved by the 205th General Assembly (1993). However, the 208th General Assembly (1996) appointed a nine-member Special Committee on Middle Governing Bodies to … examine the relationships between and among the national offices, synods, and presbyteries; develop and review studies of middle governing bodies for effectiveness; and seek new paradigms for prioritizing, evaluating, visioning, resourcing, and partnering. (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 200)

The special committee offered several recommendations to the 211th General Assembly (1999) including that

… the PC(USA) move to a three-governing-body system. The committee is convinced that a flexible and simplified three-governing-body system will offer more opportunities and incentives for direct linkage between and among General Assembly, presbyteries, and congregations. (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 526)

The 211th General Assembly (1999) took action on some aspects of the special committee’s report, but did not act to move in the direction of eliminating synods, opting instead to receive and commend the report for study.

In 2008, the Presbytery of Central Washington overture the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council to conduct an examination of the existing synod structure with the intention to streamline the current synod structure into fewer synods, covering larger geographic areas. While this overture was disapproved, it did not end debate over the existence and role of synods. In 2010, the General Assembly, faced with a variety of requests for action related to the form and function of synods in the mid council structure of the denomination, created a Commission on Mid Council.
2. The Work of the First MCC

The work of the first Mid Council Commission was foundational to the work of the current commission. The first MCC listened across the varied voices in the denomination by means of surveys, conference calls with key constituents, and numerous conversations in every synod, at every major gathering of the church, and with key leaders in every level of the church’s life. It took seriously its responsibility to explore deeply theology, history, and sociology of mid councils, engaging with experts in each of these areas as well as the most respected leaders across the denomination about the urgency, necessity, and process of deep transformation. Perhaps most importantly, it initiated a transparent and public discourse using social media, blogs, articles, and conversations about its recommendations while they were still in “draft” stages.

Underlying the recommendations of the first MCC to the 220th General Assembly (2012) is an assertion with which this commission finds itself in deep agreement, and which underpins the recommendations this commission brings:

We live in a rapidly changing world and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is not the same denomination it was sixty or thirty years ago, when the structural framework of our current version of Presbyterianism was developed and implemented. As we have envisioned what the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) of our post-Christendom world may look like, our Commission has assumed the role of those who prepare the space, invite the artists, and affirm the creativity that already resides in our mid council system. (Minutes 2012, Part I, p. 279).

The first MCC brought a number of recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012). Of direct concern to this commission were its Recommendations 1.–4., which rested on the premise that the strengthening of presbyteries and the overall denominational structure was best accomplished by “repurposing synods as Multi-Presbytery Missional Partnerships” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 279) and eliminating synods as ecclesial bodies within our constitutional structure. See Appendix A of this report.

As noted above, the 220th General Assembly (2012) referred these four recommendations to the current commission (MCCII), charging it to discuss, refine, and bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) recommendations that consider the composition and organization of the mid councils in ways that reinvigorate their capacity to support missional congregations, and advance the ecclesial nature and character of those presbyteries, within the unity of the church.

3. The Additional Work of MCCII

MCC II began its work by focusing on three tasks consistent with its charge: fully developing the recommendations that would have to be approved to eliminate synods as ecclesial bodies (see Section VII and Appendix C below); studying and evaluating various models of mid council structure that might accomplish the desire for a more flexible and creative mid council structure; and designing and implementing a process for studying the nature and function of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly with respect to their relationship with and support of mid councils. In addition, MCC II sought to deepen its understanding of the learnings from the first MCC by further conversation within the denomination, primarily through telephone interviews with the leadership of the following synods: Synod of South Atlantic (July 24, 2013); Synod of Southern California and Hawai’i (July 30, 2013); Synod of the Southwest (August 6, 2013); Synod of the Sun (August 7, 2013); Synod of Lincoln Trails (August 14, 2013); Synod of the Pacific (August 16, 2013); Synod of the Trinity (August 20, 2013); Synod of Mid-America (August 22, 2013); Synod of the Mid-Atlantic (August 23, 2013); Synod of the Covenant (August 29, 2013); Synod of the Northeast (August 30, 2013); Synod of Lakes and Prairies (September 5, 2013); and Synod of the Rocky Mountains (September 6, 2013).

The outline used for these interviews is attached to this report as Appendix B. The commission also sent representatives to the Synod Executives Forum for face-to-face conversation to better understand the variety of work presently occurring within the synods. With much discussion and prayer, and with a deep sense of humility, MCC II presents the above recommendations for consideration by the 221st General Assembly (2014).

IV. Recommendations Regarding Reconfiguring Synods and Reinvigorating Presbyteries Through a Collaborative Process

In the midst of the tasks charged to MCC II, the commission has been deeply shaped by the reality that the issue confronting the denomination is not simply an issue of saving money or downsizing. Rather, the core challenge for the denomination is how to faithfully be Christ’s church in our contemporary context. It is God who is making all things new; the church is called to open our hearts and minds to what that means for us.

It is the context and God’s call to us that invite us in to this collaborative process. In order for the process to reflect the Body of Christ in all of its diversity and mission, we are calling for collaboration that includes all who are affected by these decisions. Synods, presbyteries, and local congregations have a stake in this transformative process, with synods and presbyteries having a particular responsibility. The marks of a collaborative process include clear access to participation, consistent methods of sharing power in discourse and decision-making, and transparency.

When synods and presbyteries engage in this collaborative process of transformation, we trust that new partnerships will emerge and all levels of the church will find new sources of vitality. In particular, we expect that clear plans will develop around reinvigorating presbyteries to support and challenge congregations to full participation in God’s mission in the world.
Mid Council Commission II has diligently sought to carry out its work of considering the composition and organization of mid councils in ways that reinvigorate their capacity to support missional congregations, and advance the ecclesial nature and character of those presbyteries, within the unity of the church. The following are our conclusions and recommendations:

A. The organization of synods in the PC(USA) needs to be reconfigured and their functions and role revitalized.

While the MCII concluded that eliminating synods as ecclesial bodies at this time would not accomplish the goal of simplifying and streamlining the governance structure of the PC(USA), the commission believes that the PC(USA) has a denominational structure that no longer fits the church of today. The current synod structure was established when we were a significantly larger church, when denominational loyalty to the mission decisions of higher councils was significantly deeper, and when geographic distance was an obstacle to efficient administration. Today our size, our understanding of denominations, and technology help to create opportunities for new ways of being church. Based on its review of the judicial caseloads of the current synod permanent judicial commissions, it appears entirely feasible for larger synods to carry out that work. Likewise, administrative review and the work of committees on representation can be carried out efficiently and effectively by larger synods.

In the view of MCII, it is also feasible for the mission activities of the current synods to be carried out by synods with a larger geographic scope. The commission heard concerns from synod leaders about loss of relationships and the challenge of combining or continuing current localized mission endeavors. This proposal, however, enables larger synods to organize in ways to foster relationships and mission in smaller geographic areas or moving certain work to presbyteries within that region. The MCII anticipates that the collaborative process of reconfiguration will result in some new forms of mission and partnership that will truly reflect local contexts and their particular needs.

Accordingly, the MCII recommends that the number of synods be reconfigured with the goal of no more than eight synods. The commission’s choice of eight synods was the result of balancing the current size of the denomination and the ecclesial responsibilities of synods. The number eight is not arbitrary but represents our calculation of the structure that will best serve our missional purpose.

B. A system of no more than eight larger synods is best accomplished by collaboration between the existing synods and presbyteries, rather than as a directive from the General Assembly.

The task of combining sixteen synods into no more than eight will not be without its challenges. Staff and leadership structures will need to be reordered, assets transferred or reallocated, and existing legal obligations reassigned. Moreover, redefining synods will require the integration of councils with different cultures, norms, and unwritten assumptions as to how work is done and decisions are made. In order for all affected to have a voice in the decisions made, there must be a collaborative process that includes clear access to participation, consistent methods of sharing power in discourse and decision-making, and transparency. This method of collaboration makes space for a larger conversation than just one about boundaries, but allows for broader and deeper work on priorities, purposes, and possibilities.

Further, such a process will encourage and require presbyteries to examine carefully their own connections with the synod they will be a part of, and the parameters of that synod’s role. We recognize that some presbyteries, faced with questions as to their own future and the up-building of the church within their bounds simply have not had the time or energy to focus on the role of synods. However, the presbyteries have an important interest in engaging in this process. While combining existing synods may be the simplest process legally, a presbytery bordering more than one synod may find that the culture of one of those synods more closely fits its own culture; regional demographic patterns may draw it more naturally in a particular direction; or it may choose to be part of a contiguous synod, if that is the type of council that will best support its response to God’s call.

The MCCII understands that this process may be complicated. As Reformed Christians we understand that the wisdom of the larger body often serves to give guidance and insight to those in more local bodies. Designated members of the MCCII will be available to answer questions about the report, to clarify issues that may emerge in the process, and to interpret the intention of the report. These individuals will neither decide the boundaries of the new synod structure nor adjudicate disputes. Rather, their role is simply to provide a conduit for sharing learnings from the work of the first MCC and MCC II.

C. The process of establishing a system of no more than eight synods needs to move forward promptly with a timeline for approval of new boundaries.

The Mid Council Commission II fully expects synods to embrace this opportunity to reconfigure and revitalize their role in the church. However, there may be roadblocks along the way. Whether arising from a fear of loss or an investment in the system as it currently exists, the temptation to delay can be strong. The need for the church to respond to the changes that both the first MCC and MCC 2 have identified demands the church’s immediate action. The Mid Council Commission’s recommendation that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) establish an administrative commission comes from the denomination’s urgent need to resolve this long-standing issue. Such a commission will likely find that in many areas agreement has been reached, and it is hoped its work can be limited to resolving a relatively few instances in which agreement as to the boundaries of the realigned synods could not be reached. The administrative commission will also have the authority to recommend synod boundaries in those situations where decisions were not made.

The MCCII recognizes that the legal and practical steps necessary to complete the reorganization of the synods cannot be completed until the General Assembly approves new boundaries for such synods, and that the process of completing the reorganization of the synods will not be complete by the convening of the 222nd General Assembly (2016). The goal of the timeline proposed is to put the synods in the position to take those legal and practical steps soon after the 222nd General Assembly (2016) adjourns in order that the new structure can move forward in their work as soon as is reasonably possible.

D. Eliminating synods as ecclesial bodies at the present time would add complexity to the governance structure of the PC(USA), rather than simplify it.

The MCII’s recommendations were deeply impacted by the recognition that it would not be easy to replace the ecclesial functions synods currently perform with commissions or other bodies. As noted in the discussion of this commission’s charge, one of the tasks we were assigned to undertake was to refine Recommendations 1.–4. from the first Mid Council Commission’s report. These recommendations would eliminate synods as ecclesial bodies. In undertaking that work, it became clear to MCCII that the “cure” of eliminating synods as ecclesial bodies, at least at this time, would very likely be worse than any potential downfall of keeping and streamlining synods as a council within our polity and system of mutual accountability.

In this regard, the MCCII agreed with the rationale offered the 220th General Assembly (2012) by the Presbytery of St. Andrews in support of Item 05-02:

Rather than viewing the practice of the Christian faith as a purely individual matter, Reformed Christians practice their faith together, in community. A significant historic role of church councils in the Reformed tradition is to provide the accountability that is necessary in a large, diverse Christian community like the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

At the same time, as distinct from forms of church government in which authority is exercised downward from the few to the many, the Presbyterian form of government assumes that accountability is exercised with mutuality—government by those who are governed (or their chosen representatives). (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 256)

Relat edly, we believe that the synods are providing a space for advocacy and development of racial ethnic constituencies in our denomination that would not easily be filled at either the presbytery or General Assembly levels of the PC(USA).

As the MCII sought to refine Recommendations 1.–4. with this premise in mind, it recognized that while the PC(USA) is certainly smaller than it once was, it remains too large to simply eliminate any intermediate level of accountability between the General Assembly and the 173 presbyteries of the denomination. The General Assembly and its commissions and committees simply do not have the ability to engage in meaningful oversight over 173 councils. Conversely, we observed, at least on the part of some, a concern that such a reorganization would put too much power in the General Assembly. While the MCCII found the first concern significantly more meritorious than the second, it has concluded that a structure recognizing both concerns would have to replace the current ecclesial functions of synods with administrative and judicial commissions made up of members from those regions.

Accordingly, in perfecting Recommendations 1.–4., the MCCII found that the only means of providing for such oversight was a combination of regional administrative and judicial commissions (together with regional committees on representation) to serve the role of intermediary in the administrative and judicial review of presbyteries. In the MCCII’s view, such a structure complicates rather than streamlines the governance of the PC(USA). It is difficult to assure that such regional commissions would - reflect the geographic, racial, ethnic, gender, and theological diversity consistent with our basic principles of governance,

- reasonably allocate and oversee the expenses incurred in doing their work among the presbyteries within their bounds, and
- diligently carry out the work they have been assigned.

If the PC(USA) wishes to move to a three council governance structure, the most practical means for doing so is to increase the size, and decrease the number, of presbyteries so that the General Assembly could engage in a meaningful review of their work. Such an action, however, would have its own costs, and was beyond the charge given MCCII.

V. Review of the Nature and Function of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) as they relate to Mid Councils

As a part of the mandate creating the Mid Council Commission II, the General Assembly directed the commission “to review the nature and function of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly, specifically with respect to their relationship with and support of mid councils as they serve the vitality and mission of congregations in our changing context and to report back to the 221st General Assembly” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 277) the nature of those relationships. Our findings are best understood in the context of a fabric of relationships that the MCCII believes are healthy, and provide the foundation for the recommendations of the MCCII for the reconfiguration of the synods.

As the subgroup began its review, it recognized that a number of members of the Committee of the Office of the General Assembly concurrently are serving as members of MCCII and as a part of the subgroup whereas no members of the General Assembly Mission Council (later renamed the Presbyterian Mission Agency [PMA]) were members of either the commission or its subgroup. In order to maintain mutually respectful relationships between all the entities engaged in this review and gain the needed sensitivity to the issues and priorities of the PMA, a liaison was established with the help of PMA and provided insight and reflection on the work of the subcommittee.

A. Methodology

The subgroup initially sought to clarify and focus the mandate given by the General Assembly and concluded that the evidence sought was the nature of the relationship of each of the national entities respectively to the synods and presbyteries rather than the relationship “between” the PMA and the OGA or even a “comparative” study of the relationships of each of these agencies to the mid councils. With this focus in mind, the group considered a number of quantitative and qualitative methodologies. Given both the time and financial constraints of the MCCII, a number of possible methodological approaches lay beyond the scope of the commission’s capabilities. It was recognized that it would not be possible, for example, to inventory the whole universe of synods and presbyteries nor to quantify the data. Neither was it the purpose of this commission’s inquiry to carry out a “performance review” of national entities but rather to seek a better understanding of the ways in which these agencies relate to mid councils. Moreover this inquiry did not seek to measure attitudes among mid councils as to the possible redistribution of ecclesial functions in the event of the elimination or reorganization of synods. Rather, this inquiry was intended to gain a sense of the “current” relationships and the ways in which current American religious culture might be influencing those relationships within Presbyterian denominational life and culture.

The plan of inquiry agreed upon called for the identification of “bellwethers” within the staff of mid councils and formulation of a number of open-ended questions that would permit these persons broad freedom to explore and reflect upon their respective mid council’s relationship to the PMA and OGA respectively. In both the design of questions to be posed and the sampling methodology the subgroup consulted with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the Executive Director of PMA.

Interviews were conducted by various members of the subgroup and reported back in full to the subgroup. Following extensive discussion, the subgroup determined to report its findings (a) in summary fashion without specific and potentially identifiable references to specific programs, staff members, etc., and (b) to identify to the themes that emerged from the review without formulating recommendations related to these findings, reasoning that such recommendations might best come from the commission as a whole. (Appendix C of this report provides an outline of the questions used in interviews with synod and presbytery staff.)

B. Findings

The findings from this review generated both insights common to both agencies in the perceptions of the mid councils as well as findings unique to each agency. Our findings are best read in the context of the MCCII’s conclusion that the fabric of the relationships is intact, and that the learnings herein reflect a healthy tension inherent in the need to reconfigure the structure of the synods.

1. Common Findings

a. Among synod and presbytery staff, both PMA and OGA are often perceived as “distant from” and “out of touch” with the realities on the ground in particular locales. This is most often expressed with a sense of inevitability rather than with an accusation of indifference. As national entities, it is assumed that each of these agencies takes a general rather than specific view in counter distinction to the necessity for presbyteries and synods, which take a far more local and specific view of issues. Despite some of the ongoing tensions within the denomination and frequent references made by some about the existence of widespread resentment of national agencies by mid councils and congregations, these findings reflect a much more nuanced set of relationships and attitudes. While experiences of individuals with these two agencies understandably vary, there was consistent feedback that presbyteries and synods receive services from both PMA and OGA and are appreciative of them. At the same time there are ongoing issues of competition in those instances when PMA is perceived as taking initiative within the presbytery/synod without consultation. Similarly, the OGA, especially as represented by the Stated Clerk, can be perceived as failing to take into account the consequence of public pronouncements for the relationships of local Presbyterians to interfaith partners and to neighbors who differ with Presbyterian policies and perspectives.

b. Both agencies are perceived as making substantial efforts to foster a coherent and consistent approach to the mission and ministry of the church. The question is fairly asked whether there is adequate institutional priority and structure sufficient to maintain a coherent “Presbyterian perspective” within the rapidly changing cultural climate of today.

c. Ironically, there is simultaneously an expressed yearning for less “territorial tendencies” among the various agencies and levels of the church’s institutional life but little focused conception of how that might best be achieved. Such tendencies were not attributed alone to the two national agencies but seen as common among many structures and groups within the church particularly in the context of diminishing resources.

d. A reported “growing sense” that the church at all levels lacks a “clear sense of identity and purpose it once had” continues to be a part of Presbyterian perception despite a widespread claim to “not be nostalgic “for a bygone era.

e. Perceptions of each agency were closely linked to highly specific encounters with national staff and whether or not these staff members were seen as assisting or obstructing the work of the presbytery/synod in question.

f. The perceived importance of effective relationships between national and mid council staff can hardly be overstated. It is the quality of those relationships that enables effective partnership or, in their absence, to foster a sense of discouragement about the denomination as a whole.

2. Findings Unique to Each Agency

Presbyterian Mission Agency: Positively, staff members were seen as being in possession of highly developed knowledge and resources for ministry and a readiness to share these with mid councils. Negatively, PMA was seen as inclined to be competitive (especially with regard to financial and human resources within presbyteries) and, at times, inclined to take initiatives within the bounds of the councils without prior consultation.

Office of General Assembly: Positively, staff members were perceived as offering highly skilled assistance especially in areas related to governance and judicial questions that have a complexity difficult to master at local levels. Negatively, OGA is sometimes seen as the source of tedious institutional maintenance requirements and/or focus on matters of little consequence to struggling congregations. Recent changes in the form of governance were seen as a positive response to these challenges. Moreover, controversial stands and statements of the OGA serve as a source of embarrassment or potential conflict with others. Investment by PMA/OGA in the strengthening of relationships between staff through shared program, consultation, and mutual communication pay substantial dividends.

C. Conclusion

This admittedly limited review of the relationships that characterize the presbyteries and synods with the PMA and OGA respectively offers some insights even though it was neither broad enough nor deep enough to be definitive. Positively, the collected data do not reveal any acute or critical points of tension. Yet, the review did reflect a rather disquieting and widespread malaise concerning a sense of shared identity of the church as a whole. In the present moment, there was expressed a concern for whether the church can afford, financially and in terms of human resources, the continued existence of what are seen as two large and expensive national agencies, as well as two levels of mid council structures. This finding was not, however, accompanied by any assessment that suggested the two agencies are seen as duplicating efforts. Perhaps due to some sampling bias in this review, presbyteries were consistently clearer on both their positive and negative assessments of relationships with the two agencies. Synod responses tended to be less specific and to have their experience mediated by that of their respective presbyteries in their assessments. Presbyteries and synods seek and often obtain assistance from OGA/PMA on a host of issues and matters of church life. Yet, at both synod and presbytery levels there is a concern that neither agency is equipped to help the mid councils address their most acute needs and sometimes serve as a distraction from those vital tasks.

VI. There Is a Need for Deeper, Ongoing Communication Between General Assemblies and Synods

The MCCII affirms that the General Assembly has a special responsibility to encourage, support, and challenge synods in their work. The commission believes that particular and intentional care should be given to the assembly’s relationship to the synods of the church.

Since the General Assembly relates most substantively to the rest of the church through assembly committees, the MCCII recommends the creation of a standing General Assembly committee on mid councils. This standing committee will establish a place where the synods can consistently collaborate with the assembly, and the assembly can fulfill its role of encouragement and support. This committee is a place for mutual accountability.

VII. Continuation of the Commission to Act for the Assembly with Respect to Boundary Issues Between Assemblies

In addition to the responsibilities for making recommendations regarding the future of synods as ecclesial bodies, Mid Council Commission II, like its predecessor, has also had the more mundane responsibility of acting for the General Assembly between its meetings on recommendations to change the boundaries of presbyteries, and potentially synods, when those councils agree upon and request such a change. This authority allows for actions meeting all Book of Order requirements to be taken during the two years between assemblies, and thus for such boundary changes to be approved and implemented without the delay of waiting for the next meeting of the General Assembly. Continuing this authority avoids the delay of a potentially long delay for approval of movement of one congregation to a different presbytery, or similar actions, in situations in which there is no disagreement as to the propriety of such an action.

VII. Refinement of Recommendations 1.–4. of the First Mid Council Commission’s Report

As noted above, MCC II was charged to “refine” Recommendations 1.–4. from the first MCC report to the 220th General Assembly (2012), in order to put those recommendations into a format that if approved by 221st General Assembly (2014) (and approved by the majority of presbyteries) would eliminate synods as ecclesial bodies. Attached to this report as Appendix D are the actions that would be necessary to accomplish that purpose. These actions are structured into seven recommendations:

• Recommendation 1: Changes to the Book of Order to eliminate synods as ecclesial bodies;

• Recommendation 2: Changes to the Standing Rules of the General Assembly to implement elimination of synods as ecclesial bodies;

• Recommendation 3: Changes to the Guidelines for Reviewing Synod Records to implement elimination of synods as ecclesial bodies, converting them into Guidelines for Reviewing Presbytery Records;

• Recommendation 4: Changes to the Guidelines for Forming Social Policy to implement elimination of synods as ecclesial bodies;

• Recommendation 5: Changes to the Organization for Mission to implement elimination of synods as ecclesial bodies;

• Recommendation 6: Creation of an administrative commission to wind up the ecclesial affairs of synods; and

• Recommendation 7: Adoption of the boundaries of regional permanent judicial commissions and request for the 224th General Assembly (2020) to review those boundaries.

As noted above, MCC II found this exercise valuable in assessing the desirability of taking action consistent with the first MCC’s Recommendations 1.–4., but concluded, based in part on that exercise, not to recommend such a course of action. However, if the assembly desires to recommend such a course, Appendix D sets forth the actions that in the view of MCC II would be required to eliminate synods as ecclesial bodies.

Recommendations 1.–4. of the First Mid Council Commission to the 220th General Assembly (2012)

“1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the Book of Order to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes to take effect at the close of the 222nd General Assembly (2016):

   “a. Shall G-3.04, The Synod, be deleted, including Sections G-3.0401 through G-3.0406) and Section G-3.05 (including G-3.0501–.0503) be renumbered as G-3.04 (G-3.0401–.0403).

   “‘G-3.03 THE PRESBYTERY

   “‘G-3.0301 Composition and Responsibilities

   “‘The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district. The presbytery shall adopt and communicate to the sessions a plan for determining how many ruling elders each session should elect as commissioners to presbytery, with a goal of numerical parity of teaching elders and ruling elders. This plan shall require each session to elect at least one commissioner and shall take into consideration the size of congregations as well as a method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. Ruling elders elected as officers of the presbytery shall be enrolled as members during the period of their service. A presbytery may provide by its own rule for the enrollment of ruling elders serving as moderators of committees or commissions.

   “‘The minimum composition of a presbytery is ten duly constituted sessions and ten teaching elders.

   “‘The presbytery is responsible for the life, ministry, and government of the church throughout its district, and for assisting and supporting the witness of congregations to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that all congregations throughout its region become communities of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of its congregations, the presbytery shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).

   “‘[The remainder of this section to remain the same.]

   “‘G-3.0302 Relations with Synod and General Assembly, the Church
"The presbytery has a responsibility to maintain regular and continuing relationship to synod and with other presbyteries and to the General Assembly by:

- consulting with other presbyteries in their region about creating regional mission partnerships for racial ethnic advocacy and support, mission, and ministry projects, and other programs of shared life, diversity, and connection to the larger church
- electing commissioners to synod and General Assembly and receiving their reports;
- electing ruling and teaching elders to be readers of standard ordination examinations;
- seeing that the guidance and communication of synod and General Assembly are considered and that any binding actions are observed and carried out;
- proposing to synod or General Assembly such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the church; and
- sending annually to synod and General Assembly statistical and other information according to the requirements of those bodies. [The remainder of G-3.03, G-3.0303–.0307 to remain the same.]

2. Instruct the synods, in consultation with their constituent presbyteries, to develop and bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) plans to transfer assets, funds, projects, and programs to the appropriate trusts, foundations, or entities of their choice for implementation by the synods by the close of the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

3. Instruct the Moderator to appoint a committee to work in consultation with the Stated Clerk and to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014):

- Recommendations, including any necessary changes in the Manual of the General Assembly, for the appointment of five regional administrative commissions to facilitate churches and presbyteries to fulfill their missional objectives when realignment is necessary and also to support the presbyteries and regions in promoting the full expression of rich diversity in membership, participation, and decision-making (Book of Order, G-3.0103);
- Recommendations, including any necessary changes in the Book of Order and the Manual of the General Assembly, in order to continue to facilitate and support the racial ethnic ministries that have historically been supported by the synods.
- Any additional editorial changes to the Book of Order that will be made necessary by the action of Recommendation 1.

4. Instruct the Moderator to appoint a committee to work in consultation with the Stated Clerk and to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) recommendations, including any necessary changes in the Book of Order and the Manual of the General Assembly, to create the necessary number of regional judicial commissions, rooted in the various regions, to serve as courts of appeal to decisions of presbytery permanent judicial commissions (PJCs) and as courts of original jurisdiction in remedial cases against presbyteries or upon reference from presbytery PJCs.”

Appendix B

Synod Consultation Questions

1. Is your Synod (or any of its presbyteries) involved in collaborative work with another Synod (or presbytery within another Synod’s bounds)?
   a. How would you describe the current level of engagement of the presbyteries within your bounds with the work of the synod? Would becoming part of a synod with larger bounds change that level of engagement, and if so, how?

2. If the General Assembly decided to do so, how would you envision your synod being geographically expanded?
   a. Are there any concerns that should be taken into account, if possible, if the Church moves to reduce the number of synods? For instance, are there natural boundaries within the Synod or affinities that it would be helpful for us to know?
   b. How large a synod would you see as viable to conduct the administrative functions referred to in the Book of Order?
   c. Who would you suggest be at the table for the implementation of any Assembly action regarding geographical expansion and at the same time reduction in number of synods.

3. What would you see as the benefits and losses of having fewer but larger synods?
   a. Are there any current programs of the synod that you believe could not be sustained in a larger synod?
   b. Would being part of a larger synod geographically increase the breadth of your vision and mission or make decision making more difficult?
   c. How would you envision your current model of synod decision-making would work if the boundaries of your synod were changed?

4. Is your Synod engaged in any future transition planning? For example, does your synod have a minimalist structure or is there any movement to do so?
a. Is there anything we should know about those future directions that might be helpful to us or anything that you are waiting to learn about the commission’s work that would affect those decisions?

5. What would be some key metrics of success regarding the vitality and viability of synods?

6. How do you think the presbyteries within your bounds would feel about being part of a larger synod?
   a. What is the best way for the commission to garner the input of the presbyteries within your bounds as to the alternatives it is considering?

7. What else do you feel the Commission should know?

Appendix D

Actions Necessary to Accomplish the Objectives of the First Mid Council Commission’s Recommendations 1.–4. to the 200th General Assembly (2012)

1. That the 221st General Assembly (2014) direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the Book of Order to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:
   a. Shall F-3.0107 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “F-3.0107 Church Power
   “That all Church power, whether exercised by the body in general or in the way of representation by delegated authority, is only ministerial and declarative; that is to say, that the Holy Scriptures are the only rule of faith and manners; that no Church judicatory ought to pretend to make laws to bind the conscience in virtue of their own authority; and that all their decisions should be founded upon the revealed will of God. Now though it will easily be admitted that all synods and councils may err, through the frailty inseparable from humanity, yet there is much greater danger from the usurped claim of making laws than from the right of judging upon laws already made, and common to all who profess the gospel, although this right, as necessity requires in the present state, be lodged with fallible men.

   “Synod is used in this provision not to refer to a particular council of the church but in its historic meaning of a council of the Church convened to decide a particular issue of doctrine or administration.”
b. Shall F-3.0203 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“F-3.0203 Gathered in Councils

“These presbyters shall come together in councils in regular gradation. These councils are sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly. All councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution. The councils are distinct, but have such mutual relations that the act of one of them is the act of the whole church performed by it through the appropriate council. The larger part of the church, or a representation thereof, shall govern the smaller.”

c. Shall the first paragraph of G-1.0103 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

d. Shall the second paragraph of G-3.0101 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

e. Shall the fourth paragraph of G-3.0104 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

f. Shall the eighth (last) paragraph of G-3.0106 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

g. Shall G-3.0109a be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. Judicial Commissions

“Judicial commissions shall consider and decide cases of process for the council or councils according to the Rules of Discipline. Sessions shall perform the function of a judicial commission for the congregation; each council higher than the session shall elect a permanent judicial commission (see D-5.0000). Cooperating synods may elect a joint permanent judicial commission pursuant to G-3.0404 and D-5.0101. Presbyteries shall elect regional permanent judicial commissions pursuant to G-3.0204 and D-5.0101.

h. Shall G-3.0109b(5)–(6) be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“(5) (by presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly) visiting particular councils, congregations, or agencies over which they have immediate jurisdiction reported to be affected with disorder, and inquiring into and settling the difficulties therein, except that no commission of a presbytery shall be empowered to dissolve a pastoral relationship without the specific authorization by the designating body (G-2.0901);

“(6) (by General Assembly) reviewing the work of presbyteries; approving the division, union, or combination of presbyteries or portions of presbyteries; creating non-geographic presbyteries; developing joint plans and objectives for the fulfillment of mission, providing encouragement and guidance to its presbyteries and overseeing their work; electing regional committees on representation to review the work of presbyteries regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, advocate for diversity in leadership, and review the decisions of presbyteries as to the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403; and developing and providing resources as needed to facilitate the mission of its presbyteries (G-3.0501c and G-3.0502);

“(c) (7) (by all councils) making pastoral inquiry into persons accused of sexual abuse of another person (D-10.0401c) when jurisdiction in a judicial proceeding against such persons has ended due to death or renunciation of the accused; such inquiries shall not be understood as judicial proceedings but shall seek to reach a determination of truth related to the accusation and to make appropriate recommendations to the designating council.

i. Shall ninth paragraph of G-3.0109b be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A commission of presbytery, synod, or General Assembly shall be composed of ruling elders and teaching elders in numbers as nearly equal as possible and sufficient to accomplish their work. A quorum of any commission shall be established by the designating council or councils but in no case shall be less than a majority of its members (except as limited by D-5.0204).”

j. Shall G-3.0202b–e be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“b. nominate to presbytery ruling elders from the congregation who may be considered for election as commissioners to synod and General Assembly, and to serve on committees or commissions of the same, bearing in mind principles of inclusiveness and fair representation in the decision making of the church (F-1.0403);

“c. see that the guidance and communication of presbytery, synod, and General Assembly are considered, and that any binding actions are observed and carried out;

“d. welcome representatives of the presbytery on the occasions of their visits;

“e. propose to the presbytery, or through it to the synod and General Assembly, such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the church; and”

k. Shall the third paragraph of G-3.0301 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The presbytery is responsible for the life, ministry, and government of the church throughout its district, and for assisting and supporting the witness of congregations to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that all congregations throughout its district become communities of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of its congregations, the presbytery shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).”

"G 3.04 THE SYNOD

"G 3.0401 Composition and Responsibilities

"The synod is the intermediate council serving as a corporate expression of the church throughout its region. It shall consist of not fewer than three presbyteries within a specific geographic region.

"When a synod meets, it shall be composed of commissioners elected by the presbyteries. Each presbytery shall elect at least one ruling elder and one teaching elder to serve as commissioners to synod. A synod shall determine a plan for the election of commissioners to the synod, as well as the method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103; both plans shall be subject to approval by a majority of the presbyteries in the synod. The commissioners from each presbytery shall be divided equally between ruling elders and teaching elders. Each person elected moderator or other officer shall be enrolled as a member of the synod until a successor is elected and installed.

"Synod is responsible for the life and mission of the church throughout its region and for supporting the ministry and mission of its presbyteries as they seek to support the work of congregations, to the end that the church throughout its region becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of the church throughout its region, it shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).

"In light of this charge, the synod has responsibility and power to:

"a—provide that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard. This responsibility may include developing, in conjunction with its presbyteries, a broad strategy for the mission of the church within its bounds and in accord with the larger strategy of the General Assembly; assisting its member presbyteries when requested in matters related to the calling, ordaining, and placement of teaching elders; establishing and maintaining, in conjunction with its presbyteries, those ecumenical relationships that will enlarge the life and mission of the church in its region; facilitating joint action in mission with other denominations and agencies in its region; facilitating communication among its presbyteries and between its presbyteries and the General Assembly; providing services for presbyteries within its area that can be performed more effectively from a broad regional base.

"b—provide that the Sacraments may be rightly administered and received. This responsibility may include authorizing the celebration of the Lord’s Supper at its meetings and at other events and gatherings under its jurisdiction, and exercising pastoral care among its presbyteries; in order that the Sacraments may be received as a means of grace, and the synod may live in the unity represented in the Sacraments.

"c—nurture the covenant community of disciples of Christ. This responsibility shall include providing such services of education and nurture as its presbyteries may require; providing encouragement, guidance, and resources to presbyteries in the areas of mission, prophetic witness, leadership development, worship, evangelism, and responsible administration; reviewing the work of its presbyteries; warning or bearing witness against error in doctrine or immorality in practice within its bounds; and serving in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline.

"G 3.0402 Relations with General Assembly

"The synod has responsibility to maintain regular and continuing relationship with the General Assembly by seeing that the guidance and communication of the General Assembly are considered and that any binding actions are observed and carried out, and by proposing to the General Assembly such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the whole church.

"G 3.0403 Relations with Presbyteries

"Each presbytery shall participate in the synod’s responsibility and service through its elected commissioners to the synod. The synod has responsibility for supporting the work of the presbyteries within its bounds and as such is charged with:

"a—developing, in conjunction with its presbyteries, joint plans and objectives for the fulfillment of mission, providing encouragement and guidance to its presbyteries and overseeing their work;

"b—developing and providing, when requested, resources as needed to facilitate the mission of its presbyteries;

"c—organizing new presbyteries, dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining presbyteries or portions of presbyteries previously existing; and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, creating non-geographic presbyteries, subject to the approval of the General Assembly, or taking other such actions as may be deemed necessary in order to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-3.0301 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created.

"G 3.0404 Reduced Function

"A synod may, with the approval of a two-thirds majority of its presbyteries, to reduce its function. In no case shall synod function be less than the provision of judicial process and administrative review of the work of the presbyteries (G-3.0401c). Such a synod shall meet at least every two years for the purposes of setting budget, electing members to its permanent judicial commission, and admitting to record the actions of its permanent judicial and administrative commissions. Presbyteries of such a synod shall assume for themselves, by mutual agreement, such other synod functions as may be deemed necessary by the presbyteries and the synod.

"Two or more synods sharing common boundaries, with the approval of a two-thirds majority of the presbyteries in each of the synods, may share administrative services and form a shared permanent judicial commission, with the membership of the commission being proportional, so far as possible, to the number of presbyteries within each participating synod. Each synod shall pay the costs for processing a judicial case arising within its bounds.
"G-3.0405 Meetings and Quorum

"The synod shall hold stated meetings at least biennially, shall meet at the direction of the General Assembly, and may call special meetings in accordance with its own rules.

"A synod may set its own quorum, but it shall include an equal number of ruling elders and teaching elders representing at least three presbyteries or one-third of its presbyteries, whichever is larger.

"G-3.0406 Minutes and Records

"The synod shall keep a full and accurate record of its proceedings that shall be submitted to the next succeeding meeting of the General Assembly for its general review and control. It shall report to the General Assembly the number of its presbyteries and, in general, all important changes that have occurred within its bounds.

"G-3.05 THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

"G-3.0501 Composition and Responsibilities

"The General Assembly is the council of the whole church and it is representative of the unity of the synods, presbyteries, sessions, and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It shall consist of equal numbers of ruling elders and teaching elders elected by the presbyteries and reflective of the diversity within their bounds (F-1.0403 and G-3.0103), to serve as commissioners according to the following proportions:

“3. The title page shall show attestation that the minutes of meetings of the most recent previous session or sessions have been reviewed by the General Assembly and shall give page references to action on exceptions, if there be such.

“4. Minutes shall be signed and attested by either the moderator or stated clerk of the synod presbytery; such signature should appear at the end of the journal before any appendix or supplement.

“5. The bylaws and standing rules of the synod presbytery shall be either bound in the volume of the minutes or submitted for review with the minutes.

“6. The review of the minutes of each synod presbytery shall ordinarily occur as peer reviews by a gathering of all synod presbytery stated clerks within a designate geographic region. Such geographic regions shall be recommended by the Stated Clerk and approved by the General Assembly. Their written review of each synod presbytery’s minutes shall be submitted to the General Assembly Committee assigned the review of the minutes, who shall attest that the minutes of each synod presbytery have been reviewed. If peer review is not completed, the synod presbytery shall submit its minutes for review by the General Assembly Committee charged with overseeing this review.

“7. The Stated Clerk shall deposit with the Presbyterian Historical Society a certified copy of the synod presbytery minutes after they have been approved by the General Assembly.

“Report of the Assembly Committee

“1. The assembly committee reviewing synod presbytery minutes shall report to the General Assembly whether the “c. proceedings have been prudent and equitable;

“d. proceedings have been faithful to the mission of the whole church, and “e. lawful injunctions of the General Assembly have been obeyed.

“2. The assembly committee shall recommend appropriate action to the General Assembly, and if it believed the General Assembly should take exception to something in a synod presbytery’s minutes, that exception shall be listed in the committee’s report.”

4. That the 221st General Assembly (2014), contingent upon approval by the presbyteries of the proposed amendments to the Book of Order set forth in Recommendation 1, approve the following amendments to the “Forming Social Policy”:

It is recommended for consideration and study by other governing bodies (sessions, and presbyteries, and synods). It is commended to the free Christian conscience of all congregations and the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for prayerful study, dialogue, and action.”

5. That the 221st General Assembly (2014), contingent upon approval by the presbyteries of the proposed amendments to the Book of Order set forth in Recommendation 1, approve the following amendments to the Organization for Mission:

“Introduction

I. History of the Structure for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The self-assessment revealed the need for GAC to be closer to congregations, presbyteries and synods and to find ways to better communicate with them. The self-assessment also indicated the large size of GAC was a concern and that GAC needed to look at its size and the relationship between GAC-elected and GAC-staff roles and relationships.

“The church’s mission finds its center in the gospel of Jesus Christ and in witnessing to that gospel. Beneath the variety and complexity of its forms of witness, the church’s mission is one—from the congregation to the General Assembly. To share fully in that mission is the task of every Presbyterian and every council. As the most inclusive council, the General Assembly represents the unity of the synod, presbyteries, sessions, and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Among its other responsibilities, the General Assembly has the power to set policies, objectives, and priorities for mission, to provide the agencies appropriate for that mission, and to superintend their work (Book of Order, G-3.0501 G-3.0401).

“The Presbyterian Mission Agency, as agent of the General Assembly, implements policies established by the General Assembly; works in partnership with synods and presbyteries; and develops and proposes a comprehensive budget to the General Assembly. Members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board are elected by the General Assembly and are representative of synods, presbyteries, and the church at large.

“The General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the synod, the presbyteries, and the sessions work together in partnership on behalf of the mission of the church. The Organization for Mission places emphasis on the congregation as an instrument of mission and on the mid councils working together to provide resources and services to the congregations.

“F. Personnel and Compensation

The General Assembly has approved a personnel, equal employment opportunity and affirmative action, and compensation system that is used by the Presbyterian Mission Agency. This system provides guidance regarding overseas personnel, and for General Assembly level entities, synods, presbyteries, sessions, congregations, and church-related institutions in their employment practices. In order to develop consistency and equity across the whole church, these mid councils and institutions are urged to approve and implement these policies with such adaptations as may be necessary.

“G. Additional Factors

“Additional factors to guide the structure and style of mission are:

• the need to affirm the centrality of the mission of congregations, and their need and desire for resources from General Assembly entities, as well as from presbyteries and synods;

[[Text in bullets 2–7 remains unchanged.]]

• the need for an evolutionary design that can be responsive to unfolding changes in the structure and work of the General Assembly, synods and presbyteries.

Each synod, regional group of presbyteries (as determined by the Stated Clerk and approved by the General Assembly), in consultation with its presbyteries, will be invited to develop a plan for itineration of the Moderator or Vice Moderator. Ordinarily, a single invitation for a visit within a presbytery will be accepted during each term.
B. Stated Clerk of the General Assembly

2. Functions of the Stated Clerk (For functions related to General Assembly meetings, see Standing Rule H.2.)

n. The Stated Clerk shall promote the harmony and efficiency of the General Assembly and its agencies in cooperation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency and its Executive Director, with special attention to relationships between General Assembly entities, and with synods, presbyteries, and sessions. The Stated Clerk shall have membership on or relationship to appropriate committees, commissions, and agencies of the General Assembly as it shall determine from time to time.

C. Committees of the General Assembly

1. Serving on Assembly Entities

h. The Stated Clerk shall also notify appropriate entities and mid-councils upon being advised of the death of any person holding membership on an assembly entity or who is unable to serve for any other reason. The Stated Clerk shall also declare vacant a position on any such entity held by a teaching elder who ceases to be a teaching elder member of a presbytery of this denomination, or a position held by a member of a particular church who ceases to be a member of a congregation of this denomination.

All such vacancies shall be filled by the same process under which the former incumbent was elected. If a vacancy shall occur during the first term of service of an incumbent, then the original source of the nomination shall propose a nominee for election to complete the unexpired term, and such nominee shall be eligible for renomination and election to an additional full term. If a vacancy shall occur during the second term of service of an incumbent, and the position vacated is one designated for a representative of a presbytery or synod, then the privilege of proposing a nominee for the unexpired term shall pass to the next appropriate presbytery or synod under any rotation system that may be in use, and the nominee so proposed shall be eligible for nomination and reelection to an additional full term. Any vacancy in a position for which the General Assembly Nominating Committee makes nominations may be filled until the next succeeding General Assembly by appointment of the Moderator of the General Assembly upon advice by the nominating committee that the committee has decided to present the name of the appointee to the next session of the General Assembly as its nominee for the position.

3. Advisory Committee on the Constitution

a. The Book of Order, G-6.02, provides for the establishment of an Advisory Committee on the Constitution. The committee is composed of nine (9) voting members who shall be stated clerks or former stated clerks of synods or presbyteries, former members of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly, polity professors, or other qualified persons with knowledge of and experience with the Constitution and polity of the church.

V. The Presbyterian Mission Agency

c. to develop and propose, for General Assembly approval, the mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency; doing so by taking into account the mission work being done by sessions, and presbyteries, and synods, and to propose for General Assembly approval an accompanying budget that will implement the mission work plan of the Presbyterian Mission Agency;

VI. Presbyterian Mission Agency Relationships

The Presbyterian Mission Agency works in partnership with synods, presbyteries, and sessions to enable the various councils to join together in churchwide expression of the life and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

6. That the 221st General Assembly (2014), contingent upon approval by the presbyteries of the proposed amendments to the Book of Order set forth in Recommendation 1, instructs the Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014) to appoint administrative commissions for each of the current synods to develop, in consultation with the presbyteries currently within the bounds of that synod, plans to transfer assets, funds, projects, and programs of the synods of that region to the appropriate trusts, foundations, or entities, then to implement such plans as soon as practical, but in no event later than the opening of the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

The members of each administrative commission shall be appointed by the Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014) from a nominee made by each presbytery within the bounds of the synods whose assets, funds, projects, and programs it is charged with transferring. In order to ensure appropriate diversity within each commission, the Stated Clerk shall designate whether the nominee from each presbytery shall be a ruling elder or a teaching elder and whether he or she shall be male or female. If the Moderator determines that an administrative commission lacks sufficient racial ethnic, gender, geographic, and theological diversity, he or she may ask one or more presbyteries to provide alternative nominees.

In order to carry out its charge, each such administrative commission is empowered to a. hold the assets of each synod within its region in trust pending completion of its charge;

b. retain legal, accounting, and other professional services and/or hire temporary staff to assist in completing its charge, and to pay the reasonable expenses for such services from the funds held in trust from the synod in question;
c. confer with the presbyteries within the bounds of that synod as to the appropriate use of the assets and funds of the synod, and as to the benefits of transferring the projects and programs of that synod to other entities, including to those presbyteries;
d. open and close bank and investment accounts as necessary to transfer the existing assets, funds, projects, and programs of the synod;
e. create new legal entities to which the assets, funds, projects, and programs of the synod may be transferred, provided that any such entity shall hold all assets in trust for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and shall be controlled by the election of directors or otherwise by presbyteries within the bounds of that synod;
f. consult periodically with the other administrative commissions and with resource personnel provided by the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the Presbyterian Foundation concerning the most effective means of accomplishing their charge;
g. wind up the legal affairs of the synod and to dissolve it as a corporation;
h. take all other steps reasonably necessary to accomplish its charge;
i. provide an interim report of its actions to the 222nd General Assembly (2016); and
j. complete its work as soon as prudently possible, but in no event later than the opening of the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

7. That the 221st General Assembly (2014), contingent upon approval by the presbyteries of the proposed amendments to the Book of Order set forth in Recommendation 1, do the following:

a. Approve the following boundaries for regional permanent judicial commissions, effective Jun 21, 2015:

Region 3: The Presbyteries of East Tennessee, Holston, Mid-Kentucky, Mid-South, Middle Tennessee, Mississippi, North Alabama, St. Andrew, Sheppards and Lapsley, South Alabama, Transylvania, Western Kentucky, Central Florida, Charleston Atlantic, Cherokee, Flint River, Florida, Foothills, Greater Atlanta, New Harmony, Northeast Georgia, Peace River, Providence, St. Augustine, Savannah, Tampa Bay, Trinity, and Tropical Florida.

b. Request that the 224th General Assembly (2020) review the boundaries for regional permanent judicial commissions to ensure that a balance of workloads has been maintained by these boundaries.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 05-04.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 05-04

Comment on Item 05-04—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) has been a careful observer of the commission since its beginning four years ago. The process behind making this report to the assembly has been a thorough one. The commissions (reporting in 2012 and 2014) have taken measures to be widely inclusive in their counsel—holding listening sessions around the country. GACOR consulted with a subcommittee on options that affect representation functions of councils and how accountability structures are affected by the considered recommendations.

The reduction of synods is a serious manner that will effect participation and representation in decision-making as well as capacities for accountability among councils. How mid councils live out the mandated representation functions and principles of unity in diversity will need to be examined and considered as these changes are lived out. The GACOR supports the commission’s determination that synods remain a useful structure for church life. Relating to the next lower council would have become a difficult task for GACOR and the assembly if synods were removed all together. Returning the task to mid councils for wide consultation and action with a deadline is good. We recognize that any strategy for change must include deadlines but two years may not be enough time to finalize the consulting process given the magnitude of the changes the recommendations of the Mid Council Commission proposes.

We draw commissioners’ attention to Recommendations 3–5 for particular examination. The administrative commission being recommended, in Recommendation 3, is not created until 2016, if the 222nd General Assembly (2014) acts to create it. As with any commission, the boundaries of authority should be carefully constructed. Having a small group act with the authority of the assembly (without their decisions being subject to review and revision) should be a rare occurrence as it limits access and participation in decision-making.

Recommendation 4 concerns itself with Standing Rule C.1.a., regarding assembly committees. There has been a committee named Mid Council Issues in all recent assemblies. The Stated Clerk and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly are charged with determining how many assembly committees are needed and what their tasks will be. The recommendation directs them and adds a charge to that committee. We want to remind synods and presbyteries that they have internal resources of committees on representation (and/or bodies assigned these functions—G-3.0103 and F-1.0403). GACOR offers itself as a consulting resource and partner to this Committee on Mid Councils in particular regard to “ecclesial and missional identity, purpose, structure, and strategies” of synods.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

[The assembly disapproved Item 05-05. See p. 54.]

On Delaying the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii’s Overture Requesting Dissolution of Hanmi Presbytery, and Creating a New Administrative Commission—From the Hanmi Presbytery.

The Hanmi Presbytery overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to do the following:

1. Delay action on the overture of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii requesting dissolution of Hanmi Presbytery.

2. Direct the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii to create a new administrative commission that will include seven members from seven geographic presbyteries and five members from current members of the presbytery. This new administrative commission is to work with Hanmi Presbytery by, but not limited to, providing consultations to Hanmi Presbytery and making progress reports to each synod assembly, and making a final report to the spring synod assembly 2016 for the life of Hanmi Presbytery.

Rationale

The 195th General Assembly (1983) approved the organization of the Hanmi Presbytery within the bounds of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii with a ten-year term.

On January 28, 1984, the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii (hereafter the synod) organized the Hanmi Presbytery (hereafter the presbytery) with fifteen Korean American churches and pastors from outside our denominations.

The presbytery, with the concurrence of the synod, submitted an overture to the 204th General Assembly (1992) to extend the term of the presbytery for an additional fifteen years.

The 204th General Assembly (1992) approved an amended overture that extended the life of the presbytery for another fifteen years with the term ending in January 2009.

The presbytery developed and enhanced the Presbyterian presence and missional mandate to the racial ethnic constituencies in the region.

The presbytery has experienced some difficult years following the extended term including a dispute over matters of governance, particularly the nominations and elections of presbytery officers on December 3, 1998, which was one of the precipitating issues that led to the synod council appointing an administrative commission to work with Hanmi Presbytery (hereafter the commission) for the purpose (among others) of conducting a special administrative review of the affairs of the presbytery (G-9.0408–.0409 now G-3.0108b) and determining who were the rightful officers, committee chairs, and committee members of the presbytery for 1999.

Subsequent to the holding of open hearings and the reviewing of presbytery records, the commission determined that there were deep underlying problems within the presbytery, and on June 12, 1999, a special called meeting of the synod assembly reaffirmed the earlier granted authority of the commission and approved the recommendation of the commission to be granted “original jurisdiction,” including acting for the presbytery in several major areas.

The commission, in its 2003 report to the synod assembly, stated that “An increasing number of Hanmi Presbytery members are working very hard to follow the Book of Order … that under the guidance of the Commission, the Committee on Ministry has made significant progress … that Hanmi Presbytery has formed a Mission Statement Advisory Committee to do a Mission Study and prepare a Mission Statement.”

During 2006, ministers and elders of the presbytery determined that “… transformation is needed in Hanmi Presbytery and it is worth the pursuit of developing a healthy Presbytery,” so the presbytery created the Hanmi Presbytery Transformation Task Force at its meeting of June 1, 2006.
The Hanmi Presbytery Transformation Task Force and leadership of the presbytery continue to stress the importance of compliance with the Book of Order and the presbytery has initiated training for the committees of the presbytery and the sessions in Presbyterian polity with some resourcing provided by the commission.

The commission is encouraged by the evident efforts on the part of the leadership of Hanmi Presbytery to work with the commission in a spirit of cooperation, which is a contrast with the struggle during much of the service of the commission.

As a Korean-language, nongeographic presbytery, Hanmi Presbytery has numerous gifts to share with the synod and the whole church—cultural and spiritual gifts that can enrich the life of the whole church in this 21st century, and can serve as an effective model of what a viable nongeographic language presbytery should be.

The presbytery realizes that while there is still much work to do, they have expressed their commitment to “succeeding” with God’s help as stated in their recently adopted new Mission Statement: “The Mission of Hanmi Presbytery is to be a faithful partner in mission and ministry with the sessions, congregations, and minister members of the Presbytery; to empower, support, nurture and walk with them in their ministries. … The Presbytery expresses commitment to God’s grace and love by seeking opportunities not only to continue serving Korean immigrants but also for promoting racial and ethnic harmony in a multicultural society; and in glorifying the Lord our God with a modest and faithful lifestyle.

The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved the overture by the synod to continue Hanmi Presbytery without term limit.

The presbytery has been experiencing difficulties due to the conflicts of certain congregations, judicial matters over the church property, and lack of leadership effectiveness.

The commission came to the point of time to make a final report, after fifteen years of work, in that the recommendation of dissolution of the presbytery was presented to the synod’s spring assembly on March 29, 2014.

The presbytery acknowledged the recommendation of the commission and organized a task force whose roles and functions were to develop and encourage leadership change and congregational reflection over the past wrongs and mistakes in a mode of repentance of prayer and reflection.

Participation and representation are recommended in G-3.0103:

> The councils of the church shall give full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and shall provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices (F-1.0403). …

Each council shall develop procedures and mechanisms for promoting and reviewing that body’s implementation of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and representation. Councils above the session shall establish by their own rule committees on representation to fulfill the following functions: to advise the council regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, to advocate for diversity in leadership, and to consult with council on the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403.

The Hanmi Presbytery was created as a language presbytery to fulfill these principles of inclusiveness and representation, and the presbytery was duly authorized to initiate the instrumental ability regarding transfer to geographical presbyteries. It is the presbytery’s understanding that geographical presbyteries may not be quite prepared to receive and nurture the congregations and leadership due to differences of language, culture, heritage, and history within a short period of six months.

The presbytery presented a substitute motion to create a new administrative commission and to grant two more years for discernment and process of transfer to geographical presbyteries or the other Reformed body and for comprehensive evaluation of the life, identity, and unfinished mission works of the presbytery.

The presbytery’s substitute motion was failed and the motion by the commission was passed at the synod spring assembly 2014 and carried it to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

On Forming a Task Force to Study How Korean-Speaking Churches Can Develop into Healthy Members of the PC(USA)—From Midwest Hanmi Presbytery.
The Midwest Hanmi Presbytery overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to form a task force for the purpose of a study as to how Korean-speaking churches can grow and develop into whole and healthy members of PC(USA). The task force [should be formed with the leaders from Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), Office of the General Assembly (OGA), presbyteries, synods, non-geographic presbyteries (Korean), and second-generation Koreans,] [will be comprised of eight members appointed by the Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014), in consultation with Korean American church leaders, to meet in two face-to-face meetings, over two years, with a consultant,] and it should report its study to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

[Financial Implication: Per Capita—$580 (2014); $9,735 (2015); $10,725 (2016)]

Rationale

We are proud of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for making tireless efforts with passion for many ethnic groups and new immigrants. The biggest beneficiary and the fruit of these efforts are the Korean church, and we are very grateful for second-generation Koreans to have an opportunity to serve the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) beyond the limitations of an ethnic minority.

The active membership of Asian churches in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is estimated at 70,286, which is about 3.8 percent of the total membership of PC(USA). The African American church membership is 60,311, which is 3.3 percent of the whole membership of the PC(USA). This statistic shows that the Asian church in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has grown a lot. The Korean church membership is 55,000, accounting for more than 80 percent of the Asian church. About 500 teaching elders and 1,200 ruling elders are serving the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The majority of Korean churches are made up of first-generation Koreans who are still speaking Korean. Though the number of immigrants is decreasing, Korean churches that use the Korean language will continue to grow due to F-1 visa students from Korea, Korean firm representatives who reside in this country, and many visitors from Korea.

The challenge the Korean church is facing is the fact that it is not fully connected to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Though it is true that the Korean church symbolizes the diversity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and plays important roles, it is still marginalized. The Korean church acknowledges we are responsible for this situation. However, the responsibility also belongs to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the synods, and the presbyteries as well.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is making a lot of effort in order to educate the elders and pastors. If the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does not insist only on speaking English, respects different cultures and different languages, and encourage new immigrants to become a variety of members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), it should provide new immigrants, including the Korean church, more actively with opportunities to understand and learn the critical traditions, structures, and processes of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) beyond the barriers of language. Translating some documents does not suffice. Ongoing training and learning opportunities should be provided.

First-generation Koreans have established a lot of budget for their children and are making great efforts for them. Second-generation Koreans are leaving the Korean church and are holding important positions as leaders in PC(USA). First-generation Koreans are proud of them, and will do their best to guide more second-generation Koreans to serve the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Second-generation Koreans who start to properly understand the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may have uneasy and confused feelings about first-generation Korean churches. First-generation Korean churches are the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), but have very different structure from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Second-generation Koreans hope for first-generation Koreans to be more deeply involved with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and desire to give help, but their efforts are very limited simply because they speak only in English.

Therefore, Midwest Hanmi Presbytery overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to form a task force for the purpose of a study as to how Korean-speaking churches can grow and develop into whole and healthy members of the PC(USA). The task force should be formed with the leaders from PMA, OGA, presbyteries, synods, and second-generation Koreans, and it should report its study to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

[The assembly approved Item 05-07 with comment. See pp. 53, 55.]

[Comment: The Assembly Committee on Mid Council Issues (5) gives thanks for and celebrates the historic and ongoing witness of the churches of Hanmi Presbytery and their important role in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We regret that the recent work of the Administrative Commission has not been successful in resolving long-standing concerns, and we share the grief, the disappointment, and the loss with the congregations, the presbytery, the Admin-] istrate Commission, and the synod that this action has been taken. We look forward to discovering new ways of welcoming the Korean congregations into the life of the Synod and presbyteries, to the greater ministry of the church of the future. We recommend this action, aware that it presents the presbyteries with an important opportunity to welcome the congregations and gratefully to receive their contributions to the life and ministry of the PC(USA).]

On the Dissolution of the Hanmi Presbytery—From the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii.

The Synod of Southern California and Hawaii overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to do the following:

1. Approve the dissolution of the Hanmi Presbytery effective with the General Assembly’s concurrence in June 2014.

2. Direct the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii to create a new administrative commission that will include current members of Hanmi Presbytery to follow through with administrative work related to the dissolution of Hanmi Presbytery and to oversee the transfer of Hanmi Presbytery congregations and teaching elders to geographic presbyteries based upon the geographic presbyteries’ individual criteria, or to supervise the gracious dismissal to another Reformed body of any Hanmi Presbytery congregations that refuse to or cannot meet those geographic presbytery criteria, all to be accomplished before December 31, 2014.

3. Approve the transfer of each congregation of the Hanmi Presbytery into the geographic presbytery in which it is located contingent on the acceptance by the geographic presbytery and the approval of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii.

4. Direct the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii to assume jurisdiction over any pending judicial matters involving Hanmi Presbytery. From March 29, 2014, forward, all of the legal expenses related to judicial matters related to Hanmi Presbytery will be paid by Hanmi Presbytery.

Rationale

The Synod Administrative Commission of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii to Work with the Hanmi Presbytery (the “Hanmi AC”) was created in 1999 to oversee and resolve many issues that existed in Hanmi. (See Attachment A for timeline of activities.) Over the years, the Hanmi AC has conducted necessary work and has endeavored to return original jurisdiction back to Hanmi Presbytery as appropriate. (See Attachment B for actions reported to synod since 1999.) In recent years, Hanmi AC has tried to minimize the scope of its work and in the fall of 2012, Hanmi AC requested and the synod assembly authorized the return of most jurisdiction to Hanmi Presbytery. Hanmi AC was directed to retain full presbytery jurisdiction over three congregations. Hanmi AC will be dissolved in June, 2014.

Report on the Current Situation with Hanmi Presbytery

As the Hanmi AC concludes fifteen years of work with Hanmi Presbytery, we truly wish we could submit a positive, glowing report regarding Hanmi Presbytery. However, we find that the current situation is completely the opposite. We have come to doubt Hanmi Presbytery’s viability on many accounts and have major concerns as listed below, but not limited to:

1. Nominations. The nomination process is always an issue. Rather than focusing on equal representation, it is used as a power tool to jockey certain individuals to certain committees. Irregularities in the officer nomination and election process was the original primary presenting issue in 1999 and in the intervening fifteen years the Hanmi AC still finds irregularities and issues that challenge the integrity of the system.

2. Committee Functioning. Hanmi Presbytery generally lacks trust in the work of its committees. This lack of trust often has to do with the inconsistent work of the committees, which do not have manuals of operation or agreed-upon policies of the presbytery. This usually results in committee work being totally reconsidered on the floor of the presbytery meeting, at times causing a meeting to run until midnight as the presbytery ends up doing the work of the committee.

3. Membership. Hanmi Presbytery presently is radically polarized to a point where its day-to-day functioning is dependent upon which side has more numbers in votes at any particular meeting. One side has successfully recruited a group of retired teaching elders, some of whom show up to vote as a block without taking the time or effort to comprehend the situations. While the exact allocation of which representatives are on which side of polarization shifts from time to time, such radcial polarization has been a hallmark feature of Hanmi Presbytery throughout all of the last fifteen years. This even impacts the ability of committees to do their work since if one side chooses to boycott a meeting, there can be no quorum. This occurred recently in both the council and the COM meetings.

4. Conflict of Interest. Hanmi Presbytery generally truly lacks comprehension of and the avoidance of conflict-of-interest; in fact, this concept has no translation in the Korean language. A case in point: The nominating committee was given the responsibility to form an administrative commission for a congregation. The pastor of that congregation, who was a member of the nominating committee, was allowed to participate in the selection process to basically hand-pick the AC members. Another example would be the absence of and refusal to implement any guidelines to minimize (or even to disapprove) interference in the life of a congregation by a former pastor and that pastor’s family members and other supporters. This lack of policy has resulted in considerable conflict in a number of Hanmi Presbytery congregations.

5. Governance. The administrative commission finds proper Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) polity and procedures being neglected and often disregarded under the guise of cultural differences and convenience. For example, after a sale of property took place without the proper procedure of approval by Hanmi Presbytery, a congregation belligerently refused to produce necessary documents, even at the direction of the Hanmi Presbytery Council. As another example, many Hanmi congregations do not keep formal membership records and new members are not expected to come before the session or the congregation. This means that who qualifies for congregational votes is always in question.

The synod has been left on innumerable occasions to defend (and fund) the protection of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) trust and polity interests on behalf of Hanmi Presbytery, including extensive, expensive civil and ecclesiastical litigation. Thus far the synod has spent more than $2 million dollars on dozens of such litigation and judicial processes.

6. Leadership. Since its inception, Hanmi Presbytery has repeatedly been in conflict with those who held the role of stated clerk or acting stated clerk. A fundamental difficulty arises from that officer not practicing impartiality and in refusal to give unbiased interpretations of the Book of Order. Hanmi Presbytery meetings often run long and become contentious due (in addition to the radical polarization) to a lack of skills in the leadership who are running a meeting. Absence of a skilled and knowledgeable parliamentarian along with inconsistent interpretations by the stated clerk on many occasions has caused confusion and disarray. Insulting personal remarks and statements are often made carelessly with no admonishment from the moderator or the stated clerk about such behavior.

7. Finance. Hanmi Presbytery lacks financial viability. This pattern has been in the making for years. Many congregations go years without paying any per capita at all and many continue to only pay partial obligations. The current financial situation is expected to drastically worsen if two congregations, Torrance First and Han Yang, who are in the process of transferring their membership to geographic presbyteries, complete their process since the two congregations were responsible for 44 percent of Hanmi Presbytery’s per capita income in 2013.

8. Viability. Of the various measurements that indicate viability, the Hanmi AC finds few positives. In December of 2012, the presbytery was given full jurisdiction with the exception of three congregations. Since that time the presbytery conflicts have continued unabated. The financial situation of the presbytery has not improved. And presbytery leadership has not demonstrated its ability to bring peace and unity to the presbytery.

Final Summary and Recommendation

The Hanmi AC members recognize the contributions and the potential that Korean American congregations bring to the PC(USA) and we recognize and value the missional work in which these congregations are involved. Hanmi AC has waited fifteen years to see Hanmi Presbytery live up to its full potential, but we now admit that there is no realistic expectation that this will happen in the current conflicted situation. Hanmi AC has seriously contemplated the dissolution of the Hanmi Presbytery on several past occasions. Before making our recommendation to dissolve the presbytery, Hanmi AC held a consultation with Hanmi Presbytery members during which we heard many concerns, even heartfelt requests for continuance to allow the presbytery to make self-improvements. However, we have waited fifteen years to see improvements but instead we see further deterioration and we believe strongly that it is time to put an end to the waiting.

The members of Hanmi Presbytery suffer from a fundamental handicap of lacking denominational experiences outside of Hanmi Presbytery. We have found that years of training have had little effect. Presbytery and congregational leaders would be better served by being exposed to the life of a geographic presbytery. After fifteen years of working with Hanmi Presbytery, the Hanmi AC believes that the Hanmi Presbytery cannot function within the polity and practices of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

On Transferring Coudersport Presbyterian Church from the Presbytery of Northumberland to the Presbytery of Lake Erie—From the Synod of the Trinity.

The Synod of the Trinity overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve the transfer of the Coudersport Presbyterian Church located in Coudersport, Pennsylvania, from the Presbytery of Northumberland to the Presbytery of Lake Erie. The boundary of the Presbytery of Northumberland would change as follows:

 Commissioners’ Resolution. On Studying the Effectiveness of Mid Council to Mid Council Reference Checks and Clearance Procedures.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) directs the Office of Vocations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Office of the Stated Clerk to study the effectiveness of mid council to mid council reference checks and clearance procedures and considers ways to improve the procedures for candidates moving between mid councils. The results of this study, with its attendant recommendations, proposed standards, and expectations, will be presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Rationale

Recognizing the persistent failure to disclose fully all known information in mid council to mid council background checks of persons seeking to move their membership from one mid council to another, and recognizing the problems this creates for ecclesiastical bodies within those councils, it is necessary to establish a standard for mid council to mid council reference checks. Aware of the issues surrounding inappropriate behavior of ordained individuals that have emerged in the Roman Catholic Church and in mid councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), it is necessary to impose standards that will require all individuals who provide inter-council references, including but not limited to, executive/general presbyters, stated clerks, chairs of committee on ministry or preparation for ministry, be required to provide full disclosure of all information concerning a candidate of a pertinent or potentially concerning nature.

Excuses used for withholding information including pastoral confidentiality, fear of liability, and the misconception that a teaching elder has a right to privacy once remedial steps have been taken are not persuasive. In point of fact, the Book of Order mandates, in G-1.0304, that “[a] faithful member bears witness to God’s love and grace and promises to be involved responsibly in the ministry of Christ’s Church. Such involvement includes: … living responsibly in the personal, family, vocational, political, cultural, and social relationships of life …” while G-2.0104b insists that, “Standards for ordained service reflect the church’s desire to submit joyfully to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in all aspects of life” [emphasis added].

Because of the human and financial costs involved in predatory behavior and investigating allegations related to inappropriate behavior, it is imperative that we ensure full disclosure to protect individuals and churches and to reestablish trust between mid councils. The practice of “passing on” pastors who have shown problematic behavior, without considering the ramifications within other mid councils and churches, is unacceptable and should not be tolerated.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 05-09 with amendment: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The 221st General Assembly (2014) directs the Office of Vocations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Office of the Stated Clerk to study the effectiveness [(openness, accuracy, and clarity)] of mid council to mid council reference checks and clearance procedures and considers ways to improve the procedures for candidates moving between mid councils. [The study will identify any specific procedural and content inadequacies and propose policies and/or procedures to remedy these inadequacies. The study will also identify means for preserving privacy and confidentiality that at the same time further justice and fairness for the candidates, congregations, and judicatories.] The results of this study, with its attendant recommendations, proposed standards, and expectations, will be presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).”

We suggest greater definition of “effectiveness,” and that any study should seek specificity in its findings to better remedy any inadequacies. The confidentiality issue is also one where we would hope not to all parties' rights respected.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 05-09.

Whereas ACWC supports the safety of children in all realms of life, ACWC likewise supports presbytery guidelines whereby background checks for clergy include sexual misconduct history, as well as criminal and pastoral relation history.
When such a vital element of background checks is overlooked, persons with a history of sexual misconduct have a greater chance of continuing to move from congregation to congregation, presbytery to presbytery, synod to synod.

However, when the PC(USA) places provisions such as sexual misconduct background checks in place, our children will be safer, and congregations can indeed provide for their shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God, the promotion of social righteousness, and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world, (The Great Ends of the Church, Book of Order, F-1.0304).

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-09

Comment on Item 05-09—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly agrees that the effectiveness of mid council reference checks is an issue of great importance to the work of those mid councils. The scope of an appropriate study needs to be designed with care, in order to assure that the goals of this item are accomplished. Accordingly, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly advises that this item be referred to COGA with instructions to design an appropriate study and to report its recommendations the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

On Amending G-2.0104b by Replacing “Guided by” with “Obedient to” in Reference to Scripture and the Confessions—From the Presbytery of East Tennessee.

The Presbytery of East Tennessee respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0104b be amended by striking the phrase “guided by” before the word “Scripture” and moving it to the place before the words “the confessions” in the last sentence, replacing it in the first instance with the phrase “obedient to,” so that the paragraph reads as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be inserted is shown as italics]:

“b. Standards for ordained service reflect the church’s desire to submit joyfully to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in all aspects of life (F-1.02). The council responsible for ordination and/or installation (G-2.0402; G-2.0607; G-3.0306) shall examine each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of ordained ministry. The examination shall include, but be not limited to, a determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003). Councils shall be guided by obedient to Scripture and guided by the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates.”

Rationale

As God’s covenant people, all Christians are called to “… obey the LORD your God, observing his commandments and his statutes …” (Deut. 27:10).

“They who have my commandments and keep them are those who love me …” (Jn. 14:21).

“Jesus Christ, as he is attested for us in Holy Scripture, is the one Word of God which we have to hear and which we have to trust and obey in life and in death” (Book of Confessions, Theological Declaration of Barmen, 8.11, emphasis added).

The constitutional questions for ordination and installation refer to the Scripture several times (Book of Order, W-4.4003b, c, d, e). In each case the Scripture is elevated to an authoritative status. Twice it is called “authoritative,” once it is placed above the confessions, and finally, all things pertaining to the church are “subject” to it. The language of the present paragraph implies that Scripture is merely equal to the confessions and has no binding authority in the life of an ordained person or in a council of the church. The new language clearly recognizes the authority of Scripture and conforms to the language of the constitutional questions in the ordination process.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-01

Advice on Item06-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly to disapprove Item 06-01.

This overture seeks to amend the final sentence of G-2.0104b in a way that is similar to a 220th General Assembly (2012) recommendation, Item 07-01, which was disapproved by that assembly. Because of this similarity, the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution to that General Assembly is relevant to this item:

The overture proposes to replace the final sentence of the recently adopted language of G-2.0104b with new language. The new language to be inserted is drawn directly from the questions for ordination and installation in W-4.4003d. The avowed purpose of the proposed amendment is to “make the language [of G-2.0104b] internally consistent by reiterating the authority of Scripture over our confessions.” The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the present F-2.02 already guarantees that “confessional statements are subordinate standards in the church, subject to the authority of Jesus Christ, the Word of God, as the Scriptures bear witness to him” (Book of Order, F-2.02). Thus the Constitution elsewhere accomplishes the avowed purpose of this overture.

The final sentence of G-2.0104b currently provides that, “Councils shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates.” The present language creates a relationship between the guidance of Scripture and the confessions on the one hand and the determination of readiness of an individual candidate on the other, by indicating that the guidance of Scripture and the confessions is to be sought in the process of applying standards in each individual examination. The session or presbytery seeks the guidance of Scripture and the confessions as part of each examination discussion. Examinations are thus a conversation between a candidate for ordination and/or installation and a session or presbytery, in which are brought to bear the resources of Scripture and the confessions on the question of whether that particular candidate is ready for the ordered ministry under the standards of the Constitution. Removal of this sentence weakens the clarity of the present requirement that the application of standards is an essential element of the examination of each individual candidate. (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 669)

Unlike Item 07-01 (2012), the current item does not propose to amend by inserting language drawn directly from the constitutional questions for ordination and installation in W-4.4003d (“Will you fulfill your ministry in obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture, and be continually guided by our confessions?”). The current item proposes an amendment that condenses the first two clauses of the above question: “obedience” not to Jesus Christ but instead to Scripture, while maintaining the reference to “guidance” by the confessions.

The final sentence of G-2.0104b concerns a session or presbytery conducting an ordination examination, a process that is informed by the guidance received from both Scripture and the confessions in discerning the standards to be applied during the examination. In light of this, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution restates and amplifies the advice above given on Item 07-01 (2012) in reference to the current item.

If the intent of the amendment proposed in Item 06-01 is to restate the authority of Scripture over the confessions, the amendment is unnecessary. Section F-2.02 establishes the confessions as “... subordinate standards in the church, subject to the authority of Jesus Christ, the Word of God, as the Scriptures bear witness to him. ...”

If the concern of the proposed amendment is obedience exercised either by individuals or the councils of the church, this concern is addressed elsewhere. Section F-1.0203 states, “... Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.” Also, the responsibilities of councils are to be carried out keeping before it the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed congregations have identified themselves (including that “the Word of God is truly preached and heard;” F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (including “the proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of humankind” and the “preservation of the truth;” F-1.0304).

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 06-01.

The ACWC’s advice to both the 219th General Assembly (2010) and the 220th General Assembly (2012) was to approve the amendment of G-6.0106b (Book of Order) regarding ordination standards, and the New Form of Government’s language for such (G-2.0104b) clearly articulates the full recognition of a candidate for ministry’s gifts and talents for ordination. Historically, the PC(USA) has resisted subscription to the confessions, and instead, understands them to instruct and lead us. Such is articulated within the Directory for Worship in the ordination vows (W-4.4003c). Furthermore, Chapter Two of the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity articulates the purpose of the confessional statements as being the guide “... in its study and interpretation of the Scriptures” (F-2.01), and that “confessional statements are subordinate standards ... subject to the authority of Jesus Christ, the Word of God, as the Scriptures bear witness to him” (F-2.02).

Through the gender justice lens of the ACWC, ensuring that councils are called to be instructed, led, and guided by Scripture and the confessions, rather than subscribing to them, further ensures the continued ordination of women, who now make up a majority of seminary students, and who are also in the majority with regard to parishioners. To do otherwise places women’s ordination in jeopardy.

Our obedience is to Jesus Christ, who modeled for us justice for all, regardless of gender, race, ethnicity, or sexual identity.

Therefore, the ACWC advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) disapprove this overture.

Item 06-02

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-02. See pp. 27, 72.]

On Amending G-4.0206a Regarding the Sale or Encumbrance of Property Given to a Local Congregation as a Gift—From the Presbytery of Lake Michigan.

The Presbytery of Lake Michigan overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-4.0206 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. Selling or Encumbering Congregational Property

“A congregation shall not sell, mortgage, or otherwise encumber any of its real property that has been used for ministry or mission and it shall not acquire real property subject to an encumbrance or condition without the written permission of the presbytery transmitted through the session of the congregation. Property given to a local congregation as a gift for the purpose of funding ministry and mission activities, and has never been used for such activities, does not require the approval of the congregation or the presbytery.”
Rationale

There are times when congregations receive gifts of real property for the purpose of funding the ministry and mission of a congregation. This is especially true during capital campaigns, when an individual may deed over to a congregation real property that will be sold and the monies used in the capital project.

Under current Book of Order requirements, such a transaction requires the approval of both the congregation and the presbytery, a cumbersome process that should be streamlined. The session should have the final say in accepting the gift and selling the property.

Such transactions are really no different than the gifting of appreciated securities (such as stocks and bonds). For tax reasons, an individual can make such a gift, deeding over the security to the congregation. The congregation sells the security and receives the full benefit of the proceeds, while the individual receives a full deduction for the gift and avoids paying capital gains tax (which allows them to make a larger gift to the ministry).

Making this change to the Book of Order may encourage individuals to give property to a congregation for the purpose of funding ministries.

This change in the Book of Order will make it easier to give to churches. Individuals may decide to give a percentage of property about to be sold, allowing them to make a larger gift than if they waited until after they sold the property and paid the required taxes. Such gift could be significant in the life of a congregation and its ministry.

This change to the Book of Order will also bring many churches into compliance as congregations have often sold such properties without approval of presbytery. However, title companies can and do demand to see the minutes for the congregational meeting and presbytery’s minutes for such a sale. Approval of this overture will no longer require such actions.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-02

Advice on Item 06-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 06-02.

The overture proposes an amendment to G-4.0206a as follows:

Shall G-4.0206 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. Selling or Encumbering Congregational Property

“A congregation shall not sell, mortgage, or otherwise encumber any of its real property that has been used for ministry or mission and it shall not acquire real property subject to an encumbrance or condition without the written permission of the presbytery transmitted through the session of the congregation. Property given to a local congregation as a gift for the purpose of funding ministry and mission activities, and has never been used for such activities, does not require the approval of the congregation or the presbytery.”

The proposed second sentence indicates that the sale of “Property given to a local congregation as a gift for the purpose of funding ministry and mission activities” but that “has never been used for such activities” would not require approval of either the congregation or the presbytery.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that the proposed amendment be disapproved based on the following:

1. Pursuant to G-4.0201, all property is a tool for the accomplishment of the mission of Jesus Christ in the world, no matter how it has been conveyed to the church.

2. The language of G-4.02 has been specifically written to reflect the historical understanding of property ownership within the church. Any amendment should be preceded by careful historical and legal research.

3. This amendment would create conflict with G-1.0503(d), which states that congregations must approve “buying, mortgaging or selling real property.”

4. Property that has been encumbered for the purpose of funding ministry and/or mission activities may be perceived as having itself been used for those activities.

5. The proposed addition of a second sentence states that “Property given to a local congregation as a gift for the purpose of funding ministry and mission activities, and has never been used for such activities, does not require the approval of the congregation or the presbytery.” It is unclear what it means to “approve” property and what criteria the session must use to determine that the property has never been used for mission activity.
Item 06-03

[The assembly answered Item 06-03 by the action taken on Item 06-05. See pp. 27, 72.]

On Amending G-2.0509, Renunciation of Jurisdiction—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-2.0509 be amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end of that section: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“Whenever a former teaching elder has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a judicial proceeding, no PC(USA) congregation shall be permitted to employ that former teaching elder in any capacity, nor shall it permit that former teaching elder to perform any volunteer work.”

Rationale

As stated in the Rules of Church Discipline, Preamble, “the purpose of discipline is to honor God by making clear the significance of membership in the body of Christ” (Book of Order, D-1.0101, Church Discipline). The principles also state in D-1.0102: “The power that Jesus Christ has vested in his Church … is one for building up the body of Christ, not for destroying it.”

When a teaching elder renounces the jurisdiction of the church in the midst of formal judicial process, there is no resolution for either party, particularly for the complainant. Because there has been no acquittal or determination of guilt, the teaching elder has, by virtue of renunciation, removed himself/herself from leadership and office within the church. It could be argued that the church remains vulnerable due to lack of information regarding the circumstances and facts uncovered in the investigative process that might have come to light in the judicial proceeding. Renunciation to stop judicial process should not be an alternative vehicle to continue to work or volunteer in the church when facts and circumstances have not come to light.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-03

Advice on Item 06-03—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

This overture asks to have a new paragraph added to G-2.0509 to read as follows:

“Whenever a former teaching elder has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a judicial proceeding, no PC(USA) congregation shall be permitted to employ that former teaching elder in any capacity, nor shall it permit that former teaching elder to perform any volunteer work.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to answer Item 06-03 with its response to Item 06-05.

This item and Item 06-05 propose slightly different amendments addressing the situation when a teaching elder renounces the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in the midst of a judicial proceeding. The rationale for advising disapproval is the same for both overtures.

Item 06-04

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-04 with comment. See pp. 27, 72.]

[Comment: We strongly urge presbyteries to mandate criminal background checks for all presbytery staff, all teaching elders in validated ministries, all commissioned ruling elders, and others as deemed necessary.]

On Amending G-2.0803, the Call Process and Background Checks—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-2.0803 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]
“According to the process of the presbytery and prior to making its report to the congregation, the pastor nominating committee shall receive and consider the presbytery’s counsel on the merits, suitability, and availability of those considered for the call. A complete criminal background check—including state, national, and sex offender registries—and a check of any civil judgments against the teaching elder are required before a call is issued to a teaching elder. When the way is clear for the committee to report to the congregation, the committee shall notify the session, which shall call a congregational meeting.”

Rationale

Background checks are commonplace at every level of our society: volunteer coaches, teachers, church custodians, etc. Almost every other mainline denomination requires background checks for its pastors. It is time for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take the simple but effective step to strengthen our requirements to protect those under our care.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-04

Advice on Item 06-04—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

Item 06-04 asks the assembly to amend G-2.0803 as follows:

“A complete criminal background check—including state, national, and sex offender registries—and a check of any civil judgments against the teaching elder are required before a call is issued to a teaching elder. When the way is clear for the committee to report to the congregation, the committee shall notify the session, which shall call a congregational meeting.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 06-04 amending G-2.0803.

While the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should take steps to protect those under our care, this overture is not the appropriate vehicle to do so. The Form of Government was designed to be taken as a whole in describing the form of our life together. It purposefully avoids procedures and details better included in operating manuals, standing rules, or guidelines. Since the revision of the Form of Government, proscriptive language has been avoided in favor of more flexible language. The language of the overture would be better included in a manual of operations or personnel policies.

Many presbyteries already conduct background checks, including criminal background checks, as part of their duties to counsel nominating committees. There is nothing in G-2.0803 that prohibits a presbytery from conducting the types of checks suggested by this overture. Under G-3.0301c the presbytery is already charged with the responsibility of receiving teaching elders, which may include doing appropriate background checks prior to any examination and reception.

This language would limit the call process only to those teaching elders being considered for installed congregational calls. If this language were adopted, there would need to be parallel constitutional language requiring similar background checks for teaching elders in other validated ministries.

“Complete” is an overly broad term that may open the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to liability should an “incomplete” background check occur. Beyond the need to check “state, national, and sex-offender registries,” questions arise whether civil judgments are a sufficient check; i.e. should arrest records be included: criminal conviction; bankruptcies; civil litigation; complaints within the PC(USA) judicial system?

If the General Assembly concurs with the intent of this overture, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed amendment would be constitutional as worded—but may raise the potential of increased exposure to liability issues.

On Amending G-2.0509, Renunciation of Jurisdiction—From the Presbytery of the Western Reserve.

The Presbytery of the Western Reserve respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-2.0509 of the Form of Government be amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end of that section: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“Whenever a former teaching elder has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a judicial proceeding as the accused, that former teaching elder shall not be permitted to perform any work, paid or volunteer, in any congregation or entity under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).”

Rationale

As stated in the Rules of Church Discipline, Preamble, “the purpose of discipline is to honor God by making clear the significance of membership in the body of Christ” (Book of Order, D-1.0101, Church Discipline). The principles also state in D-1.0102: “The power that Jesus Christ has vested in his Church … is one for building up the body of Christ, not for destroying it.”

When a teaching elder renounces the jurisdiction of the church in the midst of formal judicial process, there is no resolution for either party, particularly for the complainant. Because there has been no acquittal or determination of guilt, the teaching elder has, by virtue of renunciation, removed himself/herself from leadership and office within the church. ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-05

Advice on Item 06-05—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 06-05.

This item and Item 06-03 propose slightly different amendments addressing the situation when a teaching elder renounces the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in the midst of a judicial proceeding. Each proposes adding a paragraph at the end of G-2.0509.
Item 06-05 proposes a new paragraph that says:

“When a former teaching elder has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a judicial proceeding, that former teaching elder shall not be permitted to perform any work, paid or volunteer, in any congregation or entity under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).”

This proposed amendment appears to be punitive toward individuals who have renounced the jurisdiction of the church, without regard for the assessment by the council with jurisdiction over the work. The proposed amendment would set up a constitutional bar to any work done by the individual based solely on the individual’s having renounced the jurisdiction of the church during a judicial proceeding. Many different alleged delinquencies or irregularities could lead to a remedial complaint while more serious offenses could lead to a disciplinary process. Without regard for the nature, seriousness, or truth of the alleged delinquency, irregularity, or offense, renunciation in the midst of a judicial proceeding would trigger a permanent bar to employment or volunteer service.

Even if the individual does not resume membership in the PC(USA), the church is committed to openness. “Persons who are not members of, or who may have ceased active participation in, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are welcome and may participate in the life and worship of this church and receive its pastoral care and instruction” (G-1.0404). This openness does not eliminate the authority of a council having responsibility for particular paid or volunteer service to assess the suitability of the individual. These two proposed amendments would not permit the council with responsibility for the work to fulfill its G-1.0404 responsibility, regardless of its finding about suitability.

The proposed amendment attempts to create a permanent bar to participation in the life and work of the PC(USA). Renunciation of jurisdiction is a very serious matter, but it does not create an unchangeable status. The return path is to accept the jurisdiction of the PC(USA) anew by joining a congregation. “The members of a congregation put themselves under the leadership of the session and the higher councils (presbytery, synod, and General Assembly)” (G-1.0103).

An individual, who has renounced jurisdiction, may later take a return path of seeking employment or attempting to volunteer in a congregation or other entity of the PC(USA). There is an authoritative interpretation that states:

A person who has renounced membership and/or church office in a PC(USA) congregation may, at some subsequent point, seek admission to membership in another PC(USA) congregation by reaffirmation of faith. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 274, authoritative interpretation)

If the council having jurisdiction over that paid or volunteer work learns of the prior renunciation, that council has the responsibility to inquire into the circumstances to assess the suitability of the particular service for the individual. These proposed amendments would bar the participation of the individual without regard for whether the unresolved issues have a bearing on the individual’s suitability for the particular service.

This proposed amendment seeks to address a local issue by means of a constitutional amendment creating a churchwide rule. Alleged prior misconduct is a serious issue and should be addressed by councils in their administrative manuals. Councils should explicitly ask, in writing, about any involvement as a defendant in disciplinary cases or renunciation of jurisdiction from the PC(USA).

Section F-3.0209 provides that “Councils possess whatever administrative authority is necessary to give effect to duties and powers assigned by the Constitution of the church.” Any council that employs individuals in paid or volunteer service already has the authority to screen such individuals in order to protect those served by the church. Most employing councils have adopted employment policies, and should consider adding to their administrative manuals the requirement of appropriate background checks.

If it is the will of the assembly to approve this amendment, the words “judicial proceeding” should be changed to “disciplinary proceeding as the accused” for clarity.

On Amending G-3.0301 Regarding the Minimum Number of Operating Sessions and Teaching Elders in Presbytery—From the Presbytery of Eastern Oregon.

The Presbytery of Eastern Oregon overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall the second paragraph of G-3.0301 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]
"The minimum composition of a presbytery is ten duly constituted sessions and ten teaching elders, unless [otherwise] [an exception is] approved by [the] [its] synod and [the] General Assembly [giving consideration to the responsibilities assigned to presbyteries in G-3.01 and G-3.03]."

Rationale

1. Of the 173 presbyteries in the PC(USA), 30 presbyteries have 30 or fewer churches. Of those, 3 are racial ethnic and 3 are east of the Mississippi River, leaving 24 of the smallest presbyteries in the PC(USA) in the western United States where the distances between churches is often measured in hours and presbytery boundaries include entire states.

The Comparative Statistics 2012 of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shows 67 percent of our congregations have fewer than 150 members and 75 percent have fewer than 200 members. We are a denomination of small churches and vital ministries in the locations where we are planted; where history and connectionalism meet in faithful congregations as they have for hundreds of years.

2. The representation of small churches and presbyteries is vital to the direction and sustainability of the PC(USA) now and into the future. Small presbyteries pay per capita to participate in the life of the denomination, to support the task forces of the denomination, and to have access to the PJC’s of the synods and General Assembly.

Small presbyteries also pay mission, joining our contributions together with those of the larger presbyteries to support Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) and World Missions. We are faithful in providing leadership at all levels of the denomination. The leadership and modeling of small presbyteries provides a path for others to follow as we remain faithful to Christ in local settings. The representation of small presbyteries at the synod and General Assembly level is a necessary and responsible voice to and with the denomination.

3. Mission is not dependent upon size. In small presbyteries the local PC(USA) congregation is often the only Protestant witness within their community. As such these congregations are responsible for the food pantries, schools, social gathering places, and many other creative ministries. These are more than buildings where people meet on Sunday; this is Christ at work in the midst of the people. These congregations are supported monetarily and spiritually by the presbytery and sustained by the connections with other congregations within the presbytery.

4. Matthew 18:20 states, “For where two or three are gathered in my name, I am there among them.” Neither the exact number of congregations nor teaching elders determine the validity of a presbytery. Rather, the validity and vitality of the presbytery lies in its ability to support the ministry of its congregations, synod, and General Assembly as it is the body gathered in Christ’s name, doing His work with the resources at hand and through the congregations being the body of Christ in the world.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-06

Advice on Item 06-06—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 06-06 with amendment as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through and with brackets; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic with an underline and with brackets.]

This overture seeks to amend Section G-3.0301 of the Form of Government to allow the synod and General Assembly to change the minimum composition of a presbytery from a minimum of ten sessions to a lesser number on a case-by-case basis. The purpose of this change is to increase the flexibility when forming a presbytery. This change is in keeping with:

1. The recently adopted Form of Government’s statement “Councils of the church exist to help congregations and the church as a whole to be more faithful participants in the mission of Christ” (G-3.0101). Leaving the minimum number of sessions in the hands of the synod allows each synod to consider how best to fulfill this mandate.

2. The minimum number of sessions was reduced from twelve to ten by the actions of the General Assembly in 2008 (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 146, Item 03-07). Allowing flexibility for the minimum number would continue the efforts of the General Assembly to be responsive to the missional needs of the church and it mission.
3. Permitting flexibility, with review, is in keeping with the guiding principles behind the recently adopted Form of Government that “mission determines the forms and structures needed for the church to do its work” (G-3.0106).

4. The change of “the” to “its” provides clarity as to which synod would be asked to approve the exception. This change would clearly designate the synod wherein the presbytery is located.

5. Presbyteries are charged with a wide variety of responsibilities for the church’s mission in G-3.01 and G-3.03. Synods that are requested to approve a presbytery that has less than ten congregations and ten elders should carefully review these responsibilities to determine whether the smaller presbytery can fulfill them.

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-07. See pp. 72, 73.]

On Amending D-10.0103—Referral to Investigating Committee—From the Presbytery of Genesee Valley.

The Presbytery of Genesee Valley overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall D-10.0103 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Upon receipt of a written statement of an alleged offense,

“a. the clerk of session or the stated clerk of presbytery, without undertaking further inquiry, shall then report to the council presbytery only that an offense has been alleged without naming the accused or the nature of the alleged offense, and refer the statement immediately to an investigating committee;

“b. the clerk of session, without undertaking further inquiry, shall then report to the session only that an offense has been alleged without naming the accused or the nature of the alleged offense, unless the allegation is that of sexual abuse of another person under the provisions of D-10.0401c(1) and (2), in which case the clerk shall report to the session the name of the accused and the nature of the alleged offense. The clerk shall then refer the statement immediately to an investigating committee.”

Rationale

This overture is prompted by the recent and earnest effort of a session seeking to fulfill the Book of Order mandate of G-3.0106: “All councils shall adopt and implement a sexual misconduct policy.” The particular session’s policy draft included procedures for reporting incidents or allegations of sexual boundary violations. Depending on the accused person’s role (teaching elder, ruling elder commissioned to particular pastoral service, employee, member, congregant, minor), persons to be notified on the basis of role were identified as those of pastor, clerk of session, session personnel committee, presbytery official, church’s insurance agent, legal counsel, parent or guardian of a minor, child protective services, and/or law enforcement officials. However, in the case of a person accused who is a member of the church, the policy invoked the language of Book of Order, D-10.0103: “Upon receipt of a written statement of an alleged offense, the clerk of session …, without undertaking further inquiry, shall then report to the [session] only that an offense has been alleged without naming the accused or the nature of the alleged offense, and refer the statement immediately to an investigating committee.”

In the case of an alleged offense that constitutes “sexual abuse of another person,” defined by D-10.0401c(1) and (2), the direct result of the clerk of session’s compliance with the absolute confidentiality clause of D-10.0103 would be to disenfranchise the session, and the teaching elder or ruling elder commissioned to particular pastoral service as moderator, from essential facts as the foundation upon which informed decisions could be made regarding how the session would act to

1. protect persons who may be at risk of harm;

2. fulfill its fiduciary responsibility under civil law as trustees of the corporation (in churches in which ruling elders function as the legal trustees), per G-4.0101;

3. exercise acts of prudent and wise risk management, a goal consistent with the protective purpose of G-3.0112, which reads: “Each council shall obtain property and liability insurance coverage to protect its facilities, programs, staff, and elected and appointed officers.”;

4. preserve the integrity of the church’s mission and ministry for which the session, as council, is responsible, per G-3.0102.
In the context of a local church and a case in which acts of “sexual abuse of another person” are alleged, compliance by a clerk with the absolute confidentiality clause of D-10.0103 would

1. block activation of a provision in a session policy to suspend the accused person from contact with persons at risk, e.g., a church member who volunteers with minors in a church program;
2. block notification of appropriate officials, e.g., child protective services and/or law enforcement officials, the church’s insurance agent, legal counsel, and/or presbytery officials;
3. block notification of parents or guardians of a minor or an adult who lacks capacity;
4. expose the church as a nonprofit corporation to civil liability for failing to take reasonable and prudent steps to protect vulnerable persons;
5. contradict the church-mandated reporting requirements of G-4.0302 when the clerk is a ruling elder and reasonably believes there is a risk of future abuse;
6. impede the ability of the session to comply with D-10.0104 regarding an accusation received from another council and the requirement to cooperate with the proceedings.

The result is the circumstance in which a session clerk by doing right (complying with D-10.0103) is doing wrong (creating unintended and unwanted consequences).

The polity rationale for amending D-10.0103 only in relation to a session and its clerk is based on the fact that in the case of an alleged offense of sexual abuse, a presbytery has options for preventive and risk management actions that a session does not:

1. In the case of an accused teaching elder, D-10.0106 mandates that a presbytery permanent judicial commission “determine whether the accused shall be placed on a paid administrative leave during the resolution of the matter.”
2. Presbytery leadership may utilize the capacity of its committee on ministry to communicate and/or act in sensitive situations involving allegations with serious implications for a local church.
3. A number of presbyteries utilize a sexual misconduct response team that has the capacity to assist in sensitive situations involving allegations with serious implications for a local church.

It is not necessary to change D-10.0103 in relation to a presbytery and a stated clerk. A presbytery has options for honoring confidentiality for the sake of the due process rights of the person accused while concurrently acting as necessary to prevent harm.

The second polity rationale for amending D-10.0103 is based on fact that the Book of Order does not always require an absolute approach to how the principle of confidentiality is addressed. Section G-4.0301, the third paragraph, uses the discretionary language of “may,” and reads: “A teaching elder or a ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service may reveal confidential information when she or he reasonably believes that there is risk of imminent bodily harm to any person.”

This subordinates the principle of confidentiality to a higher principle of preventing harm to another. (Note that the absolute language of D-10.0103 has not always been applied strictly in church polity in the context of a presbytery. The Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly has ruled that it is not a violation of D-10.0103 for the stated clerk of a presbytery to disclose the fact of a disciplinary case investigation of a specific person to a session. (See the entry for D-10.0103 in the Annotated Edition of the Book of Order regarding the 2003 Disciplinary Case 215-9, Presbytery of Charlotte v. George W. Jacobs.) Modifying the confidentiality clause of D-10.0103 for the context of a session in a case of “sexual abuse of another person” is compatible with the Book of Order’s recognition of a higher principle of preventing harm to others.

If a session is concerned that disclosure of the name of the person accused and the nature of the alleged offense may interfere with the person’s due process rights in a church disciplinary proceeding, the session has the option of requesting that the presbytery assume original jurisdiction of the case.

The reality is that compliance by a clerk with the confidentiality clause of D-10.0103 will not guarantee that the identity of the person accused or the nature of the alleged offense will be preserved. Such information could be disclosed at any point by the person accused, the person who made the accusation, or another person with direct knowledge of the events in question.

The language proposed by this overture would give a session an informed foundation upon which to make necessary and crucial decisions in the context of alleged sexual abuse.

Advice on Item 06-07—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove amending D-10.0103.

Sexual abuse is a very serious offense in any circumstance. The church must adopt and implement all possible measures to prevent any sexual offense, especially those mentioned in D-10.0401c(1) and (2), and the church must deal with these issues properly if and when they occur.

 reviewing various provisions of the Book of Order, there are some tensions, in terms of whether or not to reveal the name of an individual accused of a sexual offense. While D-10.0103 states “shall then report to the council only that an offense has been alleged without naming the accused or the nature of the alleged offense…” G-4.0301 states “A teaching elder or a ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service may reveal confidential information when she or he reasonably believes that there is risk of imminent bodily harm to any person” and G-4.0302 states “shall report to ecclesiastical and civil legal authorities knowledge of harm, or the risk of harm, related to the physical abuse, neglect, and/or sexual molestation or abuse of a minor or an adult who lacks mental capacity when (1) such information is gained outside of a confidential communication as defined in G-4.0301, (2) she or he is not bound by an obligation of privileged communication under law, or (3) she or he reasonably believes that there is risk of future physical harm or abuse.”

Section D-10.0103 is a general procedure for disciplinary complaint process under the Rules of Discipline, while G-4.0301 and 4.0302 are specific requirements in the Form of Government to deal with sexual abuse or misconduct and/or the risk of harm. This overture is seeking to amend D-10.0103 to reveal the name of the accused by the clerk of session if “the allegation is that of sexual abuse of another person under the provisions of D-10.0401c(1) and (2), in which case the clerk shall report to the session the name of the accused and the nature of the alleged offense.”

The rationale of the overture is good, but the concerns can be resolved by following the provisions of G-4.0301, 4.0302, and a well-developed sexual misconduct policy (G-3.0106) without amending D-10.0103. Thus, no amendment of D-10.0103 is necessary for these additional reasons:

1. While there may be tension between D-10.0103 and G-4.0302, the Book of Order F-3.03 states, in part, “Provisions of any part of this Constitution are to be interpreted in light of the whole Constitution. No provision of the Book of Order can of itself invalidate any other. Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions.” (For example, see GAPJC case 215-9, Presbytery of Charlotte v. George W. Jacobs.)

2. If this overture is approved, it will create inconsistency between proposed D-10.0103a and D-10.0103b for the alleged sexual offense by having two different standards: one for stated clerks who will report to the council only that an offense has been alleged without naming the accused or the nature of the alleged offense and one for clerks of session who should report to the session the name of the accused and the nature of the alleged offense.

3. The sexual misconduct policy of the council (required by G-3.0106) can define in more detail mean to prevent further harm or danger, protect the church from liability, and preserve the integrity of the church.

4. Furthermore, the purpose of the Rules of Discipline has more intent than this overture is seeking to accomplish. The Preamble of the Rules of Discipline (D-1.0101) states that Church discipline is the church’s exercise of authority given by Christ, both in the direction of guidance, control, and nurture of its members and in the direction of constructive criticism of offenders. The church’s disciplinary process exists not as a substitute for the secular judicial system, but to do what the secular judicial system cannot do. The purpose of discipline is to honor God by making clear the significance of membership in the body of Christ; to preserve the purity of the church by nourishing the individual within the life of the believing community; to achieve justice and compassion for all participants involved; to correct or restrain wrongdoing in order to bring members to repentance and restoration; to uphold the dignity of those who have been harmed by disciplinary offenses; to restore the unity of the church by removing the causes of discord and division; and to secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings. In all respects, all participants are to be accorded procedural safeguards and due process, and it is the intention of these rules so to provide.

Thus, the integrity of D-10.0103 should be maintained for the disciplinary proceedings. Procedural concerns about alleged sexual offenses can be addressed by following G-4.0301, 4.0302 and the sexual misconduct policy of the council.

If the General Assembly wishes to amend D-10.0103 for more clarity for an alleged sexual offense, adding “unless the allegation is that of sexual abuse of another person in which case the clerk of session or the stated clerk of presbytery shall report to the ecclesiastical authorities the name of the accused and the nature of the alleged offense (G-4.0301–.0302).” in the current D-10.0103 will better accomplish the intent of the overture. Section D-10.0103 will then read:

“Upon receipt of a written statement of an alleged offense, the clerk of session or the stated clerk of presbytery, without undertaking further inquiry, shall then report to the council only that an offense has been alleged without naming the accused or the nature of the alleged offense, unless the allegation is that of sexual abuse of another person in which case the clerk of session or the stated clerk of presbytery shall report to the ecclesiastical authorities the name of the accused and the nature of the alleged offense (G-4.0301–.0302), and refer the statement immediately to an investigating committee.”

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 06-07.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns’ understanding of the implications of this overture is that it calls for the breaking of confidentiality in cases of sexual abuse in order for the session of the relevant congregation to make informed decisions regarding safety measures that may need to be put into place regarding the potential victim and/or perpetrator.

Often perpetrators of abuse are able to continue in their behaviors because of the secrecy, denial, and shame associated with abuse. Allowing the clerk of session to be forthcoming in disclosing an allegation allows for the community to take measures to safeguard other community members, and it decreases the power of the secrecy and shame that are often key ingredients in perpetuating cycles of abuse. As one victim said in reference to the secrecy that surrounded her sexual abuse, “It made me feel like something was wrong with me, or that I deserved it [the abuse] in some way because no one said anything, so it must have been ‘okay.’ Denial is an open door in which the cycle of abuse can go through again and again.”

While children and women are not the only victims of sexual abuse, they are the large majority of the victims. While it is difficult to get an accurate number due to underreporting, as many as 1 in 3 girls and 1 in 7 boys will be sexually abused at some point in their childhood. In addition, according to the 1997 U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics report Sex Offenses and Offenders, girls ages 16–19 are four times more likely than the general population to be victims of rape, attempted rape, or sexual assault.

Allowing sessions to have access to information they need to make informed decisions regarding their community and its’ members would not only protect women and children but also helps maintain a healthy atmosphere within the church and community, one that does not value secrecy, but instead values open dialogue and safe spaces for all its members.

On Amending G-2.0401 to Allow Presbyteries to Elect and Ordain Persons as Commissioned Ruling Elders—From the Presbytery of San Diego.

The Presbytery of San Diego overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-2.0401 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“G-2.0401 Election of Ruling Elders and Deacons

“a. Ruling elders and deacons are men and women elected by the congregation from among its members. The nomination and election of ruling elders and deacons shall express the rich diversity of the congregation’s membership and shall guarantee participation and inclusiveness (F-1.0403). Ruling elders and deacons shall be nominated by a committee elected by the congregation, drawn from and representative of its membership.

“Congregations may provide by their own rule for a congregational nominating committee, provided that the committee shall consist of at least three active members of the congregation, and shall include at least one ruling elder who is currently serving on the session. The pastor shall serve ex officio and without vote. When elections are held, full opportunity shall always be given to the congregation for nomination from the floor of the congregational meeting by any active member of the congregation. A majority of all the active members present and voting shall be required to elect.

“b. A presbytery may elect and ordain men and women to be ruling elders for the purpose of commissioning them to serve as commissioned ruling elders pursuant to G-2.1002–G-2.1004.”

Rationale

One of the goals of the new Form of Government was to provide flexibility for the development of racial ethnic and immigrant congregations. Commissioned ruling elders were specifically identified as a piece of that strategy. Because presbyteries do not have ordaining authority for ruling elders, those men and women who are currently serving in the leadership of racial ethnic and immigrant mission projects and pre-chartered new church developments must leave those congregations, join different congregations, be elected and ordained to the session of the different congregation in order to be eligible for commissioning to return and lead their original congregation. The alternative is for the presbytery to provide access to an ordained teaching elder to administer the sacraments and perform marriages.

In light of the denomination’s approval of the goal of developing 1,001 new worshiping congregations, it makes sense to allow a presbytery the option of ordaining ruling elders for the purpose of commissioning them with authority to perform the functions. Accountability would be identical to all commissioned ruling elders during the course of the commissioning: the presbytery would designate the pastoral services authorized in the commission, a teaching elder shall be assigned as a mentor and supervisor, and the presbytery would be required to evaluate the ministry annually.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-08

Advice on Item 06-08—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) disapprove Item 06-08

This overture seeks to amend G-2.0401 by making the existing text section a, and adding a new section b that would read as follows: “b. A presbytery may elect and ordain men and women to be ruling elders for the purpose of commissioning them to serve as commissioned ruling elders pursuant to G-2.1002–G-2.1004.”

This overture proposes a substantive change to long-established Presbyterian polity that persons who serve in ordered ministries are elected by the body to be served. The Historic Principles of Church Order, approved by the Synod of New York and Philadelphia in 1788, states:

That though the character, qualifications, and authority of Church officers are laid down in the Holy Scriptures, as well as the proper method of their investiture and institution, yet the election of the persons to the exercise of this authority, in any particular society, is in that society. (F-3.0106)

This is amplified by the second paragraph of G-2.0102 (Ordered Ministries):

The government of this church is representative, and the right of God’s people to elect presbyters and deacons is inalienable. Therefore, no person can be placed in any ordered ministry in a congregation or council of the church except by election of that body.

Finally, the business that can be transacted at a meeting of a congregation is limited by the Constitution, in G-1.0503. The very first responsibility listed for a congregation is “electing ruling elders, deacons, and trustees.” No other council or entity is given this responsibility by the Constitution.

The above review establishes that deacons and ruling elders are elected by a congregation, and trained, examined, and ordained by the authority of a session. This right is inalienable, a word that is defined as “impossible to take away or give up.” For a presbytery to be empowered to elect, presumably train, and ordain a ruling elder for the sole purpose of being further trained and commissioned to particular pastoral ministry is an alienation of rights given only to a congregation and its session. Since a ruling elder is a member of a congregation, this overture creates a circumstance where a presbytery places in ordered ministry for a congregation a ruling elder who has not been elected by the congregation.

E lecting and ordaining a person as a ruling elder for the sole purpose of being commissioned to particular pastoral service also undermines the central purpose for the ordered ministry of ruling elder. Ruling elders are persons who have responded to the call of God to perform the ministry of discernment and governance. While ruling elders can be commissioned to particular pastoral ministry, this is not the central purpose for the ministry of ruling elders, and should not be elevated to the primary reason for their election.

Presbytery has the responsibility “for the government of the church throughout its district, and for assisting and supporting the witness of congregations” (G-3.0301). To accomplish this, presbytery

... has a particular responsibility to coordinate, guide, encourage, support, and resource the work of its congregations for the most effective witness to the broader community. In order to accomplish this responsibility, the presbytery has authority to:

a. develop strategy for the mission of the church in its district; ... (G-3.0303)
A presbytery’s mission strategy may include alternative forms of ministry, beyond teaching elders in installed or temporary relationships and ruling elders commissioned to particular pastoral service, to meet the needs of all of its congregations in providing that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard, including training members of congregations to lead worship and preach, as needed.

If the General Assembly wishes to consider this amendment, attention needs to be given to the phrase “men and women,” as the amendment does not define whether these persons are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 06-08.

That there is a growing dearth of teaching elders, both female and male, receiving calls to serve in far too many of our racial ethnic churches for many reasons including, but not limited to, economic inability to afford full-time pastoral leadership, is a stark reality.

However, granting authority to presbyteries to carry out the function of ordaining elders, a responsibility vested in the session of the congregation in which an elder candidate is a member in good standing, creates the need for complex safeguards against misuse of that authority. This action would give presbyteries the ability to randomly select persons for ordination, commissioning, and placement in pastoral leadership positions for any reason.

COTE COMMENT ON ITEM 06-08

Comment on Item 06-08—From the Committee on Theological Education.

A recent Committee on Theological Education (COTE) sponsored study of commissioned ruling elder (CRE) training programs found most severely lacking. On average, a full training program equals less than one semester of undergraduate level coursework.

The COTE is charged by the General Assembly to maintain and develop a system of theological education from the perspective of the whole church. Until adequate systems of preparation for CRE’s are normalized, we cannot endorse the expansion of their use in presbyteries that this overture allows.

Moreover the three types of congregations with the greatest need specified in this overture are especially complex and, therefore, the adequacy of training is essential. Emerging congregations or worshipping communities primarily composed of new immigrants, non-dominant culture individuals, and/or young adults present amazing possibilities for and call for skilled leadership and preparation programs that include subjects we found are largely absent from the training programs currently in place. These emerging ministry settings call for preparation in areas including theology beyond our own tradition, history, contemporary personal and social ethics, evangelism and church development, social trends and community development, and worldwide and ecumenical mission.

The COTE affirms the need for leadership in and with racial ethnic underrepresented and new immigrant congregations as well as young adults. We are pleased to report leaders from these communities are indeed moving into and through seminaries, including PC(USA) seminaries, and many of them have strong mission agendas in mind. The fastest growing segments of new seminary students falls within these categories of underrepresented constituencies, with, in fact, the fastest growing constituency of seminary students being African American females over 50 years of age. The largest segment of students continues to be under thirty years of age and, therefore, from the younger adult generations.

Presbytery leaders surveyed in 2008 found that training programs done in cooperation with seminaries were the best and of the highest quality. We believe a collaborative approach will be a way forward in the future and are convinced that partnerships between mid councils and seminaries and national judicatories is a proven way to prepare pastoral leaders.

Therefore, we agree with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution that it is the congregation’s role to elect and train ruling elders, not the presbytery. The presbytery’s role is to commission and train those ruling elders from and from congregations that they believe can serve as pastoral leaders.

Instead of this overture, we support recommendations of the Special Committee on Preparation for Ministry, which address

• the leadership needs of those who may come from and who hope to serve new immigrant congregations or congregations whose members are racially marginalized in the United States and

• points out the flexibility the Form of Government already offers presbyteries in appropriate cases.
Comment on Item 06-08—From the Office of the General Assembly.

The Office of the General Assembly advises disapproval of Item 06-08.

Individuals respond to the call of God through the voice of the congregation to serve as a ruling elder. Their primary preparation and oversight for this service is lodged with the session. While they may be called to service beyond the local congregation, their membership, pastoral care, and discipline remain the responsibility of the session of the congregation.

This overture would circumvent the responsibility of sessions in calling, ordaining, caring for, and supervising ruling elders. The overture also opens the possibility that a person might be ordained to the office of ruling elder for the purposes of commissioning without holding membership in a PC(USA) congregation.

While the rationale outlines missional concerns to be considered, it is notable that presbyteries currently have the authority to ordain persons to the office of teaching elder in ways that would allow these concerns to be addressed (Book of Order, G-2.0610).

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-08

Comment on Item 06-08—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The 1001 New Worshipping Communities movement will increasingly be dependent on developing new leaders within a presbytery or local congregation. This is especially crucial for racial ethnic, new immigrant, and young adult centered worshipping communities. Many of these leaders, called to start new immigrant, racial ethnic, and young adult new worshipping communities, are not ruling elders in chartered congregations. The ten-year-old movement from the United Kingdom, called “Fresh Expressions,” is similar to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s 1001 New Worshipping Communities movement. Their research shows that 40 percent of the leaders of their Fresh Expressions of Church had not occupied a leadership role previous to starting a Fresh Expression. This movement has started 4,000 Fresh Expressions of Church over the past ten years. When used thoughtfully and sparingly this overture may provide flexibility for presbyteries to employ new strategies for leadership development regarding new worshipping communities.

A presbytery’s ability to elect and ordain men and women as ruling elders, for the purpose of commissioning them to serve a new worshipping community, may provide flexibility for the development of these new worshipping communities, particularly racial ethnic, new immigrant, and young adult communities, whose growth often depends upon transformative leadership. Having trained commissioned ruling elders in the field at the beginning of these new worshipping communities may enhance their growth and provide the opportunity for these new worshipping communities to thrive and become mature expressions of Christian community.

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-09. See pp. 72, 73.]

The Presbytery of Upper Ohio Valley respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following amendments of F-2.05, G-2.0105, and W-4.4003 to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

1. Shall F-2.05 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“F-2.05 The Confessions as Statements of the Faith of the Reformed Tradition

“In its confessions, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) expresses the faith of the Reformed tradition. Central to this tradition is the affirmation of the majesty, holiness, and providence of the one triune God, eternally existing in three persons: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; the mystery of the Incarnation of the Son as Jesus Christ, who is both fully human and fully divine; and the essential truth that salvation and justification are in Jesus Christ alone, through faith in Him and what He has accomplished through His life, death, resurrection, ascension, and sending of the Holy Spirit, who In Christ and by the power of the Spirit, God creates, sustains, rules, and redeems the world in the freedom of sovereign righteousness and love. Related to this central affirmation of God’s sovereignty are other great themes of the Reformed tradition:

“The authority of Scripture as God’s written word and our only rule for life and faith.
“The election of the people of God for service as well as for salvation;

“Covenant life marked by a disciplined concern for order in the church according to the Word of God;

“A faithful stewardship that shuns ostentation and seeks proper use of the gifts of God’s creation; and

“The recognition of the reality of human sin, including our tendency to idolatry and tyranny, and our need for God’s gracious provision of the Holy Spirit, which empowers the covenant life of the Church, its faithful stewardship of God’s creation, and its obedience to the Word of God, and which calls the people of God to work for the transformation of society by seeking justice and living in obedience to the Word of God.”

2. Shall the final sentence in G-2.0105 be amended as follows:

“The decision as to whether a person has departed from essentials of Reformed faith and polity as stated in our Foundations of Presbyterian Polity is made initially by the individual concerned, who must declare any scruples at the time of his or her examination by a council, but ultimately becomes the responsibility of the council in which he or she is a member.”

3. Shall W-4.4003c be amended as follows:

“Do you sincerely receive and adopt the essential tenets of the Reformed faith as expressed in the confessions of our church and in our Foundations of Presbyterian Polity as authentic and reliable expositions of what Scripture leads us to believe and do, and will you be instructed and led by those confessions and by our polity as you lead the people of God?”

Rationale

Every candidate for ordained office is asked whether he or she receives and adopts the “essential tenets of the Reformed faith,” but no comprehensive list of essential tenets can be found in our Book of Order.

Section F-2.05 offers a good introduction to some principles of the Reformed faith, but leaves out many that are common in all Reformed denominations; it also does not declare any to be essential tenets, leaving candidates and councils with little guidance as to whether a candidate’s beliefs are outside the scope of the Reformed faith. Much is left in the realm of personal opinion, not requiring candidates to explain their beliefs to their councils. This overture would flesh out the principles listed in F-2.05, refer candidates and councils to them for guidance, require candidates to declare scruples to their councils, and give candidates specific tenets to affirm at the time of their examination for ordination or installation.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-09

Advice on Item 06-09—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 06-09.

The intent of this series of amendments is to define a list of essential tenets of the Reformed faith for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This is seen in the first paragraph of the rationale for this the overture, “Every candidate for ordained office (sic) is asked whether he or she receives and adopts the ‘essential tenets of the Reformed faith,’ but no comprehensive list of essential tenets can be found in our Book of Order.”

There is a long history of this issue within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as to whether to define a list of essential tenets and require those in ordered ministry to subscribe to them. Included in this history are one report and two overtures considered since the 1983 reunion of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) and the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA):

There are also actions and reports of our antecedent denominations that relate to this issue:
A report of the UPCUSA in 1983, at the time of reunion, of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, growing out of a request for interpretation of the former G-1.0400. (This report contains a history of the issue of defining essential doctrines and subscriptionism throughout the history of American Presbyterianism, from the disputes resulting in the Adopting Act of 1729 to the adoption of the 1788 Historic Principles of Church Order (F-3.01).

The action of the PCUSA in 1927, in relationship to the action of 1910 defining five doctrines as essential and the repeated challenges to that action culminating in the Auburn Affirmation, drafted after the 1924 General Assembly. The action included:

1. The General Assembly does not have the constitutional power to give binding definition to the church’s essential faith. By denying that the assembly has the right to define authoritatively the “essentials” of the church’s faith, the commission eliminated the five points as a source of controversy.

2. While a measure of tolerance was embedded in the church, it was made clear that the church, and not the individual, must decide the limits of tolerated diversity, “either generally, by amendment to the constitution, or particularly, by Presbyterial authority.”

The church has decided limits generally, by amending the constitution to create The Book of Confessions, and particularly, by the continuing examination for ordination of candidates and for reception into membership of ministers. To this end, it must be acknowledged that in ordination the presbytery has historically demonstrated its power and responsibility in determining confirmation with the church’s theology.

In response to the 1996 overture to add five essential tenets to the Book of Order and require subscription to them, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution provided the following advice to the assembly:

The intent of the overture is to define orthodoxy for the clergy, officers, and employees of the denomination.

Presbyteries have the power to interpret the confessional standards of the church and to enforce those standards (G-11.0103). Presbyteries have, through the ordination vows, an adequate means for ensuring the orthodoxy of its members. The session has the same power to ensure orthodoxy of its elders and deacons (G-14.0000). The 206th General Assembly (1994) ruled that “one's adherence or violation of certain ethical or doctrinal standards is best determined, when necessary, by judicial process” (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 188).

The Presbyterian church has resisted attempts to include in its foundational documents such theological specificity, desiring instead to allow the bodies that know persons who serve them to inquire into the orthodoxy of their beliefs. (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 241)

In response to Item 08-05, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the General Assembly:

Over many years, the church has chosen not to approve a discrete list of “essential tenets,” or to take a subscriptionist approach to the ordination questions. The overture’s rationale characterizes this as a “failure to respond adequately.” This consistent response of the church to such overtures is not inadequate and does not indicate an unwillingness or inability to express faith, but rather is an unwillingness to minimize the rich content of the extraordinary collection of documents in The Book of Confessions with such an inadequate list.

It is precisely in The Book of Confessions that the tenets of the Christian faith and the Reformed tradition are expressed in meaningful language in documents written and received by the church through many centuries. The Preface to The Book of Confessions explains:

... Although some other wording may better express the intent, the phrase “essential tenets” is intended to protect freedom with the limits of general commitment to the confessions. ... Moreover, while Chapter II of the Form of Government lists a number of general theological affirmations to summarize the broad general character of Presbyterian faith and life, it too prescribes no specific understanding of any of these affirmations to test the acceptability of people for ordained office in the church. (Confessional Nature of the Church Report, pp. xxv-xxvi)

Within the church’s polity, presbyteries have the power and responsibility to interpret the confessions of the church and the standards they express. In conversation with those who seek to hold office within their bounds, presbyteries by examination determine a candidate’s or minister’s adequate adherence to those confessional standards. In the case of elders and deacons, this power is exercised by the session. ... (Minutes 2004, Part I, p. 610)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution affirms the advice that it gave previously (above).

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 06-09

Comment on Item 06-09—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

Item 06-09 asks the 221st General Assembly (2014) to amend three sections of the Book of Order to clarify what is meant by Essentials of the Reformed faith.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully offers the following comment and advises that the assembly disapprove this overture.

The Book of Order (in F.1.0403, second paragraph) sets forth our principles of unity and diversity. It states,

The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological convictions. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship,
This item, while intending to clarify our Constitution, narrows it instead such that it violates our church’s principles of unity and diversity. Our church seeks a balance between the purity and unity of the church. When it comes to theological convictions, there needs to be room at the table for diverse viewpoints. We think what is intended as clarification results in narrowing theological conviction to a particular orthodoxy, thereby discriminating against those holding an equally Reformed though differing stance.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

Item 06-10

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-10. See pp. 27, 73.]

On Amending G-1.0403, Affiliate Congregational Membership for Teaching Elders—From the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area.

The Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

1. Shall G-1.0403 be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

   “An affiliate member is a member of another congregation of this denomination or of another denomination or Christian body, who has temporarily moved from the community where the congregation of membership is situated, has presented a certificate of good standing from the appropriate council or governing body of that congregation, and has been received by the session as an affiliate member. An affiliate member may participate in the life of the congregation in the same manner as an active member except that an affiliate member may not vote in congregational meetings or be elected to ordered ministry or other office in the congregation. An honorably retired teaching elder may also apply to the session of a congregation, other than the congregation that he or she has most recently served, to become an affiliate member and with the approval and oversight of the entity of the teaching elder’s presbytery charged with the responsibilities under G-3.0307.

2. Shall G-2.0503c be amended by adding a second paragraph to read as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

   “An honorably retired member may become an affiliate member of a congregation, other than that which he or she has most recently served, with the approval of that congregation’s session, and the approval and oversight of the entity charged with the responsibilities under G-3.0307 of that member’s presbytery.”

Rationale

Retired teaching elders are members of a presbytery, but do not have a formal relationship with a congregation, which has caused concern and a feeling of being isolated and abandoned by some teaching elders.

Many honorably retired teaching elders, as they age, are not able to fully participate in the presbytery. Instead, some would like to participate in congregational life as they are able, and perhaps to receive some pastoral care. This overture, supported by the Association for Retired Ministers, Their Spouses and Survivors (ARMSS), seeks to amend the Book of Order to permit an honorably retired teaching elder to formally become an affiliate member of a congregation, with the approval of both the teaching elder’s presbytery of membership and the session.

While it is presently common for teaching elders to become active within congregations as parish associates, this kind of formal relationship is not suitable for many honorably retired teaching elders. Often, parish associates are expected to have specific duties within their congregations, and their relationships with congregations are expected to terminate whenever a new pastor is installed. In contrast, teaching elders who choose to become affiliate members would be free to volunteer and participate as their age and health permit, without being required to minister to congregants in a professional capacity. Allowing honorably retired teaching elders to become affiliate members may foster close relationships that benefit congregations. Also, if teaching elders were to suffer from dementia and live in nursing homes, encouraging sessions to add their names to lists of affiliate members would help ensure that congregations would continue to look after them, so that they would not be alone and abandoned by the church.

Honorably retired teaching elders would not be able to vote in congregational meetings or be elected to ordered ministry or other office in the congregation, just like all affiliate members (G-1.0403). The presbytery of membership would continue to have original jurisdiction in all disciplinary matters (D-3.0101b(1)). While this proposed overture would at minimum forbid a retired teaching elder from becoming an affiliate member in the congregation in which she/he has most recently served, both presbytery and session would continue to be responsible for making sure that principles of separation ethics are upheld to protect the congregation, the pastor in active service, and the retired teaching elder.

Concurrence to Item 06-10 from the Presbytery of Albany.

Concurrence to Item 06-10 from the Presbytery of Flint River (with Additional Rationale)

Retired teaching elders are members of a presbytery, but do not have a formal relationship with a congregation, which has caused concern and a feeling of being isolated and abandoned by some teaching elders.

Allowing such persons to have the status of an affiliate member can foster a closer relationship for both congregations and retired teaching elder. Adding presbytery entity approval and continued oversight safeguards the congregation, the pastor in active service, and the retired member. Not permitting this relationship in the congregations most recently served by an honorably retired member safeguards the new and continuing ministerial service on the next pastor following the former pastor’s retirement. This relationship would not be required of retirees who would retain presbytery membership, responsibilities, and privileges, but would give flexibility and opportunities for service in a new way.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-10

Advice on Item 06-10—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) disapprove Item 06-10. This overture would allow an honorably retired teaching elder to become an affiliate member of a congregation in certain circumstances. Teaching elders are members of a presbytery: “Each presbytery determines the teaching elders who are its members …” (G-3.0306). The question raised by this overture is whether a teaching elder can hold dual membership as an affiliate member of a congregation.

Overtures that have raised the issue of dual membership have previously arrived before the General Assembly, including Item 06-12 (dual membership for the pastor’s family in yoked church settings, Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 596) and Item 05-09 (creation of the category of associate member for people who maintain more than one residence, Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 325). In addition, overtures that propose affiliate membership for certain teaching elders have arisen, including Overture 93-94 (Minutes, 1994, Part I, pp. 185, 486), and Overtures 11-87 and 57-87 (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 739 and 762). Past General Assemblies disapproved all of these overtures on the basis of a fundamental principle of Presbyterian polity: for purposes of accountability, oversight, and order, membership is held in one place at one time.

In view of this principle, an argument might be made that G-1.0403 (Affiliate Member) allows a person to hold dual membership in two congregations. However, affiliate membership is permissible only in a specifically defined circumstance:

An affiliate member is a member of another congregation of this denomination or of another denomination or Christian body, who has temporarily moved from the community where the congregation of membership is situated, has presented a certificate of good standing from the appropriate council or governing body of that congregation, and has been received by the session as an affiliate member. ... (G-1.0403)

The key aspect that makes affiliate membership possible is a temporary move away from the community where the person is an active member of a congregation. There are two outcomes of this temporary relationship:

1. If the move becomes permanent, the affiliate member must make a decision to either become an active member of the church of affiliate membership, or become an active member elsewhere.

2. Once the temporary move ends, the relationship of affiliate membership would also end.

The overture as written proposes affiliate membership for an honorably retired teaching elder that does not meet the criteria of G-1.0403. The proposed relationship is not a temporary one, but more of a permanent relationship. Also, the relationship would be established not because of a move from one physical location to another, but out of a desire to move at will between the “community” of presbytery membership and the “community” of congregational participation.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises that the General Assembly discern whether the problem to be addressed requires a churchwide answer by constitutional amendment, or whether the concern could be more effectively resolved by a local or interpersonal solution already provided for in the Book of Order. Resolving this issue by amendment has implications for the church’s understanding of membership in a congregation. The rationale for the overture suggests issues of building and maintaining relationships as persons face the issues of aging. These perceived problems can be addressed effectively under the current Form of Government.
There is nothing in the Book of Order, beyond G-2.0905 and presbytery ethics policies based upon it, that prevents an honorably retired teaching elder from being active in the worship and work of a congregation. Honorable retirement is a category of presbytery membership, as is being engaged in a validated ministry or a member-at-large. Because it is a category of presbytery membership, the teaching elder, although retired from work formerly done, is still responsible to the presbytery for the ministry of the Word and Sacrament to which she or he has been called, as well as the ordination vows taken. Ministry as a teaching elder, even in retirement, includes “... responsible participation in the deliberation, worship, and work of the presbytery and in the life of a congregation of this church or a church in correspondence with the (PC(USA)” (G-2.0503a(5), emphasis added).

This “responsible participation” can take on various forms, but certainly, one form is regular attendance and participation in the work and ministry of a congregation. A presbytery is free to designate other ways of relating to congregations, such as a parish associate relationship, that are consistent with its strategy for mission.

If the General Assembly wishes to consider this overture, the following issues should be considered:

1. There is no need to amend two sections of the Form of Government to accomplish the intent of this overture. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the assembly consider the amendment to G-2.0503c, and add the last sentence of G-1.0403 at the end of the overture.

2. The phrase “most recently” is not defined and may cause confusion. Is this to be interpreted as a bar to ever becoming an affiliate member of a congregation that the teaching elder last served, or is there a “shelf life” to this bar, that is, a certain number of years beyond which the bar to affiliate membership expires? Also, the amendment seems to imply (by only speaking of the congregation “most recently served”) that an honorably retired teaching elder can become an affiliate member of other congregations the person previously served. Section G-2.0905 is relevant not just to the “most recent” congregation served, but to all congregations served.

3. While the overture attempts to address oversight issues in this proposed relationship, it still does not resolve problems should a complaint be made against the teaching elder. Disciplinary accusations against a member of a congregation are referred to the session, while disciplinary accusations against a teaching elder are referred to the presbytery. “The entity charged with responsibilities under G-3.0307” is not involved in these stages of disciplinary process.

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-11. See pp. 72, 73.]

On Amending G-3.0403(c) to Allow Churches to Realign with Other Established Presbyteries within the PC(USA)—From the Presbytery of Beaver-Butler.

The Presbytery of Beaver-Butler respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-3.0403(c) be amended by adding the following new text at the end of the present text:

“When a congregation finds it is disengaged from its own presbytery due to theological or practical differences, it may petition its synod to transfer to another presbytery acceptable to both the congregation and the synod. Such a request should only be made after a period of prayerful discernment between the congregation and the presbytery of current membership. The synod shall exercise due diligence in consulting the congregation, its teaching elder(s), and presbytery of membership before deciding upon the request to transfer. A congregation that transfers membership to another presbytery may not request dismissal to another denomination for at least ten years from the date of transfer.”

Rationale

Throughout the church, the practical implementation of our polity and theological stances vary from presbytery to presbytery. The result is that various churches find themselves in presbyteries where the practices and policies, while permissible by Book of Order, go against the collective conscience of a particular local church. Rather than having the only options of obeying the conscience being to leave the church or disengaging from one’s presbytery, we believe that allowing movement within the denomination would allow for the preservation and strengthening of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

We believe that allowing realignment within the PC(USA) is a reasonable accommodation for individual churches and will slow the current erosion within our greater fellowship.

The requirement to remain within the denomination for at least ten years after transfer is meant to discourage any congregation from seeking transfer to a presbytery with a favorable dismissal policy.
Finally, we believe that realignment is pastoral and would allow for a measure of fellowship to remain between believers within the church rather than a complete breaking of fellowship.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-11

Advice on Item 06-11—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 06-11.

This overture seeks to amend Section G-3.0403(c) of the Form of Government to establish a process to transfer a congregation from one presbytery to another, "when a congregation finds it is disengaged from its own presbytery due to theological or practical differences." Section G-3.0403(c) is a section of the Form of Government that deals specifically with synods, the intermediate councils that serve as corporate expressions of the church throughout their regions. Synods have direct authority over presbyteries, not congregations, and are responsible for the life and mission of the church throughout its region and for supporting the ministry and mission of its presbyteries (G-3.0401).

A presbytery is empowered by G-3.0303(b) (d) (e) to control the location of its congregations and to resolve difficulties within them. This amendment limits, if not takes away, a presbytery’s opportunity to do so by allowing a congregation to directly petition a synod for a transfer to another presbytery (presumably, through its session). This amendment also raises a concern that for matters of order, congregations or sessions do not communicate directly with a synod, but do so through their presbytery.

Another issue presented in this overture is whether theological or practical differences are a sufficient reason to move a congregation from one presbytery to another. Previous assemblies have found that such differences may change the nature of a presbytery from a geographical expression of the church to one based on theological or missional affinity, or "practical differences.” In so doing, it alters not only the nature of the presbytery, but fundamental affirmations of Presbyterian polity. The idea of nongeographic presbyteries on the basis of theological or other differences is an issue that has been studied and has been disapproved in the last three General Assemblies [218th, 219th, and 220th General Assemblies (2008), (2010), and (2012)].

A historic and foundational understanding of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is that the church is called into being as a community whose true unity is in Jesus Christ (Book of Order, F-1.0302a). The missional diversity of congregations within a presbytery cannot negate that unity but is expressive of this church as a missional body within the whole Church as it seeks to be united with Christ in the power of the Spirit (Book of Order, F-1.0401). The presbyteries are assigned responsibility and power to “develop strategy for the mission of the church” in their geographical districts (Book of Order, G-3.0303a), with each congregation in those strategies and any mission partnerships to be “engaged in the mission of God in its particular context” (Book of Order, G-1.0101).

While the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has provided for nongeographic presbyteries, that has been approved only within the limited framework of the mission needs of racial ethnic and immigrant congregations (Book of Order, G-3.0403c), and then only following review of how language and culture so define the particular context in which the racial ethnic and immigrant congregations are engaged in mission that there is missional need to include them in less geographically bounded presbyteries. It is finally the whole church, through the action of the General Assembly, which must approve a synod’s creation of a nongeographic presbytery; this is not a regional decision alone.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that ecclesiastical relocation of one or more congregations from one presbytery to another necessarily has an impact on the fellowship, order, and mission commitments of the congregations of both the original presbytery and also the new presbytery of membership.

Finally, as stated [in part] in the Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s advice submitted to the 218th General Assembly (2008):

… the call of God [is] to engage Christ’s mission together, to honor the critiques of brothers and sisters of faith who disagree, and to plan and work together to live out our calling to be “the sign in and for the world of the new reality God is making available to people in Jesus Christ” (G-3.0200). (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 144)

If the assembly approves this overture, the result would be the creation of nongeographic presbyteries contrary to the provisions of G-3.0403c.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 06-11.
Overtures that allow churches and presbyteries to choose their membership on the basis of “theological or practical differences” threaten to dissolve the unity of the church as a whole, to diminish financial resources that could be available for joint mission projects, and to create a community of uniformity and like-mindedness as opposed to a community of faith representing the full body of Christ.

In Reformed tradition and the history of Reformed communities of faith, theological disagreements, faithful discussion, diversity of views, and honest debate have provided the occasion for creativity. Think about the reformers, abolitionists, and civil rights activists: What if difference and division had prevailed over the call to live and act as part of Christ’s body? Political and theological issues may be temporarily side-stepped by “allowing realignment” but it will come at the expense of our communal call to live as the body of Christ, each one of us an integral part of it.

$\textbf{Item 06-12}$

\textit{Special Committee to Review the Preparation for Ministry Process and Standard Ordination Exams}

The Special Committee to Review the Preparation for Ministry Process and Standard Ordination Exams recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 1, with amendment. See pp. 14, 73.]

1. \textbf{Challenge the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to demonstrate its commitment to the full diversity of the Body of Christ described in Scripture (1 Cor. 12:12–13) and the constitution (Book of Order, F-1.0403)\textsuperscript{1} by:}

   a. Encouraging presbyteries to prioritize the election and appointment of persons of diverse cultural heritage to committees or commissions overseeing the preparation for ministry process;

   b. Encouraging presbyteries to broaden the pool of standard ordination exam readers to be more reflective of the denomination’s diversity and to include more participation from racial ethnic persons; and

   c. [Directing] [Encouraging] the General Assembly Nominating Committee to increase the number of racial ethnic nominees to the Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) who are presented to the General Assembly for election.

\textit{Rationale for Recommendation 1}

To do justice to the varied heritages and experiences of racial ethnic persons under care and to serve the church within a context that is becoming more culturally diverse, presbytery committees and commissions must include members whose experiences are inclusive of the spectrum of races and cultures within the ministry context of the presbyteries. As they engage a process of discernment and preparation within covenant partnership, committee members offer more effective guidance when they are sensitive to the gifts and challenges engendered by cultural differences for the sake of the individual entering the process, and in service to the church’s own call to ministry.

The committee is convinced that the collaborative process in place for overseeing the examinations has been effective, but the process will always be affected or influenced by the diversity or the lack of diversity reflected in those participating in the committee’s work. Because eliminating cultural bias in the questions and in the reading of exams is a goal of presbyteries and their committees responsible for preparation for ministry, it is important that we aggressively pursue bringing voices to the table that can reflect the realities of ministry in many cultural contexts.

Members of the PCCEC are elected by two different constituencies: the regional reading groups and the General Assembly through nomination by the General Assembly Nominating Committee (see excerpt following from the Manual of the General Assembly). To change the makeup of the PCCEC, it is necessary to challenge both constituencies that elect members.

\textit{Procedures for filling the PCCEC (from “Guiding Principles of Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates,” p. 69, which are part of the Manual of the General Assembly):}

\textbf{MEMBERS:} The Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) will be composed of no fewer than 12 members and no more than 24 members who are ruling or teaching elders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Any changes to this membership range will require a two-thirds majority vote of the PCCEC before submission to commissioners at a General Assembly for action on behalf of the presbyteries.

\begin{itemize}
   \item No more than half and no less than one-third of the members will be elected by the General Assembly to four-year terms on a staggered schedule. These members will be eligible to be re-elected for an additional term. Candidates for these positions are nominated through the General Assembly Nominating Committee with consideration being given to areas of needed expertise, to gender and racial/ethnic representation, to an approximate balance of ruling and teaching elders, and to various sub-cultures within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with regard to the overall composition of the PCCEC.

   \item Remaining members of the PCCEC will be elected from among and by examination readers designated by the presbyteries. To facilitate representation from across the church, the PCCEC will group presbyteries into regions. The reader representatives will be nominated from and voted on by readers from their respective regional groupings of presbyteries following procedures determined by the PCCEC. These members will be elected and serve on a staggered schedule in four-year terms, and will be eligible to be re-elected for an additional term. (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 710, electronic version)

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 2. See pp. 14, 73.]

2. Direct the Mid Council Ministries Area of the Office of General Assembly, in consultation with the racial ethnic caucuses of the church and with presbytery leaders, to develop a list of resource persons for circumstances where assistance with cultural proficiency may aid in developing an appropriate process of discernment and preparation for possible service as a teaching elder.

Rationale for Recommendation 2

The need for and range of cultural diversity across the church is outstripping the ability to develop training resources that can assure cultural proficiency by every presbytery member charged with working with inquirers and candidates for all cultural groups in the PC(USA). Identified resource persons from these cultural groups can help presbyters understand cultural differences among inquirers and candidates, increasing the likelihood that the discernment and preparation process is appropriately tailored to the gifts and needs of the individual. Presbyters tasked with overseeing preparation for ministry as teaching elders are encouraged to consult with these resource persons when beginning work with an individual of a different racial ethnic or cultural heritage, to prepare for interaction with the applicant that will be characterized by cultural humility and respect. These resource persons also can be made available to inquirers and candidates as advocates for appropriate process, and as interpreters of the theological commitments and communal values of the Reformed tradition.

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 3. See pp. 14, 74.]

3. Direct that Standard Ordination Examinations be retained as one means of assessing a candidate’s readiness to be examined for ordination to the ordered ministry of teaching elder.

Rationale for Recommendation 3

Because ordination to the ordered ministry of teaching elder is an action of a presbytery taken on behalf of the whole church, the committee affirms the need for some denominational standards when determining readiness. Though important as a church-wide standard, the standard ordination exams should not be used as the singular means of assessing readiness for ministry. That is, presbyteries may discern that a candidate who passes the standard ordination exams is not in fact ready for ministry; by the same token, presbyteries may discern that a candidate who has difficulty with the standard exams merits an opportunity to demonstrate readiness in other ways. For this reason, standard ordination exams are only one means of assessment among many.

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 4. See pp. 14, 74.]

4. Direct the Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) to consult with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) for comment on the cross-cultural accessibility of standard ordination exam questions before they are finalized.

Rationale for Recommendation 4

The process used by the PCCEC to develop ordination exams is complex and spans three years. This process allows ample time to read and consider how a candidate might engage with a particular question as well as how the question is relevant to ministry in the church. Our research identifies the intrinsic impossibility of cultural neutrality. No matter how diverse the composition of the PCCEC, the committee cannot be expected to compose exams that are “culturally neutral.” However, we believe that ACREC’s input will help the PCCEC to compose exam questions that are more accessible across cultures.

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 5. See pp. 14, 74.]

5. Direct the PCCEC to include more culturally diverse resources and references in its instructions to and preparation of readers of the examinations, so that the Reformed theological insights of racial ethnic and non-European persons are included.

Rationale for Recommendation 5

Because the exams are intended to be “anonymous” and those writing the exams are instructed not to include anything that would identify themselves to the readers, some students have observed that they have felt unable to cite persons from their cultural contexts (e.g., Latin American, Asian, African, African American). In their instructions to the exam-takers, proctors can assure students that such references are welcome but readers must also be prepared to accept those references as appropriate and non-prejudicial. The examinations handbooks for candidates and for readers, which are posted online on the
6. Direct the PCCEC to develop means to broaden the format of standard ordination examinations beyond time-limited essays, and include additional protocols that may integrate oral presentations into the standard examination process.

Rationale for Recommendation 6

The committee considered the possibility that the written essay-style exams may not be the best assessment of competence for all candidates and that being considered an “exception,” if one is assessed by an alternative to the standard ordination exams, may be perceived as prejudicial. In accomplishing this recommendation, there will be logistical challenges and resource implications (financial and human) that we cannot predict. However, the committee believes that in the current environment, different formats beyond the usual timed, written, essay exams are needed and feedback to this point has concurred. We understand that any standard exam developed and administered by the PCCEC would not be an “alternative means” of assessment requiring a super-majority action of a presbytery under G-2.0610.

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 7, with amendment. See pp. 14, 74.]

7. [Direct that] [Encourage] the presbyteries, in consultation with sessions and seminaries, [be mandated] to address with persons under care the contemporary challenges of the ministry of teaching elder as well as the realities of financial debt incurred from education and other sources. Such conversations would consider a. bi-vocational probabilities;
   b. expectations of tent-making;
   c. innovative approaches to ministry;
   d. cultivating nontraditional communities (e.g. 1001 Worshiping Communities);
   e. acquisition and use of nonprofit skills (including but not limited to grant writing, volunteer and donor relations, etc.); and
   f. the number of candidates seeking a call compared to the number of open positions for which they might be considered.

Rationale for Recommendation 7

The reality for many candidates seeking a call is that there are increasingly fewer congregations that can afford to hire and provide benefits for full-time teaching elders. Candidates, particularly those in second careers, carrying forward student loans and other debt on top of the costs of living, must confront the possibility that they may not be able to rely solely on ministerial employment to meet their financial needs. The process of preparation for ministry must address these circumstances as matters of stewardship and honoring the covenant between presbyteries, sessions, and the persons under their care.

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 8, with amendment. See pp. 14, 74.]

8. [Direct that] [Encourage] presbyteries, through whatever structure they have in place to guide the preparation of persons for ordered ministry as a teaching elder, make full use of the flexibility provided by the Form of Government in G-2.06, particularly G-2.0610, to respond to the unique needs of individual inquirers and candidates, especially those from immigrant and underserved communities.

Rationale for Recommendation 8

The committee believes that there has not yet been sufficient time for the church to adjust to the changes in the Form of Government since its revision in 2011. The revised Advisory Handbook for Preparation for Ministry, a valuable resource for presbyteries, clarifies the new flexibility permitting presbyteries to shape the preparation process in ways that would accommodate their unique contexts and circumstances. The next recommendation would provide additional resources for presbyteries as they consider their options.

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 9. See pp. 14, 74.]

9. Direct the Mid Council Ministries Area of the Office of the General Assembly to solicit from presbyteries and make available on the PC(USA) website and by other appropriate electronic means, models of ways presbyteries are responding to unique and emerging issues related to the preparation and equipping of persons for ordered ministry as a teaching elder.

Rationale for Recommendation 9

The committee is aware that a number of presbyteries have implemented or are exploring alternative structures and processes for guiding all inquirers and candidates through preparation toward final assessment. Others are responding to particular circumstances that may be true for other presbyteries as well. Posting these models where presbyteries and committees can easily find them would provide a very useful resource.

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 10, with amendment. See pp. 14, 74.]

10. Direct [that through creation of a special task force or direction to the Mid Council Ministries Area of] the Office of General Assembly[,] the General Assembly[,] and the Presbyterian Mission Agency to review the programs and procedures used by, or available to, presbyteries to prepare, equip, credential, and deploy pastoral leadership for congregations other than the preparation process for those seeking ordination to the ordered ministry of teaching elder, with a report to be submitted to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Rationale for Recommendation 10

In wrestling with the charge to study the overall process of preparation for ministry, the special committee concluded that the focus mandated by the referral from the 220th General Assembly (2012) was the preparation of those seeking ordination to the ordered ministry of teaching elder. Limiting the work, however, precluded attention to the spectrum of leadership needs emerging across the church as the denomination responds to a rapidly changing context. Approval of this recommendation would invite review of programs and procedures already in use or under development for the preparation of ruling elders for commissioning to particular service. The review should provide a forum for discussion of how the church will nurture leaders called to emerging communities of worship and service, communities that might seek alternatives to traditional forms of leadership and organization. It shall also explore what options could be made available to allow credentials for pastoral leaders who might have some training, but do not have practical access to the established process of preparation for ministry as a teaching elder, e.g. a leader of an immigrant faith community.

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 11. See pp. 27, 75.]

11. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0607 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown in italic.]

“A candidate may not enter into negotiation for his or her service as a teaching elder without approval of the presbytery of care. The presbytery shall record when it has certified a candidate ready for examination by a presbytery for ordination, pending a call. Evidence of readiness to begin ordered ministry as a teaching elder shall include:

a. [Text in a.–c. remains unchanged.]

d. satisfactory grades, together with the examination papers examination materials, together with evaluations that declare those materials satisfactory in the areas covered by any standard ordination examination approved by the General Assembly. Such examinations shall be prepared and administered by a body created by the presbyteries.”

Rationale for Recommendation 11

This change in language seeks to distinguish the standard ordination examinations from examination by presbyteries for ordination as well as to reiterate that candidates are accountable to their presbytery of care. It also makes specific that the standard exams are evaluated by way of written comments but are not “graded” and would allow for the introduction of exams for which the “work product” of the exams may be other than written responses to essay questions.

[The assembly approved Item 06-12, Recommendation 12, with amendment. See pp. 27, 72, 75.]

12. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0610 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown in italic.]

“G-2.0610 Exceptions Accommodations to Particular Circumstances

221ST GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2014) 379
“By a three-fourths vote, a presbytery may, by a three-fourths vote, waive any of the requirements for ordination in G-2.06, except for those of G-2.0607d. If a presbytery judges that there are good and sufficient reasons why a candidate should not be required to satisfy the requirements of G-2.0607d, it shall approve by three-quarters vote some alternate means by which to ascertain the readiness of the candidate for ministry in the areas covered by the standard ordination examinations. A full account of the reasons for exception any waiver or alternate means to ascertain readiness shall be included in the minutes of the presbytery and communicated to the presbytery to which an inquirer or candidate may be transferred.”

[Financial Implication: Per Capita—$12,700 (2014); $15,660 (2015); $12,700 (2016)]

Rationale for Recommendation 12

The new phrasing proposed in G-2.0610 first changes the title of the paragraph to address the perception of some that being an exception is prejudicial in and of itself. The changes proposed in the paragraph are intended to clarify that presbytery minutes should include reasons for both waivers and for alternate means of assessment. The sequence of sentences in the current paragraph could be construed to mean that a presbytery may “waive” everything but G-2.0607d without “good and sufficient reasons” or explanation in the minutes so long as the three-fourths vote threshold was met.

Overall Rationale

Introduction

These recommendations are in response to the following referral from the 220th General Assembly (2012): Item 07-07, On Reevaluating the Process by Which Ordination Exams Are Written, Administered, and Graded (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 682).

1. Reexamine the viability of testing as a way of discerning a candidate’s suitability for ministry.
2. Reevaluate and reassess the process by which the exams are written, administered, and graded.
3. Assess the exams’ assumed cultural neutrality and revise exams as needed to address disparities in pass rates.
4. Work with councils to develop effective, alternative methods of examination, and to encourage their use to grow the pastoral leadership pool for immigrant communities in need.
5. Request the assembly fund an expanded study the overall process of preparation for ministry including the standard ordination examinations with recommendations to be reported to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Context

The General Assembly referral to the Special Committee to Review the Preparation for Ministry Process and Standard Ordination Exams emerges from a context of significant changes in American society, changes that multiply exponentially the challenges faced by the 21st century church.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a church shaped by the Reformation ethos of Western Europe, with institutional forms reflecting assumptions and structures of a body politic significantly different from that which frames U.S. culture today. Despite our commitment to diversity and ecumenism, the PC(USA) is still a majority white church deeply rooted in the traditions of its history. These demographics expose a disconnect from American society’s trend toward greater racial and cultural diversity.

If the PC(USA) is to minister effectively, it is imperative that we take into account the ways our context—both local and global—is changing. Soon, there will no longer be a white majority within the American population. As faith traditions continue to multiply, Christianity will become less a normative religion and more one religion among many. In our intensely market-driven climate, religious consumers will continue looking past the familiar mainline denominations in favor of their own personalized spiritual paths.

These trends are layered with a widespread disillusionment with institutions, a dramatic shift in the source of authority, an expanding knowledge base, the accessibility of various worldviews, and the impact of technology—for good and ill—on human relationships and interaction. Within the church we find decreasing financial resources, declining denominational loyalty, and inconsistent patterns of participation in worship and education. In this new reality, the forms and processes that have served the PC(USA) in the past may no longer do so and the assumptions and expectations of corporate life and congregational leadership are being tested.

There are wonderful possibilities associated with these cultural and technological changes. For instance, we already see potential for increased and deepened communication. Opportunities for artistic and linguistic expression increased by social changes as well as technological development will enhance capacities for spiritual and theological expression. All of these changes are currently widening our horizons for mission in exciting and creative ways. The creative possibilities for preparation for ministry are increasing exponentially. How can we find ways to infuse our preparation for ministry process with this potential?
Despite significant changes to the constitutional requirements in 2011, this committee finds that the process of preparation for ministry as a teaching elder is still implemented in many presbyteries as largely unchanged from the linear, form-driven process that was in place prior to 2007. This adherence to old procedures continues in the face of changing cultural expectations and related shifts in the demographics of inquirers and candidates, church leaders, and congregations.

Thirty years ago, the majority of those discerning service as teaching elders were young people who entered seminary right out of college. They were significantly formed in their pastoral development through first calls as associate or assistant pastors or pastors of smaller congregations. Ruling elders and other members of presbyteries frequently mentored them during the transition to pastoral ministry. Now, the majority of those in preparation are exploring ministry as a second or even third career. Their sense of call may have developed while they were in seminary rather than within the faith community of a congregation. They may not begin their theological education with any denominational affiliation, much less having been under care. A growing number of persons entering preparation are older, multicultural, or immigrant. More are geographically tethered, and many leave seminary with significant educational debt. There is no one process of preparation to fit all candidates.

At the same time, the demographic and leadership needs of our congregations are also changing. Just over half of our congregations are under one hundred members, and there are fewer full-time pastoral positions. Small congregations, rural and urban alike, have been identified as “underserved” because they find it difficult to call pastors. In many areas the isolation of congregations is exacerbated as nearby churches are closed. Congregations may be yoked where several are served by a single pastor. In other areas, presbyteries are equipping ruling elders to provide pastoral leadership for congregations unable to afford or attract a teaching elder. Others are working with the spiritual leaders in immigrant communities to identify pastoral leaders who can communicate in their languages and who understand their cultures. As presbyteries respond to the denomination’s challenge to create new worshiping communities, they are working with new types of leaders for what may be nontraditional communities.

In light of this church environment, how can we better prepare a diverse range of candidates for the church the Spirit is reforming?

These new realities argue for a more flexible, individualized process for preparing persons for ministry in today’s church. The 2011 revision to the Form of Government provides presbyteries with great latitude to shape the process to meet the specific needs of inquirers and candidates, while at the same time defining churchwide standards for readiness for examination for ordination. Exercising that latitude will require the committees that guide that process to understand the unique cultural traditions of individual inquirers and candidates and their implications for the preparation process. We must become more culturally competent; we are called to embrace a diversity that may not be reflected in our own congregations or life experiences. Thus committees must become much more aware of and open to fresh methods of formation, education, and assessment.

Not only is the preparation process in the PC(USA) a covenant between an inquirer or candidate, a congregation, and a presbytery, it also involves a partnership with other entities within and outside the church. The realities described above need to be taken into consideration by all parties. While the overall process is primarily guided by the presbytery, usually through a committee, the final assessment of readiness includes ordination examinations prepared and administered by the Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates. For most inquirers and candidates, the educational requirements will be met by a course of study at a seminary or other theological institution, some having no relationship with the PC(USA). This education may be residential, commuter, or through distance learning. An individual’s practice of ministry will likely be shaped at least in part by a supervised practice of ministry experience, Clinical Pastoral Education, or an internship. The quality of communication and active partnership will determine the degree to which the process can be successfully individualized in such a complex situation.

Committee Process

To develop recommendations in the areas assigned to us, we engaged in the following:

- Compiling and reviewing recent mainline pastor preparation studies and practices;
- Analyzing standard ordination exams for cultural bias and failure rates;
- Evaluating the demographics of PCCEC members and readers; and
- Interviewing a sample of pastors, mid council presbyters, racial ethnic caucus members, Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) members, and seminary students, at various venues such as Big Tent, the Polity Conference, Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings, presbytery meetings, committee on preparation for ministry (CPM) meetings, and seminary on campuses.

These and other approaches will be evident below.
Part 1: Reexamine the viability of testing as a way of discerning a candidate’s suitability for ministry.

As we considered Part 1 of the committee’s charge, we noted that the standard written ordination exams are not designed to discern “suitability” for ministry. In the candidacy phase, “fitness and readiness” are to be established (G-2.0604), with the standard written exams to be one tool for that work (G-2.0607d). “Suitability,” in the language of the Book of Order, is to be established during the inquiry phase (G-2.0603). The committee proceeded with its work with this understanding of the exams’ purpose.

The committee considered the history of the standard written ordination exams. They were established in order that presbyteries would have some method to test all candidates on a denomination-wide basis. Individual calling presbyteries could then trust that a candidate coming from another presbytery was able to articulate adequate responses to ministry situations with both Reformed theological and pastoral concerns in view. This method of examination continues to stand as the only denomination-wide standard for evaluating candidates, and for this reason the committee deemed it valuable enough to keep.

We confirmed that seminaries continue to use written, timed examinations as part of their assessment of students. Therefore such exams in and of themselves are not a strange and foreign concept to candidates. However, we also noted that during seminary studies particular students may be allowed to substitute other work and forms of examination, and that some specific courses do not require exams at all. We concluded that retaining written, timed exams simply in order to mirror seminary methods does not have a viable basis.

Investigation into the discernment practices of other denominations revealed that standard written exams are required by certain denominations but not by others. Different denominations have varying approaches to the preparation of candidates for ministry. Some use a classroom-and-testing model; others use an apprenticeship model. All practices have strengths and liabilities.

Part 2: Reevaluate and reassess the process by which the exams are written, administered, and graded.

The standard ordination exams are written, administered, and evaluated by the PCCEC. We received a full explanation of its work from the Reverend Dr. Timothy Cargal, staff support to the PCCEC, and the Reverend Dr. Michelle Bartel, former moderator of the PCCEC. We learned that:

- Five exams comprise the standard ordination examinations. The Bible Content Exam (BCE) is designed each year at the PCCEC’s annual meeting. The Worship and Sacraments, Biblical Exegesis, Theological Competence, and Church Polity exam questions are composed over a three-year span by the PCCEC. Each question is evaluated thoroughly by the members of the PCCEC in order that the exams may ascertain as clearly as possible a candidate’s ability to articulate the Reformed faith in ministry situations. The PCCEC works diligently to avoid elements in the exams that would distract candidates or readers from this articulation.

- The exams are administered as timed events, completed on computer. Time extensions may be requested by the candidate and authorized by the presbytery committee overseeing that candidate’s preparation process.

- The PCCEC stresses that exams are “evaluated,” not “graded.” “Grading” implies a fixed rubric against which an exam is evaluated, which does not happen with these exams. Readers are instructed to evaluate exams with a final mark of “Satisfactory” or “Unsatisfactory,” with comments to indicate why either mark was given. Members of the PCCEC review all marks and reader comments for consistency and clarity. Readers elected by the presbyteries and trained by the PCCEC evaluate the exams.

We observed that the composition of the exams takes place with rigor and over considerable time, both positive assets. The administration of the exams has moved fluidly from an entirely paper-based system to an electronic, online system, making the process easier and more affordable for the readers and keeping pace with the cultural habits of our time. The evaluation system uses a constituency of readers with the broadest possible base (all presbyteries) and includes ruling and teaching elders. The committee could not envision the administration of an exam process labeled “standard” much improved from the present one.

We examined different “learning styles” and how it might impact candidates taking the standard exams. The concept of “learning styles” is not confirmed by rigorous academic research. The several proponents of “learning styles” in the education community differ in their definitions and implications of “learning styles,” making the usefulness of the concept in our situation difficult to ascertain. Furthermore, “learning style”—how a student receives learning—may not coincide usefully with “expression style”—the means by which the student’s learning is demonstrated. Thus, this committee is not able to respond helpfully to the referral’s appeal to “learning and processing knowledge in different ways.”

We recognized and reaffirmed that candidates with learning disabilities have avenues for accommodation of those disabilities in taking the standard exams. A presbytery can also arrange for an alternate form of assessment to accommodate an individual candidate’s needs (G-2.0610).
The rationale for this part of the mandate included an appeal to consider the failure of “many of our candidates” on first, second, or third attempts of an examination area. For perspective on how many candidates might reasonably pass the standard exams at all, we note that in the legal and medical professions pass rates of students taking written board exams range from 69–88 percent. In recent years, satisfactory results on our exams fall at the upper limit of these rates (see Table 1, and our work on the racial ethnic dimension of this problem in the next section), which would suggest that as professional exams they are not overly rigorous. It is unrealistic to expect a 100 percent pass rate for our candidates; if no one would fail to satisfy the requirements of the standard exams (even on second or third attempts), we might well ask whether the exams really functioned as a tool to assess readiness.

The table reports the full experience with the examinations for all inquirers and candidates who took an examination in any area from the Fall 2011 administration through Fall 2013 (five exam cycles). For each exam area, the total number of inquirers and candidates is reported along with the percentage of the total that had satisfied the requirement in that area by Fall 2013. The total for each exam is then broken down by the number of attempts, showing the percentage of the total who had taken the exam in that area once, twice, three times, or more than three times, and the percentage who received a “Satisfactory” evaluation on their respective most recent attempt.

Part 3. Assess the exams’ assumed cultural neutrality and revise exams as needed to address disparities in pass rates.

Conversations with members of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and within the committee revealed the intrinsic impossibility of cultural neutrality. While the PCCEC and the bodies that provide its membership may be encouraged to comprise a diversity reflective of the PC(USA), all specific ministry situations arise out of a particular cultural context. The issue for the exams, then, is that these ministry contexts be cross-culturally accessible.

In light of the method of exam creation, we considered the racial ethnic composition of the PCCEC. During the period of our work, African American and Korean persons served on the PCCEC, though in insufficient numbers; in addition, the absence of Hispanic members was pointedly observed. We discovered that the PCCEC has been trying to recruit members who are Hispanic. We assert that in order for standard exams (of any type) to be cross-culturally accessible, members of the PCCEC must come from a broad variety of contexts.

Upon investigation into the statistics related to “Satisfactory” evaluations on the exams, the committee could not say with conviction that racial ethnic candidates as a group consistently satisfy exam requirements at a statistically significant lower rate than Caucasian candidates as a group when one considers rates on first attempts within a particular examination area and applies necessary controls such as for varying sample size. The committee reviewed reports prepared for previous study groups that sought to statistically analyze performance on the examinations by racial ethnic inquirers and candidates. When trying to study the outcomes for racial ethnic inquirers and candidates, who account for roughly 1-in-5 (twenty percent) of all test takers, sample size problems are exacerbated—especially when further differentiated by specific racial ethnic categories. A particular racial ethnic category may be represented by no more than a few percent of total exam takers. For example, in one recent exam cycle Hispanic test takers were 3 percent of the total, and those who opted to write in Spanish represented just one percent of the total. In such circumstances, the impact of individual test takers on overall “Satisfactory” rates is widely incommensurate with the impact of individual Caucasian (non-Hispanic) test takers within their respective sample sets. What the patterns in these studies show are that while racial ethnic candidates are less likely than their Caucasian counterparts to satisfy all the subject areas with only a single attempt in each area, there is only minor difference in rates of “Satisfactory” evaluation on any first attempt of a particular examination area. Moreover, for both Caucasian and racial ethnic candidates, the strong likelihood is that those who will satisfy all four subject areas will do so having repeated no more than two exams (either two areas repeated once, or one area satisfied on a third attempt).

We did recognize among many racial ethnic candidates and seminary faculty the strong perception that passing the exams is intrinsically harder for racial ethnic candidates. We sensed a need to address that perception in our recommendations, even if it is not in our control to change that perception. The statistical analyses provided to the committee suggest that these perceptions arise from two considerations. First, as already noted, the data show that racial ethnic candidates are less likely than their Caucasian counterparts to satisfy all the subject areas with only a single attempt in each area. In a study of just over eighty racial ethnic candidates and an equal number of randomly selected Caucasian candidates who all took an exam during a particular cycle, 23 of the racial ethnic test takers had satisfied all areas, compared to 30 in the Caucasian sample. Moreover, fewer than half (9 of 23) of those racial ethnic test takers had satisfied all areas without repeating any subject, whereas three-quarters (23 of 30) in the Caucasian sample group did not repeat an exam area. Second, presbytery committees overseeing inquirers and candidates appear more likely to authorize or even require third or higher attempts of an exam area in the case of racial ethnic persons than for their Caucasian colleagues. The relationship between “Satisfactory” evaluation rates for racial ethnic and Caucasian test takers remains about the same for first and second attempts even as the rates of “Unsatisfactory” evaluations rise sharply. However, at the point of third attempts or higher the two groups diverge significantly both in the number of exams attempted and the rate at which they are evaluated as “Satisfactory.” In the previously cited study of equally sized groups of racial ethnic and Caucasian candidates, there were thirty-seven examinations where the most recent attempt within a subject area by a racial ethnic inquirer or candidate was their third attempt or higher, with only 35 percent (13) receiving a “Satisfactory” evaluation. By comparison, among the Caucasian inquirers and candidates in the sample group there were only six such examinations, and half of those (3) were evaluated as “Satisfactory.”

Our conversations with ACREC members revealed that composing exams in English then translating them to Spanish or Korean can be of limited help to candidates. Knowing that the exam is a translation often leads candidates to spend exam time translating back to English in order to assess the meaning of the question, which defeats the purpose of translation. In the case of Spanish, colloquial and dialectical differences between Hispanic linguistic communities can mean that even official PCCEC translations of the exams by first-language Spanish speakers may use expressions that seem inappropriate to some who take the Spanish edition of an exam. Because of the problems that can arise from attempting to translate into Korean differences between specific English-language translations of biblical passages used in Bible Exegesis exam questions, the PCCEC—at the request of its Korean members—has adopted a policy of not translating that particular exam (although candidates can register to write their responses in Korean).

Part 4. Work with councils to develop effective alternative methods of examination, and to encourage their use to grow the pastoral leadership pool for immigrant communities in need.

We recognize that presbyteries across the denomination have been creating their own alternative assessments since the Book of Order was first published. We discussed at great length the feasibility of a standardized oral exam, or ordination exams whose means involve a combination of media. We concluded that a single method of examination serving as a denomination-wide “standard” alternative to the written exams would have to be birthed by the PCCEC. To address this referral (#4) we would have to do one or both of the following: (1) recommend that the PCCEC be given the responsibility to design a standard alternative exam or (2) without mandating a style or structure for such alternatives, create a reference document that would be helpful to presbyteries as they develop their own alternative methods of examination. This would serve as a “roadmap” for candidates and presbyteries who otherwise would consider an alternative process too daunting.

We discerned that having alternative methods of examination on hand is only one small piece of the solution to “growing a pastoral leadership pool for immigrant communities in need.” Immigrant communities in need of pastoral leadership require presbyteries and committees responsible for preparation for ministry who are: (1) ready to engage the unique challenges of their immigrant communities and leaders; (2) willing to view the extra effort required to use alternative methods of assessment as an exciting opportunity rather than an onerous burden; and (3) able to navigate the social, economic, and linguistic complexities that no universal wording in the Book of Order can address. These needs are amplified by the fact that some racial ethnic communities consider the entire system the PC(USA) uses to find, prepare, and examine teaching elders to be alien or hostile to the way their church communities function.

Part 5. Request the assembly fund an expanded study of the overall process of preparation for ministry including the standard ordination examinations with recommendations to be reported to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

We discussed whether we should consider “the overall process of preparation for ministry” to mean preparation for ministry as a ruling elder commissioned to particular pastoral service (G-2.10) in addition to ministry as a teaching elder. Although we made no formal limitation on our discussions, it seemed to us that, given the time frame of our labors, we would not be able to explore adequately all the preparation avenues available to any person preparing for one of the ministries of the church. Therefore our work focused on preparation for the ordered ministry of teaching elder.

Much of our conversation concerning the process as a whole revolved around whether presbyteries (and their preparation committees) viewed themselves as those who place requirements before prospective pastors or those who engage in a process of (mutual) discernment of call. We observed the tension between rules and guidelines on one hand and the cultivation of possibility on the other.

Endnotes

1. F-1.0403 Unity in Diversity

   “‘As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise’ (Gal. 3:27–29).

2. Definition of suitability, fitness and readiness assumed by this committee.

Suitability

When an individual and a presbytery explore someone’s “suitability for ordered ministry” (G-2.0603), they ascertain whether God has given that person those qualities which the presbytery understands cannot be taught but are essential in ordered ministry. For instance, the presbytery may decide that character, willingness to learn, motivation, or some gifts for leadership must be present to affirm one’s suitability.

Fitness and Readiness

When an individual and a presbytery explore someone’s “fitness and readiness for a call to ministry” (G-2.0604), they ascertain whether that person demonstrates those qualities which the presbytery understands can be taught or developed and are essential for entering a call. For instance, our polity affirms as essential for readiness the ability to do exegesis of the Scriptures using Hebrew and Greek and to articulate Reformed responses to particular situations. Some presbyteries have affirmed that deep self-reflection in pastoral care situations (often taught in Clinical Pastoral Education courses) is essential for readiness.

3. Other than the streamlining of requirements, there has not been a major review of the process of preparation for ministry since the merger of the UPCUSA and the PCUS in 1983, which occasion required the publication of a new Book of Order.

4. G-2.0607 Final Assessment and Negotiation for Service

“A candidate may not enter into negotiation for his or her service as a teaching elder without approval of the presbytery. The presbytery shall record when it has certified a candidate ready for examination for ordination, pending a call. Evidence of readiness to begin ordered ministry as a teaching elder shall include:

a. a candidate’s wisdom and maturity of faith, leadership skills, compassionate spirit, honest repute, and sound judgment;

b. a transcript showing graduation, with satisfactory grades, at a regionally accredited college or university;

c. a transcript from a theological institution accredited by the Association of Theological Schools acceptable to the presbytery, showing a course of study including Hebrew and Greek, exegesis of the Old and New Testaments using Hebrew and Greek, satisfactory grades in all areas of study, and graduation or proximity to graduation; and

d. satisfactory grades, together with the examination papers in the areas covered by any standard ordination examination approved by the General Assembly. Such examinations shall be prepared and administered by a body created by the presbyteries.”

G-2.0610 Exceptions

“By a three-fourths vote, a presbytery may waive any of the requirements for ordination in G-2.06, except for those of G-2.0607d. If a presbytery judges that there are good and sufficient reasons why a candidate should not be required to satisfy the requirements of G-2.0607d, it shall approve by three-quarters vote some alternate means by which to ascertain the readiness of the candidate for ministry in the areas covered by the standard ordination examinations. A full account of the reasons for exception shall be included in the minutes of the presbytery and communicated to the presbytery to which an inquirer or candidate may be transferred.”

5. The Evangelical Presbyterian Church, the Episcopal Church, and the Reformed Church in America require standard written ordination exams; the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, the Christian Reformed Church, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and the United Church of Christ do not require such exams.

7. The U.S. Bar (which administers exams for those hoping to practice law) reported a pass rate of 69 percent across the country (see http://www.adaptibar.com/bar-exam-statistics-11.aspx) ; from 2008–2012, the American Board of Internal Medicine reported a pass rate of 88 percent among those taking the exam for the first time; the 2011 U.S. Medical Licensing Exam had a pass rate of 94 percent among first-time test takers and 70 percent of repeat test takers; the 2012 board exams for nursing had an 80 percent pass rate.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-12

Advice on Item 06-12—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

This special committee proposes two recommendations, 11 and 12, that have constitutional implications.

1. Recommendation 11

11. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

   Shall G-2.0607 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown in italic.]

   “A candidate may not enter into negotiation for his or her service as a teaching elder without approval of the presbytery of care. The presbytery shall record when it has certified a candidate ready for examination by a presbytery for ordination, pending a call. Evidence of readiness to begin ordered ministry as a teaching elder shall include:

   “a. [Text in a.–c. remains unchanged.]
   “d. satisfactory grades, together with the examination papers, examination materials, together with evaluations that declare those materials satisfactory in the areas covered by any standard ordination examination approved by the General Assembly. Such examinations shall be prepared and administered by a body created by the presbyteries.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Recommendation 11.

The proposed amendments to the lead paragraph of G-2.0607 are clear and do not change the intent of the section being modified. However, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that these amendments are not necessary, as the meaning of the paragraph is already clear:

• The presbytery that performs a final assessment of a candidate can only be the presbytery “of care.”
An examination for ordination can only be conducted by a presbytery (G-2.0702). The final assessment of the presbytery (ready for examination for ordination, pending a call) is a determination made after all of the tasks of preparation for ministry have been completed (G-2.0607a–d), including satisfactory evaluations of the standard ordination exams.

The proposed language to amend G-2.0607d is clear, and adequately expresses the flexibility the special committee proposes for certifying a candidate’s readiness for examination for ordination, pending a call.

2. Recommendation 12

12. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0610 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown in italic.]

“G-2.0610 Exceptions Accommodations to Particular Circumstances

“By a three-fourths vote, a presbytery When a presbytery concludes there are good and sufficient reasons for accommodations to the particular circumstances of an inquirer or candidate, it may, by a three-fourths vote, waive any of the requirements for ordination in G-2.06, except for those of G-2.0607d. If a presbytery judges that there are good and sufficient reasons why a candidate should not be required to satisfy the requirements of G-2.0607d, it shall approve by three-quarters vote some alternate means by which to ascertain the readiness of the candidate for ministry in the areas covered by the standard ordination examinations. A full account of the reasons for exception any waiver or alternate means to ascertain readiness shall be included in the minutes of the presbytery and communicated to the presbytery to which an inquirer or candidate may be transferred.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Recommendation 12 with amendment as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through and with brackets; text to be inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“By a three-fourths vote, a presbytery When a presbytery concludes there are good and sufficient reasons for accommodations to the particular circumstances of an individual seeking ordination, it may, by a three-fourths vote, waive any of the requirements for ordination in G-2.06, except for those of G-2.0607d. If a presbytery judges that there are good and sufficient reasons why a candidate should not be required to satisfy the requirements of G-2.0607d, it shall approve by three-quarters vote some alternate means by which to ascertain the readiness of the candidate for ministry in the areas covered by the standard ordination examinations. A full account of the reasons for exception any waiver or alternate means to ascertain readiness shall be included in the minutes of the presbytery and communicated to the presbytery to which an inquirer or candidate may be transferred.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the phrase “individual seeking ordination” is more appropriate language for the first part of Recommendation 12 than “inquirer or candidate.”

The are other situations where G-2.0610 is applicable, such as a presbytery receiving by transfer a minister of another denomination (G-2.0505a): “… Such ministers shall furnish credentials and evidence of good standing acceptable to the presbytery, and shall submit satisfactory evidence of possessing the qualifications of character and scholarship required of candidates of this church. (G-2.0607 and G-2.0610) … ” The proposed amendment will limit the availability of a waiver to the requirements of G-2.06 to inquirers and candidates only, preventing a presbytery from considering such waivers in these other situations.

Otherwise, the proposed language of the amendment clearly and adequately expresses the intent of the special committee to remove language which the special committee judges to be prejudicial.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes no comment on the proposal to strike “Exceptions” and insert “Accommodations to Particular Circumstances,” as this is not a constitutional matter. The indexing system and related titles are not part of the Constitution. Only the text itself is constitutional.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 06-12.

For many years concerns had been raised concerning the ordination process and the ordination exams. Concerns had been raised concerning issues of diversity, culture, languages, and accessibility. The ACREC understand that the recommendations presented in the report addresses some of these concerns. The ACREC considers these recommendations as a firm and right step towards the full diversity of the Body of Christ as described in the Constitution (Book of Order, F-1.0403):

“As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise” (Gal. 3:27–29).
The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution.

Furthermore, these recommendations take in consideration many of the concerns that were shared with the members of the special committee by members of ACREC and caucuses representative.

The ACREC encourages commissioners to approve the recommendations contained in the report.

COTE COMMENT ON ITEM 06-12

Comment on Item 06-12—From the Committee on Theological Education.

COTE commends the work of the Special Committee on Preparation for Ministry and advises approval of Recommendations 8 and 10.

Recommendation 8: Preparation of inquirers and candidates for ministry as a teaching elder is a partnership between mid councils, congregations, and seminaries. Long geographical distance and conflicting calendars and expectations of schools and judicatories are, for example, making the preparation process difficult for all partners with a common goal of forming those who will serve as teaching elders. Therefore, the COTE affirms this recommendation, and should the General Assembly approve, encourages presbyteries to make full use of flexibility provided by the Form of Government.

Recommendation 10: The Special Committee on Preparation for Ministry interpreted their directive to be specific to the preparation of teaching elders within the PC(USA). Because of the dynamic shifts within the church and the preparations for leaders for ministry, we feel that the work of preparing women and men for service goes well beyond the specific call and function of teaching elders. While we commend the work of this particular special committee, we also concur that the work of discerning next steps for the deployment of pastoral leadership is not nearly done with the varietal of rubrics, contexts, and calls that are already within our midst. The logical next step is the formation of another body to pick up on the work of this special committee, taking it into a new direction, in order that more rationales and possible recommendations can be brought before the 222nd General Assembly (2016). COTE, therefore, advises approval of Recommendation 10.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 06-12

Comment on Item 06-12—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully recommends the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the twelve recommendations in this final report in response to the 220th General Assembly (2012) referral to reevaluate the process by which ordination exams are written, administered, and graded.

We would like to commend the special committee for its careful analysis of the current way our standard ordination exams are created, administered, and evaluated. Their recommendations for eliminating cultural bias in the preparation for ministry process and in standard ordination exams are sensible systemic changes, wise specific processes, and achievable ways to eliminate cultural bias.

These actions can hasten the day when all candidates for ministry are judged on the basis of their readiness for ordination as teaching elders in a culturally sensitive, proficient, and competent manner, regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological convictions.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-12

Comment on Item 06-12—From the Office of the General Assembly.

The Office of the General Assembly would ask that should commissioners approve Recommendation 10 regarding a General Assembly review of programs and procedures for preparing and providing pastoral leadership for congregations in ways other than the preparation process for teaching elders that they direct the review be conducted by the Mid Council Ministries Area of the Office of the General Assembly rather than through creation of a special task force. Mid Council Ministries, together with their partners across the church, have the resources and the opportunities necessary to conduct the review and prepare a report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) without incurring the additional expense of a special task force.

Request for Constitutional Interpretation of G-2.1001, Functions of Commissions Ruling Elders—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

In response to Item 06-13, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the following authoritative interpretation of G-2.1001:

“A ruling elder commissioned for limited pastoral service is not authorized to perform any pastoral service outside of the commission by the presbytery, unless the presbytery gives its permission for any specific service. If the request is for pastoral service within the bounds of another presbytery, the commissioning presbytery must also agree to the request.”

Rationale

Item 06-13 from the Presbytery of Santa Fe presents the following question upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

“Does the authority for commissioning a ruling elder for limited pastoral service allow the commissioned ruling elder to administer the Sacraments or officiate at marriages, apart from the limited pastoral service assigned by the presbytery?”

Findings

Pursuant to G-6.02, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the questions presented:

Section G-2.1001 states, “When the presbytery, in consultation with the session or other responsible committee, determines that its strategy for mission requires it, the presbytery may authorize a ruling elder to be commissioned to limited pastoral service as assigned by the presbytery. … Presbytery, in its commission, may authorize the ruling elder to moderate the session of the congregation to which he or she is commissioned, to administer the Sacraments, and to officiate at marriages where permitted by state law. …” The intent is clear—the commission is for a specific ministry with specific responsibilities.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved an authoritative interpretation of G-14.0801a, which stated “The determinations as to whether a commissioned lay pastor may labor within the bounds of a presbytery lies within the sole discretion of the presbytery in which such ministry occurs” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 438). The 220th General Assembly (2012) approved including this authoritative interpretation in the new Form of Government, and it is in force today.

While the session has responsibility and authority for baptism and celebration of the Lord’s Supper, it is the presbytery who commissions a ruling elder for the sacraments. The presbytery must grant those specific responsibilities in its commission. The 2006 interpretation states that the “authority to commission lay pastors is linked to the fundamental authority of the presbytery to provide for and oversee mission within its geographic bounds” (Ibid). The commission is for pastoral service assigned by the presbytery and limited to that particular pastoral service. The 2006 interpretation also states, “… the presbytery in which an elder seeking commissioning to a particular ministry is a member of a congregation has no authority to commission the elder to such a ministry that occurs within the geographic bounds of another presbytery. Similarly, if a ministry occurs across the geographic bounds of two presbyteries, both presbyteries must approve the commissioning of the lay pastor to that ministry” (Ibid, p. 439).

With regard to weddings—state law and PC(USA) polity must both be considered. While state law may allow the service to be performed by a ruling elder, the PC(USA) takes a more restrictive view for the ruling elder. Again, it is the presbytery who must set out the specific ministerial tasks for the commission of the ruling elder, including the authority to perform a marriage service.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes G-2.1001 could be clarified by the proposed authoritative interpretation.

Questions Presented to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

This request from the Presbytery of Santa Fe presents the following questions upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

Section G-2.1001, Functions of Commissions Ruling Elders states, “Presbytery, in its commission, may authorize the ruling elder … to administer the Sacraments, and to officiate at marriages where permitted by stated law.”

Does such authorization allow the ruling elder to administer the Sacraments or officiate at marriages, apart from the ministry setting of ‘limited pastoral service as assigned by the presbytery?’ For example, can the CRE officiate at the marriage of his or her non-church member nephew at a park in town, or even within the bounds of another presbytery? Can the CRE baptize his or her grandson, when invited by the session of another church?

Request for Constitutional Interpretation of G-3.0403c—From the Synod Council, Synod of South Atlantic

In response to Item 06-14, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the following authoritative interpretations of G-3.0403c:

“If there is no nongeographic presbytery within their synod, then a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation can apply for transfer to a nongeographic presbytery in a synod that has contiguous boundaries with their current synod. The transfer must be shown to meet the “mission needs” of the racial ethnic or immigrant congregation. This transfer requires the approval of both the sending and receiving presbyteries, as well as the synods and the General Assembly.

“A nongeographic presbytery shall only accept fellowships, new church developments, bible studies, worshipping communities, or other forms of corporate witness into its presbytery from within its own synod. Only an organized congregation may be transferred to a nongeographic presbytery in another synod, by obtaining approval from the geographic and nongeographic presbyteries, as well as the synods and the General Assembly.

“Nongeographic presbyteries shall not unilaterally start ministries in other presbyteries and synods without the approval of those councils.”

Rationale

Findings

Pursuant to G-3.0501c and G-6.02, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the questions presented:

The 220th General Assembly (2012) approved the transfer of six Korean racial ethnic congregations (chartered church) from presbyteries in the Synod of South Atlantic to Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery (nongeographic presbytery) in the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic under this provision. Since then, there were some questions raised concerning transferring or receiving non-chartered congregations, such as fellowship congregations, new church development congregations, or new worshipping communities from the bounds of other synods.

A constitutional musing (CM) was published by the Office of the General Assembly in 2012 to address transferring congregations.

1. With respect to question 1, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question presents an issue in which interpretation of the G-3.0403c question is advisable. If there is no nongeographic presbytery within their synod, then a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation can apply for transfer to a nongeographic presbytery in a synod that has contiguous boundaries with their current synod. The transfer must be shown to meet the “mission needs” of the racial ethnic or immigrant congregation. This transfer requires the approval of both the sending and receiving presbyteries, as well as the synod and the General Assembly.

2. With respect to question 2, nongeographic presbyteries shall not accept any non-chartered congregations such as fellowships, new church developments, bible studies, worshipping communities, or other forms of corporate witness into their presbyteries from the bounds of other presbyteries or synods. Accordingly, if a non-chartered congregation desires to transfer to a nongeographic presbytery, it must first become a formally organized congregation within its geographic presbytery and then obtain approval of transfer from the geographic and nongeographic presbytery as well as the synod and the General Assembly. Nongeographic presbyteries should not be unilaterally starting ministries in other presbyteries and synods without the approval of the geographical synod and General Assembly.

3. With respect to question 3, no presbytery shall create fellowships, new church developments, worshipping communities, or other form of corporate witness within the bounds of another presbytery or synod without permission of the other presbytery.

Questions Presented to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

This request from the Synod Council, Synod of South Atlantic presents the following questions upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

The request asks a series of questions that have to do with G-3.0403c, which provides a part of the synod relations with presbyteries. Section G-3.0403c states that “the synod has responsibility for…within its bounds … organizing new presbyteries, dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining presbyteries or portions of presbyteries previously existing, and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, creating non-geographic presbyteries, subject to the approval of the General Assembly, or taking other such actions as may be deemed necessary in order to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-3.0301 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created” [emphasis added].

1. What does “other such actions” mean? Does it include transferring racial ethnic or immigrant congregations to a nongeographical presbytery in other synods? If so, under what circumstance? Is there limit on such transfer?

2. Can a nongeographical presbytery in a synod receive fellowship congregations, NCD congregations, or new worshipping communities from the bounds of another synod if permission is given by the respective geographical presbytery in another synod?

3. Can a nongeographical presbytery in a synod create fellowship congregations, NCD congregations, or new worshipping communities in the bounds of another synod if permission is given by the respective geographical presbytery in another synod?

Item 06-15

[The assembly approved Item 06-15. See pp. 4, 72, 75.]

The 221st General Assembly (2014) approves and enacts the Heidelberg Catechism.

Rationale

In accordance with G-6.03d., two-thirds of presbyteries approved the proposed Heidelberg Catechism.

In accordance with G-6.03e., this final action is brought before the 221st General Assembly (2014) as the next ensuing General Assembly.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-15

Advice on Item 06-15—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that this action is the necessary and final action to include the new translation of the Heidelberg Catechism in the Book of Confessions (Book of Order, G-6.03e).

I. Introduction: Scope of Study

This self-study (2008–2013) is mandated by the General Assembly and the Standards of Review of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission. Its purpose is to provide a systematic review of the work of the commission since the last review by the General Assembly. This study was prepared by the Self-Study Task Force: Barbara Bundick, Bates Butler, Sue Cornman, Meta Cramer, and Robin Roberts.

Since GAPJC is a commission, not a committee, the standards for review by the General Assembly are constitutional. That is, we are not reviewed on the content of our work (in the decisions), but rather on how we conduct our work. Have we conducted our work according to the mandates of the Constitution? The commission also developed non-constitutional standard that give us the opportunity to think about our lives together as a body of Christ’s Church. Have we conducted ourselves as befits a body under the Lordship of Jesus Christ?

The raw data for this study are derived from GAPJC minutes, logs, internal surveys, and an external survey conducted by the Office of Research Services. The summary of the most recent external survey is included as an appendix.

With the adoption of a new Form of Government in 2011, the polity landscape of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) changed. While most of the mandates for the commission’s work are found in the Rules of Discipline, the changes in the Form of Government have challenged the commission’s interpretation of the whole Constitution.

Another factor affecting the work of the commission has been the need to address the application of the PC(USA) Book of Order to questions concerning persons involved in same-gender relationships. The adoption of G-2.0104b ("Amendment 10A"), substantially altered ordination standards. The commission both had to decide cases that were filed under former G-6.0106b and cases challenging the new standards on other grounds. The growing number of secular jurisdictions legalizing same-gender marriage also resulted in this commission receiving multiple cases regarding the PC(USA) definition of marriage. As the standards were clarified, cases on this particular issue declined.

The commission has also been challenged by the fact that at least two synods have assumed original jurisdiction of one of their presbyteries. In at least one instance, the presbytery in question had assumed original jurisdiction over a session, thus giving the synod original jurisdiction over the session. This situation has given rise to significant confusion about who has standing under D-6.0202 to file a remedial action and at which level such an action should be filed, not to mention the racial, cultural, and linguistic differences between the synods and the presbyteries in question.

Christ’s Church has never been a static organization. As Chapter One of the Book of Order states, “Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scriptures teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203). It is in this spirit the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission conducts its work.

II. Compliance with Constitutional Standards

The General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission is a constitutionally mandated commission of the General Assembly (D-5.0101), charged to serve “in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline … in a remedial or disciplinary case, with the most recent interpretation of the Book of Order being binding” (G-3.0501c). The commission adopted constitutional standards in order to verify compliance with the overall constitutional mandate as well as the particulars as defined by the Book of Order.

The following data are based on thirty-two cases that were begun and concluded in the period of this study. Cases that have not yet reached conclusion were not included.

The following are the constitutional standards that the Book of Order requires, followed immediately by the findings of this committee as to the commission’s level of compliance:

1. To open and close all meeting with prayer (G-3.0105).

   This standard was met without exception. For this commission prayer is not simply a constitutional standard, but a deliberate practice and spiritual discipline.

2. To secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings (D-1.0101). The commission established the guidelines defined below.

   a. Time lapse between receipt of complaint or notice of appeal and final disposition of case should not exceed an average of one year.

      The shortest time lapse was one month; the longest was thirteen months, with the average of seven months.

      According to the most recent survey, two in ten respondents (20 percent) indicate that, once the GAPJC began to consider the cases in which they were involved, the commission conducted the cases “very promptly.” Nearly half (45 percent) said their case was conducted “promptly.” Three in ten report that their case was conducted less than promptly (“somewhat promptly,” 20 percent; “not promptly, 10 percent). Thus, 65 percent of respondents said their cases were conducted promptly or very promptly. The percentage is lower than in past years, when 89 percent of respondents said their cases were conducted in a very timely or timely fashion. Due to a large volume of litigation in 2011 and 2012, with consequent limits in schedule and resources, some cases were delayed beyond the preferred time limits of the commission.

      b. GAPJC meeting arrangements should be made by staff in a manner that reflects the needs of the commission to do its work, as well as reflecting the stewardship concerns of the church.
Of the seventeen face-to-face commission meetings since 2008, 2/3 were held in Louisville in order to reduce expense. Commissioners’ surveys reflect general satisfactions with this arrangement.

3. To accord procedural safeguards and due process (D-1.0101).

Over the past six years, only one respondent complained that he or she was treated unfairly. In the most recent survey, 70 percent of respondents stated that the parties were treated very fairly, and an additional 20 percent stated that the parties were treated somewhat fairly.

There was also one instance in which a litigant complained that he had been misinformed about the time allowed for opening/closing arguments, protocol about who could speak during oral argument, and extent of response to commissioners’ questions. As a response to this, a newly revised bullet point communication from Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to counsel was devised that details the protocol of oral arguments. The problem has not reoccurred.

4. To examine papers promptly upon receipt to determine preliminary questions (D-6.0305, D-8.0301, D-13.0301).

a. Time between receipt of initial case filings by OGA and forwarding the same to the Executive Committee of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) for their determination on preliminary questions should not exceed an average of fourteen days.

Usually the filings are forwarded to the executive committee the same day; longest time elapsed was nine days; average is 1.73.

b. Time between receipt of initial case filings by the executive committee from OGA and their determination on preliminary questions should not exceed an average of thirty days.

The shortest time elapsed for action by executive committee was two days, longest was sixty-three, with the average being twenty-four days.

5. To respond to stays of enforcement in a timely fashion (D-6.0103).

There were eight during the period of this report.

a. Time between receipt by OGA of a request for a stay of enforcement and forwarding the same by OGA to the executive committee should not exceed an average of three working days.

The shortest time was same day to executive committee, longest was one day.

b. Time between receipt by the executive committee of a request for a stay of enforcement from OGA and their determination of the preliminary matters as described above should not exceed an average of five working days.

Data exist for only three cases; shortest time lapse was two days and longest was five days; average three days. These dates need to be recorded on the case logs.

c. Time between the executive committee’s determination of the preliminary matters described above and the forwarding of the request for a stay of enforcement accompanied by a communication from the executive committee regarding this determination to the commissioners should not exceed an average of five working days.

Shortest time lapse was same day; longest was fourteen days; average six days. Case logs show significant improvement in this turnaround.

6. To decide challenges to the findings of the moderator and clerk (D-6.0306, D-8.0302); rulings of the moderator (D-7.0303a, D-11.0304); and the composition of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (D-7.0303b, D-7.0401a and b, D-11.0402).

a. In each applicable case, parties should be given the opportunity to present evidence and arguments on any challenges made to findings of the moderator and clerk on preliminary questions.

There were eight challenges to Preliminary Orders for Dismissal; two parties settled and six hearings on challenges were held.

b. In each applicable case, parties should be given the opportunity to object to the composition of the commission.

There were no challenges to the composition of the commission.

c. In each applicable case, the GAPJC should address any challenges and/or objections raised by the parties.

Not applicable.

7. To issue citations as deemed necessary (D-7.0202, D-11.0201).

None were requested.
8. To appoint counsel when necessary (D-11.0302).

None were requested.

9. To conduct pretrial and pre-hearing conferences when necessary (D-6.0310, D-10.0405, D-13.0307).

While pretrial conferences are common, data on how many were held does not exist.

Trials and hearings should be conducted formally with full decorum in a neutral place suitable for the occasion.

In all cases full decorum was maintained; all locations were neutral.

11. To read aloud D-1.0101 and D-1.0102 at the beginning of each trial (D-7.0401a and D-11.0402a).

This requirement was met without exception.

12. To control the conduct of trials and hearings (D-7.0303, D-11.0304).

The moderator is deft in controlling the conduct of trials and hearings; in one instance the hearing had to be interrupted briefly for a cell phone issue. Participants and visitors have been advised about cell phones in all subsequent cases.

In every case the commission held private deliberations. The commission follows a format whereby commissioners are given the opportunity to begin initial deliberations immediately following a hearing and before the next scheduled hearing begins. This provides an opportunity to begin that process while thoughts are fresh. After full deliberation, separate votes are taken on every specification of error; sometimes specifications of error are combined for efficiency and clarity. Decisions are always filed with the Stated Clerk immediately following the meeting of the commission.

14. To write, amend, proofread, and finalize written decisions with the signatures of the moderator and clerk while in session, and immediately disseminate and timely file those decisions (D-7.0402, D-8.0404, D-11.0403, and D-13.0404); For each case in which a decision has been rendered, a written decision should have been prepared while the commission was in session.

This criterion was met without exception.

(1) A copy of the decision should have been delivered to the parties by personal service or certified mail.

This requirement was also met without exception.

(2) The decision should have been filed with the Stated Clerk within thirty days of the hearing.

This requirement was met without exception.

On the external survey, 68 percent of respondents replied that the Office of the Stated Clerk had informed them about the GAPJC decision in the case very promptly, and 11 percent promptly. In a previous survey, 58 percent replied that they were informed very promptly, and 37 percent replied that they were informed promptly, thus demonstrating significant improvement in this area.

15. To prepare and process records of proceedings following a trial before the GAPJC (D-7.0600, D-11.0600).

Following a hearing or trial the records of the case are sent to the Presbyterian Historical Society where they are preserved.

III. Compliance with Non-Constitutional Standards

The administration of justice is “the church’s exercise of authority given by Christ;” therefore, the GAPJC adopted non-constitutional standards that describe the spiritual dimension of the commission’s work as a function of the church as the Body of Christ. Other non-constitutional standards deal with the effectiveness of the commission’s work both internally and externally.

1. To participate in daily corporate worship for the duration of GAPJC meetings.

Prayer is mandated by the Constitution (G-3.0105. W-3.6103); however, daily worship is not. The practice of daily worship and prayer has as its purpose the building up of the body and creation of community (koinonia, mutual partnership in Christ). Worship is offered morning and evening of everyday while the GAPJC is in session. Currently the vice-moderator of the commission requests members to conduct daily worship; both ruling elders and teaching elders lead worship. These short services are rich and varied and keep the commission grounded in its ministry of Christ. Evaluations after meetings reveal the depth and unanimity of the commissioners’ appreciation of daily worship. Participants have also orally commented that worship prior to oral arguments is appreciated.

On Sundays the commission aspires to worship with a local Presbyterian congregation; yet when the press of business is heavy, the commissioners plan and conduct a Service of Word and Sacrament at the meeting place.

According to the Book of Order, every meeting of a council shall open and close with prayer (G-3.0105) and should provide for adequate occasions of prayer during the course of its deliberations. The prayers should express praise and thanksgiving, confession, intercession, and supplication in relation to proceedings of the council (W-3.6103). While GAPJC is not technically a council, we understand ourselves to be governed by similar mandates, and so open and close every meeting with prayer that expresses all of the above.

In October 2008, GAPJC Moderator appointed a new committee to review and revise the Manual. This committee undertook a major revision and reordering of the Manual, following these principles:

a. A logical overall flow, following the traditional order for such documents as described in Robert’s Rules of Order.

b. The numbering system that is consistent and leaves plenty of room for future changes.

c. Easy to manipulate formatting, since the document is likely to be regularly amended.

d. The text itself will include all items that require the full body’s consent to change; appendices will include items like forms, check lists, etc.

The revised Manual was adopted in August 2009. Following each General Assembly the Manual Committee offers revisions on the basis of the actions of the assembly. The adoption of the Foundations of Presbyterian Policy and Form of Government have not necessitated revisions in the Manual.

3. To build community among the members of the GAPJC.

Review criteria for this item is that each meeting of the GAPJC will include time for sharing of personal joys and concerns, time for intercessory prayer for one another, and time for fellowship. The first session of each meeting includes a time for sharing and fellowship, usually in connection with dinner the first evening. Mealtime are informal fellowship occasions, as are gatherings after adjournment in the evening. During one meeting we gathered for dinner at the home of one of the commissioners; the Halloween themed party was marked by hilarity and good spirit; the Super Bowl party was marked by mutual forbearance (F-3.0105), despite commissioners rooting for different home teams.

Obviously commissioners build relationships during the formal and informal business meetings and case committee meetings. Meetings are characterized by long hours dealing with difficult and potentially divisive issues. Commissioners develop relationships marked by mutual respect and genuine affection. The commission seeks always to be a community guided by the Holy Spirit. Liturgical and fellowship occasions of officer installations and parting deepen our sense of mutual purpose.

4. To orient newly elected Commissioners.

The orientation and socialization begin with a letter from the moderator welcoming them to the work of the commission and inviting them to participate in an online technology training session. Formal technology training begins before the first meeting. More general and specific orientation occurs for several hours at the beginning of the first meeting attended by new commissioners. The executive committee plans the orientation and it is led by members of the commission and the manager of Judicial Process. Orientation serves as continuing education for returning commissioners.

5. To communicate with the greater church by various means including writing headnotes for each decision and ensuring that the decisions are disseminated in a timely manner.

a. In 2002, on exceptionally complicated or lengthy cases, the commission began writing headnotes summarizing the salient points of the decision. While the intent was to help church members untrained in legal analysis find the applicable cases, it became clear that the headnotes themselves were being cited as authoritative opinions. Because of this issue, the commission has not written headnotes in the last few years.

b. Case decisions are disseminated to parties within seven days after adjournment of each meeting. Decisions are proofread and signed before the moderator and clerk leave the meeting site; they are then given to the manager of Judicial Process who distributes the decisions to parties by overnight service or other means. Dates of transmittal are noted on case logs which attest that this standard is met. External surveys reveal that 68 percent of respondents believe that they received the GAPJC decision very promptly and an additional 11 percent believed that they received the decision promptly. (This question was only asked of respondents who remembered how they were informed of the GAPJC decision.)
c. The cases are thus transmitted to the OGA whose staff then posts the decisions on the PC(USA) website, after the decisions have been received by the parties.

6. To implement an ongoing self-evaluation program that will include completion of evaluation forms by commissioners at the conclusion of each GAPJC meeting; and a triennial self-study conducted in accordance with the Standards for Review as approved by the General Assembly.

The commission is faithful in evaluating each meeting as to location (accommodations, food, etc.), flow of work, work of case committees, worship. The evaluations are reviewed by the executive committee. In 2008, the Moderator added a Delta evaluation, assessing what worked and what needs to be improved, to the mix. A triennial self-study was developed and considered by the commission in 2011. This self-study accomplishes the dual purpose of a triennial study and the six year self-study required by the General Assembly.

7. To engage in continuing education programs involving matters relevant to the work of the GAPJC.

The commission spent substantial time before both the (218th and 219th) General Assemblies (2008 and 2010) reviewing and evaluating proposals for constitutional amendments. Before the 218th General Assembly (2008) the commission developed several proposed amendments, based on our previous self-study. Careful planning and long discussions preceded each assembly. Other than these polity discussions, the commission engaged in formal continuing education on the new Form of Government. The commission also regularly reviews the basics of Presbyterian legal process and educates itself on issues that arise in particular cases.

8. Maximize GAPJC meeting attendance through several means.
   a. All members should attend all GAPJC meetings unless excused.

   Commissioners exhibit a high degree of commitment to their work on GAPJC. Attendance figures show that the greatest number absent was three and that occurred only once. More often there is only one or no absences.

   b. All members should be present at the time when the meeting is initially convened.

   Most commissioners are present by dinner on Thursday evening, unless travel complications delay their arrival. Two commissioners once came a day early to avoid a blizzard. All commissioners (except for those who are recused) are present and participate in all deliberations and all stages of the decision.

   c. All members should remain in attendance until the meeting is adjourned and no members should leave before the meeting is concluded.

   During the period of this study only one member left after a case was voted on but before the meeting had adjourned; his home was threatened by a hurricane. The commission makes every effort to complete its work in the time set for the meeting; Commissioners are enjoined not to leave before the scheduled adjournment.

   d. GAPJC meetings should be scheduled at least one year in advance in order to provide commissioners with adequate time to arrange their schedules.

   The minutes reveal that meetings are scheduled at least one year, often two years, in advance. The only exception occurs when new commissioners are elected by the General Assembly. While the meeting immediately following the General Assembly has been scheduled in advance, the next year’s following meetings are scheduled with the new commissioners present.

   e. The GAPJC meetings should be held at locations that minimize commissioner travel time on a rotating basis while weighing the attendance or convenience of the parties and the funds available for meetings.

   During the period of this study, meetings were held in Louisville (eleven times), San Diego (two times), Indianapolis (two times), Baltimore and San Antonio (one time each). Three meetings were held by conference call. Two-thirds of the meetings were held in Louisville for reasons of economy. Indianapolis is the preferred back-up site to Louisville for times such as Kentucky Derby week, when Louisville is not economical.

   f. Travel arrangements should be made so as to facilitate the work of the commission, while accommodating the health, safety, and reasonable personal needs of commissioners.

   Meeting evaluations show a general satisfaction with meeting sites and travel arrangements. Commissioners have expressed some dissatisfaction with meetings in February in Louisville because of potential for nasty weather.

9. To keep minutes of GAPJC meetings.

   The clerk keeps full and accurate minutes of all meetings. Minutes are on file in the Office of the Stated Clerk.

   The parties in a judicial proceeding that makes its way to the GAPJC necessarily require significant contact with the staff of the Office of Stated Clerk. In response to an open-ended question, many respondents praised the GAPJC and the Office of the Stated Clerk for their expertise and professionalism.
Members of the commission, in their own evaluations of their meetings, unanimously and enthusiastically praised the Louisville staff for the clerical and other assistance which was competently and cheerfully rendered.

IV. General Assembly Criteria for Evaluation

Effectiveness in Serving the Church

The General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission is a reactive body; that is, the commission responds to cases referred to it. Our constitutional mandate is “to serve in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline,” thus the commission is not a body that proposes mission initiatives, plans programs, or generates strategies.

The GAPJC undertakes the judicial function of the General Assembly in order that the other work of the General Assembly might move forward more expeditiously. In the past the entire General Assembly dealt with judicial matters as the highest court of the Presbyterian church. Presently the judicial function is assigned to this commission and it is on the basis of that assignment that its effectiveness must be judged. The GAPJC operates within strict constitutional boundaries, which were analyzed in Chapter II above. The commission also adheres to non-constitutional standards that were described in Chapter III. In this chapter, the commission seeks to evaluate its effectiveness: that is, how well does it do that which it is assigned to do?

1. The commission has a defined and consistent process for completing its work.

This commission follows judicial processes defined in the Rules of Discipline. When a case is referred to the GAPJC, first the moderator and clerk, in consultation with the executive committee, make preliminary determinations following an examination of the papers files, deciding whether the case is properly before the body. These findings are reported to the parties and the full commission. If they are challenged, briefs may be received and a hearing held; then the commission will make a decision on the preliminary questions. If the commission has established jurisdiction, the case is accepted and scheduled for hearing (or occasionally, trial). The commission will then conduct a hearing or a trial on all of the issues of the case.

Most cases before the GAPJC are on appeal from lower courts. When General Assembly entities or synods are parties to judicial action, the GAPJC acts as a court of original jurisdiction.

The GAPJC has a defined process in the Manual of the GAPJC for the commission to deal with matters that come before it; this process is defined by the appropriate sections of the Rules of Discipline. After a case has been accepted, the moderator appoints a case committee, whose responsibilities are detailed in the Manual of the GAPJC. The ability of the commission to work effectively toward the decision is directly related to the quality of the work of the case committee. Since 2008 the moderator has been meeting with case committee chairs before the first formal session convened; this practice has helped clarify issues prior to the hearing.

Because the issues in some cases are often complex and controversial, the process for reaching decisions is neither easy nor quick. The predetermined adjournment time focuses commissioners’ minds on the work at hand and the decisions are completed on time. Management of the docket is essential if each case is to be thoughtfully decided, clearly written, and carefully edited; the moderator must possess nimble leadership skills, including a sense of humor.

Although this standard deals with process, the GAPJC is effective in fulfilling its constitutional mandate because of the spirit of collegiality and mutual respect among the commissioners. As noted above, the commission is careful to spend time at each meeting building community and sharing joys and concerns. The commission is intentional about daily worship in the mornings and evenings and is regular in prayer for each other and the work before it. While there is not unanimity of opinion on issues before the body, there is firm agreement that all are servants of the Church who seek to build up the Church.

In order to be effective, the commission needs a careful balance of commissioners with vision and dedication to the Church as a whole; moreover, this balance must include (in addition to teaching and ruling elders) attorneys and non-attorneys, persons with stated clerk experience, and individuals with knowledge of church history. Moreover, because of our current practice of working together with a strong emphasis on the utilization of technology, we recommend that all future members must either be electronically enabled, or able and eager to learn. A consistent practice of this commission has been to meet with representatives of the General Assembly Nominating Committee before commissioners’ terms conclude.

2. The commission has a regular process of self-evaluation of its services.

At the conclusion of each meeting, commissioners complete an evaluation form covering the meeting arrangement, work of case committees, staff support, individual work before and during the meeting, conduct of the meeting, and worship. The executive committee reviews these surveys and makes adjustments accordingly. In addition, commissioners participate in a Delta-style verbal evaluation, which responses are also reviewed by the executive committee.

The commissioners’ evaluations reveal that they hold themselves and their colleagues to a high standard of performance. They most commonly rate the preparation done by the case committees, the quality of the questioning done at hearings, and the extent to which they feel prepared to deliberate after reading the records in the “very good” range, although they have not... hesitated, at times, to evaluate themselves less favorably. One area in which they rate themselves more highly—usually as "excellent"—is in showing "appropriate courtesy and respect" to the parties in the way that questions are asked at hearing.

The moderators (three during the course of this review period) consistently received high marks for their leadership of the meetings. The technical expertise offered by the clerk of the commission is also highly valued by the commission members.

This self-study is the other dimension of the self-evaluation. This study includes material from external surveys of parties. Survey results are included as an appendix.

3. The commission employs a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large.

Following each meeting, the executive committee meets with the stated clerk. The commission then formally forwards its decisions to the clerk, who posts them on the PC(USA) website within seven days of the conclusion of each meeting. Immediately at the close of the meeting, the decisions are sent by certified mail and/or email to the parties.

The Constitution requires that the deliberations of the GAPJC are closed and confidential. The Permanent Judicial Commission’s Code of Ethics requires that commissioners not comment publicly on decisions; only the moderator or someone he/she designates shall speak for the commission. Commissioners are free to comment on the procedures of the commission, including the atmosphere of collegiality and trust that mark our work.

4. The commission utilizes current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission.

The commission has made remarkable progress in utilizing technology in the past six years. New commissioners participate in intensive technology training before their first meeting. All commissioners participate in ongoing technology training prior to each meeting and occasionally between meetings via conference call. Commissioners are adept at using Adobe Acrobat to gain electronic access to the cases. Like Google Documents, Acrobat provides a platform where an opinion can be written, edited, and shared in real time by multiple approved users. Acrobat retains a history of all earlier versions. The primary criticism of Acrobat is that it is not compatible with iPads. Given the increasing use of tablets, this may be an area for review.

5. The commission has developed a vision and plans for its work in light of its historic mandate and the emerging issues before and in the context of the PC(USA).

The GAPJC is not mandated to “develop a vision;” rather we are mandated to be faithful in upholding the Constitution of the PC(USA).

The task of faithful constitutional interpretation has posed many demands on commissioners. The church recently adopted an extensively revised Form of Government and a new Foundations of Presbyterian Polity. Other significant constitutional changes occurred around the ordination standards. The legalization of same-gender marriage in several secular jurisdictions raised substantial controversy about the Presbyterian constitutional definition of marriage. Congregations leaving the denomination raised questions about the interpretation of G-4.0203, the “Property Clause.” All these changes, both within and without the church, were tested in multiple disciplinary and remedial cases. The commission was challenged to schedule enough time to do its work in a manner that balanced the need for economy with the need for self-care. Exhaustion does not contribute to wisdom.

The shared vision of the commission is that we remain faithful to our work as described in the Constitution. We understand that “the purpose of discipline is to honor God by making clear the significance of membership in the body of Christ; to preserve the purity of the church by nourishing the individual within the life of the believing community; to achieve justice and compassion for all participants involved; to correct or restrain wrongdoing in order to bring members to repentance and restoration; to uphold the dignity of those who have been harmed by disciplinary offenses; to restore the unity of the church by removing the causes of discord and division; and to secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings” (D-1.0101). Therein lies our vision and our hope.

V. Follow-up from Previous General Assembly Review

A recommendation from the previous self-study report (2008) elicited a response from the General Assembly Review Committee. The Office of the Stated Clerk responded as follows. [The following is excerpted from the Stated Clerk’s responses.]

The Report on the Review of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) brought to the 218th General Assembly (2008) included a recommendation that the GAPJC and the Office of the Stated Clerk compile an electronic digest of all cases adjudicated from 1983 to the present. This recommendation was referred to the Office of the General Assembly (OGA)—Referral Item 14-Report2 recommendation 2. An electronic Topical Digest is being developed to gather GAPJC cases under overarching or recurring topics. Commissioners are working to revise and complete a “precedents paper” which was begun several years ago.

In response to this referral, the OGA reviewed what is already available electronically relating to GAPJC adjudicated cases. All the GAPJC cases since reunion (1983) are available on line (http://oga.pcusa.org/section/committees/gapjc/permanent-judicial-commission-decisions/#1214); as well as hyperlinked in the online and disc form of the Annotated Book of Order.
The cases are electronically searchable by key words and phrases. The search tool allows a wide variety of search parameters to be used.

Additionally, cases relating to specific section(s) of the Book of Order are cross referenced in the Annotated Book of Order under that section(s). The Annotated Book of Order is on-line and in disc format. The cross-references for a given section also include General Assembly authoritative interpretations, if any.

Further, there are already two sources of periodic commentary on constitutional topics. Under Standing Rule G.2.e. of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk issues advisory opinions on the meaning of particular provisions of the Book of Order. These opinions are found and indexed on the PC(USA) web site (http://oga.pcusa.org/section/mid-council-ministries/constitutional-services/advisory-opinions/). The Office of Constitutional Services offers comments on constitutional topics in Constitutional Musings. These are also found and indexed on the PC(USA) web site (http://oga.pcusa.org/section/mid-council-ministries/constitutional-services/constitutional-musings/).

In view of the existing electronic search capabilities for the GAPJC cases and Annotated Book of Order, an electronic digest of all adjudicated GAPJC cases seems unnecessary. However, as a compliment to the electronic subject matter search tools and the periodic commentary in the Advisory Opinions and Constitutional Musings, the OGA is developing an electronic digest (Topical Digest) of overarching or recurring, substantive or procedural topics, e.g., Governing Body Responsibility and Authority, Due Process in Disciplinary Cases, Ordination Issues. Gathered under each topic are selected GAPJC cases relevant to the topic, particularly cases where the GAPJC has taken the opportunity to provide significant background and rationale for the decision. By its nature, the Topical Digest can be expanded as new cases are adjudicated. An initial edition of the Topical Digest will be available on line and in disc format later this year.

VI. Looking Ahead

If this self-study is to be anything more than an idle exercise, the commission must seriously consider its findings. In six years the General Assembly Review Committee will want to know how this self-study affected the commission’s work. While in general it would appear that the GAPJC is functioning well, there is always room for improvement.

The self-study team, therefore, challenges itself and our colleagues:

… to honor God by making clear the significance of membership in the body of Christ; to preserve the purity of the church by nourishing the individual within the life of the believing community; to achieve justice and compassion for all participants involved; to correct or restrain wrongdoing in order to bring members to repentance and restoration; to uphold the dignity of those who have been harmed by disciplinary offenses; to restore the unity of the church by removing the causes of discord and division; and to secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings. … (D-1.0101).

And may the peace of Christ rule in our hearts.

General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission
Survey of Participants in Cases Closed During 2012

Summary
During summer 2012, Research Services emailed an invitation to complete a web survey to parties in cases the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) had closed in 2012, members of committees of counsel or others who represented parties in these cases, and stated clerks of presbyteries and synods in which these cases had originated. The survey was requested by the GAPJC Self-Study Committee to gather evaluative information on the commission’s services.

Those individuals who did not respond to the initial email invitation received up to three email reminders and, if the person still had not responded, a postcard reminder. [At the time the postcard reminder was sent, a mailed survey invitation that included a web address for taking the survey was sent to a synod stated clerk who didn’t have an email address provided.]

Among those invited to participate in the survey, 21 of 31 (67 percent) responded. More than one in three (38 percent) were attorneys or counsels for a party in a case, while slightly fewer (34 percent) were stated clerks of a synod or presbytery where a case originated. Fewer than two in ten report being either members of a committee of counsel (19 percent, synod stated clerks whose permanent judicial commission heard an appeal (15 percent), or parties in a case (10 percent). (Four respondents reported filling more than one of these roles.)

Two in ten respondents (20 percent) indicate that, once the GAPJC began to consider the cases in which they were involved, the commission conducted the cases “very promptly.” Nearly half (45 percent) said their case was conducted “promptly.” Three in ten report that their case was conducted less than promptly (“somewhat promptly,” 20 percent; “not promptly, 10 percent).

Nearly all respondents who communicated with the Office of the Stated Clerk while the GAPJC was considering their case believe the office was “very helpful” (33 percent) or “helpful” (58 percent) in communications with them.

Large majorities believe that:
06 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRIES

- The GAPJC treated parties in their case “very fairly” (70 percent) or “somewhat fairly” (20 percent).
- The Office of the Stated Clerk staff informed them about the GAPJC’s decision in the case “very promptly” (68 percent) or “promptly” (11 percent). (This question was asked only of respondents who remember how they were informed about the GAPJC’s decision.)

Additional information is found in the Survey Questions and Responses section of this report, which includes respondents’ verbatim answers to open-ended comments (edited for confidentiality).

Q8. Please use the space below to provide more details about any of your responses or to make additional comments. Verbatim response
The GAPJC was hostile; did not listen; used the [deleted] excuse to get rid of the case; did not [deleted]. The GAPJC is made up of mostly Clerks who back each other up even when wrong. Horrible reflection of the church and our confessions.

I really appreciate getting the decision electronically so that I may include it in our presbytery packet and minutes without having to do duplicate work to type or scan it.

The case was [deleted]. The appellant was party in [deleted] Presbytery and [deleted] was by time of trial a member of [deleted]. I assume the formal decision was sent (properly) to the stated clerk of [deleted] Presbytery. [deleted] share with me...did not come from GAPJC

I was not happy that a member of the GAPJC, who had served as [deleted] in a previous case against another [deleted], was assigned the lead in questioning and writing our case. The previous case involved a test of his interpretation of the BOO. I do not know that it made a difference, but it was obvious from his first question, that he would [deleted].

I like the time of worship together and look forward to it.

I don’t like the cost saving measures imposed on the church’s justice system. This is too important to both sides in every case. Your questions don’t dig deep enough to unmask the deep concerns. Most of us have in dealing with the GAPJC, but they do address the surface. As asked, I doubt you will get much criticism and a fully developed critique of the court.

I attended the hearing on the advice of an experienced colleague, though the GA staff had not recommended coming. I am glad I went and found it instructive to see the way the questioning went and the specifics of what was asked. The parties appreciated my presence on behalf of the Synod as well. It would have been helpful if the staff had let me know these advantages to coming as well as the fact that it’s not necessary to be present. I was impressed by how the matter was handled and the way in which the GAPJC conducted itself.

In a perhaps excessive attempt to give weight to all parties’ claims, the GAPJC answered all issues in the appeal it received, but [deleted]. Although [deleted], this further step led to an [deleted]-month process once the GAPJC had [deleted].

I was having trouble [deleted], and appreciate the assistance of staff in this regard.

Arrival Statement

These remedial cases come before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on appeal GA2011-109 filed by Appellant/Appellee Thomas Priest, Jr. (Appellant), on appeal GA2011-110 filed by Appellee/Appellant Presbytery of Detroit (Presbytery or Appellee), both from a Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant (SPJC) rendered on November 15, 2011, and on a challenge to the Executive Committee of this Commission (GAPJC EC), rendered January 31, 2012. For the purpose of judicial economy, the two appeals and the challenge are herein combined.

Jurisdictional Statement

As appeals from the decision of a synod permanent judicial commission, Remedial Cases GA2011-109 and GA2011-110 are properly before the GAPJC, were timely filed, and raise one or more of the grounds for appeal contained in D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellant appeared in person and was represented by Archibald Wallace III. Appellee appeared through its counsel, Mark Schneider.

History

Appellant was a candidate for ministry under the care of Presbytery, as well as a member of Calvary Presbyterian Church (Calvary). On April 20, 2010, an individual sent a letter addressed to the Committee on Preparation for Ministry (CPM) complaining about Appellant’s conduct. The Stated Clerk of the Presbytery was sent a copy of the letter. The Stated Clerk notified the author of the letter that CPM does not have disciplinary jurisdiction over Appellant. On April 21, 2010, the author sent the same or a similar letter to Calvary’s session. After an investigation, Calvary’s session determined that no charges should be brought against Appellant.

After receiving the letter, CPM appointed a sub-committee to investigate the grievances in its role of determining Appellant’s fitness for ministry. The sub-committee conducted interviews and collected related information. On January 18, 2011, the sub-committee recommended to the full CPM that Appellant participate in mediation training and assessment.

A hearing was scheduled for the purpose of determining whether the CPM would accept the recommendations of the sub-committee. The hearing was originally scheduled for February 1, 2011, but was rescheduled for March 1, 2011, at the request of Appellant so that he could have counsel present. At the close of the hearing, CPM voted to accept the recommendations of the sub-committee. CPM advised Appellant of the decision.

On June 9, 2011, Appellant filed a complaint with SPJC. On August 19, 2011, the Executive Committee of the SPJC (SPJC EC) found: Appellant did not have standing, the complaint did not state a claim upon which relief could be granted, the complaint was untimely, and SPJC did not have jurisdiction over the matter. Appellant challenged the decision of SPJC EC.

On October 4, 2011, CPM met with Appellant and approved him as ready to pursue a call.

On November 15, 2011, SPJC overruled SPJC EC and found that Appellant did have standing, but affirmed SPJC EC’s dismissal based on a lack of timeliness, lack of jurisdiction, and failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. On December 19, 2011, Appellant appealed SPJC’s decision on timeliness, jurisdiction, and failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. On December 21, 2011, Presbytery appealed SPJC’s decision on standing.

On January 31, 2012, the GAPJC EC found that Appellant did not have standing to file the original complaint and dismissed the complaint. On February 29, 2012, Appellant challenged the decision of the GAPJC EC. Therefore, all four preliminary questions are before this Commission.

Specifications of Error

There are four specifications of error raised by the appeal, cross-appeal, and the challenge.

1. SPJC erred in finding there was no jurisdiction to hear the complaint (GA2011-109).

   This specification is not sustained. See the Decision below.

2. SPJC erred in finding the complaint was not timely filed (GA2011-109).

   This specification is not sustained. See the Decision below.

3. SPJC erred in finding the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted (GA2011-109).

   This specification is not sustained. See the Decision below.
4. SPJC erred in finding that complainant had standing to file the case (GA2011-110).

This specification is not sustained. See the Decision below.

Decision

Jurisdiction: Since this is a remedial case alleging an irregularity by a presbytery, the complainant must show that the presbytery acted and that the action taken was irregular. Appellant argued that the action taken by CPM constituted a final act of Presbytery. This argument lacks merit. The only action taken was that of CPM, which is not a governing body (D-2.0102).

Even if the facts alleged in the complaint are true, at most the action by CPM was made in the course of its responsibilities to guide the complainant as he prepared for ordained ministry pursuant to then applicable G-14.0405 and G-14.0412. Having decided that CPM was not acting as Presbytery and is not a governing body, there was no basis for the exercise of authority through the judicial process. The party complained of, Presbytery, took no action.

Timeliness: Presbytery did not act and, hence, there was no triggering event for timeliness. See D-6.0202a.

Relief: CPM directed Appellant to take additional steps to prepare himself for ministry, which CPM has the authority to do. [2006, PJC 217-1, Hope v. Presbytery of San Francisco] Since Presbytery as a governing body never acted, there is no basis for relief.

Standing: This Commission finds that Appellant had standing to file a remedial case with SPJC. However, since the other three preliminary questions have been answered in the negative, the issue of standing is immaterial.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the decision on the preliminary questions by the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant is affirmed and its dismissal of the case is affirmed. Consequently, the dismissal of the case by the Executive Committee of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission is also affirmed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Covenant report this Decision to the Synod of the Covenant at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Covenant enter the full Decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Detroit report this Decision to the Presbytery of Detroit at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Detroit enter the full Decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

b. Disciplinary Appeal 221-02

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the Presbytery of Newark Appellant (Complainant),

v.

Laurie McNeill,

Appellee (Accused).

Arrival Statement

This disciplinary case came before General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on an appeal filed by Appellant, Presbytery of Newark (Presbytery or Appellant), from a Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast (SPJC) dated December 9, 2011.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, Appellant has standing to file the Appeal, the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal in D-13.0106 of the Book of Order.

Appearances

Presbytery was present through a member of the appointed Prosecuting Committee, Patricia B. Fish, and was represented by Whitman H. Brisky. Laurie McNeill (McNeill or Appellee) was present and was represented by Mark A. Robertson and Todd R. Hambidge.
On October 17, 2009, McNeill, a minister of the Word and Sacrament, Pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church in Montclair, New Jersey, of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ((PC(USA)), and member of Presbytery, was married under the state law of Massachusetts to Ms. Lisa Lynn Gollihue. The ceremony took place at Christ Episcopal Church in Harwich Port, Massachusetts, and was officiated by a minister of the United Church of Christ and two priests of the Episcopal Church, according to a modified marriage rite from the Book of Common Prayer of the Episcopal Church.

On November 14, 2009, their marriage was publicly announced at a regular meeting of Presbytery, preceded by articles in the public and religious press. Subsequent to that meeting, Presbytery stated clerk received a written statement that alleged specific offenses made by McNeill.

On February 5, 2010, Presbytery called a special meeting for the purpose of establishing an Investigating Committee (IC). The special meeting took place on February 16, 2010, and an IC composed of five persons (four ruling elders and one teaching elder) was elected.

On September 21, 2010, the IC filed the following two charges against McNeill:

Charge 1: You, Laurie McNeill, on or about October 17, 2009, did commit the offense of participating in a same-sex ceremony, in which two women, namely yourself and Lisa Lynn Gollihue, were married under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in violation of W-4.9001 of the Book of Order, and thereafter representing to your then congregation and others that such ceremony was a “marriage” all in violation of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Charge 2: You, Laurie McNeill, during the period beginning at least as early as October 17, 2009 and continuing until the date hereof, did commit the offense of being involved in a relationship described as a “happy marriage” with Lisa Lynn Gollihue, a person of the same sex as yourself, in violation of G-6.0106(b) of the Book of Order, in failing to live a life either in fidelity in marriage between a man and a woman [sic] or chastity in singleness, all in violation of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Following a trial on January 29, 2011, the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Presbytery of Newark (PPJC) issued its Decision and Order finding McNeill not guilty on all charges. Appellant filed a Notice of Appeal with SPJC on March 22, 2011, citing multiple errors of constitutional interpretation by the PPJC. On the same date, Appellant filed a request that the SPJC issue a stay that would bar McNeill from a transfer of her membership from Presbytery to the Presbytery of Hudson River. In the absence of the required three signatures of the SPJC in the allotted time period, the stay request was denied.

On April 6, 2011, the Executive Committee of SPJC determined that all preliminary questions were satisfied and, after challenges and rescheduling, a hearing was set for December 9, 2011, in Latham, New York. Following this appeal hearing, SPJC affirmed the Decision and Order of PPJC.

The Notice of Appeal of Appellant was submitted to this Commission on January 25, 2012.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred in determining that W-4.9001 of the Book of Order does not prohibit someone who is a minister of the Word and Sacrament (now a teaching elder) to be the subject of a marriage ceremony, that, while legally recognized by the state in which it took place, was not a contract, covenant, and commitment between a woman and a man, in accordance with Scripture and Confessions. (Appellant’s Specifications of Error 5, 8, 9, 10, 26, 28)

This specification of error is not sustained.

See Discussion under Specification of Error No. 2.

Specification of Error No. 2: The SPJC erred in determining that the Constitution of the PC(USA) does not regulate the conduct of ordained officers of the PC(USA) in services conducted outside the auspices of the PC(USA). (Appellant’s Specifications of Error 6, 29)

This specification of error is not sustained.

The Directory for Worship “... sets standards and presents norms for the conduct of worship in the life of congregations and governing bodies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” In this case the service of worship did not occur in a PC(USA) church nor was it conducted under the auspices of the PC(USA); therefore, the Directory for Worship does not apply. The Constitution is silent regarding the marriage of an officer of the PCUSA in civil marriage ceremonies. Further, Scripture and Confessions were not argued as part of the trial record and, therefore, could not be considered on appeal.
Specification of Error No. 3: The SPJC erred in determining that it is not an offense against the Constitution of the PC(USA) for someone who is a minister of the Word and Sacrament (now a teaching elder) to describe a lawful same-gender marriage as a marriage. (Appellant’s Specifications of Error 5, 7, 27)

This specification of error is not sustained.

The stipulated facts from the record reflect that, although Appellee did describe herself as married, she made it clear that the PC(USA) did not recognize her marriage.

Specification of Error No. 4: The SPJC erred in determining that it is not an offense against the Constitution of the PC(USA) for a minister of the Word and Sacrament (now a teaching elder) to conduct a marriage ceremony, that, while legally recognized by the state in which it took place, was not a contract, covenant, and commitment between a woman and a man. (Appellant’s Specification of Error 2)

This specification of error is not sustained.

There is no evidence in the record that a PC(USA) minister conducted a same-gender ceremony under the facts of this case. In fact, the parties stipulated that “No Presbyterian minister of Word and Sacrament officiated in any part of the marriage ceremony.”

Specification of Error No. 5: The SPJC erred in determining that it was not clear in what circumstance or to whom G-6.0106b applied and that G-6.0106b was only applicable in the context of an examination and, therefore, could not be enforced in a disciplinary process. (Appellant’s Specification of Error 17)

This specification of error is not sustained.

See Discussion under Specification of Error No. 6.

Specification of Error No. 6: The SPJC erred in determining that the evidence presented and stipulated to was insufficient to determine that the accused was in violation of G-6.0106b. (Appellant’s Specifications of Error 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 30)

This specification of error is not sustained.

The record does not reflect that the PPJC’s Decision was “plainly wrong or manifestly unjust” (GAPJC 218-06, Presbytery of Wyoming v. Gordon King) in determining that the evidence did not support a finding beyond a reasonable doubt that McNeill committed an offense.

Specification of Error No. 7: The SPJC erred in failing to interpret G-6.0106b and W-4.9001 in light of Scripture and Confessions. (Appellant’s Specifications of Error 20, 24, 27, 30, 31, 32)

This specification of error is not sustained.

See Discussion under Specification of Error No. 9.

Specification of Error No. 8: The SPJC erred in determining that there was no specific reference to Scripture or Confessions in the record. (Appellant’s Specification of Error 22)

This specification of error is not sustained.

See Discussion under Specification of Error No. 9.

Specification of Error No. 9: The SPJC erred in determining that, by failing to offer evidence of specific references to Scripture and Confessions at trial, Appellant waived such arguments. (Appellant’s Specifications of Error 21, 23, 25)

This specification of error is not sustained.

Appellant charged Appellee for violating two specific provisions of the Book of Order. In the trial before PPJC, Appellants neither argued nor presented evidence of violations of Scripture or Confessions. An appellate body cannot find that a trial court erred by not considering argument or evidence when neither the argument nor the evidence was presented to the trial court. Further, it is impermissible for an appellate body to consider new arguments and evidence on appeal, except on application as set out in D-14.0502. No such application was made in this case. By not arguing or presenting evidence of violations of Scripture or Confessions at the trial level, Appellant waived making such arguments and presenting such evidence on appeal.

Specification of Error No. 10: The SPJC erred in determining that a violation of the Constitution must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, based on the facts, to support a finding of an offense. (Appellant’s Specification of Error 1)
This specification of error is not sustained.

See Discussion under Specification of Error No. 11.

Specification of Error No. 11: The SPJC erred in determining that the facts as stipulated did not prove beyond a reasonable doubt the commission of an act or omission by an officer of the church that is contrary to the Scriptures or the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). (Appellant’s Specifications of Error 3, 4, 11, 16, 18)

This specification of error is not sustained.

D-11.0401 states that “The accused in a disciplinary case is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and unless guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt, the accused is entitled to be found not guilty.” Further, “Factual determinations made by a trier of fact are accorded a presumption of correctness. These determinations are not to be disturbed on appeal unless they are ‘plainly wrong, without supporting evidence or manifestly unjust.’” King, Disc. Case 218-06, p. 312 (GA PJC 2007) (quoting Chesterbrook Taiwanese Presbyterian Church v. National Capital Presbytery, Minutes, 2006, p. 493, and Hardwick v. Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of North Carolina, Minutes, 1983, p. 45).

Decision

This case illustrates the tortuous place in which the PC(USA) finds itself on the matter of same-gender marriage. Previous cases, which dealt with teaching elders officiating at such services, state that unions between same-gender couples, whether legally recognized or not, cannot be declared to be marriages under the current interpretation of W-4.9001. Our Constitution, specifically this section of the Directory for Worship, did not anticipate the range of issues facing the church today surrounding same-gender relationships. In light of the number of cases coming before this Commission and the convoluted grounds upon which cases are brought and decided, it would be beneficial for the church to provide a definitive position regarding participation of officers in same-gender ceremonies whether civil or religious.

Charges in this case were filed solely under W-4.9001 and G-6.0106b. Based on the charges filed, the record does not reflect that PPJC’s Decision was “plainly wrong, without supporting evidence or manifestly unjust.” (King). The facts of this case do not support disciplinary action under these provisions of the Book of Order. Nothing in this decision modifies standards and norms of the church’s understanding of marriage.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast is hereby sustained.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Newark report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Concurring Opinion of Michael Lukens, Meta Cramer and Terry Epling

We concur with the majority in this Decision.

Within a strong affirmation of the majority opinion, it must, nonetheless, be asserted once again that the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) needs to respond to the urgent need for definitive legislation on issues regarding marriage. For too long, this Commission has been burdened across a large range of conflicts with argumentation based on oblique, obfuscating, and indirect citations rather than clear directive, which is frustrating to the Commission as it seeks to promote the peace, unity and purity of the church and confusing to the whole church. This range encompasses the Reformed theological understanding of the nature of marriage, the authority and boundaries of teaching elders in conducting and participating in marriage ceremonies within the life of the church and in secular life, and the framing bases in Scripture and Confessions for assessing pastoral accountability.

Given the enormous cost for the spiritual health of the church, the strife that tears at the unity of the church, and the excessive expenditure of limited resources in the adjudication of a continuing stream of cases, it is critical that the General Assembly exercise its responsibility to deal definitively with these questions.
We concur with the majority decision. However, the lack of action by the General Assembly on the definition of marriage, while frustrating, is not the point of this case.

There was no evidence of sexual activity here. Appellee entered into her civil marriage on October 17, 2009, when former G-6.0106b was in effect. Since PPJC refused to presume sexual activity, there was no evidence that G-6.0106b had been violated. While it is tempting to assume that “happily married” persons are engaging in sexual activity, it would be inappropriate to reach a guilty verdict exclusively on a presumption. See Wier v. Second Presbyterian Church, Minutes, 2002. Defendants in disciplinary cases are presumed innocent until proven guilty (D-11.0401), and have a right to remain silent. (D-10.0203c). If a rebuttable presumption of sexual activity were allowed, a defendant would have to waive the right to remain silent in order to rebut the presumption. The PPJC verdict was therefore supported by the evidence and was properly sustained by SPJC.

Concurring Opinion of Meta Cramer

We concur totally with the Decision in this case and support all the arguments provided. Clearly the Directory for Worship does not reach to services of worship held outside of Presbyterian Churches without absurd consequences. For example, some faithful Presbyterians choose to be married in a civil ceremony only, or under the auspices of a church which may define marriage in a slightly different way. Presbyterians may worship in churches that do not share our theology of the Word or the sacraments without being accused of an offense.

However, “the Directory for Worship reflects the conviction that the life of the church is one, and that its worship, witness, and service are inseparable. .... [I]t describes the theology that underlies Reformed worship.” (Preface, Directory for Worship) Here is suggested an integrity of theology, worship, and life.

It is troubling that the Appellee in this case, by virtue of being a subject in a marriage ceremony held in a church over which the Directory for Worship has no jurisdiction, succeeded in doing for herself what she would be unable (under Spahr and Southard) to do for others, i.e., enter into a marriage that, while not recognized by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), is legally recognized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

This Commission is bound by the charges brought by the Complainants/Appellants. Therefore, this case is limited to considering the application of W-4.9001 and G-6.106b. The Commission was restricted to these particular matters of polity and could consider neither Scriptural and Confessional arguments nor standards of pastoral accountability rooted in the Constitutional questions for ordination. It is conceivable that, had the charges referenced Scripture and/or Confessions or the ordination question concerning the peace, unity, and purity of the church, the argument and outcome of this case may have been different.

Dissent of Flor Vélez-Díaz and Robin Roberts

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is, and has been for quite some time, conflicted with respect to the topic of marriage. There is great appreciation for the faithfulness, respect and love that all Presbyterians share for the Word of God; however they may interpret it. There is equal concern for the peace and future of our church, mission and witness, when faced with difficult cases such as this one. A great deal of the issues presented in this case, creates a struggle within our soul.

First of all, it would make sense to presume that married people do engage in sexual acts with one another. All presumptions are rebuttable with evidence to the contrary, but in the context of a disciplinary case, it cannot be expected that such evidence would be provided given that the person alleged against has the right to remain silent. (D-10.0203c)

Second, the argument that the Directory for Worship, which is an integral part of our Book of Order, does not provide grounds for which to regulate the conduct of our officers outside the context of worship, is also troublesome given that “This Directory for Worship reflects the conviction that the life of the Church is one, and that its worship, witness and service are inseparable.” (Preface). It also states in Section W-1.1005 that “a Christian’s personal response to God is in community” and that “the Christian community worships and serves God in shared experiences of life, in personal discipleship, in mutual ministry, and in common ministry in the world.” How can any officer of the church, or any member for that matter, separate his or her life as being within the church in part, and outside the church in part, or as was argued in this case, single in the eyes of the church and married in the eyes of the state? Our life as Christians is integrally a part of the church, or as stated in W-1.1005, “A Christian’s personal response to God is in community.”

Third of all, although the controversial G-6.0106b provision in our Book of Order is no longer in place, it was when the charges were brought in this case. It is perfectly understandable that not all Presbyterians can agree with all aspects of our Constitution and that there is, and must be, freedom of conscience within our community to foster discussion and growth within its members. By the same token, all officers and members of the PC(USA) have willingly agreed to uphold the Constitution of the PC(USA) as a manifestation of order based in Scripture. Any and all differences and objections that we may have with the expressions within that document must be channeled in such a way as to continue fostering upholding it. Efforts to amend the Constitution should be made in a way that builds the body of Christ as a whole. There is concern that the divisions within the church which have brought about cases like this one, might not encourage conversation within the church, more likely, bring about division of the body of Christ.

Christians have a responsibility, in fact a duty, to our brothers and sisters in Christ, to promote the peace, unity and purity of the church. This responsibility is a two way street and is better achieved by dialogue than by litigation.

Although we cannot agree with the outcome of the case, we are convinced of the integrity of all the members of this Commission and of the faithful and prayerful consideration that was given to this matter in reaching the decision.

May Christ be with us always.

Certificate

We certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Disciplinary Case 221-02, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the Presbytery of Newark, Appellant (Complainant) v. Laurie McNeill, Appellee (Accused) made and announced at Louisville, KY this 29th day of October 2012.

c. Remedial Case 221-03

Wilber Tom, David Hawbecker and Thomas Conrad ) Appellants (Complainants), )
v. ) Presbytery of San Francisco, ) Appellee (Respondent). )

Arrival Statement

This filing before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is an appeal of a Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific (SPJC) rendered on March 23, 2012. The Notice of Appeal was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on May 10, 2012.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Appellants have standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Wilbert Tom, David Hawbecker, and Thomas Conrad (Appellants), were represented by JoAn Blackstone. Presbytery of San Francisco (Presbytery or Appellee) waived its appearance at the hearing and chose to rely on its written submissions.

History

Presbytery formed a workgroup on December 11, 2008, to develop a policy regarding any church located in the Presbytery that wished to be dismissed from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)). Scott Farmer (Farmer), Senior Pastor, Community Presbyterian Church of Danville (Danville) served on that workgroup. While the exact date is unknown, it is not disputed that Danville had begun discussions regarding the dissolution of their relationship with the PC(USA) at the time of Farmer’s selection to the policy workgroup.

Presbytery, at its September 15, 2009, stated meeting, adopted what was known as the “Gracious Dismissal Policy” (GDP) as a result of the recommendation of the policy workgroup. While the GDP acknowledged Book of Order G-8.0201 (now G-4.0203) (the Trust Clause) that provides all property held by or for a congregation “is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” the GDP interpreted the Trust Clause “to reflect the church’s organic unity as it fulfills ‘The Great Ends of the Church,’ strengthening its ability to guide its member churches into their witness to the broader community.” The GDP found that it was “the right of a congregation to seek and request dismissal with its property to another reformed denomination.” The GDP also set forth that the Trust Clause was not to be used as a weapon to threaten civil action against a congregation over issues of conscience.

To mitigate financial impact on mission and ministry of Presbytery, the GDP requested the congregation seeking dismissal to pay Presbytery annually for five years: (1) funds to offset declining per capita and (2) funds to offset a declining contribution to the mission budget. The GDP did not mention payment of any other funds to Presbytery, such as payment for the value of the congregation’s real property and other assets.

Five months after the adoption of the GDP by Presbytery, the session of Danville, of which Farmer was moderator, notified Presbytery in February 2010 of its intention to seek dismissal to the Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC). Pursuant to the GDP, a Presbytery Engagement Team (PET) was appointed by Presbytery during its stated meeting on April 13, 2010, to work with the session and congregation of Danville to effect reconciliation, if possible, or to negotiate the terms of the dismissal. Also pursuant to the terms of the GDP, Danville formed a Special Committee of the Congregation (SCC), on which Farmer participated, to negotiate with PET. During a called congregational meeting on September 12, 2010, Danville voted to seek dismissal from the PC(USA) pursuant to the terms negotiated by PET and SCC. The terms of the negotiation were subject to approval by Presbytery.

According to the testimony of members of PET, the GDP did not include a requirement to consider the value of the congregational property for the use and benefit of the PC(USA). Under the terms of the final agreement reached with PET, Danville agreed to make a lump sum payment of $108,640 to Presbytery to compensate for declining per capita. Additionally, Danville agreed to pay $42,000 per year for five years to support targeted PC(USA) ministries, missions and ministers. No other monies were contemplated or discussed by PET with SCC.

At its November 9, 2010, stated meeting, Presbytery conditionally approved the terms of the dismissal as set forth by PET and SCC. The resolution provides:

“The effective date of [Danville’s] dismissal will be November 10, 2010. If there is no stay or filing of a complaint during a 90-day waiting period, consistent with the interval identified in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Book of Order for the filing of stays and complaints, full implementation will occur on February 9, 2011.

At that same meeting, Presbytery voted to suspend the GDP. Subsequently, Presbytery adopted a new GDP which is not relevant to this appeal.

On February 2, 2011, within the 90-day time frame approved by Presbytery, Appellants filed a remedial complaint against Presbytery with the SPJC. On June 4, 2011, SPJC answered all the preliminary questions affirmatively under D-8.0105. An amended complaint was filed on October 14, 2011.

Trial was held on March 22, 2012. At the beginning of the trial, Appellants moved to disqualify a commissioner pursuant to D-7.0401b(2), alleging that the commissioner was predisposed to rule against Appellants as evidenced by the “tenor of his comments” set forth in an October 6, 2011, email. The motion was denied by SPJC.

During the trial a number of documents were offered for inclusion in the record. These documents included the PC(USA)’s Amicus Curiae Brief before the California Supreme Court and the Annual Statistical Report of Danville which had been sent to the Stated Clerk of Presbytery. The moderator sustained Presbytery’s objections to the admission of these documents. The Appellants objected to the admission of other documentary evidence, including an email from a PET member summarizing her conversation with a representative of the Department of Constitutional Services within the Office of the Stated Clerk. Appellants’ objections were overruled.

Additionally, while questioning a witness, a commissioner stated, “The agreement that you struck between the Presbytery and CPC Danville, my home church, also referred to as CPC, so Central, however, has several points in it with sub points.” Neither party made an objection regarding disqualification of this commissioner at that time for any possible conflict of interest, if the commissioner meant by his comment that Danville was his “home church.”

On March 23, 2012, SPJC ordered that the action of Presbytery on November 9, 2010, dismissing Danville pursuant to the terms of the agreement, be affirmed.

On May 7, 2012, Appellants mailed their Notice of Appeal to the GAPJC and all other appropriate recipients. During the Presbytery stated meeting on May 8, 2012, the PET reported that the new implementation date of the agreement would fall between May 21 and May 26, 2012. Appellants believe that PET, at this stated meeting, was aware of the Notice of Appeal to the GAPJC.

On May 18, 2012, the GAPJC issued its preliminary order finding that it had jurisdiction, that the Appellants had standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal stated one or more of the grounds for appeal under D-8.0105. Notice of such GAPJC decision accepting the Appeal was timely mailed to the parties. On May 21, 2012, Presbytery executed quitclaim deeds to Danville and Danville paid the per capita and mission funds pursuant to the agreement.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 1) The proceedings of the Synod Permanent Judicial Commission (SPJC) were irregular, in that the decision is inconsistent with substantial evidence from the testimony of witnesses at the trial, that in determining the terms of its dismissal of a large suburban church the Presbytery of San Francisco (Presbytery) failed to consider or to understand the meaning of the property trust clause (G-4.0202, formerly G-8.0201) or that the church property in question was in fact unequivocally owned by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A).

This Specification of Error is sustained.

See the rationale below Specification of Error 7.

Specification of Error No. 2: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 10) The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation, in that it failed to apprehend or give effect to the plain meaning of the language of the express trust now at G-4.0203 (formerly G-8.0201) in the context of a church seeking dismissal, that all property held by a congregation “is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).”

This Specification of Error is sustained.

See the rationale below Specification of Error 7.

Specification of Error No. 3: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 11) The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation, in that it failed to consider or give effect to a relevant Authoritative Interpretation (AI) of the Book of Order (Request 9-88), an answer provided by the General Assembly of 1988 on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) which, in the context of a presbytery’s response to a church seeking dismissal, interprets the property trust clause to require proper consideration to be given to the interests of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as provided in Chapter VIII. This AI goes on to say, “in particular, G-8.0201 recognizes the principle that all property for or by a particular church is held in trust for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Thus the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a party in interest when a presbytery takes action with respect to a request to dismiss a church with its property.”

This Specification of Error is sustained.

See the rationale below Specification of Error No. 7.

Specification of Error No. 4: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 12) The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation, in that it failed to consider or give effect to a subsequent AI of the property trust clause, in an answer provided by the General Assembly in 1989 on the recommendation of the ACC: “When dealing with a request by a church for dismissal with its property pursuant to G-11.0103i and G-11.0103y, the presbytery is responsible for exercising the express trust provisions of G-8.0201 recognizing and protecting the interests of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Separate consideration should be given to the questions of dismissing the congregation, the disposal of property, and the relationships of ministers of Word and Sacrament. Each request for dismissal should be considered in the light of the particular situation and circumstances involved.”

This Specification of Error is sustained.

See the rationale below Specification of Error No. 7.

Specification of Error No. 5: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 13) The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation, in that it disregarded testimony of members of the Presbytery’s PET who had negotiated the terms of dismissal of the CPCD and whose recommendation the Presbytery had adopted. This testimony demonstrated, among other things, a consistent failure to understand the meaning of the property trust clause as expressed in the Book of Order, a failure to have read or considered relevant Authoritative Interpretations of the Constitution, an apparent failure to understand that the PC(USA) owned the church property, a failure to grasp the fact that a transfer of the real property without consideration amounted to a gift, an exclusive reliance on the Presbytery’s previously approved dismissal policy as understood by members of the PET, a failure to understand how to apply the trust clause other than in the context of specific process steps in the policy, and a belief that the policy precluded even having a discussion about having the church property remain in the hands of the denomination or asking for any payment for the property upon its transfer.

This Specification of Error is sustained.

See the rationale below Specification of Error No. 7.

Specification of Error No. 6: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 14) The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation, in that it upheld the Presbytery’s action as being within its discretion as trustee of the church property, based on Presbytery’s contention that the transfer of the property without consideration would serve “the Great Ends of the Church” and further the “total ministry and witness for Christ,” thus making any further recognition of the property trust unnecessary or inappropriate.

This Specification of Error is sustained.
See the rationale below Specification of Error No. 7.

Specification of Error No. 7: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 15) The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation, in that its decision would indicate that a presbytery has unfettered discretion with respect to church property being used by a congregation seeking dismissal to another Reformed denomination, while the Book of Order places the fiduciary and related responsibilities of a trustee of the property on the presbytery.

This Specification of Error is sustained.

Presbytery voted to approve the transfer of the valuable Danville property unless a complaint or stay was filed within 90 days. A complaint was so filed. Following the ruling by SPJC, a new implementation date for the agreement was set. In the interim, an appeal was filed to this Commission and accepted with a preliminary order being entered May 18, 2012. Nevertheless, on May 21, 2012, Presbytery executed a quitclaim deed to Danville before this Commission was able to conduct the hearing on this appeal.

Presbytery, having transferred title while this case was pending, argued that the transfer of title renders the case moot because the quitclaim deed had been signed and could not be revoked.

Notwithstanding the transfer of title, in cases where circumstances prevent a remedy, this Commission may exercise its declaratory authority to provide guidance to lower councils and prevent future violations. Daniel J. McKittrick v. The Session of the West End Presbyterian Church (Remedial Case 215-5, 2003).

The Book of Order provides in G-8.0201 (now G-4.0203) that:

> All property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), whether legal title is lodged in a corporation, a trustee or trustees, or an unincorporated association, and whether the property is used in programs of a congregation or of a higher council or retained for the production of income, is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Under the Trust Clause, a presbytery’s discretionary authority to determine property rights, while broad, must be guided by the presbytery acting as a fiduciary for the benefit of the PC(USA), the beneficiary of the Trust Clause. A congregation’s financial and all other assets are also understood to be covered by the Trust Clause. Chesterbrook Taiwanese PC v. National Capital Presbytery, Remedial Case 217-12, 2006.

Under the fiduciary obligations inherent in the Trust Clause, a presbytery must take into consideration the PC(USA)’s use and benefit of the property in every decision concerning its disposition. To comply with the Trust Clause, the presbytery must consider the interest of PC(USA) as a beneficiary of the property. Payments for per capita or mission obligations are not satisfactory substitutes for valuations of the property held in trust. (G-4.0203)

The Trust Clause reflects our understanding of the church as a communion of saints across time, with responsibilities both to those who came before and those who will follow. When a congregation seeks to leave the PC(USA), it is breaking what is often a significant historic relationship; it is also departing from a fellowship in which its officers have participated, by whose polity they have pledged to be governed, and with which many members may feel bonds of affection.

Based on an examination of the record, this Commission finds that the GDP developed by Presbytery, its implementation, and SPJC in its trial decision, failed to duly consider the economic interests of the PC(USA). Such consideration is essential. SPJC’s exclusion of documents which were the most convincing evidence of the position of PC(USA) in regard to the Trust Clause and of the financial position of Danville, strongly supports the allegation of erroneous interpretation. Failure to consider the property value and the PC(USA)’s beneficial interest in the property was a fatal omission of the trustee’s duty to the PC(USA).

The justification given by Presbytery for dismissal of the Danville church with property, which included only “Great Ends of the Church” and avoidance of litigation, was erroneously upheld by SPJC. While certainly valid, such considerations alone are not sufficient to satisfy the due diligence requirement imposed by the Trust Clause. SPJC erred in finding that due consideration had been given to the interest of the PC(USA) as the trust beneficiary under the Constitution. Due diligence, of necessity, will include not only the spiritual needs of the congregation and its circumstances, but an examination of the congregation’s financial position and the value of the property at stake. It is undisputed that Presbytery failed to make such an examination. SPJC erred in failing to require that financial due diligence be undertaken by Presbytery.

Specification of Error No. 8: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 2) The proceedings of the SPJC were irregular, in that one of its commissioners made a comment, before a witness could answer a question, to the effect that the attorney-client privilege would preclude answering the question, and cast doubt on the witnesses’ ability to waive the privilege.

This Specification of Error is not sustained.
There was no error in having the question of attorney-client privilege raised by a commissioner. If the moderator was incorrect in finding that the witness could not waive the privilege, such ruling was harmless because ultimately the witness was allowed to testify concerning the information objected to.

Specification of Error No. 9: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 3) The proceedings of the SPJC were irregular, in that in questioning a witness one of its commissioners made reference to, and quoted, a provision of the Book of Order that was not in effect at the time of the disputed action (G-4.0201), thus providing misleading support for the Presbytery’s position.

This Specification of Error is not sustained.

References to provisions of the Book of Order are not evidence. They may be incorrect or untimely but they have no impact without a determination or decision being based on the provisions that are considered.

Specification of Error No. 10: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 4) The proceedings of the SPJC were irregular, in that one of its commissioners belatedly revealed, near the conclusion of the trial in which he had materially participated as described at 2. and 3., above and at other times during the proceedings, that the “Danville church” (the church that was to have been dismissed by the Presbytery under the disputed terms), was his home church. In addition, there is nothing from the record that would indicate other than the same commissioner’s full participation in the SPJC deliberations that followed the trial, despite the appearance of a significant conflict of interest.

This Specification of Error is not sustained.

Having reviewed the record, it is clear the commissioner was not referring to Danville as his home church. Support for this conclusion can be found in that there was no objection or question of conflict of interest raised by anyone after his statement.

Specification of Error No. 11: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 5) The SPJC erred in declining to receive as proper evidence the Amicus Curiae Brief of Clifton Kirkpatrick et al. in support of the position of the Episcopal Church before the Supreme Court of California in the Episcopal Church Cases. This brief sets forth the official legal position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with respect to church property as provided in the property trust clause in the Book of Order.

This Specification of Error is sustained.

Failure to receive the Amicus Curiae Brief into the record was an abuse of discretion in that it was a clear statement of the legal position of the PC(USA) as it related to the Trust Clause. Recognition of the legal position of the PC(USA) as the beneficiary under the Trust Clause is integral to any presbytery analysis concerning disposition of church property.

Specification of Error No. 12: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 6) The SPJC erred in declining to receive as proper evidence the Annual Statistical Report for the Community Presbyterian Church of Danville (CPCD), which was sent by its Clerk of Session to the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of San Francisco. Appellants believe this report provides useful information concerning the number of members and financial strength of CPCD, matters which the Presbytery failed to consider but should have considered in negotiating the terms of its dismissal.

This Specification of Error is sustained.

The failure to receive the report on Danville was an abuse of discretion because it provided relevant information which should have been considered as part of the dismissal.

Specification of Error No. 13: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 7) The SPJC erred in receiving as proper evidence a copy of an E-mail communication from a member of the Presbytery Engagement Team (PET), the ad hoc committee that was charged with negotiating the terms of dismissal with representatives of CPCD, to the other members of the PET, describing her telephone conversation with a third party, despite her testimony that there was no follow-up discussion of its contents on the part of the PET and hence no indication that the PET based its actions on that conversation or E-mail message.

This Specification of Error is not sustained.

There was no abuse of discretion by SPJC in receiving such evidence.

Specification of Error No. 14: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 8) The SPJC erred in receiving as proper evidence a copy of an E-mail communication from a member of the PET to the other members of the PET in which she related her understanding of the reasons for the CPCD Sessions’ desire to leave the PC(USA). At no time was any evidence testimony produced to suggest that the Presbytery’s terms of dismissal were influenced in any way by the matters discussed in that communication.

This Specification of Error is not sustained.

There was no abuse of discretion by SPJC receiving such evidence.
Specification of Error No. 15: (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 9) For the reasons stated at 10 (Appellants’ 4) and 14 (Appellants’ 8), above, there was a manifestation of prejudice in the conduct of the case.

This Specification of Error is not sustained.

This Commission did not sustain either Specifications of Error No. 10 or No. 14 (Appellants’ No. 4 and No. 8). Therefore, there was no manifestation of prejudice as a result of the conduct alleged in those Specifications of Error.

Decision

When the lower council’s actions cannot be undone, this Commission may exercise its declaratory authority to provide guidance to lower councils and to prevent future violations.

When a congregation seeks dismissal under G-11.0103i (now G-3.0301a), it is the responsibility of the presbytery to fulfill its fiduciary duty under the Trust Clause. This fiduciary duty requires that the presbytery exercise due diligence regarding the value of the property of the congregation seeking dismissal. Due diligence, of necessity, includes not only an evaluation of the spiritual needs of the congregation and its circumstances but also financial analysis of the value of the property at stake. Payments for per capita or mission obligations are not satisfactory substitutes for the separate evaluation of the value of the property held in trust.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Pacific Permanent Judicial Commission is affirmed in part and reversed in part as set forth above.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Pacific report this Decision to the Synod of the Pacific at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Pacific enter the full Decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of San Francisco report this Decision to the Presbytery of San Francisco at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of San Francisco enter the full Decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Concurring Opinion of H. Clifford Looney and Terry Epling

We concur in the majority decision.

We transfers of property remain within the discretion of Presbytery but the Presbytery must be mindful of the interest of the PC(USA) in maintaining the presence of the denomination to meet the needs of that affected Community including that portion of the church membership that wishes to remain within the PC(USA).

We also join in the majority’s conclusion that the language of the Gracious Dismissal Policy adopted by the Presbytery of San Francisco did not require adequate consideration of property retention issues. The needs of future congregations, the involved debt, the probability that a substantial number of dissenting members may be enabled to continue a PC(USA) congregation would compel retention of a property or equity facilitating those or similar interests are all matters to be considered to be involved in the Presbytery trustee’s decision. The Gracious Dismissal Policy did not require the PET to deal with those aspects of the dismissal decision.

However erroneous the omissions of the GDP, and the construction given by its PET, it may well have been within the discretion of the Presbytery to dismiss the Danville church with its property.

Many factors other than the attempt to be “gracious” with the Danville congregation may have been considered. Those include:

This Danville congregation acquired these assets and had been paying on them and had been successful in meeting the need of a Presbyterian witness for the Christian faith in this community for many years;

The church had tried development of other PC (USA) churches in the area without success;

Only 4% of the congregation voted against the dismissal decision;

The PET felt, apparently with substantial basis, that the needs of the community for Presbyterian witness to the faith would be met by this church as it was constituted, and that no plan for an additional church was presently feasible, so that there was no need to use any of the equities of the property interests of the church for that purpose; and that no resources of the denomination had been used in the form of loans, nor was there any remaining indebtedness which was not being assumed by the Danville church.

In short, there may have been no apparent reason to require retention by the PC (USA) of any property interest. With the evidence in that stature, the burden of proof that the Complainant would have to have met to show an abuse of discretion by the Presbytery would have been heavy.

The testimony of Lois Quick (record p. 262 & 286) indicates that the properties were encumbered by about three million dollars in debt that the Danville congregation agreed to pay in accepting the property. Rev. Kathy Runyeon indicates at page 174 of the record that the Presbytery had no competing plans for the property.

The facts here presented to the PET are not ones that suggest that there would be substantial benefit from retaining the property. What the Presbytery did in securing additional mission and per capita payments may or may not have been sufficient to “balance the books” in this particular scenario, but it was within their discretion once they exercised due diligence and considered all the factors inherently required by the fiduciary duty of a trustee.

v.

Presbytery of Los Ranchos, Respondent/Appellee.

Decision and Order

Remedial Case 221-04

Arrival Statement

This remedial case comes before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on appeal filed by Appellants, Gerald J. Larson, Gary L. Collins, Rebecca B. Prichard, R. Winston Presnall, Margery McIntosh, Michal Vaughn, Lucy Stafford-Lewis, Julie Richwine, Jerry Elliott, Sara McCurdy, Gregory Vacca, Gail Stearns, Steve Wirth, Suzanne Darweesh, Jane Parker, Darlene Elliott, Frances Bucklin, Deborah Mayhew, James McCurdy, Judith Anderson, and Susan Currie (Appellants), from a Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii (SPJC) rendered on May 4, 2012.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, Appellants have standing to appeal, the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and the Appeal states one or more grounds for appeal under Book of Order, D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellants were represented by Douglas A. Nave and Susan Currie. The Presbytery of Los Ranchos (Presbytery) was represented by Judy L. Woods, H. Neal Wells III, and Emily McColl.

History

On September 15, 2011, Presbytery adopted the following resolution by majority vote (the Resolution):

Moved: That the Presbytery of Los Ranchos adopt the following statement interpreting this presbytery’s understanding of certain behavioral expectations of members.
Affirming that ‘The gospel leads members to extend the fellowship of Christ to all persons.’ (G-1.0302) The Presbytery of Los Ranchos, meeting on September 15, 2011, affirms that the Bible, the Book of Confessions and the Book of Order (including G-2.0104b and G-2.0105 1 & 2) set forth the scriptural and constitutional standards for ordination and installation. Los Ranchos Presbytery believes the manner of life of ordained Ministers should be a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world, including living either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman or chastity in singleness and will so notify candidates for ordination/installation and/or membership in the presbytery. In obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture and guided by our confessions, this presbytery will prayerfully and pastorally examine each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of office, including a commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions of ordination and installation.

On October 14, 2011, twenty-one members of Presbytery filed a complaint with the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii (Synod), claiming the Resolution was irregular and requesting that Presbytery be ordered to rescind the Resolution. At the same time, Appellants filed with Synod a request for a stay of enforcement of the Resolution, which was granted by the SPJC on October 24, 2011.

The SPJC hearing was held on May 4, 2012, and a Decision and Order was entered which (i) lifted the Stay of Enforcement; (ii) ordered that “[t]he Presbytery of Los Ranchos may proceed as it sees fit to communicate its Resolution to current and future teaching elder members;” and (iii) further ordered that “the Presbytery of Los Ranchos be admonished that while this PJC considers the resolution constitutional, the use of specific language known to be divisive and inflammatory flies in the face of the responsibility to seek the peace, unity, and purity of the church.” (Record pg. 32)

A Notice of Appeal and a Request for Stay of Enforcement were filed by Appellants with the GAPJC on May 29, 2012. On June 1, 2012, the GAPJC accepted the appeal and on June 4, 2012, a Stay of Enforcement was granted pursuant to D-6.0103d.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1 (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 1): The SPJC failed to address the allegations stated in the Complaint.

This Specification is sustained.

While the SPJC erred in its consolidation of the allegations, such error did not preclude a full consideration of this case and was therefore harmless.

Specification of Error No. 2 (Appellants’ Specifications of Error Nos. 3, 4): The SPJC failed to acknowledge the plain meaning and inherent practical effect of the Resolution.

This Specification is sustained. See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 3 (Appellants’ Specifications of Error Nos. 2, 4a, 4b, 6, 7, 8): The SPJC failed to recognize and correct Los Ranchos’ improper restatement of the Constitution.

This Specification is sustained. See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 4 (Appellants’ Specifications of Error Nos. 9, 10, 10a): The SPJC erred in its interpretation and application of G-3.0102 and F-3.0209.

This Specification is sustained. See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 5 (Appellants’ Specifications of Error Nos. 4c-h, 10b): The SPJC erred by disregarding the constitutional guarantees of freedom of conscience and concomitant duty to show one another mutual forbearance.

This Specification is sustained. See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 6 (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 5): The SPJC failed to correct Appellee’s defiance of an established position of the church.

This specification is not sustained.

While there was overreaching, there was not deliberate defiance by Presbytery.

Decision

This Commission strongly affirms the right and obligation of an ordaining, installing, and enrolling council, in obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture, and guided by the Confessions, to prayerfully and pastorally examine each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of office on a case by case basis (G-2.0104b). This Commission further affirms that individual commissioners in assessing persons for ordination on a case by case basis have the freedom to vote their conscience. The mutual forbearance required by F-3.0105 does not preclude the beliefs expressed in the Resolution. Such forbearance is best demonstrated by making ordination, installation, and admission decisions on a case by case basis, after the candidate has been presented and has declared his or her beliefs and stated his or her motives personally and after the examining body has had full opportunity to judge the individual as well as abstract questions of doctrine. (See Swearingen Commission Report, Minutes, PCUSA, 1927, pp. 78–79.)

The issue before this Commission is whether the resolution adopted by Presbytery is an appropriate use of a presbytery’s authority in issuing statements that “bear testimony against error in doctrine and immorality in life, resolve questions of doctrine and discipline, give counsel in matters of conscience, and decide issues properly brought before them under the provisions of [the] Book of Order.” (G-3.0102)

This Decision is informed by Presbytery of West Jersey v. The Synod of the Northeast, Remedial Case 205-15, 1993). (West Jersey) In West Jersey, the Synod of the Northeast adopted two resolutions, one declaring itself to be a More Light Synod and the second urging the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to repent of its sin of homophobia and rescind the definitive guidance of 1978. This Commission determined that the Synod of the Northeast’s resolutions constituted an expression of opinion rather than compelling or directing any action. The present case is distinguishable from West Jersey, in that in West Jersey the resolutions were addressed, or understood to be addressed to the church as a whole, whereas the resolution in the present case is addressed, to “candidates for ordination/installation and/or membership in the presbytery.” Herein lies the difference.

This Commission determines, therefore, that by directing the notification specifically to those who would potentially seek admission into Presbytery, the Resolution would have the practical effect of discouraging those seeking ordination or membership prior to the required case by case evaluation or examination. In so doing, Presbytery exceeded its authority and duty to “bear testimony against error in doctrine and immorality in life, resolve questions of doctrine and discipline, give counsel in matters of conscience …” (G-3.0102) and its right and obligation to “nurture the covenant community of disciples of Christ … includ[ing] ordaining, receiving, dismissing, installing, removing, and disciplining its members who are teaching elders …” (G-3.0301c).

As in Randall Bush et al. v. The Presbytery of Pittsburgh (Remedial Case 218-10, 2008) and Barlow J. Buescher et al. v. The Presbytery of Olympia (Remedial Case 218-09, 2008), when Presbytery combined current Book of Order language from G–2.0104a with former Book of Order language G-6.0106b, it created at least a perception of an improper restatement of the Constitution. As this Commission stated in both Bush and Buescher, “[r]estatements of the Book of Order, in whatever form they are adopted, are themselves an obstruction to the same standard of constitutional governance no less than attempts to depart from mandatory provisions.”

This Commission declares that the Resolution as written is unconstitutional and, therefore, void.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii is reversed, and the Resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Los Ranchos is void.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii report this decision to the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii enter the full decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Los Ranchos report this decision to the Presbytery of Los Ranchos at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Los Ranchos enter the full decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Mary Charlotte McCall did not participate in the hearing or deliberations.

Winston Presnall, Margery McIntosh, Michal Vaughn, Lucy Stafford- Lewis, Julie Richwine, Jerry Elliott, Sara McCurdy, Gregory Vacca, Gail Stearns, Steve Wirth, Suzanne Darweesh, Jane Parker, Darlene Elliott, Frances Bucklin, Deborah Mayhew, James McCurdy, Judith Anderson, Susan Currie, Appellants (Complainants), v. Presbytery of Los Ranchos, Appellee (Respondent) made and announced at Louisville, KY this 29th day of October 2012.

Dated this 29th day of October, 2012.
Arrival Statement

These remedial cases come before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on appeals filed by Appellant, Session of First United Presbyterian Church of Tecumseh, Michigan (Appellant or Tecumseh). The appeals challenge Decisions of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant (SPJC) to dismiss SPJC Remedial Cases 2012-01 & 2012-02, rendered on July 17, 2012, for failing to meet all of the required Book of Order preliminary questions in D-6.0305 and from Appellant’s Challenge of the Preliminary Order of Dismissal issued by the Executive Committee of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC-EC) on July 17, 2012.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, the Appellant has standing to appeal, the appeals were properly and timely filed, and the appeals state one or more grounds for appeal under Book of Order D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellant was represented by Bruce A. McIntosh. Maumee Valley Presbytery. Respondent was represented by James A. Wilson, Marcy St. John, and James Friedmeyer.

History

In 2007, Presbytery adopted a “Process for Separation” (Dismissal Policy). In May of 2010, Tecumseh unanimously voted to call a congregational meeting to vote on whether to seek dismissal to the Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC). Pursuant to the Dismissal Policy, Tecumseh notified Presbytery’s Stated Clerk and a Pastoral Team was formed. On September 21, 2010, Presbytery dissolved the Pastoral Team and installed an Administrative Commission.

On October 10, 2010, Tecumseh held a congregational meeting at which the motion to seek dismissal to the EPC was approved.

On April 1, 2012, Tecumseh filed its first remedial complaint with SPJC (SPJC 2012-01 or GA2012-106). Among other specifications of error, Tecumseh alleged that Presbytery erred in failing to abide by its Dismissal Policy. On April 4, 2012, SPJC declined to grant a stay of enforcement.

On May 15, 2012, Presbytery voted that First United Presbyterian Church (First Church) was in schism. Presbytery voted to treat those wishing to remain within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as the “Foundation Group” and to direct Presbytery’s support to that group.

On May 23, 2012, Tecumseh filed a second remedial complaint (SPJC 2012-02 or GA2012-107), reiterating the first remedial complaint and adding an allegation that Presbytery erred in declaring First Church to be in schism and in dividing it without consultation with its members. On June 4, 2012, SPJC issued a stay. Presbytery objected and a hearing was held on June 28, 2012, at which SPJC voted to lift the stay subject to certain modifications. Tecumseh appealed this action to GAPJC and on July 17, 2012, GAPJC-EC rejected the appeal stating that only final decisions are subject to appeal. On August 10, 2012, Tecumseh filed a Challenge to GAPJC-EC’s Preliminary Order.

On July 17, 2012, SPJC dismissed both SPJC 2012-01 and SPJC 2012-02 on the grounds that both failed to “state a cause on which relief can be granted.” Tecumseh filed notice of appeal to GAPJC on both matters on July 31, 2012.

On August 3, 2012, GAPJC-EC accepted the appeals. On August 16, 2012, GAPJC-EC found Appellant had properly challenged the GAPJC-EC’s July 17, 2012, Preliminary Order that rulings prior to final decisions cannot be appealed.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: (Appellant’s Specification of Error #1, GA2012-106; Appellant’s Specification of Error #1 and #7, GA2012-107). SPJC erred in dismissing SPJC Cases 2012-01 and 2012-02 for failing to state a claim upon which relief could be granted by refusing Appellant a reasonable opportunity to be heard or to obtain or present evidence (D-8.0105b), hastening to a decision before the evidence or testimony is fully received (D-8.0105d), causing an injustice in the process or decision (D-8.0105f), and erroneous constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g).

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 2: (Appellant’s Specification of Error #2, GA2012-107). SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g) in both terminating and modifying the terms of the stay issued in SPJC Case 2012-02.

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 3: (Appellant’s Specification of Error #3, GA2012-107). SPJC’s decision to lift the stay issued in SPJC Case 2012-02 resulted in an unjust decision (D-8.0105f).

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 4: (Appellant’s Specification of Error #4, GA2012-107). SPJC erred by receiving improper evidence (D-8.0105c) in its hearing on the Motion to Challenge the Stay of Enforcement in SPJC Case 2012-02.

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 5: (Appellant’s Specification of Error #5, GA2012-107). SPJC exceeded its constitutional authority to modify, terminate, or continue a stay (D-6.0103g) when it acted to “lift with modifications” the stay issued in SPJC Case 2012-02.

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 6: (Appellant’s Specification of Error #6, GA2012-107). SPJC exceeded its constitutional authority to modify, terminate, or continue a stay (D-6.0103g) when it included in its Decision in SPJC Case 2012-02 positive injunctive relief “[prohibiting] the existing Session and/or newly elected officers ... from meeting outside the presence of the Administrative Commission; and ordering existing officers, staff and pastor to immediately provide the Administrative Commission with all documents, minutes and financial records requested in the past or which may be requested in the future.”

This specification is not sustained.

Appellant’s Challenge to the Preliminary Order of the GAPJC-EC of July 17, 2012.

This challenge is not sustained.

Decision

The central focus of these two cases is a review of the decisions of SPJC to dismiss the Complaints on the preliminary question of failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted (D-6.0305d). Upon review of the Complaints and the record and in the absence of sufficiently pleaded constitutional irregularities, this Commission concurs with SPJC that Appellant failed to state any claim upon which relief could be granted. [See Anderson, et. al., v. Phy of Scioto Valley, Minutes, 1998, p. 134, 12.0106.]

This Commission notes that the record does not include transcripts from any of the hearings conducted by SPJC. Thus, this Commission has no ability to review additional information that SPJC may have considered in making its determination to dismiss.

Because of the above Decision, this Commission finds that it does not need to reach the issues concerning the stays of enforcement and appeals on rulings prior to final decisions.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decisions of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant are hereby sustained, and the cases are dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Covenant report this Decision to the Synod of the Covenant at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Covenant enter the full Decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Maumee Valley report this Decision to the Presbytery of Maumee Valley at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Maumee Valley enter the full Decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.
The full Commission participated in this Decision.

Concurring Opinion of Clifford Looney, Barbara Bundick, Michael Lukens, and Robin Roberts

The majority opinion reaches the correct result for this case. The language, “in the absence of sufficiently pleaded constitutional irregularities” is, however, suggestive that the Complaints involved could have been formulated to successfully state a claim. That result would not have been possible on the facts alleged, which we must consider to be correct for the purpose of this decision.

The parties apparently agree that the primary question is whether the Presbytery could reject the work of the Pastoral Committee, appoint an Administrative Commission with original jurisdiction which could declare a schism, and identify the “true Church,” contrary to the wishes of the majority of the congregation. The Presbytery clearly can (G-3.0301a) and did. Alleging that they did what they have the power to do does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted. That legal status of our polity ends the inquiry.

The decision of the SPJC is correct and should be affirmed.

Decision and Order

Remedial Case 221-07

Arrival Statement

The matter now before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is a Challenge to an April 29, 2013, Preliminary Order of the Executive Committee of GAPJC (GAPJC EC) to Dismiss Appellants’ Appeal of a Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of Lincoln Trails (SPJC).

In its required examination of the papers, GAPJC EC found that since SPJC was not the correct forum within which to file Appellants’ remedial case, GAPJC had no jurisdiction to hear an Appeal of that SPJC Decision.

Appellants’ Notice of Challenge under D-8.0302a was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on May 30, 2013.

Parties

The Appellants are: Ji Suk Kim, In Hyuk Park, Gil Bong Kim, Jong Soo Park, Suk Ho Lee, Yong Sung Lee, Jae Geun Lee, Jong Sik Lim, and Tae Doo Chong.

The Respondent is the Administrative Commission of the Synod of Lincoln Trails acting as The Midwest Hanmi Presbytery.

Jurisdictional Statement

The Commission finds that the Challenge was properly filed by Complainant within thirty days after receipt of GAPJC EC’s Preliminary Order of Dismissal.
Appearances

Appellants are represented by W. Dan Lee. Respondent is represented by Linda L. Long. Appellee waived personal appearance, and Appellants were deemed to have waived personal appearance by reason of non-response.

History

This remedial case first came before this Commission upon an Appeal by Appellants from a March 9, 2013, Decision and Order of SPJC.

In its March 9, 2013 Decision and Order, the full SPJC, referencing Book of Order Article G-3.0109, concurred with a Preliminary Order for Dismissal of SPJC’s Moderator and Clerk and determined “that the Synod PJC is not the appropriate commission to hear this remedial complaint because ‘the action of a Commission shall be regarded as an action of the Council that created it.’” SPJC sustained the Preliminary Order for Dismissal, and dismissed the case. This Appeal followed.

Appellants stated in the Appeal that their underlying Complaint filed with SPJC arose from a May 21, 2012, action of an Administrative Commission of the Synod of Lincoln Trails “acting as the [Midwest Hanmi] Presbytery.” [Emphasis original.]

The Appeal was received by GAPJC on April 22, 2013, and was referred to GAPJC EC for initial review.

In their preliminary review of the Appeal, the Moderator and the Clerk of GAPJC concurred with SPJC’s analysis that under provisions of G-3.0109 the actions of an administrative commission are the actions of the council that appointed it, from and after the time the administrative commission’s actions are taken. They determined that, since SPJC had no original jurisdiction over the Complaint, GAPJC did not have jurisdiction to hear an Appeal of the matter from SPJC. GAPJC EC issued a Preliminary Order dismissing the case.

Appellants filed a Challenge to that Preliminary Order, and on May 3, 2013, this Commission’s officers found that the Challenge was properly and timely filed and they directed a hearing on the Challenge be set for a time and place determined by this Commission. That hearing was scheduled for Friday, October 25, 2013. A briefing schedule was prepared for the parties. On August 16, 2013, the Office of Constitutional Interpretation was informed by Counsel for Appellants that by reason of a conflicting trial schedule Counsel was unable to appear at the scheduled hearing. In response to such information, on August 19, 2013, the officers of GAPJC issued a Pre-Hearing Order directing that Appellants be permitted; if they chose, to have other counsel appear for them at the Challenge hearing. Alternatively, the officers of GAPJC urged both parties to submit the case on papers and briefs alone without personal appearance, as had been done at the Synod-level hearing. GAPJC officers directed that a response to the Pre-Hearing Order be made by both parties not later than August 27, 2013.

On August 26, 2013, Appellee waived personal appearance at a hearing contingent upon Appellants doing so as well. Appellee also noted that Appellants had not submitted a brief by Appellants’ August 16, 2013, required briefing deadline; Appellee requested it be permitted an extension of time to submit its brief within 30-days after Appellants had done so.

Appellants neither submitted a brief by their August 16, 2013, briefing deadline nor entered a response to the August 19, 2013 Pre-Hearing Order within the time directed by the officers of GAPJC. The Office of Constitutional Interpretation staff made repeated attempts to contact Appellants’ Counsel. All attempts went unanswered.

Due to the lack of response from Appellants’ Counsel, on September 3, 2013, GAPJC EC issued a Second Pre-Hearing Order finding that under provisions of D-8.0302b Appellants waived a hearing on this Challenge since (1) Appellee has contingently waived a personal appearance at a hearing, (2) Appellants’ Counsel has advised that Counsel cannot appear at the scheduled hearing because of a trial scheduling conflict, (3) Appellants, after repeated requests, have not timely responded to GAPJC’s suggested alternatives for a hearing, and (4) both parties waived personal appearance on this matter at the Synod of Lincoln Trails hearing.

GAPJC EC ordered that no in-person hearing would be held by GAPJC on this Challenge and the Challenge would be decided by the full GAPJC on documents so far submitted and briefs, if any, to be filed. Appellee was directed to file a brief not later than its September 16, 2013, original briefing date. A brief was filed by Appellee, but Appellants did not file a brief or provide a response of any kind.

Decision

Under the provisions of G-3.0109, the actions of an administrative commission are the actions of the council that appointed it, from and after the time the administrative commission’s actions are taken. The case of Sundquist, et al. v. Heartland Presbytery [Remedial Case 219-03 (formerly 218-18)] confirms this interpretation (citing provisions to the same effect of a former constitutional Article G-9.0505a).

In the present case, a claimed action of the administrative commission created by Synod of Lincoln Trails would have been the action of Synod from and after the date of the action. Any complaint about that action properly should have been filed with GAPJC against Synod and not with SPJC. Because SPJC had no original jurisdiction over the Complaint, GAPJC does not have jurisdiction to hear an Appeal of the matter from SPJC.

GAPJC confirms the decision of GAPJC EC and confirms that the case is dismissed. In addition, GAPJC notes that D-8.0304c provides: “Failure of appellant to file a brief within the time allowed, without good cause, shall be deemed by the permanent judicial commission an abandonment of the appeal.” Given that Appellants failed to file their brief by the August 16, 2013, briefing deadline, never sought an extension of the date to file the appeal, and never responded to the August 19, 2013, Pre-Hearing Order, this Commission finds such failure constitutes an abandonment of the appeal by Appellants (D-8.0304c).

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the dismissal of the Complaint is hereby sustained. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Lincoln Trails report this decision to the Synod of Lincoln Trails at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Lincoln Trails enter the full decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Midwest Hanmi report this decision to the Presbytery of Midwest Hanmi at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Midwest Hanmi enter the full decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

DECISION AND ORDER

Remedial Case 221-08

Arrival Statement

This filing before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is an appeal of a Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast (SPJC) rendered on September 11, 2013. The Notice of Appeal was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on September 23, 2013.

Parties

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Appellants have standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellant/Respondent was represented by John Griem and Reade Ryan. Appellees/Complainants were represented by Tee Gee Wilson and Lisa Borge.

History

On February 13, 2013, the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast received a Remedial Complaint from Ruling Elder Mildred McGee, et alia, alleging that the action of the PNYC in adopting and implementing its Gracious Dismissal Policy (GDP) was irregular in regard to constitutional requirements of The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [PC(USA)].

The development of the GDP by the PNYC began early in 2012, informed by Resolution 04-28, GA Minutes (2008, Part II, pp. 284–285) of the 218th General Assembly (2008) (GA) urging presbyteries to formulate a gracious and pastoral response to churches requesting dismissal from the PC(USA). This GA resolution, although not an authoritative interpretation, was used as the basis for the development of the GDP. Just after that Assembly, in October 2008, the PNYC through its Committee on Mission and Finance, which also served as the Board of Trustees (BoT), obtained a realtor’s opinion of value of the properties held by all its congregations. Almost four years later, in July 2012, the BoT created a draft GDP that was distributed to the PNYC for its meeting on July 28, 2012. There was no discussion of the draft at that meeting. A later draft was given a first reading and discussion at the December 6, 2012, meeting of the PNYC. After two open hearings on December 13 and 20, 2012, the present GDP was approved by the PNYC on January 29, 2013, by a vote of 56 in favor and 49 against.

The SPJC summarized the GDP in the following way:

... [T]he PNYC GDP allows sessions to request initiation of the dismissal process following a 2/3 vote. Upon receipt of the notice, the stated clerk then calls one or more meetings between the Special Resolutions Committee of the presbytery and the session (or its representatives), as well as the BOT (or its representatives) during the 120-day period following receipt of the notice. If the filing notice is not withdrawn at the end of the period, a congregational meeting is called (50% quorum) and dismissal is approved if confirmed by a 3/4 congregational vote. Financial arrangements include payment of any arrears in per capita, five years of per capita payments on a declining scale, and compensation for church property of 10% of the assessed value that exceeds $1,000,000, with a cap on the compensation of $2,000,000.

In addition, the policy allows for a downward adjustment or waiver in the case of hardship.

With the remedial complaint, Complainant also requested a Stay of Enforcement. The Executive Committee (EC) of the SPJC answered the Preliminary Questions in the affirmative and the Stay of Enforcement was subsequently granted by the SPJC.

Respondent requested an extension of the deadline for filing its response and the SPJC granted this extension. Respondent submitted a motion to the SPJC on April 29, 2013, to refer the case to the GAPJC, to which Complainants responded on May 14, 2013. The SPJC denied the motion on May 23, 2013. Respondent filed a second motion on July 2, 2013, asking the SPJC to reconsider its decision to deny the earlier motion to refer the case to the GAPJC, to which Complainants again responded on July 16, 2013. The SPJC EC denied this motion on July 27, 2013.

Complainant filed for relief on February 13, 2013, and this remedial case was decided by the SPJC on September 11, 2013. In its decision, the SPJC sustained five of the seven specifications of error by Complainant and ordered that the GDP of the PNYC shall be set aside and shall have no force or effect.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the Presbytery GDP conferred a unilateral right on a congregation to depart from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in violation of G-4.0207 and Sundquist v. Heartland Presbytery, GA PJC 219-03.

This specification of error is not sustained.

While it may be understandable for a presbytery to develop a policy dealing with congregations considering dismissal with the intention of avoiding costly litigation, the GDP at the center of this case breaches the bounds of the Constitution of the PC(USA). The PNYC GDP exhibits substantial constitutional flaws in at least three ways concerning this specification of error. First, the GDP establishes a dismissal process that, as the SPJC notes, is “self-executing,” whereby fulfillment of a series of steps and conditions automatically enacts dismissal upon their completion. A final vote by the PNYC is purposefully denied in the GDP in order to avoid divisive and argumentative response to a dismissal request, as admitted by the PNYC in the record and during arguments. Even though the process contains provisions for consultation with the PNYC and congregational input, it is in fact a predetermined and formulaic mechanism that replaces a final specific review and vote by the PNYC. The Constitution at G-3.0301a reserves as a direct act of the presbytery the authority to dismiss a church, a polity provision explicitly reasserted by G-4.0207.

As the SPJC noted, the PNYC does not need an independent policy in order to accomplish a just and effective dismissal:

The Respondent has asserted that an order by this Commission to set aside this GDP would leave the presbytery in limbo and render it unable to reach any agreements on dismissal agreements, leaving only the option of costly litigation. This is a seriously over-reaching assessment. We are sensitive to the difficult situation in which the PNYC finds itself and appreciate its sincere desire to deal with that as well as it can...[A dismissal agreement] can be achieved, either through Administrative Commissions appointed in each case that presents itself and is empowered to do so, or, indeed, by a Special Resolutions Committee, preparing the proposal for presbytery action. Considering that the presbytery mustered a majority vote, however slim, for the GDP under consideration in this case, and with the case-by-case requirement satisfied in these cases, it ought to be possible for the PNYC to reach agreement on approval for such dismissal arrangements.

The second constitutional error in the GDP is its provision that the vote by a congregation effectuates the dismissal process. This vote terminates the process and has the authority to effect dismissal without any constitutional authority so to act. The final certification by the PNYC is merely perfunctory. Further, such a congregational vote is not authorized within the permitted functions of a congregation in G-1.0503 and is specifically prohibited in Sundquist et al. vs. Heartland Presbytery: “Withdrawal from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is not a matter that can be considered at a congregational meeting” and the consultations of presbytery with members of the congregation “are not meetings at which business of the congregation may be conducted.” Sundquist 219-03, 2008. [GA Minutes, (2010, Part II, pp. 362–367).] It should also be noted that the General Assembly in 1991 declared: “Nowhere is written that the congregation is permitted to make the decision that the presbytery commits itself in advance to confirm.” GA Minutes (1991, Req. 91-24, Part I, p. 411). In spite of this stream of clear constitutional interpretation, the GDP portrays a self-implementing dismissal rooted in a congregational decision in violation of the exclusive right and responsibility of a presbytery to dismiss a congregation.

The third constitutional error of the GDP is that a predetermined, formulaic mechanism runs counter to constitutional provisions for mutual dialogue and particular discernment. This Commission has previously rejected such approaches in matters related to ordination and membership Larson 221-04, 2012. The presbytery’s right and responsibility for specific review and the necessity of individualized consideration on sensitive matters in the life of the church remain a core concept of PC(USA) polity.

Specification of Error No. 2: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the GDP does not give effect to the Trust Clause (G-4.0203) as required by Tom v. Presbytery of San Francisco, GA PJC 221-03 and G-4.0204.

This specification of error is not sustained.

The Book of Order provides in G-4.0203 that “[a]ll property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), ... is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” The Trust Clause was interpreted by this Commission in Tom, et al., v. Presbytery of San Francisco, as it related to that presbytery’s gracious dismissal policy, in the context of a number of factors including both spiritual and pecuniary aspects of the fiduciary responsibility. In Tom, this Commission said:

When a congregation seeks dismissal under G-11.0103i (now G-3.0301a), it is the responsibility of the Presbytery to fulfill its fiduciary duty under the Trust Clause. This fiduciary duty requires that the Presbytery exercise due diligence regarding the value of the property of the congregation seeking dismissal. Due diligence, of necessity, includes not only an evaluation of the spiritual needs of the congregation and its circumstances but also financial analysis of the value of the property at stake. Payment for per capita for missions obligations are not satisfactory substitutes for the separate evaluation of the value of the property held in trust. Tom, et al., v. The Presbytery of San Francisco, Remedial Case 221-03, 2012.

This Commission is again called upon in this case to clarify the parameters of the Trust Clause. The Trust Clause creates an express trust in favor of the PC(USA) as a whole and not for the presbytery, the congregation, or any other body. Therefore, the presbytery, acting in the role of trustee, must exercise due diligence such that its determination is both reasonable and evident in the record. While presbytery is entitled to deference in making the fiduciary decisions under the Trust Clause, such deference is limited by the fiduciary obligations owed to the whole church.

Under the facts of this case, the PNYC argues that the requirement of due diligence under the Trust Clause has been met by adopting a formula for determining the value of the property at the time of enacting the GDP by the PNYC. However, the fiduciary nature of the Trust Clause requires an individual determination of the facts and circumstances related to dismissal of any church rather than a set formula, which may not be appropriate to the particular circumstances of a congregation. As stated by the SPJC, there must be an “individual assessment and valuation of the church’s unique situation, finances, history, spiritual needs and financial needs” when considering dismissal.

In addition, the exercise of the fiduciary duty must be carried out during the course of discernment of a particular church’s request for dismissal. A formulaic predetermination fails to account for the individualized requirement demanded by proper application of the fiduciary duty incumbent upon a presbytery. The SPJC correctly determined that the PNYC, acting as a fiduciary, may not abdicate this role (G-4.0207 and G-3.0303b). The record shows that the PNYC sought to avoid conflict and litigation. However, concern about conflict and litigation cannot justify abandonment of constitutional mandates.

Thus, the presbytery, in exercising its authority to perform due diligence under the fiduciary duties required by the Trust Clause, is required to make an appropriately timed, individual, unique determination of the circumstances applicable to any church requesting dismissal. In accountability to the PC(USA) as the beneficiary under the Trust Clause, such determination must be reasonable and based on documented facts. The GDP enacted by the PNYC fails to meet these requirements and, therefore, is unconstitutional.

Specification of Error No. 3: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the GDP did not provide specific guidance regarding discernment of theological differences as a basis for dismissal, in violation of F-1.0302a and F-1.0301.

This specification of error is not sustained.

The PNYC adopted the GDP “to provide for reconciliation and resolution within the Presbytery of New York City” and to permit their congregations to be dismissed to join another Reformed denomination for theological reasons. The policy did not seek reconciliation and resolution as the initial step in the process (G-4.0207). The policy accepts notice from a congregation of perceived theological differences as sufficient for dismissal without concern for mutual discernment and dialogue (Sundquist). It is the nature and weight of theological difference that is critical in a justification for dismissal. The mere presence of theological differences does not preclude coexistence within the PC(USA). As stated in F-3.0105 “there are truths and forms with respect to which men of good characters and principles may differ. And in all these we think it the duty of private Christians and societies to exercise mutual forbearance toward each other.” The GDP contains no procedures to encourage early discussion with the PNYC about a congregation’s perceived differences. As indicated in F-3.0204 “Presbyters are not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ.” Without dialogue there cannot be a mutual understanding of the will of the people. Without joint discernment councils can misunderstand the will of Christ. The SPJC rightly concluded it was important that the PNYC “ensure that dismissal is the only viable remedy for the relevant theological differences.”

Specification of Error No. 4: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the GDP did not provide an opportunity for the minority of a church in schism to retain the property of a congregation, in violation of G-4.0207.

This specification of error is not sustained.

The PNYC GDP ignores the constitutional requirement under G-4.0207 to “determine if one of the factions is entitled to the property because it is identified by the presbytery as the true church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” The GDP process is initiated when the PNYC receives a written notice from the session. At that point, the PNYC automatically surrenders its constitutional obligation to determine whether a loyal faction exists and is entitled to the property. Under the GDP provisions, there is no attempt to identify the true church within the PC(USA). A fully implemented GDP effectively guarantees the property for those seeking dismissal.

It is clear what a presbytery must do when confronted with a property issue. Under G-4.0207, a presbytery is obligated to serve the interests and guard the rights of the “true church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” regardless of who is in the majority of any session or congregational vote. The presbytery shall determine if one of the factions is entitled to the property because it is the “true church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” majority notwithstanding. Any negotiation and decision about the disposition of the property must consider this interest of the true church. The GDP failed to comply with G-4.0207.

Specification of Error No. 5: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the GDP allowed a dismissed congregation to retain its records, in violation of G-3.0107.

This specification of error is not sustained.

According to G-3.0107, when a congregation is dismissed to another denomination its session ceases to exist as a council of the PC(U.S.A.). The successor to a former church council is the presbytery and upon dismissal of the congregation the minutes and registers of the session become the property and responsibility of the presbytery. The presbytery may make provision for the departing congregation to retain copies of the records for historical purposes.

Decision

For the reasons set forth above, this Commission finds that The Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast did not err and affirms its decision.
IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast Permanent Judicial Commission is hereby sustained in its entirety and that the Gracious Dismissal Policy of The Presbytery of New York City be set aside and shall have no force or effect.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this Decision to the Synod of the Northeast at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Northeast enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of New York City report this Decision to the Presbytery of New York City at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of New York City enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

B. Mid Council Statements of Compliance with the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission Decisions

Section IV.B.2.d. of the Organization for Mission requires that when a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission contains an order directed to another council, the Stated Clerk report to the General Assembly a statement of the council’s compliance. Below is a report of the statements of compliance received by the Stated Clerk from the councils for cases decided by the Permanent Judicial Commission during the year 2012–2014.

1. GAPJC Remedial Case 221-01, Thomas Priest, Jr., Appellant/Appellee (Complainant), v. Presbytery of Detroit, Appellee/Appellant (Respondent).

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the decision on the preliminary questions by the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant is affirmed and its dismissal of the case is affirmed. Consequently, the dismissal of the case by the Executive Committee of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission is also affirmed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Covenant report this Decision to the Synod of the Covenant at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Covenant enter the full Decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

D. Advisory Committee on the Constitution Agency Summary

1. Assigned Responsibilities

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (“ACC”) is composed of nine voting members as established by the Book of Order, G-3.0501c and G-6.02. The nine voting members, teaching and ruling elders, are required by the current Manual of the General Assembly to be stated clerks or former stated clerks of synods or presbyteries, former members of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly, polity professors, or other qualified persons with knowledge of and experience with the Constitution and polity of the church. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly is a member ex-officio without vote.

With regard to questions requiring an interpretation of the Book of Order, the ACC’s responsibilities are set out in G-6.02 as follows:

All questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order arising from councils of the church shall be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such questions of interpretation to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, except those pertaining to matters pending before a judicial commission. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall communicate its report and recommendations to the next session of the General Assembly, no less than sixty days prior to the General Assembly.

With regard to proposed amendments to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the ACC’s mandated responsibilities are set out in G-6.04b, as follows:

b. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such proposals to amend the Book of Order to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (G-6.02), which shall examine the proposed amendment for clarity and consistency of language and for compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). At least sixty days prior to the meeting of the General Assembly, the advisory committee shall report its findings to the General Assembly along with its recommendations, which may include an amended version of any proposed constitutional changes as well as advice to accept or decline the proposals referred to the committee. The General Assembly shall not consider any amendment until it has considered the report and any recommendations from the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

2. Process and Procedures, Responsibilities and Relationships

The ACC does not interpret the Constitution. The role of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, as its title suggests and as its constitutional mandate clearly establishes, is to advise the General Assembly. The ACC’s advice has no authority until and unless it is approved by the General Assembly. With respect to proposed amendments to the Constitution, the ACC focuses on clarity of proposed language and consistency of the proposed amendment with the Constitution. The ACC occasionally finds that the intent of the proposal is already inherent in other provisions of the Constitution or that it could be achieved by slight changes in language, by placing the amendment in a different section, or by different language entirely. On occasion, the ACC has suggested such changes in order to avoid inconsistencies within the Book of Order, and also to make as few changes as possible in existing paragraphs and in section numbering. At least sixty days prior to each General Assembly, the ACC is required to report its findings to the assembly, which findings may include advice for amended versions of any proposed changes as well as advice to accept or decline the proposals referred to the ACC.

With respect to requests for interpretation, as well as advice on overtures, the ACC seeks to provide advice that is based on constitutional issues, not on the substance of the issues at hand. In many circumstances, the question has been answered by earlier interpretations and does not require action by the General Assembly. In these cases, the inquirer is notified of the standing interpretation. In order to make clear the questions raised, the ACC has modified its past practice of reprinting the entire request received (which in some instances contained material not germane to the question itself), and has focused the presentation of the request on the question presented, together with the ACC’s findings and advice. If the question was not clear from the request received, the ACC has sought clarification from the individual transmitting the request.

All overtures and reports containing proposed amendments and all requests for interpretation of the Book of Order by the General Assembly must be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-6.02, G-6.04a). This 120-day time period allows the ACC time to consider and research carefully each proposed amendment and request. Those requests that the ACC brings to the General Assembly are those that it believes meet this constitutional criterion.

The ACC completed its preparatory work for the 221st General Assembly (2014) in two meetings. At a two-day fall meeting, September 28–29, 2013, the ACC began work on the task of preparing for the 221st General Assembly (2014). At its spring five-day meeting, March 14–18, 2014, the ACC concluded its work of preparing responses to constitutional issues to be considered by the 221st General Assembly (2014).

After it has received and considered the advice of the ACC, the General Assembly is free to take whatever action it deems wise on proposed amendments, requests for interpretations, and referrals.

The primary focus of the ACC is to fulfill its constitutional function to provide advice to the General Assembly concerning overtures that seek to amend the Constitution, and concerning requests for interpretation of the Constitution.
3. Editorial Corrections

The Organization for Mission provides, at Section IV.B.2.c., that the Stated Clerk shall prepare editorial changes in the Book of Order, which should be reviewed by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, provided the changes do not alter the substance of the text approved by the presbyteries. The following editorial changes have been made by the Stated Clerk and approved by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution:

a. Editorial Change to F-1.0302, F-1.0302a, and F-2.03

There are three editorial corrections to remove the commas from the phrase “the one holy catholic and apostolic Church.” The removal of the commas is to align these three sections with the Book of Confessions, Nicene Creed, 1.3, to which the phrase in F-1.0302a. and F-2.03 is footnoted. The editorial change has these sections now reading:

F-1.0302:

“F-1.0302 The Marks of the Church

“With all Christians of the Church catholic, we affirm that the Church is ‘one, holy, catholic, and apostolic.’”

F-1.0302a:

“a. The Unity of the Church

“Unity is God’s gift ... .

“Because in Christ the Church is one, it strives to be one. To be one with Christ is to be joined with all those whom Christ calls into relationship with him. To be thus joined with one another is to become priests for one another, praying for the world and for one another and sharing the various gifts God has given to each Christian for the benefit of the whole community. Division into different denominations obscures but does not destroy unity in Christ. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), affirming its historical continuity with the whole Church of Jesus Christ, is committed to the reduction of that obscurity, and is willing to seek and to deepen communion with all other churches within the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church.”

F-2.03:

“F-2.03 THE CONFESSIONS AS STATEMENTS OF THE FAITH OF THE CHURCH CATHOLIC

“In its confessions, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) witnesses to the faith of the Church catholic. The confessions express the faith of the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church in the recognition of canonical Scriptures and the formulation and adoption of the ecumenical creeds, notably the Nicene and Apostles’ Creeds with their definitions of the mystery of the triune God and of the incarnation of the eternal Word of God in Jesus Christ.”

b. Editorial Change to G-2.0610

An internal discrepancy of the use of three-fourths was found within G-2.0610 and with another section in the Book of Order. The following editorial correction is made by striking out “three-quarters” and replacing it with “three-fourths” to maintain internal consistency within this section and with another citation using “three-fourths” in G-2.0504c.

“G-2.0610 Exceptions

“By a three-fourths vote, a presbytery may waive any of the requirements for ordination in G-2.06, except for those of G-2.0607d. If a presbytery judges that there are good and sufficient reasons why a candidate should not be required to satisfy the requirements of G-2.0607d, it shall approve by three-quarters three-fourths vote some alternate means by which to ascertain the readiness of the candidate for ministry in the areas covered by the standard ordination examinations. A full account of the reasons for exception shall be included in the minutes of the presbytery and communicated to the presbytery to which an inquirer or candidate may be transferred.”

c. Editorial Change to D-2.0101a and D-2.0202

The use of “the Presbyterian Mission Agency” is redundant to the phrase “entity of the General Assembly.” The editorial change is:

“D-2.0101 Church Discipline

“Judicial process is the means by which church discipline is implemented within the context of pastoral care and oversight. It is the exercise of authority by the councils of the church for “a. the prevention and correction of irregularities and delinquencies by councils, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, or an entity of the General Assembly (Remedial Cases, D-6.0000);”

“D-2.0202 Remedial

“A remedial case is one in which an irregularity or a delinquency of a lower council, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, or an entity of the General Assembly may be corrected by a higher council.”

d. Editorial Change to D-6.0101

There were a series of amendments to the 2013 Book of Order allowing for two or more synods sharing common boundaries to form a shared permanent judicial commission. One of those amendments was to D-6.0101, which appeared to be taken from the advice of the ACC, but the word “that” in the ACC advice was changed to “the” in the final action, making it less clear to which clerk the complaint was to be transmitted. The editorial change is to the original ACC advice approved by the assembly:

“D-6.0101 Initiation of a Remedial Case, Method of Initiation, was amended in 2013 to read:

“A remedial case is initiated by the filing of a complaint with the stated clerk of the council having jurisdiction. If a different clerk has been designated to process judicial cases for a shared judicial commission, the stated clerk having jurisdiction shall immediately transmit the complaint to the that clerk.”

e. Editorial Change to D-11.0502

In 2011, D-13.0102 Initiation of Appeal (of Disciplinary Case) was amended to read: “Only the person found guilty may initiate the first level of appeal by the filing of a written notice of appeal.”

However, D-11.0502, Provisions for Appeal (of Disciplinary Case) was not also amended at that time to be in alignment with D-13.0102. The editorial change is:

“D-11.0502 Appeals

“Either party. Only the person found guilty may initiate the first level of appeal. Either party may initiate an appeal of the appellate decision. Rules of appeal are found in D-13.0000.”

4. ACC Membership and OGA Staff Support

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution was saddened at the sudden death of the Reverend Stewart Pollock, our faithful moderator since 2012, on March 5, 2014. Stewart shared his intellect, compassion, and commitment with us as he served the church on the ACC. We were blessed to have known Stewart and to work alongside him, and we give thanks to God for his life and witness.

Following Stewart’s death, Vice Moderator Therese Howell became moderator of the ACC. Neal Presa, Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012), appointed the Reverend Steven Plank, stated clerk/communicator for the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse, to fill the two years remaining on Stewart’s term of service on the ACC. Steve brings his experience serving as a stated clerk in three different presbyteries to the work of the ACC.

On behalf of the 221st General Assembly (2014), the Advisory Committee on the Constitution expresses its thanks and appreciation to Teaching Elders Heahwan Rim and Keith Geckler and Ruling Elder Susan Evans for their dedicated service to the church and through their work on the ACC. Each has brought profound gifts and deep dedication to the work of the ACC.

The ACC is grateful for the staff assistance of the Reverend Joyce Lieberman, associate for Constitutional Interpretation, and Diane Minter, Mid Council Ministries administrative assistant.

Finally, the ACC is deeply grateful for the wisdom and counsel of Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons, who serves as an ex officio member of the ACC. We are grateful for the opportunity to serve with him.

E. Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL) Agency Summary

I. Narrative

Assigned Responsibilities

The Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL) is composed of six Presbyterian attorneys. Each year the General Assembly elects one member to a six-year term. Each member is eligible for reelection to an additional term, but in no case may a member serve for a period exceeding twelve consecutive years of service. The General Assembly Nominating Committee nominates persons for the ACL who fit the criteria for eligibility. The Advisory Committee on Litigation was established by the 200th General Assembly (1988) to advise the Stated Clerk on matters relating to litigation.

The consultations typically take place via telephone conference calls after committee members have been provided copies of all pertinent pleadings, orders, and information. The committee ordinarily meets face-to-face at least once each year. It is normally consulted whenever the Stated Clerk is asked to participate in litigation involving matters of civil and religious liberty, church and state relations, and other matters related to the mission and interests of the church.

The Advisory Committee on Litigation reviews each of the cases, amicus briefs, and General Assembly policy and constitution based on seventeen criteria and advises the Stated Clerk whether or not to file an amicus brief in the particular case.

II. Disposition of Cases Reported in (2010–2012)

Presbytery of Greater Atlanta v. Timberridge Presbyterian Church, Inc.

On April 11, 2011, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief to the Supreme Court of Georgia in support of the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta in Presbytery of Greater Atlanta v. Timberridge Presbyterian Church, Inc. The amicus brief stated that the Georgia court of appeals had misapplied federal first amendment constitutional law when determining whether a congregation of PC(USA) holds property in trust for the denomination. The amicus brief described the trust inherent within the PC(USA) denomination as well as the express trust found within the Constitution of the PC(USA).

On November 21, 2011, the Georgia Supreme Court issued a decision that found that there was an implication that local church property was held in trust for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) when the court applied “neutral principles of law” and when the court looked to documents ordering the relationship between the congregation and the denomination.

On March 6, 2012, Timberridge Presbyterian Church of Atlanta filed a petition for a writ of certiorari (review) in the U.S. Supreme Court. The petition for a writ of certiorari was denied on June 18, 2012.

Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church and School v. EEOC, et al

On June 20, 2011, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with several faith partners to the U.S. Supreme Court on behalf of Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church and School in Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church and School v. EEOC, et al. The amicus brief stated that the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution precludes governmental intervention into the selection by religious entities of clergy and other religiously significant employees. The amicus brief further affirmed the Courts of Appeals that had interpreted antidiscrimination laws and other laws to include a “ministerial exception” to preserve the intent of the First Amendment.

On January 11, 2012, the U.S. Supreme Court issued a decision that found the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment bar suits brought on behalf of ministers against their churches that claim termination in violation of employment discrimination laws.

Health Care: DEPT. OF H&HS, ET AL. V. FLORIDA, ET AL

On February 13, 2012, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into a faith amicus brief to the U.S. Supreme Court in support of Medicaid expansions in the Affordable Care Act with many faith partners about the moral perspectives that have led the faith communities to support the Medicaid expansions and improvements in the Affordable Care Act. The brief reiterated that all of the faith partners agree that it is the calling of government to bring justice and protection to the poor and the sick and thus have been supportive of Medicaid and its expansions.

The U.S. Supreme court held oral arguments on the case on March 28, 2012.

On June 28, 2012, in a 5-4 decision, the U.S. Supreme court held that the Affordable Care Act’s “individual mandate” provision, which requires virtually all Americans to obtain health insurance or pay a penalty, is a valid exercise of Congress’s power under the Taxing Clause. However, the Medicaid expansion provision of the ACA violates the Constitution by threatening states with the loss of their existing Medicaid funding if they decline to comply with the expansion.

On February 21, 2012, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with several faith partners to the Supreme Court of Texas in support of the Episcopal Church of America Diocese of Northwest Texas in Masterson et al v. Diocese of Northwest Texas et al. The brief stated that there are two federal constitutionally valid methods for resolving intra-church property disputes. The brief described the two approaches that can be used by state court: the neutral principles analysis to determine whether there is a trust inherent within hierarchical denominations or applying deference to any express trust found with a denominational constitution.
On August 20, 2013, the Supreme Court of Texas issued an opinion that held Texas courts should use the neutral principles methodology to determine property interests when religious organizations are involved. To reduce confusion and increase predictability in this area of the law where the issues are difficult to begin with, Texas courts must use only the neutral principles construct.

Arizona v. U.S.A.

On March 26, 2012, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with several partners including the United Catholic Conference of Bishops, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and the Lutheran Immigration and Refugee Service on behalf of the United States in Arizona v. U.S.A. to the U.S. Supreme Court. The amicus brief argued that the comprehensive Federal Immigration law preempts Arizona statute 1070. The brief argued that federal immigration law creates a comprehensive balance of competing interests including the interests of the churches in family unity and human dignity. The brief also argued that the state statute provided a serious threat to religious liberty in that it impedes and criminalizes the church’s moral imperative to provide help, including food and shelter, to all persons who have need. The federal government is prohibited from enforcing immigration laws in a manner that imposes substantial burdens on religious exercise however state and local governments are not.

The U.S. Supreme court held oral arguments on the case on April 25, 2012.

On June 25, 2012, the U.S. Supreme court held in a 5-2 decision that three of the four provisions of Arizona statute 1070 were preempted by Federal Immigration law because they either operated in areas solely controlled by federal policy, or they interfered with federal enforcement efforts. Nullified were sections making it a crime to be in Arizona without legal papers, making it a crime to apply for or get a job in the state, or allowing police to arrest individuals who had committed crimes that could lead to their deportation. The Court left intact—but subject to later challenges in lower courts—a provision requiring police to arrest and hold anyone they believe has committed a crime and whom they think is in the country illegally, and holding them until their immigration status could be checked with federal officials.

III. Cases Joined (2012–2014)

Episcopal Church Cases

Virginia Supreme Court

On December 21, 2009, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with a variety of denominational religious partners to the Virginia Supreme Court challenging an old Virginia statute on U.S. Constitution 1st Amendment issues. The 1867 Virginia statute that was challenged delineates a process by which a congregation may determine which branch of a denomination to which it will belong or how an independent congregation will organize itself to own and hold property.

The amici argued that the Virginia state statute violated the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution in that it displaced a church’s own rules of self-governance in determining property ownership and voting rights, it required civil courts to conduct an extensive inquiry into fundamentally religious questions, and it was neither “generally applicable,” “neutral,” nor was it the least restrictive means to serve a compelling state interest.

On June 10, 2010, the Virginia Supreme Court issued a decision that found that the state statute did not apply to the facts in the case and thus the court did not need to rule on the constitutionality of the state statute. The Virginia Supreme Court remanded the case to determine whether declaratory judgment in favor of the Diocese was final. On January 10, 2010, the Circuit Court of Fairfax County found for the Episcopal Church and Diocese in their Declaratory Judgment actions and, among other relief, ordered that all real property conveyed by forty-one deeds, as well as all personal property acquired by nine congregations up to the filing date of the Declaratory Judgment be promptly conveyed to the Diocese. The congregations have appealed the order and the execution of the order during appeal.

On January 22, 2013, Gradye Parsons, the Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), joined the Presbytery of Eastern Virginia and Abingdon Presbytery, the Episcopal Diocese of Southern and Southwestern Virginia, the United Methodist Church, and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America urging the Virginia Supreme Court to hold the state statute unconstitutional but otherwise uphold their decision of June 10, 2010.

On April 18, 2013, the Virginia Supreme Court issued a decision that used neutral principals of law analysis to impose a constructive denominational trust on the property of the congregations withdrawing from the Episcopal Church.

On October 9, 2013, the congregations filed a petition for a writ of certiorari with the U.S. Supreme Court. On March 10, 2014, the petition for certiorari was denied.

Town of Greece v. Susan Galloway and Linda Stephens

On September 23, 2103, Gradye Parsons, Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), entered into an amicus brief with the Baptist Joint Commission on Religious Liberty arguing that the practice of opening town meetings with a faith-specific, communal prayer violates the Establishment Clause because it infringes the freedom of conscience guaranteed to each person. Although people of faith often pray collectively—for example, in churches, synagogues, and mosques—they make a voluntary decision to do so, exercising their constitutional right to form a congregation of persons who have the same approach to worshiping God. In contrast, attendees at a town meeting have not agreed to join a government formed congregation. They come to participate in local government, not communal prayer.

The U.S. Supreme issued a 5-4 decision on May 5, 2014, in which it held that the town’s practice of opening its town board meetings with a prayer offered by members of the clergy does not violate the Establishment Clause. The Court found that the practice is consistent with the tradition long followed by Congress and state legislatures, the town does not discriminate against minority faiths in determining who may offer a prayer, and the prayer does not coerce participation with non-adherents.

_Holt v. Hobbs_

On May 29, 2014, Gradye Parsons, Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), entered into an amicus brief with a variety of faith entities as amici stating that religious liberty is a basic and therefore essential principle of human freedom codified in the right to free exercise of religion clause in the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and by Congress in the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). RLUIPA does this by ensuring that the core principle of religious freedom—i.e., that the government should not impose burdens that interfere with the religiously informed conscience of its citizens—is protected for even the least politically powerful. In this case, the religious liberty of an observant Muslim prisoner, who seeks merely to grow a one-half inch beard in accordance with his religious beliefs, is not overridden by security and safety concerns.

Voted on by the synod administrative commission acting as the Presbytery of Alaska.
Item 07-01

[The assembly disapproved Item 07-01 with comment. See p. 34.]

[Comment: Though the committee voted not to approve Item 07-01, we take the matter of language, and specifically the tension around the use of the term “Israel,” very seriously. We hope the discussion and education about the use of language continues.]

_On Distinguishing Between Biblical Terms for Israel and Those Applied to the Modern Political State of Israel in Christian Liturgy—From the Presbytery of Chicago._

The Presbytery of Chicago overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church, (U.S.A.), to

1. distinguish between the biblical terms that refer to the ancient land of Israel and the modern political State of Israel;

2. develop educational materials, with the help of our Presbyterian seminaries, for clergy, church musicians, worship leaders, and Christian educators regarding the “ancient Israel/modern Israel” distinction; and

3. inform our ecumenical partners of this action, nationally and globally—particularly within Israel and Palestine.

_Rationale_

This overture was prompted by the publication of the beautiful new publication of _Glory to God, The Presbyterian Hymnal_, 2013, which has a section of hymns under the unfortunate heading: “God’s covenant with Israel.”

The use of the phrase “God’s covenant with Israel,” is open to interpretation by the reader/singer. Is this “biblical Israel”? Is it the “modern State of Israel”? As one Palestinian American Presbyterian who is a ruling elder said in a letter to those responsible for the publication of the new hymnal:

“Because I am a Palestinian Christian, I am uneasy with the word “Israel” in “God’s Covenant with Israel”—I am always told, however, that what is meant by “Israel” is Biblical Israel and not today’s Israel; but do all Christians know this? With the prevalence of Christian Zionism, which the G.A. repudiated in 2004, I highly doubt it. Even if not intentional, this language is inflammatory, misleading, and hurtful” (Open Letter, October 2, 2013).

One response would be to rephrase it as “God’s covenant with Ancient Israel,” or, as Thomas Are, retired Presbyterian minister, said in a recent blog, “God’s covenant with the Poor, or even “Our Covenant with the Oppressed” [11.26.13; http://thomas-l-are.blogspot.com/2013_11_01_archive.html], but there are other examples of the problem. In Advent, we sing “O Come, O Come Emmanuel, and ransom captive Israel. …” Does that justify the modern political State of Israel? At the least, it is confusing and unclear. Our Christian Palestinian brothers and sisters call us to make this distinction clearly.

Mitri Raheb, pastor of Christmas Lutheran Church in Bethlehem, says: “The establishment of the State of Israel created … an intended confusion. … Huge efforts were put by the State of Israel and Jewish organizations in branding the new State of Israel as a “biblical entity” (The Invention of History: A century of interplay between theology and politics in Palestine, Mitri Raheb, editor, 2011; Diyar Consortium, pp. 18–19).

We need to make distinctions between biblical Israel and the modern state. Joshua Ralston writes, in Religion and Ethics:

One way that the recurring challenge of balancing pro-Palestinian advocacy and the rejection of anti-Semitism could be addressed is by avoiding using ancient Israel, Jews and the modern nation-state of Israel largely interchangeably. … The best way for Christians to avoid this bind is to more clearly question the direct correlation between ancient Israel, Jews across space and time, and the modern political state of Israel and its occupation of the Palestinian Territories, even as Christians affirm the importance of land for Judaism. (Ralston teaches theology at Union Presbyterian Seminary in Richmond, Virginia, http://www.abc.net.au/religion/articles/2013/05/13/3758316.htm)

Words shape our reality. Linguists have shown this for some time now. The unnamed are largely invisible. That’s why we Presbyterians and others revised the sexist language in our hymns to be inclusive. We learn much of our theology from singing hymns! That is the theme of Bill Tammeus’ column in _The Presbyterian Outlook:_

Most of us have heard the possibly apocryphal story of theologian Karl Barth answering a student’s question about the most important thing he’s learned in his decades of study. Barth responded with words from a Sunday school hymn: “Jesus loves me, this I know, for the Bible tells me so.” What always struck me about the story was that in his answer Barth affirmed that we learn lots of theology through the words of hymns. It’s still true. (10.14.2013)

In the early days of identifying and changing sexist language in hymns, words were crossed out and new words were written in. It is not so easy to do that with biblical terms that have come to be associated with the modern political State of Israel.

That is why this overture requests the help of our Presbyterian seminaries in clarifying the use of these terms and how to use them appropriately to reference biblical Israel and how to use them appropriately.
Concurrence to Item 07-01 from the Synod of the Covenant.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

The Advisory Committee advises that this overture be answered with the following action:

“The 221st General Assembly (2014) instructs the Office of Theology and Worship of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop a short insert or sticker for publications used in congregational worship and study with wording similar in meaning to the following:

“Please note in using these texts that the biblical and liturgical “land of Israel” is not the same as the State of Israel established in 1948, which is a contemporary nation state. The Bible contains differing descriptions of the parameters of Israel. Promises of land generally come with obligations to God for justice to be practiced with all inhabitants. Later in Scripture, the Gospel is to be preached to ‘all nations’; in Jesus Christ all peoples are included in God’s promise. Similarly, ‘Zion’ is frequently used in the Bible as a reference to the city of Jerusalem, but in Christian tradition this does not refer primarily to a specific geographical location or political entity but to ‘the city of God’ found throughout history and to the completion of God’s purpose in the age to come. Presbyterian General Assemblies have affirmed the principle that the current physical Jerusalem be shared by Jews, Christians, and Muslims, both Palestinians and Israelis, living in peace with justice.”

“Further, the General Assembly directs that the Office of Theology and Worship and the Office of the General Assembly share the insert language with an explanatory letter encouraging its use within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and among our church partners internationally, particularly in Israel and Palestine, noting where fuller treatment of the concern may be found.”

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that commissioners answer this overture with the proposal to instruct the Office of Theology and Worship to develop an insert or similar brief guidance for use not only in hymnals but in other printed and online resources where it is important for God’s purposes not to be identified with any particular nation state. In the words of The Confession of 1967, “Although nations may serve God’s purposes in history, the church which identifies the sovereignty of any one nation or any one way of life with the cause of God denies the Lordship of Christ and betrays its calling” (https://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/theologyandworship/pdfs/confess67.pdf).

In 1987, the General Assembly approved for “provisional” study a report called, “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship between Christians and Jews,” which states: “The State of Israel is a geopolitical entity and is not to be validated theologically” (under affirmation 6; http://www.pcusa.org/resource/theological-understanding-relationship-between-chr).

A careful treatment of God’s relation to the land in the Bible is found in the biblical background section of the 2010 social witness policy on the Middle East, “Breaking Down the Walls” (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/report-middle-east-study-committee/). A treatment of related aspects of Christian and Jewish relations can be found in “Christians and Jews: People of God,” a paper developed by the Office of Theology and Worship working with Jewish partners. To be posted along with it is a paper by a Lebanese Christian respondent to “People of God,” George Sabra, who illustrates questions and issues at stake raised in a dialogue process. Neither “Christians and Jews: People of God,” nor the Sabra response, possess official standing. [See Item 01-02, II. Final Responses to Referrals, F. Presbyterian Mission Agency, Referral 17, 2010 Referral: Item 08-09].

Because divine authorization is often claimed by settlers who occupy land designated by treaty for a Palestinian state, the matter addressed by the overture is likely to remain relevant for some time. The Church of Scotland addressed similar concerns in its 2013 assembly statement: http://www.churchofscotland.org.uk/ data/assets/pdf_file/0010/14050/The_Inheritance_of_Abraham.pdf. A further brief treatment of this matter by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is found in the 2004 Resolution on Confronting Christian Zionism: http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/global/resolution-confronting-christian-zionism/.

Particularly in light of the treatments of this matter in “Breaking Down the Walls” and the Scottish Church’s, “The Inheritance of Abraham? A Report on the ‘Promised Land’,” the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy believes the approach recommended above can meet the serious concern of the presbyteries sponsoring this overture. The use of the insert language would, of course, be voluntary, but does reflect the position of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 07-01 with amendment as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]
“1. [Draft] Distinguish between the biblical terms that refer to the ancient land of Israel and the modern political State of Israel[s] [This distinction should be made by worship leaders whenever ‘Israel’ is used in a worship setting, whether in hymns, prayers, confession, or sermon.]”

“2. [Direct ACSWP to] develop educational materials [that define ‘Israel’ and related terms such as Zion and Promised Land], with the help of our Presbyterian seminaries, for clergy, church musicians, worship leaders, and Christian educators regarding the ‘ancient Israel/modern Israel’ distinction; and [provide them before the 222nd General Assembly (2016)].”

“3. [Direct the Stated Clerk to] inform our ecumenical partners of this action, nationally and globally—particularly within Israel and Palestine [in the Middle East—as soon as possible].”

The ACREC acknowledges with thanks the work of the Presbyterian Committee on Congregational Song (PCOCS) who produced the beautiful new hymnal, Glory to God: The Presbyterian Hymnal. We are grateful for their careful and deliberate work to avoid language “that stereotypes persons according to categories such as gender, race, ethnicity, socioeconomic class, sexual orientation, age, or disabilities…”

However, ACREC agrees with the National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus (NMEPC) that the section heading “God’s Covenant to Israel” included in the new hymnal is problematic. In the “Theological Vision Statement” in Glory to God: The Presbyterian Hymnal, Appendix 1, the new hymnal expresses concern about people who have been separated from the centers of power, and declares an intention to “inspire and embolden” to create a “peace that is beyond understanding,” so as to appeal to “worshipers who have not had life-long formation by Scripture and basic Christian doctrine, much less Reformed theology” (Glory to God: The Presbyterian Hymnal, 2013, Westminster John Knox Press, p. 926). This intention is very welcome, but falls short, as ACREC sees it.

The ACREC believes that for the PC(USA), which is a denomination committed to peace for Israelis and Palestinians alike, it is problematic in the pluralistic setting of the 21st century to use terminology from another era that has taken on new meanings today, without explaining what all the meanings are. The ACREC supports the intent of this overture and believes we are in need of new educational materials to clarify meanings of words that come to us with multiple layers and meanings in today’s pluralistic setting.

For many worshipers today, the word “Israel” has taken on political and military connotations and the original scriptural meanings are almost lost. Just as PC(USA) adopted inclusive and expansive language for racial and gender justice, ACREC believes it is important and timely to be intentional and well-informed with language that has taken on political meanings beyond the walls of church and worship.

Littlefield Presbyterian Church in Dearborn, MI has used the following paragraph for several years in their worship bulletin:

“ISRAEL” LANGUAGE IN WORSHIP—We want to be sensitive to the pain of our Palestinian-American friends and others when they encounter “Israel” in the language of scriptures, hymns and liturgy. In our worship, “Israel” is referring to ancient Israel, not the modern political state. At various times in history it meant the collective name of the twelve tribes descended from Jacob, “the people of Israel,” the nation of Israel as a whole, or, during the period of the Divided Monarch, to the Northern Kingdom. We want to be faithful hearers and interpreters of the scripture and recognize that Jesus was a Jew, a descendent of David, King of the United Monarchy, and that what we know as the Old Testament was Jesus’ scriptures.

On PALM SUNDAY, we need to remember that the people who waved palm branches in Jerusalem lived under the yoke of occupation and oppression by the Roman Empire. Over the centuries other oppressed peoples have identified with the plight and the longings of the people of Israel when they were enslaved, exiled, and occupied and also with the message of deliverance and freedom they found in the scriptures. We pray fervently for the day when the Palestinian people no longer live under occupation, a day when Palestinians and Israelis find a way to live together in peace, with justice for all.

COTE COMMENT ON ITEM 07-01

Comment on Item 07-01—From the Committee on Theological Education.

This item seeks the help of Presbyterian theological seminaries in the development of educational materials. The Committee on Theological Education (COTE), which includes among its members the presidents of all PC(USA)-related seminaries as well as elected teaching and ruling elders, notes that although COTE provides a major link between the seminaries and the General Assembly, the schools are independent entities whose activities cannot be directed by General Assembly action. The schools serve the denomination in a wide variety of ways, but they do not provide educational resources directly to the assembly. When such resources are required, the usual mechanism is the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Theology, Worship, and Education ministry area. The faculty and staff of the Presbyterian seminaries frequently serve as advisors on projects, when invited and as time permits.

Comment on Item 07-01—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Integral to the narrative of salvation history in the Scriptures is particularity. Christians have long dealt with the so-called “scandal of particularity” that roots God’s relation with humankind as one mediated through particular individuals and peoples, most importantly through Jesus of Nazareth. This unfolding of salvation history means that God’s covenant with Israel cannot be dispensed with by contemporary Christians. Israel is part of our spiritual and theological vocabulary.

At the same time, the General Assembly has articulated a number of times that Christians should distinguish between the people Israel in the Scriptures and the modern state of Israel. The distinction between ancient Israel and the modern State of Israel is important, one that helps us make sense of our faith and its relationship to Judaism and the Jewish people.

The importance of these distinctions was recognized and articulated by our denomination in the document “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews,” which was commended by the 199th General Assembly (1987) for study and reflection. That document makes the distinction in this way: “Both Christianity and Judaism claim relationship with the ancient people Israel; the use of the ‘Israel’ in this study is restricted to its ancient reference. When referring to the contemporary State of Israel this document will use ‘State of Israel’” (Section on “Definitions and Language”). The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a resolution on Christian Zionism that expressed that “Christian Zionism does not represent the majority of American Christians and the faith of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” [http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/global/resolution-confronting-christian-zionism/]. Among other things, Christian Zionism is the belief that Christians are required by their faith to support the policies of the modern state of Israel.

At the same time we must also be careful not to claim that God’s covenant is strictly limited to ancient Israel. While it is a danger to confuse the biblical narrative of Israel with the modern state, there is also a danger in declaring that God’s particular relationship with the people Israel ended in the time of the New Testament.

In our present situation congregations and individual Presbyterians will hear the language of “Israel” in multiple different ways. In some cases, “Israel” will be understood to be the present day State of Israel. In other cases, talk about “Israel” and the Old Testament narratives of the people of Israel will be a way of entering into God’s work of deliverance from oppression, living life as sojourners, and God’s promise of entry into a place of abundance.

This overture is a call for educational help in having a clear understanding of important distinctions, the distinctions articulated in “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews.” The distinctions made in that document can help Presbyterians speak of “Israel” (both as an ancient people and a contemporary nation) with clarity, insight, and faithfulness. Any additional educational materials on this subject would need to be contextually sensitive to congregations and their particular conversation partners.

Item 07-02

[The assembly approved Item 07-02 with amendment. See p. 34.]

The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Approve “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” as a policy statement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [see below].

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

   Shall G-5.0102 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels seeks new will be open to [and will seek] opportunities for conversation and understanding respectful dialogue and mutual relationships with non-Christian [entities and persons from other] religious [entities] and persons outside the Christian tradition [traditions]. It does this in the faith that the church of Jesus Christ, by the power of the [Holy] Spirit, is a sign and means of God’s intention for the wholeness of all human-kind and all creation.”

3. [Affirm the commitment of] Confessing the history of Christian domination and supremacy over other religions, which included forced conversions, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [affirms a commitment] to work for the common good in society together with people of other faiths and interreligious bodies at all levels; and direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly to appropriately support emerging partnerships for this purpose.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate and work toward meeting human needs, seeking [justice and] reconciliation, and pursuing peace through interreligious peacemaking, disaster assistance, and solidarity efforts that attend to respectful interactions with persons of different cultural and religious traditions in both the United States and international contexts; and encourage the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels to do the same.

5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to the work of congregations and mid councils by helping them to share with one another existing models of interreligious relationship building (including attention to lived experiences, models of dialogue and witness, models of education, models of interreligious peace building and social justice work, models of support for interreligious families, and models of neighborhood).

6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to build capacity for strong and mutual interreligious relationships throughout its ministry areas, to develop and promote resources that support the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels in the church’s efforts to build and strengthen those relationships, and facilitate cooperative efforts with other religious traditions for social justice, recognizing that not all people of a particular faith tradition share the same positions on social issues, and endeavor to include as many positions and voices as possible from those faith traditions. With humility, recognize that people from traditions other than ours, and Christians from other parts of the world can also be our teachers for this work.[]. Among these [new] resources would be “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” and an accompanying study guide.

7. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to cooperate with youth and young adults in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in their interreligious engagements that support the larger efforts of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in respectful and mutual interreligious relationships on behalf of [justice, peace, reconciliation, and] the common good.

8. Direct the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations to provide support and guidance towards the accomplishment of these objectives and to report back to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

9. Express its’ thanks to the planning committee for the Consultation on an Interreligious Stance, the writing team, and all those who attended the consultation, for their work in developing “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).”

The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

Introduction

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) long has advocated positive relationships with people of other religious traditions. We have seen these relationships as a specific instance of Christ’s universal command to “… love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind” and to “love your neighbor as yourself” (Mt. 22:37, 39). This statement affirms that tradition.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) often has fostered a love for people of other religious traditions, but many times we have not. The first is cause for celebration, thanking God for the grace to be faithful. For the second, the church resolves to do better.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has not always agreed on how to do better. Disagreements over how to respect people of other religious traditions often have been sharp. Yet as we become increasingly aware of the world’s religious diversity, all areas of the church are called to relate positively to people of other religious traditions.¹

Many things draw us together in respect for those who have religious commitments different from our own, including the example and person of Jesus Christ, the evident need for religious peace, the necessity of meeting human needs in a world of poverty and want, and the biblical call to solidarity amid our diversity.

Other things, though, work to pull us apart, including our sometimes self-serving theologies (both pluralist and exclusivist), misplaced goals (such as an overemphasis on statistical growth), and triumphalistic attitudes.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) acknowledges that among ourselves we will disagree on how to relate to others even as we strive together to understand Jesus’ commandment amid a world with people of many different religious traditions. The stance offers help to chart the way forward.

Biblical Backgrounds and Teachings

Interreligious appreciation must arise out of one’s most profound religious beliefs. For Presbyterians it must arise out of interpretation of the Bible, the church’s confessional statements, Reformed theology, and the lived experiences of the church.
In the Old Testament, the Hebrew Bible, the Israelites found themselves dwelling with Canaanite, Moabite, Babylonian, and Persian peoples among others and influenced by their religious understandings. The stories of God’s gracious activities through Abraham (Genesis 12–17), Joseph (Genesis 37–50), prophets, matriarchs, and patriarchs toward other peoples of the region are part of a growing understanding of God’s love. God’s love is particularized later to cities such as Nineveh (Jonah 3) and to empires such as Assyria and Egypt (Isaiah 19:23–25). And teachings abound: all humans are made in the image of God (Genesis 1:26–27), all have access to God through God’s covenant with Noah (Genesis 9:8–17), strangers are to be treated with hospitality (Leviticus 19:33–34), and God has province over all the nations (which the Psalms tell us repeatedly, e.g., Psalms 47:8).

As the followers of Jesus spread to the cultures of the Roman Empire, they were challenged and influenced by Greek philosophies, Roman emperor worship, Gnostic teachings, and mystery religions of the day. In this setting the writings of the New Testament made crucial contributions that continue to be our guides. As we have indicated above, Jesus’ Great Commandment sets the standard for all of our relationships; furthermore, the Gospel writers and letter writers all expand on the language of God’s love (e.g., 1 John 3, 5).

Much of what we learn about how to relate to people of other religious traditions comes from the letters of Paul. Paul focused on taking the gospel to all people. Paul’s sermon to the Athenians in Acts 17 has provided many with insights helpful to interreligious relationships. As a missionary, Paul encountered a great diversity of religions. Paul took seriously the question: What claims do people of different religions make on one another as they live in accordance with what they believe to be true? Paul’s answer was to honor both our commitments to Christian conscience and our commitments to Christian hospitality.

These passages come to us in the context of other biblical texts. Not all references are loving. Israelites are instructed to destroy Canaanite religious shrines (Deut. 12:2–3), and Paul uses negative terms to describe religious ideas of Jews and Gentiles (1 Cor. 1:22). Some Christians use similar statements to condone disrespecting the religions of other people. Overall, however, the biblical intent is clear: God loves all people—and we are to do likewise.

To be sure, not all the religious resources of the Presbyterian tradition were written to address our current interreligious context. Consider, for example, parts of the Book of Confessions. As might be expected, little is written in the confessions that acknowledges the religious plurality in which most of us live today. In fact, the-confessions contain elements of polemics, even between Christians, that are inappropriate to today’s context. Moreover, The Second Helvetic Confession makes direct negative references to our Jewish and Muslim neighbors, their beliefs and practices (Book of Confessions, 5.014, 5.019–5.020, 5.176, 5.225).

To move in a positive direction in our interreligious relationships and dialogue, these particular texts and the perspectives of our religious neighbors must be acknowledged. As God alone is the Lord of the conscience, the church renounces human judgment in favor of repentance over the harm we have caused our religious neighbors. We repent, but we do not forget, lest we perpetuate unhealthy relationships of division among our neighbors and ourselves.

It is important to reject harmful stereotypes of Jews and Muslims. We also must acknowledge the importance of authentic relationships with people of any religion. Although the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to this point has invested most of its interreligious efforts in relationships with Jews and Muslims, the PC(USA) believes in the importance of relationships with people of every religion.

The Confession of 1967 marked a turning point for Presbyterians in their quest to have loving relationships with people of other religions. It discusses the positive engagement of the church with people of other religions. It reminds the church that in its encounter with other religious traditions it may discover “parallels between other religions and his [sic] own and must approach all religions with openness and respect” (Book of Confessions, 9.42). The confession calls the church to a greater spirit of reconciliation, part of which is an acceptance of human difference.

Foundations for the Future

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been active in interreligious efforts during at least the past four decades as religious plurality has become an issue of prime importance in North America. The general approach to interreligious relations in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has given priority to relationships with people rather than traditions—with Muslims rather than Islam, for example. Statements by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have provided direction to church leaders and guidance to local congregations.

The guidance and direction these statements offered have been and continue to be supported by an Office of Interfaith Relations, which was established in 1988 and has functioned since as a catalyst and a platform for affirming and commending the efforts of Presbyterians in interreligious engagement. Together these actions of successive General Assemblies have established six basic building blocks that serve as a foundation for today’s interreligious initiatives:

Building Block #1: The Church. In our pluralistic society, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes that it must work with others because of the sure faith that the church, through the power of the Spirit, is a sign and means of God’s intention for the wholeness and healing of humankind and of all creation.
In A Brief Statement of Faith (1991) the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirmed, “In sovereign love God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image . . . to live as one community” (Book of Confessions, 10.3, Lines 29–32). The ecclesial implications of this affirmation inform one of the “Presbyterian Principles for Interfaith Dialogue” (211th General Assembly [1999]): “We are called to work with others in our pluralistic society for the well-being of our world and for justice, peace, and the sustainability of creation. We do so in the faith that, through God’s Spirit, the Church is a sign and means of God’s intention for the wholeness and unity of humankind and of all creation.”

At its best, the Christian Church makes God’s gift of community visible in human life, recognizing that God is at work in all of God’s creation. This requires relationships with people belonging to a multiplicity of faith commitments as well as those belonging to none.

Building Block #2: Ecumenical and Interfaith. Presbyterians develop relationships with people of various faiths in ecumenical and interfaith contexts wherever possible.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s interest in interfaith relations has been intimately related to its ecumenical commitments. The 199th General Assembly (1987) called for engagement with those of other religious traditions through “ecumenical and interfaith channels and organizations whenever possible” (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 494, “A Study on Islam,” B.3.e.). This was an extension to interreligious relationships of the historic Lund Principle that churches should do all things together except where differences of conscience require their acting separately.

Building Block #3: Mission, Dialogue, and Evangelism. Presbyterians approach others in a spirit of openness and trust as they follow Jesus Christ in respecting and affirming the freedom of others. Thus the church affirms that dialogical (i.e., mutually interactive) relationships are an authentic and appropriate form of witness in which we share ourselves and our commitments and also listen intently to what others express to us.

All witness must be led by a discernment born of the Holy Spirit, offering opportunities for both speaking and listening. Allegiance to Christ is not compromised in dialogue when we (1) do not bend or trim our faith in order to reach artificial agreement with doctrines of another; (2) learn from other religions insofar as it enriches our relationship with the God revealed in Christ; and (3) express our faith as a part of authentic dialogue (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 452, “The Nature of Revelation in the Christian Tradition from a Reformed Perspective,” IX.F., Christians in Interfaith Dialogue).

Building Block #4: Peace, Justice, and Ecology. Presbyterians are called by God to work with those of other religions for peace, justice, and the sustainability of creation. Experience has taught that the most fruitful interfaith relationships often develop when people of different faiths explore concrete ethical concerns and unite to act on them together.

In 1987, Presbyterians were counseled that “the most fruitful interreligious relationships are likely to develop where persons of different faiths share concrete ethical concerns and can unite to put them into action, with mutual acknowledgment of the religious motivation for action” (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 452, “The Nature of Revelation in the Christian Tradition from a Reformed Perspective,” IX.F., Christians in Interfaith Dialogue).

The practical aspects of human well-being have led to a series of recommendations concerning advocacy and action. “Guidelines for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Participation in Interfaith Bodies” (204th General Assembly [1992]) recommended establishment of relationships with multifaith bodies whose “goals, grounded in spirituality, … enable common work toward justice, peace, and the integrity of creation” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 600, Recommendation 6.c.).

Building Block #5: Modesty in Witness. Presbyterians urge a humble modesty in witness that recognizes God’s Spirit is at work in ways we often least expect. Whatever the form of witness—mission, dialogue, evangelism, peace, justice, environmental issues—the church affirms that it is not called to respond to others in judgment but in awareness of the limitless grace of God.

Statements about God’s ways with humankind have urged upon Presbyterians a humble modesty in witness. “Mission and Evangelism: An Ecumenical Affirmation” (paragraph 43) declared that “… [t]he Spirit of God is constantly at work in ways … that to us are least expected. … Christians seek to discern the unsearchable riches of God and the way he [sic] deals with humanity” (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 551). Yet “The Study Catechism” (answer to question 38), says, “The limits [of] salvation … are known only to God” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 613).
A modesty of claims is present in the statement on “Hope in the Lord Jesus Christ” (section on “We Believe in One Lord, Jesus Christ,” 214th General Assembly [2002], Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 525) when it affirms that grace, love, and communion belong to God and are not ours to determine. Modesty leads to rejection of judgmental attitudes toward others. The PC(USA) evangelism document “Turn to the Living God” (section on “People of Many Religions,” 203rd General Assembly [1991]) reads, “As our Christian affirmation meets the faith of others, we are not called to respond in judgment but in awareness of the limitless, saving presence, power, and grace of God” (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 676).

Building Block #6: Unfinished Conclusions. Presbyterians acknowledge the unfinished nature of our conclusions about relationships with people of different faiths, in recognition of the limits of our knowledge, our sinful nature, and the mystery of God’s workings in human lives.

Not all questions are humanly answerable. Thus, an element of interreligious relationships has been a commitment to be unfinished in our conclusions.

Spheres of Relationship

Interreligious interactions are not limited to just one aspect of living. The implications of loving our religious neighbors as ourselves must pervade all areas of our life together. Following are nine spheres of life in which interreligious understandings are challenging us and need to be acted on by the people of God. These spheres and the suggestions offered are areas for attention and reflection as we implement the policy implications of the building blocks. Each sphere ends with actions that can be undertaken by church agencies, congregations, and individuals.

1. Human Needs

Human need is everywhere. Often the religions of the world are called on to meet the needs of hunger, natural disasters, poverty, and disease. In meeting human needs around the globe, the religions need one another. We can do more together than we can do apart. How do Presbyterians engage in an interreligious response to human need from our position of historical religious and cultural privilege? How can we collaborate with faith partners to meet these pressing challenges?

Actions:

• Engage in self-reflection through education on seminary and college campuses and in congregations to examine breakdowns in existing paradigms of poverty relief.

• Listen to and incorporate the voices of the marginalized and underrepresented, many of whom have led and are leading the way in meeting human needs.

• See ourselves as friends, not competitors, with people and institutions of other religious traditions as we meet human needs around the globe.

• Be willing to be the gracious recipients of humanitarian and spiritual aid from our neighbors of other religious traditions, especially recognizing God’s concern for the poor.

2. Social Justice

The search for social justice in the world today is one of the most compelling reasons for interreligious activity. Global challenges—such as forced migration, human rights violations, unjust imprisonment, militarism, and totalitarianism—cannot be solved by any single segment of the world’s people or any single religion. Social justice cannot be achieved without the cooperation of the world’s religions.

Actions:

• Explore interreligious opportunities for truth and reconciliation work, including formal acts of repentance for unjust actions of the church, past and present.

• Participate at all levels in established multireligious groups working toward the common good.

• Encourage all the PC(USA)’s entities to do social justice work on an interreligious basis, as appropriate.

• Remember that those in need of social justice, including those of other religious traditions, often have much to teach us about how the gospel manifests itself in cultures different from our own.

3. Mission and Evangelism

Mission and evangelism are central to the Reformed tradition. In our relationships with people of other faiths, dialogical interreligious conversations promote the virtues of mutual respect and mutual understanding. This is an appropriate form of witness in the sense that we are as “living letters” that others can read, which Paul wrote about (2 Cor. 3:1–3). We witness because God, the creator of life in all its diversity, acted first.

As we consider witness through mission, evangelism, and dialogue, we commend for study the 2013 World Council of Churches document, “Together Towards Life: Mission and Evangelism in Changing Landscapes.” This document states, “Authentic evangelism takes place in the context of the dialogue of life and action, and in ‘the spirit of dialogue’: ‘an attitude of respect and friendship.’ Evangelism entails not only proclamations of deepest conviction, but also listening to others and being challenged and enriched by others” (“Together Towards Life,” paragraph 95).

In the context of interreligious interactions, we witness to our faith with humility, knowing that what we know about God is limited by our human condition. We accept the challenge of expressing our faith in dialogue, often in spite of the fact that we may not feel as articulate as we would hope, but knowing that peaceful and fruitful relationships with others is surely what God intends as we witness to a truth that is beyond ourselves.

Actions:
• Recognize that the relationship between dialogue and evangelism is not an either/or choice for the church but a both/and requirement.
• Commit to having no hidden agendas in our interactions with people of other religious traditions.
• Have a humble modesty of witness in all our mission and evangelism efforts.

4. Conflict

Too many of the world’s conflicts have a religious component. Religion is used by governments and nongovernmental groups alike either to justify war or to motivate people to fight wars, practice religious discrimination, or engage in acts of persecution. Too often religious people stand by and watch their religions being used to justify conflicts that run counter to the values of love and justice that our traditions espouse.

Actions:
• Advocate justice and peace in all levels of human activity, especially involvement in interreligious peacemaking efforts.
• Work for reconciliation, identifying and resisting destructive interreligious conflict wherever possible.
• Recognize that sometimes Christians may be the cause of conflict; such complicity urges us to repent and change.
• Be open to learn from our religious neighbors.
• Stand with and support, where appropriate, those suffering religious persecution.

5. Families

Interreligious families are common in many of our communities. Challenges can arise for interreligious families as they seek meaningful religious expression across multiple narratives and traditions, work through disagreement and division over religious beliefs, and make choices about how to raise children. Congregations can help families engage issues that likely will arise in their life together.

Actions:
• Engage the whole congregation in important conversations about topics such as: “Families of Origin,” “Life-Cycle Rituals,” “Planning Your Wedding,” “Death and Grief,” “Holiday Observances,” and “Talking with Your Children about God and Values.”
• Draw on spiritual resources to help family members articulate religious values, beliefs, and practices they cherish most and to seek ways to be faithful to them in their family life.

6. Education

Challenges for education in contexts of religious plurality are many. Christians must become self-aware about the assumptions they hold and the habits of mind that guide their thinking about religious neighbors. Christians should know more about the history, beliefs, and practices of our neighbors’ religious traditions.

Actions:
• Articulate a broader definition of education that includes and values lived experiences as a way to engage with people of different religions.
• Develop opportunities for multilevel, interreligious engagement. This might include local, area, or regional conferences involving networks of interreligious people.
• Work to make interreligious dialogue less specialized and more normative, integrated into church members’ lives.
• Identify and share examples of churches engaged in doing interreligious interactions well.
• Train congregational leaders in interreligious work as a way to introduce it to congregations.
• Encourage PC(USA)-affiliated seminaries to expand curriculum that prepares students for ministry in a religiously plural world.
• Reflect more deeply on the interrelationships between mission and evangelism and interreligious work.

7. Communities

Many neighborhoods and communities across the United States are welcoming of greater religious and cultural pluralism. Many are not. People from non-Christian, non-white, non-Western backgrounds often experience discrimination due to religio-cultural bias. Note especially the rise in Islamophobia. Religiously based violence has risen throughout the United States. This violence divides communities and discourages the neighborliness advocated in Scripture and modeled in the life of Jesus Christ.

Actions:
• Reach across religious borders to create community alliances to address social problems in ways congruent with the church’s identity and mission.
• Promote public education regarding religions and the diversity of religious communities.
• Advocate for the rights, protection, and safety of all.

8. Congregations

Even as many congregations are becoming more racially, culturally, and socioeconomically plural, the diversity of the culture at large continues to create challenges: our children develop friendships with their non-Christian acquaintances; our sons and daughters proclaim love for someone from another religious background; our interreligious neighbors invite us and our families to visit their religious services.

In the midst of such opportunities and challenges, the church must make efforts to interact with other religious communities. In the past, we have tended to relate to people of other religions in one-way modes of witness; we now are challenged to forge new relationships of friendship and collegiality that respect our neighbors’ religious search.

Actions:
• Build interreligious relationships not just as a response to crises and conflict, but also as a sign of hospitality and neighborliness.
• Visit our neighbors’ houses of worship when invited, even as we invite our neighbors to visit ours.
• Equip members to appropriately engage religious and social situations involving people of different religious traditions and to receive people from these traditions in Christian contexts.
• Explore what it means to be a Christian community in the midst of multiple faith communities.
• Look for ways to be in dialogue and relationships of mutuality.
• Develop a mutual agreement with another religious community that involves concrete ways in which the two congregations will be in relation.
• Recognize that enduring interreligious alliances can be built around social issues and that people of different religious traditions can work together to address them.

9. Workplace

The interreligious reality of today’s workplace cannot be ignored. Often, the workplace is a space where people for the first time are asked to work across lines of religious difference. Presbyterians have the opportunity to model and express an environment of respect and love for people of other religions in their workplace settings, including respect for holiday observances, time and space for prayer, religious dress, and articles of faith.

Actions:
• Recognize the importance and validity of individuals’ freedom to choose their religious identity and commitments, and advocate that employers work to accommodate the religious practices and observances of employees, knowing that it may not be possible in every case.
• Allow for deeper cooperation and respect among coworkers; education about religious diversity is needed to address much of the prejudice and hatred that exist.

Trust between religious communities is hard-won. In our efforts to build such trust in all these spheres, we will not always see eye-to-eye, especially on issues born from histories of conflict. At times, we may unintentionally misunderstand, disappoint, and hurt one another. Only within a framework of commitment to people of other religious traditions can we remain faithful to these relationships despite such differences and misunderstandings. Following is an affirmation of our commitment to interreligious interactions.

An Affirmation of Interreligious Commitment

We believe the Bible proclaims God’s love for all people, that Christ’s Great Commandment sets the standard for all of our relationships: “… ‘Love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind,’” and, empowered by the Holy Spirit, “… ‘love your neighbor as yourself’” (Mt. 22:37, 39).

We confess that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has sought to live up to its commitment to love people of other religious traditions, but many times we have not;
with God’s help we resolve to do better;
that self-serving theologies and goals and triumphalistic attitudes pull us apart;
with God’s help we resolve to do better;
that some of our confessions and the dated perspectives of our religious heritage have resulted in patterns of unhealthy relationships with people of other religions;
with God’s help we resolve to do better.
We resolve to do better and not perpetuate divisive relationships among our neighbors and ourselves.

God calls us to have loving relationships with people of other religions.

God calls us to approach others in a spirit of openness and trust as we follow Jesus Christ in respecting and affirming the freedom of others.

God calls us, by the power of the Holy Spirit, to work with people of other religions for peace, justice, and the sustainability of creation.

Guided on our way by the Holy Spirit, we will meet human needs, work for social justice, participate in mission and evangelism, pursue peace,
strengthen families,
educate for greater understanding,
nurture diverse communities, value hospitality in our congregations, and respect one another in our workplaces.

We follow Christ’s call to work for God’s kingdom; we believe that God will complete what we leave incomplete. To God be the glory!

Endnote for “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

1. Throughout this document, religion and religious practices include organized religions, folk religions, and indigenous religions and spiritualities practiced throughout our world.

Appendix A: Background to the Interreligious Stance

In our era, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) continues to reflect on questions about faithful and effective interreligious interactions. In a number of documents, studies, and statements, we have addressed a broad array of specific interreligious topics, from our relationship with particular traditions such as Judaism and Islam, to interactions with newer religious movements such as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons), to more general questions about mission, evangelism, dialogue, and universalism.

In many ways, the issues raised as a result of interreligious interactions parallel those raised by intrareligious interactions—that is, ecumenism. At the 218th General Assembly (2008), the PC(USA) approved “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” The PC(USA) had discerned a need for a major document to substantively articulate its relationship to others within the broad Christian household and charged the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) to produce such a statement. One of the findings of the ecumenical stance was that “there was particular energy in the conversation related to interfaith relations and a strong sense that this topic will need to be addressed more fully in another forum” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 517).

Partly in response to this recommendation, the 219th General Assembly (2010) broadened the work of GACER to include interreligious relations, and the committee became GACEIR: the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligions Relations. This broadened committee was charged to act on the recommendation to more fully address interreligious relations. In the spring of 2013, a planning team created the format for a consultation that was held September 19–21, 2013. At that meeting, more than sixty-five church leaders, scholars, and interreligious experts met and identified crucial issues. A writing team began drafting a statement based on the input of the consultation, which included a diverse group of Presbyterians with a range of perspectives on interreligious issues. They were drawn from different theological perspectives, cultural and ethnic backgrounds, and church vocations (denominational staff, pastors, lay leaders, and academics). Also participating were representatives from our global and ecumenical partners and from non-Christian religious traditions.

Recent research done by the Office of Interfaith Relations of the PC(USA) shows that interreligious engagement is a nearly universal experience among Presbyterians in the United States and for many of our partners around the world. Multiplicity of cultures and religious understandings is increasing in large cities and small towns alike, and our relationships—our involvement and collaboration—with adherents of other traditions increasingly are taking place close to home: in our families, neighborhoods, and workplaces.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-02

Advice on Item 07-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 07-02.

The committee recommendation does not indicate how the proposed language strengthens or clarifies G-5.0102. Section F-1.03 and F-1.0404 more completely address the intent of the recommendation.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 07-02 with amendment to Recommendations 3, 4, 6, and 7 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]
“3. [Affirm the commitment of] Confessing the history of Christian domination and supremacy over other religions, which included forced conversions, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms a commitment to work for the common good in society together with people of other faiths and interreligious bodies at all levels; and direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly to appropriately support emerging partnerships for this purpose.

“4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate and work toward meeting human needs, seeking justice, reconciliation, and pursuing peace through interreligious peacemaking, disaster assistance, and solidarity efforts that attend to respectful interactions with persons of different cultural and religious traditions in both the United States and international contexts; and encourage the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels to do the same.

“5. [Text remains unchanged.]

“6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to build capacity for strong and mutual interreligious relationships throughout its ministry areas, to develop and promote resources that support the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels in the church’s efforts to build and strengthen those relationships, and facilitate cooperative efforts with other religious traditions for social justice, recognizing that not all people of a particular faith tradition share the same positions on social issues, and endeavor to include as many positions and voices as possible from those faith traditions. With humility, recognize that people from traditions other than ours, and Christians from other parts of the world can also be our teachers for this work.] Among these [new] resources would be “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” and an accompanying study guide.

“7. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to cooperate with youth and young adults in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in their interreligious engagements that support the larger efforts of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in respectful and mutual interreligious relationships on behalf of [justice, peace, reconciliation, and] the common good.”

The ACREC agrees that in our pluralistic world, Presbyterians need to reach out to other faith communities and we need to do this more and do it better. Given some of the interreligious issues facing the denomination, we need to recognize that playing it safe can lead to complacency. Dialogue for the sake of dialogue alone is not necessarily the way forward and can and has led to difficult impasses.

The ACREC agrees that we need to “stand with and support, where appropriate, those suffering religious persecution and active oppression and violence.” In the tradition of tochecha—Hebrew, sacred rebuke—we need to be aware that sometimes, working for justice can create difficult impasses, but these should be seen as opportunities that challenge us and our partners to rise to higher ground. We should study, reflect, and discern how to ensure resolution not only to our disagreements, but to resolving active oppression and violence in the world around us.

The ACREC urges congregations, councils, and seminaries to study “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” and give careful consideration to the obstacles that stand in the way of meaningful interaction with people of other faiths. What would challenge Presbyterians to reflect on the attitudes and behaviors of our congregations and pastors that hinder progress in difficult conversations? Careful identification of past (and future) obstacles will help us find a productive, active path forward that is loyal to justice rather than giving mere lip service to a sentiment of openness and dialogue.

Item 07-03

[The assembly approved Item 07-03. See pp. 14, 35.]

Review of Christian Churches Together in the U.S.A.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Continue PC(USA) participation in Christian Churches Together in the U.S.A. (CCT). There is no compelling reason to abandon the promise it continues to show as long as there is substantive progress toward addressing identified challenges. The PC(USA) should invest in CCT to help shape its necessary continued development.

2. Encourage CCT to develop a strategy for greater involvement of African American communions.

3. Continue work to ensure substantive participation in leadership and governance by women.

4. Direct the PC(USA) to work within CCT to help it discover what CCT can do beyond issuing public statements. Ecumenical life is more than a shared public voice.
5. Request the Stated Clerk to communicate these recommendations and report to Christian Churches Together and its member organizations.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2010 Referral. Item 08-10. Recommendation 1. That the PC(USA) Become a Full Participant in Christian Churches Together (CCT) for a Period of Four Years, at Which Time a Review of Participation Will Be Done by GACER and Reported to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 627)

A. Assigned Task and Process

At the 212th General Assembly (2000), and in response to concerns voiced within the General Assembly Council (GAC), the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) was asked to design a process “for review of councils and other ecumenical alliances to which the PC(USA) belongs.” The 213th General Assembly (2001) approved the decision. The National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and Christian Churches Together in the U.S.A. are being reviewed this year. The GACEIR appointed the following review team: Scott Anderson (TE), Michael Livingston (TE), Mary Elva Smith (RE), and Y. Dianna Wright (RE). The financial review was done by Ruling Elder Kathy Luekart and Robina Winbush (TE) served as staff.

The review committee examined constitutional documents, websites and transitional documents for both organizations. They also invited PCUSA staff and elected persons involved in both organizations, ecumenical partners, staff, persons involved in governance of both organizations to complete surveys and then followed up with telephone interviews. An in-depth review of the finances of both organizations was also completed.

B. History of Christian Churches Together in the U.S.A. (CCT) and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Relationships

Formed in 2006, Christian Churches Together in the U.S.A. (CCT) is a fellowship of thirty-six national communions, including: African American, Catholic, Pentecostal, Historic Protestant, and Orthodox Churches; and seven national organizations, including American Bible Society, Bread for the World, Evangelicals for Social Action, Habitat for Humanity, National Hispanic Christian Leadership Conference, Sojourners, and World Vision.

National leaders of the participant churches and organizations meet annually for mutual support, to foster Christian unity and evangelism, and to speak to society with a common voice whenever possible.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) authorized the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to become a provisional participant in CCT for a four-year period. At the time of this action, the General Assembly recognized the “unique vision that informs Christian Churches Together is that a hospitable space for growing together must be inclusive of the diversity of Christian families in the United States, including Evangelicals, Orthodox, Roman Catholics, Pentecostals, historic African American Churches, and other racial and ethnic churches” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 575).

Between 2006 and 2010, CCT formalized its organizational structure, acquired staff, held annual gatherings and regular steering committee meetings, and been actively engaged in building fellowship and addressing core commitments of evangelism and poverty in the context of the United States. Over these four years, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) actively participated, sending representatives to the annual CCT gathering, steering committee, and other forum meetings of the CCT.

In consideration of next steps in the relationship between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and CCT, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) appointed a review committee in 2009. Interviews were conducted with representatives from CCT participant bodies and with representatives of churches that have been ecumenically engaged but are not participants. Interviews were also conducted with leadership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and an open call for comments on the matter was made through the Presbyterian News Service.

The 2009 review committee found that participation in CCT is consistent with the policies of the church, including the policy statement, “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” However, the committee also noted that some of the concerns about CCT that existed in its formation remained, specifically about whether women can be fully represented in its leadership, and CCT’s ability to address and place a priority on combating racism in the church and in the larger society.

Though there are some exceptions, by 2009 few of the historic African American churches were still not actively participating in CCT, especially those that held membership in the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. In interviewing those familiar with CCT, there were many who expressed disappointment that CCT has not taken up addressing the history of racial relationships and division within the church and explicitly addressing racism in the larger society.

In preparing its report to the 219th General Assembly (2010), GACEIR concluded that the limited success of CCT in explicitly addressing racism and in creating a structure that limits the possibility of greater inclusion of women in leadership had the potential of undermining the very goal of CCT, to “offer a space that is inclusive of the diversity of Christian families in the United States.” In its own life, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) continues to struggle with concerns for empowerment of women and building a multicultural church community, and while CCT holds potential for being a forum where such concerns could be claimed, that potential was not yet realized. Nevertheless, GACEIR concluded—and the 219th General Assembly (2010) concurred—that it is not yet time to withdraw our support and participation from CCT. The PC(USA)’s commitment to ecumenical partnerships calls us to continue to engage and be active in CCT despite our concerns, and to work to strengthen CCT as we are called by the leading of the Holy Spirit.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved GACEIR’s recommendation that the PC(USA) become a full participant in CCT for a period of four years, and in that time GACER would conduct another review of CCT and bring recommendations to the 221st General Assembly (2014). That review and the recommendations that flow from it are included in this report.

C. Independent Financial Snapshot of CCT

The CCT relies on contributions from member communions (79.6 percent), gifts (9.6 percent), and friends/benefactors (10.8 percent). According to the auditor’s reports, CCT ran deficits of $2,808 in 2009 and $42,528 in 2008. In 2010, CCT used net assets ($31,000) to offset a deficit. In 2011 income exceeded expenses by around $5,000. In 2012, there was a gap between income and expenses of around $1,000.

The CCT is completely dependent on contributions from member communions and other gifts as may be received to support operating expenses. Through May 2013, it had received only 13 percent of the income expected to support expenses; however, operating expenses to date were 32 percent of the overall amount budgeted. The CCT assumes that the costs of the annual meeting will be met by registration fees. This does not seem to be the case in 2013. The gaps between income and expense, in addition to lack of income to support the meeting costs, conceivably could lead to additional use of net assets at the end of the 2013.

Christian Churches Together is a young ecumenical organization. Barely eight years old, CCT still holds promise for significant development while struggling with issues and concerns that were present at its inception and remain unresolved at present.

D. Challenges and Opportunities within Christian Churches Together

Relevant opportunities and challenges have been identified as follows:

Opportunities to:

• represent a rich ecumenical context for PC(USA) engagement with the broadest representation of the Christian community in the United States;
• realize the promise of CCT since its inception: it is a table where a wide spectrum of denominations can gather to seek and express consensus while preserving integrity of each tradition;
• have smaller Christian communions play a more prominent role than was possible in the NCCC (because of a more favorable formula for representation);
• have representatives of participant communions share an expectation that all board members will actively engage in raising research dollars for common work;
• have this diverse national ecumenical organization include some church bodies that have not participated in the traditional historic ecumenical movement;
• have CCT develop statements on social issues and benefit from inclusion and participation by a broader table, including those who haven’t been engaged in such action in the past;
• keep the financial costs of running CCT to a minimum;
• engage top communion participation in an ecumenical organization that is relational in nature; and
• connect Roman Catholic and Orthodox communions with more conservative protestant churches that they would not ordinarily be in relationship with.

Challenges to:

• maintain annual communion cost for participation is a minimum to encourage participation while answering the challenge of long-term sustainability;
• deal with the weaknesses of head of communion leadership: top down, narrowly defined leadership who are predominantly male;
• dramatically grow the CCT membership base;
address the participation of African American communions, which is marginal and does not include communions that have been long-time participants in the ecumenical movement;

- broaden the narrow issue focus and a lack of programmatic substance. The only demonstrable outcomes are the issuance of public statements and accompanying study resources;

- address the CCT’s “Issue of the day feel”—tied to annual meeting themes—there are no implementation strategies for responses to shared concerns;

- address the tacit assumption that simply meeting together and speaking with one voice is enough;

- CCT and NCCC, which both need to strategize for joint witness;

- address the reality that congregations are focused on both ecumenical and interfaith engagement;

- the CCT commitment to partner with other justice-related organizations;

- address the CCT’s relational nature, which is both a strength and a weakness;

- learn how to negotiate differences on major society dividing issues;

- better clarify and define CCT’s unique voice;

- holding infrequent meetings, which hamper CCT’s relational goals and deepening connections to African American and other churches not traditionally involved in the ecumenical movement.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 07-03.

Item 07-04

[The assembly approved Item 07-04 with amendment. See pp. 14, 35.]

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) invite the following churches to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the 222nd General Assembly (2016):

- International: Uniting Reformed Church in Southern Africa, Presbyterian Church of Kinshasa, Church of Bangladesh, [Church partner in] [National Christian Church of] Sri Lanka, Methodist Church in Bolivia, Guyana Presbyterian Church, Presbyterian Church in Grenada, Evangelical Lutheran Church of Russia and Other States, and Evangelical Presbyterian Church of Egypt (Synod of the Nile).

- United States and/or Canada: Orthodox Church in America, International Council of Community Churches, Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and American Baptist Churches, U.S.A.

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations nominates to each General Assembly churches to be invited to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the subsequent assembly (Standing Rule B.2.g.). Ten overseas churches and five churches from within the United States are recommended. Of the overseas churches, we recommend at least one church from each area staffed by the Worldwide Mission area. Of the churches within the United States, we recommend at least two churches from full communion and/or covenant relationships, and at least one church in our conciliar relationships.

The Episcopal Church and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Dialogue

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014)

1. receive the interim report from The Episcopal Presbyterian Dialogue and authorize continuation of the dialogue;
2. request that a final report of the dialogue be given to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

Rationale

Episcopal/Presbyterian Ecumenical Dialogue

Interim Report to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations and to the Episcopal Church General Convention Standing Commission on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations

“Has Christ been divided?”

First Letter of Paul to the Corinthians, 1:13

God established the unity of the church. In our recognition of this unity we of the Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) continue in our journey toward making that unity a more concrete reality for our two worship communities. In our work together over the past three years, we have identified areas of shared ministry that we encourage our churches to undertake.

A. Introduction

The Episcopal Church (TEC) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have had a long history of ecumenical relationship and dialogue. Between 1960 and 1999, the Consultation on Church Union provided the primary venue for multilateral dialogue on matters of ministry and mission. Upon the recommendation of the COCU Plenary Session in 1999, the PC(USA) General Assembly and TEC General Convention authorized our two churches to enter a period of bilateral dialogue focused on unresolved issues of ministry. Between 2002 and 2008, we engaged in this dialogue and while we were not able to resolve the issues sufficiently to move us into full recognition and reconciliation of ministers, we did reach an agreement that would facilitate ministers from churches serving in each other’s churches. This agreement, which is attached as Appendix A, was approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and ratified by our presbyteries in 2009. The 76th General Convention of the Episcopal Church approved the agreement in 2009. Both churches authorized another round of dialogue to continue to address theological and missional issues.

The Episcopal Church appointed the following persons to serve on the dialogue: the Right Reverend Dr. Eugene Sutton (co-chair), the Reverend Amy Coultas, the Reverend Dr. Timothy Mulder, the Honorable Joanne O’Donnell, and the Reverend Dr. Joseph Pagano. The Reverend Margaret Rose served as staff.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) appointed the following persons to serve on the dialogue: Teaching Elder Dr. Dennis Hughes (co-chair), Ruling Elder Anne Bond, Teaching Elder Dr. Christian Boyd, Teaching Elder Kamal Hassan, and Ruling Elder/Deacon Gordon Zerkel. Teaching Elder Robina Winbush served as staff.

The dialogue team met six times on the following dates, November 2010 (Louisville), May 2011 (Washington, D.C.), December 2011 (San Diego), May 2012 (Chicago), May 2013 (Seattle), and January 2014 (Chicago). One meeting had to be cancelled due to Hurricane Sandy in November 2012.

B. Issues Addressed

In our search for greater understanding of each other’s history, polity, and practice, we explored many topics, including:

1. Demographic similarities and dissimilarities of our denominations;
2. Historical, cultural, and social factors that shape our understanding of one another;
3. Our varied understandings of liturgy and its role in worship;
4. Local opportunities for shared congregational ministry;
5. Understanding of our ordered ministries;
6. Historic episcopate—personal, collegial, corporate;
7. Polity;
8. Understanding of the sacraments;
9. Christian formation and theological education;
10. The nature of the church;
11. Our current ecumenical engagements.
In accordance with the mandate given us in the agreement approved by the PC(USA) General Assembly in 2008 and ratified by the presbyteries in 2009, and the TEC General Convention in 2009, we focused our discussions on paragraphs 3, 4, and 7 of the agreement. This included extended conversations about:

- Threefold ordered ministry;
- The historic episcopate;
- Personal and corporate expressions of episcope;
- Our understanding of each other’s ordered ministry, with recognition that these orders, although different, are valid expressions of apostolic ministry;
- Use of the CUIC Eucharistic liturgy as a vehicle for shared Eucharistic ministry;
- Examples of shared congregational ministry; highlights being our conversation with a joint Episcopal/Presbyterian congregation in Minnesota and our meeting with the bishop of the Chicago Diocese and the executive of the Presbytery of Chicago.

C. Issues That Still Need to Be Addressed or Addressed More Fully

- Immigration from the global south; integration of new traditions into our churches;
- Expression of ordered ministries at the local level (congregation v. diocese);
- Continued discussion of the embodiment of episcope (personal, collegial, corporate);
- Necessity for re-ordination;
- How we can help each other further appropriate gifts we already have (proclamation of the word, liturgical theology, and practice) in accordance with paragraph 2 of the agreement;
- How ecumenism can help us address the demographic and cultural changes that are contributing to declining membership in both our denominations;
- Opportunities for shared theological education and formation for ministry.

D. Conclusion

We have discovered that in our conversations we have gained much from the opportunity to spend extended time in dialogue, building trust, learning from each other, and finding the ability to be bold in questioning and challenging our own and each other’s assumptions. We believe that continuing our conversation and exploration holds the promise of yielding enhanced understanding and guidance for our two denominations to explore in moving toward greater implementation and celebration of the unity God has already established in the Body of Christ, our common home.

Appendix A

Agreement Between The Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

(Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 541)

1. We acknowledge one another’s churches as churches belonging to the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church.
2. We acknowledge that in our churches the Word of God is authentically preached and the sacraments of Baptism and Eucharist are duly administered.
3. We acknowledge one another’s ordained ministries as given by God and instruments of grace, and look forward to the time when the reconciliation of our churches makes possible the full interchangeability of ministers.
4. We acknowledge that personal and collegial oversight (episcope) is embodied and exercised in our churches in a variety of forms, episcopal and non-episcopal, as a visible sign of the Church’s unity and continuity in apostolic life, mission and ministry.
5. We agree that authorized ministers of our churches may, subject to the regulations of the churches and within the limits of their competence, carry out the tasks of their own office in congregations of the other churches when requested and approved by the diocesan bishop and local presbytery.
6. We agree that The Episcopal Church will invite members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to receive Holy Communion in their churches and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will invite members of The Episcopal Church to receive Holy Communion in their churches. We encourage the members of our churches to accept this Eucharistic hospitality and thus express their unity with each other in the one Body of Christ.
7. We agree to continue to dialogue in the areas such as diaconal ministries, historic episcopate, the office of elder, etc., that would lead to full reconciliation of our ministries and interchangeability of our ministers.

8. We encourage diocesan bishops and presbyteries to provide regular occasion for planning, discussing, resourcing for missional, educational, and liturgical life together. In addition, to explore possibilities for new church development and redevelopment together.

9. We agree to develop a process to support and implement the above recommendations.

10. We affirm these proposals mark an important step in moving toward the full, visible unity of the Church. We know that beyond this commitment lies a move from the recognition to the reconciliation of churches and ministries within the wider fellowship of the universal Church.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send a letter of appreciation to the World Council of Churches (WCC) staff and leadership for their organization and facilitation of the 10th Assembly.

2. Celebrate the election of the Moderator Agnes Aboum as the first woman moderator of the Central Committee.

3. Commend the WCC efforts in strengthening relationships of understanding and collaboration with interfaith partners.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk to send letters of appreciation to the local host committee and our partner churches in Korea for their gracious hospitality.

5. Encourage PC(USA) congregations and members to continue to pray for the reunification of the Korean Peninsula. [In addition, we encourage the PC(USA) to pray for the Christians in North Korea currently imprisoned for proclaiming the gospel of Christ and to advocate for their release.]

6. [Commend to the PC(USA) the] [Encourage congregations and members to study the PC(USA)] policy statement on climate change, [which was] approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/power-change-us-energy-policy-global-warming).

7. Commend the Bible studies, worship, and music resources from the 10th Assembly to the church for use in the agencies of the General Assembly, mid councils, congregations, and seminaries.

9. Encourage the agencies of the General Assembly to consider ways it may support the work of the WCC as an extension of our own mission and support for mission of ecumenical partners in the WCC.

10. Acknowledge that the PC(USA) struggle for full participation of all members of the Body of Christ is also shared with the WCC and the ecumenical family and continue to pray and look for resources that will help the PC(USA) and the WCC in this endeavor.

Rationale

Narrative Report of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Delegation to the Tenth Assembly of the World Council of Churches

The World Council of Churches held its 10th Assembly October 30–November 8, 2013, in Busan, South Korea. The 220th General Assembly (2012) nominated Teaching Elders Laura Cheifetz, Everdith Landrau, Gradye Parsons, and Robina Winbush to represent the PC(USA). Ruling Elder Sara Lisherness replaced Robina Winbush on the delegation when Ms. Winbush was unable to attend.
Along with delegates from the 349 member churches of the WCC, the assembly also included representatives from specialized ministries, regional and national councils of churches, leaders of world communions and partner ecumenical agencies. The Global Ecumenical Theological Institute brought seminarians and young pastors to Busan to accompany the assembly and study the global ecumenical movement. The assembly also welcomed representatives from other religious traditions as interfaith guests. With delegates and representatives coming from a wide diversity of Christian traditions and more than 140 countries, the assembly is the broadest and most diverse Christian global gathering of its kind. While the Roman Catholic Church is not a member of the WCC, they send a significant delegation and participated fully in the assembly.

The assembly of the World Council of Churches convenes every seven years and is charged with setting the future agenda for the WCC until the next assembly. The Tenth Assembly’s theme, “God of Life, Lead Us to Justice and Peace” framed the gathering in prayer, bible study, fellowship, discernment, and witness.

The assembly was marked by the remarkable hospitality shown by the Korean churches. The Korean churches were wholeheartedly welcoming and very generous. Although there was some disagreement among a few Korean churches regarding the WCC, as evidenced by the presence of protesters outside the convention hall, hospitality and generosity were very much lived and experienced by the attendees of the assembly. Over the weekend, Korean churches and communities hosted thousands of attendees on excursions to explore peace and conflict, and to attend local churches. Participants left aware of and filled with gratitude for the great gift to global Christianity that are Korean Christians.

The multiple spaces for the assembly were places of grace-filled encounter and sometimes struggle, whether they were the Madang, which was home to various exhibits, cultural performances, and gathering spaces; the hall where the participants gathered for prayer; the auditorium, which hosted thought-provoking, difficult, and beautiful daily plenary presentations; the hall in which the delegates engaged in business sessions; committee rooms, where delegates worked on statements and policies to bring to the larger body; the rooms that hosted daily Bible study, ecumenical conversations, pre-assembly events for marginalized communities, regional gatherings, or confessional gatherings; or the spaces throughout Busan, Seoul, and the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) to which participants traveled for the weekend Pilgrimage for Peace.

The assembly in Busan provided a view into the value of struggling through difficult ecumenical relationships. Ecumenism is central to the Presbyterian identity, and at the assembly, ongoing conversation and statements made by some communities indicated both the strong commitment among member churches to the work of ecumenism, and the challenge ecumenism poses internally to other member churches.

The WCC continued to live into its commitment to be inclusive of the whole church, with special attention to women, youth, indigenous persons, and persons with disabilities. The WCC is committed to ensuring regional and confessional diversity as well. In formal and informal conversation, it became clear that the ministry by/to/with lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer persons are not specific to the PC(USA), but are global issues. This conversation was fraught with the very real disagreements and the pain of genuine struggle to define how the churches will respond to rising recognition of sexual minorities.

In a context where churches such as the PC(USA) are culturally dominant, sitting in the vulnerability of difference, of communication missteps and misunderstandings, was important for the delegates.

Music and art was an important component of the 10th Assembly of the World Council of Churches (WCC) in Busan, South Korea. The songs we sang in worship and the performances we saw elaborately interpreted the pain and hope of God’s people. The music created unity and crossed barriers of language, race, ethnicity, gender, sexuality, class, etc. In the opening presentation our host, Korean brothers and sisters, recreated their painful history of oppression and liberation through songs, visual arts, dance, and a life symphony. Their expressive body movements could remind us of our own healing journey in Christ Jesus, creating solidarity with people from all over the world and connecting us in spirit with our Korean brothers and sisters.

Music and art in all their diverse forms are a gift from God that the Church can continue to reclaim for the healing of the nations. While in Busan, we represented the nations! There we witnessed how music and art were used creatively to express God’s love, reconciliation, and forgiveness. After challenging conversations on justice, peace, presentations on poverty and the state of our world, we reclaimed our hope in Jesus Christ and trust in God’s sovereignty with singing and dancing.

Our ecumenical journey with sisters and brothers from all over the world reminded us that music/art is embedded in all of us! The ecumenical community and the PC(USA) can continue to use music/art in all their distinct forms as a witness to God’s activity in the world. As part of the global church, we can continue to open our local churches to healthy and appropriate uses of multicultural art/music to cross barriers and bring encouragement to burdened hearts. Indeed, many hearts were encouraged in Busan by a youth and adult theater ministry from the Philippines. They led the assembly in singing and dancing to a melody, “We are one, we are one in mission, we seek, and we seek the fullness of life.”

The 10th Assembly of the World Council of Churches addressed a number of critical social issues facing the world today; many of them have a direct impact on the global church.
The theme of the assembly, “God of Life, Lead Us to Justice and Peace,” provided a rich platform for addressing peace and justice concerns in worship, plenary, Bible study, ecumenical conversations, and through the pilgrimage that took participants to a number of locations on the Korean peninsula, including the demilitarized zone between North and South Korea and nuclear power plant sites. The location of the assembly in Busan served as a constant reminder of the need for peace in the Korean Peninsula and raised awareness about the continued militarization of the Asia Pacific region.

Other issues receiving consideration at the assembly included concerns for peace in the Middle East, unrest in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and civil conflict in South Sudan. Other justice concerns brought to the assembly included the politicization of religion, climate change, and human rights, particularly for stateless people, people with disabilities, and religious minorities.

The Public Issues Committee (PIC) was tasked with considering and recommending the statements that would be made by the assembly. It received proposals from the Central Committee, and the executive committee of the WCC. Additionally, it received twenty-two new proposals that it was asked to consider, all related to current peace and justice issues facing communities around the world. Many of these proposals did not meet the criteria set forth for consideration by the committee or were included in other statements.

The PIC received four statements from the WCC Central Committee that emerged from a series of reflections and consultation over the course of two years. These substantive statements include:

In addition to these four statements, the assembly also approved statements that addressed the situation in Abeyi in South Sudan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the 100th anniversary of Armenian Genocide, U.S.-Cuba relations, the rights of indigenous peoples, and climate change. All of these statements can be found at http://wcc2013.info/en/resources/documents

The assembly expressed a deep hope that these statements would take on a life of their own, as it invited member churches and ecumenical partners to continue the journey, committing to “work together as a fellowship in a ‘Pilgrimage of Justice and Peace’”

The delegates to the assembly heard the challenge of the structure and witness of ecumenical bodies, with ongoing emphasis on the fact that the WCC is not an organization but a fellowship of churches. The WCC is moving away from serving as a program agency to instead working to facilitate the cooperation of the work of its member churches in fulfilling their shared mandates and witness.

One of the significant actions of the assembly was the adoption of a new statement on mission: “Together Towards Life: Mission and Evangelism in Changing Landscapes.” The International Missionary Council (IMC) was formed in 1921 and in 1961 became part of the World Council of Churches, founded in 1948 out of the other two major strands of 20th century inter-church cooperation, the Life and Work and Faith and Order movements. All three movements trace their origins to the World Missionary Conference held in Edinburgh in 1910.

The IMC was one of the most significant Christian groups of its era. It brought together significant church leaders from around the world, it commissioned the best missiological studies of the day, and it facilitated the formation of national councils of churches in newly evangelized countries and the West. The heir of that work is the WCC Commission on World Mission and Evangelism. The commission presented a new affirmation on mission and evangelism that was adopted by the 10th General Assembly of the WCC in Busan, South Korea. The last official statement on World Mission and Evangelism was approved in 1982.

The statement underscores new realities and new understandings of the church in the 21st century. It recognizes the fact that most Protestant Christians live in the global south and east. It underscores that God’s will is to restore humanity and creation. The statement replaces a key preposition in mission focus. The goal is not mission to the margins but mission from the margins. There is also the common thread back to Edinburgh that witness takes concrete form in evangelism—the communication of the whole gospel to the whole of humanity in the whole world.

The long history of the missionary movement has often been defined by the traditional Eurocentric Christian endeavors that often traveled with or before the country that was expanding its economic interest in a global south or east country. The long-term results were often a mixed appreciation and resentment of those endeavors. The statement is trying to help the church understand that while the physical resources may still be in the northern parts of the globe, the spiritual vitality is in the south and east. For those of us in the Reformed tradition it is the recognition that today the largest denominations are in Africa and South Korea. The call is for the church to receive the insights, wisdom, and cultural understandings of the new center with respect and thanksgiving.

The mission from the margins challenges the church in a number of ways. “Mission from the margins seeks to counteract injustices in life, church, and mission. It seeks to be an alternative missional movement against the perception that mission can only be done by the powerful to the powerless, by the rich to the poor, or by the privileged to the marginalized.” What are the gifts of the margins? Their gifts can be insight to privileged on where the good news and the good life have become enmeshed. Their gifts can be the challenging questions of how neglecting the restoration of creation as well as humanity imperils the planet. The margins can help the church once again listen the Christ as one of the 5,000 without food. Jesus promises that “the last shall be first” (Mt. 20:16). To the extent that the church practices radical hospitality to the estranged in society, it demonstrates commitment to embodying the values in the reign of God (Is 58:6).

The call to recommit to God’s will is to save humanity and creation is reflected in the growing concerns about the environment. “The God of life protects, loves and cares for nature. Humanity is not the master of the earth but is responsible to care for the integrity of creation.” In the presentation of the statement a man from a South Pacific island country shared that the highest point of his island was just a few feet. The theoretical debates about global warming and rising oceans were not theoretical to his people. That is the point. Environmental justice may be debated by a part of the world where it can be discussed with little pain. But in most of the world where the prayer for daily bread is a reality the pain is real. There is an even stronger call to understand evangelism of souls and the world they live in.

Mission and evangelism are at the core of how we understand church. “The church in history has not always existed but, both theologically and empirically, came into being for the sake of mission. It is not possible to separate church and mission in terms of their origin or purpose.” In one of the stronger statements in the paper “Starting with God’s mission leads to an ecclesiological approach” from below.” In this perspective it is not the church that has a mission but rather the mission that has a church. This understanding puts the church as God’s instrument toward God’s aims.

“Evangelism while not excluding the different dimensions of mission, focuses on explicit and intentional articulation of the gospel including the invitation to personal conversion to a new life in Christ and to discipleship.” The statement wrestles with living in a religious plural world. It wrestles with persecution because of religious belief or minority status in a country. One of the affirmations could have been penned at the 1910 Edinburgh conference “We affirm that the gospel of Jesus Christ is good news in all ages and places and should be proclaimed in the Spirit of love and humility.”

Individually and collectively, it was a privilege to represent the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in the Tenth Assembly of the World Council of Churches. We offer this report and recommendations with the prayer that it will both strengthen the PC USA and our ecumenical witness with our sisters and brothers in the World Council of Churches.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014)

1. Receive the report of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Seventh Day Adventist Dialogue.

2. Refer the joint recommendations (found in G., below) to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations for facilitation within the PC(USA).

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) AND SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST DIALOGUE REPORT

2010–2013

A. Preface

“So he came and proclaimed peace to you who were far off and peace to those who were near, for through him both of us have access in one Spirit to the Father. So then you are no longer strangers and aliens, but you are citizens with the saints and also members of the household of God, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, with Christ Jesus himself as the cornerstone. In him the whole structure is joined together and grows into a holy temple in the Lord; in whom also you are built together spiritually into a dwelling place for God” (Eph. 2:17–21).

B. The Charge

In 2010 the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the General Conference of the Seventh-day Adventist Church commissioned a formal dialogue between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the North American Division of the Seventh-day Adventist Church (hereafter referred to as PC(USA) and SDA). This would be the first official denomination-to-denomination dialogue for the SDA church. The given purposes of the dialogue were to promote understanding between the two churches, remove stereotypes, explore possible areas for cooperation, and discover what the churches might helpfully learn from each other. From the outset it was understood that organic unity of the two churches was not the goal.

Two other Reformed denominations—the Christian Reformed Church in North America and the Reformed Church of America—were invited to send observers to the dialogue’s proceedings. The Christian Reformed Church of North America (CRC) accepted the invitation, sending an observer with full participation privilege in all conversations.

The dialogue groups appointed by both churches consisted of the following persons:

PC(USA): Sheldon W. Sorge (co-chair), General Minister, Pittsburgh Presbytery; David Cortés-Fuentes, pastor, Emmanuel Hispanic Presbyterian Church, Claremont, California; Eileen Lindner, pastor, Tenafly Presbyterian Church, Tenafly, New Jersey; Barbara Wheeler, president (retired) and director of the Center for the Study of Theological Education, Auburn Seminary, New York, New York; Staff: Robina Winbush and Carlos Malave, Louisville, Kentucky.

SDA: William Johnsson (co-chair), editor, Adventist Review (retired), Silver Spring, Maryland; Kenneth Denslow, assistant to the president, North American Division, Columbia, Maryland; Denis Fortin, professor of Historical Theology, Andrews Seminary, Berrien Springs, Michigan; Teresa Reeve, associate professor of New Testament Contexts, Andrews Seminary, Berrien Springs, Michigan; Halvard Thomsen, assistant to the president, North American Division (retired), Apple Valley, California.

CRC: Douglas Bratt, pastor, Silver Spring Christian Reformed Church, Silver Spring, Maryland.

It should be noted that the dialogue group included ministers, laypersons, pastors, professors, and administrators, as well as persons of various racial ethnic backgrounds. This variety proved invaluable in generating a robust set of conversations.

This dialogue built on the work begun by a series of informal annual conversations between PC(USA) and SDA representatives from 2006 to 2008. Topics of discussion included the following:

- history and organization of both churches;
- authority of Scripture and the authority of non-canonical writings, especially the PC(USA) Book of Confessions and the writings of Ellen G. White;
- religious freedom and divine election;
- law and gospel;
- Sabbath-keeping;
- social justice;
- health advocacy.

C. Dialogue Meetings

The dialogue group met for conversation, worship, and fellowship four times:

- October 26–28, 2010—Chicago, Illinois. Hosted by the PC(USA) at the national headquarters of its full-communion partner Evangelical Lutheran Church in America.
- November 5–8, 2011—Silver Spring, Md. Hosted by the SDA church at its world headquarters. This meeting included participation in the education hour and Sabbath worship of the Sligo Seventh-day Adventist Church in Takoma Park, Maryland, on November 5, as well as participation in the education hour and Sunday worship at the St. Mark Presbyterian Church in Rockville, Maryland, on November 6.
- September 10–12—Grand Rapids, Michigan. Hosted by the PC(USA) and CRC at the Prince Conference Center of Calvin College.
- October 22–25—Battle Creek, Michigan. Hosted by the SDA church at the Yarrow Conference Center.
D. Conversation Topics

Conversations continued around the topics already raised in the exploratory conversations, as listed in B. above. In addition, the following topics were engaged with formal presentations and follow-up discussions:

2010

• Biblical hermeneutics
• Current pressing theological, discipleship, and institutional issues for each church

2012

• Ministerial vocation
• Christian discipleship
• Church education

2013

• SDA Michigan heritage
• Distinctive doctrinal foci
  —SDA: The heavenly sanctuary and pre-Advent judgment
  —PC(USA): Predestination and election

E. Discoveries

Our primary discovery must be stated with utmost clarity: The members of this group unanimously and heartily affirm each other as true Christians. Based on our study and experience, we declare unreservedly that our respective churches are part of the one church of Jesus Christ.

We make this affirmation on the basis of many things we hold and do in common, and yet we acknowledge real and significant differences between our denominations. We addressed these as candidly as we did charitably.

1. Differences of Practice and Doctrine

a. Sabbath—Presbyterians usually worship on Sunday, the day of our Lord’s resurrection, while Seventh-day Adventists always worship on Saturday, the seventh day Sabbath of creation. In the PC(USA) the day of worship is considered an item of adiaphora (something over which disagreement is non-consequential), while for the SDA it is integral to identity and mission. In the SDA church, Sabbath is more scrupulously observed as a day of rest than Sunday is in the PC(USA). While the SDA church holds Sabbath-keeping precious and believes calling for Sabbath observance is part of its core mission, it does not hold it as essential for salvation.

b. Righteousness—Presbyterians consider witness to public social justice as essential to mission. Seventh-day Adventists place personal righteousness at the center of practice and belief. There are exceptions to these generalizations: Adventists are strong advocates for public health and religious freedom, and Presbyterians place considerable value on disciplined living.

c. Advent—Seventh-day Adventists place the hope of Christ’s imminent return at the core of their life and mission, while for Presbyterians Advent hope is far less prominent. Eschatology, a primary theological locus for the SDA church, carries relatively minor emphasis in the PC(USA). Adventists are correspondingly more deeply engaged with biblical apocalyptic.

d. Election—Presbyterians are strongly committed to an understanding of divine sovereignty that acknowledges human salvation and service as flowing entirely from God’s gracious election. Seventh-day Adventists maintain an Arminian understanding that highlights human freedom and responsibility in responding to God’s saving grace that has been made available to all.
e. Worship—While both denominations understand public worship to revolve around prayer, Word, and the Lord’s Table to which all Christians are invited, there are significant differences in actual practice. The SDA church prefers the word “ordinance” where the PC(USA) speaks of “sacrament,” and the SDA church adds foot-washing to the service of the Lord’s Supper. The SDA church practices and recognizes only believer’s baptism by immersion, while the PC(USA) practices infant baptism with profession of faith following confirmation, and considers the amount of water a matter of adiaphora. PC(USA) worship typically follows the historical ecumenical order and is closely scripted, while SDA worship is typically more context-oriented and less scripted.

f. Ecclesiology—Presbyterians affirm an ecclesiology that is inherently catholic, while Seventh-day Adventist ecclesiology focuses its primary attention not on the church catholic but on the remnant of believers who accept and live in accordance with the message of end-time preparation for the second coming.

g. Physical wholeness and creation care—Seventh-day Adventists are highly attentive to cultivating personal health through diet and disciplined living, while Presbyterians pay relatively little attention to members’ personal diets and health practices. Seventh-day Adventists do not understand particular diet and health regimens as essential to salvation, but see them rather as good stewardship of our God-given bodies. For Presbyterians, stewardship of creation, by contrast, focuses primarily on ecological concerns.

h. Ecclesiastical scope—The SDA church is a world church whose policies are established by a general conference composed of members from around the world, of which members in North America are a small minority. The PC(USA) is an American church, and as such sets its own policy without the need for global ratification.

i. Denominational unity—Presbyterians have a history of dividing and forming new denominations when disagreements arise, sometimes followed, after long intervals by reunions and mergers. Despite many internal disagreements, Seventh-day Adventists have experienced no major division since their mid-nineteenth century founding.

j. Social diversity—Presbyterians consider diversity a core theological value, and invest themselves heavily in issues of public justice related to socioeconomic diversity. The Seventh-day Adventist church has not generally engaged in public social justice advocacy, but in practice its congregations typically are more socially and racially diverse.

k. Religious freedom—Although both denominations advocate publicly for religious freedom, this theme is much more central to SDA public witness than it is for the PC(USA).

l. Public government—Presbyterians are significantly more involved as participants and advocates in public government than are Seventh-day Adventists.

m. Ordination—The PC(USA) ordains both men and women to all offices of the church; the SDA church is studying but has not yet permitted women to be ordained as clergy, though SDA female elders may serve as pastors. The PC(USA) has made it possible for jurisdictions that so wish to consider GLBT persons for ordination, whereas the SDA church has not.

n. Biblical hermeneutics—In the PC(USA), doctrinal warrants are constructed by comparing scripture with scripture in deep consultation with the historical stream of Christian interpretation. The SDA church also constructs doctrinal warrants by comparing scripture with scripture, but does not correspondingly refer to Christianity’s historic confessional traditions in shaping its doctrines.

o. Ecumenical engagement—The PC(USA) has been at the forefront of the ecumenical movement among Christian churches, and has adopted full communion agreements with several denominations. The SDA church has sought no such agreements with other denominations, yet it has participated as an observer in many ecumenical events, and has engaged in several dialogues with church coalitions such as the World Alliance of Reformed Churches and the Lutheran World Federation. Until this dialogue with the PC(USA), it had engaged in no formal church-to-church conversations.

2. Commonalities in Practice and Doctrine

a. Christian orthodoxy—Both the PC(USA) and the SDA church are firmly committed to the essentials of biblical Christian faith as summarized in the Apostles’ Creed. The SDA is not a creedal church, and thus does not subscribe to the Apostles’ Creed per se, but it joins the PC(USA) in affirming it as a faithful exposition of essential Christian teaching.

b. Missionary vocation—Both churches believe themselves called to bear joyful public witness to God’s saving work for all humanity through the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus. For Adventists, evangelism has a special urgency, given their strong expectation of the Lord’s imminent return. For Presbyterians, evangelistic mission goes hand-in-hand with engagement of social issues.

c. Scripture alone—While both churches look to the testimony of trusted witnesses for guidance in matters of Christian faith and practice (e.g. the PC(USA) Book of Confessions or the writings of Ellen G. White), any authority these witnesses bear derives only from their faithful witness to Scripture. All Christian doctrine is rooted in the testimony of the sixty-six books of the Bible.

d. Grace alone—Both churches fully affirm that salvation is rooted entirely in divine grace rather than human merit.

e. Faith alone—Both churches acknowledge that salvation cannot be earned by keeping God’s law, and that our only pathway to salvation is through faith in the saving work of Jesus Christ.

f. Law and gospel—Both the Presbyterian tradition and Seventh-day Adventist doctrine emphasize the moral law of the Old Testament as having continuing benefit and force for Christians. Presbyterians speak of the “third use of the law”; Adventists emphasize the permanence of the Decalogue as revealing God’s intention for how we should live.

g. Stewardship—Both churches believe themselves called by God to a stewardship of life and nature that shuns ostentation. Seventh-day Adventists feel a special sense of call to honor God by stewarding their own bodies responsibly and carefully.

h. Governance—The PC(USA) and the SDA have similar systems of representative governance, with interconnected local, regional, and national governing bodies. Both churches are governed by councils composed of laity and clergy. Both churches recognize the three offices of deacon, elder, and pastor as forming the core leadership of the church.

i. Racial reconciliation—The PC(USA) and SDA churches are fully committed to promoting and embodying racial reconciliation in the church.

j. Openness to new things—The SDA church maintains openness to the guidance of new prophetic insights under the authority of Scripture, and the PC(USA) is committed to embracing the ongoing reformation of the church by the word of God.

k. Promotion of public health and welfare—Medical mission service, hunger relief, and disaster relief are hallmarks of both PC(USA) and SDA world outreach.

l. Emphasis on education—Both the PC(USA) and SDA church emphasize the importance of education, as reflected in the establishment of scores of thriving colleges, universities, and seminaries. The SDA church is also committed to offering church-related primary and secondary schools to as many of their children as possible.

m. Internal challenges—Both denominations have spent recent years in struggles about who may be ordained to the ministry of the Gospel. Both find it difficult to retain their youth, even as many folk in both churches resist changes that may be necessary for their churches to thrive.

F. Significance of This Dialogue for Both Denominations

The discovery and engagement of genuine mutually-edifying fellowship in Christ is the most important outcome of the dialogue. Even as we profited much from our time together, we urge Seventh-day Adventists and Presbyterians everywhere to engage in the activities that brought us so much benefit: sharing our faith journeys and our primary faith commitments, discussing our respective hopes and challenges, seeking out that which we hold in common, being honest about our differences, praying together, worshiping in each other’s churches, and enjoying extended table fellowship. If our dialogue encourages other Presbyterians and Seventh-day Adventists to begin gathering locally for such purposes, we believe it will have made a real and important difference for our churches.

As we journeyed together, both sides discovered several things we would do well to learn from each other. Presbyterians indicated several places where they believe the PC(USA) could significantly benefit from the SDA witness:

- Developing an eschatology that nurtures a more robust hope for the second Advent, and with it a more acute sense of the church’s missionary urgency.
- Nurturing more vital multicultural congregations by focusing more on mission and less on ourselves.
- Urging members to be more diligent in the practice of Sabbath-keeping.
- Becoming more attentive to God’s call to be a community set apart from the ways of the world.
- Promoting healthy personal life choices as a Christian norm.

Adventists also highlighted several areas where they believe the SDA church could be strengthened by the witness of the PC(USA):

- Becoming more engaged with other churches to strengthen common bonds in the Lord.
Relying more fully on historic church texts and liturgical orders in planning worship.

Developing a stronger theology of church governance.

Educating the church for engaging more broadly in transformative social justice work.

Emphasizing the church’s primary purpose as glorifying God, from which all its mission then flows.

Through this dialogue, we learned that our distinctive areas of faith and practice, rather than separating us, can offer opportunity to learn from each other. This requires our relearning what we thought we already knew about each other. By delving more fully into the biblical, historical, and theological bases for SDA teachings on Sabbath and Advent, Presbyterians were able to set aside misconceptions about these SDA emphases, and came to realize how much the PC(USA) could benefit from them. Likewise, the Adventists learned better the Presbyterian understanding of divine sovereignty and election, the theological roots of its ecumenical and social justice commitments, and how those concerns could helpfully inform their church also.

G. Recommendations

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Seventh-day Adventist dialogue group recommends:

1. That both denominations extend invitations to representatives from the other church to attend their national meetings as observers.

2. That seminaries of both denominations be urged to invite representatives from the other denomination to lecture on their campus, and that seminarians from both denominations be recruited to form interdenominational fellowship and study groups.

3. That both denominations urge their local pastors and regional judicatory leaders to make special efforts to gather with each other regularly for prayer, mutual learning, and table fellowship.

4. That the SDA church be encouraged to seek church-to-church dialogue engagement with other denominations.

H. Benediction

With great gratitude for the opportunity to engage each other in learning more fully what our Lord would have us to do, we commend to our churches these study findings, and we commend each other to the grace and peace of our Lord.

“Now to him who is able to keep you from falling, and to make you stand without blemish in the presence of his glory with rejoicing, to the only God our Savior, through Jesus Christ our Lord, be glory, majesty, power, and authority, before all time and now and forever. Amen” (Jude 24–25).

Item 07-08

[The assembly approved Item 07-08. See pp. 14, 35.]

Review of National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Approve that membership and participation in the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. (NCCC) be continued. [“To be Presbyterian is to be ecumenical.” This has long been in the forefront of our commitment and we continue to be instrumental leaders in the ecumenical movement.]

2. Direct the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to continue to assess and evaluate our financial commitment to the NCCC.

3. Affirm our PC(USA) intent to seek to sustain a basic level of support to NCCC both through financial and human resources.

4. Acknowledge the complex work of Church World Service and its separation from the NCCC, and commend membership and financial support of Church World Service for consideration by the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

5. Direct that an accounting by NCCC at a defined interim before the next full General Assembly review be requested with regard to the redesigned governance with the Heads of Communion involvement, the current state of the budget, and the work of the convening tables in effectiveness and breadth of participation by the member communions.
6. Direct that word of appreciation be given to the staff and leadership for taking a hard look at the current realities of ecumenical ministry in this era and seeking a plan designed to better facilitate its work, direction, and budget.

7. Request the Stated Clerk to communicate these recommendations and report to the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and its member communions.

Rationale

A. Assigned Task and Process

At the 212th General Assembly (2000), and in response to concerns voiced within the General Assembly Council (GAC), the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) was asked to design a process “for review of councils and other ecumenical alliances to which the PC(USA) belongs.” The 213th General Assembly (2001) approved the decision. The National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and Christian Churches Together in the U.S.A. are being reviewed this year. The GACEIR appointed the following review team: Scott Anderson (TE), Michael Livingston (TE), Mary Elva Smith (RE), and Y. Dianna Wright (RE). The financial review was done by Ruling Elder Kathy Luekart and Robina Winbush (TE) served as staff.

The review committee examined constitutional documents, websites and transitional documents for both organizations. They also invited PCUSA staff and elected persons involved in both organizations, ecumenical partners, staff, persons involved in governance of both organizations to complete surveys and then followed up with telephone interviews. An in-depth review of the finances of both organizations was also completed.

B. Changing Ecumenical Landscape

The purpose of the ecumenical movement is to help make manifest God’s intention for the household of God. In the past, churches have often limited that vision to a unified Church that would help bring about a unified world or even unify the world within it. The ecumenical vision that is part of God’s vision is actually much larger. John 10:10b describes the vision as God’s desire that the inhabitants of the household of God “may have life, and have it abundantly.” This is a vision of justice and peace that allows space for all of God’s creation to live in its fullness. God is continually active in bringing loving wholeness to creation, where all can live in peace. God is especially attentive to those who have been excluded from the fullness of life and calls the church to cooperate in this process.

The ecumenical movement in the United States has sought to give visible expression to this theological imperative, but at the present moment is being challenged and reshaped as a result of our dramatically changing landscape. The churches that have traditionally participated in North American conciliar bodies like the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. (NCCC), for example, find themselves in numerical decline, with sense of diminished identity and a growing set of internal tensions.

We have also witnessed the dramatic growth of new church bodies, some of which are “post denominational” and most of which have not participated in the traditional conciliar organizations like the NCCC. These churches are helping to create cooperative ecumenical ties across a broader spectrum of the Christian family, such as Christian Churches Together (CCT) here in the United States.

Our contemporary ecumenical witness becomes ever more urgent in a culture that is increasingly polarized, both politically and socioeconomically. Together with the countervailing forces of racial and ethnic diversity and religious pluralism, this unique moment in history cries out for U.S. Christians to speak and act in ways that transcend denominational identity and are faithful to the high priestly prayer of Jesus, “that all may be one” (John 17).

C. History of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. (NCCC) and Presbyterian Relationships

Founded in 1950 as a successor to the Federal Council of Churches, the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. (NCCC) was born in hope and faith in the aftermath of World War II. The NCCC welcomes all churches that meet the basic requirement of confessing Jesus Christ, the incarnate Word of God, as Savior and Lord into a mutual search for and response to the will of God in today’s world. Currently, thirty-six communions are members of the NCCC that presently include mainline Protestant, Episcopal, Orthodox, historic African American, and peace churches.

From the beginning, Presbyterians have been at the heart of this endeavor to “covenant with one another to maintain ever more fully the unity of the Church, responding to the gospel revealed in the Scriptures, confessing together Jesus Christ, the incarnate Word of God, as Savior and Lord” (NCCC Preamble).

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is consistent with the Preamble of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. as it affirms that “Unity is God’s gift to the Church in Jesus Christ. Just as God is one God and Jesus Christ is our one Savior, so the Church is one because it belongs to its one Lord, Jesus Christ. The Church seeks to include all people and is never content to enjoy the benefits of Christian community for itself alone. There is one...
Church, for there is one Spirit, one hope, ‘one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all and through all and in all’ (Eph. 4:5–6)” (Book of Order, F-1.0302a).

Historically, the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. has brought churches into regular fellowship, theological dialogue, and joint social and programmatic action. Three major streams of activity have characterized the central ministry of the NCCC: (1) Faith and Order, (2) Life and Witness, and (3) Christian Education.

Through sixty-three years of struggle to be faithful churches in times of plenty and times of crisis, the NCCC has responded to challenges of war and nuclear threat, provided the best current scholarship through preparation of the Revised and New Revised Standard Versions of the Bible (RSV and NRSV), engaged in efforts to ameliorate poverty and racism, advocated for human rights, supported environmental justice, linked public policy advocacy to the needs and concerns of church councils around the world, prepared the ongoing Uniform Lesson Series for church schools, held conferences and done research on issues as diverse as evangelism, radio/TV communications, gender, and family issues.

As a courageous and prophetic voice, the NCCC has at times engendered controversy around unpopular positions, including some, like urging the recognition of the People’s Republic of China that were simply ahead of their time. The NCCC rigorously questioned a preemptive strike in Iraq in 2003, for example, and urged United Nations involvement in peaceful initiatives for change. Church partners around the world have turned to the NCCC to respond to international issues that are vital to these partners’ life as churches. Advocating on their behalf may be in tension with policies that serve only our national interests. Presbyterian participation in the world of the NCCC has been so strong and consistent that, as one elected official of our church once remarked, a critique of National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. social witness policy is also a critique of PC(USA) social witness policy!

Many denominations that are not members of the NCCC participate and have contributed financially in many ministry areas and programs of the NCCC, such as Faith and Order Commission; the Education, Leadership Ministries Commission; and the Communications Commission. Although there has been much collaboration between some NCCC commissions and programs and the Roman Catholic Church, and Pentecostal denominations, no step that would lead to full membership in the council has been successful to date.

Church World Service (CWS) was structurally a part of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. since the NCCC’s inception. In the late 1990s, CWS sought greater autonomy over its own funds and programming and reorganized itself as a separate nonprofit corporation. Separation of CWS from the NCCC was seen as necessary to enable clearer bookkeeping and tighter control over the monies designated for the advocacy, relief, and development work of CWS, as distinct from NCCC programming funds. In 2013, the boards of CWS and NCCC took actions to cease the General Assembly, thereby completing the separation between the two organizations.

Like the denominations that comprise the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., the NCCC has undergone financial hardships and the winnowing of staff in recent years. With the departure of NCCC General Secretary Michael Kinnamon at the end of 2011 and the election of President/General Secretary James Winkler at the end of 2013, the NCCC is now in a watershed period of transition and reinvention.

D. NCCC Revisioning and Restructuring

In September 2012, the NCCC governing board adopted a revisioning and restructuring plan that calls for the member churches and other partners of the NCCC to seek visible unity in Christ and work for justice and peace, but with a different organizational pattern functioning in a dramatically changed context:

Yet amidst a rapidly changing ecclesial, ecumenical, and inter-religious world we find ourselves ill-equipped to live into this vision. The institutional structures and presuppositions of our past too often have become an obstacle to our future. Therefore, the primary question [the NCCC plan] seeks to address is: How do we transition from a structure that is rigid, siloed, and outdated to one that is agile, integrated, and flexible, all while building a culture based on collaboration, transparency, dignity, and trust?

The contours of the restructure call for:

Three areas of ministry: The new structure envisions a future in which the NCCC focuses on three integrated areas of work: theological study and dialogue, interreligious relations and dialogue, and joint action and advocacy for justice and peace. Cross-cutting work on education, formation, and leadership development will enhance each of these core areas, and bolster the special role of the NCCC within the ecumenical landscape for communicating the faith through education and Scripture.

NCCC’s Primary Role as Convener: The NCCC will organize itself as convener of the churches so that the member churches and other partners might work toward visible unity in Christ and galvanize prophetic public witness through joint action and advocacy of the churches. The work will be organized at overlapping tables that integrate the three-pronged focus and draw upon synergies with partners, especially local and regional ecumenism.

A Rapid Response Table: comprised of advocacy, policy, and communications staff from the churches will give the member churches a stronger voice in today’s public square. Creative partnerships with seminaries will be explored for their potential to enhance the NCCC’s theological work while providing ecumenical formation for the next generation of church leaders. The NCCC’s historic commitment to the work of Faith & Order will be renewed in light of today’s church-dividing issues; and its engagement with people of other faiths will be reinforced in light of today’s rapidly changing religious landscape. The NCCC’s witness for racial justice, economic justice, and justice for women in church and society will be revitalized, beginning with how the churches relate to one another as the NCCC.

An Annual Christian Unity Gathering: The NCCC will provide space through a periodic gathering for the churches to deepen relationships; to discern strategic, time-limited priorities; and to define specific goals, outcomes, and timelines for collaborative action and advocacy for justice and peace. This gathering will be comprised of all constituents and partners of the NCCC, including heads of communion, ecumenical officers, and staff of the member communions, along with participants in NCCC tables, emerging ecumenists, academicians, and local and regional ecumenical leaders.

Financial Sustainability: A formula will be developed so that every communion is able and will be expected to financially support the NCCC to be considered a member. The NCCC funding streams will be streamlined, with a certain percentage of designated giving going to support the ministry of the whole. A dues structure for the categories of affiliation will be created. A process for seeking grants related to the strategic priorities will be developed. As the royalties return from the Bible translations, the NCCC will begin building back its reserves.

Streamlined Governance: The NCCC’s governance will be clearly differentiated. The heads of communions will constitute a smaller governing board, at least for an interim period. Committees of the board will be comprised of ecumenical officers, church staff, local and regional ecumenical leaders, emerging ecumenists, and partners. An intergenerational think tank will be formed, serving in an advisory capacity to the board and staff, with emerging ecumenists comprising at least 60 percent of membership.

Stronger Partnerships: Strategic partnerships and collaborations with others will be a given in the restructure. New categories of affiliation for partner organizations, congregations, interfaith partners, and local and regional ecumenical bodies and leaders will be created. Crucial conversations with other leading ecumenical bodies in the U.S. will continue. Beyond existing member communions—legacy members as it were—membership will be open to all churches that are national in their presence, and who profess Jesus Christ as the Son of God and Savior as revealed in the Bible.

Implementation of the NCCC restructure plan will be phased in through mid 2014, with a new executive director in place before the end of 2013.

E. NCCC Financial Snapshot

The NCCC has been in a prolonged period of contraction and transition that continues to this time. The NCCC had an operating deficit of $1.3 million in 2011, and $1.1 million in 2012, compelling the governing board to draw down board designated funds to cover the shortfall. At the time of writing, no information was available about the calendar year 2013 budget.

The primary sources of NCCC operating revenues are contributions from member communions (44 percent), sales (26 percent), foundation grants (14 percent), fundraising (6 percent), interest income (3 percent), and fees from Church World Service (6 percent). Operating revenues decreased by 36 percent from 2011 to 2012.

The NCCC has taken steps to manage its budget, reducing operating expenses by 18 percent from 2011 to 2012. It is reducing office space by closing the New York office. It reduced staff and instituted staff furloughs. It worked on recovering receivables from Church World Service, which in 2012 was more than $400,000. However, these actions were not enough to close the gap between revenues and expense in 2012.

A significant impact on the NCCC’s current and future budgets is the cost of retiree health care and pension obligations for employees hired before January 1, 2000. In 2012, the auditor reported that the NCCC’s retiree health plan was underfunded.

Without final 2013 budget numbers it cannot be determined if the steps taken in 2012 to reduce operating expenses and increase operating revenues have been fruitful. It is clear from a review of the meeting notes of the NCCC’s Administration and Finance committee, the executive committee, and the governing board that all are aware of the difficult financial situation of the NCCC. The cost of retiree health and pension benefits will continue to be a drag on the mission of the NCCC, as will its current organizational model. At some point the governing board will run out of assets to draw down to continue to fund the organization.

F. Challenges and Opportunities within the NCCC

In light of the opportunities and challenges facing the NCCC a revised mission statement was developed: “The NCCC is a community of communions called by Christ to visible unity and sent forth in the Spirit to promote God’s justice, peace, and the healing of the world.” The NCCC governing board and its various parts now have before them the living into and fulfilling of that mission.
The GACEIR Review Team identified the following opportunities and challenges facing the NCCC:

Opportunities to:

- Rebuild the national ecumenical conciliar expression.
- Engage heads of communion (HOC) in leadership in life of the council.
- Involve a new generation of young people in the life and work of the council.
- Draw from leadership new stamina and willingness to take risks in the current era. Work within a smaller, more flexible, less complex structure.
- Develop a more integrated approach to the issues identified as focus.
- Invest time, energy, and money in more narrowly focused justice and witness issues.
- Rebuild and develop partnership with other organizations working on same or related issues; e.g. peace, mass incarceration, and others as identified over time.
- Create a way for smaller and less involved communions to find a place at the table.
- Realign the budget in light of the new structure and continuing mission of the council.
- Build stronger commitment for participation of member communions through both human and financial resources.
- Work with other councils around the world on common issues; e.g. peace in the Middle East.

Challenges to:

- Give attention to the uniqueness of NCCC as new forms of ecumenism are opening; e.g. Christian Churches Together (CCT).
- Work within constraints of a changing world; e.g. generational and cultural shifts that raise questions about the reality of developing a unified budget at this time. Will lose much of the cognate giving through this practice.
- Recognize the loss of public voice and credibility and the need to work to rebuild it.
- Be aware of the denominational tendency to think of NCCC as “them,” forgetting that we are indeed not only “us” but fully a part of “them.”
- Recognize that budgeting through denominations may appear simpler and more direct through unified giving but that it has not been working for denominations and is unlikely to be adequate for the NCCC budget as well.
- Address the declining interest in church among young people and people of other generations yet who are invested in various social issues of justice but not the church.
- Recognize the loss of voices of people of color, women, youth, broad-based stakeholders at the council table when the heads of communion (HOC) make up the council and the general secretary/president become one office.
- Pay attention to the inclination of old postures and patterns to reemerge; e.g. cynicism, distrust, skepticism, and counterproductive critique.
- Be aware of denominations diminished capacity in the justice and witness arenas and that the role of the NCCC has potential for a stronger voice.
- Note carefully the impact of a non-programmatic model as the new design is put into effect.
- Solicit responses from the grassroots via state councils of churches and member participants in the NCCC as to the acceptance and value of current work.
- Evaluate the sustainability of the model from a conciliar, justice and witness, and financial perspective as the NCCC moves into the new framework.

Given the work completed in reviewing, evaluating, and designing a plan for work and structure we commend those within the NCCC who are leading and participating in the process and pray with and for them as the work of the NCCC moves forward.

Minutes, General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations

Item 07-Info

General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations Agency Summary

1. Purpose

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (GACEIR) is composed of twenty-four members who are either elected or appointed. Sixteen elected are members of a Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mid council and involved in ecumenical relations at the local level. These elected members are active in a local congregation and possess an understanding of Presbyterian and Reformed theology, as well as how this perspective impacts denominational responsibilities toward ecumenical and interfaith partners. Four members are appointed by our ecumenical partners at the invitation of the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA), two are appointed by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the remaining members are the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the Executive Director of Presbyterian Mission Agency. All members have voice and vote in matters before the committee.

The GACEIR has its work rooted in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, the Book of Order, and General Assembly action. Together, these documents charge the committee with providing a point of connection for the ecumenical efforts of all governing body levels for Presbyterians, as well as other ecumenical and interreligious bodies. The GACEIR undertakes many tasks to keep local congregations abreast of ecumenical involvement and encourage the use of resources developed by ecumenical councils and organizations. In addition, GACEIR advises the General Assembly to help ensure policy reflects the call to ecumenism found in Scripture, the Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order.

In addition to working within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), GACEIR oversees the dialogues with other denominations and ecumenical bodies in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has membership, such as World Council of Churches and the World Communion of Reformed Churches (formerly World Alliance of Reformed Churches). These dialogues serve various purposes, including but not limited to, determining official relationships with denominations that allow for the orderly exchange of ministers and finding common points of ministry and a unified position on matters of importance either within the church or in the world.

Historically the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and its antecedents, has had a leadership or founding role in ecumenical councils and agencies. In order to ensure that denominational participation in these bodies continues to be shaped by a reformed understanding of Scripture and the church, the 212th General Assembly (2000) was asked to design a process “for review of councils and other ecumenical alliances to which the PC(USA) belongs.” The GACEIR undertakes review of ecumenical councils on a rolling basis. At the 221st General Assembly (2014), a review of the National Council of Churches and Christian Churches Together will be submitted.

The GACEIR is responsible for nominating and inviting ecumenical and advisory delegates to the General Assembly. At each General Assembly approximately seventeen representatives from our partner churches attend and participate in deliberations and worship. This participation serves two purposes: provides insight and new perspectives on specific business that the assembly may be considering and facilitates understanding among the ecumenical community of Presbyterian polity and governance. While delegates and representatives do not vote at the General Assembly, their feedback and commentary on issues before the assembly is invaluable in helping commissioners consider the full impact of some policy decisions. Often these leaders bring greetings to the assembly or participate in worship through the offering of prayer or liturgical assistance.

2. Ministry and Accomplishments

During 2012–2013, General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (GACEIR) delved deeper into engaging ecumenical partnerships at the grassroots level, which included the revitalization of the Ecumenical Liaison Network and reinstitution of the Ecumenical Service Recognition Award. In addition to improving engagement with mid councils and congregations, GACEIR devoted time and resources to discerning a faithful response to our call to love persons of other faiths by hosting an interfaith consultation and preparing the document, The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Below is a summary of the ministry and work of GACEIR since 220th General Assembly (2012).

a. Mid Council Liaisons

The GACEIR is working to strengthen ecumenical formation at the congregational level by deploying an Ecumenical Network for mid council liaisons. The liaisons serve as a resource for local denominational ecumenical work, as well as a resource for the broader church by communicating ecumenical activities at the local level. This two-way communication serves to ensure the wider church informs the ecumenical stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and is effective in facilitating the local ecumenical work of Presbyterians.

b. The Ecumenical Service Recognition

At the urging of GACEIR, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) reinstituted the Ecumenical Service Recognition in 2013. This is a way to recognize individuals and mid councils seeking to give visible expression to the unity of the Church and express a commitment to unity and reconciliation in our world. It is awarded every other year and presented at the General Assembly.

The nominations’ reviewing committee is particularly interested in recognizing ministry that is creative or innovative, effective, broadly inclusive, and could serve as model for others. The Ecumenical Service Recognition and the publicizing of recipients’ activities provide Presbyterians with examples and inspiration for local ecumenical involvement. In addition, through the recognition, the General Assembly

- bears testimony to the belief that the Church of Jesus Christ is one, holy, catholic and apostolic; that the Lord of the Church wills that it be visibly one in the world; and that it is the duty of believers to be obedient to that Divine will;
- affirms its commitment as mid councils as the most appropriate means whereby the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may demonstrate its obedience to the divine will that the Church be Visibly one in each place and in all places;
- gives help and encouragement to those within the church who are seeking practical ways the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can move beyond affirmation to action in manifesting the unity that we both have and seek in Jesus Christ.

At the 221st General Assembly (2014), Central Presbyterian Church in Lafayette, Indiana; Chinook Presbyterian Church in Chinook, Montana; the Reverend Jose Luis Casal in Tres Rios Presbytery; and the Reverend Clark Lobenstine in National Capital Presbytery will be recognized for their ecumenical involvement. Profiles of the recipients and their ecumenical work can be found at http://www.pcusa.org/news/2014/3/18/committee-affirms-pcusas-commitment-interfaith/.

c. Consultation with Committee of the General Assembly

In March 2013, GACIER engaged in a conversation with representatives of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) with the purpose of establishing an ongoing conversation between GACEIR and COGA. Such a conversation will move the church forward in its ecumenical relationships and financial commitments, as well as offer the opportunity to explore interfaith relations in a changing world. The Organization for Mission calls GACEIR to engage with all agencies of the PC(USA) regarding ecumenical and interreligious partners (Organization for Mission, IV.C.8.d.9).

The consultation with COGA focused on the role of the ecumenical commitments of PC(USA) and the evolving relationships with interreligious partners. In particular, the two bodies noted the conversion of work around ecumenical and interfaith delegates and representatives to the General Assembly and possible continued collaboration on guidelines for invitees as well as expectation of the PC(USA) delegates to the General Assembly. A second area of agreement that resulted was to have future discussions around COGA representative appointments to GACEIR.

Representing GACEIR: Scott Anderson, Judy Angleberger, Krystin Granberg, Gun Ho Lee.

Representing COGA: Vince Thomas, Marcia Mount Shoop, Jerrod Lowery, and Alexandja Haddad who is the COGA representative to GACEIR.

Staff: Gradye Parsons, Robina Winbush, and Loyda Aja.

d. Interreligious Stance and Interfaith Consultation

In 2013–2014, GACEIR studied and consulted with a diverse group of individuals to develop a draft document that outlines the Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), which is to be presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). This preparation included a survey of Presbyterians by Research Services for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), biblical reflection, and culminated with an Interfaith Consultation in September 2013 at Stony Point Conference Center. More than sixty-five people attended this event and represented diverse communities, congregations, schools, and interreligious experiences and expertise throughout the PC(USA).

The two-and-a-half day consultation included many opportunities for worship, orientation, and an opportunity to be in dialogue with the members of the Community of Living Traditions, individuals from different faiths living in an intentional community at Stony Point. The consultation asked participants to explore themes within interreligious engagement drawn from their lived experiences and respond to presentations of ecumenical and interfaith guests.
Participants were asked to spend their time speaking to one another about issues of interreligious engagement that they saw as emerging and being pertinent to the Church and its future. Just as importantly, participants had opportunities to connect with and share their experiences with one another. Their work at the consultation, and the emerging conversations, eventually became the backbone of the interreligious stance.

Following the consultation, members of GACEIR continued to work with a team of writers to draft a stance that was reviewed at the January 2014 committee meeting.

3. Work of Ecumenical Councils

Part of GACEIR’s mandate is the support of and participation in national and international ecumenical councils and dialogues, including the National Council of Churches of Christ (U.S.A.), the World Council of Churches, and the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, among others. Delegates and participants from the PC(USA) have attended councils and events, engaged in dialogues, served as resource persons, and monitored the ministries of various ecumenical bodies.

Since the 220th General Assembly (2012), shifts in the ecumenical landscape have continued. As reported in the GACEIR Review of NCC and CCT, “The churches that have traditionally participated in North American conciliar bodies like the National Council of Churches (NCC) … find themselves in numerical decline, with sense of diminished identity and a growing set of internal tensions.” The resulting changes and restructuring in the National Council of Churches, a long-standing partner of the PC(USA), are explained more fully in the review, but a few points deserve brief mention here. Of particular note is the dismantling and reformulating of the previous “commissions” of the NCC, and the shift in the NCC to a structure that leans more heavily on heads of communion as a governing board. The latter in particular is of concern to the PC(USA), as it limits broad participation in leadership, especially voices of women, youth, and people of color. In all its ecumenical partnerships, the PC(USA) is committed to lifting up diverse and marginalized voices, and will continue to advocate for such diversity and breadth in the leadership of partner ecumenical bodies. Specific recommendations in relationship to the NCC and Christian Churches Together (CCT) are included in the review.

In October 2013, four members of the PC(USA), Laura Cheifetz, Gradye Parsons, Everdith Landrau, and Sara Lisherness, served as delegates to the 10th Assembly of the World Council of Churches, which was held in Busan, South Korea. The World Council of Churches Assembly takes place every seven years, and continues to be the broadest and most diverse Christian gathering of its kind. A report from the delegates was provided for the committee.

In addition to engagement with these and other ecumenical bodies, the PC(USA) also participated in the following bilateral dialogues with other denominations and communions: Roman Catholic/Reformed (Christian Reformed Church in North America, Reformed Church in America, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and United Church of Christ); Episcopal Church/PC(USA); Seventh Day Adventist and Reformed (PC(USA) and CRCNA).

In general, the changing ecumenical landscape, which is described in more detail in various reports, has led to fairly dramatic reorientations for our ecumenical endeavors. While much remains in flux (such as the restructuring of the NCC), more change is anticipated and there is a need to continue to reimagine and re-envision how to live out ecumenical commitments in the midst of the transformation of denominations and councils. The means and modes of engagement in ecumenism institutionally in the last century may be changing, but the call and commitment to the unity of Christ’s church remains strong and unwavering. Both within and among PC(USA) churches, the need to bridge divides and seek common mission in unity has not waned; in many ways, the importance of ecumenical engagement in a broken church has only grown. Thus, even as the future of ecumenical councils is uncertain, the PC(USA) and GACEIR boldly look to the leading of the Spirit in this new season.

4. Moving Forward

The GACEIR will continue to nurture and grow the Ecumenical Liaison Network to ensure it meets its stated purpose, publicize the Ecumenical Service Award and activities of nominees, prepare to receive WCC reports into the life of the PC(USA), and, finally, ensure a strategic and timely roll out of the Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
Item 08-01

[The assembly approved Item 08-01. See pp. 14, 40.]

On Support for the Institut Médical Chrétien du Kasai (IMCK) Endowment and the Endowment Concept—From the Presbytery of New Castle.

The Presbytery of New Castle respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to issue the following statement to all synods, presbyteries, congregations, and individual members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

“The 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) hereby takes note of and endorses efforts by the organization known as ‘Friends of IMCK’ (FIMCK) to raise a permanent endowment for the Institut Médical Chrétien du Kasai (IMCK), or Kasai Christian Medical Institute. FIMCK is a group of former and current PC(USA) missionaries and missionary offspring who are deeply involved with IMCK and who formed themselves into this organization for purposes of raising the IMCK endowment in late 2011. The IMCK was first established as a nursing school by Presbyterian missionaries in the Congo (then Belgian Congo, now Democratic Republic of the Congo—DRC) in 1954. The component hospital, the Good Shepherd Hospital, was built largely with the Presbyterian Women’s Birthday Offering and completed in 1975. A large, downtown, multifaceted clinic, a university-level nursing degree program, research facilities, medical internships and residencies, and many public health and nutrition outreach programs have been added in the years since then.

“The General Assembly notes that after surviving almost sixty years of war, pillage, and political disruption to become one of the foremost institutions of its kind in the Congo, the IMCK now, ironically, struggles financially for its existence in the current economic climate and is often unable to pay backlogged salaries or purchase needed medicines and supplies. This being a legacy institution among fellow Christians in one of the world’s poorest and most war-torn countries, the General Assembly welcomes the efforts of FIMCK to do for a developing country institution what most nonprofit schools and hospitals in America—many associated with the PC(USA)—have done to establish firmer financial foundations; that is, to establish a permanent endowment fund.

“Accordingly, the General Assembly hereby urges and encourages all synods, presbyteries, congregations, and individual members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to favorably consider the inclusion of donations to this endowment in their budgets, their bequest planning, their special collections, their memorial gifts, and in any other ways that may practically present themselves. It is noted that instructions can be found online at www.IMCK.org.

“Beyond the financial advantages that this particular endowment, or that any endowment in any such institution, may provide for the beneficiary institution, the General Assembly wishes to further recognize the concept of permanent endowments for third world institutions as a useful tool and one that may provide a degree of independence and dignity in situations where earmarked donations for immediate needs may have developed cultures of dependence and what has become popularly known as ‘toxic charity.’ The General Assembly believes that these beneficial effects may result from the regular, automatic, and unconditional nature of periodic payments that flow from the earnings of endowments and the fact that this can lead to a sense of ownership and responsibility in the benefited institution, and to the self-esteem that comes from the freedom to make their own decisions on spending across all the needs in their budgets, including those mundane items that are typically overlooked in restricted gifts. Therefore, the General Assembly endorses and recommends the endowment model in other mission situations where it is deemed applicable and useful.”

Rationale

The rationale is embodied in the recommended statement. In summary it is as follows:

1. The Institut Médical Chrétien du Kasai (IMCK) is a legacy Presbyterian institution in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), founded by Presbyterian missionaries in 1954 and expanded with the Presbyterian Women’s birthday offering in 1975.

2. Today, IMCK is one of Presbyterian World Mission’s top priorities and one of the foremost such institutions in the DRC, yet it is struggling financially and is unable to keep up with salaries because of declining donations in the current economic climate.

3. Nonprofit institutions, even in the developed world, find it important or necessary to raise permanent endowments in order to provide financial stability, underpin operating expenses, and reduce their dependence on current donations. No less is needed for such mission institutions in the developing world.

4. Such an endowment has been established by an organization, Friends of IMCK (FIMCK), in partnership with General Assembly recognized and validated partners, such as the Presbyterian Foundation and the Medical Benevolence Foundation. The principal of this endowment is securely placed in U.S. investments and investment decisions are under the control of the FIMCK Board of Directors. However, they have had difficulty raising money for this endowment from within the denomination because of their lack of perceived status and approval by PC(USA).

5. In view of these difficulties and inasmuch as this seems to be a promising method for providing financial stability, self-direction, and dignity to this and perhaps other legacy Presbyterian mission institutions, the endorsement of the General Assembly is hereby requested.

6. Although there are no budget implications, this overture may be appropriately referred to Presbyterian World Mission for response.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-01

Comment on Item 08-01—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Institute Médical Chrétien du Kasai (IMCK) is an important partner of Presbyterian World Mission. Its ministry of compassionate Christian care and training of medical professionals is greatly needed in the DR Congo where WHO health indicators are among the worst in the world with alarming rates of infant mortality, malnutrition, and maternal mortality http://www.who.int/gho/countries/cod.pdf. In the past, Presbyterian World Mission was able to provide substantial support of IMCK through the contributions of PC(USA) congregations and individuals, but this support has decreased in recent years. We believe that an endowment is a faithful and effective way of addressing the pressing need for financial sustainability for IMCK. This is especially true in a country as impoverished as DR Congo, which ranks at the bottom of the Human Development Index, https://data.undp.org/dataset/Table-1-Human-Development-Index-and-its-components/wxub-qc5k, where national health insurance is nonexistent and individuals cannot pay a fee for service to cover the operating expenses of the institution.

In addition to financial support, PC(USA) World Mission believes strongly in the “ministry of presence” to accompany our partners as they serve in Christ’s name. Financial support in itself is not enough; we have committed ourselves to providing mission personnel to serve side-by-side with Congolese medical professionals as they serve in one of the most difficult contexts in Africa. PC(USA) Mission Co-worker Dr. John Fletcher serves at IMCK and Dr. Martha Sommers is planning to begin service later this year. Other mission personnel serve on the board. In addition to support of this endowment we also encourage PC(USA) to support the sending of our mission personnel.
