The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the revisions to the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action (revisions shown in Appendix 1).

Rationale

In 1983 the General Assembly and the Book of Order assigned the Presbyterian Mission Agency, formerly known as the General Assembly Council, with the responsibility for “instituting and coordinating a churchwide plan for equal employment opportunity for members of racial ethnic groups, for women, for various age groups, and for persons with disabilities.” A Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity was developed in 1985, and Equal Employment Opportunity goals were established by the General Assembly Council for the church. In 1994 the document was revised to include Affirmative Action and was thus retitled, “The Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action.”
For many years the General Assembly Council (now the Presbyterian Mission Agency) continued in a superintendent role as directed by the General Assembly with responsibility for overseeing the implementation of equal employment opportunity and affirmative action in each of the General Assembly agencies. In 1987 the associate for Affirmative Action and Equal Employment Opportunity was employed by the General Assembly Council to coordinate the implementation of the denomination’s commitment to inclusiveness through equal employment opportunity. The associate was a liaison between the General Assembly Council and the General Assembly Committee on Representation and provided data for the General Assembly Committee on Representation to carry out its work. Over the course of time it became apparent that each General Assembly agency was in the best position to oversee their own affairs, and their own implementation of the church’s commitment to diversity and inclusiveness. In 2006 the Presbyterian Mission Agency brought a recommendation to the 217th General Assembly (2006) requesting that it no longer have superintendent responsibilities for overseeing the other agencies, and the General Assembly concurred.

The General Assembly Council’s change in its name to Presbyterian Mission Agency (throughout the document).

The change in language in sections on inclusiveness and diversity and unity in the previous editions of the Book of Order to the current language (pages 1–2).

The reference to mid councils instead of presbyteries and synods and governing bodies (throughout the document).

Clarification of the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s role as it relates to the plan (pages 1 and 3).

Clarification that the responsibility for administering and implementing the plan rests with each General Assembly agency (pages 3–4).

Explanation of how General Assembly agencies work in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to determine if changes need to be made to the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action (page 3).

Responsibilities of the General Assembly Committee of Representation as listed in the Organization for Mission (IV. C.5.b) (page 6).

Revisions reflecting that each agency have responsibility for implementing its own plan for equal employment opportunity, affirmative action, and supplier diversity (pages 6–9).

The Presbyterian Mission Agency provided extensive opportunities for the General Assembly Committee on Representation to participate in the review of this policy. Much of the feedback was very helpful and resulted in changes to the document that is being presented.

Proposed Revisions to the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action

TOWARD INCLUSIVENESS IN EMPLOYMENT: A CHURCHWIDE PLAN POLICY FOR EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY AND AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)

SECTION ONE: TOWARD INCLUSIVENESS IN EMPLOYMENT

It is the policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to provide equal employment opportunity/affirmative action for all qualified persons; to prohibit discrimination in employment based upon race/ethnicity, color, national origin, gender, age (40 and over), marital status,
The foundation for this commitment is our acceptance of the Word of God as central to our life of faith and action, and our willingness to be guided by the Holy Spirit speaking through Scripture as we seek to be inclusive in our employment practices. Hiring procedures within the church must be established within the context of our faithfulness to God’s will for all of humanity.

We begin with the biblical declaration that God created all that is and declared it to be good. Despite our rebellion and our unwillingness to live in conformity with God’s original creation, God has not broken relationships with humanity. Men and women of faith have repeatedly received and accepted the call to live lives characterized by justice and righteousness. In Jesus we see the incarnation of God’s inclusion; it is imperative that we live as one with those who are excluded. Jesus’ love for all is God’s love. In Jesus’ resurrection the rule of God over all people is announced and inaugurated.

It is our belief that our life together as Presbyterians, manifested through our employment policies and practices, bears witness to our commitment to do God’s will. Accomplishing such a mission in today’s world requires, as a first step, the elimination of discriminatory practices in the church. The time is upon us when we can and shall demonstrate that Christ’s promises of reconciliation, justice, and love are true.

II. GOVERNING BODY COUNCIL RESPONSIBILITIES

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) gives repeated instructions to the governing bodies of the church regarding the nature of its intended inclusiveness and the implementation and maintenance of an equal employment opportunity plan. For example:

“The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution.” (F-1.0403)

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, and different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision-making of the church.” (G-9.0104FF.) (G-4.0403.)

The councils of the church shall give full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and shall provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices (F-1.0403). In fulfilling this commitment, councils shall... section G-II.0504 states that “the presbytery’s committee on ministry may look to synod and General Assembly for information and assistance in the matter of ministers and pastoral relations.” In support of this provision “the General Assembly shall create the necessary agency to facilitate and support the work of the presbyteries and the synods in this matter.”

C. Mid Councils Synods and Presbyteries

G-3.0110 states: “Councils higher than the session may employ such staff as is required by the mission of the body in accordance with the principles of unity in diversity (F-1.0403). Councils may, in consultation with the next higher council, share staff as required by the mission of the body. A council shall make provision in its manual of administrative operations (G-3.0106) for the process of electing executive staff and the hiring of other staff, the description of the responsibilities of the positions, the method of performance review, and the manner of termination of employment. (G-3.0104)”

Section G-9.0704 states that “administrative positions in all governing bodies above the sessions shall be filled in accordance with the principles of participation and representation found in G-9.0104.”

D. Ministry Committees

The Book of Order places responsibility for the implementation of equal employment opportunity practice in the call of ministers and the employment of candidates with the presbyteries. “The councils of the church shall give full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and shall provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices (F-1.0403).” (G-3.0103). “To facilitate the presbytery’s oversight of inquiries and candidates, reception and oversight of teaching elder members, approval of calls for pastoral services and invitations for temporary pastoral services, oversight of congregations without pastors, dissolution of relationships, dismissal of members, and its close relationship with both member congregations and teaching elders, it may delegate its authority to designated entities within the presbytery. Such entities shall be composed of ruling elders and teaching elders in approximately equal numbers, bearing in mind the principles of unity in diversity in F-1.0403. All actions carried out as a result of delegated authority must be reported to the presbytery at its next regular meeting.” (G-3.0307). “According to the process of the presbytery and prior to making its report to the congregation, the pastor nominating committee shall receive and consider the presbytery’s counsel on the merits, suitability, and availability of those considered for the call.” (G-2.0803).

Section G-II.0501 states that the committee on ministry of the presbyteries “may look to synod and the General Assembly for information and assistance in the matter of ministers and pastoral relations.” In support of this provision “synods shall create the necessary agency to coordinate the work of presbytery committees.”
D. Committees on Ministry

The Book of Order (G-II.0502f) places responsibility for the implementation of equal employment opportunity practice in the call of ministers and the employment of candidates with the committee on ministry as follows: “It shall provide for the implementation of equal employment opportunity for ministers and candidates without regard to race, ethnic origin, sex, age or marital status. In the case of each call, it shall report to the presbytery the steps in this implementation taken by the calling group.” (G-II.0502f.)

III. IMPLEMENTATION OF A PROGRAM POLICY FOR EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY

Each council governing body and church-related institution or service organization is encouraged to develop its own policy implementation plan for administering its commitment to equal employment opportunity and affirmative action. The policies of the six agencies are offered as a model for parallel structures in councils, church-related institutions, and service organizations. This Implementation Plan for the General Assembly is offered as a model for parallel structures in other governing bodies, church related institutions, and service organizations. All such plans optimally include, but are not limited to the following elements:

- Councils which implement such plans should consider including the following elements:

  (a) Equal employment opportunity goals and objectives, which are continuously updated and reviewed.

  (b) Personnel policies, practices, and procedures, which as a minimum will include:

  1) Involvement of persons from the Identified Categories identified groups in search and recruitment procedures;

  2) Search and recruitment procedures to locate and consider for employment persons regardless of their inclusion in the Identified Categories race, sex, age, or disability;

  3) Selection, promotion, and upgrading procedures and career development activities to preclude and to correct patterns of discrimination on the basis of inclusions in the Identified Categories race, sex, age, or disability;

  4) Career development activities without regard to race, sex, age, or disability;

  5) Development of realistic position descriptions based upon job related qualifications and standards to insure that the description does not contain qualifications or selection criteria based on inclusions in an Identified Category race, sex, age, or disability that disproportionately screen out individuals;

  6) Public advertisement of openings in selected media and contact of specific agencies, organizations, and associations;

  7) Annual workforce review and analysis to determine:

     a) if patterns of discrimination exist and (b) if the hiring practices are bringing the church to a greater level of inclusiveness; and

     b) Identification of the point of accountability and responsibility for the implementation and continuous review of the equal employment opportunity program.

  (c) Commitment as a purchaser to contract or purchase goods and services whenever possible from businesses that have committed themselves to the goal of equal employment opportunity and which are willing to cooperate with Project Equality, Incorporated. Such cooperation includes utilizing the Project Equality process so that whenever a reasonable choice exists validated meeting facilities are used and suppliers listed in the Buyers Guide and Supplements are selected.

  (d) Commitment as an investor, to invest whenever possible in businesses that are committed to equal employment opportunity.

In addition to the elements listed above, the following are listed for guidance:

A. Mid Councils Synods and Presbyteries

In implementing their responsibilities in relationship to the filling of administrative staff positions (G-9.0104 G-3.0103), synods and presbyteries mid councils are urged to develop and establish equal employment opportunity policies and implementation plans based upon the following:

1. Recruiting, hiring, calling, training, and promoting persons within all job classifications without regard to inclusion in an Identified Category racial ethnic group, sex, age, or disability;

2. Ensuring that all other personnel policies and practices such as compensation, benefits, transfers, leaves of absence, performance evaluations, reduction in force and return to service, educational opportunities, tuition assistance, and termination are administered in accord with equal employment opportunity policies;

3. Annually collecting and reviewing employment data and conducting analyses, reporting their findings to the next higher governing body council, and taking such corrective actions as are necessary under their own equal employment opportunity commitments.

The governing body mid council’s manual of administrative operations should include its equal employment opportunity implementation plan and the procedures by which employment data will be gathered for review by the next higher council governing body.
In consulting with presbyteries regarding the election of an executive presbyter, presbytery leaders (G-9.0701; G-3.0110) and in developing guidelines for personnel reviews, synods are encouraged to review routinely the inclusiveness of election processes and the incumbents’ fulfillment of their overall responsibilities to initiate and carry out the provisions of the churchwide plan for equal employment opportunity. Synods shall be similarly reviewed by the General Assembly. Neglect by executive presbyters and mid council leaders in carrying out such responsibilities should be grounds for dismissal.

B. Congregations

The witness of congregations is the basis for all other expressions of the church’s life. Each congregation is urged to implement its procedures of calling, recruiting, hiring, and promoting for all job classifications without regard to a candidate’s being a member of one or more Identified Categories. Each congregation is urged in all phases of employment, for all job classifications, to follow the equal employment opportunity program of its presbytery. These commitments to equality should include but not be limited to compensation, benefits, leaves of absence, performance evaluations, reduction in force and return to service, continuing education opportunities, and termination.

C. Church-Related Institutions

Church-related institutions including schools, theological institutions, and service organizations are encouraged to develop and establish equal employment opportunity and affirmative action policies and implementation plans based upon the following:

1. Recruiting, hiring, calling, training, and promoting persons within all job classifications without regard to inclusion in an Identified Category, racial ethnic group, sex, age, or disability.

2. Ensuring that all other personnel policies and practices such as compensation, benefits, transfers, leaves of absence, performance evaluations, reduction in force and return to service, educational opportunities, tuition assistance, termination, and any others are administered in accordance with equal employment opportunity policies.

3. Annually collecting and reviewing employment data and conducting analyses of all personnel policies and practices, reporting to the appropriate General Assembly agency, and making such corrective actions as are necessary under their equal employment opportunity commitments.

IV. CONCLUSION

Motivated by the gospel and not by law, we seek to improve our record of hiring not only on the General Assembly level, but also in congregations, presbyteries, and synods and mid councils. In Luke 13 Jesus says men and women will come from east and west, and from north and south, and sit at table in the realm of God. The time has come for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to model this joyful feast and to reflect inclusiveness in all areas of its life. No longer shall we be a pale reflection of secular society, but a beacon of light showing by our unity and our diversity that all are one in Christ.

SECTION TWO: TOWARD INCLUSIVENESS IN EMPLOYMENT: A CHURCHWIDE IMPLEMENTATION PLAN FOR EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY AND AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY LEVEL

In implementing the policies established by “Toward Inclusiveness in Employment: A Churchwide Plan Policy for Equal Employment Opportunity” the following procedures and responsibilities are assigned to the indicated units of the General Assembly.

I. RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY’S COMMITTEE ON REPRESENTATION

The responsibilities of the General Assembly Committee on Representation are outlined in the Organization for Mission (IV.C.5.b) and the Book of Order, and include participation in any review of the Churchwide Policy for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action. The General Assembly’s Committee on Representation, in consultation with the General Assembly Council, shall develop and establish guidelines for use by Committees on Representation in providing advice to the governing bodies in the area of employment. (G-9.0105.)

II. RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY COUNCIL AGENCIES

In addition to its responsibilities as an employing unit employers, the General Assembly Council Agencies has have a leadership role in coordinating the churchwide plan. These responsibilities include the components delineated below:

Each General Assembly Council agency shall:

(a) develop and implement an overall plan for coordinating the equal employment activities of the General Assembly Level within their agency,

(b) share a copy of that plan to be in the files of the General Assembly Committee on Representation; and

(c) recommend report periodically to the General Assembly: (1) equal employment opportunity goals; (2) annual summaries prepared by the General Assembly Council encompassing, but not limited to the their equal employment opportunity performance of the...
(d) participate in periodic consultation with the General Assembly Committee on Representation who will recommend equal employment opportunity goals to the General Assembly.

B. Support and Advocacy

The General Assembly Council shall encourage the development of support and advocacy groups for those who have been affected by past discrimination.

C. Celebration of Progress

The Each General Assembly Council agency shall encourage the celebration of progress in equal employment opportunity.

D. Consultation with Employing Units

The General Assembly Council shall ensure consultation with all agencies, councils, boards, commissions, and committees of the General Assembly (hereafter referred to as employing units) regarding their designation of an equal employment officer; implementation of personnel procedures and policies, and equal employment opportunity plans; dissemination of policies to employees; and appropriate corrective action.

E. Consultation with Synods

Following consultation with synods regarding the election of an executive (G-9.070 I) the General Assembly Council shall provide an evaluation of the inclusiveness of this process to the next General Assembly.

F. Participation in the Review of Chief Administrative Officers

General Assembly Council participation in the annual review of work of the chief administrative officer of each hiring unit of the General Assembly shall include provision to the hiring unit of an analysis of the unit’s equal employment opportunity performance.

G. Guidelines for the Employment of Persons in the Identified Groups

The General Assembly Council shall publish and disseminate guidelines for the employment of women, racial ethnic persons, persons with disabilities and persons of various ages. (G-9.0104.)

H. Resolution of Discrimination Grievances

The Each General Assembly Council agency shall include in its uniform personnel policies provisions for handling equal employment opportunity grievances and for the review of allegations of employment discrimination.

I. D. Operational Implementation

1. PURCHASING

The Each General Assembly Council agency shall instruct its purchasing agents of the denomination to notify all subcontractors, vendors, and suppliers of goods and services of the church’s equal employment opportunity policy asking them to share a copy of their equal employment opportunity policy with the church agency. Copies of these policies shall be forwarded to the General Assembly Council by the purchasing agents for review and filing. Review and comment on these vendor plans will be included in the annual report of the General Assembly Council to the General Assembly.

2. DISSEMINATION

A brochure website shall be prepared developed and curated by the General Assembly Council Presbyterian Mission Agency, in cooperation with the General Assembly Committee on Representation on the subject of full participation and equal employment opportunity which will be used by all employing units and institutions of the General Assembly and governing bodies of the church.

III. RESPONSIBILITIES OF CHIEF ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICERS

The chief administrative officer of each agency employing unit of the General Assembly shall be responsible for the agency’s unit’s implementation and administration of the equal opportunity policies as adopted by the General Assembly and shall ensure that the agency’s unit’s administrative manuals include guidelines and procedures for the implementation of these policies at the unit level and with other governing bodies served by them. Neglect of this responsibility shall be grounds for dismissal.

The Executive Director of the General Assembly Council shall be the principal equal employment opportunity officer for the General Assembly.

IV. RESPONSIBILITIES OF EMPLOYING UNITS GENERAL ASSEMBLY AGENCIES

A. Designation of an Equal Employment Opportunity Officer

Each agency employing unit of the General Assembly shall designate an equal employment opportunity officer who shall be responsible for the implementation and management of the unit’s agency’s equal employment opportunity program.
B. Development of Policies and Implementation Plans

In consultation with the General Assembly Council each agency employing unit shall:

1. Ensure that all personnel guidelines, policies, procedures and practices are implemented in accordance with the church’s policy on equal employment opportunity;

2. Initiate special actions required to “provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices to correct patterns of discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age or disability” (G-9.0104 G-3.0103); and

3. Develop an equal employment opportunity implementation plan in support of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and participation, as stated in F-1.0403 G-1.0403 of the Book of Order, and provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices to correct any existing patterns of discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age or disability also stated in G-9.0104 G-3.0103. Each unit’s agency’s implementation plan shall be approved and maintained in the official files of both the General Assembly Committee on Representation and the agency General Assembly Council.

C. Operational Implementation

Each agency employing unit shall:

1. Disseminate the General Assembly equal employment opportunity policy statement to all employees and include it in all appropriate General Assembly-level manuals of operations and employee handouts as well as post it on employee bulletin boards and include it in employee orientations;

2. Include each new employee at the supervisory level and above in an orientation and training program designed in conjunction with the General Assembly Council’s appropriate staff person; and

3. Advise prospective employees of the church’s equal employment opportunity policies through advertisements, publications, and other public statements.

V. RESPONSIBILITIES OF SPECIFIC AGENCIES

The responsible General Assembly agency or agencies shall:

1. Develop equal employment opportunity performance guidelines for the annual performance review and evaluation of synod executives and executive presbyters as prescribed by the Uniform Personnel Policies (16.00). (Examination of the executive’s initiative in carrying out the provisions of the churchwide plan for equal employment opportunity should be included in the annual performance review process); and

2. Report to the General Assembly Council on the equal employment opportunity performance of synods, presbyteries, and related schools and theological institutions.

IV. HIRING PROCEDURES

The search for and recruitment of persons from racial ethnic groups, persons of all ages, persons with disabilities, and women the Identified Categories is critical to the implementation of an effective equal employment opportunity plan. An effective program of search and recruitment shall include at least the following:

1. Recognizing that involvement of persons from the identified groups Identified Categories in the search and recruitment process is necessary;

2. Identifying resources related to the identified groups Identified Categories that will yield positive results, e.g., electronic media, newspapers, networks, caucuses, educational institutions, and employment agencies; and

3. Utilizing the internal employment resources of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Position descriptions should be kept current through review and alteration whenever significant change(s) in responsibilities are evident. Ample opportunity shall be given for the employee to participate fully in the process of suggesting changes in the position description. Modifications made to position descriptions must be submitted for refactoring. Position descriptions for all vacant positions authorized for filling will be prepared as outlined in the “Personnel Policies for Agencies and Guidelines for Governing Bodies,” paragraph 09.04 and 09.05. The position description shall be examined carefully to determine what functional and personal qualifications as to educational attainment, skills, physical ability (e.g. able to lift ten pounds), experience, knowledge, characteristics, etc., are actually required by the position so that qualification factors that discriminate against racial ethnic persons in the Identified Categories, various age groups, women, or persons with disabilities are eliminated.

IV. EVALUATION, REVIEW AND ANALYSIS

Evaluation, review, and analysis are essential components of any effective equal employment opportunity implementation plan. The General Assembly Council shall include detailed churchwide data and analyses in its report to the General Assembly. Such data will be secured from each employing unit of the General Assembly, each governing body above the session (presbytery reports are forwarded by the appropriate presbytery), and General Assembly-related schools and theological institutions. Each General Assembly agency such entity is expected to conduct an annual evaluation of its workforce to determine the status of its performance in actualizing the denomination’s commitment to inclusiveness as outlined in G-9.0104 G-3.0103, according to timelines and procedures developed in consultation with the General Assembly Council or by the General Assembly appropriate governing body and with the corresponding General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The annual evaluation will indicate whether numerical goals and timetables to correct patterns of discrimination are necessary, and if they are, what these goals and timetables should be. It is expected that each agency employing unit of the General Assembly will define its equal employment opportunity problems or needs by first examining the numbers and levels at which it employs members of the identified groups. Members include racial ethnic groups, women, persons of all ages, and disability (see G-13.0201 b). Results of the annual work force review and analysis will be forwarded to the General Assembly Council.

This work force analysis encompasses four components: (1) employment analysis, (2) recruitment analysis, (3) utilization analysis, and (4) goals and objectives.

GLOSSARY

Affirmative Action any measure, beyond simple termination of a discriminatory practice, that permits the consideration of race/ethnicity, national origin, sex, or disability, along with other criteria, and which is adopted to provide opportunities to a class of qualified individuals who have either historically or actually been denied those opportunities and/or to prevent the recurrence of discrimination in the future.

Chief Administrative Officer the “chief executive” of each GA agency, synod, or presbytery. By virtue of office this person is responsible for administering EEO and is held accountable for implementation in each annual performance review.

Consult or Consultation the receiving of information or opinion in order to assure that views and interests of others are known.

Disability a mental or physical impairment that substantially limits one or more of such person’s major life activities.

Discriminate Discrimination to deny equal opportunity treatment in any phase of employment because a person is a member of one of the Identified Categories on the basis of race, sex, age, or disability. Marital status is an additional protected group in the calling of pastors, while disability is not so included.

Equal Employment Opportunity the taking of steps necessary to ensure employer neutrality with regard to membership in a Identified Category racial ethnic group, sex, age, or disability.

Employment the total relationship of employer and employee including pre-employment, employment, and post-employment.

Exempt Staff the Fair Labor Standards Act provides for nonexempt and exempt positions with respect to overtime. Those persons employed in exempt positions are not paid overtime wages for hours worked either in excess of the normal work schedule or 40 hours a week. Such employees are expected to manage their schedules to provide them with a minimum of one day off each week.

Genetic Information the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission defines genetic information as: Genetic information includes information about an individual’s genetic tests and the genetic tests of an individual’s family members, as well as information about the manifestation of a disease or disorder in an individual’s family members (i.e. family medical history). Family medical history is included in the definition of genetic information because it is often used to determine whether someone has an increased risk of getting a disease, disorder, or condition in the future.

Good Faith Efforts the “faithful and sincere” efforts to achieve accepted goals through the implementation of specific steps.

Handicapped a person is handicapped if he or she (1) has a mental or physical impairment that substantially limits one or more of such person’s major life activities; (2) has a record of such impairment; or (3) is regarded as having such an impairment.

Identified Groups Categories for purposes of this Policy, the Identified Categories include: race/ethnicity, color, national origin, gender, age (40 and over), marital status, sexual orientation, creed, protected disability status, citizenship status, genetic information, uniformed service or veteran status or religious affiliation (except where religious affiliation is a bona fide occupational qualification), or any other characteristic protected by law persons with disabilities, women, persons of all ages, and Blacks, Asians, Hispanics, and Native Americans.

Job Classification a grouping of positions according to responsibility or function within a total structure.

Nonexempt Staff the Fair Labor Standards Act provides for nonexempt and exempt positions with respect to overtime. Persons employed in nonexempt positions shall be paid overtime wages for hours worked in excess of 40 hours per week.

National Origin the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission defines national origin discrimination as: National origin discrimination involves treating people (applicants or employees) unfavorably because they are from a particular country or part of the world, because of ethnicity or accent, or because they appear to be of a certain ethnic background (even if they are not).

Position Description description of job: its responsibilities (functions to be performed); accountabilities; fit into total organization; personal requirements; experience deemed necessary to perform in position, such as education or previous work.

Race/ Racial Ethnic Group Ethnicity persons who are members of four specific racial ethnic groups. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission recognizes six race and ethnic designations: Asian (not Hispanic or Latino), Black or African American (Not Hispanic Recruitment—the process of seeking applicants for positions. It can be “passive” or “aggressive” in seeking those who might not apply without special efforts.

Underutilization having fewer persons in the identified groups in a particular job classification than would reasonably be expected by their availability in the work force.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-03

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 08-03.

This report proposes significant changes to the Churchwide Plan on Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action, which has been the church policy for almost thirty years. One major change, for example, places the responsibility for each agency to create its own individual Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action policy, and to administer and implement its own plan. The Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) in essence is asserting that it will no longer provide any administrative assistance, except for establishing a website, but that it will continue to “approve[e] and monitor” the Plan. The proposed changes also appear to advocate six different policies instead of one national policy. The ACREC’s experience with the six agencies over the past several years has revealed that the smaller agencies depend heavily upon the PMA to perform several administrative functions, such as the implementation of minority vendor/supplier diversity policy. Can the smaller agencies effectively administer and implement the EEO and AA policies as well? The Churchwide Plan also is now called a “policy” and the reasons for this change are not made clear in this document.

The changes proposed by this report will have a great impact on church membership, particularly racial ethnic people. There has been no discussion with ACREC nor with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC). The ACREC is aware that at least one racial ethnic caucus has not been consulted, and it is suspected that none of the other caucuses have been consulted. The revised Churchwide Plan-now-Policy provides that any proposed changes to the plan/policy would be made to the General Assembly for approval, after consultation with ACREC, ACWC, and the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR). In making these proposed changes, the PMA did not follow its own proposed consultation process.

In addition, this report closely resembles the comments and counterproposals made by PMA (formerly GAMC) in response to the 2012 Climate for Change Task Force Report: “Privilege, Power and Policy: The Church as an Employer.”1 The recommendations of the task force report were passed by the General Assembly as amended, and the counterproposals made by PMA were rejected. We ask that this report, now being reintroduced as changes to the Churchwide Plan, be rejected again. The ACREC recognizes that changes have occurred since 1984 when the Churchwide Plan became church policy, and some revisions may be necessary. What ACREC objects to is the failure to consult with the relevant church entities that will be directly affected by these changes. At most, this report should be tabled until the appropriate agencies in the church, including ACREC and ACWC, have had a chance to study the impact of these changes and have meaningful input on the proposed changes.

Comment on Item 08-03—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The task of revising the Churchwide Plan was long overdue and particularly timely after the 220th General Assembly (2012)’s approval of the report “Privilege, Power, and Policy: The Church as an Employer.” The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) consulted with the Presbyterian Mission Agency on two occasions before this revision of the Churchwide Plan was presented to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The document before commissioners reflects some of the changes suggested in that consulting process. The constitutional reforms of 2011 are reflected in this document and some of the losses of explicit protections are a result of losses in specificity in the Book of Order regarding employment of personnel and council responsibilities. The more flexible constitutional language does not constrain the assembly entities from retaining these protections in a document for its own council. The GACOR lifts up for commissioners the following concerns/comments:

Where councils do not have a standing committee on representation, they are still required to address the mandated functions described in G-3.0103 and must find ways to demonstrate them to the council itself and to the higher council for review. Though councils and agencies have responsibilities for themselves, the plan may provide common elements that will be helpful to lower councils in their own formulation of equal employment standards, principles, and practices. These efforts are in place to correct patterns of discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, and/or disability. GACOR suggests that the plan be revised to include a requirement that agencies demonstrate making “good faith efforts” to fulfill these principles and that those be reported regularly. The revisions of “Toward Inclusiveness in Employment,” Section II, should be looked at carefully. GACOR is concerned that the former responsibilities regarding support and advocacy (B) and participation in the review of officers (F) are removed in this document.

1 Climate for Change Task Force, Privilege, Power and Policy: The Church as an Employer, Item 11-17 of the 220th General Assembly (2012), <http://pc-biz.org/MeetingPapers%2Bl%3B2g8%3B3qgau22aajj11kxyt%29q29%29%29/IOBView.aspx?m=ro&id=3951&promoid=239>

The complimentary roles of different standing committees of the General Assembly are reflected helpfully in the revised document. The cooperation GACOR experienced with the Presbyterian Mission Agency in the process of revising this document is one they would like to repeat in future efforts.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

[The assembly approved Item 08-04. See pp. 14, 41.]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the revised Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual of Operations. [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

PRESBYTERIAN MISSION AGENCY MANUAL OF OPERATIONS

I. Introduction

A. As an agency of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency implements policies established by the General Assembly, coordinates the work of the General Assembly Ministries in light of General Assembly mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities; works in partnership with synods and presbyteries; and develops and proposes a comprehensive budget to the General Assembly. Members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board are elected by the General Assembly and are representatives of synods, presbyteries, and the church at-large. [See Organization for Mission, Section I., History of the Structure for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may change those appendixes to the Manual of Operations that are within its purview following a first reading, which may be electronic, and adoption at a subsequent plenary session. First reading and action may take place during the same session of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee shall submit a written report of changes to the appendixes to the next General Assembly (See Appendix 11 for the Process and Procedure for Submitting Changes to the Manual of Operations.)

B. Use of Robert’s Rules of Order (Revised)

The meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and related bodies are held in accordance with the provisions of the Book of Order. As specified in G-9.0302, “... the most recent edition of Robert’s Rules of Order ...” is used.

II. Composition of the Board

A. Membership:

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is currently composed of 57 members (40 voting and 17 non-voting). Elected members of the Board serve a six-year, non-renewable term:

1. Voting Members
   a. Elected Membership (36)
      • 6 General Assembly commissioners (2 from current assembly, 2 from the two immediate past assemblies)
08 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

- 4 young adults (ages 18-35)
- 3 ordained presbytery staff
- 2 ordained synod staff
- 21 from recommendations of presbyteries

b. Ex-officio Members (4)
- Current Moderator of the General Assembly
- Immediate past Moderator of the General Assembly
- The current Moderator of the Churchwide Coordinating Team of Presbyterian Women
- A representative from the National Council of Presbyterian Men, Inc.

2. Non-Voting Members—with voice:
   a. Corresponding Members (15)
      - Stated Clerk of the General Assembly
      - Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency
      - Representative from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA)
      - Chair of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)
      - Chair of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)
      - Chair of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)
      - Representative from the Committee on Theological Education (COTE)
      - Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) President
      - Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Chair or designee
      - Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation President
      - Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation Chair or designee
      - Presbyterian Publishing Corporation President
      - Presbyterian Publishing Corporation Chair or designee
      - Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. President
      - Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. Chair or designee

Corresponding members are not assigned to a committee and may attend any committee meeting that is conducting business of interest to them. Corresponding members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board have voice but not vote in Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and committee meetings.

b. Ecumenical Advisory Members (2)

Ecumenical advisory members are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee for election by the General Assembly for two-year terms, with eligibility for two additional terms, on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. One ecumenical advisory member shall serve on the Justice Committee and one shall serve on the Worshipping Communities Committee, with voice and vote in committee. Ecumenical advisory members to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall not be elected to the Executive Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

3. At-large Committee Members

The General Assembly Nominating Committee nominates for General Assembly election, in consultation with the committees, two persons to serve on the Audit Committee and two persons to serve on Finance Committee, with voice and vote. These at-large members serve a two-year term, and are eligible for re-election twice. These members are nominated from the church at-large for their special expertise in each of these areas. While they are not members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, they are granted the privilege of the floor during Presbyterian Mission Agency Board plenary sessions on matters related to their special expertise.
B. Inclusiveness and Diversity

General Assembly policies ensure that elected bodies represent the wealth of diverse gifts found in the church and provide a means to share responsibilities and decision making. The General Assembly Nominating Committee provides for diversity and inclusiveness in the Board’s membership. The General Assembly Committee on Representation monitors their work as well as the appointment of committees and task forces by the Board.

It is the policy of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to use expansive language when referring to God and inclusive language when referring to God’s people.

C. Areas of Service:

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may change the names, number, and structure of Board committees in order to carry out the goals and objectives of the Mission Work Plan using the process delineated in Appendix 11. The work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is carried out by elected members who may serve on Board committees as well as in liaison relationships.

III. Role of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall have the following responsibilities

A. To cultivate and promote the spiritual welfare of the whole church.

B. To provide resources to support equal employment opportunity and affirmative action for members of racial ethnic groups, for women, for various age groups, for persons regardless of marital condition (married, single, widowed, or divorced), and for persons with disabilities.

C. To develop and propose for GA approval, the mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, doing so by taking into account the mission work being done by sessions, presbyteries, and synods, and to propose for GA approval, an accompanying budget that will implement the mission work plan of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

D. To act in those specific matters assigned to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board by the General Assembly, acting always according to previously enacted General Assembly policies, reporting fully to each subsequent General Assembly its actions.

E. To perform such additional responsibilities and duties as may be assigned by the General Assembly.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, in consultation with appropriate individuals and groups, establishes such committees, task forces, and work groups as are necessary to conduct its business. Current committees are recorded in Appendix 1 of this manual.

The Executive Director reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee and the Board itself. The Executive Director shall provide direction, leadership, and coordination for the total mission program and shared services including review and evaluation.

IV. Citation of Major Documents

The following documents guide the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and are maintained in offices engaged in work related to their subject matter. Unless appended, these documents are available on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Website, with printed copies available by request.

A. Mission Policy Guide: Text of policies is available in the Minutes of prior General Assemblies. The guide is prepared by the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

C. “Policies Regarding Public Statements by the Board” approved by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (Appendix 3).

D. Current Mission Work Plan.

E. Organization for Mission.

F. Seeking to be Faithful Together: Guidelines for Presbyterians During Times of Disagreement.
V. Presbyterian Mission Agency Staffing

A. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board fulfills its work, in part, through staff led by the Executive Director. The Executive Director carries out responsibilities with staff in the following ministries: Mission, Communications and Funds Development, Shared Services, and the Office of the Executive Director. For the Presbyterian Mission Agency staff organization, refer to Appendix 2A.

B. Between meetings of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, upon recommendation of the Executive Director, is authorized to restructure the staff organization, always in alignment with the mission direction of the General Assembly. Any such organizational changes will be reported to the next General Assembly.

VI. Election and Confirmation of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director

The Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency shall be elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to a four-year term subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Upon election, the Executive Director serves with the full authority of the office until confirmed by the next General Assembly. (Organization for Mission, Section V.G.)

Rationale

The proposed changes are in compliance with the Book of Order, the General Assembly Deliverances, the Organization for Mission, and the Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

The Manual of Operations is clear that “… the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is authorized to restructure the staff organization, always in alignment with the mission direction of the General Assembly.” It is also clear that the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board must report such changes to the General Assembly.

However, other phrases, in this same section, obscure that authority, by detailing the high-level structure of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Mission, Communications and Funds Development, Shared Services, and the Office of the Executive Director) in a section of the Manual that only the General Assembly can amend.

The proposed change brings the Presbyterian Mission Agency in line with the other five General Assembly agencies. In each case, the high-level structure of the staffing organization is determined by either the agency’s board (elected by the General Assembly) or by the senior executive (elected or confirmed by the General Assembly.)

[The assembly referred Item 08-05 with comment. See pp. 14, 41.]

[Comment: To refer to the already established Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Task Force. The committee would like the task force to have at least six (6) people.]

A Resolution to Define and Interpret Standards for PC(USA) Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, in consultation with the Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges Presidents Roundtable, to convene a racially diverse special task force of six people with expertise in the field of education to define and interpret the standards for racial ethnic schools related to the PC(USA). The task force should conduct most of their business via electronic means, meeting one time face-to-face, and they should consult with current PC(USA)-related racial ethnic schools on what characteristics in a school produce racial ethnic leaders in today’s multicultural society. The task force should report back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) on their findings.

Rationale

Having been assigned this referral from the 220th General Assembly (2012), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) consulted with the presidents of the PC(USA) racial ethnic schools and colleges and after much consideration and deliberation determined this important task outside the scope of ACREC’s expertise.

The ACREC suggests the following criteria be considered by the proposed task force on what makes a successful racial ethnic school:

What effectively generates new and positive racial ethnic leadership within our church and our communities?

A. Core Mission

1. Commitment to Diversity

   Students should be met “where they are” on the playing field.

   - Not enough to have a commitment to diversity in numbers; the school needs to recognize where the students are on the playing field and meet them there with the support that is needed.

2. Living into Society

   School should help diverse student body live into society rather than work with students who are diverse

3. Correct Emphasis

   a. The mission of the school should be defined by how they meet the needs of students of color and not by how many attend.

   b. Criteria should not be based on the quantity of racial ethnic students, but on the quality of education and support provided to racial ethnic students by the school.

   c. Does the school meet the needs of men and women who are otherwise underserved?

B. Curriculum

   Specific programs tailored to student body.

   a. Are there courses that meet the specific needs of the diversity in the student body?

   b. Do the classes empower students in today’s multicultural settings?

C. Faculty

   1. Does the racial ethnic composition of the faculty/staff reflect the student population?

      Important for leadership to be diverse because they also serve as role models.

   2. Are staff and faculty multilingual? Multicultural?

D. Culture on Campus

   1. Is the population/culture diverse or inclusive?

      I.e., is there diversity in all strata of groups on campus?

      - In faculty? In staff? In academic and extracurricular groups and activities?

   2. Is racial ethnic identity valued, supported, and are genuine relationships formed within communities?

   3. Does the school develop and deliver contextually relevant education and training?

      E.g. Does curriculum meet the students where they are and make it a level playing field or do they make the students make up ground to do the “catch up” with a/the dominant culture?

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-05

Comment on Item 08-05—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) approved at its February 2014 meeting that the chairperson of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board “appoint a task force consisting of representatives from the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPREI) and representatives from other Presbyterian-related racial ethnic educational institutions. The task force will determine how the church can be true to its commitment to the HPREI, with whom it has covenanted, while considering how other racial ethnic educational institutions can be in relationship with the PC(USA) and be considered for support."

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board suggests that the resolution on defining and interpreting standards for PC(USA) racial ethnic schools and colleges from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) be referred to the task force appointed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board chairperson, in order to avoid duplicative efforts. Both proposed task forces include many of the same people, and the work is similar. The task force appointed by the chairperson of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board will meet at the fall Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges Presidents Roundtable meeting, which is included in the current PMAB budget, so there are minimal additional financial implications for the meeting of this task force. During this meeting, the task force will have the expertise and the time to complete the work assigned by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the work in ACREC’s resolution.

A Resolution to Develop a Churchwide Antiracism Policy—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency[, using existing racial ethnic ministries, consultation with the Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force, the Advocacy Committee for Racial-Ethnic Concerns, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and engagement with experienced practitioners as appropriate] to [develop] [update and revise] churchwide antiracism [policy] [policies and develop implementing procedures] similar to the existing antidiscrimination policies [and procedures].

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop [procedures and evaluation criteria for the implementation of a] [and implement criteria for evaluating the effectiveness of current] churchwide antiracism program[s] [ The Presbyterian Mission Agency will] [and to] report back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) regarding [its findings and any corrective] actions taken [or proposed] and results achieved.

3. Consistent with the 220th General Assembly (2012) mandate regarding mandatory antiracism training (Climate for Change Task Force Report[2]) , recommend that all mid-level councils and congregations provide antiracism training and dialogue.

4. Recommend that mid councils provide antiracism training and dialogue for staff, teaching elders, committee members, and congregations.

5. Recommend that congregations provide antiracism training and dialogue for staff and members, to strengthen evangelism and mission, to increase awareness of racial justice issues in their communities, and to discern racial justice issues in their own staffing.

6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop tools, assessment instruments, and training materials for the presbyteries and congregations in order to develop clear and effective understanding of systemic racism, including white privilege, power, and prejudice in relation to race.

Rationale

Racism and white privilege exist in the church and in society. Racism is the “interlocking systems of advantage (as well as disadvantage) based on race. Unless we learn to recognize the interlocking effects of privilege at these levels we will not recognize how easily some of us enjoy privileges because of our racial identity that are not equally available to all our neighbors.”

Systemic racism has significantly impacted our society and our church for many years in the ways we gather for worship, the ways we function and relate as the Body of Christ, and the ways we build trust and engage individually with one another. Racism has directly or indirectly influenced the allocation of our limited resources for mission, the staffing of leadership positions within our church, the calling of leaders to serve in local congregations, as well as the process of ordination and preparation towards our ordered ministry.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) received and approved the Climate for Change Task Force report and approved the recommendation made that “cultural proficiency and anti-racism training be mandatory for all employees of all six agencies, and provide periodic or continuing education courses or training in this area, which will be monitored by ACREC.”

As a country, we have made progress regarding the understanding of race and the reality of racism. However, there is still staggering evidence of the continuing reality of white privilege—as seen in comparisons of wealth, education, health care, and mortality rates between the so-called races in the United States. As long as this disparity exists, the church must continue antiracism training and so bear witness to the conviction that all people are made in God’s good image.

While some progress has been made in society at large, the church continues to struggle. In some locations within the church there is little evidence that the sin of racism has been identified or that privilege and power are appropriately shared between people of different “races.”

Over the years, segments of the PC(USA) have made conscious efforts in addressing such concerns. ACREC believes that an overarching church-wide policy is now needed in order to effectively address systemic racism in the church and live as faithful, accountable witnesses to the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

In the spirit of the Confession of Belhar, we believe that “the church must therefore stand by people in any form of suffering and need, which implies, among other things, that the church must witness against and strive against any form of injustice, so that justice may roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream; that the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged; that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others.”

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve the resolution with amendments as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency[, using existing racial ethnic ministries, consultation with the Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force, the Advocacy Committee for Racial-Ethnic Concerns, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and engagement with experienced practitioners as appropriate, to [develop a] [update and revise] churchwide antiracism [policy] [policies and develop implementing procedures] similar to the existing antidiscrimination policies [and procedures].

“2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop [procedures and evaluation criteria for the implementation of a] [and implement criteria for evaluating the effectiveness of current] churchwide antiracism training program[s][]. [The Presbyterian Mission Agency will] [and to] report back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) regarding [its findings and any corrective] actions taken [or proposed] and results achieved.

“3. Consistent with the 220th General Assembly (2012) mandate regarding mandatory antiracism training (Climate for Change Task Force Report[1]), recommend that all mid-level councils and congregations provide antiracism training and dialogue.

“3. Recommend that mid councils provide antiracism training and dialogue for staff, teaching elders, committee members, and congregations.

“5. Recommend that congregations provide antiracism training and dialogue for staff and members, to strengthen evangelism and mission, to increase awareness of racial justice issues in their communities, and to discern racial justice issues in their own staffing.

Item 8-06, from the Advocacy Committee on Racial/Ethnic concerns, recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve measures to deepen the church’s understanding of the false idea of race, the reality of racism, and the impact of these forces on the faithfulness of the church as well as the just organization of society. The changes suggested by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy are intended to strengthen the proposal and its relationship to the recommendation from the Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force for consultations that may uncover and address patterns of inequality and racism within the church (see Item 09-14, see p. 655, electronic version). As we see it, the issue is partly about existing policies (both preventing discrimination ourselves and more actively opposing racism) and partly about the effectiveness of our current approaches that implement those policies.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a mixed record on addressing racism and pursuing racial justice. Despite high points of action on behalf of civil rights and in support of affirmative action and equal employment opportunity, the church has been complicit, often too unwittingly, in the creation and maintenance of white privilege and structural racism in our nation’s life, including in the church’s own life. As the 211th General Assembly (1999) policy statement “Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community,” states: “The PC(USA) rejoices in its witness of resistance to racism provided by past and current PC(USA) leaders and individuals and echoed by congregations and governing bodies. The PC(USA) recognizes that it has not spoken boldly enough, nor acted courageously or creatively enough in response to racism.”

The church has approved policies, created resources, equipped facilitators, offered trainings, engaged in public witness, and prayed. For example, from the 1970s into the 2000s, the church was part of Project Equality, seeking to do its national agency purchasing with companies that voluntarily shared their AA/EEO data with a coordinating body. Item 9-19 before this assembly would affirm the work of the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) in developing updated diversity guidelines for purchasing. Such intentional hiring, training, and purchasing has sought to dismantle racism, overcome privilege, and build the beloved community in the name of Jesus Christ. Moreover, as the Presbyterian Mission Agency points out in its comment on this item, the church has continued to develop its understanding of racism and provides a number of materials as well as opportunities for workshops and antiracism training. However, more work remains.

As the resolution notes (and as discussed in Item 8-08), tragic disparities of wealth, education, health care access, and mortality rates remain among the races in the United States. The larger church, including the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), continues to reflect segregation in many places and ways with privilege and power inequitably shared. Despite the theological power of the church’s statements, the PC(USA) remains a church in which 94 percent of the members are white as are 91 percent of its ministers. These realities point to the ongoing strength of white privilege. They point to the need for the church to reevaluate its practices, its policies, its training materials and assessment tools in our on-going efforts to dismantle the unjust power of race and to involve our congregations more effectively in diverse communities.

The 1999 policy statement, “Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community,” has served the church well and continues to be an important part of the church’s witness.

Our revised recommendations would allow the church to update the definition of racism upon which its antiracism work is based. “Facing Racism” uses the definition of “prejudice plus power” for racism. Alternatively, racism may be defined as an institutionalized system that provides advantages to some and disadvantages others as it operates according to the well-intentioned and taken for granted norms of those with greater institutional power. “Prejudice plus power” does not reflect the lack of personal prejudice many of us feel nor the hidden power within institutional practices that assumes opportunities and choices that are not equally available to members of traditionally racialized groups. Hidden institutional power assumes customs and values, even theological perspectives, that are not necessarily shared by traditionally racialized groups. Consequently, new study and new practices are needed to help the church see whether our best intentions have unjust racial outcomes.

In addition, further development of the church’s antiracism policies and strategies could incorporate new understanding of the concept of racial and ethnic identity at a time in which the population of the U.S. is quickly becoming “majority minority.” Significant theological and sociological reflection and writing has been done on both whiteness and racial identity development in the fifteen years since “Facing Racism” was adopted. An updated antiracism policy could incorporate insights from this work as well as address new manifestations of racism, recognizing that racism takes different forms in different communities.

The resolution also provides an opportunity to develop tools and processes to evaluate the work the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has done on dismantling racism and becoming an antiracist institution. This evaluation will help the church identify additional resources, tools, and processes to engage in this task.

The recommendations that mid councils and congregations provide antiracism training reaffirm calls from in “Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community” and were echoed in “A Review of Efforts Regarding Cultural Proficiency and Creating a Climate for Change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” approved by the 220th General Assembly (2012). Perhaps at base, commissioners will need to decide how much the church’s ministries with persons of non-majority background are strengthened by effective witness and action for racial justice.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 08-06.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns fully supports the Advocacy Committee for Racial and Ethnic Concerns “Resolution to Develop a Churchwide Antiracism Policy.” One priority of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns is considering the intersection of gender and race. We hope that this policy will take into specific account the particular experiences of women of color.

Comment on Item 08-06—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve this resolution to develop a churchwide antiracism policy.

This resolution would have an important positive impact on the work committees on representation do both at the mid council and general assembly levels.

The Book of Order in F-1.0403 sets forth principles of unity and diversity. Race and ethnicity are identified categories of persons or groups for which there is no place for discrimination in the life of the church. It states, “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution.”

The development of a wide antiracism policy will help the church in its expressed concern about understanding and practices across race and ethnicity. Having wide antiracist conversations help equip all bodies in the church to improve our work across racial and ethnic divides and to live more faithfully what we confess in A Brief Statement of Faith, the Spirit helps us “to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, [and] to hear the voices of peoples long silenced” (Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 69–70).

Committees on representation are concerned about racism and its impact in the church. And they have skilled persons at mid council and national levels to serve as resources in creating this antiracism policy.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-06

Comment on Item 08-06—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Comment on Recommendation 1

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly distributed the comprehensive policy document churchwide.

As policy already exists, the Presbyterian Mission Agency calls for more action to implement the vision of the beloved community as set forth in the existing policy.

Since 1999, Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW has provided antiracism training at General Assemblies. Antiracism training has also been offered at The Big Tent, National Presbyterian Multicultural Church Conferences, Multicultural Church Institutes, and in presbyteries and congregations, as requested.

Churchwide antiracism trainings are offered by the office of Gender and Racial Justice in Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW. Racial justice training opportunities include:

http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/racialjustice/training/
Building the Beloved Community—Understanding the dynamics of privilege and systemic racism.

Faces of the Enemy—A guided discussion based upon the documentary “Faces of the Enemy.” This course explores enemy making, the media, propaganda, racism, and war.

Gender, Race and Class: Exploring Intersectionality—How class and gender intersect with systemic racism in social organizations and institutions.

Internalized Oppression—This course uses biblical characters to explore the effects of internalized oppression.

Power and Privilege—This workshop explores the issues of power and privilege and creates a safe place to discuss how they affect our lives and church.

Worship Where Faith and Culture Meet—This workshop includes an introduction to African American, Latino/Latina, Asian, Middle Eastern, Native American, and Euro-American cultures in the United States.

Cultural Proficiency 101—An overview of the gender and racial justice components: anti-racism, anti-sexism and power and privilege.

Equipping the Church for Ministry with God's Diverse Family—This conversation focuses on the tools and resources available for Presbyterians who seek to face and dismantle racism.

A Conversation on Inclusive and Expansive Language and Cultural Diversity—This conversation focuses on utilizing bias-free and culturally-responsive communication, for the purpose of promoting transformation in individuals and in the larger church.

Comment on Recommendation 4

The office of Gender and Racial Justice provides antiracism training materials, tools, and resources for Presbyterians who seek to continue the Presbyterian Church’s long-standing commitment to face and dismantle racism. This training is designed to assist individuals, mid councils, agencies, and worshipping communities with their efforts to understand the dynamics of privilege and systemic racism.

The Antiracism Manual, as well as a roster of antiracism trainers, is located in the office of Gender and Racial Justice. The practice is to provide the antiracism manual to nationally trained facilitators and to send the facilitator with training materials to mid councils, congregations, General Assembly, the Big Tent, General Assembly agencies, and to other groups, as training is requested.

The Antiracism Manual was recently expanded. New modules include:

- The Intersectionality of Race, Gender and Class (completed in 2010),
- a module on Internalized Oppression (Race & Gender) (completed in 2011), and
- a module on White Privilege and Male Privilege (coming in 2014).

Fairness in Ministerial Compensation: Incentives and Solidarity, a Response to Two Referrals

In light of the downward trends in compensation for many in an increasingly unequal society [and as a result of its written response to the referral from the 220th General Assembly (2012) (such response herein referred to as “this Report”)], the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. request the Presbyterian Mission Agency to review churchwide ministerial salary data as context for its review of Presbyterian Mission Agency salaries;
2. encourage mid council staff and elected leaders to review this report [and the recommendations found at the end of the first section] to assess the benefits of intervention and term call structure for declining congregations; and
3. direct the Office of the General Assembly’s church leadership office to post this report among its resources.
These recommendations are in response to the following referrals:

This response to two referrals contains four sections. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) is tasked to study matters of Christian conscience within and outside the church and to recommend measures that reflect the values and message of Jesus Christ. At core, the advisory committee believes that ministers share much the same motivation and should share much the same reward, as they serve the same church, a shared enterprise founded on God’s self-giving love in Jesus Christ. God’s solidarity with us in Christ in turn calls us to solidarity with the cause of Christ in the world, which is still to be turned upside down (Acts 17:6). A key measure of that solidarity is greater equality in compensation. Yet we all know that improving salaries in any part of our unequal society is hard. It will finally depend on whether the church can combine faithfulness and effectiveness in responding to God’s call to share more equitably, while calling more people to Christ’s cause.

This response includes reports on three actions of the advisory committee that may illuminate the challenges to compensation fairness within current church structures and trends. We do not focus simply on the poorer churches in poorer areas, but on the dynamics of the whole church in an increasingly stratified low wage society. A key question for commissioners is whether changing ministerial compensation models would affect those trends toward diminishing membership and resources. This means looking at the vocational incentives within the professional employment structures of the church (presbyteries, mid councils, and General Assembly agencies) as well as the parishes. While this response looks at indicators of the lack of parity in compensation among ministers, based mainly on size of congregation and data from the Richard Hammar organization, limitations on the advisory committee’s access to information prevented a fully “comprehensive review” of the salary differentials that are presented.

The overall 2012 report of the Special Committee on the Church for the 21st Century made recommendations in ten areas. The causes of church decline are both external (cultural, demographic, and economic) and internal (morale, leadership, organizational ecology). The recommendation for improving compensation for the lowest paid was part of strengthening internal factors over which the church has some control. Other measures included new ministries, bi-vocational ministers, solidarity among those serving as pastoral leaders, and ways for all members to witness with integrity and impact in a 21st century world.

The four sections of this response include:

I. Approaches to strengthening ministerial salaries near or below presbytery minimums, including Board of Pensions dues and medical costs and housing;

II. Revisiting Neither Riches, Nor Poverty: Compensation, Equity, and the Unity of the Church, (2010) and related study documents and policy statements on compensation, community, and justice;

III. Review of indicators of lack of parity in compensation based on class, gender, ethnicity, and type of service to the church. (Limits to comprehensiveness noted);

IV. Current practice and proposals within the General Assembly Agencies.

There is no answer to this question that is simply economic as, almost by definition in our current system, churches unable to pay adequate pastoral salaries have limited financial resources and there are few sources of potential subsidy. As a practical response in the absence of such subsidies, congregations in financial difficulty are encouraged to consider “New Beginnings,” a Disciples of Christ self-study program made available by the Evangelism and Church Growth ministry area. Presbytery executives are experienced in advising congregations and pastors on practical options. In broad context, ministerial salaries should not be a vow of poverty, but they are already below market for similarly educated professionals. More important, they are inadequate to sustain family life. Like many striving to remain in the “middle class,” pastors’ families generally depend on two incomes. Younger pastors, furthermore, are often burdened by student debt and high childcare costs. The costs of inequality can be seen in the exit of approximately 30 percent of ministers (including higher numbers of women) from the ministry within ten years of ordination.

This first and longest section starts by recognizing that the lowest salaries represent a weakness of the whole system that allows the internal “market” of the church to reflect too much the economy around us. The church has much to teach the marketplace. Part of that teaching is to value nonfinancial incentives: joy in service, collegiality and trust over competition and insecurity, and a stronger witness to the distinctiveness of the church. However, many proposals for “new” and “post-institutional” church structures seem to simply capitulate to the marketplace by abandoning many smaller congregations striving to be faithful. Yet, on the other end of the economic spectrum, we are told that high salaries are necessary to attract pastors and church leaders with the skills required to lead or to minister in affluent neighborhoods. We recognize that measures to increase equality in compensation need to go with measures to increase accountability for results, but we want the Gospel to be the final measure. Trusting in God’s call to go and make disciples, we call for the development of strategies of shared sacrifice and substantial change, not simply for greater solidarity, but to allow the gifts of more new ministers to carry the Gospel into all neighborhoods, especially those in economic need, bearing fruit for God’s Kingdom and its servant, the church.

Reformed churches in France, Italy, and other places pay all ministers on the same basis with differences according to need, like the mission personnel who serve through the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s World Mission ministry area. That centralized solution does not match the market model characteristic of U.S. Protestantism. In its absence, several other attempts have been made to develop resources to support ministries in areas where local financial resources are too weak. The possibility of raising the lower salaries through gifts by Presbyterians of significant wealth should be encouraged, but it has not yet had significant results, possibly confirming the primary loyalty of most members to their local churches.

Similarly, although the 2010 and 2012 General Assemblies voted to encourage presbyteries to establish voluntary salary equalization or enhancement funds, none are reported. Such funds would be based on contributions from congregations with pastors whose higher salaries would exceed presbytery maximums. Contributions would be recommended to match the amount by which a pastor’s salary package would exceed a formal or informal maximum number. This strategy seems unlikely to take hold without significant structural changes even though high differentials in pastoral salaries do affect relations within presbyteries and among members of church staffs. In practice many presbyteries receive less in contributions of any kind and some have cut back on their executive, support, and especially program staff. The 2010 Report on the Theology of Compensation found only three presbyteries, two in Iowa and one in New York State, that had stated presbytery maximums. The slightly higher pension dues paid on higher pastoral salaries to the Board of Pensions is thus the most significant current financial embodiment of solidarity among ministers, although there remains a cap on dues payments on salaries of over $179,000, giving the best paid pastors a kind of exemption or bonus.

Another source of outside support for many congregations, primarily in the past, has been presbytery “aid to fields” or other grants. In the case of one New Jersey presbytery, such funding had gone for many years to several congregations of varied racial ethnic membership. No significant growth occurred in these congregations during more than twenty years of subsidy, although overall economic decline marked most of the areas where these churches are. The presbytery itself experienced declining revenue. Hence a decision was made to phase out this support, although the presbytery assists with training in targeted growth strategies. Did those subsidies keep the churches’ ministries alive, even if they did not grow in members? Did that presbytery (and others) require any accounting of ministry activities and their results from churches given help? Did the presbytery executives and general council members hold themselves accountable for mission or membership goals across the presbytery? What counts as “success” and does it differ depending on the local context? Are we asking such questions and striving to carry out ministries wherever they are needed?

A somewhat similar process called “circulating funds” existed in the United Presbyterian Church by which more prosperous synods helped support financially weaker ones, sharing assistance for presbytery staffing costs. It could be argued that the initial spread of congregations, presbyteries, schools, and hospitals had been due to strong central mission boards, but once presbyteries were established the institutional momentum eventually shifted direction. In the case above (and others) such subsidies were held essential to receiving pastoral leadership, and pastoral leadership was held essential to congregational survival. Yet, too often, indirectly subsidized pastors in smaller congregations have frequently been tentmakers or semiretired and their approach has often necessarily been maintenance rather than renewal or growth due to lack of time or resources.

In other forms of subsidy, support is given directly to pastors who may be selected jointly by the presbyteries and other funding bodies, increasing accountability and congregational planning. Any external funding model faces the challenge of measuring pastoral performance. Structuring calls for specific terms (two to five years) with formal renegotiation procedures (designated pastorates) has helped both pastors and sessions get clearer about their particular responsibilities. The “For Such A Time As This” program of the Presbyterian Mission Agency has for several years selected and subsidized pastors for rural churches. On the other side of the size spectrum, the Lilly Endowment has funded a pastoral fellows program for starting ministers in large teaching churches. Seminary field education arrangements have also helped supplement pastoral care in many cases.
Since the last General Assembly, the most significant large-scale factor affecting less well-paid and generally younger pastors with families was the Board of Pensions’ plan that would have shifted and raised medical dues. That plan (announced right after the assembly) was delayed and amended after a large-scale protest, but continued medical cost pressure seems likely to put less well-paid pastors, ruling elders commissioned to particular pastoral service (formerly known as commissioned lay pastors), and other church employees into some form of Affordable Care exchanges, affecting the “community nature” of the Board of Pensions’ service to installed pastors who have normally been required to be part of the plan. Facing a large shortfall in healthcare funding, the Board of Pensions continues to project that in 2015 it will charge Plan members themselves 23 percent of effective salary and an additional 1.5 percent for spouses and children, payable by member, hiring body, or combination of the two. Because of the ERISA-reinforced firewall between pension and medical benefits, the pension part of the Board of Pensions is quite strong and well-managed but cannot be used to offset medical costs.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, while not in total agreement with the Board of Pensions’ own compensation structure, strongly supports the widest possible membership in the Board of Pensions and values the “community nature” of some of its provisions. Thus the prospect of a two- or even three-tier categorization of pastors within the Plan arouses concern, as do any disincentives for having children or supporting other dependents. The Board of Pensions has considered the administrative and actuarial issues in having a universal or standard plan onto which additions could be purchased but has not chosen this option. Would there be greater opportunity for equalization or partial subsidy to the less well-paid, however, under a system that makes entry into a basic Plan less a hurdle but fuller medical coverage an additional cost? In principle, ACSWP would favor as universal a plan as possible.

Due to past earning power of its membership and recent investment skill, the Presbyterian pension plan and its medical program are stronger than other denominational plans and hence would be weakened by any ecumenical combination. The ultimate goal of a single-payer system, endorsed by past General Assemblies as the most just and cost-effective way to provide healthcare to our nation, would end the need for the Board of Pensions’ medical program. Whether the Board of Pensions should put all ministers and church staff into a dedicated Presbyterian Affordable Care Act Exchange or into a hybrid program is another question beyond the scope of this response to referral.

Within the religious marketplace, it is frequently recommended that mainline congregations and ministers need to become more “entrepreneurial” for the sake of the gospel, and the word “missional” is sometimes used almost in this sense. Often accompanying this proposal is the belief that the value (and “quality control”) represented by the denominational “brand” is decreasing. Setting aside for the next section theological consideration of the nature of church, there is enormous literature on the challenges of redeveloping congregations slipping below critical mass in terms of members or resources, and lacking a clear enough sense of call or mission. Some are called hospice churches and their pastors are often part-time or commissioned lay pastors (CLPs, or now “commissioned ruling elders to particular pastor service,” a category not mentioned in the wording of the referrals under consideration, but to which some of this summary would apply).

In the absence of a direct salary support arrangement, the connectional system may still be able to encourage positive changes in the intra-Presbyterian marketplace. In order to give existing congregations a greater hope of sustainability (and decent pastoral livelihoods), regional bodies with oversight capacity can help congregations and pastors to help develop alternatives before decline becomes largely irreversible. Such intervention, triggered perhaps when membership declines for three consecutive years, could obviously be resisted by sessions and by pastors, who might feel they have no ability to find other calls if a term contract were suggested. Some of the lack of mobility in the system is also due to the number of pastoral arrangements actually supported by spouses’ work. But the momentum of decline tends to bond pastoral and institutional survival with lowering expectations and a “taking care of” mode of pastor and congregation ministering to each other (and to their buildings). The irony is that in taking care of a particular long-serving pastor, a congregation may limit its own future prospects; the reality is that intervention focuses on the future Christian witness without guaranteeing current pastor or building. Again, external demographic factors play an enormous role in any congregation’s “success,” and the most faithful congregations and pastors may decide to conduct vibrant ministries even in areas abandoned by business and government.

Without some measures of accountability that provide performance or even “market” information to congregational leaders, it is unlikely that our decentralized system will provide significant assistance to “steady-state” or declining congregations. And without proactive capacity in the mid-councils to help congregations and pastors change, market forces will continue to lead us toward an archipelago of larger suburban congregations with minimal rural and urban presence.

One radical and somewhat costly proposal would be to allow pastors who wanted to retire a year early to do so without penalty. This would open up a number of pulpits for younger/newer pastors, although it would entail a significant cost in pension credits. This would be a system-wide, if still partial answer, and could not be repeated too frequently. The bottom-up version of this is being practiced by some larger congregations that are assisting neighboring congregations by sharing full or part-time ministers whose costs they cover.

Another option for increasing pastoral support is to address the cost of housing by both encouraging cooperatives (possibly on the young adult volunteer site model) and shifting back toward manses, regardless of tax benefits. The provision of housing by religious bodies does provide for flexibility and mobility as well as ease of entry for new pastors. (It has similar effects in the military, which has its version of the manse allowance to compensate for the lack of home equity on military bases).
To sum this longest section, the realities of the market are not to be ignored even as Christian and Reformed values require new measures to:

1. Expand the sense of loyalty of Presbyterians beyond their own congregations to help support joint ministries in their presbyteries or regions. Traditionally such ministries have included camps and conference centers as well as mission projects; new ventures include increased numbers of intentional communities for young adult volunteers and others committed to mission service, and sponsorship of new worshipping communities. Beyond the specific ministry or shared site, the goal would be to give members whose own congregations may close another place of continuing church connection;

2. Share pension and medical cost burdens as universally as possible, including the payment of dues on effective salaries over $179,000 (the current cap);

3. Readdress housing costs in light of potential tax changes and living patterns, including renewal and redevelopment of church properties and ecumenical partnerships;

4. Strengthen the accountability of pastors and congregations through the increased use of time-limited terms and renewal processes, conditioning presbytery approval of terms of call and support (including shared insurance, grants, student loan debt reduction, etc.) on careful mission planning and collegial participation in presbytery life (overall, this would shift the weight of presbytery scrutiny from the processes of ministerial entry to on-going mutual accountability among pastors and congregations);

5. Strengthen the accountability of mid council staff to short- and longer-term strategic plans that would include conversations with “full communion” partners and specific attention to those in ministry with lowest compensation in their jurisdictions (including bi-vocational ministers and those in nontraditional worshipping communities);

6. Engage larger congregations in regular conversations with presbytery/synod representatives on their use of resources, including salaries, mission giving, and building projects, to share information and help coordinate plans for area witness.

In 2010, the General Assembly approved recommendations in the report, Neither Riches, Nor Poverty: Compensation, Equity, and the Unity of the Church, which summarized the Reformed tradition’s concern that each person’s calling serve the common good, and that excessive inequality tended to accept poverty and weaken communities of all kinds, including in the church. In a society characterized by increased inequality, it is important for the church to resist this trend and not simply reflect the communities and assumptions where it finds itself. Earlier compensation studies had developed principles and sets of criteria to guide salary setting, acknowledging the balance between merit and equality and the Reformed conviction that everyone has a calling, so that the ministry is a specific but not a special vocation (not a “higher calling to receive lower pay”). An important study in the former Presbyterian Church in the United States done in 1983 included a theological paper by Walter Brueggemann contending that a bigger contrast than that between merit and equality was that between Christian community values and those of the “world” or “market system.”

The Report of the Special Committee on the Church in the 21st Century asked Theology and Worship to do a somewhat similar task to what had been done in Neither Poverty, Nor Riches in 2010: “Charge the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Office of Theology, Worship and Education, to articulate a Reformed understanding of just compensation based on our theology of God’s providence and the grace in which we all live and serve.” The Theology and Worship website will post resources on this subject.

The 2010 study process looked at both the grounding of historic Reformed thinking on compensation and the actual patterns of compensation in congregations and within the General Assembly agencies. Salary data for pastors and other church-employed workers in the Board of Pensions plans is not released on an individual basis, but synod-wide aggregate data is available (http://www.pensions.org/AvailableResources/BookletsandPublications/Documents/salaries_parish_ministry_2013.pdf).

Based on the church’s historical commitment to solidarity and accountability of its leadership, the salaries of all presbytery, synod, and General Assembly agency staff are printed in the Minutes of the General Assembly, Part II, although (for a variety of reasons) they are not posted online. Generally speaking, the larger congregations and those with endowments pay higher salaries. On the institutional level, the salary structure for the General Assembly Mission Council (now Presbyterian Mission Agency) staff used to be contained within a 3.5:1 ratio of highest to lowest salaries for all employees. Beginning with the hire of a head of the Board of Pensions to serve as executive director of the General Assembly Mission Council in 1998, a specific ratio was removed and the ratio of highest to lowest salaries widened.

In 2008, the advisory committee did a study of pay equity in the church entitled, God’s Work in Women’s Hands. The title intentionally recalled a major 1996 policy approved by the General Assembly on work, God’s Work in Our Hands. The 2008 report confirmed the difficulties faced by women and persons of racial ethnic heritage other than Caucasian in receiving comparable salaries to those of white male pastors. While limitations on publically available data make direct comparisons difficult, a tool for assessing pay equity on a presbytery basis was provided. Widespread anecdotal evidence seems to confirm that the conclusions of that report remain valid.

The advisory committee stands by the conclusions of the 2010 report, most of which were approved by the assembly. The assembly voted down the committee’s recommendation that a 5:1 salary range be established or reinstituted for General Assembly agency staffs, although the Office of the General Assembly continues to keep that framework (depending partly on Presbyterian Mission Agency staffing for some administrative functions). Of the top agency leadership, the Stated Clerk is both elected most broadly by commissioners of the General Assembly and paid the least of the six boards. The ACSWP continues to believe that the examples set by leadership influence the attitude and loyalty of the broader membership and the body of ministers toward the national agencies.

III. Review of Lack of Parity in Compensation Based on Class, Gender, Ethnicity, and Type of Service to the Church.

Each presbytery has a listing of terms of call and, by sampling these, it is possible to confirm that ministers in smaller congregations are generally paid less than those in larger churches. Further, it is possible to confirm that most women and racial ethnic pastors serve, on average, smaller congregations than white male pastors. This is in part due to second career starts for a higher percentage of women and racial ethnic pastors, so that they have less accumulated experience. At the same time, though harder to measure, many report that pastors over the age of 60 find it difficult to relocate and may move into doing interim pastorates.

The easiest confirmation of the female/male salary differential is found in the 2014-2015 Compensation Handbook for Church Staff produced by Richard Hammar’s Church Law & Tax firm. According to Marian V. Liautaud, “Across all paid church positions, men are paid 28 percent more than women.” Further, they report:

“Results from Christianity Today’s biannual survey of 4,600 churches nationwide, which are featured in the new 2012-2013 Compensation Handbook for Church Staff, reveal the top paid positions based on gender.” It should be recognized, then, that their data sets are based on self-submissions, and may tend toward better paid ministers in secure situations. For men, the highest paying salaries are: senior pastor, executive pastor, adult ministry pastor, administrator, associate pastor, worship pastor (or leader), children’s pastor. For women, the line-up is a bit different: senior pastor, executive pastor, associate pastor, solo pastor, worship pastor, administrator, and children’s pastor. Clearly many of these positions presume a multi-staff church.

Male or female, it pays to be the senior pastor. However, male senior pastors typically are compensated more than their female counterparts. Some of this may be explained on the basis of church income, which proved to be the biggest factor affecting compensation and benefits in the study. For example, in churches with male senior pastors, church income (i.e. revenue) averages about $710,000, while church income where women serve as senior pastors hovers at about $487,000. This gap in revenue could explain, in part, why women senior pastors tend to be paid less. (For comparison to these Hammar numbers in the PC(USA), the frequency of women holding senior pastor positions in congregations with over 1,000 or more members is only 4.7 percent. The majority of women serve in congregations of fewer than 300 members).

Male executive pastors earn nearly 50 percent more than women in this same role. Additionally, even though women make up 69 percent of full-time children’s pastors, men serving in this role full-time earn nearly $12,000 more on average than women.

The gender pay gap closes for solo pastors. Although 92 percent of solo pastors are men (paid an average of $57,452), they earn only slightly more than women solo pastors (paid an average of $54,102).”

The upshot of this brief overview is to confirm the need for solidarity in closing gaps that still exist, the data on solo pastors suggests that most of those serving smaller churches do not see the potential for significantly higher salaries.

IV. Current Practice and Proposals within the Presbyterian Mission Agency and Other Agencies of the General Assembly

The employment structure of the General Assembly agencies, like that of the presbyteries and synods, is relevant to the overall compensation of ministers or teaching elders in the church. It should be noted, however, that most of the employees of the national agencies are not ministers; most professional staff are specialists, and many are not Presbyterians. It may also be noted that most assembly staff live in the Louisville, Kentucky, area, and thus do not live in a high cost-of-living environment. (Costs and limits on air travel to a midsize city may be noted, however, as frequent travel is a burden on many of the middle to senior staff). For those ministers who do serve the church in the assembly agencies, however, there clearly is a salary range that compares to the spectrum in the parish, with relatively few in the highest ranks but proportionately fewer in positions near presbytery minimums.

At the 2010 General Assembly, the commissioners approved all of the recommendations in Neither Poverty Nor Riches except the one calling for a limit on the agency salary spectrum of a 5:1 ratio. Executives from the agencies contended that such a low ratio would make it impossible to attract high-level talent, particularly in finance, investing, law, and other disciplines favored by the market. The Office of the General Assembly itself maintains the 5:1, top to bottom, salary scale, which reflects the 3.5:1 salary scale of the General Assembly Council that lasted into the 1990s. Commissioners interested in seeing the scale of pay differentials are directed to the Minutes of the General Assembly, Part II, Section 8, though this section is only available in print form. The advisory committee continues to believe that this section serves an important accountability function within the church.

The advisory committee has engaged in several additional dialogues within the Presbyterian Mission Agency. One, with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, was to follow up on God’s Work in Women’s Hands and encourage a thorough pay equity study of the agency. That work was completed last year and showed women of color to be in some predictable places in the organization, as support staff, but also showed women to be in leadership positions throughout the organization. The advisory committee was pleased that Human Resources conducted this study and is maintaining the data sets and position analysis to monitor hiring patterns. The results of that study can be found at http://www.presbyterianmission.org/media/uploads/game/pdf/13september/information/b.211.pdf.

Another dialogue had to do with health insurance benefits for security and cleaning staff employed by outside contracting firms. Presbyterian Mission Agency senior staff were agreeable to putting healthcare benefits in as one of a number of criteria to be reviewed in the renegotiation of the two contracts, though the successful roll-out of the Affordable Care Act in Kentucky now provides those near-minimum wage employees considerably better alternatives than they had. This dialogue continues and is appreciated by ACSWP; past General Assemblies have endorsed access to healthcare for all, and have in fact specified “single payer” as the preferred approach for public efficiency and equality.

A third area of concern for the advisory committee has been the new compensation system of the Presbyterian Mission Agency itself. Because this program includes across-the-board raises, it naturally will tend to increase the inequality of reward, as 3 percent on $50,000 is a lot less than 3 percent on $150,000. A proposal from the Justice Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for making the raise structure more proportionate or “progressive,” however, was defeated by the board as a whole (http://www.pcusa.org/news/2013/9/27/pmab-rejects-pay-raise-modifications-center-employ/). Thus the board has endorsed the current program on two recent occasions.

In response to a request from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, however, the Human Resources office is taking measures to ensure that all salaries meet “living wage” standards, which are considerably more than minimum wage.

We end this response to referral with a question to the commissioners as to how important they consider solidarity in salary structure to be? How important to people in the pews is the salary structure of the ministry, much less the relation of the salaries in the national agencies to those in the presbyteries? Theologically and as a matter of morale, it seems important to us that, as inequality continues to grow in our society, the church be organized along different lines.

Although the differentials within the church pale in comparison to the inequality between hedge fund manager salaries and those of the working poor, the church must always ask itself whether we are called to conform to the economic structures in this world or to organize ourselves as the Body of Christ, in which “the eye cannot say to the hand, ‘I have no need of you.’” The compensation structure of the PC(USA), both in terms of its parish ministers and its national agencies, seems to have continued room for growth before it reflects the equal importance of diverse gifts to which our Scriptures witness.

Endnotes

2. In 2006 a dedicated Presbyterian business person clearly wanted to make such a transformative gift but was unable to muster the funds to carry through a pledge. We would strongly support a large-scale gift targeted to ministerial compensation, noting that the infusion of major support could be done in several ways.
3. Many commissioned lay pastors have retired from previous occupations; the thrust of this response to referral was fairness for persons seeking to devote their whole employed lives to ministry.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 08-07.

The recommendations presented within Item 08-07 are brought forth as directed by the 220th General Assembly (2012) following approved referrals from the Report of the Special Committee on the Nature of the Church in the 21st Century. Thus, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s (ACSWP) recommendations come following extensive research and data gathering regarding sustained pay inequality and the need to recognize such as an ongoing issue both in society and within the church. They also acknowledge the need to organize the church along different lines than current societal norms.

The ACSWP highlights lack of parity in compensation for teaching elders, as well as for Presbyterian Mission Agency staff, and the need for continued work at all levels of the church until all people receive a “living-wage” income. Cited for further information is the 2014–2015 Compensation Handbook for Church Staff (Richard Hammar), which articulates “Across all paid church positions, men are paid 28 percent more than women.”

The concurrence of ACWC with ACSWP's Item 08-07 further emphasizes ACWC's concern for pay equity for all women.

Comment on Item 08-07—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve this Recommendation on Fairness in Ministerial Compensation: Incentives and Solidarity, a Response to Two Referrals, and advises that the assembly consider the following comment for more information.

This recommendation addresses the compensation structure of the PC(USA), both in terms of its parish ministers and its national agencies. It concludes that the church’s compensation structure “seems to have continued room for growth before it reflects the equal importance of diverse gifts to which our Scriptures witness.”

Section III reviews lack of parity in compensation based on two identified categories of persons or groups on which Committees on Representation promote, review, advise, advocate, and consult with church entities, committees, councils, and divisions in order to ensure that the principles of inclusiveness and diversity are implemented: gender and ethnicity.

The following findings highlight areas that seem to have continued room for growth and should concern commissioners:

• Most women and racial ethnic pastors serve, on average, smaller congregations than white male pastors.
• Across all paid church positions, men are paid 28 percent more than women.
• Male or female, it pays to be the senior pastor. However, male senior pastors earn nearly 50 percent more than women in this same role.
• The gender pay gap closes for solo pastors. Although 92 percent of solo pastors are men (paid an average of $57,452), they earn only slightly more than women solo pastors (paid an average of $54,102).
• The upshot of this review confirms the need for solidarity in closing gaps that still exist, especially since the data on solo pastors suggests that most of those serving smaller churches do not see the potential for significantly higher salaries.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-07

Comment on Item 08-07—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is grateful for the persistent advocacy of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. It is through such deliberate encounters that we are all drawn to greater faithfulness. Despite our many conversations, the request raised in Recommendation 1 is a new one for our dialogue, as it already reflects a current practice. Currently the Presbyterian Mission Agency follows a comparative pricing compensation approach, which aligns pay with equivalent individual positions in comparable religious/faith-based, nonprofit and some for-profit organizations. Internal equity within the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the larger church is also a consideration, as is avoiding excessive compensation at the upper end of the scale. This approach readily accommodates organizational and job/role changes and recognizes performance and competency.

This practice is consistent with the Churchwide Compensation Guidelines, which include:

In maintaining a relationship between the highest and lowest salaries, lower levels of compensation should be comparable to or better than the average salaries paid in the marketplace, but not so far above the average that good stewardship of the church’s funds is compromised. Salaries at the top levels should reflect a tempering of excessive compensation. In establishing compensation plans and/or individual salaries, comparable salary data may include data from other national church organizations, including pension boards and foundations, academic institutions, the publishing field, pastors’ salaries, and other sources as deemed appropriate by the elected bodies of the entities or the employing organization.
The Presbyterian Mission Agency seeks to be clear that churchwide ministerial salary data is only one component of the compensation system, and a relatively minor one, since few Presbyterian Mission Agency employees are serving in roles that require the traditional skills of a teaching elder: pastoral care, preaching, administration of the sacraments, leading a congregation, etc. While this experience is very useful in our work, the Presbyterian Mission Agency is equally dependent upon specific skills in program administration, mission administration, office administration, writing/editing/formatting, policy development, advocacy, law, finance, distribution, payroll, human resources, coaching and conference planning, often with national/international dimensions. Many positions at the agency are not filled by ministers of the PC(USA) or of other denominations. The Churchwide Compensation Guidelines direct that “Factors to be considered when setting compensation should include the nature, purpose, scope, and responsibility of the position; the experience, knowledge, and skills required; the challenge of the work to be done and its impact on the effectiveness with which the church achieves its mission.”

If churchwide ministerial salary data is used as the sole context for compensation, it will be impossible to fulfill the Churchwide Compensation Guidelines (initially developed by the General Assembly in 1988 and most recently reaffirmed in 2002).

[The assembly referred Item 08-08 with comment. See pp. 40, 42.]

[Comment: To refer Item 08-08 to the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) to convene an urban ministry roundtable with groups and individuals engaged in urban ministry including, but not limited to, ACSWP, ACWC, ACREC, and racial ethnic caucuses for the purpose of developing a method of fulfilling the goals of Item 08-08 and to report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).]

The Gospel from Detroit: Renewing the Church’s Urban Vision

Affirming God’s call to seek the welfare of the city and to organize God’s people for the proclamation of the Gospel and the promotion of racial, economic, and social equity and justice for all citizens of Detroit and other cities of the United States of America, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) take the following actions in both mission strategy and public witness:

1. Commend the efforts of Presbyterians in city congregations and presbyteries that embody an urban Christian vision; who see the urban poor as clearly as the glittering skyscrapers; who seek to understand urban trends theologically and ethically; and who unite ministries of mercy and justice with evangelism, education, and cultural outreach, recalling our heritage of urban mission leadership and working to renew or build new worshiping communities grounded in a creative Reforming spirit.

2. To strengthen the church’s witness and outreach “on the ground,” the General Assembly encourages presbyteries to (a) examine their own histories and statistics of city congregations in the way Detroit Presbytery’s are analyzed (see Appendix A to this resolution, p. 512) and (b) renew their own urban strategies in response to existing racial and economic inequity and to new urban demographic, economic, and transportation dynamics, including the promising movement of more young people into cities.

3. Strengthen the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to bear the gospel of Jesus Christ to the cities of this nation and to support mid council efforts by renewing its urban mission strategy and designating a staff position dedicated to the coordination of General Assembly resources related to metro/urban ministry, including ministries of racial and economic equity; that this position to be lodged in the Presbyterian Mission Agency; that this position be funded through 2020, and that it carry out the following functions:

   a. Work with presbyteries, congregations, and synods to organize local, regional, and national networks of metro/urban ministry practitioners.

   b. Coordinate Presbyterian Mission Agency resources and programs related to metro/urban ministry (that have been located in several ministry areas).

   c. Develop partnerships with other faith-based and community-based organizations, especially those creating multiracial and multiclass constituencies that support metro/urban ministry.

   d. Develop a catalog of resources that are available to support metro/urban congregations and ministries, such as grants, training, and volunteer opportunities.

   e. Provide technical assistance and training to those engaged in metro/urban ministries and to those partnering in the creation of new intentional communities of Presbyterians engaged in such ministries of witness and service.
f. Work with presbyteries, synods, seminaries, and other related metro/urban ministry organizations to develop training and networking opportunities, particularly with attention to racial and economic justice.

g. Be an advocate for metro/urban ministry at the congregational, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly level.

4. Equip new ministries and worshiping communities, by directing:

   a. Presbyterian Mission Agency to organize ongoing regional conversations on “Race, Class, and the Current Challenges of Urban Ministry,” gathering the rich resources of those who have significant experience in urban ministry, particularly the rich resources of people of color; that the collective wisdom of such conversations be edited, organized, and published periodically in the print, video, and digital media of the PC(USA) for wide availability;

   b. the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in collaboration with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACREC and ACWC) and the racial and ethnic caucuses of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to review the social teachings of the church on urban mission, including the challenges of race and class, solicit input from significant leaders in metro/urban ministry, and develop a resource of theological and practical experience-based guidance for all engaged in metro/urban ministry, and that this guide be made available to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

In Public Witness:

5. Faced with the application of bankruptcy law to Detroit and other cities, to state its concern that democratic governance not be over-ridden by measures more appropriate to corporate receivership; to urge that state laws recognize the mutual dependence of healthy cities and suburbs and rural areas and seek measures to reduce tax competition; to require rigorous cost/benefit analysis of all tax giveaways to distinguish between units of civil government and private/for-profit enterprises; to provide transparent and objective analysis and comparative data on the performance of city and state investment agencies; to otherwise seek to share benefits and burdens across metropolitan areas; and to prevent the dismantling of public assets, infrastructure, and social protections.

6. In view of court decisions and legislation that could allow public employee pension benefit programs to be considered as unsecured creditors (rather than deferred compensation contracts), to state its concern that such precedents tend to weaken rather than strengthen public trust, to devalue public employees and their collective bargaining rights, and to add to problems of economic inequality and therefore urges federal and state lawmakers to improve statutory protections for all public employee pensions and to improve the oversight, disclosure, and administration of public pension funds.

7. In view of the need to protect both retirees and taxpayers from poor pension fund administration, to recommend that governments be legally required to make pension contributions every year, that state and municipal employees be included in the Social Security system for efficiency and fairness, that any cuts in current salaries and benefits be distributed with intergenerational equity, and that when public and corporate pension benefits must be adjusted to ensure viability, they not be converted to 401(k)s, which substantially increase market risk for workers.

8. To support national and state urban policies that favor redevelopment rather than sprawl, efficiency in transportation and energy use, holistic, sustainable, and accountable approaches to “promise zones,” and other targeted strategies to assist abandoned or distressed areas.

9. That the Stated Clerk be requested to post the full text of this resolution and its appendix online, and that a limited number be printed for members and for communication to state, city, and federal lawmakers and regulatory agencies by the Stated Clerk and the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Rationale

The following pages begin with a brief theological rationale for the above recommendations and the history of hope and crisis in Detroit. They continue with an analysis of how the story of Detroit has played out and continues to play out in cities across the nation. The report concludes with the Gospel from Detroit—a proclamation of the good news of God’s presence in the midst of deep personal and institutional suffering.

A. Introduction

   Habari gani?: a Swahili greeting whereby one encounters another with the question—“What news?” What is the news coming out of Detroit; what is the news being brought to Detroit? As preparations proceeded for the convening of the 221st General Assembly (2014) in Detroit, Michigan, a voice cried out in the wilderness … “Habari gani?”

   A compelling story is told of this city in the documentary, “Abound in Hope,” inviting the General Assembly to our city. A likewise compelling story is told by the actions of the Michigan Black Presbyterian Caucus, which has identified its constituent congregations as “Urban Churches in Crisis.” It has been said that there are three sides to a story: my side, your side, and the truth. In this case, we consider the side of those who abound in hope, the side of those who see themselves in crisis, and the third side. In our quest for the third side, we are called to consider the question of the day—“Habari gani?”

“… Since we are justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have obtained access to this grace in which we stand; and we boast in our hope of sharing the glory of God” (Rom. 5:1–2, NRSV). The sharing of the glory of God is part and parcel of the Great Ends of the Church: “the proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of humankind; the shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God; the maintenance of divine worship; the preservation of the truth; the promotion of social righteousness; and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world” (Book of Order, F-1.0304), and the Great Commission: “Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them to obey everything that I have commanded you. And remember, I am with you always, to the end of the age” (Mt. 28:19–20, NRSV). This sharing is at the heart of the prophetic ministry of the church in Detroit. So for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) gathering in Detroit, does hope abound or is hope in crisis? Habari gani?

B. The History of Detroit: Hope and Crisis in our Cities

1. A City of Hope

Detroit has its own unique history, but the forces that shaped it are forces that have shaped every part of our country. In the beginning of the 20th century, Detroit was the symbol of the promise of America: a place of opportunity where Henry Ford’s business practice imagined prosperous workers increasing consumer demand to support profitable industrial growth. Despite mixed motives, Henry Ford was one of the very few industrialists willing to hire black workers and put them into skilled jobs, creating hope and the beginning of a black middle class in the 1920s.1

Like many cities, Detroit grew with the rise of industrialization. Throughout the first half of the 20th century, Detroit boomed with the manufacturing of cars, and then, in World War II, this “Arsenal of Democracy” built tanks, airplanes, armored vehicles, and guns. The promise of manufacturing jobs drew hopeful men, women, and their families to the city, black and white. However, as the timeline below shows,2 a dramatic reversal began at the close of World War II. This great reversal was created by government policies, corporate decisions, and individual choices. National trends of urban deindustrialization and suburbanization were carried out in the context of rigid racial segregation, leading to Detroit’s loss of white population, increased racial isolation, and plummeting economic resources.

2. The Birth of Crisis

Fearing the possibility of another Pearl Harbor, the Federal Government encouraged the decentralization of American manufacturing as a strategy of national defense. It supported a massive expansion of the highway system as part of that strategy. Beginning in the late 1940s, the homes, businesses, and civic institutions of the black urban population in Detroit were devastated by the construction of new highways that carried folk from suburban ring to city center and back again.3 Automobile companies, along with their interconnected suppliers, were eager to take advantage of government incentives to move out of the city for cheaper land, cheaper workers, and cheaper taxes. The G.I. Bill of Rights and Federal Housing Administration (FHA) policies enabled white families to choose to move to homes in the new suburbs around those relocated factories and businesses.

By 1960, Detroit had lost half its manufacturing jobs—more than 134,000 jobs—including thousands of defense-related jobs that paid middle-income wages. From the late 1940s to the mid-1960s, 500,000 white Detroiters followed those jobs to the suburbs, leaving behind poor whites and virtually all African Americans. Legal residential segregation, FHA red-lining that denied mortgages for properties in black or mixed race neighborhoods as well as to black families moving into white neighborhoods, and restrictive racial covenants barring home sales to Jews and non-whites kept blacks in a city of increasing despair. With the exodus of work, the unemployment rate of Detroit’s African American workers in 1960 was a devastating 15.9 percent, about three times that of white workers.4 Blacks became the first “long-term unemployed,” a new term and topic for researchers. By 1960, there was a new urban landscape in crisis:

Only fifteen years after World War II, Detroit’s landscape was dominated by rotting hulks of factory buildings, closed and abandoned, surrounded by blocks of boarded up stores and restaurants. Older neighborhoods … were now pockmarked with the shells of burned-out and empty buildings, lying among rubbish-strewn vacant lots.5

City leaders responded with a variety of urban renewal projects, clearing blighted (black) neighborhoods to build middle-income housing to attract white residents or create large tracts of open land for private development projects. To keep property taxes low for developers, the city adopted an income tax in 1962. The tax continued to rise as the city struggled to pay for basic services. More residents fled.6 Racial segregation, legal or illegal but customary, combined with a shrinking housing market in an increasingly segregated city, and inadequate access to financial resources continued to deny black residents the option of flight.

3. A City in Crisis

Detroit now wears a devastating triple crown: the poorest big city in the U.S., the nation’s murder capital, and its most racially segregated metropolitan area; a city that in 2013 Forbes named “America’s Most Miserable City.”7 It is also the home of 700,000 souls where 50.4 percent of the children live in poverty and the official unemployment rate is 17.7 percent.8
It is a city where 31.1 percent of all families live below the official federal poverty line, including almost half of both white and black families with children under eighteen. Can we hear the cry of the people? Detroit infants die at twice the infant mortality rate of the state of Michigan. Adults suffer asthma at a rate 50 percent higher than the rate for all Michigan adults. The asthma rate of Detroit’s children is two times as high as that of Michigan. As a result, the death rate in Detroit due to asthma is twice that of Michigan. Detroit’s zip code 48217 is the most polluted in the state, but the residents (white, black, and Latino) are too poor to move—who would buy? The majority of Detroit’s public schools do not meet federal adequacy standards; and in 2009, the overall death rate for Detroit children one to fourteen years of age was 116 per 100,000 children, compared with the state average of 18 per 100,000. Yet, when misery abounds, God hears the cry of the people—and comes to deliver. So we welcome you to Detroit knowing that God is here and believing that this is where God summons the PC(USA) to be: sharing hope and hearing anew the good news of God’s grace. Habari gani?

C. Racial and Economic Inequity in Urban America

1. Cities in Crisis

Detroit is not alone in this struggle. Deindustrialization and suburbanization, combined with residential racial segregation, continue to shape urban America. Of the twenty largest cities in 1950, more than half have lost at least one-third of their population, including Baltimore, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, and Cleveland. Our cities bear a greater burden of poverty. 20.9 percent of city populations are poor compared to 11.4 percent of suburban populations. Each of the ten poorest big cities in America (more than 250,000) has a poverty rate above 25 percent (Detroit, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Miami, St. Louis, Newark, Philadelphia, Memphis, and Milwaukee). Seven of these cities are also among the ten largest U.S. cities with the greatest racial segregation. Because poor Hispanics and poor whites tend to be more suburbanized than poor blacks, it is in urban centers that poor African Americans are highly concentrated, racially segregated, and economically isolated, facing unprecedented levels of joblessness. In his book, When Work Disappears, sociologist William Julius Wilson called this “the new urban poor.”

However, while cities continue to bear the greater burden of poverty, in the last decade inner-suburban poverty has increased at a greater rate than urban poverty. The Great Recession caused poverty rates to rise in 79 of the 100 largest metropolitan areas and incomes to fall in 91 of them. Almost twenty years ago, urban pastor Bob Brashear warned that cities were the canary in the coal mine. What he saw happening in cities then, he argued, was a precursor for what Christian ministries everywhere would face in the future. The suburbanization of poverty in the “edge cities” of metro areas is now occurring in areas as diverse as Atlanta and Phoenix. The issue of racial segregation continues amid the nation’s growing cultural diversity. In 2012, despite increased suburbanization of black and Latino families, 80 percent of Latino students and 74 percent of black students attend “minority-majority” schools reflecting the re-segregation of education in the U.S. As the gap between rich and poor grows, so does educational inequality, inadequate public transit, housing insecurity, food insecurity, poor health, addictions, crime, and the inability of local governments inside and outside city limits to respond to growing human needs as revenue sources shrink.

Everywhere America’s cities struggle to provide basic services and honor the pensions of city employees. Everywhere American workers struggle to achieve economic security for their families. Cities and their families struggle in the context of a country that has chosen to respond to economic challenges with a great tolerance for economic inequality. The U.S. is the most unequal country in income and wealth distribution among the advanced countries of the world.\textsuperscript{21} Of these modern countries, the U.S. has the highest poverty rate and the highest child poverty rate.\textsuperscript{22} The percentage of gross domestic product (GDP) that goes to social expenditures, including Social Security and Medicare, is one of the lowest among modern nations.\textsuperscript{23} Everywhere, despite significant advances following the Civil Rights Movement, people of color suffer these conditions disproportionately, affected by the many forms racism continues to take.

2. Hope for the Future

Yet, the Detroit metropolitan area is not impoverished. In 2005, prior to the great recession, Metro Detroit’s gross domestic product (GDP) placed it as the 22nd richest metropolitan area in the world, just above Madrid.\textsuperscript{24} In terms of GDP per capita, it placed 35th among the top 100 world metropolitan regions. Oakland County, just on the other side of 8 Mile Road, is consistently ranked as one of the wealthiest counties in the country. In 2009, Oakland County was the fourth wealthiest county in the United States among counties with more than one million people.\textsuperscript{25}

And, like many other cities, Detroit is beginning to experience a process of focused re-gentrification in midtown and downtown, along the Woodward corridor where a Whole Foods just opened up to accommodate young, well-educated adults seeking city lights and denser, walkable city life. The Millennial Generation of 80 million people is about to change the housing and transportation patterns created by older generations. Those born between 1980 and the early 2000s are returning to the urban core, to public transportation and affordable apartments, and to diverse cultures. The real estate industry, city planners, and transportation authorities are all predicting and preparing for what some call “the next migration”—back to cities. The Millennials want to be more connected and less isolated than previous generations. They manifest this desire in their full-on embrace of social media and their desire to live in places where they can be around others; i.e., the densest, most active, areas of cities.”\textsuperscript{26}

In fact, 80 percent of the U.S. population now lives in urban areas. According to new Census Bureau data, in 51 percent of the nation’s largest cities, city centers grew faster than the suburbs in 2010–2011.\textsuperscript{27} Six cities have seen their core populations grow more in total numbers than their surrounding suburbs: New Orleans, Louisiana; New York, New York; San Jose, California; Providence, Rhode Island; Columbus, Ohio; and San Antonio, Texas. “Most of the fastest-growing big cities since 2007 are of the sprawling post-1945 Sun Belt variety, including Charlotte, North Carolina (No. 4); Ft. Worth, Texas (No. 6); Austin, Texas, (10th); El Paso, Texas (11th); Raleigh, North Carolina (12th); and Oklahoma City, Oklahoma (18th).”\textsuperscript{28} And, according to the global business consulting company, McKinsey & Company, fully 85 percent of the U.S. GDP in 2010 was generated in 259 large U.S. cities. The 21st century, they argue, will be a century of global cities in which the large and middleweight cities of the U.S. will be a major force.\textsuperscript{29}

Will the PC(USA) be there to proclaim the gospel for the salvation of humankind; to shelter, nurture, and provide spiritual fellowship for the children of God; to maintain divine worship; to preserve the truth; to promote social righteousness; and to exhibit the Kingdom of Heaven to the world? Habari gani?

D. The Church in the City

1. Churches of Hope

Throughout the 19th and 20th centuries, the predecessors of the PC(USA) carried out urban ministry shaped by the example of Calvin’s holistic ministry in Geneva: a ministry for the salvation of individuals integrated with a ministry to redeem social structures and create a just community that enabled the growth of human capabilities and Christian values. In the 19th and 20th centuries, urban Presbyterian churches in the U.S. were built to provide services to the poor such as education, job training, and shelter. They were active in developing housing projects and medical facilities. In the 1940s and 1950s, the training of many Presbyterian pastors included time spent working in factories and living in working-class neighborhoods in order to understand the forces affecting urban families’ lives. However, in the 1950s and 1960s, as white populations moved out of the cities, a national focus to create new suburban congregations grew.\textsuperscript{30} Over six decades white Presbyterians, like other white Christians, left city neighborhoods for life in the new suburbs, taking their churches with them. The result, intended or not, was to gradually withdraw the church’s ministry from urban black and Latino neighborhoods, as well as from the urban neighborhoods of low-income white families, as the impact of growing economic and racial isolation deepened.

2. Churches in Crisis

As in many other cities, and like other mainline white denominations, the dwindling presence of the Presbyterian church in Detroit since 1960 has mirrored the loss of the white city population (See Appendix A, p. 512, electronic version). In 1960, when the population of Detroit was about 1,600,000 and 70 percent white, forty-five Presbyterian churches served the city. Thirty-seven had at least one full-time pastor.\textsuperscript{31} In 1990, the population of Detroit had fallen to 1,027,000, 22 percent white and 76 percent black. Twenty Presbyterian churches, sixteen with at least one full-time pastor, served the city. Responding to this trend in 1992, the Presbytery of Detroit brought an overture to the General Assembly urging that proceeds gained by the sale of urban churches remain in the city: 80 percent locally and 20 percent to be used at the national level for urban ministries projects around the country.\textsuperscript{32} By 2013, the population of Detroit had fallen to 700,000: 10 percent white, 83 percent black, and 7 percent Hispanic. The Presbytery of Detroit lists twelve churches within the city. However, only four have full-time pastors. Five are “vacant” and three others have part-time leadership through a stated supply, temporary supply, or commissioned ruling elder. Of these eight, only two report a membership over 100. We have gone from supporting one church for every 35,500 city residents to one church (most not fully functioning) for every 58,350 city residents. Since only four of these can support a full-time pastor, we have essentially abandoned this city: one full-time pastor for every 175,000 city residents.

The Michigan Black Presbyterian Caucus Statement (MBPC), “Churches in Crisis,” (Appendix B), reports that only two of nine MBPC member urban churches have full-time called teaching elders and the remaining seven cannot afford to call a full-time pastor or even enter into a contractual relationship with a stated supply. They ask, “How can these churches grow and become healthy without strong consistent spiritual leadership?” And they answer: “MBPC member churches without full-time called teaching elders require full-time called competent Presbyterian spiritual leadership who are called and able to minister in an urban context. … Without leadership how are the people to discern what God is calling them to be and do?”

If we believe that worshipping communities can only have the pastoral leadership they can afford, have we not turned the gospel of Jesus Christ into a commodity only for those with the money to buy? How can we boast in our hope of sharing the glory of God?

3. Hope Remains

Yet, where our urban ministries remained, those involved in ministry on the streets of the cities, our urban pastors and worshipping communities, continued to work and develop strategies to respond to the deepening urban crisis: substandard housing and irresponsible landlords, racial profiling and police violence, deteriorating schools, job loss and job discrimination, red-lining, poverty-level wages, and non-responsive city departments, utilities, and private businesses. Urban ministry strategies were twofold: (1) providing immediate assistance to individuals in need, and (2) community organizing to enable communities of low-income residents to unify, defining their issues, developing their leaders, and taking action to hold city and corporate entities accountable to addressing their needs at a structural level.

In 1981, the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the Presbyterian Church in the United States adopted “A Joint Urban Policy.” This policy recognized that in the biblical witness, “the city” is frequently a metaphor for human arrogance, a place of prideful struggle for self-interested power. For some Christian Americans, the city is still a place of frightening hetrodoxy and blatant immorality where every type of belief and desire is pursued without restraint: a place of violence in many forms. However, “A Joint Urban Policy” also pointed out that sin and violence are not the Bible’s only or final urban vision. In the biblical witness, the city is also a vision of hope and a place of redemption. In the Psalms, Zion is a symbol of the just and peaceful city, the city of God (Psalm 48). The redeemed city, the New Jerusalem, is that place where God dwells, establishing justice and wiping every tear away (Rev. 21: 3–4, RSV). “A Joint Urban Policy” challenged the church to understand that as the U.S. and the world become increasingly urban, the church’s response to the city and the souls within it will be a test of its faithfulness to Christ.

Christ’s agenda compels us to work for the deliverance of those presently held captive by the ‘principalities and powers’ of this world, to ‘bind up the brokenhearted,’ to ‘raise up the former devastations,’ to ‘give garlands instead of ashes’ (Isaiah 61:1–4). We believe that God’s agenda compels us to work on behalf of a just community wherein the needs of the poor, the alienated, and the dispossessed are the first priority:

‘God has shown strength with God’s arm, and has scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts, God has put down the mighty from their thrones, and exalted those of low degree; God has filled the hungry with good things, and has sent the rich empty away.’ (Lk. 1:51–52, RSV Inclusive)

The 207th General Assembly (1995) approved the report of the Urban Strategy Taskforce, “Urban Strategy to the Year 2005.” In recognition of declining membership at a time when the U.S. was becoming increasingly urban and ethnically diverse, the church adopted an urban ministry model based on the conviction that any effective metro-urban strategy must be (1) person-centered and interpersonal, (2) congregationally enacted and interacted, (3) community partnered, (4) nurtured and connected through governing bodies, (5) seminary equipped, and (6) envisioned and experienced in worship. The new emphasis was on the need for urban ministries to grow locally from a process of listening, action, reflection, and revision; that to address the structural causes of issues, alliances would be built among congregations organizing across denominational and religious lines and between congregations and nonprofit organizations. Seminaries were called to prepare students for ministries in the urban context, with the skills and knowledge that would require.

And it recognized that such local, partnered, congregational initiatives must be supported with local presbytery or regional leadership. A national staff for urban ministry would be needed, not to develop programs, but to coordinate resources already existing, develop networks and information sharing systems, provide training opportunities, pilot projects, volunteer opportunities, and collaboration with ecumenical partners.

Urban ministry in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) during the twenty-first century will call us to know and love our neighbor. It will realize that it takes a community infused by the Spirit not only to know and raise a child or an adult, but to raze and raise structures. It will recognize that the city and those who inhabit it are the dwelling place of God.

As if in response, in 1999, just on the cusp of the new century, the Reverend Dr. Nile Harper documented the powerful impact of twenty-eight urban churches in twelve different cities where “a positive movement beyond individual acts of Christian charity toward more organized, collaborative action for justice” was remaking urban neighborhoods. He identified an embryonic energy of renewal:

From within the churches, and especially within African-American churches, there has emerged a passionate vision and push for redevelopment of city neighborhoods that is deeply rooted in religious faith and practical wisdom. … Faithful vision and spiritual power are at the center of the movement.37

Fifteen years later the desperate crisis and the potential promise of our cities are even more clear. The need to proclaim the gospel, to shelter and nurture the spiritual fellowship of the children of God, and to maintain divine worship in the city could not be more compelling. Our responsibility to preserve the truth, promote social righteousness, and exhibit the Kingdom of Heaven as cities become the energetic core of the 21st century could not be more demanding. The research has been done, the policies are in place, and we hear God’s call to heal and to rebuild.

“The Gospel from Detroit” calls upon the church to embrace the prophetic mandate of Jer. 29:7 (NRSV)—“But seek the welfare of the city where I have sent you into exile, and pray to the Lord on its behalf, for in its welfare you will find your welfare.” Jesus had the welfare of a city at heart when He gave instructions to His disciples—“And see, I am sending upon you what my Father promised; so stay here in the city until you have been clothed with power from on high” (Lk. 24:49, NRSV). The church in Jerusalem, as found in Acts (Chapters 2–4), was a church that truly abounded in hope. Sadly, many churches in Detroit do not abound in hope. Instead of seeking the welfare of the city, many of these churches are forced to seek out their own welfare as they operate from a perspective of crisis, not power. Habari gani?

4. Money, Power, and Politics

From theories of community organizing, we learn a fundamental principle of how people become empowered: organized people + organized money = power. A church established upon such a principle is a church that can truly live out the prophetic mandate of Jeremiah. The church in Jerusalem was a church with organized people: “Now the whole group of those who believed were of one heart and soul, and no one claimed private ownership of any possessions, but everything they owned was held in common” (Acts 4:32, NRSV). The church in Jerusalem was a church of organized money: “There was not a needy person among them, for as many as owned lands or houses sold them and brought the proceeds of what was sold. They laid it at the apostles’ feet, and it was distributed to each as any had need” (Acts 4:34–35, NRSV).

The constituent churches of the Michigan Black Presbyterian Caucus are in crisis largely because they lack people and money. They also lack called pastors to live and pray among them. It is because of these factors that churches in crisis lack power; lack hope. A church in crisis in a city in crisis; a church that lacks power in a city that, under the decision of the Michigan governor and the actions of an emergency manager, has had the power of its elected officials neutered.

In 2011, the citizens of Michigan voted to repeal a 1990 law authorizing “emergency financial managers.” A month later the state legislature passed and the governor signed into law Public Act 436, which allows the governor to appoint such managers when a city or school district is in deep financial distress. Detroit is not alone in being in financial distress, nor is it alone in having an unelected emergency financial manager running the city.38 A recent survey by the University of Michigan found 30 percent of the cities across Michigan reporting an increasingly harder time meeting their financial obligations. Six other Michigan cities, and 49 percent of the state’s black population, are under the control of an unelected emergency financial manager with the authority “to dismiss elected officials, abrogate labor contracts, sell off public assets, and impose new taxes on residents.”39

On January 1, 2014, a newly elected mayor took office after six weeks of negotiating “a power-sharing agreement” with the emergency manager who was appointed by the governor of Michigan in the spring of 2013. Under this agreement, the mayor will have no authority over the police force or any of the city’s financial obligations. The mayor will have no standing as the emergency financial manager negotiates to repay two global bank creditors (who are customers of the same law firm the manager is using to represent the city of Detroit and with whom he worked until becoming an EFM) between 75 and 82 percent of their debt, while targeting the pensions of city employees (averaging $19,000 annually) and the art collection of the Detroit Institute of Art as sources of revenue. The emergency manager determined that the bank debts were “secured” but that the pensions of city employees were not. Under such laws and legal practices democracy is crippled, the will of the people is thwarted, and the welfare of the city becomes even more shattered.

The case of Detroit has raised considerable discussion of municipal and state pension fund management, prompting several recommendations.40 Like many state and municipal governments and private companies, some contributions to pension funds were deferred and the true size of liabilities not fully understood.41 Combined with the after-effects of de-industrialization noted above, the city of Detroit had little room to maneuver and little help from either state or federal sources.42

In the absence of significant amounts of new public infrastructure investment (as in China), the U.S. government is also going forward with “promise zones” and other initiatives involving public and private partnerships. These are distinguished from “enterprise zones” by greater accountability for tax rebates and other expenditures and greater attention to community involvement in planning and design, intending greater community benefit.43 These are worth testing, but seem unlikely to stimulate big declines in the number of unemployed and discouraged workers who would benefit from public infrastructure investments.

E. The Gospel from Detroit

So here we have it. The story of Detroit. Every story has three sides. One side abounds in hope; one side in crisis. And then there’s the truth. Habari gani? Does the faith of the PC(USA) justify hope in the city of Detroit, or does it justify crisis? As the 221st General Assembly (2014) gathers in the city of Detroit, it does so in a quest for the truth of Rom. 5:1–5 (NRSV)—“Therefore, since we are justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have obtained access to this grace in which we stand; and we boast in our hope of sharing the glory of God. And not only that, but we also boast in our sufferings, knowing that suffering produces endurance, and endurance produces character, and character produces hope, and hope does not disappoint us ….” As the 221st General Assembly gathers in the city of Detroit under the banner Abound In Hope, the question demands an answer—Habari gani?

The news from Detroit is a gospel that comes from those who know not only personal suffering, but also the social suffering that comes from the experience of living in a society that has failed to share access to the resources that support human dignity and equal opportunity. From the experience of unjust suffering grows a tradition of Christian faith that knows deep down, in its bones, in every family’s history, that no one could have survived this history and no one survives these conditions except for the grace of God. In the context of personal and social suffering where only the power of God stands between us and the principalities of this world that can kill in a blink of an eye or ever so slowly over generations of deprivation, this grace is experienced daily. Out of the experience of unjust suffering, a faith grows that knows its utter dependence on God alone. And with that understanding devotes its life to serving God with love, hope, courage, and strength that is foolishness to the wise and the satisfied and the keepers of accounts.

So, today in communities struggling with the breakdown of schools, the absence of jobs, inadequate city services, higher fees and predatory loans, the constant presence of poverty, and excessive rates of illness and death, the Gospel from Detroit assures and affirms that in this suffering God is here with us, Immanuel. In the face of social indifference, or even human hatred, God calls us “child,” hears our cries, loves us so much, and calls us to share this Gospel with the audacity of faith that creates ways where there are no ways, lives in hope when they say there is no way, no hope.

The Gospel from Detroit is good and joyous news: it announces faith in God, not governments or corporations or any human institutions, who calls us out of the world in order to reshape us to radically reengage this world with the startling message of a just God who denounces the bondage of social, political, economic, and racial injustice (Lk. 4:18, Lk. 6:20f, Mt. 25:31f, Mic. 6:6f, Ex. 3:7f, and others). Standing in this grace we have received through Jesus our Christ, our faith becomes active and powerful as it does justice, loves mercy, and walks humbly with God (Mic. 6:8).

URBAN CHURCHES IN CRISIS
Statement by the Michigan Black Presbyterian Caucus (2013)

The need and importance of strong spiritual leadership in predominantly African American urban Presbyterian churches.

Statement of Need:
MBPC member churches without full-time called teaching elders require full-time, competent Presbyterian spiritual leaders who are called and able to minister in an urban context. Churches without full-time called teaching elders are not able to afford to call full-time teaching elders.

Statement of Importance:
MBPC member churches can no longer afford to let the urgent needs of the congregation drive out or overshadow the important needs. Demands on the session and other church members to repair infrastructure, maintain the worship space, monitor giving consumes most of the available time. Therefore little time is available for ministry, and long term planning, also important to the life of a healthy church, rarely gets the attention it needs.

What is important? Having full-time, dedicated, called, and competent spiritual leadership serving our churches. Without leadership, how are the people to discern what God is calling them to be and do? Without competent leadership how are sessions able to discern what is required of them? Without competent leadership, how is the session held accountable?

The urgent matters of maintaining the infrastructure now take priority over the spiritual well-being of the congregation.
With all the challenges facing urban churches it becomes even more difficult to face them without strong spiritual leadership.

Supporting Data:
Only two (2) of nine (9) MBPC member urban churches have full time called teaching elders.
The other seven (7) cannot afford a full-time minister, and in many cases churches cannot afford a contracted stated/pulpit supply teaching elder. How can these churches grow and become healthy without strong consistent spiritual leadership?

Concerns:
• Lack of consistent session leadership.
• Who teaches the faith?
• Who leads the saints for the work of ministry?
• Who preaches and teaches the faith of the church over time and within context?
• Who provides training and teaching of members, deacons and ruling elders?
• Who provides for the teaching of scriptures through Bible study, Sunday school, etc.?
• Lack of leadership in spiritual discernment, “what is God calling us to do as a church?”
• Lack of a facilitator or leader to lead the church through times of disagreement.
• Lack of a leader to help reconcile brothers and sisters to Christ and each other.
• Urban churches are under siege by high cost of maintaining older infrastructures and declining membership.

Considerations:
Churches without full time called teaching elders have a difficult time discerning the spirit of ministry. What ministry is God calling us to do? Where is this ministry? Why this ministry? Churches without full-time called teaching elders know how to pay their bills, maintain the infrastructure but lack a sense of ministry and belonging.

How is the relationship with the presbytery nurtured without a member of presbytery to provide this connection? Churches without full-time called teaching elders are not afforded as many opportunities to work collaboratively with the presbytery as those who have full-time called teaching elders.

These churches are often given a list of stated and pulpit supply pastors to preach and moderate sessions. This cannot be the model of Christ’s Church. After a period of time the churches become accustomed to this method and develop a false sense of “we are OK” when in reality they continue to lose their sense of community and relationship with the presbytery and other worshipping communities.
When we make it easy to obtain a preacher to lead worship by paying $125/service, what incentive do these congregations have to minimize this scenario when they look at their budget and see the money they can save?

But what about the quality of relationships and spiritual health of the congregations? Who assesses the spiritual health? What stated or pulpit supply teaching elder or ruling elder has spent enough time with the congregation to preach contextually to the congregation? What good is a sermon if it does not speak to the people? How can a stated or pulpit supply pastor speak to the context of the congregation when they do not live day to day or week to week with the congregation?

Pope Francis recently said he wanted church leaders to “smell like sheep.” How can temporary stated supply or pulpit supply or half-time call teaching elders “smell like sheep” if they don’t live and pray among them? How can half-time, part-time, pulpit supply teaching elders “feed my sheep?”

Without full-time called spiritual leaders to nurture and feed the flock how can congregations expect to grow and do ministry?

Churches who can only afford to call half time teaching elders only experience marginal improvement. Many half-time teaching elders either must have current employment or have multiple jobs to sustain a decent quality of life. If not managed appropriately churches expect full-time attention at half-time pay. This is not sustainable over the long term.

Request:

A new model of church leadership is needed to meet the changing needs of urban congregations. Funding is needed to help churches call a full-time or dedicated less than full-time teaching elder.

The Ranney-Balch fund of the Presbytery of Detroit is one source of support. Many of the urban African American churches in the Presbytery of Detroit not only cannot afford full-time spiritual leadership they cannot afford to sustain musicians and other staff needed to support a healthy church. The Ranney-Balch Fund of more than a million dollars is one current and available source of support. The Ranney-Balch Fund was willed to the Presbytery of Detroit by Ms. Elizabeth Ranney-Balch for work among Italian, Negro, and aged poor of the congregations.

This problem must not be overlooked and treated with anything other than a sense of importance. We cannot afford to “let urgent drive out what is important.” At stake is a faithful walk with Christ.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-08

Comment on Item 08-08—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly requests that commissioners and advisory delegates carefully consider any items of business that would raise the per capita rate. The COGA made a commitment to bring no increase to the per capita rate to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by making significant reductions in the per capita budgets, which included reductions in staff. We would ask that other means be found within existing committee structures to accomplish the same task.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-08

Comment on Item 08-08—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board affirms the direction of “The Gospel from Detroit: Renewing the Church’s Urban Vision” and commends the report and the in-depth analysis to the church for study and engagement. It encourages the church, especially mid councils and congregations, to consider urban ministry as a priority for national mission efforts.

Recommendations 3. and 4.a. would require additional funding from the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Recommendation 4.b. would require additional per capita funds, unless the advocacy committees, the advisory committee, and the racial ethnic caucuses subsume this work into their existing work plans. Additional funds, at this point in time, from either budget, are not available, as available funds have been prioritized in the budgets presented for approval by this assembly.

Recommendation 3. seeks to recreate an office of urban ministry—an office reconfigured in 2011 (along with the former office of rural ministry) as the Office of Church Growth and Transformation. The new approach seeks to resource congregations, whatever their locale, to be faithful communities of faith, hope, love, and witness. Resources appropriate to each locale are available on the Church Transformation website: (http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/church-growth/church-transformation/).

There is also an Urban Ministry Network in the Evangelism and Church Growth Ministry area that has been meeting twice a year for more than fifteen years. Creating a new office within the Compassion, Peace, and Justice ministry area would be redundant and have considerable financial implications through 2020, necessitating the reduction of other ministry programs and staff.

Recommendation 4.a. calls on the Compassion, Peace, and Justice ministry area to organize and publish the results of ongoing regional conversations regarding urban ministry, particularly as informed by issues of race and class and the voices of persons of color. Compassion, Peace, and Justice does not have the staff or funding for this type of regional ministry of dialogue and publishing. With the change in the way the church is engaging in mission, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board thinks that regional ministry is best done by synods and presbyteries where the geographic needs can align with the regional conversations. Adding an additional ministry function to the Compassion, Peace, and Justice area would require the eliminating of existing ministry programs and staff.

Overall, we applaud the renewed focus on urban ministry and would invite commissioners to advise and encourage congregations to utilize the resources of the church transformation area rather than creating another office at the national level.

[The assembly approved Item 08-09. See pp. 40, 42.]

For-Profit Prisons, Jails, and/or Detention Centers Be Added to the List of Companies for Divestment and/or Proscription of Investment Ownership

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends to the 221st General Assembly (2014) that the category of publicly traded corporations that directly manage or operate for-profit prisons, jails, and/or detention centers be added to the list of companies from which the General Assembly urges divestment and/or proscription of investment ownership.

Rationale

Response: The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) noted that the 215th General Assembly (2003) approved a comprehensive resolution declaring that “for-profit private prisons should be abolished” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 439.) While efforts could be made through shareholder advocacy (where stock is owned in a publicly traded company), such efforts might improve some prison conditions, but would not address the fundamental contradictions identified by the 215th General Assembly (2003):

... Since the goal of for-profit private prisons is earning a profit for their shareholders, there is a basic and fundamental conflict with the concept of rehabilitation as the ultimate goal of the prison system. ...

The question of whether human beings should be incarcerated, of how they should be treated while in prison, of when they will be released, cannot be answered by whether or not these steps will create profit for a corporation. (Ibid)

Thus, MRTI came to the conclusion that ownership in publically traded companies managing or operating for-profit prisons, jails, or detention centers is incompatible with General Assembly policy. It should be noted that the Social Principles of the United Methodist Church speak to the criminal justice system. In recognition of this guidance from the Social Principle, in 2012, the General Board of Pension and Health Benefits of the United Methodist Church also proscribed investments in such companies.

There are two corporations that would be fall into this category should it be approved by the General Assembly. They are Corrections Corporation of America and the GEO Group, Inc., a private corrections detention and mental health treatment provider.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee advises that this recommendation be approved.
The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved a clear and compassionate policy on “Restorative Justice” in 2002. In 2003, as noted by the Mission Agency Board, it approved the forthright “Resolution Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Private Prisons” (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/resolution-calling-abolition-profit-private-prison/). The normal work of corporate social responsibility is to seek to reform corporate practice from “within” the corporation as a shareholder. Concerned investors can work through the mechanisms of shareholder democracy, holding conversations with management, filing shareholder proposals to be voted on at annual meetings, building coalitions when possible to reform specific behavior. If corporate behavior is unlikely to change, and others (in this case, the United Methodist Church and other church and civil rights bodies) share the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s concern, then divesting of and refraining from holding securities is seen as a legitimate way to contribute to change. Given the position of the General Assembly against the overall practice of for-profit private prisons, the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) is correct in stating that the usual methods of corporate engagement are unlikely to change the practice and that not profiting from such prisons would be more consistent with the church’s position.

The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment was developed in 1972 to bring together representatives of the investment holding, mission program, and social policy bodies of the church to coordinate fulfillment of the policies of the assembly. As the committee’s name states, financial investment is not only about financial return. Investment is also “an instrument of mission and includes theological, social, and economic considerations” (Minutes, 183rd General Assembly [1971], UPCUSA; the PCUS adopted a similar policy in 1976). Conversations were held with leadership in the two primary countries affected when the policy was initially proposed; subsequent tracking and correspondence indicates that the basic direction of the companies is fundamental to their business model and this depends on a steady supply of inmates, whether convicts or immigrants being held in detention. Thus the 2003 resolution’s position that profit motivation would be in tension with rehabilitation and transparency has been reinforced by the concern to reduce “mass incarceration” (General Assembly, 2012). The 220th General Assembly (2010) had authorized the development of a new criminal justice volunteer network to be part of the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association, and this body has also sought to reduce the overall number of prisoners and the role of for-profit private prison operations.

A brief summary article focusing on difficulties in the for-profit prison industry can be found at: http://truth-out.org/news/item/20880-for-profit-prisons-eight-statistics-that-show-the-problems.

A series of problems in Colorado prompted a call to phase out such prisons in the Denver Post: http://www.denverpost.com/ci_22682465/git-rid-profit-prisons. To the extent that our political system provides avenues of influence for private enterprise, however, corporations profiting from current laws on immigration or drugs are naturally active in seeking to retain streams of inmates, whether violent or nonviolent.

The Advisory Committee notes that MRTI has focused on a class of firms that consists primarily of the two major publicly-held companies that run prisons in several states. There are other privately-held companies (whose stock is not available for public purchase) that provide a wide range of services in prisons or use prison labor, while other states (such as New York) have not privatized significant parts of their prison system: http://www.thenation.com/prison-profiteers. Thus MRTI’s proposal is focused and manageable, though in principle Reformed Christian concern for public accountability and the reform of corporate engagement are unlikely to change the practice and that not profiting from such prisons would be more consistent with the church’s position.

Emphasis should be placed on the reference to Michelle Alexander’s book “The New Jim Crow” with its incredible statistics highlighting the horrific impact, particularly the “failed War on Drugs” has inflicted, disproportionately on racial ethnic communities, specifically the Black and Hispanic communities, with the undeniable impact on voter suppression, an issue addressed by Item 09-15, an ACREC resolution.

Measure for Measure: Assessing the Effectiveness of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, on behalf of the Women of Color Consultation team, recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to plan a Women of Color Consultation (WoCC) that focuses on the inclusion of women of color of all ages in leadership and decision-making in presbyteries and synods and/or their successor bodies. The next WoCC shall be held no later than the fall of 2015 and be reported to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) with recommendation for further action and study.

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to make available print and electronic resources on cultural competency, antiracism, and antisexism to mid councils and the larger church.

3. [Direct] [Urge and resource] mid councils to provide training and education on cultural competency, antiracism, and antisexism to its committees on ministry and committees on preparation with an expectation that issues which are addressed in this training will be disseminated throughout the presbytery at least once every three years beginning in 2015.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to collect information from mid councils on the implementation of cultural competency, antiracism, and antisexism training for committees on ministry and committees on preparation for ministry and to report its findings to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

5. [Direct] [Urge and resource] mid councils to promote gathering opportunities for women of color within synods and presbyteries for prayer, study, fellowship, and networking by providing financial, technological, space, and other support.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2012 Referral: Item 10-16. Women of Color Consultation Committee Report. Recommendation 4. Direct the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW Ministry Areas, in Consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, to Plan a Women of Color Consultation (WoCC) That Focuses on the Inclusion of Women of Color of All Ages in Leadership and Decision-Making in Presbyteries and Synods, and/or Their Successor Bodies. the Next WoCC Shall Be Held No Later Than the Fall of 2013 and Be Reported on to the 221st General Assembly (2014)—From the General Assembly Mission Council (Minutes, Part I, pp. 61, 75–76, 854–57 of the CD; p. 230 of the printed copy).

Women of Color Consultation Committee Report

“Measure for Measure: Assessing the Effectiveness of ‘Hearing and Singing New Songs to God’” was the theme of the 2013 Women of Color Consultation held at the Presbyterian Center and the SpringHill Suites/Fairfield Inn Hotel in Louisville, Ky., on Friday, October 11, to Sunday, October 13. The consultation fulfilled the action of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to call for the creation of a fourth Women of Color Consultation to “be held no later than the fall of 2013” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 854, electronic copy), and was conducted through the Office of Gender and Racial Justice in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministry Area in consultation with the Joint Working Group of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial and Ethnic Concerns.

The goals of the consultation were:

• To lift up and affirm the voices, vision, and leadership of women of color in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as the church celebrates the 2009–2022 season of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Singing New Harmonies, which calls for the transformation of the church by focusing on the intersections of race, gender, and class in its common witness;

• To identify both areas of progress and continuing challenges in the transformation of the church as a beloved community that models equity, mutuality, justice, and accountability;

• To build community, promote healing and wholeness, and foster professional, spiritual, and personal networks among women of color.
These goals supported the objectives of developing a report to the 221st General Assembly (2014) that would include recommendations for furthering the work of equipping the church at all levels to fulfill its gospel witness of equity and inclusion.

Thirty-four women of color served as participants in the consultation. Participants represented a nearly equal representation of African American, Asian American, Latina/Chicana, and Native American individuals from all regions of the United States. Roughly ten participants represented first- and second-generation immigrant groups, and more than half were fluent in languages other than English including Korean, Spanish, Mandarin, and Portuguese. They included teaching elders, ruling elders, deacons, leaders in mid council/national Presbyterian Women, seminarians, and lay leaders of caucuses and councils. Twelve attendees were young adult women ages 21–40; two were teaching elders honorably retired. Another twelve participants were first-time attendees; the remaining number participated in previous General Assembly-sponsored Women of Color Consultations in 2004, 2008, and/or 2011. Additional personnel included four keynote presenters, a consultation chaplain, two preachers for opening and closing worship, a staff consultation coordinator, and an administrative assistant.

The format of the consultation embodied four key elements: worship, presentations, dialogue, and fellowship. Opening worship Friday evening featured the Word proclaimed by the Reverend Dr. Diane Givens Moffett; Saturday and Sunday opened with devotions shared by participants Mary Jane Miles and Danielle Palomino, and a closing worship service marked the end of work completed by the consultation and included a sermon delivered by the Reverend Dr. Rhashell Hunter. The Lord’s Supper was celebrated on each day of the consultation. Contributing a ministry of presence and counsel was the role of a chaplain for the event, fulfilled by the Reverend Un Joo Kim.

Keynote presentations focused on each of the four themes lifted up in 2008 report, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies. The themes and keynote speakers included:

- Gender Lens and Intersectionality—understanding gender-specific needs and realities as they intersect with race, class, and other social realities by Laura Cheifez
- Making Visible the Leadership of Women of Color—developing, nurturing, and supporting the leadership and gifts of women of color within the church—beyond token representation by Elona Street-Stewart
- Church as a System of Privilege and Discrimination—recognizing and dismantling the ways that the church perpetuates systems of privilege within its own structures and ethos by Gloria Tate
- Commitment to Inclusivity with Justice—promoting equity and mutuality as elements of a whole and welcoming beloved community that fosters shared power and access to opportunity by Magdalena García

Each 45-minute presentation was followed immediately by hour-long roundtable dialogues that explored the keynote themes in depth. The dialogues centered on a series of two-to-three questions developed by the keynote presenters, and the substance of these dialogues was recorded by note-takers identified among participants at each roundtable.

Questions explored at roundtable discussions included:

- On Intersectionality:
  - How does it transform your relationships to see others and ask to be seen in the fullness of all your identities?
  - What kinds of coalitions/collaborations would women of color be able to build if we were moving forward out of an understanding of the mutual constitution of oppression?
  - What are concrete recommendations for action?
- On Making Visible the Leadership of Women of Color:
  - Recognize your own expertise: Where have you been able to use it in the Church? Where has it been denied?
- On Church as a System of Privilege and Discrimination:
  - What forums have been created or exist in your area (presbytery/synod) that provide an opportunity for interaction of women of color? How are you involved? If not, why not?
  - If there are not any forums for women of color, in or near the location of your ministry, what barriers have created this void?
  - Are there remedies that can be employed, individually, collectively, via middle governing bodies or General Assembly?
• On Commitment to Inclusivity with Justice:

—How can we practice truth telling without losing hope? What are some truths that the church resists? What are some illusions that need to be destroyed?

—How can we build a church that is a beloved community: divested from greed and invested in the common good?

—How can the church foster cultural transformation through its leadership, policies, structures, and processes?

The roundtable dialogues generated valuable responses and insights. The content was both descriptive, in the form of sharing stories and illustrations drawn from personal experiences, and prescriptive, calling for the transformation of church and society to dismantle systems of oppression and to support systems of and efforts toward inclusion.

The following themes emerged as sources of positivity, transformation, and hope for women of color—as individuals, in relationships with others, and within the structures and systems of church and society:

“When We Are Telling the Truth, We Are Keeping Hope:”
The Value of Sharing Our Stories

Participants overwhelmingly celebrated the opportunity to tell their stories, hopes, fears, and joys, unencumbered by concerns for “politeness,” yet committed to the preservation of a “safe space” in which they could “speak the truth in love.” In the words of one participant, “Truth-telling isn’t losing hope. When we keep truth silent then we are dead inside. If we don’t share it, our bodies spoil inside. When we are telling the truth, we are keeping hope.” Of particular significance was the positive effect of intergenerational dialogue. Young adult women expressed appreciation for hearing the wisdom and experience of older participants, while women of advanced ages treasured the perspectives and commitment of younger women to the church. That each roundtable was comprised of women from different racial and ethnic backgrounds made for meaningful cross-cultural exchanges. On the community-building nature of telling and listening to stories, one participant remarked, “I do feel that people call me back to ‘home.’”

Though truth-telling often involved sharing painful stories, it also fostered jubilation over the progress and accomplishments made within the life of the church since the ordinations of the first African American woman, Katie Geneva Cannon, in 1974; the first Latina clergywoman, Blanqui Ontario-Rivera, (1975); the first Asian American clergywoman whose ordination was received by the denomination (1979), Elizabeth Kwon, and the first Native American clergywoman, Holly Haile-Davis (1986).

“I Empty Myself Before I Relate With Others, So That I May See Them More Fully:”
The Value of Authenticity and Trust

Along with worshiping the divinity of Jesus Christ, participants drew inspiration for developing trust-based, authentic relationships with one another from the personhood of Jesus. “Jesus had real relationships with real people, but [the church] often removes Jesus from his incarnation,” shared one participant. To be transformed by the personhood of Jesus Christ was seen as a model for the power of Jesus to transform human relationships with one another, as people recognize and regard their authentic selves. “Being authentic is risky,” was a sentiment acknowledged among many participants, but the risk of vulnerability was regarded overall as valuable in building community, especially among women of color. The processes of truth-telling and story-sharing required participants to demonstrate courage in speaking out, as well as energy and commitment through listening actively to one another. As one Native American participant observed, “I draw strength from being here. All of our stories are so different yet we’re [persevering]. We laugh, we cry, and we know the Indians have different ways of doing things. This type of getting together is curious for me; I want to know what my sisters are going through. We are telling our story. We need to understand ourselves. We don’t need to be paid for our home. We need to let people know who we are. We need to be proud of how we are. We are proud of our descendants.”

To the extent that trust-based, authentic relationships foster solidarity, one participant remarked, “mutual support and love is what will make things transformed, and transformative love is the most compelling thing. Full support of one another makes it possible for love to win.” In the words of another participant, “our common humanity is our call.”

“Seeing Life Through Various Lenses:”
The Value of Differences

Opportunities to learn more about other cultures and to celebrate their contributions to the life and witness of the connectional church were considered major benefits to consultation participants. Unity, as opposed to uniformity, emerged as a desirable goal, not only as the bedrock of solidary among women of color, but also for the church as a whole. The concept of intersectionality, deepened to explore the notion of mutual constituencies, added to the ways in which participants perceived and understood aspects of their identities. Many participants recognized the value of differences, both among groups of people and contained within individuals, given that individual identities are made up of many parts that include such things as race, ethnicity, gender, nationality, class, and physical and mental ability. Said one participant, “I value the lenses through which others perceive themselves and my own lenses of self-perception; we gain much when we see one another as multidimensional beings.”

The mutual support required for valuing differences was affirmed in another’s reflection: “to be asked to be seen in my fullness requires of others to be accepting of the “other” on all levels and dynamics of social constructionism … it would require them to accept me as an equal, created in the image of God, no less, no more, than another. …”

The following themes emerged as pernicious sources of challenge and opposition for women of color—as individuals, in relationships with others, and within the structures and systems of church and society:

“\textbf{I Don’t Know What I Don’t Know:}”
\textbf{Sources of Non-Disclosure and Lack of Guidance}

Many participants illuminated personal experiences of receiving incomplete, incorrect, or even no information about navigating the systems and structures within the church. This was most often experienced at every stage of preparation for and engagement in ministries as teaching elders, though this was also true for those involved in other leadership capacities.
“\textquoteleft\textquoteleft There seems to be this ‘hidden’ network of ‘secret’ knowledge about being mentored to move through processes that my white male colleagues somehow receive to which I’ve never been exposed,\textquoteright\textquoteright expressed one participant, a sentiment reiterated by many others.

For women who worship and/or serve in predominately nonwhite congregations, the impact of the disconnection between some presbyteries and some racial ethnic congregations compounds this “knowledge vacuum.” While a number of programs and initiatives exist throughout the church that lift up opportunities for mission and service that may be of particular interest to women of color, many women lamented the fact that they are rarely mentioned, advertised, or promoted within their contexts.

\textbf{\textquoteleft\textquoteleft We Are Always Forced to Compete for the Crumbs Under the Table:”}
\textbf{The Fear of Scarcity of Resources}

Nearly all participants lamented the lack of support networks, particularly within presbyteries. More than a few participants recalled networks, groups, organizations, and programs that existed previously for and were created by women of color, but noted that with shrinking budgets and frequent restructurings, many of those opportunities and initiatives disappeared.
Mid councils have experienced difficulties in recent years in maintaining and/or supporting ministries that equip women of color in overcoming isolation and marginalization within the systemic structures of the church. What little financial or other resources that \textit{are} allocated often position marginalized groups in competition with one another for limited offerings.

On the notion of dwindling resources, one participant voiced dismay that the problem, as she experienced it in her context, was \textit{not} that resources were scarce within her mid council, but that the way in which it manages resources was what was crippling its witness among marginalized people. Similarly, one seminary student cited “how we distribute scholarship monney in seminars—[I’m] always amazed by the fact that my really wealthy friends get the same financial aid as friends who have to work two full-time jobs and be full-time students to attend seminary.” A sentiment expressed by more than a few participants was concern about what they perceived as the “corporatization” of the church, in that it appears to them to rely too heavily on corporate models for direction (with “the bottom line \textit{as} the bottom line,” so to speak) instead of a sense of an ecclesiological mission rooted in the promotion of the realm of God.

Yet another perspective that resonated among many was the impact of shifting demographics within the United States on the “culture of fear” perceived among those in the church who belong to the dominant culture. Many sensed a reaction of panic, anxiety, jealousy, and fear among some in the dominant culture as the country becomes populated increasingly by Latino, Chicano, Asian, Black, and other nonwhite groups, as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is currently 91.8 percent White.
These reactions are seen as fueling a “hoarder” mentality that, as one participant observed, “reinforces a myth of scarcity instead of recognizing the God of abundance. God’s love and grace are sufficient.”

Scarcity of material resources was not the only plague identified by participants. Tremendous strains on their time and energy were also identified as barriers to promoting networks and connections among women of color: “In my context in which I am over-worked and over-committed, especially as I am one of the only people of color in my mid council region, I have no extra time or energy free to give to building new networks.” Burnout was cited as a significant burden among many.

\textbf{\textquoteleft\textquoteleft I\textquoteleft m Done Making Tacos for Christ:”}
\textbf{Tokenism and the Lack of Accountability for Inclusion and Equity}

“\textquoteleft\textquoteleft…I don’t mind, but I refuse to [make tacos at diversity potlucks] if we won’t have serious dialogue,” insisted one participant, speaking to the inclination of her worshipping community to strive simply for symbolic diversity instead of systemic transformation for the achievement of inclusivity and equity. Much frustration was expressed by participants over the disturbing trend among many structures within the life of the church to solicit one or two participants of color to serve, only to ignore their perspectives or fail to utilize their gifts or skills. In some cases, the opposite danger of under-utilization was overburdening of the few women of color in predominately white contexts with multiple responsibilities for addressing “all things diversity-related.”

Another frustration voiced by participants was their invisibility within mid councils in the processes of nomination to committees and task forces dealing with mission and ministry not related to diversity: “I have an accounting degree and work in financial services and I’ve not once been asked to serve on the presbytery’s budget committee,” one participant expressed. Many others noted that Committees on Ministry and other “power” committees within presbyteries were not swift to include their participation.

One of the most prevalent sources of discontent among participants was the lack of accountability within the systems of the church for upholding actions, policies, and commitments related to inclusivity and equity. While the denomination has denounced the sins of racism and sexism through various confessions and resolutions, some question to what extent the church recognizes the pain, violence, and harm that these “isms” inflict: “[Mid councils] have not neglected to implement mandatory trainings on clergy sexual abuse and child abuse policies, for fear that not doing so would make them liable to lawsuits. Isn’t discrimination abuse? Why hasn’t the church upheld trainings to prevent the abuses of racism and sexism? Is it that there hasn’t yet been a lawsuit that might cause worry? Is it only then that it will become a priority?”

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises approval of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Report with Recommendations, “Measure for Measure: Assessing the Effectiveness of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God.” The Women of Color Consultation is vital in continuing to grow the gender and racial justice awareness of the church through education, training, and support of racial ethnic women. The recommendations included in the report also provide for needed resources and educational opportunities within the mid councils that address a variety of racial justice concerns.

One correction to the report that ACWC would note: Though the report includes 2008 as a year when a Women of Color Consultation was held, this was actually a meeting of the Task Force on the Women of Color Consultation, who submitted the report, “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies” to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

Institutional Relationship Agreement between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the Institutional Relationship Agreement between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (shown below).

Institutional Relationship Agreement between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions

Prologue

The strong investment of the Presbyterian church in education reflects John Calvin’s conviction that education should be an integral part of the church’s mission. Since colonial times the American Presbyterian church, reflecting Calvin’s conviction, has sought: (1) to develop an educated clergy and provide educational service to the community of faith, and (2) to educate for responsible citizenship and to serve the public good through education. Many schools, colleges, and universities in the United States owe their beginnings to this heritage and were founded for these two purposes.
Westward expansion, the American Civil War, and Reconstruction gave rise to new obligations and opportunities. The church expanded its mission by providing access to education for those persons previously excluded. The establishment of African American, Native American, and Hispanic/Latino-a educational institutions became a central mission thrust of the Presbyterian church.

Through the schools and colleges it established, the Presbyterian church provided educational opportunities that racial ethnic people had been denied. The institutions developed racial ethnic leaders who served society at large, the church, as well as their own racial ethnic constituency. These leaders espoused the Christian faith and the Presbyterian tradition. This mission has become a sacred trust for the church and an investment in young people and adults who are challenged to serve the church, the community, and society as a whole.

The Presbyterian church’s commitment to this historic mission produced more than 150 educational institutions, of which five racial ethnic educational institutions continue to relate directly to the General Assembly through an institutional relationship agreement. These Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions are as follows:

1. Purpose

The purpose of this institutional relationship agreement is to define, strengthen, and inform the missional relationship between the General Assembly (GA), through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPREIs). The HPREIs educate and equip women and men for lives of committed leadership within society and the church. The HPREIs seek to guide and challenge individuals and to affirm them in their quest for values, knowledge, and truth. And, they endeavor to provide students with the knowledge and understanding to make ethical decisions and to be responsible to family, community, church, and nation. Each HPREI integrates faith and learning in a Christian environment, and each is committed to meeting special needs in order to develop the unique potential of its students.

The purpose of this institutional relationship agreement is to define, strengthen, and inform the missional relationship between the General Assembly (GA), through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs. This institutional relationship agreement expresses the partnership in mission between the GA and the HPREIs, a long-standing partnership based upon common history, shared beliefs, complementary visions, and a relationship of mutual respect and collaboration.

The GA and the HPREIs uphold education as a continuing priority of the church. The GA names the Presbyterian Mission Agency as its representative for program administration and ongoing relations, and recognizes the Presidents Roundtable as the association through which the relationship of the HPREIs is affected.

The parties to this institutional relationship agreement therefore mutually affirm that:

- Our involvement in education is rooted in the Bible and the Reformed tradition and grows out of our commitment to Jesus Christ as Lord.
- Our common mission is guided by the Constitution of the PC(USA), “The Great Ends of the Church,” and by this institutional relationship agreement.
- Our continuing commitment is to be involved together in service to God and society through education.
- Our continuing partnership in mission is declared in this institutional relationship agreement, setting the framework for the relationship between the GA, through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs through their association, the Presidents Roundtable.

2. Principles of the Institutional Relationship

The HPREIs seek to maintain a warm and active relationship with the church and its mid councils. Legally, the HPREIs are independent and autonomous institutions. This institutional relationship agreement describes a missional partnership, not a contract. It is based on relationships and trust with specific responsibilities for the GA, through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs, through the Presidents Roundtable. It is agreed that each entity assumes sole responsibility for its own actions and this document does not hold either party legally liable for the actions of the other.
An important purpose of the HPREIs are to provide educational experiences for people of color within institutions that are open to all. The HPREIs also nurture the relationships between Presbyterian churches and students, faculty, alumni/ae, and board members, sharing the educational mission of the institutions and providing mission interpretation of educational ministry in the church.

The missional relationship of the GA and the HPREIs is expressed in several documents of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Specifically, Article 8.4 of the Articles of Agreement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the document that guided the church in the Reunion of the two streams in 1983, reads:

Racial ethnic educational institutions have been the primary source from which racial ethnic church leadership has developed. Consistent with the dire need for racial ethnic church leadership, the General Assembly Council shall propose to the General Assembly ways whereby the General Assembly shall be able to fulfill its responsibility for education through colleges and secondary schools and for meeting the operational and developmental needs of those Presbyterian schools that historically have served Black Americans and those serving other racial ethnic groups.

The HPREIs align with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s mission of educating and equipping young people and adults for lives of committed leadership within society and the church. Annually, the HPREIs report to the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The report includes activities to support this goal.

In order for the HPREIs to use the PC(USA) name, seal, or symbol, a written license must be secured from the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. This institutional relationship agreement does not confer the use of these.

3. Core Functions and Mutual Responsibilities

The GA, through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs agree to relate in the following manner.

The HPREIs will:

• Continue the church’s commitment to education and maintain the heritage of the racial ethnic mission of each school by emphasizing quality educational experiences for people of color within institutions that are open to all. We will continue the commitment through programs that teach and model Christian values, that adhere to standards of academic freedom, that maintain high standards of education, and that emphasize individual and corporate service to humankind.

• Interpret our collective and individual missions on behalf of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Throughout the church, we will lift up this institutional relationship agreement in publications and other communications of each HPREI and will collaborate with efforts that provide interpretation of and advocacy for the HPREIs within the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

• Provide opportunities for the guidance and interpretation of the mission and program of each HPREI by having members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on each school’s board of trustees as appropriate to each HPREI.

• Demonstrate commitment to the HPREIs mission and to the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Mission Work Plan 2013–2016, especially the directional goals to inspire, equip, and connect the church to engage and join with young adults in reforming the church for Christ’s mission and the compassionate and prophetic discipleship goal to make, receive, and send disciples who demonstrate and proclaim God’s justice, peace and love in an increasingly globalized world.

• Share the accomplishments and concerns of each HPREI in fulfillment of its mission and this agreement through an annual report to the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

• Develop relationships with other entities within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for mutual support and affirmation. These relationships include but are not limited to the synods and presbyteries within which the HPREIs are located, the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, and the Board of Pensions, as well as Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We will encourage them to explore avenues of mutual partnership.

• Exercise responsible stewardship of the resources provided through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), via the Christmas Joy Offering and other designated funds and continue the pursuit of financial strength for ongoing fiscal operations. We will document our efforts through annual independent audits and annual program reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

• Encourage use of the facilities, faculty, and staff of each HPREI by various entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The GA, through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, will:
• Report biennially to the GA and other appropriate bodies on the mission of the HPREIs and the progress made toward fulfilling its responsibility for education through the racial ethnic schools and colleges.

• Support and advocate the mission of the HPREIs within the national church. The Presbyterian Mission Agency will also encourage mid councils to establish and maintain supportive relationships with the HPREIs for continued mutual support.

• Provide information regarding opportunities for funds development and opportunities to engage in the emerging priorities of the church.

• Support and articulate the unique challenges and blessings of educating poor people and be a partner in enhancing the success of the Christmas Joy Offering.

• Provide transparent stewardship of funds intended for this mission and audit-based reports of the Christmas Joy Offering to the Presidents Roundtable on an annual basis.

• Provide avenues of interpretation of the mission of the HPREIs, both as a group and as individual institutions, throughout the church. The Presbyterian Mission Agency will also seek to utilize the expertise and facilities of the HPREIs to resource the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

4. Implementation, Consultation and Reporting

This institutional relationship agreement will be implemented by the HPREIs through the Presidents Roundtable and by biennial reports to the GA. The HPREIs shall also report annually to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Reports shall include activities, programs, mission interpretation efforts, and financial reports of these HPREIs. The agreement will be implemented by the GA through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and in particular the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area. It is the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges that has the primary responsibility for day-to-day activity in reference to this agreement. These responsibilities include the administration and disbursement of Christmas Joy Offering and endowments for the HPREIs, administrative support to the Presidents Roundtable, and periodic visits to the HPREIs. The associate for Educational and Financial Support/Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges also serves as an ex-officio member of the Board of Trustees of the HPREIs.

5. Approval, Review and Evaluation

This agreement shall be effective when it is approved by the Presidents Roundtable, the boards of trustees of the HPREIs and the GA. The agreement shall be formally reviewed by the Presidents Roundtable and Presbyterian Mission Agency staff and elected representatives at least every four years to coincide with biennial general assemblies and with the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s mission planning cycle. The GA, through the Office of Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges in the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the HPREIs, through the President’s Roundtable, shall review, and when necessary, suggest revisions of this agreement. A written agreement shall ensue with copies to the GA through the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the boards of trustees of the HPREIs through the Presidents Roundtable. The next renewal is expected in 2018. Either missional partner may request a review at any time.

A part of the review and renewal process shall include the reaffirmation and celebration of the benefits of this missional relationship along with the reiteration of mutual support.

Written notice of a request to alter or dissolve the agreement shall be submitted to each missional partner, providing a three-month period for both partners to discuss the request. Following that period, a formal meeting of representatives of the missional partners will create a proposal to be submitted to each partner for action.

Rationale

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through the Presbyterian Mission Agency, has institutional relationship agreements with institutions that have shared common purpose and sought strength in partnership with the national church offices. Some of these relationships have been formalized with covenants in the past, but as the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board restructured into a smaller body and committed itself to providing mission direction and governance at a high level, the covenants for these institutions have changed into institutional relationship agreements. An institutional relationship agreement is one between the General Assembly and other institutions. In this case, the Presbyterian Mission Agency is responsible for cultivating the relationship and requesting General Assembly approval; however, the relationship is not limited in scope to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The Institutional Relationship Agreement between the General Assembly of the PC(USA) and the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions places the relationship in the context of the church’s missional directives and describes expectations and responsibilities as part of the relationship. Institutional relationship agreements are approved by the General Assembly, upon recommendation by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, for a four-year term.

The Institutional Relationship Agreement Between Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. and the Presbyterian Mission Agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the Institutional Relationship Agreement between Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc., and the Presbyterian Mission Agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Institutional Relationship Agreement between Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. and the Presbyterian Mission Agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

I. Preface

This agreement expresses the partnership in mission among Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. (PW) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA). PW and the PMA have had a longstanding partnership based upon shared beliefs, complementary visions and commitments, common history, and a relationship of mutual respect and cooperation. While this covenant is specifically for the relationship between PW and the PMA, it is commended as a model for Presbyterian Women in relation to other corresponding governing bodies and councils.

II. The Covenant-Based Relationship

A covenant is essentially an agreement between two or more parties committing themselves to certain responsibilities. The idea of covenant is at the heart of the biblical story and is generally understood as different from a contract. A contract is about legal and economic transactions while a covenant depends on trust and fidelity and focuses more on the quality of the relationship. It is agreed that PW and the PMA will each assume responsibility for their actions, and the signing of the Institutional Relationship Agreement does not hold any party liable for the actions of another party. As reflected in this covenant, the PMA does provide various services to PW. PW supports the mission of the PMA, especially the directional goals to inspire, equip, and connect the church through transformational leadership, compassionate and prophetic discipleship, new worshiping communities, and young adult participation.

A. Background

PW is a tax-exempt national women’s organization related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), hereinafter PC(USA). Its members are, first and foremost, members of the PC(USA).
Presbyterian Women came into being in 1988, five years after the reunion of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. PW incorporated in 2009 as a mission entity related to the PC(USA) as an integrated auxiliary. PW’s bylaws link PW closely to the Constitution of the PC(USA). PW’s members participate in leadership coordinating teams at all governing body levels from the congregation to the General Assembly.

From reunion in 1983 until the organizing Business Meeting of Presbyterian Women in 1988, a working team of Women of the Church (WOC) and United Presbyterian Women (UPW) proposed designs to their constituencies that culminated in the approval of the present structure. The 198th General Assembly (1986) received the Presbyterian Women Purpose and Principles of Organization as information only, pending approval by the uniting constituencies. The General Assembly action affirmed the independence and responsibility of Presbyterian Women to make its own decisions concerning leadership, program, and budget. Membership in Presbyterian Women is open to all women who choose to participate in or be supportive of the PW organization in any way. The PW Purpose states: “Forgiven and freed by God in Jesus Christ and empowered by the Holy Spirit, we commit ourselves to nurture our faith through prayer and Bible study, to support the mission of the church worldwide, to work for justice and peace, and to build an inclusive, caring community of women that strengthens the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and witnesses to the promise of God’s kingdom.” In 1986, UPW and WOC, as they looked ahead to becoming Presbyterian Women (PW), willingly became a part of the Women’s Ministry Unit where they were in partnership with Justice for Women, Women Employed by the Church, and the Committee of Women of Color. In 1993, the Women’s Ministry Unit was reorganized into the Women’s Ministries program area of the National Ministries Division.

In 2007, the Women’s Ministries program area was reorganized into Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries (RE&WM). PW continues to be in programmatic partnership with RE&WM. PW supports the PC(USA) ministries that advance the role of women in the church and society. With each restructure or reorganization of the denominational staff, the PW organization has made the decision to be lodged with women’s constituency groups and emphases. In April 2014, PW staff is no longer lodged with Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, which removed the need for ministry area lodgment. PW continues to be in partnership with the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries ministry area.

B. The Covenant Responsibilities of Presbyterian Women

Presbyterian Women will

1. conduct all mission and ministry according to the PW Purpose:
   a. nurture [their] faith through prayer and Bible study,
   b. support the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (which includes the Presbyterian Mission Agency),
   c. work for justice and peace,
   d. build an inclusive, caring community of women that strengthens the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);

2. work cooperatively with Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries as a whole and with other offices and areas within the PMA and other related entities;

3. be an active presence on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board through the PW Moderator’s membership, voice and vote, and vice moderators’ attendance at Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) meetings as observers;

4. be faithful stewards of the money given by Presbyterian women from throughout the church, whether that money is given for the general mission of the church, for ongoing work of PW, or for projects of Creative Ministries offerings;

5. ensure editorial autonomy for Horizons magazine, the annual Bible study, and all other publications of PW;

6. be guided by the general policies of the PMA (for example: contract procedures, minority vendor policies, and travel and meeting policies).

C. Covenant Responsibilities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency

The PMA will

1. support the Purpose of Presbyterian Women;

2. recognize and respect PW’s autonomy and status as a separate corporation, self-determining in its leadership, budget, and program;

3. provide support to PW;
   a. honor the relationships as stated in the PMA Manual of Operations, recognizing the full membership, with voice and vote, on the PMAB, of the moderator of PW Churchwide;
b. appoint a member of the PMAB to serve with full voice and vote on the Corporate Board (CCT) of PW;

c. acknowledge and ensure editorial autonomy for all PW publications, including Horizons magazine and the annual Bible study;

4. seek ways to build tangible partnerships and share resources with PW for joint programming with various mission areas of the PMA in which the mission priorities of the church are served;

5. through the RE&WM ministry area director, maintain close connections with PW and the PW staff and be responsive to changes, new developments and program options;

6. ensure that collaborative women’s ministries work remains a focus of PMA and ongoing work is supported.

III. Accountability

In the following ways, PW and PMA will stay in communication, as each party attempts to be faithful to the covenant promise:

A. PW will provide an annual report to the PMAB, through RE&WM, of its programs, services, and policies, and PW’s mission giving will appear in the General Mission Budget.

B. A member of the PMAB will sit with full voice and vote on the CCT of PW and report on the policies and activities of the PMA at the triennial Churchwide Gathering Business Meeting of PW.

C. A representative group from each body will meet on a two-year cycle to review the Institutional Relationship Agreement and propose any changes. The term of this agreement will be four years, commencing June 30, 2014, and expiring June 30, 2018.

Any party may propose changes in the Institutional Relationship Agreement at any time upon prior written notice to the other party.

Rationale

Over the years it became apparent that a clear understanding about the relationship between Presbyterian Women and the national church structure needed to be articulated. The Churchwide Coordinating Team of Presbyterian Women (CCT) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assembly Council, now known as the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, approved the original covenant in August 2001.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Continue its commitment to the churchwide goal of $20 million by 2020, by affirming

   a. The implementation and use of new, creative, and innovative fundraising strategies to reach our $20 million by 2020 goal, including the new Presbyterian Giving Catalog.

   b. The work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency in fostering missional collaboration among and within program areas and advisory committees, particularly the ministries supported by One Great Hour of Sharing.

   c. The Presbyterian Mission Agency’s work in conducting a program evaluation process that measures critical success factors and assesses whether programs supported by the offerings are accountable for achieving goals and intended outcomes.

   d. The work done by the Presbyterian Mission Agency to clarify the role of One Great Hour of Sharing ministry advisory committees.

   e. The great potential of the Special Offerings as a way of expressing our collective witness to the love of Jesus Christ. We celebrate the history and connectedness of Special Offerings and recognize that the offerings represent God’s call to be present to the world as a connectional church in the name of Christ with the power of the Holy Spirit.
2. Encourage every congregation to increase its participation in Special Offerings by receiving one additional offering and increasing Special Offerings giving by 10 percent in each year, as part of our shared commitment to achieving the churchwide goal of $20 million by 2020.

3. Enact or maintain the following structural arrangements with respect to each of the offerings:
   a. One Great Hour of Sharing: Affirm the current purpose and distribution of the offering. Additionally, we encourage new and continuing collaboration between recipient ministries.
   b. Peacemaking Offering.
      (1) Direct the transition to a Peace and Global Witness Offering during the season leading up to World Communion Sunday. The Peace and Global Witness Offering will be
         (a) promoted to the entire church, beginning with the 2014 offering, and
         (b) distributed for peace and global witness ministries as follows: 50 percent to the Presbyterian Mission Agency, 25 percent to presbyteries, and 25 percent to congregations.
      (2) Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to designate gifts from established Peacemaking Offering donors for current peacemaking efforts through 2016 and designate gifts from new donors to collaborative efforts in the area of peace and global witness. Beyond 2016, the offering will be devoted to ministries that specifically include peacemaking, as well as [of peace and] global witness.
   c. Pentecost Offering
      (1) Affirm the current purpose and distribution (60 percent for the Presbyterian Mission Agency and 40 percent for congregations) of the offering.
      (2) Encourage congregations to empower youth and young adults to lead the promotion of this offering on Pentecost Sunday and the season following, with a goal of increasing support for ministries with children, youth, and young adults throughout the church.
   d. Christmas Joy Offering.
      (1) Affirm the current purpose and distribution (50 percent for the Assistance Program of the Board of Pensions and 50 percent for Presbyterian Mission Agency ministries in racial ethnic education) of the offering.
      (2) Recommend that an Advisory Committee on the Allocation of Racial Ethnic Leadership Funds from the Christmas Joy Offering be established by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB), reporting back to the PMAB by the end of 2015, to examine the implications of how the church can best
         (a) be true to its commitment to the Historically Presbyterian Racial-Ethnic Institutions with whom it has covenanted;
         (b) ensure adequate provisions for an effective program of racial ethnic leadership development for the future racial ethnic leadership needs of the church.
      (3) Until the task force responds, direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to
         (a) continue its relationships with already recognized and qualified historically racial ethnic Presbyterian schools and colleges and distribute funds at no more than the current percentage levels; and
         (b) allocate funds formerly committed to now ineligible institutions to other Presbyterian Mission Agency racial ethnic leadership development opportunities.
   4. Recommend that the next Special Offerings Review Task Force
      a. review progress toward attaining the $20 million by 2020 goal;
      b. align offering recipients with the strategic objectives of the Presbyterian Mission Agency;
      c. examine the timing and programmatic emphases within each offering based on theological soundness, the liturgical calendar, and fundraising strategy; and
      d. evaluate progress on the aforementioned recommendations.

Recommendation 1. Since reunion, Special Offerings have raised more than half a billion dollars for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s collective witness to Jesus Christ around the globe. The ministries supported by gifts to Special Offerings are some of the most beloved ministries of our denomination. Despite the success of the offerings, and their place of significance in our denomination, gifts to Special Offerings have declined drastically in the last decade. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force applauds the work being done by the Presbyterian Mission Agency to slow and stop this decline. With the continuance of their work, we believe the goal of $20 million in annual gifts to Special Offerings by 2020 remains very attainable. The innovative new fundraising strategies (including the Presbyterian Giving Catalog), the sense of collaboration among ministries supported by One Great Hour of Sharing, and the development of a comprehensive program evaluation process are just some of the ways the Presbyterian Mission Agency is fostering a climate for Special Offerings growth.

Recommendation 2. As we strive to reach our goal of $20 million in annual gifts to Special Offerings by 2020, the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force believes it is important to challenge every congregation to be part of the vision. If each PC(USA) congregation committed to taking one additional offering or increasing current gifts by just 10 percent, we would attain the goal of $20 million in annual receipts as early as 2017—greatly magnifying the impact of our ministries around the globe.

Recommendation 3.a. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force (SOATF), impressed with the culture of collaboration among One Great Hour of Sharing ministries, including new collaborative projects in response to the typhoon in the Philippines, recommends no changes to the purposes supported or the distributions of the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering at this time.

Recommendation 3.b. The Peacemaking Offering, as currently structured, has played an important role in fostering cultures of peace around the world. While the offering has maintained a very loyal support network, participation in the offering has remained stagnant over much of the last two decades, with about 20 percent of PC(USA) congregations contributing around $2 million annually. Inspired by conversations with leadership and staff in both the Peacemaking Program and World Mission ministry area, we believe an offering focused on collaborative efforts of peacemaking and global witness, especially in reconciliation in cultures of violence, more accurately reflects the needs of the denomination—and the world—at this time. Restructuring the offering as the Peace and Global Witness Offering will allow greater collaboration at the cross-section of justice and evangelism and empower congregations and mid councils to use their portions of the offering in ways consistent with the current trends for mission engagement at those levels. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force further believes structuring the offering in this way has the potential to double (or more) the total proceeds of the offering within the next five years: in confidence that the greater missional impact fostered by the change would stir renewed interest in the offering, and congregations not yet participating in the offering would be inspired to reconsider. Research done by the former SOATF supports this change. Finally, we believe current peacemaking efforts will always be able to be funded within this new structure and recommend current efforts in peacemaking be funded at current levels (if offering receipts allow) for at least the next three years. As is true with all offerings, any specific designations and restrictions will be honored.

Recommendation 3.c. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force encourages the Pentecost Offering to be taken on Pentecost Sunday and during the season after Pentecost, celebrating the many ministries with children, youth, and young adults that happen during this season, such as vacation Bible school, youth mission trips, Presbyterian Youth Triennium, and summer camps.

Recommendation 3.d. We affirm the current purposes and distributions of the Christmas Joy Offering (CJO): half to racial ethnic education and half to the Assistance Program of the Board of Pensions. We believe clarifications are needed in the current interpretation of the portion designated for racial ethnic education. We have recognized that a changing world demands a new look at best practices for spending these mission dollars. Many of the schools that have historically received benefits from the offering are no longer in operation, no longer accredited, or no longer focus on the development of future leaders of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as one of their core mission objectives. Therefore, we believe the allocation of these dollars be used to fund new efforts at creating leaders for the church. As an example, most of the 1,001 new worshiping communities being developed have some sort of racial ethnic makeup, making education for church leaders in that context a critical mission need of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. We believe schools that are fully qualified and accredited and currently receiving CJO funds should continue to receive offering funds at percentage levels equal to their current funding. As new dollars become available through increased offering receipts or attrition of existing schools, they should be spent on racial ethnic leadership development efforts that are congruent with the critical needs of developing racial ethnic leadership within and for our church.
Recommendation 4. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force, through its research and work over the past two years, recommends that the next iteration of the Special Offerings Task Force review these issues in an effort to ensure that Special Offerings remain a vehicle capable of funding the critical missional needs of the church and that effective progress is being made toward our $20 million by 2020 goal.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

While ACREC advises approval, it is not without some serious questions.

The ACREC concurs with the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force’s (SOATF) affirmation of the current purpose and distribution of the Christmas Joy Offering (CJO) as described in Recommendation 3.d.(1). The ACREC also affirms the need to clearly define the standards of what constitutes a historically Presbyterian racial ethnic institution, a task the 220th General Assembly (2012), in fact, referred to ACREC. As a response to this referral from the 220th General Assembly (2012), ACREC responded with Item 08-05, A Resolution to Define and Interpret Standards for PC(USA) Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges. This resolution would address all of the concerns regarding clarity of standards, if the 221st General Assembly (2014) approves it.

Of serious concern to ACREC is a shift in the discussion surrounding the distribution of the CJO that occurs in the rationale of Item 08-13, in the section that addresses Recommendation 3.d. As noted above, the clarifications asked for with regards to standards for racial ethnic schools and colleges would be addressed in their entirety via Item 08-05. However, while the recommendations of the report of the SOATF regarding the distribution and purpose of the CJO affirm its current state, the rationale addressing Recommendation 3.d. seems to call this into question. In fact, the rationale suggests that the allocation of any new funding should be used for “new efforts at creating leaders for the church,” citing the 1001 New Worshiping Communities Initiative (1001 NWCI) as an example of a place where that funding could be utilized.

Some questions raised by this suggestion include but are not limited to:

1. What will be and who will establish the criteria for determining what a 1001 New Worshiping Community Initiative entity qualifies as an appropriate racial ethnic recipient of funding?

2. Is the suggestion to allocate “any new funding” to identified racial ethnic entities (i.e. worshiping communities, educational institutions, etc.)?

3. What are or will be the “new efforts” [aimed] at “creating” what category of “leaders for the church” (teaching elders, ruling elders, ecclesiastical administrators, etc.), and will they be racial ethnic leaders?

The ACREC’s concern is the ambiguity contained in the recommendation and the continued diminishing of funding and staff support for racial ethnic ministry.

A Resolution to Address Child/Youth Protection Policies and Resources in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to create new/updated resources concerning Child/Youth Protection measures in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that can be available for synods, presbyteries, and individual churches. (We request that these resources be from the PC(USA) and not just direction to other denominational resources.)

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to send [the following] proposed amendment[s] [to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:] [to the Book of Order regarding the requirement of all councils of the PC(USA) to adopt and implement a child/youth protection policy [to be determined by the 221st General Assembly (2014)] to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes.]

[Financial Implications: $2,500 (2015), $2,500 (2016) PMA]

Rationale

Currently the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and Child Advocacy Office of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has provided some extremely helpful resources regarding Child/Youth Protection measures and policies, which are available online. One such resource can be found under Creating Safe Ministries through pcusa.org. However, many of these resources are focused primarily on sexual harassment policies and procedures and not adequately on the broad scope of child/youth protection. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) asks that the Presbyterian Mission Agency direct that new/updated resources be created for synods, presbyteries, and particular church use that are from the PC(USA) and address child youth protection measures and policies – including and expanding beyond the focus of sexual harassment. There are many issues that have evolved with working with children/youth which need to be addressed in the work of the church.

The focus of child/youth protection policies is to ensure a safe, thriving, and nurturing environment for children and youth in our churches and church-sponsored events. These policies address screening child and youth workers and volunteers, how to implement mandatory training, simple rules involving transportation, adult/youth/child ratios, minimum age requirement of volunteers, facility security and safety, etc. It is important to understand in developing these policies that these policies and procedures are completely separate from sexual misconduct policies, and there is a need to differentiate between these resources and policies. That is why we request an amendment in the Book of Order to require all councils of the PC(USA) to make this differentiation and adopt and implement a child/youth protection policy alongside a separate sexual harassment policy.

It is the church’s responsibility to provide a safe, thriving, and nurturing environment for children and youth, and we must take seriously how our faith informs this responsibility. Our theology of the child is reflected in how we care and nurture children and youth who are under the care of the church. This theology must reflect the love, care, and high regard for the humanity and dignity of the child reflected in the Gospels.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-14

Comment on Item—From the Office of the General Assembly.

The Stated Clerk advises that Recommendation 2 could be accomplished as follows:

The 221st General Assembly (2014) directs the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Amend the fourth paragraph of G-3.0106 as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

Advice on Item 08-14—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

If it is the intent of the assembly to require each council to adopt and implement a child protection policy, the ACC believes the language of the proposed amendment, as shown in the OGA comment above, is clear and concise.

Item 08-15

Recommendation Pertaining to Budgetary and Financial Concerns of the Church

A. Relating to Budgets for Presbyterian Mission Agency

The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) incorporate into the Minutes the report of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Receipts and Expenditures Actual Compared to Budget for 2012 and 2013.

[The display that is found in pma-budget-charts-A-1.pdf is the report of actual revenue and expenditures for the years 2012 and 2013. See pp. 572–75, electronic version.]

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted Policy governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly Level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall:
   1. Report to each General Assembly:
      a. Actual total financial resources used to support the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and the expenditures during the most recently completed year. (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 375)

The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) receive the revised report of the 2014 Presbyterian Mission Agency Budget in the total amount of $79,946,530.

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted Policy governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly Level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall:
   1. Report to each General Assembly: ...
      b. Adjustments, if any approved by the General Assembly Council for the current budget year.
   2. Adjust if necessary the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program as adopted by the General Assembly. ... (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 375)

The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the 2015 Presbyterian Mission Agency Budget in the total amount of $73,671,744 and the 2016 Presbyterian Mission Agency Budget in the total amount of $78,226,389.

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted Policy Governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly Level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall: ...
   3. Recommend to the General Assembly the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program for the next succeeding budget cycle. Displayed in the recommendation shall be:
      a. All projected financial sources; and

The Presbyterian Mission Agency is required by the Constitution to prepare and submit a comprehensive budget to the General Assembly. (G-3.0113).
B.  Relating to Reserved or Committed Funds

Unrestricted and Committed Funds

The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) receive the report of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, regarding unrestricted and committed funds as of December 31, 2013.

Rationale

The report of the unrestricted funds is divided between uncommitted and committed funds. The display, found in gamc-budget-charts-B.pdf, indicates those funds as well as the activity of those funds and the status of the total reserves as of closing December 31, 2013. See pp. 579–84, electronic file. The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted the following policy:

A. Presbyterian Mission Program Fund

1. A fund composed of all unrestricted and uncommitted receipts and assets intended for the support of the General Assembly mission program.

2. Sources to maintain this fund shall include all unified revenue available for the General Assembly Mission Program, including but not limited to:
   a. unified income including receipts from congregations, presbyteries, or individuals;
   b. unrestricted gifts, legacies, bequests
   c. unrestricted investment income;
   d. gift annuity excess reserves;
   e. such nonrecurring income as the General Assembly Council shall direct by general or specific policy statement; and
   f. under expenditure of the unified portion of the General Assembly Mission Budget.

3. The Uncommitted Funds portion of the Presbyterian Mission Program Fund at year end must be equal to at least 30% of the Unified portion and direct mission support of the General Assembly Mission Budget, which minimum provides for:
   a. Cash flow needed for mission purposes;

C.  Relating to Support for Presbyterian Mission Agency Mission

1. John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds

The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) allocate the annual income realized in 2013 and projected for 2014 from the John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds in support of the budget for the general mission work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Rationale

Current practice is to recommend to each General Assembly the allocation of annual income from these two funds in light of wording in the donors’ wills that requires this annual process.

Portion of the will of Edmund P. Dwight (May 23, 1903):

I will and bequeath to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America, to be used for the establishment of the Christian Religion, that the light of the gospel may be made to join more perfectly ...

Portion of the will of John C. Lord (January 2, 1873):

... to the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., for religious and charitable uses, to be called the John C. Lord Fund, the annual interest of which is to be disposed of and distributed by the said General Assembly at each annual meeting for the furtherance of the Gospel of our Blessed Saviour, at home or abroad, as the Assembly may deem best. ...

The applicable provisions of the two wills facilitate the annual income realized from these funds to be used in the Presbyterian Mission Agency General Mission Budget.

Income from these funds in 2013 were $14,434.20 and it is projected that the income from these funds in 2014 will be approximately $13,497.84.

2. Special Offerings 2013

The Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) incorporate into its Minutes the following summary of receipts from Special Offerings for the years 2012 and 2013.
The charts that are found in pma-budget-charts-C-2.pdf show the summary of receipts for Special Offerings for the years 2012 and 2013. See p. 585, electronic file.

Rationale

Special Offerings enable an important part of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. In 2012, income from these offerings totaled approximately 21 percent of total income for the mission program of the church and 33 percent of the mission gifts from congregations. In 2013, income from these offerings totaled approximately 20 percent of total income for the mission program of the church and 33 percent of the mission gifts from congregations.

[The assembly approved Item 08-16. See pp. 28, 43.]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) confirm the election of Ruling Elder Linda Bryant Valentine to a third, four-year term as Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, based on a process described in its Manual of Operations, reviews the performance of its Executive Director, at least annually. The board’s executive committee conducts the review, and then shares a summary of the review with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board at its next meeting.

Specific instructions are provided for first, second, third, and fourth year reviews. The third-year review was conducted in August 2013, and shared with the board at its September 2013 meeting. The fourth-year review was completed in early April, and presented to the board at its spring meeting.

The fourth-year review evaluates the performance of the entire four-year term and prepares for the next term. In addition, if appropriate and warranted, the fourth year review includes goals and objectives for the next four-year term.

At the third year review, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voted to “commend Linda Valentine with thanks and appreciation for three years of leadership.”

The fourth-year review found continued excellent performance by Linda Valentine throughout the four-year term; and the board concluded that it would be in the best interest of the Presbyterian Mission Agency for it to continue to benefit from the vision and leadership of Linda Valentine.

The Organization for Mission includes a complete description of the election/confirmation process as well as the responsibilities of the Executive Director:

The Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency is elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. The Executive Director is accountable to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Upon election, the Executive Director serves with the full authority of the office until confirmed by the next General Assembly following election. Should the General Assembly refuse to confirm any Executive Director, the position becomes vacant immediately. Periodic in-depth reviews of the Executive Director are the responsibility of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The Executive Director is elected for a term of four years and may be reelected for additional terms. Initial four-year terms start on the date that work commences following election. Subsequent four-year terms commence on the day following expiration of the prior term. The Executive Director may be dismissed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in conformity with current personnel policies and procedures.

Responsibilities—The responsibilities of the Executive Director include:

a. enabling the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, in response to mission directions and policies set by the General Assembly, to lead the whole church in the implementation of directions for the life and mission of the church;

b. supporting the organizational health of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);

c. enabling the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to fulfill its constitutional responsibilities;

d. providing oversight of the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency as a whole and the linkages among the various parts that carry out its work;

e. providing leadership and administrative oversight to the staff and to the staffing and personnel decision process of the Presbyterian Mission Agency;

f. leading and supervising the staff lodged in the office of the Executive Director including a staff rationale, position description, selection of staff, annual performance reviews and staff development;

g. bearing direct responsibility for the coordination of planning and budgeting for the Presbyterian Mission Agency;

h. leading the Presbyterian Mission Agency in implementing policies and procedures related to inclusiveness, affirmative action, and equal employment opportunity; and

Background

The PCCMP shall report annually to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and biennially to the General Assembly. The report shall include the programs, activities, fund-raising and interpretation efforts, and financial summaries of its work.

The PCCMP has been extraordinarily active in its support of chaplains since the 220th General Assembly (2012). Our chaplains have been deployed to warzones up to six times. At least two have been wounded. Several have Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) diagnoses including two who received medical retirements. Chaplains, their families, and their congregations have served well and are strained and tired from this long war. Since 9-11, reserves and National Guard have been mobilized in large numbers. That has slowed substantially with the Iraq War over and the Afghan one drawing down; from 2012–2014, at least twenty-two reserve and National Guard chaplains have been mobilized. We have been in near constant contact with most of them—assisting in their entry in the active military; speaking with their families, churches, and presbyteries; helping explain pension and United States Employment and Reemployment Rights; providing support when they returned from the military. Disasters like the Japanese earthquake and Tsunami, Philippine flood, and Pakistani flood have only added to the call for military assistance. We’ve enjoyed assisting individuals, churches, presbyteries, and General Assembly offices in supporting deployed military members and chaplains. We’ve been gratified to see prayers offered, care packages sent, and chaplains “adopted” by churches.

Approximately thirty of our active duty chaplains were deployed into Southwest Asia for actions regarding Iraq and Afghanistan from 2012 to 2014. Several are in Afghanistan at this writing. Our military chaplains suffer the same hardships as other military; their ministry is often in harm’s way. Some of them are quite exhausted after a war tour; some have symptoms of post-traumatic stress. We seek to be with them and find appropriate support. We hold annual retreats for chaplains attended by 60–110 chaplains and family members; they’ve been at Montreat the past two years. We were at funerals for several retired chaplains. We look forward to contacts after chaplains redeploy and are reunited with their families.

All military branches have again stated recently their gratitude for the service provided by Presbyterian chaplains. They also are in need of female chaplains and minority chaplains. We believe the PC(USA) can be a wonderful source for some of these chaplains. This is a great opportunity for our female and minority teaching elders in a time when there are many more teaching elders than churches needing support.

The Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad (KPCA) joined our council several years ago and now has eight active duty chaplains.
The PCCMP has two core functions:

- The ecclesial duty of endorsement of clergy for service in the military and Veterans Administration chaplaincies.
- The pastoral function of supporting those same clergy during their time of service.

Over the past two years, we approved nine for military chaplain candidate (seminarian) programs. We endorsed 102 for the Army, Navy, and Air Force, and VA; some are in the reserves while others went immediately to active duty chaplaincy. Each approval or endorsement requires a collection of application, transcripts, presbytery approval, and letters of reference. After the documents are gathered, we interview the candidates.

Our current data on chaplains by denomination is below. We provide endorsement and support to 14 seminarians and 234 clergy. Twenty-three of the military chaplains are female as are seven of our VA chaplains. Most of our presbyteries have participants in one or more of the chaplaincy programs.

We attended general assemblies or general synod for all of our denominations. The chaplain ministry is well-received and supported by each denomination. We also participate in the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) of the PC(USA) without vote because of our covenant relationship.

The ongoing pastoral care for chaplains is an extension of what presbyteries do through committees on ministry. We expect our chaplains to maintain a sound relationship with the PCCMP and their presbytery. We seek to keep a semiannual written contact with each active duty chaplain. That contact is augmented with email and telephone. We also make personal contact with each chaplain at least every other year with a visit to their duty station or a meeting at a gathering of chaplains. We also respond very quickly when chaplains and families are in crisis. The PCCMP works hard to serve chaplains who are changing commands, moving from the USA overseas or the reverse. Quite a few stop by the office in the District of Columbia while in a move or when in Washington for military duty. The PCCMP also hosts an annual retreat for chaplains and families; this facilitates networking and mutual support for our Presbyterian clergy who are often isolated from other Presbyterian contact.

The PCCMP works to interpret its mission and needs to the church. We had good support from the Cumberland, Presbyterians Today, Horizons, and the Presbyterian News Service to explain what chaplains do. We have also been published in several seminary publications, the Outlook, and the Layman. We made visits to seven seminaries these past two years and to many presbyteries to interpret the chaplain story and PCCMP mission.

The PCCMP also maintains sound working relations with the chiefs of chaplains’ offices for each branch of the military and the Veterans Administration. It offers leadership in the Military Chaplain Association, the National Conference on Ministry to the Armed Forces (NCMAF), and the Endorsers Council for Veterans Affairs Chaplaincy (ECVAC). The NCMAF is the advisory body to the secretary of defense on religion.

Keeping the ministry vital with adequate funding has been difficult. We have redoubled our development efforts, using several regional volunteer assistants. We recently hired an associate director, Chaplain Don Wilson, who has responsibilities for development and endorsing. We participate in the Combined Federal Campaign. However, the bedrock of our financial health remains with the PC(USA). We are most appreciative of our covenant relationship and the inherent financial support of this ministry and function of the church. We greatly appreciate the PC(USA) telling the story of chaplains and the PCCMP on their webpage and in mailings.

The PCCMP Board is elected from our four denominations. The executive leadership is about to change. Chaplain Brogan retired on May 31, 2014, after thirteen years as our director. On June 1, 2014, he was succeeded by Captain Lawrence P. Greenslit, United States Navy (retired). Chaplain Greenslit will share leadership with Lieutenant Colonel Donald R. Wilson, United States Air Force (retired), our associate director.
Anyone wishing more information can check at our website: www.pccmp.org or call our office in Washington, D.C., 202-244-4177. We will also gladly mail a DVD showing our chaplains and agency at work with the military. It is very helpful to those contemplating military chaplaincy as a call and for churches including the PCCMP in their mission budgets.

Yours in Christ’s Service,

The Reverend Edward T. Brogan, DMin, Director
Chaplain, Colonel, United States Air Force (Retired)

As instructed by the 204th General Assembly (1992), the Presbyterian Mission Agency presents to the General Assembly annually, the work of all task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies established by the Presbyterian Mission Agency, its divisions, or other assembly entities (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 144, 147, 277–78.)

All ministries and the Executive Director’s Office were requested to disclose information on how many task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies were currently at work in their entity. Of the entities responding, sixty-four such groups are currently operating. Fifty-three of the groups were reported as having ongoing responsibilities. The other eleven groups have set completion dates with a written report expected by the entity, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, or the General Assembly itself. Whenever it is possible, the Presbyterian Mission Agency assigns tasks to an existing part of its structure. All persons serving on a board, committee, task force, or work group with an expected life of more than two years are selected through the General Assembly Nominating Committee process.

E. Recording Secretary

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, or designee, shall be the Recording Secretary of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

G. Elected Member Job Description

1. Expectation:

   a. Every elected Presbyterian Mission Agency Board member will be a member of one of the four standing mission committees (except the Board Chair and Vice-chair).

   b. Additionally, Board members will serve the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the church in a variety of ways, whether it be through internal committees and task forces, national committees and task forces, or appointed liaison relationships.

2. Attendance:

   a. Attendance at regular meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board must be given a high priority, as the Board only has five regular meetings in each two year cycle.

   b. One absence from a regular meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or its related committees, without prior notification to the Office of the Executive Director shall be a basis for a review of the member’s standing with the Board.

   c. Upon two consecutive absences, or three absences in a three year period, for any reason, the Board chair to recommend to the Stated Clerk that the position be declared vacant.

3. Member Responsibilities:

   In addition to adherence to the Board covenant, to be faithful and accountable in the following ways:

   a. Active involvement in a Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregation and commitment to a personal discipline of spiritual growth

   b. Knowledge of and commitment to the mission, goals, and policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Presbyterian Mission Agency and its Board.

   c. Openness to new vision and direction emerging within the life of the church

   d. Informed and honest participation, including appropriate inquiry, in all meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and its related committees to fulfill the member’s duties of loyalty, care, and of providing fiduciary, generative, and strategic leadership necessary for guiding and directing the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s work.
“e. Attendance and participation in all events on the agenda of board meetings.

“20) Review of reports to General Assembly prepared by another General Assembly entity, task force or committee requiring joint action, concurrence, and/or comment by Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Such review shall ordinarily be in consultation with the appropriate offices of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

“21) Review the minutes of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns annually for consistency with established guidelines and report findings to the Advocacy Committees and the Board Executive Committee.

“e. Subcommittees of the Executive Committee

“(1) Procedures Subcommittee

“(a) Membership:

“The Procedures Subcommittee shall consist of two voting members of the Executive Committee, one of whom shall be chair, and three voting members of the Board not presently serving on the Executive Committee, to be appointed annually by the Board chair.

“(b) Function:

“Review and report to the Executive Committee on Presbyterian Mission Agency materials and other agency reports being forwarded to the General Assembly. Review and report to the Executive Committee on the Manual of Operations, the Organization for Mission, Mission Ministries, Communications and Funds Development Ministry, Shared Services Ministry, Audit, Advocacy and Advisory Committees’ manuals of operations for consistency with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Manual of Operations and relevance within the current context.

“Work of the subcommittee shall include but not necessarily be limited to:

“i Review of reports to General Assembly prepared by Presbyterian Mission Agency in the course of its regular work.

“ii Review of reports to General Assembly prepared by another General Assembly entity, task force or committee requiring joint action, concurrence, and/or comment by Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Such review shall ordinarily be in consultation with the appropriate offices of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

“iv Review the minutes of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns annually for consistency with established guidelines and report findings to the Advocacy Committees and the Board Executive Committee.

“1) Board Nominating and Governance Subcommittee

“a) Function

“The Board Nominating and Governance committee is a sub-committee of, and therefore reports to, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee. The sub-committee is responsible for ongoing review and recommendations to enhance the quality of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

“b) Membership

“The committee will have staggered terms of two years and 5–7 members. Members may serve a second term. Up to two members at any time may finish out the last year of their term on the committee after their service on the Board ends.

“(Note: When no current member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board has the gifts or abilities required to serve on particular boards or entities that require Board representation, the Board Nominating Committee may select nominees from past Board members. Ordinarily the term is for four years, non-renewable.)

“1) Nominate three voting Board members, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to one-year at-large terms on the Executive Committee. Those so elected shall begin their service at the end of the General Assembly, or in non-Assembly years, with the Executive Committee Retreat. Ordinarily, these at-large members shall serve no more than three years as at-large members. An annual election provides for continuity, balance, and fair representation.

“2) Nominate three voting Board members, for election by the General Assembly, to four-year non-renewable terms on the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. Those so elected shall assume their responsibilities at the end of the General Assembly.

“3) Nominate one Board voting member for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to a four-year non-renewable term on the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

“4) Nominate one Board voting member for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to a four-year, non-renewable term on the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.
“5) Nominate one Board voting member from the Finance Committee for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to a four-year non-renewable term on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation.

“6) Nominate one Board voting member from the Finance Committee, and one Board voting member from the Worshipping Communities, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to a four-year non-renewable term on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.’s Board of Directors, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly.

“8) Nominate one Board voting member, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to any selection committee for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Board of Pensions President. (Organization for Mission, Appendix D, Section 7).

“9) Nominate one Board voting member, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to a four-year non-renewable term on the Presbyterian Council for Chaplains and Military Personnel.

“10) Nominate two Board voting members, with election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to four-year non-renewable terms on the Committee on Theological Education.

“11) Nominate one Board voting member for appointment by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to a four-year non-renewable term on the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations.

“12) Nominate two members, at least one of whom shall be a current Board voting member, to three-year term with eligibility to one additional term, to the Mountain Retreat Association, Inc.’s Board of Directors for approval by the General Assembly.

“13) Nominate one Board voting member to the Stony Point Conference Center Board of Directors, and one Board voting member to Ghost Ranch Conference Center Board of Directors to a four-year non-renewable term, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

“14) Nominate for Presbyterian Mission Agency Board election, one Board voting member to the Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. Board of Directors for a three-year non-renewable term.

“17) Work in consultation with the Committee on Representation to provide for inclusiveness to ensure fair and effective representation in the decision making of the church. (Book of Order, G-3.0103.)

“18) Coordinate the nomination and election process for chair and vice-chair. (See Appendix 1D, Election Procedures.)

“19) Nominate Board voting members, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to two-year terms on the Mission Committees, with eligibility for two additional terms. Those so elected shall assume their responsibilities at the beginning of the fall meeting.
"a) Process:

“The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating and Governance Subcommittee shall consult with members, prior to nomination, in the following ways:

“1) All new members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be requested to provide a list of committee preferences. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating and Governance Subcommittee shall consider the preference ranking and committee needs in preparing nominations, with the understanding that a person must serve one year on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board before being elected to serve on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee. Nominations shall be made without further consultation.

“2) After completing a two-year term on a committee, members shall provide a list of committee choices in order of preference for service. In preparing nominations, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating and Governance Subcommittee shall consider the preference ranking and the committee needs when the continuing member is assigned to a new committee.

3) Election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall take place at the first Board meeting following General Assembly.

“1) Defining Board roles and responsibilities

“a) Regularly review and recommend updates to the board's description of its roles and areas of responsibility and what is expected of individual board members.

“b) Recommend periodic updates to the primary areas of focus for the board, and help shape the board’s agenda for the next two years, based on the strategic plan.

“2) Supporting efforts to ensure diverse and effective Board composition

“a) Lead in assessing current and anticipated needs related to board composition, determining the knowledge, attributes, skills, abilities, influence, and access to resources the board will need to accomplish future work of the board.

“b) Develop a profile of the Board as it should evolve over time.

“d) Identify potential Board member candidates to the General Assembly Nominating Committee based upon Board needs.

“f) Report annually to the General Assembly Nominating Committee records of attendance and participation of Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members;

“g) Work through General Assembly process in selecting persons to serve on boards, committees, task forces, work groups, and initiative teams to ... 'ensure fair and open access from all areas of our denomination and to ensure a valid and enriching diversity within all work groups' ... (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 201, para. 15.113). This procedure applies to all working groups with a lifespan of more than two years.
“h) Nominate individuals to be elected by the Board to serve in liaison roles to related entities.

“b) Nominate Board members for election to Board committees and as Board officers.

“2) Personnel Subcommittee

“a) Description of the Subcommittee

“The Personnel Subcommittee, in its role as a mission subcommittee, reviews, provides advice and recommends for action to the Executive Committee of the Board regarding employment-related policies, procedures and initiatives, including but not limited to:

1. personnel policies and procedures of the Board;
2. compensation guidelines within which salaries are administered;
3. equal employment and affirmative action guidelines;
4. recruitment and leadership development; and
5. any other employment-related assignment from the Executive Committee or the Board.

“b) Authority

“The Subcommittee’s responsibility is one of review, advice and recommended action to the Executive Committee of the Board within the duties of the Subcommittee listed above. The Subcommittee reports to the Executive Committee of the Board, and in such capacity provides regular reports to the Executive Committee. It is the responsibility of the management of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to administer employment-related programs, manage the program budgets and provide any required or requested expertise to the Board and/or the Subcommittee. The Subcommittee is entitled to rely on the expertise of the Presbyterian Mission Agency staff and its outside consultants, as well as the work of other committees of the Board, as to matters within their authority and expertise. The Subcommittee will receive reports from the Human Resources Department and the Legal/Risk Management Services Office of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The Subcommittee will invite its equivalent committee of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to meet biennially to collaborate on matters of common interest.

“c) Membership and Meetings

“The Personnel Subcommittee consists of five (5) members with voice and vote: two (2) Executive Committee members and three at-large members, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency a corresponding member with voice and without vote. Each member will serve a term of two (2) years commencing at the next meeting after appointment by the Chair of the Board and expiring the earlier of two (2) years after appointment or the end of the member’s term on the Board. The Subcommittee generally meets quarterly by phone or in conjunction with the meetings of the Board. During these meetings, the Subcommittee provides reports on its activities and may make recommendations for action to the Executive Committee of the Board. The Subcommittee serves as a consultative body to the Executive Director in the Executive Director’s staff management role. The Subcommittee is resourced by staff members of the Human Resources Department and the Legal/Risk Management Services Office.

“To further the fulfillment of the vision, mission, values and directional goals of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Personnel Subcommittee is called to assist and support the Executive Committee’s work and ministry toward ensuring and envisioning a work community for the Presbyterian Mission Agency that is: built on faith; culturally proficient; legally compliant; dynamic; and appropriately positioned to meet the needs of a changing organization.

“APPENDIX ID

“Election Procedures

“VI. I. Election Procedures (Approved by GAMC September 2007 for Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Chair and Vice-Chair (See Appendix 1B.)

“A. Election Procedures for Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Chair and Vice-Chair (See Section III. Officers of the Board, C. Terms of Office, C., 1. 2.)

“1. A. Only Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting members who have served at least two years on the Board before taking office are eligible for election as chair or vice-chair.

“B. Nominating Process:

“2. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee will use a nominating process approved by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, as follows:
1. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and Governance Subcommittee will compile a list of gifts, abilities, and skills that they believe will be needed by the Board leadership during the ensuing biennial period. It will also draft two or three questions to be answered by potential candidates for Board leadership. The questions will address the anticipated key challenges facing the Board during the ensuing biennial period.

2. Staff to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and Governance Subcommittee will identify all Board members eligible for election to Board leadership and prepare for each of them a résumé form that includes the person’s personal information from the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board biography form, a summary of their Board experience, and the questions drafted by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and Governance Subcommittee. The letter will:
   a. Inform the Board member of his or her eligibility for Board leadership.
   b. Ask if the Board member feels called to be considered for nomination to a Board leadership position.
   c. If the response is affirmative, request that he or she verify the résumé form information and answer the leadership questions, and
   d. Ask that the completed form be returned to Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and Governance Subcommittee staff.

3. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and Governance Subcommittee will review all the submitted forms and will also go through a discernment process as to whether or not eligible Board members who have not submitted forms have leadership gifts that justify an invitation to consider a call to candidacy for Board leadership. If so, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and Governance Subcommittee will extend the invitation to submit a completed résumé form and answers to the leadership questions.

4. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and Governance Subcommittee will evaluate the final list of Board leadership candidates who have submitted résumé forms and completed the questions to identify a candidate who it wishes to nominate for Board chair and a candidate it wishes to nominate for Board vice-chair for the ensuing biennial period. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating and Governance Subcommittee chair will notify the selected candidates that they are the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee’s and Governance Subcommittee’s nominees for the appropriate Board leadership positions.

5. The names of the nominees, along with their résumés and their responses to the questions, will be communicated to all Board members a minimum of three weeks prior to the winter/spring Board meeting.

6. The Board leadership election will be conducted during the winter/spring Board meeting. The Board vice-chair election will be held following the election of the Board chair. Nominations from the floor will be accepted for both elections. The elections will be by written ballot.

7. The two-year term of office will begin with the close of the upcoming General Assembly meeting and end with the close of the next General Assembly meeting.

8. In the event of vacancy during the term of the chair, the vice-chair assumes the chair. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee is empowered to appoint an interim vice-chair upon nominations by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and Governance Subcommittee. Election to the position shall occur at the next full meeting of the Board.

B. Election Procedures for Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee Members

1. Each member shall be elected for a term of two years. (Also see Section IV.A.2a).

2. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee shall nominate members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board at its fall meeting. (See Section IV.A.d.12).}

3. No person shall be eligible for reelection to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee.

4. Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee members shall elect their own chair.
“5. Members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee are eligible to serve on other committees.

“G. II. Election Procedures for Chairs of the Board Mission Committees, and Audit Committee

“1. A. The committees shall nominate and elect their chairs, and may elect a vice-chair, during the first Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meeting in the calendar year and notify the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and Governance Subcommittee.

“2. B. The chairs shall begin their service at the end of the General Assembly, or in non-Assembly years, with the Executive Committee Retreat.

“3. C. Committee chairs shall be elected for one-year terms, renewable for one additional term.

“4. D. Board voting members completing at least two consecutive years on a committee are eligible for election as committee chair.

“5. E. Ordinarily, committee chairs shall make appointments and assignments of committee members to work groups, task forces, and other subcommittees as necessary, giving consideration to experience, interest, and representation.

“D. General Assembly Nominations

“b. report annually to the General Assembly Nominating Committee records of attendance and participation of Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members;

“e. work through the General Assembly process in selecting persons to serve on boards, committees, task forces, work groups, and initiative teams to ensure fair and open access from all areas of our denomination and to ensure a valid and enriching diversity within all working groups” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 201, para. 15.113). This procedure applies to all working groups with a life span of more than two years.

“APPENDIX 1E

“V. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

“[Text has been moved from Appendix 1, Section V.]

“By corporate action of the Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, the Executive Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is also the Executive Committee of the Corporation (GAC, September 1997). A quorum of a majority 40% of voting members is required to conduct business.

“By corporate action of the Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, the Stewardship Finance Committee, or its successor, is also the Property, Legal, and Finance Committee of the Corporation (Corporate Minutes, September 26, 1998). International property matters requiring approval by the Board of Directors are referred to the Board via action of the Evangelism Committee, or its successor. (Corporate Minutes, March 16, 2007). (As of July 2012, the Justice Committee is the successor to the Evangelism Committee.)

“A. Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI)

“The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) is responsible for implementing General Assembly policy related to mission responsibility through investment. MRTI assists the church at all levels to utilize its investments as key instruments to promote its mission goals in society. MRTI provides leadership for effective engagement of the private sector in partnership with ecumenical colleagues in the United States, and in collaboration with indigenous churches, ecumenical bodies and local groups in other nations. Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly, this committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Justice Mission Committee.

“1. Budget

“The budget for MRTI is developed by staff and proposed to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for approval by the General Assembly.

“2. Composition:

“MRTI is composed of:

“• two elected representatives named by each of its member agencies:
  “◦ Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, “◦ Board of Pensions and “◦ Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation/New Covenant Trust Company, and

“• one representative each from the elected membership of:
  “◦ the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy,
  “◦ the Advocacy Committee on Women’s Concerns and “◦ the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns.

“In addition, the General Assembly elects three At-Large members bringing MRTI’s total membership to 12 persons.

“3. Relation to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

“4. Staffing Relationship and Lodgment:

“Staffing for MRTI is provided by Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministry Area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

“5. Assigned Functions:

“MRTI’s primary function is to develop and implement a coordinated strategy for the General Assembly’s Investment Policies and Guidelines for the General Assembly and for subsequent General Assembly action related to investment or divestment. Specific assigned functions include:

“1) recommend, as needed, revisions or additions to the General Assembly’s Investment Policies and Guidelines (for use by the Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Inc., New Covenant Trust Company; and other fiduciaries within the church family) designed to reach mission goals of the General Assembly;

“2) recommend to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board specific actions on the exercise of investor rights and responsibilities such as proxy voting, initial filing of shareholder resolutions, and joining with other shareholders in litigation calling for regulatory oversight or other forms of redress,

“3) recommend to appropriate ministry areas or related bodies, middle governing bodies, institutions and communicant members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ways and means to carry out General Assembly investment policies respecting social concerns, including the voting of proxies on shareholder resolutions,
“4) appoint representatives to ecumenical organizations through which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to advance its work in the area of mission responsibility through investments, and (5) assist Compassion, Peace and Justice in coordinating corporate responsibility concerns with mission program and strategies on economic and social justice.

“B. Mission Development Resources Committee (MDRC)

“The Mission Development Resources Committee makes decisions on Church Loans, Walton Awards for New Church Development and Mission Program Grants (New Church Development, Congregational Transformation and Specialized Ministries). Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly, this committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Evangelism-Mission Worshiping Communities Committee.

“1. Budget

“MDRC provides input on the work of the Mission Program Grants, Church Loans and the Sam and Helen R. Walton Award. The budget for these items is displayed in the Evangelism and Church Growth ministry area.

D. Presbyterian Mission Agency Partnerships

APPENDIX 1H

Guidelines for Liaisons to Other Entities

The General Assembly elects individuals to serve as members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. As part of their call to service on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, some members or former members will be invited to represent the board on other entities (committees or boards). These additional assignments are secondary to the purpose for which the General Assembly has called members into service on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. In each of these roles, members are to represent the concerns and established interests of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

The following guidelines are designed to help members cultivate the connection between their work on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and their service on other boards and committees. In this document, “liaison” refers to anyone who serves on another committee by virtue of first having been elected to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Liaisons may be voting members or corresponding members, depending upon the particular assignment.

I. Prior to committee meetings:

Liaisons will review the agenda for the upcoming committee meetings, and seek input from the designated staff liaison regarding:

• Background materials that may be helpful for the committee discussion
• Presbyterian Mission Agency Board interests that might relate to the discussion.

II. After committee meetings:

Liaisons will keep the Presbyterian Mission Agency apprised of the work of the other committees they serve. Following each committee meeting, liaisons will send a brief note to the Board chairperson and the designated staff liaison, outlining significant items from the meeting.
III. Prior to Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings:

Liaisons will prepare a written report for distribution to board members as means of keeping the board informed about the committee’s work. The report will be posted online as an information item for the board meeting. (Information items are due in the Executive Director’s office four weeks prior to a board meeting.)

IV. During Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings:

Board committee chairs may, at their discretion, highlight an information item for further discussion in committee. If this is anticipated, the board committee chair will notify the liaison in advance that her or his presence may be needed during the committee session.

2. Amend Appendix 2: Presbyterian Mission Agency Staff Organization by dividing it into two appendixes as follows: Appendix “2A Presbyterian Mission Agency Staff Organization,” “Appendix 2B General Assembly Ministries. The text of Appendix 2A and 2B will read as follows with additional amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

Program Evaluation Process

“The Program Evaluation Process is a systematic method to review and evaluate the goals, objectives, and activities of all programs and program areas of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. All programs and program areas will be reviewed at least once within a 4-year rotation period to determine how well the goals and objectives are being achieved and if they are in alignment with the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Mission Work Plan.

“The following data will be gathered to complete the evaluation:

• the purpose statement of the program,
• the Mission Work Plan objectives/activities related to this program/program area
• financial data,
• feedback from constituency groups (NOTE: Constituent groups will include both those who are using and benefiting from the program and those who are not using and benefiting but potentially could be), Research Services will invite the constituents, peers, and at least two Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members to complete the survey. Responses will be returned directly to Research Services for compilation and summary of the results.

"Once the above data has been compiled, the supervising director for the area being evaluated will convene appropriate staff to discuss the following questions:

"a. How well is the program accomplishing its purpose?
"b. What impact is the program having?
"c. Is the program cost effective? How so? Or why not?
"d. Is the program well managed? How so? Or why not?
"e. Is the program adequately resourced (funds, staff, etc.)? How so? Or Why not?
"f. To what extent does the program help the PMA achieve its directional goals?
"g. If $100,000 in new funds were available, would we invest in this program? Why or why not?
"h. Is the PMA best suited to do this work or does it/can it be done at another level?
"i. What recommendations are noted and need to be shared from this program's evaluation?

"Using the responses to the above nine questions, the supervising director will prepare an executive summary to be discussed cross-functionally at a meeting of the Strategy Coordination Leadership Team.

"Discussion will:

"a. acknowledge the program’s progress/accomplishments with gratitude
"b. recommend program improvement(s)
"c. initiate a more extensive evaluation, if necessary
"d. determine any further follow-up actions

"The executive summary of each Program Evaluation will be available to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board as requested through the Executive Director's Office."

Background for Addition of Appendix 12

Interest in program evaluation has a long history in the Presbyterian Mission Agency. In early 2005, a task force of Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members explored a variety of options for “Performance Excellence at All Levels,” but none were good fit with the full variety of Presbyterian Mission Agency programs.

The design of a program evaluation process was referred to staff for follow-up. A placeholder for the description of the process was created as an appendix to the Manual of Operations.

In the years that have followed, staff have been perfecting a program evaluation process, consistent with the mandate to review each Presbyterian Mission Agency program on a quadrennial basis.

As of August 2013, the program evaluation process has been tested through six cycles, including twenty-two programs. Five reviews are underway, in the seventh cycle of the process. Staff have refined the process through the cycles and are ready to fill that placeholder spot in the Manual of Operations with this brief description.

D. 2013 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Workforce Analysis

Overview

By action of the 197th General Assembly (1985), the General Assembly Mission Council (now Presbyterian Mission Agency) is required to report annually the equal opportunity information of all PC(USA) agencies, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods.

At the request of the Office of Human Resources, Research Services handled the collection of data for the Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Workforce Analysis for 2013. Based on the success of web-based data collection for previous years, we followed similar procedures for 2013.
The web-based data collection instrument was developed, tested, and deployed by Research Services. A point of contact in each organization or entity was invited by email to provide data for the organization. (The original invitation is included here as Attachment A.) An initial email invitation was sent January 9, 2014. Three reminder emails were sent to all non-responding organizations on January 16, 2014, January 21, 2014, and January 24, 2014. Responses were accepted until January 27, 2014.

Invited Organizations

The following agencies and organizations were requested to provide their workforce analysis data: Board of Pensions; Presbyterian Mission Agency; Hubbard Press; Jarvie Commonweal Service; Presbyterian Church Foundation; Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program; Presbyterian Publishing Corporation; Office of the General Assembly; and all conference centers, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods associated with the PC(USA).

Response Rate

Of 211 invited organizations, data were received from 116 organizations, for a response rate of 54 percent. (Two email invitations to presbyteries were returned as bad email addresses for which no other working email address could be found.) Attachment B shows organizations that provided their data. Of responding organizations, a majority (93 percent) used the web form, and 6 percent (or 7) submitted hard copy by fax, email, or interoffice mail.

Results

Attachment C shows the results for responding organizations and presents the percentages of employees by gender and racial ethnic category.

Table 1 (next page) summarizes this information and provides similar data for 2005 for comparison. It is interesting that in all but one category covered by the report, the number of employees has decreased since 2005—in many cases a substantial reduction. The exception is the Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, which increased by one staff person between 2005 and 2013. In terms of the percentage of racial-ethnic staff (non-white) and women, there has been little change overall among all PC(USA) staff, but substantial changes within some categories.

Recommendations for the Future

The data collection process went smoothly again this year. Inquiries from organizational representatives focused primarily on one topic: racial-ethnic categories (e.g., how to report employees who have not specified their race-ethnicity and those who self-identify as Middle Eastern).

Instructions for next year should include answers to such questions.

Requesting this information in January seems to be more effective than doing so in December. This year, we received no complaints about being a bad time of year for this process.

Important 2013 EEO/AA Workforce Analysis Information Needed for {ORGANIZATION} Dear {FNAME/LNAME} at {ORGANIZATION} ID Number: {ID#}

We are compiling this information electronically again this year. Please follow the instructions below. We suggest downloading a copy of the form so you can gather the needed information before you access the survey on the Web. To view the survey (in Adobe Acrobat format) before you submit your answers, click on this link.

Alternately, send an email to research@pcusa.org requesting a copy of the form and we’ll send it as an attachment.

Please forward this information to the appropriate person in your organization if you are not the person responsible for your organization’s workforce analysis data. You may have received multiple emails if you are responsible for reporting on several organizations. Each one will have a unique link and ID number, so please be aware of that when entering your information.

- Go to the survey Web site at: {LINK}
- Enter the ID number {ID#} assigned to your organization.
- Complete the workforce analysis form. (Definitions are provided within the survey and on the downloadable form.)
- If you prefer, complete the downloadable form and fax it back (502-569-8736).

The deadline for your organization’s information is Tuesday, January 27, 2014.

If you need additional information or have questions, please contact me (800-728-7228, ext. 5710, or Lisa.Robbins@pcusa.org).

If you have trouble with the survey Web site, please contact Research Services (800-728-7228, ext. 2040 or research@pcusa.org).

INDEPENDENT AUDITOR’S REPORT

The Board of Directors
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

Report on the Financial Statements

We have audited the accompanying consolidated financial statements of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation and its constituent corporations, which comprise the consolidated statements of financial position as of December 31, 2013, and the related consolidated statement of activities and cash flows for the year then ended, and the related notes to the financial statements.

Management's Responsibility for the Financial Statements

Management is responsible for the preparation and fair presentation of these consolidated financial statements in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America; this includes the design, implementation, and maintenance of internal control relevant to the preparation and fair presentation of consolidated financial statements that are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error.

Auditor's Responsibility

Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these consolidated financial statements based on our audit. We conducted our audit in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the consolidated financial statements are free from material misstatement.

An audit involves performing procedures to obtain audit evidence about the amounts and disclosures in the consolidated financial statements. The procedures selected depend on the auditor’s judgment, including the assessment of the risks of material misstatement of the consolidated financial statements, whether due to fraud or error. In making those risk assessments, the auditor considers internal control relevant to the entity’s preparation and fair presentation of the consolidated financial statements in order to design audit procedures that are appropriate in the circumstances, but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the entity’s internal control. Accordingly, we express no such opinion. An audit also includes evaluating the appropriateness of accounting policies used and the reasonableness of significant accounting estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall presentation of the consolidated financial statements.

We believe that the audit evidence we have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our audit opinion.

Opinion

In our opinion, the consolidated financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation as of December 31, 2013, and the changes in their net assets and their cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.

Other Matters

The 2012 consolidated financial statements of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A), A Corporation, were audited by other auditors whose report dated July 23, 2013, expressed an unqualified opinion on those statements.

Our audit was conducted for the purpose of forming an opinion on the consolidated financial statements as a whole. The consolidating statements of financial position, statement of activities, and changes in net assets are presented for purposes of additional analysis of the consolidated financial statements rather than to present the financial position, changes in net assets, and cash flows of the individual companies, and are not a required part of the consolidated financial statements. Such information is the responsibility of management and was derived from and relates directly to the underlying accounting and other records used to prepare the consolidated financial statements. The information has been subjected to the auditing procedures applied in the audit of the consolidated financial statements and certain other procedures, including comparing and reconciling such information directly to the underlying accounting and other records used to prepare the consolidated financial statements or to the consolidated financial statements themselves, and other additional procedures in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America. In our opinion, the information is fairly stated, in all material respects, in relation to the consolidated financial statements as a whole.

NOTE 1 – ORGANIZATION AND NATURE OF OPERATIONS

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), (“PCUSA”) is an unincorporated body of Reformed Christians, who have agreed to conduct worship and other religious activities in conformity with the then current version of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Constitution, which contains among other things, in its Book of Order, a Form of Government setting forth a detailed formal structure of the Church. As an ecclesiastical organization, PCUSA does not exist under any federal law. Central to the structure of PCUSA is the concept of mid councils (formerly referred to as governing bodies). At the national level, the council is the General Assembly. The ecclesiastical work of the PCUSA at the General Assembly level is carried out by a number of ministry units and related agencies.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (“PCUSA, A Corporation”) is a corporate entity of the General Assembly of PCUSA, and is the principal corporation of the General Assembly. All voting members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board are members of the Board of Directors of PCUSA, A Corporation. PCUSA, A Corporation receives and holds title and/or maintains and manages property and income at the General Assembly level related to mission activities; generally maintains and manages all real and tangible property not held for investment, including the insuring of such property; effects short-term investment of funds prior to either their disbursement or transfer to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (the “Foundation”) for longer-term investment; acts as the disbursing agent for all funds held for the General Assembly and for other governing bodies and entities upon their request; and provides accounting, reporting, and other financial and related services as the General Assembly or Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may direct or approve.

PCUSA, A Corporation is a tax-exempt religious corporation under Internal Revenue Code Section 501(c)(3).

NOTE 2 – BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

Basis of Presentation: The accompanying consolidated financial statements reflect the consolidated operations of PCUSA, A Corporation and its constituent corporations, which are presented on the accrual basis of accounting in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America. The constituent corporations of PCUSA, A Corporation are the following: General Assembly Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); The Historical Foundation of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, Inc.; The Hubbard Press; Pedco, Inc.; The Presbyterian Historical Society, Inc.; Presbyterian Life, Inc.; Presbyterian Publishing House of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc.; The Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and The Woman’s Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). All intercompany transactions have been eliminated in consolidation.

In order to ensure the observance of limitations and restrictions placed on the use of available resources, PCUSA, A Corporation maintains its financial accounts in accordance with the principles and practices of fund accounting. This is the procedure by which resources for various purposes are classified for accounting purposes into funds established in accordance with their nature or purpose.

For external reporting purposes, however, PCUSA, A Corporation’s financial statements have been prepared to focus on the organization as a whole and to present balances and transactions classified in accordance with the existence or absence of donor-imposed restrictions. Net assets and related activity are classified as unrestricted, temporarily restricted, and permanently restricted as follows:

- Unrestricted Undesignated - net assets that are not subject to donor-imposed restrictions. Unrestricted undesignated net assets consist of the accumulation of certain contributions, gifts, bequests, and related income thereon, which are available for general church purposes.

- Unrestricted Designated - net assets that are not subject to donor-imposed restrictions. Unrestricted designated net assets consist of the accumulation of certain contributions, gifts, bequests, and related income thereon that have been designated for specific purposes by the Presbyterian Mission Agency of the General Assembly.

- Temporarily Restricted - net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions that may or will be met either by actions of PCUSA, A Corporation or the passage of time. Temporarily restricted net assets primarily consist of contributions and related investment income.

- Permanently Restricted - net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions to be maintained permanently by PCUSA, A Corporation. Generally, the donors of these assets permit PCUSA, A Corporation to use all or part of the income earned on related investments for general or specific purposes. Permanently restricted net assets consist primarily of endowment funds and revolving loan funds.

Cash Equivalents: For purposes of reporting cash flows, PCUSA, A Corporation considers investments with an original maturity of three months or less when purchased to be cash equivalents.

Investments: Investments are recorded at fair value. Investment transactions are recorded on a trade-date basis. Realized gains and losses are recorded using the specific identification of securities sold on funds held by the Foundation and using the historical cost of securities sold on funds held by other investment managers.

The Trustees (“Trustees”) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (the “Foundation”) believe that the carrying amount of its alternative investments is a reasonable estimate of fair value as of December 31, 2013 and 2012. Since alternative investments are not readily marketable, the estimated value is subject to uncertainty and therefore may differ from the value that would have been used had a ready market for the investments existed, and such differences could be material.

Long-term investments held by the Foundation represent General Assembly endowment funds, which are generally not available for immediate use.

Allowance for Loan Losses: The allowance for loan losses is maintained at a level considered by management to be adequate to provide for loan losses inherent in the loan portfolio. Management determines the adequacy of the allowance based upon reviews of payment history, recent loss experience, current economic conditions, the risk characteristics of the various categories of loans, and such other factors, which in management’s judgment deserve current recognition in estimating loan losses. The allowance for loan losses is increased by the provision for loan losses and reduced by net loan charge-offs.

Annuity and Life Income Funds: PCUSA, A Corporation is an income beneficiary of trust funds held by the Foundation. In accordance with current accounting standards, PCUSA, A Corporation has recorded, as an asset, the net present value of the future income to be received from the funds.

Inventories: Inventories represent books, periodicals, and curriculum produced by PCUSA, A Corporation for distribution. These items are stated at average cost.

Property and Equipment: Property and equipment consists principally of the PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment, domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land, and property held for disposition.

The PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment are stated at cost or fair value at the date of donation, if donated. The domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land, and other properties are recorded based on fair value at the date of donation, appraisal value, or replacement cost. Expenditures greater than $5,000 which increase values or extend the useful lives of the respective assets are capitalized. Depreciation is computed using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the assets.

PCUSA, A Corporation holds title to various other foreign properties. Such properties include properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land, and property held for disposition. PCUSA, A Corp. has administrative responsibility for property taxes, insurance, maintenance, and improvements for these properties. Generally, it is PCUSA, A Corporation’s policy to exclude the cost or donated value of foreign properties from its financial records.

PCUSA, A Corporation reviews for the impairment of long-lived assets subject to depreciation and amortization, including property and equipment, whenever events or changes in circumstances indicate that the carrying amount of these assets may not be recoverable. If this review were to result in the conclusion that the carrying value of long-lived assets would not be recoverable, then a write down of the assets would be recorded through a charge to net assets equal to the difference in the fair market value of the assets and their carrying value. No such impairment losses were recognized for the years ended December 31, 2013 and 2012.

Deferred Revenue: PCUSA, A Corporation holds special events each year. Monies received to support future special events are recorded as deferred revenue.

Collections: PCUSA, A Corporation’s collections consist of works of art, ecclesiastical objects and papers, historical treasures, archeological specimens, and other assets. The collections, which were acquired through purchases and contributions since PCUSA, A Corporation’s inception, are not recognized as assets on the consolidated statements of financial position. Purchases of collection items are recorded as decreases in unrestricted net assets in the year in which the items are acquired or as temporarily or permanently restricted net assets if the assets used to purchase the items are restricted by donors. Contributed collection items are not reflected on the consolidated financial statements. Proceeds from deaccessions or insurance recoveries are reflected as increases in the appropriate net asset classes.

Use of Estimates: The preparation of financial statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements. Estimates also affect the reported amounts of revenue and expenses during the reporting period. The more significant estimates made relate to the valuation of mortgages, loans, contributions receivable, and valuation of investments. Actual results could differ from those estimates.

Income Taxes: The Internal Revenue Service has determined that PCUSA, A Corporation is exempt from income taxes under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. However, PCUSA, A Corporation is subject to federal income tax on any unrelated business taxable income.

Accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America prescribe recognition thresholds and measurement attributes for the financial statement recognition and measurement of a tax position taken or expected to be taken in a tax return. Tax benefits or liabilities will be recognized only if the tax position would "more-likely-than-not" be sustained in a tax examination, with a tax examination being presumed to occur. The amount recognized will be the largest amount of tax benefit or liability that is greater than 50% likely of being realized on examination. For tax positions not meeting the more-likely-than-not test, no tax benefit or liability will be recorded. Management has concluded that it is unaware of any tax benefits or liabilities to be recognized at December 31, 2013, and does not expect this to change in the next 12 months.

PCUSA, A Corporation would recognize interest and penalties related to uncertain tax positions in interest and income tax expense, respectively. PCUSA, A Corporation has no amounts accrued for interest or penalties as of December 31, 2013 and 2012. PCUSA, A Corporation is no longer subject to examination by taxing authorities for the years before December 31, 2010.

Subsequent Events: Management has performed an analysis of the activities and transactions subsequent to December 31, 2013 to determine the need for any adjustments to and/or disclosures within the audited financial statements for the year ended December 31, 2013. Management has performed their analysis through April 23, 2014, which is the date the financial statements were available to be issued.

Reclassification: Certain reclassifications have been made to the 2012 consolidated financial statements to conform to the 2013 consolidated financial statement presentation. These reclassifications had no effect on the change in net assets.

PCUSA, A Corporation invests a majority of its funds in the Foundation’s common investment portfolio. Investment balances held by the Foundation are allocated monthly by the Foundation’s management based on the portion of PCUSA, A Corporation’s funding to the total funding of the portfolio. The Foundation’s investment portfolio as of December 31 comprised the following types of investments:

Income received by PCUSA, A Corporation from the Foundation is net of administrative fees of outside managers.

NOTE 5 – BENEFICIAL INTEREST IN PERPETUAL TRUSTS

Funds held in trust by others represent resources neither in the possession nor under the control of PCUSA, A Corporation, but held and administered by outside trustees, with PCUSA, A Corporation deriving only income from such funds. Such investments are recorded in the consolidated statement of financial position at the fair value of the principal amounts, which represents the estimated present value of the expected future cash flows, and the income, including fair value adjustments, is recorded in the consolidated statement of activities and changes in net assets.

NOTE 6 – ENDOWMENT COMPOSITION

In accordance with the Uniform Prudent Management of Institutional Funds Act (UPMIFA), the Organization considers the following factors in making a determination to appropriate or accumulate donor-restricted endowment funds:

1. The duration and preservation of the fund.
2. The purposes of the donor-restricted endowment fund.
3. General economic conditions.
4. The possible effect of inflation and deflation.
5. The expected total return from income and the appreciation of investments.
6. Other resources of the Organization.
7. The investment policies of the Organization.

Appropriation of Endowment Assets: PCUSA, A Corporation has a spending formula agreement with the Foundation whereby PCUSA, A Corporation receives investment income from unrestricted and restricted endowments held by the Foundation on behalf of the General Assembly for mission use.

The current policy calls for a 4.25% annual total return payout rate of the average market value based on the 20-quarter rolling average with an eighteen-month lag. Pursuant to this policy, the Foundation will pay and paid the beneficiaries of certain endowments 4.6% (based on the December 31, 2012 market value) and 5.4% (based on the December 31, 2011 market value) in 2013 and 2012, respectively. The spending formula will be monitored to determine the effects of changing return and inflation expectations on the preservation of purchasing power and the generation of appropriate levels of spendable income.

Investment Policies: The Trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation are charged with the responsibility of managing the endowment assets of the Church. The overall goal in management of these funds is to generate a long-term total rate of return that provides sustainable distributions to support the mission within reasonable levels of risk.

The Trustees adhere to modern portfolio theory, which has as its basis risk reduction through diversification. Diversification is obtained through the use of multiple asset classes as well as multiple investments within these asset classes. Asset classes that may be used include (but are not limited to) domestic and international stocks and bonds, hedge funds, private equity (venture capital and corporate finance), and real property (real estate, minerals, and timber). The investment strategy is implemented through the selection of external advisors and managers with expertise and successful histories in the management of specific asset classes.

The Trustees believe their role is one of setting and reviewing policy; and retaining, monitoring, and evaluating advisors and investment managers. It is the Trustees’ desire to find ways to invest these funds in accordance with the social witness principles of the PCUSA. The Trustees will review the investment policy statement at least annually.

The primary financial objectives of the investment funds (“Fund”) are to (1) provide a stream of relatively stable and constant earnings in support of annual budgetary needs and (2) to preserve and enhance the real (inflation-adjusted) purchasing power of the Fund.

The long-term investment objective of the Fund is to attain a real total annualized return of at least 5% The calculation of real total return includes all realized and unrealized capital changes plus all interest, rent, dividend, and other income earned by the portfolio, adjusted for inflation, during a year, net of investment expenses, on average, over a five-to-seven year period. Secondary objectives are to (1) outperform the Fund’s custom benchmark, a weighted average return based on the target asset allocation and index returns and (2) to outperform the median return of a pool of endowment funds with broadly similar investment objectives and policies. The Fund’s objective is to attain estimated nominal compound return of 7.8% with a standard deviation of 10.9% of the current portfolio.

The ability of each borrower congregation to pay PCUSA, A Corporation for the loan(s) made to the congregation may depend on the contributions the congregation receives from its members. Therefore, payments to PCUSA, A Corporation may depend on the continued growth in membership of the borrower congregations, and on the maintenance of adequate contributions by individual members to their congregations, as well as on prudent management by those congregations of their finances. The following is a summary of the gross loan balances for each Synod at December 31, 2013 and 2012:

NOTE 11 – BENEFITS DATA

As explained below in the following paragraphs, PCUSA, A Corporation through the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church USA offers a defined benefit pension plan, long-term disability plan, death benefit plan, a major medical plan, and a retirement savings plan to eligible employees.

Substantially all employees of PCUSA, A Corporation participates in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Benefits Plan”) which is administered by the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Board of Pensions”). The Benefits Plan is a comprehensive benefits program, which provides a defined benefit pension plan, a long-term disability plan, a death benefit plan, and a major medical plan. The assets of the Benefits Plan are commingled for investment purposes; however, accounting for each plan is separately maintained.

The defined benefit pension plan's total net assets available for benefits, as reported by the Board of Pensions, were $7,640,065 and $6,764,686 at December 31, 2013 and 2012, respectively. The defined benefit pension plan's total Accumulated Plan Benefit Obligations, as reported by the Board of Pensions, were $5,162,644 and $5,915,483 at December 31, 2013 and 2012, respectively. Since the Benefits Plan is a Church Plan under the Internal Revenue Code, PCUSA, A Corporation has no financial interest in the Benefits Plan assets nor does it have any liability for benefits payable, contingent or otherwise, under the Benefits Plan or its components.

PCUSA, A Corporation pays the entire cost associated with the major medical plan. Employees have the option to purchase additional coverage such as dental, long-term care, and life insurance.

In addition, PCUSA, A Corporation sponsors a retirement savings plan. The employer contribution is designed to provide equalization of the impact of tax differences between clergy and lay personnel. All exempt lay employees are eligible to participate in the employer portion of the plan. PCUSA, A Corporation pays an amount based upon a calculation of tax differences. Contributions to the Plan were $626,789 and $556,484 for 2013 and 2012, respectively.

PCUSA, A Corporation’s expenses for the plans for the years ended December 31, 2013 and 2012 were as follows:

Credit Risk: PCUSA, A Corporation maintains cash and cash equivalents with various financial institutions. At times, such cash and cash equivalents may be in excess of the FDIC insurance level.
NOTE 13 – FAIR VALUE

United States generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) define and establish a framework for measuring fair value and expand disclosures about fair value measurements. GAAP emphasizes fair value is a market-based measurement and enables the reader of the financial statements to assess the inputs used to develop those measurements by establishing a fair value hierarchy for ranking the quality and reliability of the information used to determine fair values. The assets and liabilities carried at fair value are classified and disclosed in one of the following three categories:

Level 1: Valuations for assets and liabilities traded in active exchange markets, such as the New York Stock Exchange. Valuations are obtained as of the measurement date from readily available pricing sources for market transactions involving identical assets or liabilities (market approach).

Level 2: Valuations for assets and liabilities traded in less active dealer or broker markets. Valuations are obtained from quoted prices by third party pricing sources for similar assets or liabilities; quoted prices in markets that are not active; or other inputs that are observable or can be corroborated. The valuation methodology for Level 2 investments consists of both income and market approaches, as appropriate for the specific investment.

Level 3: Valuations for assets and liabilities are unobservable and significant. Valuations reflect management’s best estimate of what market participants would use in pricing an asset or liability at the measurement date.

In many cases, a valuation technique used to measure fair value includes inputs from multiple levels of the fair value hierarchy. The lowest level of significant input determines the categorization of the entire fair value measurement in the hierarchy.

Treasury bonds, equities and mutual funds are valued at the closing price reported in the active market in which the bonds are traded (Level 1 inputs). Corporate bonds and agency bonds are valued at quoted prices for identical or similar assets in non-active markets since these bonds trade infrequently (Level 2 inputs - market). Mortgage backed securities are valued using matrix pricing, which is a mathematical technique widely used to value debt securities without relying exclusively on quoted prices for the specific securities, but rather by relying on the securities' relationship to other benchmark quoted securities (Level 2 inputs - market).

The fair value of the certificates of deposit, equity investment, and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment & Loan Program, Inc. denominational accounts were recalculated by applying the interest rate to the initial investments, and no discounts for credit quality or liquidity were determined to be applicable (Level 2 inputs).

The investment in the unitized pool is managed by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation. The investment objectives of the fund are to (1) provide a stream of relatively stable and constant earnings in support of annual budgetary needs and (2) preserve and enhance the real (inflation-adjusted) purchasing power of the fund. The Foundation’s investment policy is documented in the Statement of Investment Policies and Objectives for the Endowment Fund amended November 14, 2013.

The underlying investments in the unitized pool are held in accordance with specific guidelines set forth by the Foundation and various targets have been established with regard to allowable investments purchased by the unitized pool. At December 31, 2013, the underlying investments of the unitized pool consist of the following asset classes:

<tr>
<th>Asset Class</th>
<th>Percentage</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Stock</td>
<td>48%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fixed Income</td>
<td>18%</td>

<tr>
<td>Real Estate</td>
<td>5%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Private Equity</td>
<td>5%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>100%</td>
</tr>

Withdrawals from the unitized pool are available within 90 days with prior written notice. Pursuant to U.S. GAAP, management has considered redemption restrictions to assess classification of the fair value inputs. As a result, unitized pool assets with redemption periods of 90 days or less are considered Level 2 fair value measurements.

The fair value of the beneficial interests in the perpetual trust assets (life income funds and funds held in trust by others) is based on a valuation model that calculates the present value of estimated distributed income. The valuation model incorporates the fair value of investment holdings, which are readily marketable securities valued at quoted prices and incorporates assumptions that market participants would use in estimating future distributed income. PCUSA, A Corporation is able to compare the valuation model inputs and results to widely available published industry data for reasonableness. PCUSA does not have the ability to redeem the investment within 90 days (Level 3 inputs - market).

The amount of fundraising expenses as a percentage of funds raised was 11% and 9% for the years ended December 31, 2013 and 2012, respectively.

NOTE 15 – COMMITMENTS AND CONTINGENCIES

PCUSA, A Corporation holds and participates in an insurance fund (the “Fund”) that exists to provide a source of funds for that portion of certain losses not covered by commercial insurance to cover deductibles on commercial insurance and for certain classes of uninsured losses. Various General Assembly-level agencies and corporations are included in the Fund. The largest possible loss to be assumed in any one event or occurrence is $250,000, with $1,000,000 as the largest potential aggregate of all claims in a single calendar year.

The minimum balance of the self-insurance fund shall not fall below $5,000,000 as a result of claims paid. In the event this happens, an assessment will be made to the insured entities to return the fund to the $5,000,000 minimum balance. The assessment will be based on each insured entity’s 5-year loss ratio. A 1% minimum assessment will be made by the entities that have not experienced any losses in the 5-year period. The balance of the Fund reflected as designated net assets by PCUSA, A Corporation was $6,010,024 and $5,337,534 at December 31, 2013 and 2012, respectively.

During the ordinary course of business, PCUSA, A Corporation is subject to pending and threatened legal actions. Management of PCUSA, A Corporation does not believe that any of these actions will have a material adverse effect on PCUSA, A Corporation’s consolidated financial position or change in net assets.
NOTE 16 – RELATED PARTY TRANSACTIONS

Foundation

The Foundation provides certain investment, custodial, and deferred giving services to PCUSA, A Corporation. The Foundation recoups the cost of those services not covered from the income of its own endowment funds and the annual grant from the General Assembly by quarterly charges against the investment pools in which the funds administered by the Foundation are invested. These charges were recovered equally from the principal and income of these pools. Such costs consist of salary and benefits (50% of the Foundation’s operating expenses); outside investment services (23% of the Foundation’s operating expenses); and other operating expenses (27% of the Foundation’s operating expenses).

The income received by PCUSA, A Corporation from the Foundation is net of administrative fees of outside managers as described previously. PCUSA, A Corporation’s investments and unrestricted and restricted endowment funds held by the Foundation on behalf of the General Assembly at December 31, 2013 and 2012, totaled approximately $396,000,000 and $374,000,000, respectively.

The Foundation’s custodial cost recovery and investment management fees are assessed daily based on the prior day’s market value against the total fund.

Board of National Missions

There are certain church loan funds whereby the fiduciary ownership belongs to the Board of National Missions, a constituent corporation of the Foundation. PCUSA, A Corp. is the disbursing agent for those funds under a limited power of attorney from the Foundation. PILP administers the Loan Program under an administrative services agreement with PCUSA, A. Corp. Accordingly, these funds are not reflected in the consolidated financial statements but are administered by PCUSA, A Corporation. These loan funds were approximately $237,000,000 and $220,000,000 at December 31, 2013 and 2012, respectively.

Board of Pensions

PCUSA, A Corporation served as a receiving agent for funds designated for the Board of Pensions. PCUSA, A Corporation received $1,496,769 and $1,748,704 for the years ended December 31, 2013 and 2012, of which $408,409 and $933,631 was yet to be remitted to the Board of Pensions.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

PCUSA, A Corporation leases office space and provides administrative support to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (“PILP”) by contract. For the years ended December 31, 2013 and 2012, administrative support charged to PILP was $140,736 and $137,976, respectively. Office space charged to PILP was $57,039 and $55,932 for 2013 and 2012, respectively.

On June 29, 2000, PCUSA, A Corporation entered into an operating agreement with PILP under which PILP will provide administrative services (e.g., origination and loan servicing) for PCUSA, A Corporation’s church loan program at cost in an effort to streamline the coordination process between PCUSA, A Corporation’s church loan program and PILP’s loan program. PCUSA, A Corporation reimbursed PILP $309,960 and $289,325 for the actual costs of such services during 2013 and 2012, respectively.

PCUSA, A Corporation and PILP have issued joint loans through a participation arrangement. For the years ended December 31, 2013 and 2012, total loans outstanding were $36,286,837 and $36,417,627, respectively, under this participation arrangement.

The current commitment, effective May 1, 2010, to PILP is a five-year commitment to invest up to $5,000,000 in short and intermediate term accounts called denominational account receipts (DAR). As of December 31, 2013 and 2012, investments with PILP were $9,685,868 and $9,572,287, respectively. At December 31, 2013 and 2012, fixed interest rates ranged from 0.65% to 2.03% and 0.80% to 2.27%, respectively, and the adjustable rate ranged from 0.45% to 0.90% and 0.90% to 1.19%, respectively. For the year ended December 31, 2013, the Foundation did not invest with PILP from PCUSA, A Corporation’s unrestricted endowment funds.

Presbyterian Publishing Corporation

PCUSA, A Corporation leases office space to Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (“PPC”) under an operating lease. For the years ended December 31, 2013 and 2012, rental income was $152,693 and $140,860. Future minimum rental income under the operating lease, which expires in December 2014 with an option to renew, is $156,770 annually.

Other related expenses charged to PPC for telephone, postage, and copy services were $106,187 and $66,760 in 2013 and 2012, respectively.

PPC pays PCUSA for supplemental warehousing and distribution services. Fees paid by PPC under this agreement in 2013 and 2012 were $43,939 and $29,436 for fulfillment fees and $241,016 and $140,194 for freight, respectively.

PPC publishes various pamphlets, magazines, and books for PCUSA, A Corporation during the year on a project-by-project basis. Expenses related to this type of work in 2013 and 2012 were $241,871 and $0, respectively. PPC also pays PCUSA, A Corporation for advertising space in various church publications. Advertising expense under such arrangements was $13,690 and $135 in 2013 and 2012, respectively.

Insurance

PCUSA, A Corporation participates in commercial insurance programs, whereby premiums are negotiated and paid by PCUSA, A Corporation. The Board of Pensions, Foundation, PILP, and PPC reimburse PCUSA, A Corporation for expenses paid on their behalf. Expenses incurred for commercial insurance paid by PCUSA, A Corporation for December 31, 2013 and 2012:

[The assembly answered Item 09-01 by the action taken on Item 09-07. See pp. 32, 36.]

On Taking Meaningful Action to Reduce Gun Violence—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve the following resolution:

The PC(USA) and its constituent parts recommits itself to work with federal, state, and local legislators to pass laws that will:

• require licensing, registration, and waiting periods to allow comprehensive background checks, and cooling-off periods;
• close the “gun show loophole” by requiring background checks for all gun buyers;
• ban semiautomatic assault weapons, armor piercing handgun ammunition, and .50 caliber sniper rifles;
• advocate for new technologies to aid law-enforcement agencies to trace crime guns and promote public safety;
• raise the age for handgun ownership to the age of twenty-one;
• following the recommendation of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, support laws to “require judges and law enforcement to remove guns from situations of domestic violence, as well as from people whose adjudicated mental illness, drug use, or previous criminal record suggests the possibility of violence,” and to increase police training in nonviolent proactive intervention.”

Rationale

The entire nation is mourning the senseless loss of human life in Newtown, Connecticut; in Blacksburg, Virginia; in Portland, Oregon; in Aurora, Colorado; in Tucson, Arizona; in Tulsa, Oklahoma; in Oak Creek, Wisconsin; and elsewhere caused by gun violence.

Our president asked God “to honor the memory of the victims and, in the words of scripture, to heal the brokenhearted and bind up their wounds” and implored the nation to “take meaningful action to prevent this from happening again, regardless of the politics.”

In 2010, the 219th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved a recommendation that all PC(USA) congregations take seriously the pervasive use of gun violence in our country and take various measures to educate our membership and our public officials. (See Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 39, 41–42, 830ff.)

As a church, we, the PC(USA), confess that we have not responded strongly enough to the continuing number of killings and repent our failure to demand more of ourselves to ensure that adequate laws are passed to reduce gun violence.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that this item be answered by the action taken on Item 09-07.

While agreeing with the proponent presbyteries that the measures they cite have generally not been enacted, these measures have been approved by General Assemblies relatively recently. Item 09-07 presents both an opportunity to affirm a more comprehensive approach and specific new strategy related to gun free zones.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-01

It is an irrefutable fact that gun violence of all kinds occurs more frequently, and has an unbridled and devastating impact on racial ethnic families and communities than any others—particularly the African American and Hispanic communities in our country. For the PC(USA) not to overwhelmingly approve and support this overture would reflect a dispassionate and perceptibly aggressively insensitive attitude toward “the least of these ...” constitute a default on our obligation to our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ and the Gospel mandate. If the PC(USA), one of the “White Mainline Denominations,” remains, perceptibly, and by people of color, conspicuously silent on an issue that screams out in racial overtones, that silence would represent a totally illogical and deceptive position coming for a church that imposed a decade-long mandate (2000–2010) to increase racial ethnic membership by 20 percent while simultaneously shifting its focus from a mono-cultural to an arguably ambiguous “multicultural” emphasis.

The ACREC would like to draw attention to the need to expand the list of locations affected by gun violence offered in the rationale to include cities and states such as Los Angeles and Oakland, Calif., Jacksonville and Sanford, Fla., Chicago, Ill., Detroit, Mich., Newark, N.J., New York, and Philadelphia, Pa., just to name a few. With the amount of worldwide notoriety each has gained in its own right with regard to gun violence, the mere omission of each place, again, speaks volumes about the church’s lack awareness or its gross insensitivity towards the people of color most victimized by gun violence. A church espousing a genuine desire for diversity and inclusiveness can ill afford this characterization.

Comment on Item 09-01—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries are engaged in addressing the issues related to eradicating gun violence in the United States in response to the 219th General Assembly (2010): http://www.pcusa.org/resource/gun-violence-gospel-values-mobilizing-response-god/. The Presbyterian Mission Agency has developed numerous resources to equip congregations to respond to concerns about gun violence (http://www.presbyterianmission.org/gunviolence/).

Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, the Peacemaking Program, and the Office of Public Witness are working collaboratively to both raise awareness and promote the passing of commonsense gun laws in local communities, states, and the U.S. Congress. The promotion of effective advocacy strategies and ways that congregations can become involved in reducing gun violence are being promoted through the collaborative efforts of these three programs. The PC(USA) documentary, Trigger, is being promoted through mid councils, local congregations, and community-based organizations across the country (http://triggerdoc.com/). A petition drive calling for commonsense gun laws is continuing until national legislators pass commonsense gun laws.

[The assembly disapproved Item 09-02. See pp. 35, 36.]

On Entering a Two-Year Season of Reflection on the Plight of Unwanted Children, and Appointing a Special Committee on Abortion Review—From the Presbytery of South Alabama.

The Presbytery of South Alabama overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (USA) to do the following:

1. Call for the Presbyterian Mission Agency and member congregations to enter a two-year season of reflection upon the plight of children unwanted by human society, both born and not-yet born, and to purposefully seek to enter the pure worship of God by offering aid, comfort, and the Gospel to those responsible for the care of our most desperate orphans (including those who survive abortion procedures): parents, siblings, church and community leaders, and the medical profession.

2. Direct the Moderator of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk to issue statements that denounce the practice of killing babies born live following an abortion procedure, such as was revealed in the Dr. Kermit Gosnell clinic in Philadelphia.

3. Direct the Moderator to appoint a Special Committee on Abortion Review, carefully balanced with members representing both pro-life and pro-choice viewpoints, to

   a. Conduct a thorough assessment of the financial, in-kind, lodging, publicity, and staff support that the PC(USA) provides to organizations such as Planned Parenthood, Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Options, Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice, and other abortion providers or pro-choice organizations. A similar review should be made of denominational support provided for pro-life organizations and pro-life crisis-pregnancy support centers.

   b. Review existing policies and, if needed, propose new policies that will more accurately represent the PC(USA) in its breadth of conviction about abortion, taking into account our churches’ desire to worship God in purest form (Jas. 1:27). Any new policies shall incorporate more fully the voices of pro-life Presbyterians, who have to this point largely been kept silent in denominational advocacy.
Most, if not all, of the special committee meetings should be conducted in virtual conferences using appropriate audio-visual technology. The Special Committee on Abortion Review shall report its findings and recommendations to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Rationale

The blood of little children cries out to God and to Christ’s Church for protection and justice.

The 2013 trial and conviction of Philadelphia abortion doctor Kermit Gosnell has placed Planned Parenthood abortion clinics and similar organizations under suspicion for tolerating medical abuse of both mothers and infants (see http://www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/she-the-people/wp/2013/05/30/nurses-describe-unsafe-conditions-at-delaware-abortion-clinic/).

Neither the PC(USA) Stated Clerk in Louisville nor the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Washington Office have called for corrective medical regulations (federal or state) for Planned Parenthood and other abortion providers, nor have our denominational representatives offered a single word of protest against the taking of innocent life at Planned Parenthood and other abortion clinics.

The clear teaching of Scriptures reveals that human life is sacred to God primarily because human life is created in God’s image (Gen. 1:27). Ancient Israel was taught to value life while it was still in the womb (Ex. 21: 22–23); the glory of the Creator’s handiwork in the womb is profoundly revealed by the Psalmist (Psalm 139); Jesus taught God’s especially tender love for innocent and defenseless children (Mk. 10:14–16; Mt. 19:13–15; Lk. 18: 15–17). Numerous Old Testament passages (Lev. 18:21; Jer. 19:4 and 32:35; Ps. 106: 37-39) clearly warn against offering children as sacrifices to please the god(s) of pagan culture (today, the gods of convenience and pleasure).

The New Testament scriptures clearly teach that the purest expression of religion in the sight of our God and heavenly Father is to care particularly for orphans and widows during their times of distress, and to keep ourselves unstained by the world (Jas. 1:27).

The Presbytery of South Alabama recognizes the spiritual duty of church councils to be faithful in carrying out their constitutional responsibility of being proactive, “warning and bearing witness against error in doctrine and immorality in practice within the congregation and community” (Book of Order, G-3.0201c)

Concurrence to Item 09-02 from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) disapprove Item 09-02.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the grave moral issues raised by Item 09-02 have received, and continue to receive, significant attention, concern, and action by the church. With brevity, we describe some of these actions.

In response to (1) in Item 09-02, ACSWP advises that the concern expressed for the well-being of born children, as well as for the unborn, reflects longstanding church policies that call Presbyterians to reflection and action. In 1950 the PCUSA assembly declared the church’s responsibility for the physical, mental, and spiritual well-being of children. Throughout subsequent decades, assemblies have adopted innumerable policies, resulting in programs and advocacy, directed to the multitude of conditions that compromise and threaten the well-being of children: inadequate healthcare, including prenatal care; inadequate nutrition; unsafe housing; and lack of good, affordable childcare, among others. With 22 percent of U.S. children living in poverty today, these issues remain critical. Recent Federal legislation cutting food stamps to low-income families reminds us of the need for constant vigilance on behalf of children and their mothers. The PC(USA) has also consistently encouraged Presbyterians to become involved in adoption and foster parenting, especially for children with special needs. (See “Adoption of Children with Special Needs,” 211th General Assembly (1999).)

While acknowledging that “we do not have substantial agreement on when human life begins,” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, paragraph 27.102) the church’s concern for the unborn is clearly stated in its current policy on problem pregnancies and abortion, “Do Justice, Love Mercy, Walk Humbly,” (204th General Assembly, 1992). Here the church calls upon Presbyterians to address the concerns that bring women to contemplate abortion: “poverty, unjust social realities, sexism, racism, and inadequate supportive relationships” (Ibid. 27.101). In addition, this policy urges churches to support women by providing various alternatives to abortion:
Presbyterian churches are urged to consider expanding or offering such resources as adoptive services, homes for pregnant women who lack the necessary financial and emotional support for childbirth and child rearing, and pregnancy counseling. In 1986, the General Assembly of the PC(USA) took a step in this direction in recommending that resource centers be set up for alternatives to abortion within each presbytery (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 372).

In response to (2), the ACSWP advises that as recently as 2006, the 217th General Assembly clarified the churches policy on late-term abortions or miscarriages:

> We affirm that the lives of viable unborn babies—those well-developed enough to survive outside the womb if delivered—ought to be preserved and cared for and not aborted. In cases where problems of life or health of the mother arise in a pregnancy, the church supports efforts to protect the life and health of both the mother and the baby. When late-term pregnancies must be terminated, we urge decisions intended to deliver the baby alive.7

Regardless of one’s support or opposition to legal abortion, the case of Dr. Gosnell is abhorrent to all. While statements in opposition to Dr. Gosnell’s actions would accurately reflect church policy, as well as the standards of our society and the practices of the medical community, the Moderator and Stated Clerk do not typically comment on criminal cases.

In response to (3.b), the ACSWP advises that Item 09-02 contains basic misunderstandings of the church’s policies and actions related to problem pregnancies and abortion. At its core, the church’s policy affirms that, in face of the “complicated and insolvable circumstances” surrounding problem pregnancies, it has “neither the wisdom nor the authority to address or decide each situation” for women (Ibid. 27.090). Therefore, it affirms “... the ability and responsibility of women, guided by the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit, to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies” (Ibid. 27.091). The position of the church is not pro-abortion. However, the PC(USA) recognizes that there are circumstances when abortion may be a responsible choice within a Christian ethical framework. Thus, to support women’s reproductive choices, the church advocates for women’s access to family planning services, including fertility aid, contraception and, as a last resort, abortion. This position is consistent with longstanding Presbyterian affirmations of freedom of conscience informed by the Holy Spirit.

The positions expressed in the Rationale to Item 09-02 would, in fact, require a radically different policy on problem pregnancies and abortion. Perhaps for this reason, Item 09-02 calls for the appointment of a Special Committee on Abortion Review. However, the development of social witness policy for the denomination cannot be accomplished with a simple for or against discussion. Any study to reconsider the social witness policy of the PC(USA) would need to conform to the standards and procedures established for making social witness policy by the 205th General Assembly (1993). These require that the task force assigned this responsibility develop a plan for the involvement of the whole church. It must also listen to the biblical text, theological views, Reformed Confessions, sociopolitical disciplines, past policy statements, the advice of members and governing bodies, the counsel of ecumenical partners, and the insights of those who are poor or victims of existing policies. (See “Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness,” 205th General Assembly (1993)). Appropriately, this is an extensive process over several years, which in this case, would involve serious medical and theological/ethical expertise. The current 1992 policy involved a committee of fourteen working for three years. It also seems inappropriate to the subject matter and depth of concern to consider doing such a study by “audio-visual technology,” though the desire to save money can be appreciated. In fact, if the General Assembly were to approve the development of a new policy according to its current standards, which include circulating a church-wide study document and holding a consultation with representatives of all synods, the financial implications would be quite a bit higher than those attached to this Item.

We note that a similar proposal for a new study was brought to the 220th General Assembly (2012). The committee considering the proposal made the following comment describing the church’s current (1992) policy:

> This noteworthy study brought twenty years of relative peace on a matter that has been a source of intense conflict in the PC(USA) for many years prior to the study. The study accomplished no mean feat in setting forth common ground that Presbyterian can gather around; common ground that eschews partisanship on either side of the cultural divide. We found insight and guidance in this document that was both eloquent and relevant to our work; therefore we do not see the need for a new study but rather commend the existing study to our church.7

The 220th General Assembly (2012) followed the committee’s advice and did not approve a new study.

Item 09-02 itself does not seem convinced that a new study would be needed. In section (3.b.), it states “Review existing policies and, if needed, propose new policies” [italics added]. While repeated General Assemblies have supported full reproductive rights for four decades, any review and proposed changes in church policy would need to be based on the well-grounded theological and bioethical discernment as noted above.

In response to (3.a), the ACSWP advises that this information is readily available. Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Options (PARO) is one of the ten networks of the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA), a ministry of the Presbyterian Mission Agency established by the General Assembly in 1956 (168th General Assembly, United Presbyterian Church (USA)). One staff position in the PMA supports the work of PHEWA’s ten networks. As a PHEWA network, PARO is composed of volunteers committed to promoting, explaining, and defending the problem pregnancies and abortion policies of the PC(USA). As of the 2014 budget of the PMA, PHEWA networks no longer receive the small grants ($2,500 each in 2013) that were made available by dedicated funds which have now been depleted.
As with other social justice policies, General Assembly entities, such as the Office for Social Witness, may join in partnership with other religious and secular groups that have mutual concerns. Thus, both the PMA and PARO are members of the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice, an organization of almost thirty member religious organizations whose denominational policies support women’s access to reproductive choices. The PC(USA) provides no financial support to RCRC. The PC(USA) has no connection to Planned Parenthood and makes no financial contributions.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 09-02.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s (ACSWP) Advice and Counsel Item 09-02.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-02

Comment on Item 09-02—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly requests that commissioners and advisory delegates carefully consider any items of business that would raise the per capita rate. The COGA made a commitment to bring no increase to the per capita rate to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by making significant reductions in the per capita budgets, which included reductions in staff. We would ask that other means be found within existing committee structures to accomplish the same task.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-02

Comment on Item 09-02—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) affirmed the monitoring report from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), which reviews the implementation of problem pregnancies and abortion policies. Presbyterian Mission Agency ministries preparing resources on problem pregnancies and abortion strive to reflect a diversity of opinion in the resources that are produced. Resources revised in 2010 prepared by Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries cover the range of faithful responses in these difficult situations, and they include: Problem Pregnancy: When No Choice Is Easy—For the Pregnant Woman; There’s Always A Father—Does the Father Have a Problem, Too?, When Pregnancy Involves Loss—Helping Others Face Pregnancy Loss; When You Need Wisdom—Helping Others Face Problem Pregnancy.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) reiterated the role of the church in individual and families’ lives as they face problem pregnancy issues:

The church has a responsibility to provide public witness and to offer guidance, counsel, and support to those who make or interpret laws and public policies about abortion and problem pregnancies. Pastors have a duty to counsel with and pray for those who face decisions about problem pregnancies. Congregations have a duty to pray for and support those who face these choices, to offer support for women and families to help make unwanted pregnancies less likely to occur, and to provide practical support for those facing the birth of a child with medical anomalies, birth after rape or incest, or those who face health, economic, or other stresses. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 905)

The 1992 policy states,

Problem pregnancies are the result of, and influenced by, so many complicated and insolvable circumstances that we have neither the wisdom nor the authority to address or decide each situation. Christians seek the guidance of Scripture in the midst of relationships and circumstances of awesome proportions that affect their interpretation and decision making.

We affirm the ability and responsibility of women, guided by the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit, in the context of their communities of faith, to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies.

We call upon Presbyterians to work for a decrease in the number of problem pregnancies, thereby decreasing the number of abortions.

The considered decision of a woman to terminate a pregnancy can be a morally acceptable, though certainly not the only or required, decision. Possible justifying circumstances would include medical indications of severe physical or mental deformity, conception as a result of rape or incest, or conditions under which the physical or mental health of either woman or child would be gravely threatened.
The Christian community must be concerned about and address the circumstances that bring a woman to consider abortion as the best available option. Poverty, unjust societal realities, sexism, racism, and inadequate supportive relationships may render a woman virtually powerless to choose freely. (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 368)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) continues to be guided by the 204th General Assembly (1992) policy on abortion and problem pregnancies and encourages the church to continue to approach this challenging issue with the atmosphere of “open debate and mutual respect” for a variety of opinions (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 374).

In 2014, there were no funds budgeted in the form of grants from the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) to any of the ten networks of Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association, including Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Options (PARO). No funds from the PMA were given to Planned Parenthood or the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC).

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Join the 171st (1959), 177th (1965), and the 189th (1977) General Assemblies of the United Presbyterian Church, the 106th General Assembly (1966) of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S., and the 197th General Assembly (1985), 212th General Assembly (2000), and 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and declare its continuing opposition to capital punishment.

2. Call for an immediate moratorium on all executions in all jurisdictions that impose capital punishment.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate the call for an immediate moratorium and our continuing opposition to capital punishment to the president of the United States, our representatives in Congress, as well as the governors and legislators of the thirty-four states with persons incarcerated while awaiting execution.

Rationale

We are meeting in the State of Michigan, the first English-speaking government in the world to abolish capital punishment in 1846.

This is the fourth anniversary of the last resolution of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding capital punishment.

Since 2007, six more states, New Jersey, New York, New Mexico, Illinois, Connecticut, and Maryland, have abolished the death penalty.

We give thanks that the death penalty has been abolished in a total of eighteen states.

Both as Christians and as citizens of the United States of America, we believe that one of the greatest tragedies that can occur is the execution of an innocent person by the state, yet we know that this has occurred repeatedly throughout history.

Human judgment is always fallible, including the judgments of juries and judges deciding death penalty cases.

It has been recognized by numerous authoritative sources that the death penalty has been imposed in a racially discriminatory manner.

No state yet has met standards developed by the American Bar Association for appointment, performance, and compensation of counsel for indigent prisoners.

We recognize that the death penalty is a moral issue that demands paramount discernment by legislative and judicial bodies. Since 1973, 142 people have been released from death row with evidence of their innocence, 58 of these since 2000. From 1973–1999, there was an average of three exonerations per year, nationally. From 2000–2011, there has been an average of five exonerations per year, nationally (Death Penalty Information Center, Facts about the Death Penalty, current as of September 10, 2013). Given these rates, it is reasonable to assume that judges and juries will continue to make such errors in future death penalty cases. Yet such errors are not morally defensible.

Nor can the legal system, as presently structured, provide any assurance against innocent persons being subjected to the death penalty. In recent years, prisoner appeals have actually been curtailed, increasing the risk of the execution of innocent people. In 1996, new legislation drastically limited federal court review of death penalty appeals and gutted public funding of legal aid services for death row prisoners (PC(USA), 212th General Assembly [2000]).

Further, human judgment is flawed and influenced by human sinfulness. For example, in 1990, the United States General Accounting Office reported a pattern of evidence indicating racial disparities in charging, sentencing, and imposition of the death penalty.

In 82 percent of their studies, race of the victim was found to influence the likelihood of being charged with capital murder or receiving a death sentence, i.e. those who murdered whites were found to be more likely to be sentenced to death than those who murdered blacks. This finding was remarkably consistent across data sets, states, data collection methods, and analytic techniques. The finding held for high-, medium-, and low-quality studies (U.S. General Accounting Office, Report GGD-90-57, Death Penalty Sentencing: Research Indicates Pattern of Racial Disparities, February 26, 1990, 5).

A comprehensive study of the death penalty in North Carolina found that the odds of receiving a death sentence rose by 3.5 times among those defendants whose victims were white (Professor Jack Boger and Dr. Isaac Unah, “Preliminary Report on the Findings of the North Carolina Death Penalty Study 2001,” University of North Carolina, April 16, 2001). A study in California found that those who killed whites were more than three times more likely to be sentenced to death than those who killed blacks and more than four times more likely than those who killed Latinos (Glenn Pierce and Michael Radelet, “The Impact of Legally Inappropriate Factors on Death Sentencing for California Homicides, 1990–1999.” Santa Clara Law Review, Vol. 46. 2005). As of September 10, 2013, among the 1,343 people who have been executed in the United States since 1977, 282 have been executed for interracial murders. Of these, 20 involved white defendants and black victims and 262 involved black defendants and white victims (Death Penalty Information Center, Facts about the Death Penalty, current as of September 10, 2013).

Our legal system does not currently assure that persons accused of crimes receive full economic justice. The right to effective counsel is recognized as one of our most fundamental rights, and one of our most important protections against wrongful convictions. However, about 90 percent of those persons facing capital charges cannot afford their own attorney.

As Christians, we recognize God as sovereign in all spheres of human life, including the political sphere. We declare that God’s commandment against killing is still good law. We follow a Lord who taught us to go beyond “an eye for an eye.” We believe that human individuals and institutions are sinful and make mistakes. And, as humans, we lack any power to correct our errors if we wrongly execute another human being.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 09-04, a National Moratorium on the Imposition of the Death Penalty, be approved.

Anytime a person is killed by our penal system for a crime they did not commit, a tragedy has occurred. Since advances made in DNA analysis, dozens of prisoners have been cleared of criminal charges after spending decades in prison—most recently in New York in early April, 2014. The data cited in the rationale of the overture provide overwhelming evidence of the inadequacies of our system with regard to providing “equal justice for all.” The deterrent value of the death penalty has also been largely discounted as the United States has among the harshest penal systems—including the death penalty—and yet also has one of the highest murder rates in a country not at war within its territory.

At the deepest level, the initial horror and tragedy of any violent death are not rectified by the addition of another violent death administered—often with erratic cruelty—by the state. Even in cases that approach 100 percent certainty of guilt, the Christian remembers that “all have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God,” and that yet God desires all to be saved, according to St. Paul. These and other considerations are part of prior General Assembly actions providing theological bases for the choice of mercy even for unrepentant murders—in hope that repentance may come through the work of the Spirit, chaplains, and other dedicated persons who answer the call to visit those in prison.
If the commissioners are in agreement with the basic position of the church in this matter, they might wish to add language encouraging congregations, presbyteries, and synods to work with the Criminal Justice network of the Presbyterian Health Education and Welfare Association in seeking to extend the abolition of the death penalty to more states and to support federal strategies.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 09-04.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concern advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 09-04.

As articulated within Item 09-04, General Assemblies from 1959 to 2010 have declared continued opposition to the death penalty, and while six states have abolished the death penalty between 2007 and 2014, for the remaining thirty-two states, execution is still prevalent. It is recognized that the imposition of the death penalty continues to be “... a moral issue that demands paramount discernment by legislative and judicial bodies” (Rationale for Item 09-04), and that within the judicial system racial disparities in charging, sentencing, and imposition of the death penalty are known (as reported by the United States General Accounting Office and noted within Rationale for Item 09-04).

Furthermore, through the lens of gender justice, an execution, when not affecting a woman herself, affects the remaining family members, e.g. mothers, wives, daughters, sisters, whose loved one lived his final days on death row, and finally, quite possibly, was actually executed. Paradoxically, a sentence of life in prison affords the inmate a greater possibility of rehabilitation and redemption, and affords the inmate’s family members to be a part of his life throughout his life in prison. While incarceration is a very difficult reality for family members, it remains the better scenario when the only other option is death by execution.

Through the lens of Christianity, the ACWC concurs with the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta, recognizing God as sovereign in all spheres of human life, and that God’s commandment against killing is still good law. We are all fallible human beings, dependent upon God, and as such, we make mistakes and we are sinful. And, yet, God is good, forgiving, steadfast, and faithful, and we are called to be as Christ-like as humanly possible, especially when considering those for whom these disparities are reality.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-04

Comment on Item 09-04—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Church has opposed the death penalty by action of previous General Assemblies as outlined by this summary, http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/101/capital-punishment/.

The Office of Public Witness (OPW) continues efforts to eliminate the death penalty through active engagement in fair sentencing discussions within ecumenical and interfaith settings. The OPW is connecting to grassroots communities that are organizing around these issues as a majority of the efforts to eliminate the death penalty are taking place in local communities and at the state level.

The recommendations outlined in this overture affirm current policies and raise the visibility of this issue.

Item 09-05

On a Two-Year Study to Discern How to Advocate for Effective Drug Policies—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to call for a two-year study by the governing bodies and members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to discern how to advocate for effective drug policies grounded in science, compassion, and human rights, and to this end, do the following:
1. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency, to appoint a Drug Policy Task Force to promote study, discussion, and engagement among church members and congregants and develop a plan of concrete actions and policy recommendations for the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

   a. The task force shall consist of seven to nine selected volunteer members representing the following stakeholders/disciplines: policy analyst/advocate; subject matter specialists in addiction science, criminal justice, and international relations; law enforcement; judicial representative; formerly incarcerated drug offender/drug user activist; defense counsel/community litigator; theologian.

   b. The task force will serve as a clearinghouse for information and discussion of relevant issues; it will create an online presence with diverse, creative, and fact-based information in support of local church study groups.

   c. The task force shall conduct four hearings in different parts of the country (rural, urban, suburban, border) in collaboration with presbyteries to receive a broad range of perspective and stimulate dialogue.

   d. As opportunities for policy reform may arise before possible General Assembly action, the task force will keep individual members, churches, and presbyteries within the PC(USA) informed of relevant policy reform initiatives or action for which they may want to exercise democratic advocacy on their own.

2. Urge all publications and other communication vehicles of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to develop articles, reports, and other materials designed to educate, motivate, and activate church members and congregants to learn about the history, development, and implementation of U.S. drug policies.

3. Recommend that the Criminal Justice Network of the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association focus Criminal Justice Sunday in 2015 on issues related to the impact of drug prohibition.

4. Urge Presbyterian Women (PW) to make drug policy education and reform part of their ongoing work.

5. Urge Presbyterians who are ecumenical staff to advocate for making the impact of punitive drug policies a critical focus of the Summer 2015 meeting of the National Association of Ecumenical and Inter-Religious Staff.

6. Recommend that congregations and councils of the church, as well as the task force designated above, consider the following questions and concerns:

   a. What are the roles, responsibilities, and limits of the state and citizenry in relation to our bodies, particularly with respect to what we market and sell for consumption and what we consume? What does Christian theology suggest about current drug policies, and our social responsibility to ensure health for members of our communities? What are the spiritual and ethical implications of: massive and disproportionate incarceration of drug offenders, especially people of color, and of the militarization of relations with the nations involved in illicit drug cultivation and/or trafficking?

   b. Does current U.S. drug policy achieve its stated goal to reduce production and consumption of illegal drugs, or does it serve other policy goals, institutional interests, societal norms, or systemic forces? If so, how do we define those other goals, interests, norms, and forces?

   c. What laws, policies, programs, and treaties currently govern our nation’s responses to the production, transit, and use of illicit drugs?

   d. What are the consequences of maintaining current punitive drug policies? What might more effective and humane drug policies look like, with regards to the following:

      (1) militarization of law enforcement and the erosion of distinctions between civilian police and military, especially with respect to drug law enforcement;

      (2) relationship between prohibition of drugs and organized crime;

      (3) communities’ use of illegal drugs and the disparate impact that enforcement of drug prohibition has on poor people and racial minorities;

      (4) distinction between harmfulness, addictiveness, and illegality as it relates to use of psychoactive and/or addictive substances;

      (5) allocation of public resources required to enforce current drug policies and effectiveness in addressing underlying problems relating to substance abuse and addiction while programs for social needs such as health, education, and community development are underfunded;
(6) rates of illicit drug use, abuse, and addiction; health effects and impacts on special populations—e.g. mentally ill, homeless, ‘at-risk’ youth, immigrants, victims of sexual violence.

[Financial Implications: Per Capita—$380 (2014); $32,240 (2015); $13,750 (2016)]

Rationale

At the heart of Jesus’ mission is the proclamation of restoration, liberation, and new beginnings. Jesus began his ministry by reading from the prophet Isaiah (Lk. 4:18–19) and identifying his life’s work with transforming the situation of the poor, the oppressed, and the outcast. Following his mission entails participation in very concrete actions of social renewal. Drug prohibition has had a disproportionate impact on the most vulnerable members of society—particularly poor blacks and Hispanics. Even though whites outnumber blacks five to one and both groups use and sell drugs at similar rates, African Americans comprise 35 percent of those arrested for drug possession; 55 percent of those convicted for drug possession; and 74 percent of those imprisoned for drug possession. As a result of the more than forty-year-long “war on drugs,” the United States has become the world’s greatest incarcerator—with 5 percent of the global population, we imprison 25 percent of the world’s prisoners, almost half of these are for drug-related crimes. Drug prohibition also has been the primary rationale as well for more than $20 billion spent in the last decade on U.S. military operations and aid in Latin America, where related violence has caused devastating human damage.

Prior General Assemblies have sought to speak to many of these issues, such as the 1971 statement by the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) on drug use; the 1993 statement on Freedom and Substance Abuse (Minutes, 1993, Part I, p. 758); the 2002 Resolution on Restorative Justice (Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 576); the 2003 Resolution Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Prisons (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 439); the action of the 218th General Assembly (2008) calling for withdrawing military support to the government of Colombia (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1180); the Resolution on Gun Violence, Gospel Values: Mobilizing in Response to God’s Call of 2010 (Minutes, 2010, part I, p. 334 of the printed copy, p. 830 of the electronic copy), and the Resolution on Racism, Incarceration, and Restoration of 2012 (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 32 of the printed copy, p. 1053 of the electronic copy). Our recognition of the institutional racism in how our drug laws are written, administrated, enforced is a continuation of the need for racial reconciliation identified in the Confession of 1967.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has clearly recognized the moral mandate to reexamine our nation’s current approach to substance abuse and drug-related crime with all its consequences. However, we have not yet dealt directly with our policy of prohibition of, and criminalization for, drug use. Unexamined assumptions in drug policy and in many people’s responses to drugs, as well as the extensive institutional structures and incentives that support current drug policies, mean that efforts to modify or transform policy can be controversial and difficult. The issues are complex, and serious change pushes us into unknown territory. Therefore, we call for a broad-based, all-church study that explores what is practically possible while holding up that which still needs the light of the Gospel.

Concurrence to Item 09-05 from the Presbytery of West Virginia (with Additional Rationale).

The reasons and statistics in the overture rationale are equally, if not more, pronounced in West Virginia.

West Virginia is in the top three for per capita use of prescription painkillers and other addictive drugs. Statewide, nearly one-fourth of the newborns whose umbilical cords have been tested for the presence of un-prescribed drugs test positive for drug exposure. Some are permanently injured. Many experience difficult withdrawal symptoms. Well over 90 percent of the crimes handled in West Virginia courts have significant drug and alcohol components. The state has experienced a dramatic increase in the number of children who are victims of abuse and neglect due to substance abuse by their custodians. The majority of the school truancy and dropout cases handled by the courts have substance abuse as one of the root causes.

Research demonstrates the impact of substance abuse on public safety, personal health, and health-care costs, the spread of communicable disease, educational performance and attainment, workforce reliability and productivity, family safety, and financial stability. We are therefore called to engage in study, discussion, and action among church members and church bodies to formulate action and policy recommendations for the 222nd General Assembly (2016) and public policy makers.

The Attorney General, Eric Holder, The Guardian, August 12, 2023:

- Our system is in many ways broken.
- We cannot simply prosecute or incarcerate our way to becoming a safer nation.
Since the War on Drugs, there have been huge developments in drug courts and drug treatment but mandatory sentencing has acted against those.

In the Christian Science Monitor of September 2, 2013, Mr. Holder is quoted calling for sentencing and other reforms, particularly for those convicted of drug-related crime.

The AFL-CIO at its 2013 convention:

- “We cannot organize a society that provide shared prosperity if we don’t also end mass incarceration.”
- “[W]e support treating drug use as a public health issue and focus on treatment of users.”
- “Impoverish neighborhoods lose thousands of working-age men, families become strained, income streams are lost and families are broken up.”

Michelle Alexander, in The New Jim Crow:

- “There are more African American adults under correctional control today than were enslaved in 1850.”
- “The impact of the drug war has been astounding. In less than thirty years, the U.S. penal population exploded from around 300,000 to more than 2 million, with drug convictions accounting for the majority of the increase.”

The Harvard Magazine, 201/03, “The Prison Problem”:

- Bruce Western, faculty professor says: “A crime-control strategy of locking up more people, and keeping them locked up longer, isn’t working.” He is determined to help the American public understand how crime is shaped by poverty, addiction, and histories of family violence, in an effort to promote a more humane—and more effective—prison policy.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-05—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-05 with the following comment:

“The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the urgency and magnitude of addressing from a Christian perspective the legalization and/or decriminalization of certain drugs, the nature and spread of addiction, the need for drug law sentencing and rehabilitation reform, and the tragic legacies of past ‘drug war’ policies both within the United States and in other nations involved in the international drug trade. The impact of substance abuse upon our culture, economy, and religious life is massive. The careful and comprehensive design of this study calls for cooperation across our church, perhaps particularly in states where changes in law are reflecting and changing public attitudes and practices. Given limitations on the number of persons to be appointed, certain important areas of expertise are inevitably underrepresented among the dedicated volunteers specified for the task force (medical specialists in pain management, regulatory agency experts, and advocates for children and youth are among those not mentioned). Similarly, the length of time and range of mobilization are inevitably limited in a two-year process. Thus, if additional resources can be obtained consistent with the commitments, values, and policies of the church, the study task force and appropriate staff are authorized to explore any additional ways to address these limitations to the scope of the study and church engagement.”

The problems of the U.S. policies on illegal drugs are multiple including ineffectiveness in the control of illegal drugs and substances, institutionalized racism and injustice, militarization of law enforcement, escalation of community violence, fostering organized crime, mal-distribution of public resources, and mounting transnational tensions. The overture attempts to target all of these issues with theological and pastoral understanding and a particular concern for institutional racism and the failed attempt to control addictions and punish illegal drug use.

As encompassing as the overture is, it does not address the fact that those same ineffective policies apply collaterally to the illegal medically-related uses of drugs. The problems in the system do not reside exclusively in the justice system and the Drug Enforcement Administration. The weaknesses and failures of the Federal Drug Administration, particularly where rulings are contrary to scientific evidence, bend to the will of industry, or politics, are also at fault and work synergistically to amplify the failures of the “war on drugs.”

In addition, the overture intrinsically focuses on policies that affect adults, leaving outside its scope children and teens who use or distribute illegal drugs. Given the scope of the issue, two years is likely to be a very tight timeframe within which to complete this work. Yet, understanding the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to be recommending no increase in per capita (which would customarily include 10–12 cents for studies of matters of Christian conscience), the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy proposes the comment to explain the situation to the broader church and others whose cooperation would be sought if the study were approved.

The overture proponents are correct in the social witness policies that they cite. It may be helpful for commissioners to know also that the former Health Ministries office did produce some resources on addiction in conjunction with the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association. See Church & Society magazine issue on “Substance Abuse and the Church” (May/June 1992) [http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/acswp/order-back-issues-church-and-society/]

Clearly, much good work has been done by substance abuse counselors and others within and outside the church since that time, and other relevant work has been done on the relations between mental illness and addiction. Thus, in determining whether to support funding the proposed study, commissioners may take into account the last significant treatment of the matter by the church and how significantly such a study and report might assist the church’s outreach, ministry, adult education and public advocacy.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 09-05.

The establishment of a two-year study and dissemination of information about the impact of U.S. drug policy are important steps in exposing how society has continued to maintain a perpetual second-class citizenry among people of color, especially Blacks and Hispanics. Michelle Alexander, in her seminal book, The New Jim Crow, Mass Incarceration in the Age of Colorblindness, describes how this has happened. 1 Despite the passages of civil rights legislation, the “War on Drugs”—which was introduced under the Reagan Administration and institutionalized by legislation under the Clinton Administration—has resulted in the arrest, conviction, and incarceration of more blacks and Hispanics than in any other period of time in U.S. history. As a result, the U.S. has the highest incarceration rate in the world. According to the Sentencing Project, as of 2012, 2.2 million people are incarcerated in the U.S., a 500 percent increase over the past thirty years. 2 The second-class citizen label is no longer couched in openly racial terms, but by use of allegedly racial-neutral terms such as “convict,” “prisoner,” or “offender.” When these words, however, are used in public discourse, the media and other institutions generally show the face of a black or Hispanic person, such that the public equates criminals with persons of color. Moreover, after these persons served their prison sentences and paid their debt to society, many are prohibited from living in public housing or from obtaining honest work. Many also are barred from applying for scholarships or public benefits and very few are ever allowed to vote. With the intentional refusal to or neglect in reintegrating these persons into society, it is no surprise that many return to jail.

Establishing a study group that encompasses all of the major stakeholders—from law enforcement to the formerly incarcerated offender—will stimulate honest and transparent discussion in the church, in areas such as: (1) what each stakeholder's role has been—whether intentional or unintentional—in supporting or continuing to support institutional racism; (2) how the “War on Drugs” used and continues to use fear and race to pit Whites and Blacks/Hispanics/people of color against other blacks/Hispanics/other people of color; and, (3) developing strategies to deconstruct institutionalized behavior and policies that are the underpinnings of perpetuating the second-class citizenship of what is now called the “New Jim Crow.” The Obama Administration recently supported and/or initiated some changes such as a reduction in sentencing disparities between crack cocaine and powder cocaine, to not prosecute persons for simple possession of marijuana, and to consider parole for prisoners convicted of nonviolent drug offenses. While these actions are commendable and deserve the support of the church, they do not completely dismantle a system that has been entrenched for decades nor do they address reentry into society of our returning citizens. The church and society must do more. The ACREC advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-05.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-05.

Item 09-05 and concurrences from the Presbyteries of Cimarron, Hudson River, New York City, Sacramento, Santa Fe, and West Virginia ask for a two-year study with the goal of developing action and policy recommendations for the 222nd General Assembly (2016) regarding a drug policy for the denomination.

The ACWC recognizes the effects on racial ethnic women and their families since the forty-year “war on drugs” has resulted in a disproportionate incarceration of African American males. The result of the incarceration, women who then become single parents, suffer significant financial and care burdens. The costs to society are both financial and social.

As the overture points out, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has addressed related concerns in various statements, but has no comprehensive policy to provide resources for study and advocacy for Presbyterians in congregations. Both policy and resources are needed to assist Presbyterians in efforts to reform unjust and socially costly laws and procedures currently designed to deal with the drugs.

Concurrences from the presbyteries make it clear there is agreement among legal and labor organizations and communities that the present system needs revision and seek guidance from the church to make this a reality.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-05

Comment on Item 09-05—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly requests that commissioners and advisory delegates carefully consider any items of business that would raise the per capita rate. The COGA made a commitment to bring no increase to the per capita rate to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by making significant reductions in the per capita budgets, which included reductions in staff. We would ask that other means be found within existing committee structures to accomplish the same task.

On Advocating for Financial and Political Reform — From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

[The Presbytery of Santa Fe overtures][t][T]he 221st General Assembly (2014) [to] direct[s] the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate for [the following:]

1. [f][F]inancial and political reform[s][,] [a] aimed at eliminating and/or regulating closely the practices of the financial sector, which caused the Great Recession; such as support for the full implementation of Dodd-Frank financial reform, the implementation of the Volcker Rule, and the restoration of Glass-Steagall (aimed at separating commercial banks from securities firms); and [b] affirmative efforts by the Department of Treasury, Securities and Exchange Commission, and other regulatory bodies to protect ordinary citizens, particularly consumers, borrowers, and investors of modest means, to revise bankruptcy laws to protect borrowers and those holding “underwater” mortgages, and to enable national, state, and local efforts to provide refinancing through repurchasing and restructuring mortgages and public capital projects.

2. Appropriate investigations and prosecutions of individuals, companies, and industries engaged in fraudulent behaviors, regardless of position or size, that justice may be applied equally to all.] This will include advocating for strategies that address the lack of prosecution of the individuals and financial institutions responsible for the 2008 meltdown of the U.S. economy.

3. Campaign finance reform and other efforts to reduce the influence of special interest money in politics (including that of the financial sector, the gun lobby, the oil industry, etc.).]

Rationale

One of the main tenets of our faith is to do justice. “Transform the structures of society that exploit the poor and trample on human need” (Stephen W. Plunkett, This We Believe: Eight Truths That Presbyterians Affirm, 144).
The present day collusion of the regulators, the legislatures, and the financial industry permits the lack of prosecution of individuals responsible for the financial crisis of 2008. The church community needs to advocate on behalf of the poor for accountability from civil servants and elected officials. Such accountability would protect the economic interests of all citizens. We need a system that holds responsible the legislators, public servants, and other individuals who reneged on their oath of office through such irresponsible actions.

As concerned taxpayers, we take note of reports about the massive and growing federal debt. If the millions of dollars amassed by the individuals and companies involved in the 2008 financial crisis could be recouped, these dollars could be a start toward repaying the national debt.

There are published investigative reports and documentation that identify by name the responsible individuals and institutions, but the lack of prosecution allows them to continue holding high, powerful offices and receiving financial gain. The voices of those demonstrating for the need for reform are being ridiculed, ignored, and demeaned.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

In concurrence with the intent of the overture, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 09-06 be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Santa Fe overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the [Presbyterian Mission Agency] [Office of Public Witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)] to advocate for [the following:]

‘[1.] [F]inancial and political reform[s (a) aimed at eliminating and/or regulating closely the practices of the financial sector, which caused the Great Recession; such as support for the full implementation of Dodd-Frank financial reform, the implementation of the Volcker Rule, and the restoration of Glass-Steagall (aimed at separating commercial banks from securities firms), and (b) affirmative efforts by the Department of Treasury, Securities and Exchange Commission, and other regulatory bodies to protect ordinary citizens, particularly consumers, borrowers, and investors of modest means, to revise bankruptcy laws to protect borrowers and those holding ‘underwater’ mortgages, and to enable national, state, and local efforts to provide refinancing through repurchasing and restructuring mortgages and public capital projects.]

‘[2. Appropriate investigations and prosecutions of individuals, companies, and industries engaged in fraudulent behaviors, regardless of position or size, that justice may be applied equally to all.] This will include advocating for strategies that address the lack of prosecution of the individuals and financial institutions responsible for the 2008 meltdown of the U.S. economy.

‘[3. Campaign finance reform and other efforts to reduce the influence of special interest money in politics (including that of the financial sector, the gun lobby, the oil industry, etc.)]

The pain caused by the collapse of the financial markets, commonly referred to as “The Great Recession,” is difficult to over-estimate. Foreclosures (one house every 1.7 seconds during these years) and underwater mortgages led to loss of consumer power that led to job loss across the economy as families reduced their purchasing. According to the Federal Reserve, the median net worth of American families fell 38.8 percent between 2007 and 2010, from $126,400 to $77,300—driven primarily by the collapse in housing prices. The median net worth for the poorest 20 percent of Americans fell to zero. Jobs have simply disappeared, creating what the Brookings Institute calls “six million missing workers.” What caused all this was what the Financial Crisis Inquiry Commission called a “systemic breakdown in accountability and ethics.”

From the speculators who flipped houses to the mortgage brokers who scouted the loans, to the lenders who issued the mortgages, to the financial firms that created the mortgage-backed securities, collateralized debt obligations (CDOs), CDOs squared, and synthetic CDOs: no one in this pipeline of toxic mortgages had enough skin in the game. When borrowers stopped making mortgage payments, the losses—amplified by derivatives—rushed through the pipeline. As it turned out, these losses were concentrated in a set of systemically important financial institutions.

The commission concluded that the recession was avoidable. But decades of deregulation “stripped away key safe guards” and “opened up gaps in oversight” as major financial institutions took on too much risk, too much debt, with too little capital. Its final report uses variations of the word “fraud” 157 times. Yet, prosecutions have been few and limited to mortgage brokers on the fringes who were complicit in writing “liars” mortgages and predatory subprime loans. As of this writing, a report by the inspector general of the Justice Department has charged that the F.B.I. has made the pursuit of mortgage fraud cases a low priority, resulting in charges against only 107 people in 2012.
Some argue that the lack of prosecution of high-level management officials of big banks is due to the long and expensive process this would require for gathering evidence of intentional misconduct and fraud. Some regulators argue that achieving settlements with companies, such as the $13 billion settlement with JPMorgan for overstating the value of its mortgage-backed securities, is preferable to pursuing individual cases of fraud. However, examples of successful prosecutions in the past include the 1970s junk bonds fraud (Michael Milkin), the 1980s savings and loan crisis (Charles Keating), and the 1990s accounting frauds (Enron). Moreover, the doctrine of willful blindness is well-established in criminal law. Since many criminal statutes require proof that a defendant acted knowingly or willfully, courts can apply the doctrine of willful blindness holding that defendants cannot escape prosecution by deliberately shielding themselves from clear evidence of critical facts that are strongly suggested by the circumstances.

Currently a number of members of Congress, particularly Senator Elizabeth Warren, have called for prosecutorial action, questioning what appears to be a “too big to jail” approach and advocating that equal justice, as well as future deterrence, requires such prosecution. The amendments suggested focus particularly on measures to improve home mortgage and personal bankruptcy practices that continue to penalize citizens and depress markets in many areas. The goal here is to encourage not only accountability for “moral hazard” for all economic actors, but positive action by public institutions that have focused more on rescuing banks than on rescuing families and communities which are still in need.

Recent policy bases for such actions can be found in “World of Hurt, Word of Life,” a report approved by the 220th General Assembly (2012) that carries the subtitle: “Renewing God’s Communion in the Work of Economic Reconstruction” (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/world-hurt-word-life/). Among the principles approved in that report: “We affirm that all citizens have the right to basic economic goods and to meaningful work, and that government, representing the whole community, is ultimately responsible for seeing to the provision and protection of these rights from unjust concentrations of market or political power.” One application of the set of principles was: “Financial sector reconstruction, through such measures as ... public banks and endowment funds for infrastructure development, local business development, and community wealth building; restoring regulatory firewalls between investment and retail banking to minimize public risk. ...” This resolution would address elements of economic reform not specified by but in keeping with that report of the last assembly.

In the area of campaign finance reform, this was given prepared attention by the General Assembly in 2008 in the resolution, “Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights, and Electoral Reform” (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/lift-every-voice-democracy-voting-rights-and-elect/). That resolution favors “legislation and appropriate support for judicial cases that distinguish between campaign contributions and ‘free speech,’ allowing meaningful regulation of special interest groups and individuals who are currently expected to spend approximately $400 million of the $1.5 billion 2008 election cycle.” Clearly the problem has gotten worse in the six years since. If commissioners wished, they might consider affirming a statement from the Office of Public Witness as an updating of concerns for the integrity of U.S. political life:

“The need for campaign finance reform and other efforts to reduce the influence of money in politics has intensified due to the recent shifts in electoral politics that have produced vastly increased levels of campaign spending, secrecy in political giving, extending the rights of individuals to corporations, and the demise of giving caps that were intended to place a control on the amount of influence a single person may have in a given election cycle. These shifts largely reflect Circuit and Supreme Court decisions that have weakened the regulation of political money, including Citizens United v. FEC and McCutcheon v. FEC. Indeed, this undue influence, which represents values contrary to those of Presbyterian social witness policy, has contributed to a marked decrease in the level of business carried out by the U.S. Congress and an unprecedented increase in gridlock. In order to achieve any policy ends, whether they be financial reform, tax reform, climate legislation, or gun violence reduction, among others, the undue and undemocratic influence of special interest money must be significantly reduced if not removed from the political process.”

09 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL JUSTICE ISSUES

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

While the financial recession of 2008 had a negative impact on Americans of all races, the recession had a much greater impact on racial ethnic Americans than it had on White Americans. In the years just prior to the recession, the wealth gap between White and Black Americans was approximately 10 to 1. By the midst of the recession (2009), the wealth gap had doubled, as documented in the aptly titled report of the Pew Research Center: “Twenty-to-One: Wealth Gaps Rise to Record Highs Between Whites, Blacks, and Hispanics.” The median net worth of White households fell 16 percent between 2005 and 2009, while the net worth of Hispanic households fell 66 percent, and that of Black households fell 53 percent over the same years. The great disparity of the negative impact of the recession is reflected in these numbers: the median net worth of White households fell from $134,992 in 2005 to $113,149 in 2009, while the median net worth of Black households fell from $12,124 to a mere $5,677 in 2009 (Rakesh Kochar, Richard Fry, Paul Taylor, “Twenty to One: Wealth Gaps Rise to Record Highs Between Whites, Black and Hispanics,” Pew Research Center, Social & Demographic Trends, 2011 http://www.pewsocialtrends.org/files/2011/07/SDT-Wealth-Report_7-26-11_FINAL.pdf). The recession made the existing profound inequality in our country significantly worse.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) voted overwhelmingly in favor of “On Economic Justice in These Troubled Times”—which called for condemnation of corporate as well as personal greed and support for policies that meet the needs of everyone rather than benefiting only the most powerful. The present overture is offered in the same spirit, urging continued advocacy and the additional specific strategy of addressing the prosecution of those responsible for the 2008 financial recession.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-06.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the Presbytery of Santa Fe on Item 09-06, “On Advocating for Financial and Political Reform.” We believe we are called as a church to stand up and advocate for all who have been marginalized and oppressed by the greed-centered and corrupt political, corporate, and economic structures and systems. The PC(USA) Washington Office of Public Witness would be a good place to begin in this advocacy effort.

We also note as ACWC that many times women have been more heavily affected in these systems of oppression and injustice. We fully support this overture and are particularly concerned with how the corrupt systems and structures that created the economic recession have affected the lives of women.

[Comment: Process Rationale—This text is an integration of Item 09-01 from the Presbytery of National Capital, and Item 09-21 (commissioners’ resolution) into Item 09-07.]

On Gun Violence Prevention—From the Presbytery of Hudson River

In response to Gun Violence, Gospel Values: Mobilizing in Response to God’s Call, which calls us to “encourage the church at every level—from individual member to congregation, presbytery, synod, and national church—to become informed and active in preventing gun violence” and urges that “the church take responsibility to build public awareness of gun violence and the epidemic of preventable gun-related deaths” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 830ff, electronic version), the Presbytery of Hudson River, Synod of the Northeast, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to do the following:

1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to
   a. provide models for congregational and local ecumenical forums to explore the dynamics of gun violence in their areas, and to select appropriate initiatives for witness and action in their communities, and
   b. assist in the formation of support, healing, and advocacy groups for those who have experienced gun violence in their families.

2. Encourage synods, presbyteries, and seminaries to develop educational programs that include a. the theological and pastoral care issues raised by murder, suicide, domestic violence, and wounding by gun violence,

b. a means of public acknowledgement of grief and repentance in worship and in communal events, and

c. links between those who have suffered from gun violence and existing support, healing, and advocacy groups.

3. Command Presbyterian Mission Agency for the development and dissemination of the film Trigger: The Ripple Effects of Gun Violence, and the inclusion of mass shootings among the disasters addressed by PDA disaster response teams; and encourage the continuation of these important efforts.

4. Direct the [Presbyterian Mission Agency to urge state and local Presbyterian leaders] [PC(USA) and its constituent parts to recommit itself to work with federal, state, and local legislators] to:

a. oppose legislation that exempts gun manufacturers and marketers from legal liability and/or financial accountability for the medical and security costs of predictable gun misuse and availability to criminals, the unstable, and the self-destructive;

b. support the disclosure of funds spent by gun manufacturers on lobbying, campaign contributions, and other legislative strategies that serve to undermine the protection of U.S. citizens from the highest rates of gun violence in the world;

c. oppose “stand your ground” and other legislation that may entitle gun owners to shoot before taking alternative measures (such as relying on law enforcement and/or other de-escalation techniques) in perceived defense of persons or property; [and]

d. oppose legislation designed to permit and encourage the carrying of weapons in all areas of life, including houses of worship, noting that those in possession of guns are four times more likely to experience gun violence[.][;]

e. support legislation to require licensing, registration, and waiting periods to allow comprehensive background checks, and cooling-off periods;

f. support legislation to close the ‘gun show loophole’ by requiring background checks for all gun buyers;

g. support legislation to ban semiautomatic assault weapons, armor piercing handgun ammunition, and .50 caliber sniper rifles;

h. support legislation to advocate for new technologies to aid law-enforcement agencies to trace crime guns and promote public safety;

i. support legislation to raise the age for handgun ownership to the age of twenty-one;

j. following the recommendation of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, support laws to ‘require judges and law enforcement to remove guns from situations of domestic violence, as well as from people whose adjudicated mental illness, drug use, or previous criminal record suggests the possibility of violence,’ and to increase police training in nonviolent proactive intervention;

k. advocate that federal and state governments enact legislation to regulate ammunition, guided by Gun Violence Gospel Values, as approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010);

l. Support the development, promotion, and use of ‘smart gun’ and ‘smart ammunition’ technologies that will help to prevent unintended and accidental shootings and aid law enforcement in reducing gun violence.

5. Consistent with Gun Violence, Gospel Values: Mobilizing in Response to God’s Call, Recommendation 9 (page 2; see also Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 831, electronic version), which reads “we recommend that churches and other entities prominently display signs that prohibit carrying guns onto their property,” we strongly encourage

a. the session of each PC(USA) congregation to declare their particular premises and gatherings to be gun-free zones by voting to adopt the following (or similar) policy and recording it in their minutes: “Individuals (other than active law-enforcement officers) are prohibited from carrying guns onto this property,” and to publicize this policy by prominently displaying appropriate signage, such as one of the samples attached (Appendix A, ovt038-appA&B.pdf), which can be downloaded from a website such as the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, Presbyterian Peace Fellowship, etc.;

b. all PC(USA) entities that own property (including but not limited to the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), synods, presbyteries, camps and conference centers, educational institutions, etc.) to declare their particular premises and gatherings to be gun-free zones by adopting the following or a similar policy as indicated by official vote and recorded in the minutes: “Individuals (other than active law-enforcement officers) are prohibited from carrying guns onto this property,” and to publicize this policy by prominently displaying appropriate signage, such as one of the samples attached (Appendix A, ovt038-appA&B.pdf), which can be downloaded from a website such as Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, Presbyterian Peace Fellowship, etc.;

c. individual Presbyterians to bear witness to the gospel value of peacemaking and to build safer and more secure communities by advocating for similar gun-free zone policies in their workplaces, schools, neighborhood businesses, and gathering places. Free downloadable signage for general use (see attached, Appendix B, ovt038-appA&B.pdf) is available at www.gunfreespaces.org.

Rationale

This rationale reaffirms the two basic arguments for church involvement in the matter of gun violence: the scale of this ongoing tragedy and the biblical and theological bases for engagement by Presbyterians.

The Scale of the Ongoing Tragedy

The scale of gun violence in the United States includes, annually, the deaths of at least 3,000 children (often underreported) and 25,000 adults (with suicides underreported), with more than 100,000 wounded, often seriously. Beyond the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s booklet, Gun Violence; Gospel Values, extensive data and detailed policy considerations can be found in the recent book, Reducing Gun Violence in America.

Biblical Basis

Christian opposition to gun violence begins with Jesus’ teaching and example: that we should love our neighbors, love our enemies; that all who take the sword will perish by the sword; that peacemakers are blessed and will be called children of God. These (and other) statements are echoed in the New Testament letters: that our bodies are temples of the Holy Spirit; that we should be holy in all our conduct; that we should love righteousness and hate wickedness; and leave vengeance to the Lord. Further, the prophetic tradition identifies the need for broader social change: that we should turn our swords (guns) into plowshares and our spears (rocket launchers) into pruning hooks and learn war no more. Overall, through the Spirit, we hear the blood of those senselessly slain crying out from the ground for us to act and not be weary.

The first letter of John challenges us not to love in word or speech but in deed and in truth. We must struggle with how to implement the vision, a challenge that was taken up by John Calvin as well. At the very core of his theology was an understanding that the intentions of God should be implemented on earth.

Theological Basis

The theological position that guns are idols in our society is put forward most directly by former PC(USA) missionary, Jim Atwood, a hunter and gun owner himself, in America and Its Guns: A Theological Expose. Atwood and others seek to explain why it has been so difficult to pass responsible legislation, despite public opinion polls showing large majorities in favor. This theological explanation does not claim that all gun owners are idolatrous, but that economic and ideological (and politically polarized) explanations are not enough, and that gun violence must be put under the sovereignty of the Lord of life. It is not necessary, of course, to subscribe to any particular theological account to seek to reduce gun violence in the U.S. and in the world.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been concerned about the frightening gun violence phenomenon, and has consistently spoken out about it for three decades, as have our sisters and brothers in virtually every other faith tradition. This overture expands upon the existing policy of the General Assembly by providing specific ways for individuals and congregations to have a voice and take action in confronting the gun violence crisis. As stated in the last paragraph of Gun Violence, Gospel Values, “The Call to Action” (pp 19–20; see also Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 842, electronic version),

God has provided us with the elements to be agents of change in the world. The change needs to be comprehensive: we need to address the idolatry of guns, the violence that permeates our culture, our obsessions with personal rights over public responsibility, the practices of widespread and indiscriminate sale of military style weapons, as well as the legislation necessary to regulate the accessibility and sale of military weapons disguised as “sporting guns.” We must keep our “eyes on the prize,” of preventing gun violence and the unnecessary deaths and injuries that result. Enough blood has been spilled. We affirm that through good organizational effort, animated by the passion for justice that comes to the people of God through the Holy Spirit, gun violence can be dramatically reduced.

So far, our denomination’s efforts to affect change have been largely focused outside the church walls on advocacy efforts toward gun-shop owners and legislative change. Sadly, in 2013, we have seen how unwilling our legislators are to carry out the will of the American public regarding background checks and other laws that would restrict the ownership of assault weapons and ammunition. We believe that we need to provide a stronger witness in the world by living out our commitment to nonviolence within our buildings and equipping our members with resources to effect change in their local communities.
Recent expanded provisions in concealed carry laws in many states now allow guns to be carried into places never before considered appropriate, including into houses of worship. It is important that our churches, at the grassroots level, stand firm against the deception that more guns in more places makes us somehow safer and more secure. Gun manufacturers and guns rights advocates routinely claim that more guns in the hands of “good guys” will make the world safer. However, statistics actually show that where there are more guns, there is more violence. It is time for the faith community to have its say.

Gun violence can be a difficult subject to talk about in any context, but it finds particular resistance within the walls of the church, where many people believe “political” issues should not be discussed. (Jim Atwood’s America and Its Guns: A Theological Expose, Chapter 2, “Closing the Door on Discussion,” discusses the particular difficulty of talking about gun violence as a spiritual rather than political issue.) As a result, very little meaningful discussion is happening in the church or elsewhere. We are hopeful that this overture will boldly stimulate healthy and helpful conversation, as well as create “constructive, nonviolent tension” as encouraged by the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., in his Letter from a Birmingham Jail:

You may well ask: “Why direct action?... Isn’t negotiation a better path?” You are quite right in calling for negotiation. Indeed, this is the very purpose of direct action. Nonviolent direct action seeks to create such a crisis and foster such a tension that a community which has constantly refused to negotiate is forced to confront the issue. It seeks so to dramatize the issue that it can no longer be ignored. My citing the creation of tension as part of the work of the nonviolent resister may sound rather shocking. But I must confess that I am not afraid of the word “tension.” I have earnestly opposed violent tension, but there is a type of constructive, nonviolent tension which is necessary for growth. (http://www.africa.upenn.edu/Articles_Gen/Letter_Birmingham.html)

In recent months an advocacy group called “Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense in America” started an on-line campaign asking Starbucks to prohibit guns in their stores. It only took a short time for the company to change its policy. This demonstrates the power of average citizens to claim their right to “life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.” Encouraging individual Presbyterians to build safer and more secure communities by advocating for similar gun-free zone policies in their workplaces, schools, neighborhood businesses, and gathering places, allows them to bear witness to the gospel value of peacemaking with concrete action.

Similarly, in A Social Creed for the 21st Century, the 218th General Assembly (2008) approved the following, which also shows a strong commitment to working together for peace in our country:

We—individual Christians and churches—commit ourselves to a culture of peace and freedom that embraces non-violence, nurtures character, treasures the environment, and builds community, rooted in a spirituality of inner growth with outward action. We make this commitment together—as members of Christ’s body, led by the one Spirit — trusting in the God who makes all things new. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 925)

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this overture be approved with amendment as shown below:

1. Amend Recommendation 4 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

   “4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency [to urge] [encourage] state and local Presbyterian leaders to [urge elected officials to]”

2. Add a new section “e.” to Recommendation 4 to read as follows:

   “[e. support Friend of Court briefs and public interest litigation to expand public protections against gun violence permitted under the District of Columbia v. Heller and McDonald v. Chicago, and to support measures such as retired Justice John P. Stevens’ proposed addition to the 2nd Amendment that would restore and clarify its meaning in line with traditional interpretation that understands gun ownership to have been authorized to help maintain state militias, reflecting the original Bill of Rights debate.]”
The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy salutes the creative thinking involved particularly in Recommendation 5, and affirms that the positions of previous General Assemblies are accurately rendered and built upon. While also affirming the good work and clear invocation of previous gun violence policy in Item 09-01 initiated by National Capitol Presbytery (which quotes recommendations 11 and 12 from the 2010 policy, “Gun Violence, Gospel Values”), this overture addresses the spiritual life and peacemaking ethos of the church as a Christian community.

The concept of gun-free zones seems intuitively obvious for some, both for safety and for the practice of calm presence in worship. This is to recognize that those who carry sometimes-loaded weapons may experience a heightened alertness to potential threat or an enhanced sense of power, both of which may weaken a prayerful awareness. Leaders within the Heeding God’s Call movement, while strongly supporting the overture’s intent, wondered if there might be another phrase than “gun-free,” but proposed no specific alternate wording. It should be understood by every commissioner that attitudes toward guns vary considerably by region and that the measures recommended may take far more courage in some jurisdictions.

The new suggested provision reaffirms earlier Second Amendment jurisprudence that the church had long supported. While progress at reducing gun violence may be blocked at the national level by legislative gridlock and judicial innovation at this time, the Office of Public Witness would be asked to monitor developments and, if appropriate, recommend that the Advisory Committee on Litigation consider amicus curiae (friend of court) briefs dealing with Second Amendment interpretation.

The language suggested by former Supreme Court Justice John P. Stevens is noted below: “A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms when serving in the Militia shall not be infringed” [http://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/the-five-extra-words-that-can-fix-the-second-amendment/2014/04/11/f8a19578-b8fa-11e3-96ae-f2c36d2b1245_story.html].

For more than 200 years following the adoption of that amendment, federal judges uniformly understood that the right protected by that text was limited in two ways: first, it applied only to keeping and bearing arms for military purposes, and second, while it limited the power of the federal government, it did not impose any limit whatsoever on the power of states or local governments to regulate the ownership or use of firearms. Thus, in United States v. Miller, decided in 1939, the court unanimously held that Congress could prohibit the possession of a sawed-off shotgun because that sort of weapon had no reasonable relation to the preservation or efficiency of a “well regulated Militia.”

In 2008, by a vote of 5 to 4, the Supreme Court decided in District of Columbia v. Heller that the Second Amendment protects a civilian’s right to keep a handgun in his or her home for purposes of self-defense. And in 2010, by another vote of 5 to 4, the court decided in McDonald v. Chicago that the due process clause of the 14th Amendment limits the power of the city of Chicago to outlaw the possession of handguns by private citizens. For the Supreme Court to adopt these positions arguably canonizes a later individualism in interpretation and, in the face of a constant drumbeat of gun-related death, disregards the overall Constitutional goals of preserving the common defense and common welfare.

In considering these matters, commissioners may wish to consider how significant the matter of gun violence in our society to be and what measures, from the most local to the most national, may best represent a consistent moral stand by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-07

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 09-07.

It is an irrefutable fact that gun violence of all kinds occurs more frequently, and has an unbridled and devastating impact on racial ethnic families and communities than any others—particularly the African American and Hispanic communities in our country. For the PC(USA) not to overwhelmingly approve and support this overture would reflect a dispassionate and perceptibly aggressively insensitive attitude toward “the least of these ...” constitute a default on our obligation to our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ and the Gospel mandate. If the PC(USA), one of the “White Mainline Denominations,” remains, perceptibly, and by people of color, conspicuously silent on an issue that screams out in racial overtones, that silence would represent a totally illogical and deceptive position coming for a church that imposed a decade-long mandate (2000–2010) to increase racial ethnic membership by 20 percent while simultaneously shifting its focus from a mono-cultural to an arguably ambiguous “multicultural” emphasis.

On Food Sovereignty for All—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to call on individuals, congregations, mid councils, and ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly to do the following:

1. Pray for people within the food system in the U.S. and overseas, from producers devoting their lives to feeding people but who are often undercompensated and lacking respect, to workers throughout the food chain, and to consumers lacking access to affordable fresh, healthy food.

2. Study food sovereignty, food justice, and other applications of biblical and Christian values to fairness and sustainability throughout the food system, using educational materials compiled on a single PC(USA) web page.

3. Support and participate in community conversations, forums, and assemblies where people directly affected by the lack of affordable and healthy food provide significant input and leadership about defining community needs and solutions.

4. Support and develop faith-based and other food sovereignty initiatives overseas and in our communities, with special emphasis on impoverished areas, always in concert with those directly affected. Faith-based initiatives in the U.S. may include sponsoring community gardens; hosting farmers markets, community kitchens, market gardens, food microenterprise development and cooperative buying clubs; and promoting purchase of locally and sustainably grown food.

5. Work with Presbyterians, PC(USA) partners, as well as interfaith and secular groups and coalitions on initiatives and campaigns whose purpose is to achieve food sovereignty. This may include efforts to reduce negative influences of large, multinational corporations on food and farm system practices and on policies that may be detrimental to producers, workers, and consumers.

6. Join with Presbyterians, PC(USA) partners, and interfaith and secular groups and coalitions working to end large-scale land grabs [and return unfairly obtained land to communities] and to implement genuine agrarian and aquatic reform programs and base national and international governance structures on the ‘Voluntary Guidelines for Land and Natural Resources Tenure’ from the Committee on World Food Security in order to provide secure access to land, forestry, and fisheries for communities.

7. Advocate for food, farm, and trade policies at all levels that protect family farmers and God’s creation, and support the building of just and sustainable local food economies.

Rationale

Humanity is confronted with the tragedy of hunger in a world that produces enough food for all to eat. The PC(USA) church partners and fraternal organizations around the world are calling for food sovereignty as a way of building prosperous, healthy, equitable, and sustainable food and farm economies everywhere. This includes supporting fair trade; the right to food and water, access to land; ecological agriculture and health-giving food; more localized decision-making; and equity for everyone throughout the food system.

The PC(USA) recognition of hunger as a problem of inequitable distribution of the abundance of food has been on the forefront of ministry and mission. Working together towards food sovereignty is vital in the face of widespread injustice, including hunger in the United States and in many other countries. The work of the PC(USA) historically and currently has been one of working toward the fulfillment of the concept of food sovereignty for all. The lack of political will, and systems designed to maximize profit rather than ensure the right of food to all has caused a disparity that this denomination has steadfastly addressed. Adopting the concept of food sovereignty for all is critical in furthering and fulfilling the Word of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Hear it in his word as well as in the words of the Old Testament prophets and poets, indeed those that follow:

The Word of the Lord: “Happy are those whose help is the God of Jacob, whose hope is in the Lord their God, who made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that is in them, who keeps faith for ever; who executes justice for the oppressed; who gives food to the hungry” (Ps. 146: 5–7). Blessed be the word of the Lord.

“… Lord, when was it that we saw you hungry and gave you food, or thirsty and gave you something to drink? And when was it that we saw you a stranger and welcomed you, or naked and gave you clothing? And when was it that we saw you sick or in prison and visited you?’ And the king will answer them, ‘Truly I tell you, just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me’” (Mt. 25: 37–40).
Food Sovereignty is a set of principles, policies, and practices that reflect the “right of all people, communities, and countries to define agricultural, food, and land policies that are ecologically, socially, economically, and culturally relevant. Food sovereignty holds that all people have the right to safe, nutritious and culturally appropriate food and food-producing resources. This framework calls for actions and strategies on local and global levels to address the root causes of hunger” (http://www.emoregon.org/pdfs/IFFP/Food_Sovereignty_for_All_handbook.pdf, Interfaith Food and Farms Partnership, “Food Sovereignty for All: Overhauling the Food System with Faith-Based Initiatives”).

Groups such as La Via Campesina, an international movement, is one of the many organizations that addresses the root cause of hunger. It consists of millions of peasants, small- and medium-scale farmers, women landowners, and indigenous persons who are addressing the current food, poverty, and climate crisis.

In 2007, a declaration on food sovereignty from the Forum for Food Sovereignty held in Mali, set forth six attributes of the concept. Excerpts follow:

1. Focuses on Food for People: Food sovereignty stresses the right to sufficient, healthy and culturally appropriate food for all individuals, peoples, and communities. … . It rejects the proposition that food is just another commodity for international agribusiness.

2. Values Food Providers: Food sovereignty values and supports the contributions, and respects the rights, of women and men, peasants and small scale family farmers, pastoralists, artisanal fishers, forest dwellers, indigenous peoples and agricultural and fisheries workers, including migrant who cultivate, grow and harvest, and process food …

3. Localizes Food Systems… as it puts providers and consumers at the center of decision-making on food issues; protects food providers from the dumping of food and food aid in local markets, … and resists [government] structures, agreements, and practices that … promote … inequitable international trade and give power to remote and unaccountable corporations.

4. Makes Decisions Locally: Food Sovereignty seeks control over and access to territory, land, grazing, water, seeds, livestock and fish populations for local food providers. These resources ought to be used and shared in socially and environmentally sustainable ways which conserve diversity. …

5. Builds Knowledge and Skills: [It] builds on the skills and local knowledge of food providers and their local organizations that conserve, develop and manage localized food production and harvesting systems, [and that pass] on this wisdom to future generations. Food Sovereignty rejects technologies that undermine, threaten or contaminate these, e.g., genetic engineering.

6. Works with Nature: [It] seeks to heal the planet so that the planet may heal us; and rejects the methods that harm beneficial ecosystem functions, that depend on energy intensive monocultures and livestock factories, destructive fishing practices and other industrialized production methods. … (http://www.grassrootsonline.org/sites/default/files/The-6-Food-Sovereignty-Principles.pdf)

Principles of Food Sovereignty challenge the current model that favors trade of large amounts of food going over borders. The principles also challenge the idea that richer countries and financial organizations should favor themselves over less wealthy countries. The rationale is that if wealthy countries can grow massive amounts of a food, then it should grow it for the world. Meanwhile, low- and middle-income nations may export food (cash crops) to richer nations, leaving them little opportunity to raise their own nutritious food, as cash crops strip their land and may leave less time and money for self-care. “This logic favors a food industry reliant on industrial-scale farming, monocropping, and massive inputs of fuel, fertilizers, and pesticides. The beneficiaries are the corporate middlepeople who consolidate, arrange, package and ship the food around the world … and profound hidden costs are enacted on our planet as a whole: polluted water, air, and soil, deforestation; acid rain; species extinction; and climate change. The corporate food system wreaks countless ecological harms” (http://www.otherworldsarepossible.org/sites/default/files/documents/Harvesting%20Justice-Transforming%20Food%20Land%20Ag_0.pdf, pp. 8, 27).

There is a relationship with much of the corporate world and inequity in the social structure. Whereas there are certainly corporations which work to help uphold just practices, there are many which continue to be headed in the opposite direction. Some estimates suggest that half of the world’s largest economies are multinational corporations. A key difference between organizations is whether they are essentially profit-making or whether they work to provide a service while remaining economically viable (Wilkinson, Pickett. The Spirit Level, pp. 246–7). These authors provide research that suggests that further improvements in the quality of life no longer depend on further economic growth; it depends on “community and how we relate to each other” (Ibid., p. 247).

In the RELUFA Cameroon Food Sovereignty program, vulnerable communities in the semi-Saharan Far North Province are thriving through their participation in the RELUFA network’s Food Sovereignty program. Having been organized to run their own communal grain banks, farmers in thirty-four villages now ward off speculators at harvest time. Instead of selling their yields to merchants who hoard the produce to maximize profits later in the year, the crops are stored in the village granary. When families run out of their own reserves, they can take grains on in-kind credit and pay back this loan from the next sorghum harvest later in the year [Food Sovereignty video].
Meanwhile, in the United States, many farmworkers are still not afforded adequate rights. Organizations such as the United Farm Workers and the Coalition of Immokalee Workers have made great strides in improving labor conditions. Yet, still often workers “perform strenuous physical labor without the protections of sick leave, overtime pay, or health insurance. They are exempt from the National Labor Relations Act that protects workers’ rights to form unions and bargain collectively...” Farmworkers are twice as likely to live below the poverty line, and most earn an average of $10,000 to $12,000 per year” (Ibid, p. 75).

The concept of ‘land grabs’ is of grave concern. “The purchase and lease of vast tracts of land from poor, developing countries by wealthier nations and international private investors has led to debate about whether land investment is a tool for development or force of displacement”, reports the Oakland Institute, an independent policy organization working on social and environmental issues such as the land grab. (See www.oaklandinstitute.org.)

“Over the last four years, there has been a significant increase in land-based investment, both in terms of the number of investment projects and the total land area allocated. Industrialized nations and private foreign investors have driven demand for arable land in developing regions, particularly in Africa, but also in South America, Central Asia, and Southeast Asia. Governments are interested in the lands for purposes of food security and biofuel production. Both governments and private investors are attracted by policy reforms that have improved the investment climate in developing countries, as well as arbitrage opportunities afforded by the extremely low cost of leasing land in these regions.

While only fractions of arable land in developing regions are being used for agriculture, demand for strategic swats next to irrigation and shipping sites is growing with greater investment. These areas and other lands are frequently in use even though occupants have no legal rights to the land or access to legal institutions. As demand for land assets increases and governments and multilateral institutions promote investment in national lands, displacement and affected livelihoods are becoming serious sources of international concern” (Oakland Institute).

Water rights are also a huge concern. Access to water and sanitation is a basic human right according to the United Nations General Assembly. Corporate Accountability International notes that human rights to water is a basic obligation of governments. Access is best afforded when the management and control of water is in the hands of the public. They note that “political interference by private water corporations threatens the ability of communities to guarantee the human right to water for all. Attempting to gain a foothold in the water market (estimated to be $400 billion-plus), global corporations use their vast resources to gain influence in international governing bodies such as the U.N. and funders like the World Bank. The water industry’s tactics include promoting policy models that grant more corporate control over water, institutionalizing corporate partnerships with policymakers, weakening regulations and investing in water rights and trading” (stopcorporateabuse.org).

Fair trade versus free trade is a part of the concept as well. A concern at this time is the Trans Pacific Partnership (TTP) free trade agreement, under negotiation among eleven countries. This agreement is largely being negotiated in secret. Many groups, including labor unions and churches, opposed this agreement. It liberalizes trade possibilities and leads to more of an unregulated market. This would allow corporations to operate with less accountability and rules.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 9-09 be approved.

The ACSWP advises that the principles of “Food Sovereignty for All” recommended to the General Assembly by the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta are consistent with the foundational positions of the PC(USA) and respond to escalating threats to food security nationally and globally. The Social Creed for the 21st Century, approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) succinctly captured the two foundational positions of the PC(USA) with regard to food insecurity. The first position is focused on the elimination of hunger wherever it occurs as a blatant attack on and disregard for the value and dignity of human life. The creed calls for “the abatement of hunger and poverty,” reflecting the long-standing affirmation of the church that “... sufficient food for physical, mental, and spiritual well-being is the right of everyone, and that economic and political activity should secure this right” (United States Food Policy Objectives and Guidelines, UPCUSA, 1976, pp. 501–506).

The second position is focused on a just and sustainable system of food production and distribution. Thus, the creed calls for “Access for all to clean air and water and healthy food, through wise care of land and technology.” This “wise care” has been spelled out in great detail in the policy, Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development (208th General Assembly [1996], PC(USA), pp. 524, 526, 534–36). In its call for supporting sustainable systems of food production and distribution.
security in the context of an environmental crisis and a growing human population, this policy affirms support for small-scale landowning farmers, restoration of land to many who have been displaced, as well as the promotion of ecologically sound farming practices. A Presbyterian discussion of these issues can be found in the April 2014 issue of Presbyterians Today.

The national and global context of food security today still calls out for the church’s response. According to the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations, about 15 percent of the populations of developing countries suffered from chronic undernourishment in 2012. The global picture is mixed with some areas seeing a decrease in hunger (Asia, for example) while other areas saw an increase (Africa). Developed regions also saw the number of hungry rise, from 13 million in 2004–2006 to 16 million in 2010–2012, reversing a steady decrease in previous years from 20 million in 1990–1992. The recession that began in 2008, for example, caused an increase in poverty in the U.S., which caused an increase in food insecurity. In 2010, 14.5 percent of U.S. households were food insecure, the highest number ever recorded in the United States.

According to the World Watch Institute, solving the problem of chronic hunger does not require producing more food. “The world can already feed 9–11 billion people with the food grown today.” It requires instead addressing the poverty of those, often enough agricultural laborers as well as urban dwellers, who cannot access food. And it requires addressing a global system that wastes enormous amounts of food that is produced too often with unsustainable farming practices that contribute to the environmental crisis. The recent report of the U.N. Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change foresees tragic effects on the world’s poor as climate change causes rising temperatures to disrupt food production and access to water, causing food prices to rise. Both grain yields in temperate zones and tropical crop yields are forecast to decline. The UN Human Development Report 2013 estimates increasing numbers of people living in extreme poverty and a significant increase in child mortality due to the effects of climate change. In the context of this growing threat to the right of all people to food, the principles of “Food Sovereignty for All” provide useful information and meaningful activities to consider for changing behaviors and doing advocacy.

Commissioners may note that the specific numbered provisions of the overture define food sovereignty in operational terms, as providing food adequacy, community empowerment, and justice for agricultural workers and small land-holders. This appears to reflect the principle that communities should define how the concept is applied, although the concept is given more definition in the rationale section. In terms of past policy, “food sovereignty” combines elements of the norms of “participation” (democratic accountability) and “sustainability,” that have been part of the social teaching of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) since the energy policy developed jointly by the PCUS and UPCUSA in 1981, The Power to Speak Truth to Power, and Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice, 1990. Commissioners may also remember the concept of “appropriate technology,” which was defined by communities’ ability to maintain and manage technologies at scale suitable to their capacities.

A recent article, “The Quinoa Quarrel: Who owns the world’s greatest superfood?,” illustrates the challenges that will remain as problems of water and climate change devastate some localities and regions. The grain in question is an extremely hardy, complete protein, native to Bolivia, a poor country understandably concerned to control the genetic integrity and revenue from a key resource. Yet the author notes the tension between the interests of Bolivia and those of the world’s poor in areas where land is becoming saltier and drier. Market distribution, genetic property rights, and relief and development organizations may all play a part in defining quinoa’s role. The overture would suggest that the democratically elected government of Bolivia would have the key role, acting in the interests first of its own rural poor.

On a Study of End-of-Life Issues—From the Synod of the Covenant.

In view of the legalization of physician-assisted suicide in five states and several nations, and increases in the technological choices facing patients and their families in end-of-life circumstances, the Synod of the Covenant respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to do the following:

1. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to convene a 7–8 person team of Presbyterian ethicists[theologians, pastors,] and physicians, including one or more drafters, to produce a pastoral and educational booklet giving guidance on”
   a. physician-assisted suicide (PAS);
   b. palliative and terminal sedation, withholding/withdrawing nutrition and hydration and other end-of-life treatments;
   c. the role of medical professionals, hospital and hospice chaplains, hospital ethics committees, and relevant medical regulation;
   d. pastoral support of dying persons and their families;
   e. special circumstances of dying children and the dying pregnant woman;
   f. special circumstances of chronically and/or severely disabled persons in end-of-life planning and care;
   g. organ donation in relation to determinations of death and methods of prolonging body functions;
   h. talking with the faithful about end-of-life planning and advance directives;
   i. appropriate governmental and institutional policy recommendations to support the faithful exercise of Christian conscience on these matters.

2. Recommend that this balanced study team meet primarily by video-phone and once in person, and that it consult with the Presbyterian Mission Agency; be guided by prior General Assembly policy; examine any comparable denominational or ecumenical resources; test the booklet with experienced pastors and chaplains, hospital and hospice physicians and nurses; and report back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

3. Recommend the booklet requested be printed for purchase and be posted on-line with updated templates of living wills, authorizations of durable powers of attorney for medical care, and references to relevant theological, ethical, and medical studies and resources for pastoral care.
4. Recommend that copies of this booklet and any related policy recommendations be sent to appropriate regulatory and certifying bodies (including those for thanatology and clinical pastoral education), and Presbyterian seminaries, colleges, and universities.

Rationale

The Brief Statement of Faith added to the Book of Confessions in 1991 echoes the Heidelberg Confession when it states, “In life and in death we belong to God” (10.1, Line 1). A Presbyterian study document with that title was produced in 1995, following guidance from prior General Assemblies policies such as The Nature and Value of Human Life (PCUS, 1981) and The Covenant of Life and the Caring Community & Covenant and Creation (UPCUSA, 1988). These documents stressed the relational, covenantal character of life before God that puts moral limits on the practice of medicine and provides a distinctive source of moral insight that conditions patient autonomy. Since these earlier reports, matters have become even more complex than they were, as scientific and technological developments have increased the capacity to prolong human life and laws have expanded the legal choices for those facing terminal illness.

In light of these new possibilities and the moral challenges they entail, Presbyterian witness to the covenantal character of human life in creation, sustenance, and redemption needs to be renewed and clarified. Presbyterian ethicists have written significant work since the 1990s, and some would be willing to contribute to a concise consensus statement for the church, identifying theological concerns and Christian values at stake. This effort, as proposed, would depend primarily on their volunteer commitment and possible funds for a writer/editor’s honorarium, a single meeting, and some printing, using existing staff for coordination. The plan for producing the report primarily in the form of a booklet is to enhance its usefulness to the church.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

As stated in the proponents’ rationale, the emergence of new possibilities and new challenges begs for up-to-date address of today’s end of life issues. General Assembly documents that offered guidance in these matters in the past are still relevant and instructive, but they did not treat some of the complexities and choices that confront patients, families, care providers, and pastoral supporters today. “An Essay on the Problems Related to the Prolongation of Life by Technological Means” (1974), “The Nature and Value of Human Life” (1981), “The Covenant of Life and the Caring Community” (1988), and “In Life and in Death We Belong to God: Euthanasia, Assisted Suicide, and End-of-Life Issues”—A Study Guide (1995) have not lost their relevance, and this overture insists that they remain relevant for the anticipated team; but they need to have their reach extended. What is more, the very contributions that these assembly-approved resources have made testify to the importance of end-of-life issues for the ongoing theological-ethical reflection and health-care practice of Christians.

What is being proposed is an affirmation rather than a repudiation of the concerns addressed by those earlier resources. It constitutes a focused continuation of the exploration facilitated by “In Life and in Death We Belong to God.” The built-in cost containment in the proposal should answer questions about affordability. We understand the ethicists and medical personnel bringing the proposal believe they share an emerging consensus on the new “aid-in-dying” laws now in operation in several states. The booklet they propose as the vehicle for assisting those facing end-of-life decisions seems eminently practical. Thus this is a resolution not a larger policy study. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy would note that if approved, the report envisioned would be presented to the General Assembly meeting in Oregon, the first state to legalize physician-assisted suicide in the United States.

Comment on Item 09-10—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly requests that commissioners and advisory delegates carefully consider any items of business that would raise the per capita rate. The COGA made a commitment to bring no increase to the per capita rate to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by making significant reductions in the per capita budgets, which included reductions in staff. We would ask that other means be found within existing committee structures to accomplish the same task.

On Affirming the Importance of Maternal and Child Nutrition Over 1,000 Days—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to:

1. Affirm the importance of maternal and child nutrition in the 1,000 days between the beginning of a woman’s pregnancy and her child’s second birthday, reaffirming “that enslaving poverty in a world of abundance is an intolerable violation of God’s good creation (Book of Confessions, Confession of 1967, 9.46).”

2. Recognize the importance of the Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women Infants and Children in the United States and the role of U.S. foreign assistance in supporting governments of developing countries in improving maternal and child nutrition.

3. Call on Presbyterians to pray for and minister to women and children in the United States and around the world who are in the 1,000-day window.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to work with Presbyterian Women in Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc., to identify resources for Presbyterians to learn more about maternal and child nutrition.

5. Call on Presbyterians to learn more about the importance of nutrition for women and children in the critical 1,000-day window and preventing children from experiencing cognitive and physical delays.

6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate for policies that promote good nutrition in the 1,000 days window.

7. Direct the Stated Clerk to write to the president of the United Nations General Assembly urging that the post-2015 development agenda include a stand-alone goal addressing hunger and under-nutrition, and that a set of nutrition targets should be included that reflect the World Health Assembly targets released in 2012, which include a goal of reducing under-nutrition which causes stunting by 40 percent by 2025.1

8. Direct the Stated Clerk to write to the U.S. Congress and to the president of the United States asking them to work together to lay the groundwork for ending hunger in the United States by 2023, ending hunger around the world in 2030, and to affirm the importance of addressing maternal and child nutrition in the critical 1,000-day window in reaching those goals.

9. Affirm the relationship between the PC(USA), the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and Bread for the World, and to endorse the Women of Faith for the 1,000 Days Movement, a campaign of Bread for the World.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has long been a leader in the anti-hunger movement and has strong policy and program support for such a movement. New research shows that by targeting efforts to end hunger by improving nutrition for women and children in the critical 1,000-day window between the beginning of a woman’s pregnancy and her child’s second birthday, these efforts can be more effective.

Reducing maternal and child malnutrition, especially in the 1,000-day window, is critical to increasing child survival, improving cognitive and physical development, strengthening the immune system to bolster resistance to disease, and breaking the cycle of poverty.

Under-nutrition is an underlying cause of nearly 45 percent of the 6.9 million deaths among children under five every year.1 Under-nutrition causes stunting, which leads to long-term poor health, impaired brain development, and decreased immunity. One in four children in the world is stunted, a number that can rise to one in three in developing countries.

Leading Nobel Laureate economists have recommended that addressing hunger and malnutrition among young children should be a top priority for policymakers. The economists identified nutrition as the smartest investment, with every $1 invested in nutrition generating as much as $138 in better health and increased productivity.

Bread for the World, a partner of the PC(USA) in working to end hunger, has affirmed a goal to end hunger in the United States by 2023 and around the world by 2030. While government action alone cannot end hunger, it is critical for the U.S. government to take a leadership role.

The PC(USA) joins denominations such as The Episcopal Church and organizations like the National Latino Evangelical Coalition to endorse the Women of Faith for the 1,000 Days Movement. Other partners include Presbyterian Women, the Women’s Missionary Society of the AME Church, the National Council of Catholic Women, and the Women of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, among others. (For a full list and more information visit www.bread.org/go/1000days.)

On Providing a Trauma Crisis Counseling Consultation to Train in Best Practices in Caring for Survivors of Homicide Victims—From the Presbytery of Nevada.

The Presbytery of Nevada overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the PC(USA) to commit the necessary financial and programmatic resources to provide for a trauma crisis counseling consultation within twelve months of the 221st General Assembly (2014). The attendees would be trained by the Presbyterian Mission Agency, mental health professionals, and community stakeholders in some of the best practices for caring for the bereaved survivors of homicide victims and traumatized community members.

Rationale

Previous General Assemblies have charged our PC(USA) ecclesiastical bodies to address this public health crisis (e.g. Gun Violence, Gospel Values: Mobilizing in Response to God’s Call, Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 830 ff.).

Clergy are seen as first responders in times of tragedy and trauma; even though, many PC(USA) clergy have yet to receive adequate training in the crisis counseling skills necessary to respond effectively after a traumatic event in their community.

Far too many of the bereaved homicide victim families in our communities do not receive adequate emotional and spiritual care. Many of these bereaved families feel like they are walking this dark valley of traumatic grief without a shepherd.

The PC(USA) Ferncliff Camp and Conference Center has been a paragon model; having hosted eleven therapeutic camps for school shooting survivors ever since the Westside School Shooting in Jonesboro, Ark. (1998).

The PC(USA) has invaluable resources that can help equip PC(USA) clergy as crisis counselors and first responders. The Presbyterian Disaster Assistance program has expertise in providing disaster assistance following traumatic events. The sharing of these vicarious lessons and best practices will enhance our PC(USA) pastoral response, when and if, yet another tragedy strikes one of our communities.

As our nation continues to reel from pervasive gun violence, and our elected officials are gridlocked in the zero sum debate about gun control, our communities still hold thousands of bereaved homicide family survivors who receive inadequate emotional and spiritual support from community stakeholders. Since the tragic Sandyhook Elementary school shooting, there have been forty-four additional school shootings. Our urban centers continue to confront the trauma of gang-related shootings and far too many of our homes have homicides related to domestic violence. One is too many.
The bereaved homicide victim family members are at a greater risk for developing PTSD and traumatic grief disorders. These mental health conditions have well-established co-morbid risks of substance abuse and suicide. The disparities in access to quality mental healthcare for racial ethnic minorities and the economically disadvantaged only compound this difficult healing journey. Many of these bereaved families do not have a congregational affiliation, and when they do, these clergy have not been fully equipped to serve as crisis counselors in this capacity. Many families face the stigma and shame of having a child who was a known gang member so they are reluctant to come forward for assistance because of the stigma. The bereaved family deserves care and support, regardless of the circumstances surrounding the homicide.

The PC(USA) PDA program, affiliated mental health professionals, and PC(USA) camp and conference are ecclesiastical partners who have critical resources that could further educate and equip our teaching elders and ruling elders to be more sensitive and responsive to the emotional and spiritual needs of crime victim families in our respective communities. No one should ever have to walk through the dark valley of traumatic grief without compassionate shepherds.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the resolution with amendment as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Nevada overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the PC(USA) to [commit the necessary financial and programmatic resources to provide for a trauma crisis counseling consultation within twelve months of the 221st General Assembly (2014). The attendees would be trained by the Presbyterian Mission Agency, mental health professionals, and community stakeholders in some of the best practices for caring for the bereaved survivors of homicide victims and traumatized community members.] [direct Presbyterian Disaster Assistance to respond to invitations from mid councils and their congregations to provide training that will prepare them to respond to possible public violence events in their communities. The training will

“[1. enhance awareness, resilience, and skills to support healing of communities;

“[2. utilize training best practices to care for bereaved individuals and traumatized communities; and

“[3. equip individuals and institutions to engage in dialogue about gun violence.]”

The resolution, “Gun Violence, Gospel Values: Mobilizing in Response to God’s Call,” approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010) recognized the need to provide care for our brothers and sisters touched by gun violence as it encouraged: “the church at every level—from individual member to congregation, presbytery, synod, and national church—to become informed and active in preventing gun violence, to provide pastoral care for victims of gun violence, and to seek a spiritual response of grief and repentance, grace and courage to resist that violence and celebrate the Lord and Giver of Life.”

Presbyterian Disaster Assistance provides this training and support in the aftermath of public violence events. This overture encourages mid councils to take advantage of the skills, connections, and expertise of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance before such events occur.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-12

Comment on Item 09-12—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency, through Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA), is already engaged in providing support to communities impacted by gun violence through its National Response Team and staff. The National Response Team and staff are skilled professionals, clergy, and clinicians with expertise in responding to and supporting churches and communities who are impacted by acts of public violence.

In addition to providing initial support immediately after an event, PDA also offers emotional and spiritual care, compassion fatigue, and resilience training for religious and community leaders that strengthens their capacity to equip the community to recover from the trauma of the violence.

PDA has also produced one full-length award-winning documentary on gun violence, Trigger, http://triggerdoc.com/, and “Tapestry,” https://vimeo.com/91726932, a shorter (twenty-eight minutes) award-winning documentary on the processes of recovery and healing in communities after public violence, viewed through the lens of PDA National Response Team members who have done such responses. Both of these documentaries also have study materials designed to equip congregations and communities to engage in dialogue about gun violence.

PDA welcomes the opportunity to enhance the resilience, skills, and awareness of its mid council partners and their congregations as the PC(USA) seeks to bring a healing presence and a prophetic word into the scourge of public violence afflicting our country. This could be accomplished as an invitational event through mid councils to Stony Point or regionally, if preferred.

A Review of Efforts Regarding Cultural Proficiency and Creating a Climate for Change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—Report to the 221st General Assembly (2014)—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

[1. Direct the Presbytery Mission Agency (PMA) to reestablish and fill the position of associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment, or an appropriate alternative.]

[2.] Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, in consultation with the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) and the other five PC(USA) agencies (Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Foundation, Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc.), to create a database comprised of businesses that qualify under the Supplier Diversity standards reviewed by GACOR, which all of the six agencies and other PC(USA) bodies (e.g., mid councils: presbyteries and synods) should use as a source for supplies and services.

[3. Direct ACREC to have discussions with legal counsel of the PC(USA), GACOR, and other relevant church entities about policy and/or strategies that address the General Assembly’s concern and directive to:]

“[a. Include persons with disabilities as part of the ‘diversity of the church’s membership’ and provide such persons with a supportive work environment.]

“[b. Collect data and monitor diversity efforts pertaining to Middle Eastern communities.]

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referrals:

Summary of Findings for 2012–2014

In response to the 2010 and 2012 recommendations:

The 219th General Assembly (2010) initiated this effort at the denominational level by directing that the Session Annual Statistical Report include data on Middle Eastern people in Item 03-21: http://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3131&promoID=110.
1. The ACREC did not do an analysis of the progress of the six agencies regarding cultural proficiency for 2010–2012, but focused primarily on assessing the drafts of the agencies’ Six-Year Cultural Proficiency Plans.

2. The cultural proficiency standard and assessment and review policy was approved at the 220th General Assembly (2012) and has since been incorporated in the General Assembly’s Agency Review Manual as Appendix C.

3. Although there were efforts by the former associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and agency representatives, the cultural proficiency assessment tool was not revised. This tool was to be utilized until the Six-Year Cultural Proficiency Plans were put in place. As the six agencies began drafting their Six-Year Cultural Proficiency Plans, which would become the means by which cultural proficiency would be evaluated, revising the previous assessment tool was no longer necessary.

4. The ACREC has been made aware that while GACOR was tasked by the 220th General Assembly (2012) with the responsibility of reviewing the affirmative action and supplier diversity benchmarks for the six agencies, GACOR has not, as of January 2014, been given the support and resources needed to carry out this task. The ACREC would urge that GACOR be given the necessary resources and that this work be carried out as soon as possible.

5. In the raw data on employment provided by the agencies ending on December 31, 2012, not all agencies provided data on employees who are disabled (based on self-identification). Nor did the data include employees who are identified as Middle Eastern. Currently, people of Middle Eastern descent, Christian or not, are greatly discriminated against in today's political climate and should be included as a part of church’s cultural proficiency and antiracism self-assessment. Collection of this data is a challenge that emphasizes the need to develop a strategy in how to capture this data and to overcome obstacles the PC(USA) diversity policy is intended to address.

6. In addition, the raw data needs to be disaggregated. Pursuant to the 218th General Assembly (2008) Women of Color Consultation Report (Item 09-13), the six agencies were directed to gather data in disaggregated form in terms of age, race, gender, and ethnicity, when providing comparative statistics. It is worth reiterating the importance of providing this information, particularly in upper management positions in each agency.

7. The agencies also provided data on supplier diversity. As of December 31, 2012, five of the six agencies attained the goal of at least 10 percent of their purchases with minority or woman-owned firms. The one agency that did not reach this goal did have 11.76 percent of its contracts (two in number) that were awarded to firms owned by women. None of the other agencies included data based upon the number of contracts. The categories during this cycle included the new categories of Middle Eastern and Persons with Disabilities. The latter category is based upon self-disclosed or self-reporting.

8. The ACREC members met with the purchasing manager of PMA to discuss available resources that might provide listings of minority and firms owned by women or diversity supplier databases. Suggested were the National Minority Supplier Development Council, Inc., and for local Kentucky resources, the Metropolitan Sewer District (Supplier Diversity Section) and the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet. These resources are being provided here as potential resources. The ACREC has no experience with these companies, and does not know if they meet the guidelines on supplier diversity.

9. In 2012 and 2013, ACREC was able to successfully participate in meetings with the review committees for the Board of Pensions and the Foundation, as these agencies began their six-year review of these agencies. Many thanks to the OGA associate for Assembly Operations for facilitating ACREC’s participation in these meetings. Two agencies, the PMA and OGA, are scheduled for their six-year review in the 2014–2015 cycle, in which ACREC also will participate, in accordance with the directive from the 219th General Assembly (2008).

10. Antiracism training and cultural proficiency training were made mandatory at the 220th General Assembly (2012) for the six agencies. The agencies have indicated that they have provided or are planning to provide these trainings to their employees. It is not known if all employees in all agencies have received this training. It is anticipated, however, that during the next review cycle, the agencies will report on their progress regarding the training.

11. In the middle of this review cycle, the associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment resigned. This Presbyterian Mission Agency staff person was assisting the agencies in developing their six-year plans and also provided training in cultural proficiency to various PC(USA) entities including ACREC. This position has not been filled, though two consultants have been hired. In light of the mandatory training in cultural proficiency and antiracism for the six agencies,

* Recommendation 3.c. of “A Review of Efforts Regarding Cultural Proficiency and Creating a Climate for Change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (Item 11-09), and can be found at: http://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3113&promoID=100.
12. Drafting and reviewing the Six-Year Cultural Proficiency Plans was the most significant activity that occurred during this review cycle. All of the agencies had presented at least a first draft before or shortly after the December 31, 2012, deadline. These early drafts were provided to ACREC, ACWC, and GACOR for comment. All agencies were asked to submit a supplement to their plans, specifically to organize the six-year plans in two-year review cycles. The ACREC members met with all but one of the agencies individually and discussed comments to the drafts. Three agencies have indicated that they will submit a revised draft by March 1, 2014. Once the latest drafts are received, they will be reviewed by ACREC, ACWC, and GACOR. It is anticipated that the six-year plans will be approved before the 221st General Assembly (2014), but after the deadline for reports. Once the plans are approved by ACREC, they will go into effect.8

13. The purpose of the six-year plans is intentional, systemic change. Formulating these long-term plans causes agencies to examine the current work environment and to think creatively as to how to develop and sustain healthy organizational cultures that support diverse workforces, at all levels. Each plan is tailored to the specific characteristics and function of each agency, while the mission and overall goals remain constant: to foster a diverse workforce that gives “full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and ... provide[s] for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment.”9

14. It is hoped that the end result is a plan with specific goals, easy to understand with measurable targets, which are easy to evaluate and flexible enough to change as the work environment changes. This plan, once it is synchronized with the six-year review of the agency, should result in two-year reviews via submissions of reports, and one face-to-face meeting in the year of the six-year review, unless more frequent meetings are needed.

Comment on Item 09-13—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) appreciates the ways the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) is revising the process of the cultural proficiency reviews to reflect GACOR’s responsibilities regarding employment of personnel (G-3-0103) and specific tasks referred by the assembly to GACOR regarding AAEEEO and supplier diversity.

Recommendations 2 and 3 demonstrate the committees’ greater cooperation with one another to avoid duplication of tasks. There is in development a website that will provide access to some databases supporting supplier diversity. GACOR is concerned that the implementation of Recommendation 2 may be interpreted that the creation and maintenance of a new database is called for and wants to remind commissioners that we have limited staff and volunteer resources for such a large task. There are professionally maintained databases available in most local and regional areas. We hope consideration of existing resources will factor into the implementation of this recommendation. A single database sufficient for the widely varying levels outlined in this recommendation is beyond the capacities of the GACOR and agencies.

The GACOR reminds commissioners of Item 09-19, a recommendation from GACOR regarding the development of a common definition of supplier diversity to guide the future review and recommendation of new goals for each agency. The table with agencies represented (in Item 09-19) may be a place to refer Recommendation 2.

The inclusion of persons from the categories, cited in Recommendation 3, are already included in the AAEEEO forms GACOR uses to request employment data from the agencies. Agencies have concerns regarding these categories and the conversations are expected to be fruitful. We welcome being a part of those discussions. The GACOR appreciates being a partner with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns in serving the PC(USA).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

Comment on Item 09-13—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency is appreciative of the important work of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and enjoys a collaborative, productive relationship with regular consultation. While the Presbyterian Mission Agency agrees with the importance of cultural proficiency and antiracism work within the denomination, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency in particular, it disagrees with the Advocacy Committee on how to best fulfill this responsibility.

When the former incumbent of the associate for organizational diversity, education and recruitment position left the Presbyterian Mission Agency, work was redistributed within the Human Resources office. No mandates for the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency were changed, only the manner in which this work is done.

Currently the Presbyterian Mission Agency Human Resources staff includes a position that focuses on recruitment and organizational diversity (through the Diversity in Leadership Network). Education is achieved through a large selection of online career and personal development courses.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency believes this approach fulfills the General Assembly’s mandate for cultural proficiency training while also achieving good stewardship of financial resources. No other General Assembly agency has employed a full-time staff position focused on their cultural proficiency work. The work currently mandated by the General Assembly is fully reflected in the budget that has been proposed for General Assembly approval. Creating an additional position for this work will have a financial implication that requires reductions in other programmatic areas of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force Report

The National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to hold a national consultation on developing regional racial ethnic ministries in 2015 for twenty-five participants over a two-day period. This consultation will have a planning team of ten people and shall include developing a vision and structure so each ministry may create its own unique way of doing ministry.

   Rationale for Recommendation 1

   The work of the National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force currently consists of only seven people who have a limited amount of time and resources to complete the task. In order for racial ethnic ministries to grow and flourish, a greater number and variety of people are needed so that a larger regional representation is involved in developing and implementing racial ethnic ministries. The outcome of this national consultation will be reported back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

2. Encourage the mid councils to collaborate with PMA translators and expand resources for other languages.

   Rationale for Recommendation 2

   The National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force rejoices at the hiring of the new staff persons. As the diversity of racial ethnic people in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) grows, there will be a need for more translation, interpretation, and documentation services.

3. Call for a churchwide conference on race, ethnicity, racism, and ethnocentricity in 2015. In addition, direct the Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to appoint a planning team of ten people for this event in consultation with the following groups:

   a. Racial ethnic congregational leadership;
   b. Racial ethnic caucus leadership;
   c. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC);
   d. Presbytery and synod leadership;
e. General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR);
f. Representatives from the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA)[s][z]

[g. A report will be submitted to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) on these matters.]

Rationale for Recommendation 3

Racial ethnic ministry, to a large extent, is a response to a history of discrimination and lament on current pains of structural racism and ethnocentricity within the church body. This churchwide conference will involve leadership to work in conjunction with larger and majority congregations to find visible solutions to visible and invisible racism and discriminations that are within different ethnic groups toward each other also. This conference will be the beginning step needed to recognize and heal wounds. The outcome of this conference and resulting recommendations will be reported to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Overall Rationale

The ministry and witness of racial ethnic people in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have been evident for more than 200 years. Racial ethnic people have brought to the denomination various ways in which Scripture is understood through our unique experiences of the Holy Spirit: wonderful music that glorifies God with different melodies and instruments; multiple styles of worship; and perspectives on introducing others to a relationship with Jesus Christ. At the same time, racial ethnic people have contributed to the life and mission of the church by participating at all council levels of the denomination through service on committees and task forces, and as General Assembly Moderators. As racial ethnic ministries continue to be led by the Holy Spirit to grow and flourish, the National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force encourages the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to partner and truly engage with our brothers and sisters to create a diverse church where all gifts in ministry are recognized and celebrated.

The National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force was approved by the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in response to a recommendation from the General Assembly Mid Council Commission Racial Ethnic Strategy Task Force of the General Assembly Committee on Mid Councils. The recommendation was presented by the Assembly Committee on Mid Councils Review and approved by the General Assembly. The responsibility that was charged to the task force is to … exclusively review, assess and explore the call to, responsibility in, and vision for racial ethnic ministry within the PC (USA), reporting its findings for implementation to the 221st General Assembly (2014) (Minutes, 2012, PCUSA, Part I, p. 277 of the electronic journal, p. 172 of the print journal)

In addition the task force is charged to

... be charged specifically to address the issue and the lack of language access, sensitivity, and resourcing (particularly as relates to the Spanish and Korean languages) within the existing frame of council operations, as well as within the context of any councils. (Ibid.)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) has taken supportive and encouraging positions advocating inclusion and support of racial ethnic ministries. While this may be true, significant problems remain. Many of our racial ethnic congregations find themselves in presbyteries in which they are the only congregation of its kind and receive little or no assistance in the form of guidance, nurture, or resources. Some congregations and/or members of racial ethnic groups have not been fully welcomed to be present or to share their gifts in some presbyterian contexts and structures. The commitment to inclusion and racial ethnic ministry has waned in recent years and other priorities have taken the forefront in terms of resources, time, and energy. In past General Assemblies, racial ethnic ministries have been highlighted, proclaimed, and met with approval through statements and strategies but have received little support or funding. As the universal church in general and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) in particular grapples with complex societal, theological, and cultural changes, racial ethnic ministries have in many cases taken a back seat or been declared a cause from another era. Although these are significant barriers to unity in the body of Christ, we believe that through God’s Holy Spirit, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) can experience a new life and vision through the witness and vision of racial ethnic members of this denomination and those who seek to claim the Reformed tradition as their home.

The implementation of the recommendations of the report of the National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force has the real possibility of further energizing and engaging the denomination in visioning a new day for racial ethnic ministries in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A). An understanding of this new vision includes networking, consultation, and collaboration with mid councils, caucus leadership, and members of congregations. This understanding will also give awareness of the rich diversity of gifts, skills, and practices of ministry that will enrich the body of the denomination.

The National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force began its work by assessing the mandate given by the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) to examine the historical and social importance of racial ethnic ministries. This review included a view of the current and projected racial ethnic membership in the denomination by the Office of Research Services staff, as well as, conversations with staff from the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women’s area and the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

The task force also conducted a review of the historical connection of racial ethnic ministries to the mid councils with respect to synods and invited comments from the leadership of the following racial ethnic caucuses and/or entities: National Asian Presbyterian Council (NAPC); National Black Presbyterian Caucus (NBPC); National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus (NMEPC); National Presbyterian Hispanic/Latino Caucus (CNPH); National Council of Korean Presbyterian Churches in the PC(USA) (NCKPC); Native American Consulting Committee (NACC); the Advisory Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC); and participants of the Mid Councils as Partners in Immigrant and Multicultural Communities workshop at the 2013 Big Tent Event in Louisville. In light of this information, we offer the following observations:

1. The racial ethnic population of the United States is growing at a fast rate, which will move the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) to be in discussion and dialogue on how best to engage in ministry with a diversity of cultures, races, and experiences.

2. There are a growing number of new immigrant fellowships worshipping in various places and settings in our denomination. Some of these are very small groups that began as Bible study groups and may be loosely associated with either an individual congregation or mid council.

3. There is a need to maintain a regional expression of racial ethnic ministries in synods/presbyteries or in a subsequent proposed structure.

4. There is a low representation of Presbyterian racial ethnic seminarians in Presbyterian seminaries.

5. There is a need for mid councils (specifically presbyteries) to find creative call positions for racial ethnic graduates, especially women of color.

As we look toward the future of racial ethnic ministries in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the task force believes that God is working in the midst of the established and immigrant racial ethnic faith communities together with the whole body of Christ to bring life, joy, and love for one another through the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Social, Biblical and Theological Foundations

If the church is to be attentive to the increasing and unavoidable “browning” of the United States, how will its ministries respond to this increasing demographic change? This demographic shift provides the church an opportunity to embrace new ways to proclaim the gospel, to nurture fellowship, to practice and live in worship, to live in the truth, to promote social justice, and to build up the kingdom of heaven in the world (Book of Order, F-1.0304). The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) has been blessed throughout its history by indigenous and long-standing racial ethnic communities as well as different immigrant communities that have come and continue to come to the United States for different reasons and in a variety of circumstances, many of which were and are violent and denigrating to human dignity. In each of these instances the church has been influenced, and continues to be influenced by their presence, experiences, and circumstances. Today, as in the past, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and American Christianity are faced with social, linguistic, economic, and cultural challenges that require—at all levels of the church—a response that is relevant, welcoming, and faithful. The church, in its response through its witness and ministry, will inevitably find opportunities of transformation and regeneration for the glory of God, and the spiritual growth of the body of Christ.

One of the challenges faced by the church is becoming aware of and responding with solidarity to the plight of immigrant communities. To migrate inevitably carries the pain of separation, not only from the homeland, but from people and landscapes that are familiar and close to one’s own being. Challenged by our church’s past and present in the reality of immigration, the church is challenged to experience the reality of immigration not from an expectation of assimilation, but from the experience of the migrant. Prophetic Scripture does not shy away from the plight and realities of migrant communities in its abundant narratives of the migrant experiences of ancient Israel.

The prophet Jeremiah (29:4–11) lifts up the “strangers in a foreign land”, the people of Judah. In his “letter to the exiles”, Jeremiah encourages the immigrant community to prepare for a more permanent reality in exile (build houses, plant orchards, give children in marriage). The experience of immigration for many will become a more permanent situation that immigrants recognize will require an effort on their part to “root themselves” in the realities of the context they now live in. And as Jeremiah encouraged the exiles from Judah, immigrants in the past and today are challenged by the call to not simply put down roots, but to “seek the welfare of the city” where they are found, and “pray to the Lord on its behalf.” (Jer. 29:7, NRSV) The church is, then, the space where immigrant communities have sought and continue to seek the welfare of the cities and towns where they are found. But for many immigrants the church may also be one of those places and spaces where they are called to put down roots, and struggle with the reality of migration and settlement. The call to the church, then, is to be a body of people who welcome the immigrant, and provide for ways in which the newcomer, whether from around the corner or from across the world, may find means in which to become not an object of the ministry of the church, but a subject of the witness of the gospel in the body of Christ, and to the larger community. This becoming a subject of ministry—and not an object—presumes that the church will recognize and celebrate the individuality and particularity of each of its members, especially each other’s life story, and its implication in faith, witness, and fellowship.

The apostle Paul reminds us in 1 Corinthians 12 that we all have been given multiple gifts from the same Spirit. Racial ethnic members of the body of Christ are no different. Racial ethnic constituencies have multiple gifts of ministry, and can minister within the whole church for the building up of the God’s beloved community and the transformation of the church.

Finally, the intent behind these recommendations is for this church to intentionally and honestly begin an ongoing effort to a path of reconciliation. All we do as children of God we do with the purpose of reaching reconciliation. This task force has a real commitment for this church to achieve reconciliation within its members. In doing so we must be honest with one another, we must acknowledge the historical context and wounds that have shaped and continue to shape the way we are, the way we do church, and the especially the way we interact and engage different people. An initial step on the path to reconciliation is one that recognizes the explicit and implicit forms of racism in the history of the church, and in its current structures and ministries. The next step is one that intentionally seeks the healing of racial, ethnic, native, and immigrant communities—those in the church and those outside it.

This task force recognizes that these recommendations are not the ultimate solutions for racial ethnic ministries in the PC(USA). What this task force recognizes is the need to begin a conversation with as many people as possible. We want to recognize the gifts we all bring to the body of Christ and recognize that we are all part of the same body. We hope these recommendations will steer the church on the path of reconciliation.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-14

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 09-14.
The ACREC thanks the task force members who actively participated on this committee and for this report that presents important observations about issues concerning racial ethnic ministries in the PC(USA). These observations include fast-growing racial ethnic populations in the U.S., new immigrant fellowships, racial ethnic presence in the reorganized regional synod bodies, low representation of candidates and staff at Presbyterian seminaries, and calls for women of color seminarian graduates. These are cutting edge issues that will likely shape the future church.

We support the task force’s recommendation for a two-day consultation involving a larger group of persons to develop relevant and effective strategies for racial ethnic ministries. With limited resources, the task force was able to obtain some comments and views from members of the racial ethnic caucuses and other relevant church groups. However, in order to be true to their charge to “review, assess, and explore the call to, responsibility in, and a vision for racial ethnic ministry within the PC(USA),” the task force believes that more responses are needed from a greater variety of people from a “larger regional representation.” In order to minimize costs, this two-day consultation could be held just prior to or during the Big Tent in 2015.

We also support the recommendation for a church-wide conference on race, ethnicity, racism, and ethnocentricity. Racism is still a major social and institutional issue in the United States, including our churches. There was an attempt to have a discussion on race with PC(USA) leadership during an ad hoc meeting at the Big Tent in 2013, in reaction to the acquittal in the Trayvon Martin murder trial. An intentional, well-planned conference—where a larger and broader audience would be in attendance—will provide an opportunity for a healthy general discussion about race in the church, and could be the beginning of a road to healing that is still needed in our church.

Comment on Item 09-14—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) welcomes the recommended actions in this report, particularly those that strengthen mid council collaboration on translations of materials and the formation of the planning team for the conference on race, ethnicity, racism, and ethnocentricity in 2015. The GACOR reminds commissioners that the responsibilities of all councils above session to demonstrate work on participation and representation (G-3.0103) and unity in diversity (F-1.0403), is accomplished most easily through the work of committees on representation. The complementary nature of the topics directed by the recommendation will provide helpful and coordinated vision for the PC(USA). The short timeline given for this work is our only concern. The GACOR suggests the recommendation make clear the responsibility to report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) or another designated assembly.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

A Resolution to Educate Against and Help Prevent Voter Suppression—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Acknowledge the changes in voting rights and the new wave of voter suppression disproportionately affecting racial ethnic communities that have resulted from the June 2013 decision by the Supreme Court.

2. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to update Lift Every Voice, Democracy, Voting Rights, and Electoral Reform, approved by the 218th General Assembly (2010), to include changes in the Voting Rights Act.

3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to prepare educational materials (web-based or print) for use in congregations and mid councils specifically on how voter suppression impacts our democracy theologically, ecclesiologically, and culturally.

4. Continuing the Presbyterian tradition of witness for democracy and the equality of electoral rights necessary for its exercise, direct the Stated Clerk to write to mid councils to inform them about the changes in the Voting Rights Act and send them an updated digital copy of the ACSWP document, “Lift Every Voice,” advocating for voter rights in a more just and democratic society through

   a. educating congregations and mid councils on the impacts of voter suppression and the [affects] [effects] of not having federal oversight on voting rights, as of June 2013; and
b. sponsoring conversations about the negative social impacts of voter suppression and why this matters to the church, providing ideas for congregations to help in local efforts to stop voter suppression.

5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to lift up voters’ rights in election years 2014 and 2016 through its communications channels (such as Presbyterians Today, email newsletters, action alerts, etc.) and recognize the need to educate the grassroots on the effects of voter suppression on church and society.

6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop advocacy strategies to work against voter suppression and for greater freedom in voting and access to voting, and to share news of these efforts across the church.

7. Direct the Office of the General Assembly, Mid Council Ministries, to host conversations on race and racisms in order to address current and historic wounds, including the issue of voter suppression as one needing attention and redress.

Rationale

In June 2013, the Supreme Court of the United States nullified a core provision of the Voting Rights Act (VRA) of 1965, which provided federal oversight to election laws in areas that were historically suppressing the vote in particular populations and blocking democratic election outcomes. Voter suppression laws were at the center of what became known as Jim Crow. The VRA made most disenfranchisement and voting qualifications illegal. Traditional voter suppression tactics included the institution of poll taxes and literacy tests, aimed at suppressing the votes of African Americans and working class white voters.

The Supreme Court annulled the use of the VRA map used by the Justice department for decades, and ruled that Congress needs to produce a new and updated map for where federal oversight is still required. The Wall Street Journal reported this story:

WASHINGTON—The Supreme Court nullified a core provision of the Voting Rights Act in an ideologically divided ruling that eroded a landmark of the civil-rights era and threw the issue into the lap of a gridlocked Congress.

In a 5-4 decision, Chief Justice John Roberts said Jim-Crow era discrimination no longer justified requiring a group of mostly Southern states to seek Washington’s approval before changing election practices. Joined by the court’s other conservatives, he said the court had to act to uphold states’ sovereignty, sparking a dissent from liberals who said the ruling would undermine progress made since the law was passed in 1965 to ensure fair treatment at the polls.

Tuesday’s ruling substantially eases the path for lawmakers in states that had been under federal supervision, which now can immediately implement changes in their election procedures without first obtaining clearance from the Justice Department. Nine states and portions of six others, primarily in the South and largely now under Republican control, are affected. Some, such as Texas, have clashed with the Justice Department over measures ranging from legislative redistricting to voter-identification laws.

The court, ruling in a challenge brought by Shelby County, Ala., left standing Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, which gives the federal government authority over states that historically suppressed minority votes. But that section was effectively nullified by the court, which said the formula used to identify such jurisdictions, contained in Section 4, is not constitutionally valid because it is based on decades-old voter-participation data.

That move gives Congress the option of embarking on what would likely be a fraught effort to craft a new formula to meet the court’s concerns. Such action seems unlikely.
The Jim Crow Laws of the pre-VRA era are still with us in many ways. The national turmoil following the verdict in the Trayvon Martin case clearly demonstrates that our nation is still divided over race, and has not reconciled over discrepancies of access to power and privilege. The ACREC believes that the Supreme Court decision puts in place a new set of Jim Crow Laws that are not difficult to see in our society today, and are demonstrated well by this excerpt from a University of Connecticut article from Nov 6, 2013:

The past year has seen a renewed debate on issues surrounding voting rights. The Supreme Court’s ruling on the Voting Rights Act and the subsequent voter ID laws that were passed in several states brought back into the spotlight an issue that America has struggled with throughout its history: universal suffrage.

Voter ID laws were widely condemned as discriminatory and unfair. Unfortunately, widespread and even more disenfranchising voting laws exist. Forty-eight states have laws regulating voting rights for convicted felons.

Every state except Maine and Vermont imposes some kind of voting restriction on criminals, from not being able to vote while in prison to being permanently stripped of voting rights. Not only is this a blatant stain on America’s hard-won universal suffrage, it’s pushing millions of people out of the political process.

5.85 million people in the United States are not eligible to vote due to felony disenfranchisement, according to a study done by the Sentencing Project. Of the 2.2 million people currently in prison, almost all of them have no voting rights. Not all regain it when they complete their sentences. And because this issue is tied to the prison system, it disproportionately affects minorities. According to the Sentencing Project, in 13 African Americans is legally barred from voting.

While these laws aren’t supposed to target any group, their history shows that they were enacted specifically to disenfranchise, and they still do today. 7.7 percent of the black population can’t vote, compared with just 2.5 percent of the total population.

Many of these laws go back to Reconstruction, when they were enacted along with a slew of other Jim Crow laws in reaction to the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments. These laws have been controversially upheld while most others were overturned because of a provision in the 14th Amendment that says states will be punished for denying the right to vote for any reason other than “participation of rebellion or other crime.” Many states also have a vested interest in keeping these laws on the books.11

The ACREC believes that without changes to current “New Jim Crow Laws,” the state of our union will remain fatally flawed. We cannot purport to have an advanced democratic society when such huge percentages of certain populations are permanently disenfranchised, through laws that incarcerate them for minor offenses.

From People for the American Way:

Laws disproportionately affect African-Americans

Supporters give various reasons for their support of disenfranchisement of felons, but the historical motivation behind such laws is unambiguous: they sought to keep African Americans from the voting booth and were passed before the civil rights movement. Today, these laws still disproportionately affect African Americans and other racial minorities.

Nationwide, more than thirteen percent of adult African American males are denied the right to vote because of past felony convictions, and Black men make up over a third of the total disenfranchised population. In six of the states that deny the right to vote to ex-offenders one in four Black men is permanently disenfranchised. The laws disproportionately affect Latino men as well: sixteen percent of Latino men will enter prison in their lifetime, compared to less than five percent of white men.12

As approved by 218th General Assembly (2008) of the PC(USA), the recommendations of Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights and Electoral Reform13 are:

1. Toward Increasing Voter Participation
   a. Voter Franchise: The Affirmative Right to Vote
   b. Universal Voter Registration
   c. Other Obstacles to Voter
   d. Community Organizing so That Voters Count
2. Toward Ensuring Equality and Fairness
   a. Give the District of Columbia Full Voting Rights and Congressional Representation
   b. Re-enfranchise Felons Who Have Paid Their Debt to Society
   c. Enforce the Voting Rights Act

d. Reject Expensive Voter ID Requirements

e. Protect People and Communities of Color from Targeted Purges of Voting Lists

f. Punish Deceptive Campaign Practices

g. Nonpartisan Legislative Districting

3. Toward Enforcing Accountability and Responsibility in Our Electoral Process

a. Proposals for Renewing Our Democracy

b. Reform Our Primary System

c. Elect President by Popular Vote (Electoral College Reform)

d. Allow Instant Runoff Voting

e. Consider Proportional Voting

Voter Suppression Primer

Definition

“Voter suppression is a strategy to influence the outcome of an election by discouraging or preventing people from exercising their right to vote by reducing the number of voters …”

“ The tactics of voter suppression can range from minor “dirty tricks” that make voting inconvenient, up to blatantly illegal activities that physically intimidate prospective voters to prevent them from casting ballots. Voter suppression could be particularly effective if a significant amount of voters are intimidated individually because the voter might not consider his or her single vote important.”

Laws or administrative practices can also make it more difficult for people to register to vote.14

Impediments

1. Photo ID requirements

2. Purging voter rolls

3. Felon disenfranchisement, often permanently

4. Disinformation about voting procedures

5. Inequality of resources available on Election Day

6. New and emerging suppression strategies15

A report by People for the American Way Foundation16

In addition to the suppression strategies noted above, other emerging strategies are appearing around the country that could spread if they are effective:

1. Restricting Early Voting

2. Ending Same-day Voter

3. Database matching

4. Literacy Tests

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-15—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-15.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy agrees with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns that changes in the Voting Rights Act’s application, based on Supreme Court decisions, and state level statutes and regulations, are allowing the electoral franchise of the United States to be limited deliberately. These methods of “voter suppression” are in some cases new, and in other cases amplified by changes in campaign funding law. This proposal is thus timely and doable within the timeframe and financial constraints.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-15

Comment on Item 09-15—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Office of Public Witness is closely monitoring federal and statewide voter suppression in some key states including North Carolina, Georgia, and South Carolina. These states were chosen based on constituent calls and contacts asking for our advice on responding to voter suppression in their states. We remain actively engaged with local advocates and civil rights organizations in Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, and other states that remain wedded to restrictive voting laws.

Many Presbyterians are involved in challenging voter suppression in their local communities and states. We are witnessing and participating in anti-voter suppression movements on state levels including Moral Monday organizing around voter suppression and legislative trends in North Carolina and Georgia.

This resolution will strengthen the PC(USA)’s existing voting rights policy “Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights and Electoral Reform.” http://www.pcusa.org/resource/lift-every-voice-democracy-voting-rights-and-elect/

Tax Justice: A Christian Response to a New Gilded Age—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

In fulfillment of the assignment of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to provide a biblically grounded witness for current discussions of tax reform, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the following statement of principles and recommendations on justice in taxation, and receive the supporting rationale and resources for study:

I. Principles and Covenant Framework

It is a basic mark of a healthy social covenant that all share in the society’s benefits and burdens. Just taxation is a foundational part of a moral society’s answer to poverty and its close relatives, inequality, economic insecurity, and social immobility. Just taxation is also a key tool for enabling communities to thrive, for advancing science and culture, and for sustaining democratic institutions. Each citizen has an affirmative duty to contribute to the common good by paying their fair share of taxes.

The following principles arise from the Reformed covenant theology described in this study’s rationale, and are a Presbyterian response to the clear and pressing needs of the people of God. In accord with our tradition of public responsibility, this contribution by a Christian church is also offered to the broader worldwide movement for tax justice. Accompanying this report is an appendix that summarizes the history of progressive taxation in the United States, showing the influential role of Christians and churches.

There is a growing consensus within our community that tax revenues are collected in a manner that harms those who have the least. Current tax policies put higher proportional burdens on middle class and poor Americans.
ther, the amount realized is insufficient to meet this country’s pressing social needs. As a result, deficits have increased while those with the most need are asked to pay a more burdensome portion of their income than the wealthy. This call to tax justice addresses a real crisis. It does so while urging local, state and federal jurisdictions to play their unique roles in the overall United States tax system, and supporting new measures internationally to prevent corporations and individuals from sheltering income and wealth from citizenship responsibilities. The background paper that accompanies this recommendation section provides basic data on the ways globalization has affected our U.S. tax base and led to a shifting of the tax burden away from transnational corporations and onto citizens and companies whose operations are primarily domestic.

The church’s moral claim recognizes the reality that even the greatest individual and corporate fortunes depend on the shared goods of physical and institutional infrastructure, governance, social peace, and intellectual capital built up over years of civilization. Morality, and particularly the morality that we as a society adopt through our political choices, is indeed at the heart of the problem of tax justice. We as a society are tolerating immoral tax laws when we allow tax minimization strategies, whether individual or corporate, to shift payment for these shared goods to those who have less ability to underwrite the costs and to share in the benefits. The impact of inequality in America today is undeniable, prompting many comparisons with the first Gilded Age a century ago, when the permanent graduated income tax was put in place. Progressive taxation alone cannot rectify the imbalance that puts 35.6 percent of total U.S. wealth in the hands of one percent of the population, almost as much as the 36.6 percent held by the lower 95 percent, even in the recession year of 2009. Yet fair taxation is a key part of providing adequate revenue for government and, indeed, for maintaining public investment, social mobility, and equitable public policies.

The recommendations in this report seek to make the U.S. tax system fairer, calling it to be:

• more progressive, taxing those with greater wealth at higher proportions of their income, wealth, and inheritance;
• more transparent, which includes both simplicity and accountability for all tax preferences and tax expenditures;
• more solidarity-focused, which means reducing the use of tax expenditures, shelters and havens, and supporting more adequate international standards to reduce tax competition within and among nations;
• more sustainable for current and future generations, which means avoiding unproductive financial and ecological indebtedness; and
• more adequate, effectively addressing broader objectives of economic and social health than efficiency alone, such as meaningful employment, improved family life, and restored public trust. The tax system must be characterized by both efficiency in tax collection and revenue sufficient for the common good.

We build upon the four criteria for evaluating tax systems affirmed by the 189th General Assembly (1977):

Equity (progressive for current and future generations)
Integrity (honoring communal obligations and discouraging corruption)
Simplicity (understandable despite its need to address a complex economy)
Efficiency (balancing cost-effective collection with economic growth)

In order to respond to new patterns that challenge the church’s values in an unavoidably global context, the 221st General Assembly (2014) approves an updated set of principles: Progressivity, Transparency, Solidarity, Sustainability, and Adequacy, defined as follows:

1. Progressivity: this is the basic framework of an equitable tax system. Guided by our equality in sharing in God’s grace at the communion table, which St. Paul extends to sharing God’s gifts with communities most in need, and by the responsibility “of those who have much” to contribute accordingly, we affirm biblical support for graduated tax systems whose rates increase as the level of income and wealth increase. Progressivity begins to redress the redistribution upward, a feature of current markets that channel economic gains disproportionately to top earners and investors. Progressivity also addresses today’s large disparities in wealth, including financial wealth that is more highly concentrated than income, and promotes economic growth, keeping money in the hands of lower- and moderate-income people who spend proportionately more of their income. Progressivity is the key indicator that equity is being sought for all participants in the economy.

2. Transparency: this principle combines values of integrity and clarity. Guided by our sense of accountability to God and our awareness of human envy and greed, transparency serves the common good by minimizing corruption and the cynicism that grossly uneven tax burdens engender. Beyond inviting honesty among individual taxpayers through comprehensible, well-administered, and adequately funded tax collection, transparency challenges the practices of secrecy jurisdictions that are frequently used as tax havens. By clearly identifying burdens and benefits and upholding standards of dignity and respect, tax transparency strengthens the integrity of the community as a whole. Lack of transparency, exemplified in part by the thousands of pages of tax code, is countered by simplicity. A simpler tax code is also more efficient, saving tax payers millions of dollars in fees now spent on tax advisors seeking to exploit every nuance of the code, though over-simple approaches do not do justice to our complex economy.

3. Solidarity: this principle addresses taxation as a form of mutual support based in cooperation and the rule of law. Christians recognize an indebtedness of the individual to the community over time, for the nurture and education of children, for the risks borne by those who provide for mutual security, for the knowledge inheritance of developed societies, for the benefits to social life and commerce of enforceable contracts, justice systems, and infrastructure, and much more. This communal sense of gratitude prompts measures to restrain jurisdictional tax competition (a “race to the bottom”) that beggars neighbors and makes it impossible for governments to address even the most pressing social needs.

4. Sustainability: this principle responds to the environmental and fiscal challenges we face today and which future generations will face tomorrow. Stewardship means holding God’s gifts in trust, turning away from unwise growth and unnecessary consumption. It will require public planning to manage resources for the common good. A sustainable tax system provides for green incentives to reduce waste of renewable as well as non-renewable resources and to encourage investment and charitable giving for maximum community benefit. It may mean choosing to forgo tax income from natural resource exploitation in order to protect future generations from climate and health risks.

5. Adequacy: this principle combines efficiency in revenue collection with sufficiency defined by social purpose. Hebrew, Christian, and Muslim scriptures abound with images of human generosity and creativity reflecting God’s inexhaustible riches shared throughout creation. At the same time, the virtue of frugality translates clearly to cost efficiency. Thus an effective tax system ensures that revenue collected is adequate for a full measure of human and natural flourishing, while also minimizing collection cost relative to collection revenue.

_A Covenant Vision Frames the Recommendations:_

The five principles identified above work in concert with each other and fit within the covenantal vision of mutual responsibility held by Reformed Christians. This vision builds on the development of covenantal concepts through scripture to the “new covenant” we celebrate in communion, which is a sign of our redemption in Christ. For us, human life is best understood not in isolation, but in relationship with God and others. Our lives are bound by covenantal relationships in families, congregations, and political and economic communities, where burdens as well as blessings are to be shared by all. These relationships both make our lives possible and give rise to duties to God and others. Covenants bind future behavior and are often most just when they are most explicit about obligations and expected benefits. They are the basis for community-wide taxation as well as personal charity.

Taxation is part of the self-government of communities. The maxims “no taxation without representation,” and equally, “no representation without participating fairly in taxation,” apply to all citizens. By the degree to which corporations, individuals, and families of great wealth exercise inordinate political influence to lower their tax burdens, democratic values are jeopardized. A nation, state, or locality’s overall tax burden should be progressive, although each combination of income, sales, consumption, property, and other wealth taxes may unavoidably include some regressive measures justified on efficiency grounds, such as fees to discourage waste of natural resources. Social and environmental objectives may justify incentives and tax expenditures or deductions, but such preferences should generally be time limited and capped both for the taxpayer receiving benefits and in the aggregate (total spent by society to achieve given goals). The broadest possible tax base is always desirable to enhance participation of citizens, but measures to mitigate poverty also require rebates, negative, or minimal taxes for those at the lowest income or wealth levels.

II. Recommendations

In adopting specific recommendations for public policy witness, the General Assembly is guided by a particular “preliminary principle” characteristic of Presbyterianism: that “Truth is in order to goodness … that there is an inseparable connection between faith and practice, truth and duty. Otherwise, it would be of no consequence either to discover truth, or to embrace it” (Synod of New York and Philadelphia, prefix to Form of Government, 1788). In this context, the goals of our tax policy recommendations are to help achieve consequences in accord with Reformed theology and principles. Therefore, in order to encourage greater tax justice in the United States and internationally, the 221st General Assembly (2014) approves the following public policy recommendations:

A. Individual Taxation

1. Work to eliminate the application of lower tax rates on unearned as opposed to earned income. In most cases, taxes assessed on unearned or investment income (dividends, capital gains/losses, carried interest, etc.) currently are lower than marginal tax rates assessed on earned income (wages, salaries, business income, etc.). This privileges unearned income (and higher-income tax payers and asset-holders) and reduces tax progressivity.
2. Increase progressivity overall, increasing upper income brackets’ tax rates and restricting deductions and exemptions, both to boost revenue and reduce income inequality. State income taxes tend to be less progressive, and several states have no income tax, putting a higher burden on lower income residents through sales and other regressive taxes. Across the board (flat) taxes are inconsistent with the principle of progressivity and can reinforce the concentration of wealth.

3. Improve the fairness of important parts of the country’s retirement system. The payroll tax that supports Social Security is capped at $117,000 in 2014. This cap privileges high-income earners and produces marked regressivity and should be removed. Lifting the cap would also extend Social Security’s stability without requiring other long-term fixes, such as raising the retirement age. Existing state exemptions from taxation of higher level pension income and benefits should be eliminated, though in general any changes to employee pensions should only affect new contractual obligations.

4. The earned income tax credit (EITC), which helps ensure working people a living wage, is a longstanding feature of the tax code, supported historically by both liberals and conservatives. The need for this kind of measure is very great today, and the EITC, or similar measures aimed at keeping working families out of poverty, should be expanded.

5. Work to repeal or prevent the imposition of sales taxes on necessities, such as food and clothing, while retaining (despite their inevitably regressive nature) sales and excise taxes on gambling, alcohol, tobacco, and other legal addictive substances and high-risk behaviors, both to discourage this activity and to pay for rehabilitation/recovery and other social costs.

B. Tax Expenditures Benefiting Individuals

1. Work to require tax expenditures or deductions to be subject to time limitation and periodic, independent review for both their social economic benefit and possible future retention, reduction, or removal. Recognizing that tax deductions generally benefit higher-income households in the first place, this would generally phase out tax expenditures as the taxpayer’s Adjusted Gross Income increases. Examples of measures to be addressed follow, with the recommendation of capping benefits less needed by high-income individuals and families:

   • The mortgage interest deduction as currently constructed privileges those who borrow the most; it should be limited to one residence and capped at a level that has a meaningful relationship to average home costs (i.e. that reflects reasonable housing needs rather than luxury market subsidies);

   • Charitable contributions are only deductible by the approximately 25 percent of taxpayers who itemize deductions. Although tax-exempt charitable organizations (including religious bodies) play a critical role in our country, the nonprogressive means by which most tax-exempt organizations are financed means that nonprofits have a great responsibility to provide social benefit, broadly conceived, and to prevent leaders and managers from receiving undue personal gain;

   • Rules governing tax exempt “social welfare organizations” (501(c)(4)s) should exclude or strictly limit the eligibility of donations for partisan political purposes, parties and candidates, and the individual and corporate donors to or through such organizations should be made public due to their influence on the political process.2

   • The exclusion of capital gains on home sales privileges high-value property owners who can make maximum use of exclusion.

   • The exclusion of certain foreign-earned income (up to $95,100 in 2012) and housing benefits privileges income earned out of the country and encourages the movement of United States citizens to foreign jurisdictions.

   • The capping of property taxes for senior citizens privileges many elders while burdening younger citizens of similar income. This tax expenditure does not appear to adhere to the principle of progressivity; means testing is one solution to this, as is raising the cap, depending on jurisdiction.

2. Work to cap deductions for state tax, and municipal bond interest exemptions, for very high net worth households.

C. Individual Tax Avoidance and Fraud

1. With respect to tax evasion and fraud, work to maximize wealth and income transparency. The Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act (FATCA), and similar laws adopted by other countries, represents an important legislative step forward in requiring foreign financial institutions to report balances, financial activities, and transactions to a taxpayer’s home jurisdiction. Communions that recognize the fallen nature of humanity support transparent financial reporting. This transparency fosters equality and fairness, and helps address tax avoidance and fraud, including money laundering.
2. Work with international coalitions and communions to oppose “race to the bottom” policies enacted by states and countries that seek to attract business investment and wealthy depositors by assessing extremely low tax rates and creating secrecy jurisdictions. These policies hurt economic competition by disadvantaging companies that do not engage in tax avoidance strategies and reduce government revenues needed for domestic social and economic development.

3. Work cooperatively for full disclosure of beneficial owners of corporations and greater transparency in private banking strategies. Tax avoidance and fraud are abetted by the creation of corporations based in tax havens whose owners are not disclosed, depriving tax revenue for needed programs in “home” countries. Activities that have no productive value, sometimes involving overseas mergers and spin-offs, allow for significant tax avoidance.

4. Work to ensure adequacy of Internal Revenue Service funding and technical capacity—and of international aid to help develop effective tax administration in the poorest countries.

D. Corporate Taxation

1. Work to lower corporate tax nominal (statutory) rates while simultaneously (a) broadening the tax base by reducing corporate tax expenditures/deductions, i.e., oil depletion allowance, accelerated depreciation, etc., and (b) obtaining additional tax revenues from corporations that use global tax havens, schemes that are based on defects in transfer pricing rules, and other means to avoid or reduce United States taxes. This would increase effective corporate tax rates while lowering nominal rates. Alternative minimum taxes for corporations could also be instituted. Overall, while statutory tax rates are reduced, total corporate tax collections must rise.

2. While recognizing arguments by some that the corporate income tax inherently discourages investment, the committee believes that it should be retained in the United States. Although the corporate tax currently raises a relatively small percentage of federal revenues, this amount remains important in absolute terms and should be increased. Elimination of the corporate income tax would further enable the use of corporations and businesses to shelter income. Note that two-thirds of corporations’ dividend income goes to pension funds and other nonprofit (and untaxed) entities and is not taxed until it reaches the beneficiaries (thus calls for an end to the corporate income tax because of “double taxation” are largely inaccurate). In addition, eliminating the federal corporate tax would impair the ability of state governments to administer their own corporate tax rules, and elimination of the corporate tax would set an unfortunate precedent for developing countries, as explained further below.

3. Support standardization of corporate tax structures among developing nations that, often, depend on corporate taxation for a much higher proportion of tax revenue and are more vulnerable to corruption. Greater standardization also can facilitate enforcement and negotiation with private entities and achievement of social development goals.

4. Ensure adequacy of funding and enforcement capacity for the Securities Exchange Commission, Consumer Finance Protection Bureau, and other bodies with oversight over corporate and banking behavior and concentration.

5. Work to implement the progressive reduction in deductibility of expenses for corporate salaries, inclusive of bonuses, option packages, and other benefits, for highly compensated employees, and other measures to curb the dynamic of extreme inequality in corporate compensation.

6. Support the implementation of a financial transactions tax, similar to those used by some other countries, to raise revenue (as most other transactions are taxed), and reduce financial speculation and risk. (A form of this tax existed in the United States until 1964).

E. Tax Expenditures Benefiting Corporations

Work to limit and eliminate corporate tax expenditures that do not broadly serve a business or societal purpose. Four examples are noted:

1. All tax expenditures that provide targeted benefits to particular businesses or industries should be granted only for a specified period of time; they should all sunset. As in the case of individual tax deductions, corporate tax expenditures should be subject to periodic, independent review for both their social economic benefit and possible future retention, reduction, or removal.

2. Corporate siting tax expenditures are utilized by cities, counties, and states to entice corporations to locate in their jurisdiction. Such tax expenditures should be subject to a rigorous cost/benefit analysis by all jurisdictions that propose them to ensure that benefits would be widely shared. The law should provide for enforceable community benefit agreements (CBA’s) as well as “claw back” provisions for firms that subsequently fail to live up to their ends of the agreements. States themselves should seek to reduce competition among their own cities, suburbs, and rural areas. (Prior General Assemblies have favored “brownfield” development in already industrialized areas for ecological and equity reasons).
3. Tax holidays for taxes deferred on profits from assets domiciled in United States corporations’ international subsidiaries. Tax deferral may encourage offshore investments, as well as tax-driven mergers and acquisitions; hence full-profit repatriation (and payment of taxes owed) should be required within a limited time frame.

4. Exemption from taxation of online purchases. This privileges online enterprises over brick and mortar stores, weakening the tax base of communities and states.

F. International Corporate Tax Avoidance

1. With respect to laws, including “transfer pricing” laws (described more fully in the background section), which today facilitate the movement of income by businesses to tax havens, the church should support work that has been begun to cause nations to change laws so that tax avoidance through income-shifting to tax havens is no longer permitted. This is to affirm the direction of charitable and religious organizations and research institutes seeking tax justice, as well as intergovernmental bodies including the OECD (Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development) and G-20 governments working for greater tax policy coordination. The toleration of today’s porous tax laws by countries around the world reflects a dangerous “race to the bottom” by which countries compete to offer tax favoritism to businesses; the result is to deprive governments, particularly of poor countries that depend especially heavily on revenues from international businesses, of funds needed for urgent social needs.

2. Greater clarity and transparency in lawmakers are needed so that today’s opportunities for arguably legal tax avoidance, for example, by the use of tax havens, are eliminated. International tax laws, including transfer pricing laws and highly technical provisions such as “check the box,” appear innocuous at first impression, especially by those without technical backgrounds in taxation, but they allow such room for tax avoidance that multinational firms often can “pick” the jurisdiction in which to pay taxes (and not to pay taxes) without regard to the country of residence of owners, employees, or customers or location of raw materials or manufacturing. Logically the firm picks the lowest tax jurisdiction possible. Any solution must deliver transparency and real force to transfer pricing rules. The method of “formulary apportionment,” while requiring careful technical work on the necessary implementing laws, may advance solutions in this area.

3. The church supports efforts, by religious and charitable organizations as well as by governmental foreign-aid bodies, to assist developing-country governments in raising revenues through their tax systems. Developing countries inevitably need to depend upon strong and nonporous corporate tax laws, since a disproportionate amount of economic activity in poorer countries tends to involve investment by foreign-owned multinational companies, such as mineral extraction companies, service providers such as cell-phone companies, and distributors of foreign-supplied food, beverages, clothing, and other consumer products. Developing-country governments should be encouraged to avoid participating in the “race to the bottom” with respect to corporate income taxation, as developing countries suffer disproportionate financial harm from the resulting loss of corporate tax revenues.

4. The movement—often on paper—of income generating assets (such as intellectual property rights) to subsidiaries in lower tax areas should continue to be addressed within the United States. Legislation and regulation of tax competition among the fifty states is still needed to work toward equalization of tax rates, to strengthen high standards for beneficial owner disclosure, and to help sustain adequate living standards.

G. Estate and Wealth Taxes in a Covenantal Framework

1. Work to implement progressivity in estate tax rates. Even though only a portion of the top 5 percent is significantly affected, that number covers a very wide range of high income and assets. Tax justice for this group also demands progressive rates, and it is a reasonable source for adequate revenues.

2. Support a progressive estate tax beginning with estates considerably lower than the current $5,000,000 for individuals and $10,000,000 for couples. Coupling a lower starting point with a progressive scale could more accurately reflect the degree of benefit received from our current economic arrangements.

3. Work to eliminate the step-up in basis for inherited assets, which effectively exempts large amounts of capital gain from taxation. The benefits from this now-antiquated provision of the tax code inure or accrue disproportionately to those with high incomes and wealth. Gain on sale of inherited assets should be taxed in the same manner as gain on sale of assets received as gifts (carryover basis). If the step-up is retained, it should be limited to gains below a reasonable maximum amount. (More description of current taxes on estates (federal and state) and inheritances (applied to beneficiaries) is provided in the background section to this report).

4. Middle and lower income citizens already pay a wealth tax on their primary asset, their home, when they pay property taxes on the value of their home. Given serious and likely continuing high levels of poverty and inequality in our country, we encourage taxing other forms of wealth through a federal wealth tax (such as a small progressive rate on high net worth, an occasional “capital levy,” or other measures to meet serious social or environmental need). Financial transaction and activity taxes may also be seen as taxes on wealth.
5. Related to the above, and recognizing the role of poverty as a major determinant of poor academic performance and limited social mobility, work towards equity in education funding among jurisdictions, to alleviate remaining disparities among school districts of widely differing property wealth and resulting tax bases.

H. “Green” Taxes and New Forms of Economic Development for Future Generations

Work to adopt taxes and tax expenditures that encourage responsible stewardship and protection of God’s creation. “Green” taxes, generally speaking, incorporate a product’s social and environmental costs (often called “externalities”) into the costs of consumption, paying for remediation or innovation in some cases and reducing consumption or use that carries undesirable consequences.

1. In an ecological perspective, both nonrenewable and renewable resource use has significant costs to be compensated for through tax policy. One new approach envisions depletion taxes to be measured at the wellhead, mine, forest, or other source that could assess the value of nonrenewable and renewable resources, to be passed on to eventual customers. This would put carbon use taxes in a larger marketplace that would also put a greater valuation on the consumption of water, a range of minerals, topsoil, and other natural resources. Resource extraction industries often carry significant ignored societal costs, which should be reflected in prices through fair taxation, trade, and tariff policies. This points to a context of economic policy beyond the scope of this report that addresses ways to redirect growth and re-value social goods so as to minimize “through-put” and waste while improving the quality of life—which for Christians and many others includes a spiritual dimension. Federal subsidies of various sorts that currently encourage the extraction and exploitation of nonrenewal resources (while also reducing their market price)—for example, for coal, oil, and timber—should be eliminated promptly.

2. It should be borne in mind that green taxes fall on everyone, regardless of ability to pay. Since people’s energy use is difficult to reduce in the short term, these taxes can lay a heavy burden on those with the fewest resources. This does not mean that they should be avoided; to the contrary, their use in an era of global climate change would appear essential. Nevertheless, ability to pay (or incidence) should be taken into account when designing green taxes as when designing all other tax levies, and lower-income taxpayers must receive rebates or refundable credits to partially offset their payment of green taxes. In the case of gasoline taxes, for example, currently inadequate even for transportation system needs, necessary increases need mitigating offsets for poorer consumers. The overall transition to a lower carbon future requires much more significant public investment in energy efficient transportation, building, agricultural, and industrial infrastructure and design. (See the 2008 General Assembly report, “The Power to Change”).

The costs of not taxing more wisely now are already being seen in changing weather patterns, rising seas, and “unnatural disasters.”

1. Recommendations for the Church:

1. The 221st General Assembly (2014) invites all members, congregations, and councils and directs the appropriate officers of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to encourage study and discussion of this report and to represent its positions in the consideration of tax and related legislation at all governmental levels, and directs the Stated Clerk to communicate this report electronically and through a limited number of print copies to members, ecumenical partners, and governmental bodies, with guidance from the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The assembly further approves recommendations that:

2. Elders, deacons, pastors, and Christian educators encourage reflection among members and the broader public on the covenantal value of taxes and stewardship, including concepts such as “who are my children;” “whose shoulders do I stand on, and who stands on mine;” and “what is my responsibility towards generation-to-generation accumulating inequality?” These questions connect to significant choices in both personal giving (including charitable deductions) and to the example that Christians should set regarding the value of their communities and their country in their estate planning.

3. Because this study focused on the largest factors affecting the tax structure of our society in its global setting, it has not reviewed the specific tax laws related to the free exercise of religion that have changed since the last study of those considerations in 1988, in a report adopted by the 200th General Assembly, “God Alone Is Lord of the Conscience.” Thus the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is directed to examine developments in clergy compensation, use of government funding by church mission programs and schools, and the rules governing Section 501(c)3 and 501(c)4 organizations that may merit social witness on behalf of the church, to consult with the Advisory Committee on Litigation and ecumenical partners involved in church/state matters, and to report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) as to whether further targeted study should be authorized.

Conclusion: Taxation and the Renewal of Moral Purpose

Considered together, the necessarily detailed recommendations of this report encourage greater use of progressive taxes including income and wealth-transfer (i.e., federal and state estate and inheritance) taxes, and more limited and selective use of regressive taxes such as sales, excise and similar taxes and user fees. The twenty-plus year pattern of reducing progressive income taxes while increasing payroll and sales taxes and user fees has eroded progressivity to a serious extent, as has the relative decline in corporate tax payments. While wealthy Americans still pay a significant share of personal income taxes, the combination of payroll and other taxes on salaries and wages (rather than capital gains, carried interest, investment income) places a greater and generally disproportionate burden for the support of the common wealth on those with lower incomes and fewer assets. The Christian community is called to work against this pattern.

As is documented in the background section, citizens of the United States are not highly taxed. Among the nations gathered in the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the typical integrated tax system generates 26.1 percent of GDP. The United States’ tax system generates 17.9 percent of GDP. We believe it is clear that our current tax system is failing to raise adequate revenue to address the grievous level of poverty, with its often grinding degree of economic insecurity, and to remedy the undemocratic level of inequality in our society, nor are revenues sufficient to support thriving communities. It is our steadfast hope that this report may offer Presbyterians and fellow citizens a way to discuss the role of taxation in creating a more just, prosperous, and sustainable society for ourselves as well as our children’s children. As we understand God’s covenant today, it is our calling to strengthen the bonds of community and mutual support so that all may share in this gift of life that comes from a gracious and just God.

This calling to help renew the moral vision of our society is a calling to which we invite other churches and persons of goodwill to join in with us. Thus we share an ecumenical statement on “the Ends of Wealth and the Divine Economy” prepared for the Centennial of the National Council of Churches in 2010:

We will never create a fully just social order, yet we have a calling from God to seek whatever approximation of one that may be possible. All creation shares in an interdependent destiny, and all human communities must work to devise a sustainable future. The vision of the new and redeemed creation that ends the New Testament is of a city in harmony with nature, where—even after great suffering—“the leaves of the trees are for the healing of the nations” (Rev. 22:2).

… Unlimited growth and consumption by some are not adequate social goals. The exploitation of labor and of nature are not worthy measures of productivity … Money itself is not the only form of recognition and incentive … In theological terms, the communion of saints includes not only those who have gone before us in death, but those who come after us in God’s providence. As a stewardship rather than ownership society, the church itself looks always forward for the consummation of God’s promises.

Loss of faith in government’s capacity to change conditions … is a relative of the false god of fatalism. Government is not God, but scripture tells us that good government is of God, ordering life for justice, security, and common welfare. … In Luke 12, Jesus ends a parable with “to whom much has been given, much will be required” (Lk 12:48). He is speaking of faith, not wealth, but as we end this treatment of the ends of wealth, we point again to the divine generosity that sustains all of life. As Christians … we seek to orient ourselves so that we can point the way to a more divine economy sustained by fairer sharing of both burdens and joys.” (http://www.ncccusa.org/witnesses2010/christian-understanding-of-economy.pdf)

Rationale

TAX JUSTICE: A CHRISTIAN RESPONSE TO A NEW GILDED AGE

I. The Crisis and the Need for Reform

Having reviewed the nationwide debate over tax reform in recent years, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy wishes it could share the conclusion that the nation is moving toward a more just and effective tax system. Unfortunately, however, there are many signs that the opposite is the case, and that we continue our long drift in the direction of a tax system that is less equitable and less adequate to meet this country’s social needs.

The problems have been compounded by what is now a long-standing “race to the bottom” by both the federal and state governments. At the federal level, our laws have allowed a great deal of income from multinational companies to escape taxation, with the thought that loss of much of the country’s revenue base is justified by what is perceived as a need to create a low-tax environment for international business. At the state level, the race to the bottom has been fueled by a belief that tax rate reductions and/or the flattening of tax progressivity will attract more businesses to locate in particular states, creating more economic activity and jobs. The result has been fierce tax competition at both the international and U.S. state levels, with countries and states matching one another’s tax reductions, and a proliferation of tax avoidance and evasion. The ultimate result is that tax revenues are depressed around the world and around the United States, but no jurisdiction ends up with the competitive advantage it sought.
The U.S. economy—and the majority of American people—are facing many harmful trends. Defective tax laws, which enable tax avoidance by corporations and high-income individuals, directly add to the burden on those who pay their full taxes. At the same time, the growth in national income is heavily skewed towards the wealthy who hold investible resources. More than 20 percent of children live in poverty, but households in the top 1 percent of the income spectrum receive more than 22 percent of all income for which is publicly accounted. Over the past forty years, U.S. income inequality has increased markedly. Even though the economy has partially recovered and profits are at historic highs, the combined numbers of unemployed and discouraged workers remain at more than 10 percent—and even greater in communities of color. At the same time, taxation overall has become more regressive, pushing the cost of government onto the less well-to-do and future generations.

The result is that in our country—and in other countries that have suffered similar difficulties with respect to economic policies—resources that are needed to support human well-being are being withheld. Virtually everywhere on the globe people look to their governments for essential services like airline traffic control, basic research and development, border security, building codes, child safety, data security, diplomacy, education, electric power management, epidemic prevention, environmental protection, financial regulation, firefighters and police, food security, foreign aid, gas pipeline regulation, health care, historical preservation, inoculations, judicial services, law enforcement, marine protection, national defense, national parks, ports and harbors, postal services, prisons, professional certification, railroads, roads and bridges, sanitation, space exploration, social insurance, tax collection, underwriting, water, and zoos. Economic efficiency may argue for privatization in some instances, but we list these functions because governments generally perform them more efficiently and fairly and pay for them out of tax and fee revenues.

Greater justice in taxation will not solve all our economic ills, but effective and fair tax laws are vital for producing enough revenue for social and economic advance. It is a basic mark of a healthy social covenant that all share in the society’s benefits and burdens, and that each person’s tax burden reflects their ability to pay. Just taxation is fundamental to a moral society: to relieve poverty and its close relatives, inequality and social immobility, to provide for the common good and a thriving society. This report cannot capture the harsh realities contained in the words, “poverty,” “hunger,” and “unemployment,” whose consequences on millions of Americans may take generations to rectify. Yet the moral claim of these neighbors, suffering preventable hardship, should affect each of us at the deepest levels of faith and conscience.

We are also aware that we live in a global economy in which consideration of individual taxes in any particular country is impossible to separate from the taxation of multinational corporations. Global economic competition has tempted many countries to reduce taxes on multinational corporations in hopes of attracting corporate investment. The resulting “race to the bottom,” however, has largely nullified any competitive benefits to particular countries; instead, the reduction in tax revenues around the world severely constrains government efforts to foster education and social advancement. The effects have been especially severe in developing countries, which typically rely more heavily than wealthier countries on taxes paid by corporations, and which have especially pressing needs for government revenues in order to help improve social conditions. This global dynamic of “off-shoring” and “out-sourcing,” at least partly for tax reasons, is generally seen as legal under the system of international tax law that has developed over several decades. Tax avoidance is not the same as tax evasion. It does, however, mesh with the illegal concealment of assets by persons of great wealth and some businesses, and often the same tax “havens,” or very low tax jurisdictions, are used. Currently, organizations including the OECD (Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development) and the IMF (International Monetary Fund) have called for fundamental changes in this system, and countries should support their work through national legislation.

This report argues for robust regulation of tax havens and secrecy jurisdictions, based on their key role in “the race to the bottom.” Apart from monies lost to countries of origin by corporations registering assets or assigning income to foreign subsidiaries, the scale of illegal money held by a virtual tax haven industry cannot be ignored. Concealed monies in excess of a staggering $21 trillion have been identified based on large troves of leaked documents and extensive analysis by experts in the tax justice movement. This total includes criminal tax evasion through the use of shell companies and funds “hidden” from public accounting for generations. Again, legal structures in countries around the world allow multinational groups to transfer to havens large sums, which under rational tax laws would be considered taxable income in countries where the firms operate but instead escape taxation. Famously, one address in the Cayman Islands has more than 6,000 corporate subsidiaries headquartered there for the sole apparent purpose of tax avoidance, while the entities controlling the funds are located in Toronto, New York, Miami, and elsewhere. U.S. chartered corporations—many incorporated in secrecy-permissive Delaware—are also allowed to defer payment of taxes from overseas operations, monies that are then kept invested abroad—encouraging the outsourcing of manufacturing as well—in hopes of tax holidays that reduce taxes on profits eventually brought home (repatriated). The open proliferation of both legal tax avoidance and illegal tax evasion paints a picture, for the world to see, of cynical disregard of governments for their obligations to raise revenues to support their people. This unseemly and tragic situation rightly causes disrespect for both corporations and governments, yet it will take much improvement in laws and enforcement to correct.

In recent years, investigative reporting by journalists, as well as reports by charitable and religious organizations, has exposed the extent to which tax laws around the world have been effectively nullified as major corporations and some wealthy individuals pay little or no tax. Several important international bodies, including the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development (OECD) and the G-20 group of governments, have expressed the view that national governments around the world need to eliminate holes in their tax codes in order to end the current unacceptable situation. Concrete legislative action is needed at home, and—in concert with other countries—abroad, and we believe churches should be in the forefront of supporting the badly needed reforms.

The church recognizes that private charity, while necessary and admirable, cannot alone remedy the hardships and injustice that continue to permeate society. Our tax system needs reform to restore moral fairness and fund the common work of our towns, cities, states, and federal government. The immediate crisis should be transformed into a kairos—a defining moment—for restoring fair taxes that raise sufficient tax revenue for a sustainable society.

The need for justice in taxation is based on the fact that poor and middle class people are paying too much of the burden, while the wealthier among us systematically underpay, as the overall mix of taxes has gotten less and less progressive due to distorted but legal incentive structures and outright evasion. The growing economic divide reduces human freedom and opportunity for fulfillment for a vast number of people, and leaves some urban and rural areas as “sacrifice zones,” such as has been the case in Detroit. We need to engage in positive international cooperation. Yet the race to the bottom invites every country or state to fund only a truly minimal government.

The committee affirms the value of well-ordered, regulated markets, both domestic and international. Nevertheless, it is also clear that in order to serve human needs, private institutions must operate within government fiscal systems that can moderate economic hardships and ensure that all have the opportunity to participate in the market and other institutions on which the world depends. We acknowledge that this insistence on the constructive role of governmental institutions is to some extent countercultural in the current political climate; nevertheless, we feel it is necessary to encourage greater balance in policy debates, and it is to this end that this report is devoted.

II. “World of Hurt, Word of Life” Mandate:

In 2008, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the National Council of Churches of Christ approved a new Social Creed for the 21st Century calling for new forms of social responsibility, recognizing the new context of uneven globalization and increasing climate change (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 924ff). With regard to taxation it contains this goal: “tax and budget policies that reduce disparities between rich and poor, strengthen democracy, and provide greater opportunity for everyone within the common good” (Ibid, p. 925).

Standing against this tide and echoing the social awakening of our predecessors in the last Gilded Age, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) opposes the market fundamentalism that has diminished Christian values in our economy and political culture—values of common sacrifice and shared prosperity, care and uplift for the most vulnerable, and responsibility for future generations. (Ibid, p. 1056)

The church had not been entirely disinterested. As a 2010 report on the recession had noted pressures on church budgets, questioning, “If the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a ‘middle class church,’ how do we adapt when the middle class declines?” Whether or not any church should reflect any social class, greater tax justice depends on values and virtues that the church and other religious bodies should exemplify, teach, and nurture.

Thus, after addressing the economic dangers to jobs, families, neighbors, and long-term sustainability, that 2012 report also called for the study of tax reform here presented:

Because taxation is considered a legitimate function of government in the Christian tradition and, today, lies at the heart of debates over the role of government and the responsibilities of citizens, and because tax policy reflects the nature of social trust and mutual obligation, pushing our focus beyond the idea of “contract” to the implicit “covenant” in our society, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is directed to appoint a seven-volunteer study team to assess the values implicit in tax policy, focusing on the areas of personal income, wealth, giving, and consumption, and considering a spectrum of reform proposals. With input from a wide range of experts and policy leaders in the field, and with necessary grounding in existing church teaching on the subject and our church’s communion principles for economic reconstruction, articulated above, the study team will report its findings and recommendations to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1061)

Basic Kinds of Taxes and their Operation:

Personal income taxes are assessed by the federal government and many states on most kinds of income. Federal income taxes are progressive, though less so than in the thirty years following World War II. In 2012, personal income taxes contributed nearly half (47 percent) of federal revenue.

The tax rate assessed and paid on an additional dollar of income is called the marginal tax rate. In a progressive system, the marginal tax rate rises with rising income. Current marginal tax rates are shown in the box below.

For purposes of background, it may be useful to familiarize oneself with the basic terminology and structure of the U.S. income tax through the following simplified example. A couple has income of $150,000. To calculate their taxes, they would first subtract from their income all their deductions, either the standard deduction or itemized deductions such as mortgage interest payments, charitable donations, and state and local taxes. Assume these deductions equal $20,000, leaving them with a taxable income of $130,000. On the first $17,850 of income they pay 10 percent or $1,785. (See the chart of marginal tax rates.) On the next $54,650 (the difference between $17,850 and $72,500) they pay 15 percent or $8,197.50. On the next $57,500 (the difference between $72,500 and their taxable income of $130,000) they pay 25 percent or $14,375. So their total tax bill would be $22,750.50 or 15.2 percent of their total income. This example omits tax credits such as the Child Tax Credit and other possible deductions or exclusions from income they may have been eligible to receive and that would have reduced their tax liability. (Note: itemized deductions on incomes of $150,000 are more likely to range between $35,000–$50,000, depending on the filer’s knowledge of the tax code).

Payroll taxes are assessed by the federal government on most earnings. The taxes, deducted from workers’ paychecks (“FICA”), pay for Social Security and Medicare. Employees and employers each pay 6.2 percent of all earnings up to a cap ($117,000 in 2014) that rises each year at the rate of average wage growth. Both employers and employees also pay 1.45 percent of earnings for Medicare. Unlike Social Security, there is no cap on earnings subject to the Medicare tax. Self-employed people pay both the employer and employee share of these taxes. In 2012, payroll taxes contributed one third (34 percent) of federal revenue. This share has been rising over time.

Payroll taxes are regressive. Although the tax rate is the same for all workers (so it might mistakenly be seen as a proportional tax), other features of the tax make it regressive. First, the tax is assessed only on wages and salaries. Higher income households receive less of their income through working than do others. For example, the top 20 percent receive less than half of their income from wages or salaries while 34 percent comes from interest, dividends, capital gains, and business and proprietary income. Second, the Social Security tax is not assessed on earnings above the cap. No taxes are assessed on fringe benefits, such as employer contributions for medical insurance and retirement savings.

At this time the Social Security program is receiving more money in taxes than it pays out in benefits. The surplus is invested in Treasury bonds. But these bonds, purchased with our payroll tax money, are funding 18 percent of federal spending (a percentage that changes with the health of the economy). So a sizable portion of the current operations of the federal government are funded by a regressive tax.

Capital gains taxes are assessed on the gains from the sale of stocks, bonds, businesses, mutual funds, property, and other investments. The tax rate on capital gains is lower than the rate on wages and salaries. Households with income above $400,000 (single people) or $450,000 (couples) pay a tax of 20 percent instead of 39.6 percent, the rate they pay on earnings. Those with incomes below this level but above $36,250 (single) or $72,500 (married) pay 15 percent, not 25 percent, 33 percent, or 38 percent.

Historically, low rates on capital gains have been supported by several rationales, including the argument that some gains reflect inflation rather than real economic gain, and also that high capital gains taxes tend to “lock” investors in to particular assets in economically undesirable ways. While these arguments should be acknowledged, it also must be recognized that the benefits of a low tax rate on capital gains accrue disproportionately to the wealthy. In 2013, an estimated 94 percent of the benefits from the low rate on capital gains will go to taxpayers with cash incomes over $200,000 and three-fourths of the benefits will accrue to millionaires. Because many wealthy people receive much of their income from investments, the low tax on capital gains is a primary reason that millionaires pay lower taxes, as a share of income, than their secretaries.

Estate taxes are the most progressive federal tax, simply because they focus solely on those with the greatest capacity to pay. After changes made in January 2013, a tax of 40 percent is now assessed on estates of $5.25 million or more (this figure... is doubled if a couple owned the assets) and this amount will rise each year with inflation. In 2011, just 3,270 estates exceeded $5 million and owed estate tax. Over half of all estate taxes were paid by people who were, before death, in the top 1/10 of 1 percent of the income distribution. The estate tax helps narrow income inequality by reducing the size of massive inheritances and limits the corrosive power and influence that accompanies wealth. The tax also encourages donations to nonprofit organizations because contributions to charity made from estates are tax-free.

Our tax system contains another anomaly with respect to taxation in connection with death that is highly regressive in effect. At the time of death, a decedent’s assets receive a new income tax basis, for determining gain or loss on later sale of the asset, equal to the asset’s fair market value. This means that those receiving assets as an inheritance essentially receive forgiveness of tax on whatever gain was built into the asset at the time of the decedent’s death. This results in a very large hole in the capital gains tax; it disproportionately benefits the wealthiest; and our report recommends its elimination (perhaps with a reasonable exemption to protect relatively modest amounts of assets transferred at death).16

We recognize that in recent years the idea of estate taxes and other taxes at death has been unpopular in some quarters but we believe a fair tax system calls for the reinvigoration of taxes on large inheritances. A forthright defense of estate taxes can be found in Wealth and Our Commonwealth: Why America Should Tax Accumulated Fortunes (2002) by William Gates Sr. and Chuck Collins. A more philosophical (and theoretically aware) account of the role of accumulated intellectual capital in the creation of wealth today comes in Unjust Deserts: Wealth and Inequality in the Knowledge Economy (2008) by Gar Alperovitz and Lew Daly, which makes the case for society’s rightful claim to gains resulting from technologies made possible by shared infrastructure, culture, and above all, advanced education. Alperovitz and Daly’s case goes beyond estate taxes to support progressive taxation generally; the epigraph to their book is 1 Corinthians 4:7.

Wealth Taxes, as such, do not exist in the United States, although property taxes do assess one kind of wealth. Given the enormous and likely continuing levels of inequality in our country, where the top .01 percent, a bit more than 16,000 families, averaged more than $30 million in income each for 2012, and where the top 1 percent received 22.5 percent of national income, the study team came to give serious consideration to wealth taxes.17 As this report was being drafted, the International Monetary Fund released a study that discussed wealth taxes in relation to economic growth and income concentration.18 A recent book by economist Thomas Piketty maintains that further income and wealth concentration is inevitable and will be impervious to usual reforms. He advocates a “global wealth tax.”19 While the primary goal of taxing wealth or anything else is to derive adequate revenue for a decent society, studies of the effects of systemic inequality show economic deterioration as well as spiritual and psychological dangers.20 This brief section builds on argument elsewhere that more resources are needed for proactive governmental investment to increase employment, reduce poverty, and improve social outcomes, but it does not quantify the amounts needed as is done in alternative budgets and tax plans. The increasing trend toward wealth concentration, however, makes it difficult not to address its consequences for tax policy.

To understand the realities that would be addressed by wealth taxes, two graphs illustrate current patterns of concentration:21
III. Covenant Theology and Taxation: To Whom Much Is Given

Covenant as an alternative vision of the race to the bottom—another vision of how humans work together.

As stated in World of Hurt, Word of Life, we are called by Christ to be a new covenant community, the very body of Christ. At table, we are knit together to become a “manifestation of the Spirit for the common good” (see 1 Cor. 12:7). For believers, this experience of communion transforms our behavior. Though that experience helps us integrate all parts of our lives, we focus here on that obligation we experience to help relieve poverty and redress economic inequity.

On the one hand, the gift of communion profoundly aligns the believer with God’s creation. At table we find a grace-fed faith and hope that is eternal. Amazing! As a result, we feel blessed and deeply indebted to the God who names us, calls us a people, and invites us in our all-too-human condition to table.

On the other hand, it stirs the conscience to question how we can be guided by the profound equality forged by Christ at table. As we will demonstrate later in this document, a conscience troubled by the radical equality of Christ’s table pushes for equity in the community of Christ and the public body politic.

These two underpinnings of gift and task build on the communion theology developed in World of Hurt, Word of Life. We are convinced as people of the covenant that equity must define our life, both in our relationships with each other and our witness in the world. We who are fed at Christ’s table are filled with gratitude for the gifts and challenges that God puts before us. We invoke the Spirit and invite all to experience these gifts and challenges.

Covenant in the Bible

Christians in the Reformed Tradition have maintained that families, congregations, and political and economic communities are most just and function best when they are ordered as covenants. Covenants in the Bible contrast with contracts in which people make specified commitments to serve their mutual advantages within set limits. Covenants grow out of the awareness of indebtedness for undeserved gifts and involve exchange of promises to be faithful for the long haul. Covenants are formed when parties make vows that bind future behavior. For example, partners in a marriage covenant “tie the knot” when they promise to love one another for better or for worse, for richer or for poorer, in sickness and in health. The American Declaration of Independence is a classic political covenant because in the act of dissolving the “bands” that tied us to Britain, the signers pledged their lives, fortunes and sacred honor to engage in “acts and things that states may of right do.” These promises bind us together and are the basis of communal life. They give rise to obligations and expectations of mutual responsibility.

Covenant and Politics

Scripture portrays covenant partners as equal before God. This reinforces the equality safeguarded by the biblical land laws with their jubilee fail-safe mechanism to prevent landlessness (see Leviticus 25). Given the incredible diversity of gifts and conditions among humanity, it provides metaphysical or religiously based support for the concept of equality before the law. The importance of this equality for democratic self-governance makes us question the moral acceptability of extreme inequalities of wealth and power. By affirming God’s sovereignty equally over all others—who are all in God’s image—covenant provides a better basis than kinship or ethnicity for including strangers and immigrants into the community. Covenant gives an alternative vision for how humans can live and work together; covenant is incompatible with the above-mentioned race to the bottom.

Covenant puts the impetus for personal autonomy in creative tension with the fundamental need for a structured, orderly, and predictable communal life. In so doing, it paves a middle way between tight collectivism and atomistic individualism.

For us, it connects the communitarian core of our faith, based in communion, with universal standards of application. According to covenantal political theory, the balance between freedom and order is structured by a constitution. In the American political context, the Articles of Confederation and, later, the U.S. Constitution, as well as state constitutions, follow this
A covenantal perspective illumines the social dimensions of human life. Individuals are not self-made. They have been raised, taught, and given opportunities by the communities that nurtured them. They are indebted. While some modern economic theories reduce all motivations to rational self-interest, a covenantal viewpoint observes that, as social creatures, humans are motivated by multiple loves. These include: love of family, friends, work, one’s country, company, coworkers, customers, community, self, and God. Any of these can inspire hard work, saving, investment, entrepreneurship, and sacrificial giving. According to the Christian vision, our lives are bound to others in ways that enrich individual and common life. We are more than competitors for scarce goods.

A covenantal perspective does not denigrate hard work, but it notes that individuals can only create wealth in concert with others. They depend on the gifts of human culture, knowledge, and technology. They depend on trading partners and others with whom they can divide labor.

The fact is that individuals cannot create wealth apart from a well-defended, ordered, educated, developed, and increasingly just society. In developed societies, hardworking individuals benefit from roads and courts to enforce contracts. Indeed, we see dysfunctional societies around the globe where people toil to eke out a living with barely anything to show for it. The lesson we should take from this is that government governs best not when it governs least, but when it governs well. Chaos and devastation may be the outcome for those whose governments govern least.

Our own society presents abundant benefits and enormous opportunities. These benefits give rise to the obligations of citizenship, including a duty to participate in our democracy, defend our country from enemy threats, and care for those in need, and pay taxes. Society’s benefits are the moral basis for taxation; therefore, all taxation is not rightly considered “theft,” nor should all efforts to ameliorate economic inequality be shouted down as “class warfare.” Political rhetoric to that effect is neither balanced nor helpful.

Societal Sin

The prophets and Jesus confronted the social sin of rebellious worldly kingdoms that had become organized in defiance of God’s purposes. They help us to look beyond individual bad behavior to identify and confront corporate, systemic evil.

The recognition that societies can sin helps us appreciate that immoral behavior is not simply an expression of bad character, but can be influenced by the way a nation or other political unit allows “the game is played.” In this light, it is not enough to call sinful individuals to repent. We must also confront sinful systems and structures that condition us to do or accept evil.

Often multiple dynamics work together. For example, consider how companies seek to maximize profits, how states compete for business and capital, and how politicians seek short-term victories to win the next election. Together these forces tempt politicians to cut taxes to attract business and capital, without adequately taking into account the consequences of, effectively, nullifying portions of a country’s or state’s tax laws. The result can be a race to the bottom: chipping away at progressive taxation and lowering the quality of life for citizens. While there may be a short-term win for the politicians and companies that benefit, in the long term it may weaken economic potential by starving education, research, and infrastructure.

A Broken Covenant

Unfortunately, all of us are at times tempted to go astray, to be “free-riders.” We are tempted to value the larger community solely for what we get from it, to deny that it has showered us with gifts that make our lives possible. We can resent the demands of life together, even when these demands have been democratically decided. We are capable of ignoring what others need in order to flourish and endure.

This paper makes the case that our current situation, where extremely wealthy individuals benefit greatly from American society and do not proportionately contribute to its continuing welfare, constitutes a “broken covenant.” The ties that bind us are strained. We have lost the sense that “we are all in this together.” Tax injustice is a key marker of this. The community that made the creation of wealth possible is starved of the funds it needs to maintain infrastructure, engage in research and development, educate its young, care for the needy, and uphold the rule of law. God’s children are denied the benefits of communal life. Poverty is allowed to perpetuate for generations in what is increasingly a low-wage, low-opportunity society. God-given talents of the poor go undeveloped and are never fully employed in service to God and the community, diminishing us all. The working poor, whom some economists would characterize as “the makers,” are dismissed as “takers” because they cannot afford food, healthcare, or to educate their children without government help (i.e., wage subsidy).

The spiritual effects of economic insecurity, as experienced by, at this point, a large percentage of the American public, must also be recognized. It is hard for a citizenry to be committed to mutual support and care if so many individuals feel... themselves to be poised at the edge of economic disaster for themselves and their families. We must provide reasonable security for all before we can realize our potential as a just and mutually caring society. An equitable and adequate tax system is needed in order to promote such a society.

We will be proposing principles to guide efforts toward tax justice, but principles alone are not enough. A social vision that honors our communal nature is essential if future generations are to thrive on a healthy planet. It is gratitude that should move us to moral responsibility. It is a privilege to step up to that moral vocation, a service of obligation to God, an affirmation of the dignity for all who share our societal life, and an extension of covenantal care for the total economy of our planet.

IV. Our History of Progressive Taxation

Individual and Corporate Income Taxation (and why we need to address them both)

At the beginning of the 20th century, the Social Gospel movement in the United States roused Christian consciences concerning the harsh conditions of industrial cities and immigrant populations. This period is often called the “Gilded Age,” referring to the extreme wealth gathered by those at the top, often through monopolistic means.

The Social Gospel and parallel movements in economics and political science introduced a vision of social systems that names our interdependence in a more complex society (social order). The Social Gospel proponents argued that the Gospel of Christ needed to take new forms in new societies. The Federal Council of Churches developed a Social Creed in 1908 that advanced worker rights and social protections, many of which anticipated the New Deal by twenty-four years or more.

A key part of the re-balancing and recovery of the economy came with the adoption of the permanent and progressive federal income tax in 1913, under Presbyterian Woodrow Wilson. There was growing recognition that reliance on regressive taxes and fees and tariffs was failing to generate sufficient revenue, leaving areas of extreme poverty and otherwise leading to undesired public indebtedness. The U.S. experience then came to demonstrate how greater tax justice requires a broad base of tax-paying citizens who make governments more accountable than governments that depend solely on resource windfalls and tariffs on trade.

As the 20th century continued, the United States became a leader in progressive, broad based taxation. We were actually the eleventh country to adopt a nationwide, progressive, peacetime income tax. With its adoption, mass participation expanded. Rates became more progressive. Taxation shifted from wealth to income and reporting from voluntary to automated.32 Churches like the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stressed honesty in taxation and Americans have remained reasonably honest, although with inequality and limited social mobility more people gamble and what David Callahan calls a “cheating culture” has expanded.33 Our society may still be far from the patterns of widespread corruption in some undemocratic developing countries, where as much as a third of export revenue is estimated to be skimmed off and hidden in tax havens. A 2012 Internal Revenue Service (IRS) report on unpaid taxes from 2006 showed voluntary compliance for individual income tax payers fell from 79 to 77 percent in 2001–6, with much of the underreporting among those whose income was not subject to payroll measurement.34 While this report focuses on the ways our tax system needs to be restructured for greater fairness and less poverty and inequality, the size of the “tax gap” of uncollected revenue—an informed estimate puts the 2013 total at $566 billion—strongly suggests that cutting the IRS budget does real damage to our society and should be reversed.35

The role of income taxation grew in the United States as World Wars I and II and the Great Depression created massive needs for revenue. Understanding this need through the lens of the Gospel led to Christian social witness. The leaders of the church promoted policies favoring progressivity and broad based funding of government. For a concise treatment of the broadening and deepening understanding of public responsibilities by the church, the Social Creed for the 21st Century, approved in 2008, provides a one-page treatment of salient issues and lifts up key values.36

In the 20th century, marginal rates peaked at 94 percent for individuals filing jointly in 1944 and 79 percent for corporations in 1968–1969. Second, progressivity peaked in the mid-1960s after fifty years of development with the highest tax bracket paying 91percent on incomes over $2 million.37 This progressive, broadly based tax system was arguably efficient and sometimes sufficient enough to include payment of prior years’ debt.

Income inequality in the United States decreased until the mid-1970s, driven by a rise in wages and household income, particularly in the lower and middle parts of the income ladder. This beneficial trend has been reversed, however, and since the late 1970s, income has become steadily more unequal. Productivity still increased, particularly with the digital data revolution, but the economic rewards have gone primarily to the wealthiest, driven by falling or stagnant wages for most and dramatically increased salaries and bonuses going to those at the very top. It is hard to argue that levels of executive compensation in multiples of hundreds above workers’ wages are related to productivity, yet among other factors the tax system was losing its corrective function.38

To show the changes in sense of public obligation, we contrast the following tax schedule during Dwight Eisenhower’s presidency with the current schedule. The 1954 schedule was after a tax cut.

The worsening of inequality driven by these trends in wages and incomes has been exacerbated by changes in taxes. While incomes received by people at the top have soared, the share of their income paid in taxes has dramatically declined.

The following graphic tracks this reality and shows the effective tax rate (the share of income paid in taxes) for each income group. Taxes paid, measured as a share of income, have been somewhat stable over this period for many income groups and trended downward for the lowest income households. But the top 1/100th of 1 percent of tax payers has seen a very dramatic reduction in taxes, from approximately 70 percent of income to below 40 percent in 2004, the last year for which this data series is available.

10. Federal Individual Taxes by Reported Income Class – Reduced Progressivity

The chart shows a reduction in the progressivity of the federal personal income tax, largely driven by the massive decline in taxes paid by the highest-income tax payers. This erosion in the personal income tax is being compounded by other trends in taxation, i.e., increased reliance on payroll taxes, declines in corporate taxes, and new, sophisticated tax avoidance strategies. The reduction in taxes paid at the top and the reduction in income growth for those in the middle and the bottom of the distribution has resulted in a level of inequality tragically reminiscent of the first Gilded Age in the 1920s.

Overview of U.S. Taxes

The chart shows the sources of federal revenue between 1934 and 2012. While revenue has increased over this period, the chart shows the percentage of the total that was raised through various types of taxes. These various taxes fall very differently on different segments of the population. So the amount of revenues raised from the different taxes affects the overall fairness of the system.

Reading the chart

Each color (measured in vertical distance) indicates the percentage of all federal revenue contributed by the tax in a particular year, indicated on the horizontal axis. Consider 1970, a year shown in the middle of the bottom axis. Moving up from the 1970 hash-mark, the blue color indicating the individual income tax extends to 47 percent, a figure that can be roughly “eye-balled” off the left axis. The red color indicating corporate income taxes extends from (around) 47 percent to about 64 percent indicating a contribution of 17 percent (64 minus 47). Green (payroll taxes) extends upward from 64 percent to about 87 percent indicating a 23 percent contribution, etc.
The following changes are most significant:

- During the 1940s income taxes rose from less than 20 percent of revenues to just over 40 percent where they have continued until today.

- Corporate income taxes have declined significantly from 20 percent to nearly 40 percent during World War II to less than 10 percent today. This is partly reflected in the difference between the 35 percent official rate (actually with some variation40) and the effective corporate rate of 12.6 percent.41

- The decline in corporate income tax revenue has been largely offset by the increase in payroll tax revenue, up from the low teens in the 1950s to over one-third of all revenue today.

- Excise taxes on alcohol, tobacco, and motor fuel have also declined significantly, although many state governments have increased excise taxes over this period.

“Other” taxes in the chart include estate taxes and customs duties (tariffs).

Tax Expenditures

Individual Tax Expenditures

Before moving forward, it is necessary to define a tax expenditure42. A contribution to the church, for example, may legally be deducted from the donor’s income. This reduces the church member’s taxable income and lowers her tax payment. This “lost” revenue is a tax expenditure. The allowable deduction causes revenue not to be collected by government via the tax system. The U.S. tax system incorporates a huge variety of allowable deductions and “credits” that can reduce tax payments. These are all tax expenditures. Opinions, of course, vary widely on the wisdom of different tax expenditures, but it must be remembered that each one exacts a cost in government revenue—and each reduces the effective tax rates of those taxpayers who take advantage of them. “Tax efficiency” results from the expert use of deductions for mortgage interest, investment costs, pensions, health care, certain non-federal taxes, charitable gifts, and tax-exempt bonds and corporate structures like partnerships. With the introduction of tax credits, the set of options for tax minimization increased, as did the community of skilled advisors available to guide that strategy.

Tax expenditures under the individual and corporate income tax code have grown over the years to become nearly as large as the federal government’s discretionary spending.43 As of 2012, tax expenditures were worth more than $1.3 trillion (the budget was $3.6 trillion) and were projected to grow to more than $1.8 trillion by 2017 unless reforms are enacted.44 Indeed, on the corporate side, the yearly loss from corporate tax expenditures is now almost equal to the entire revenue collected from the federal corporate income tax.45

Tax expenditures exist at the federal, state, and local levels. At each level of government, they should be subjected to regular, careful, and transparent cost-benefit analysis. At the state and local levels many of these tax expenditures take the form of subsidies for particular kinds of business enterprises, sometimes seriously eroding government access to revenues. Some of the most debated involve tax exemptions granted to sports teams or stadium owners by municipalities like Detroit and New York City, under threat of losing the franchises to other locations.46

As of 2013, the most important tax expenditures, with rough estimates of annual revenue lost, are the following:

1. The exclusion of employer contributions to health insurance and health care ($184 billion);47
2. Preferential tax rates on dividends and long-term capital gains, relative to ordinary income ($91 billion);48
3. The mortgage interest deduction for up to two residences ($72 to $88 billion);49
4. The deduction for non-business state and local taxes and property taxes ($79 billion);50
5. The earned income credit ($60 billion);51
6. The exclusion of Medicare benefits ($58 billion);52
7. The deduction for charitable contributions ($47 billion);53
8. The forgiveness of capital gains taxation on inherited assets ($38 billion);54
9. The exclusion of capital gains on home sales ($20–$30 billion);55
10. The child tax credit ($28–$57 billion);56
11. The exclusion from individual income taxes of interest earned on state and local bonds ($18 billion);57
12. The exclusion of foreign-earned income (up to $95,100 in 2012) ($8 billion);58
13. The exclusion of interest earned on life insurance savings ($2.5 billion).59

Apart from corporations, the largest beneficiaries of tax expenditures are upper income households. (See the chart following.) In 2011, the top 10 percent of households received 53 percent of tax expenditure benefits while the top 1 percent of households received 24 percent.60 Just 11 percent of all tax expenditure dollars accrue to the lowest 40 percent of taxpayers. The Earned Income Tax Credit and Child Tax Credit are refundable tax expenditures, that is, they are paid to households even if they owe no personal income tax. Refundable tax credits (primarily the EITC and CTC) comprise 18 percent of all tax expenditures.61 But even though these two tax expenditures are particularly beneficial to lower-income people, the overall impact of tax expenditures is to benefit wealthier households.

Key Corporate Tax Expenditures:

Tax expenditures for corporations can be calculated in various ways, of which the Government Accountability Office listing of the seven largest federal corporate tax expenditures (below) is perhaps the most basic. The GAO’s summary notes the overlapping use of more than two thirds of corporate tax expenditures by individuals: “In 2011, the Department of the Treasury estimated 80 tax expenditures resulted in the government forgoing corporate tax revenue totaling more than $181 billion. Many of these tax expenditures are broadly available to both corporate and individual taxpayers. More than two-thirds or 56 of the 80 tax expenditures used by corporations in 2011 were also used by individual taxpayers, such as other types of businesses not organized as corporations.62 William Quigley provides an overview that includes an estimate of $80 billion for state and local subsidies to corporations, a CATO Institute calculation of $100 billion in direct federal subsidies (seen as market interference),63 deductions for the costs of settlements to avoid further prosecution for improper activities, and notes the de facto subsidies provided when low wage employees depend on food stamps and other public benefits.64

Burdened and Heavy Laden? How to Assess U.S. Tax Burden as an Integrated System with Moral Burdens

It has been suggested that the United States citizen is over-burdened and “heavy laden” with taxes. It may feel that way at times, especially when wages are stagnant or falling, and if other prices and perhaps interest rates are rising. And for some in our society, it is a virtual matter of faith to oppose any new taxes, no matter what the social need. No set of tables or measured argument can change such views. The goal here is simply to lay out the integrated system, allowing readers to see their tax position both within the dynamics of U.S. taxation and, briefly, within a global context. Domestically, there are some taxes that have been more or less progressive, i.e., the individual income tax, while the payroll tax is regressive giving preference to high-income earners.

Any overall comparisons must (as in the next chart) condense a large amount of data that averages state property, sales, and estate taxes, which are quite variable. States also vary widely in the amount of safety net and quality of social services, funds spent on prisons and education, the role of lotteries and casinos, etc. In contrast, other developed nations generally tax at higher rates, spend more on public goods, and provide more generous social provisions (such as medical care), all of which tend toward greater economic equality. The recommendations of this report do not follow the practice in much of Europe to use VAT, or value-added taxes on purchases, the regressive impacts of which are then offset by rebates—VAT would entail a massive restructure of the U.S. system. This report does follow most of the nations of the world, however, in recommending higher energy taxes.

The following graphic delineates tax-generated revenue for the typical United State citizen. It identifies the jurisdiction and tax schedule that generated the revenue.

One way to test the overall United States tax burden is to look at our tax obligations in relationship to other nations. The following graphic compares our percentage of taxes to Gross Domestic Product with other countries in the OECD. This chart takes into account the higher proportion of payroll taxes in the United States in comparison with mainly European nations.

From Avoidance to Evasion: Tax Competition and Tax Havens

Tax avoidance (using legal means to avoid paying taxes) is not foreign to most of us. How many have stopped at a brick and mortar retail store, checked out the merchandise and then ordered online to dodge the sales tax? Similarly, it is reasonable to expect taxpayers to modify behavior to obtain tax expenditures or to time when their income will be taxed. The ethical challenges faced by the individual start not in the domain of illegality, but in the place of personal integrity. The long-term wealth of any household is preconditioned on the success of our civil society. Aggressive tax avoidance can be seen as antithetical to an individual’s beneficial interest if one’s dependence on a “good society” is admitted, even if we do not look at needs of others or the future needs of our own families.

For the Christian, however, there is an additional overlay, the call of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to give voice to the voiceless, heal the sick, and look out for the poor, hungry, and homeless, and the sick, the widow, the orphan, and the stranger in the land, to safeguard God’s gift of creation, and to promote and protect the common good.69 To do so requires concerted action not solely accomplishable by individual acts of compassion. There is an identifiable role for government in the building of a responsible society. As a result, members of the Christian community, who are firmly grounded in Gospel and at the same time fully participating in civic society and the political economy, approach the question of tax avoidance from a distinctive ethical and transnational perspective. In the Reformed tradition we have called it a covenantal perspective, but we recognize similar values when our brother, Pope Francis, speaks of the idolatry of money and the cry of the poor.

Most Presbyterians have some acquaintance with tax competition, which occurs among jurisdictions competing to attract businesses seeking the lowest tax rates. Starting with local tax abatements (or reductions—often to attract or keep businesses), moving through interstate competition, and then seeing nations struggle for comparative advantage, sometimes sacrificing wage levels and public investment to appease powerful economic interests. The key function of the tax haven industry and its 71 or so prime jurisdictions is to be the “anchor,” or lowest points, in the “race to the bottom” that is now an unavoidable aspect of economic globalization.70 Some of the more fortunate among us face personal choices of whether to use tax havens, but they are part of the moral environment for all of us. They are part of many of our business lives, as most major corporations are themselves both driven and drivers, making extensive use of havens to “park” income transferred from subsidiaries around the world, under various tax avoidance plans, often based on defective transfer pricing rules. And our investment portfolios inevitably benefit from such practices, unless we have particularly scrupulous screens. One could perhaps even say for church investors that benefits from tax havens are a subtle form of unrelated business income.

In pre-globalization forms, tax havens have been in existence for centuries. As early as the 1930s as nominal rates increased, United States Treasury officials began to notice a rise in noncompliance, including not only misstatement of income and expenses, but also the use of offshore havens to stash income and wealth, particularly in countries like Switzerland and Lichtenstein. A ruling by the Bank of England in 1957 permitting establishment of “Euromarkets” allowed assets to be held extra-country, i.e., dollar deposits outside the United States, pound sterling outside the United Kingdom, etc. This pushed the envelope creating a large, unregulated lending industry in Panama, the Caymans and the Channel Islands and other newer locations.

Reforming secrecy jurisdictions and the related practices of tax avoidance and tax evasion is difficult. Switzerland, among other jurisdictions, until recently has fought both international requests for transparency and internal whistleblowers. The United States has itself resisted demands for transparency from the international community. Miami’s banking industry, host to Latin American depositors, has resisted reporting of income attributed to non-United States citizens. Laws in Delaware and Nevada permit corporations to be established without listing their owners; if the IRS can’t find out who owns something, taxes cannot be assessed. Just like secrecy regimes in offshore locations, these states attract business by offering secrecy which, in itself, is not evidence of illegal behavior. The states do not obtain nor divulge information that is needed for the corporations to be taxed. The role of the private banking industry and specialized large law and accounting firms cannot be explored here, but clearly plays a vital intermediary role for individuals seeking to minimize their tax burdens, and some persons go so far as to change their residency for tax purposes.

The result of opaque financial structures is an inability to determine how much tax revenue is sliding away. The amount of money booked in tax havens, much of it the result of plainly illegal activity, is enormous. The estimate of over $21 trillion was noted earlier. Another estimate, generated by the Boston Consulting Group, totals “on paper roughly $8 trillion of private wealth out of a global total of $123 trillion sits offshore, but this excludes real property, yachts and other fixed assets.” One take-away from this work of detection and analysis is the recognition that most measures of inequality are probably understated; parts of the worldwide .001 percent hold assets that are literally off the charts.

The total result of this lack of transparency is unknown, but the amounts involved would likely provide for substantial government debt reduction if ever collected. What was once tolerated in the international community is becoming less acceptable as national and regional jurisdictions cope with deficits.

The following counter trends are working to increase compliance, restrain tax competition, and to limit the power of tax havens. It may also be the case that broader trends of “re-globalization,” along with demographic and environmental changes, will affect the investment patterns of nations and the regulation of corporations, moderating dynamics that have favored inequality among and within nations.

1. The United States is a leader in the movement for wealth and income reporting from “on demand” to “mandatory and concurrent.” This is being accomplished in substance by the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act (FATCA) adopted by the 111th Congress for implementation starting in March of 2010. The act is a unilateral demand by the United States that all holdings and activities of financial accounts held by its citizens be reported electronically to the IRS. The act was an attempt to claim up to $100 billion in payment non-compliance. While the “arrogance” of this act was at first the focus of international comment and criticism, in recent months additional nations have joined the movement by also requiring similar “big data” exchanges via bi-lateral treaties.

2. On the state level, there are some bright spots, as in the substantial tax reform achieved in Minnesota, based partly on public debate and analysis of the dynamics behind corporate relocation decisions. The desirability of talented workforces, good educational and cultural capacities, and well-maintained infrastructure: these all nurture and attract businesses that are not simply “extractive,” and pay better wages. Elsewhere, an influential banker chairing the Washington State Citizen Commission for Performance Measurement of Tax Preferences has developed a comprehensive economic policy program to reverse trends towards inequality.

3. The international community has begun conceptual work on automatic exchanges to facilitate multiparty exchange of financial account data. Reaching consensus and then adoption, however, may be far in the future. The price of freedom will be vigilance and persistent advocacy for the adoption of legislation for the exchanges.

4. A global tax justice movement has emerged. The church has taken its role in the movement. Through advocacy, policy development and, where possible, whistle blowing the movement has helped generate public interest in tax justice. The movement may be seen as a multinational counterforce to the easy temptations of immediate profits and self-service.

5. The church ecumenical has taken up its role in witness and advocacy. In 2013, the General Synod of United Church of Christ, for example, adopted a resolution, “The Tax System: A Matter of Faith, Fairness, and Flourishing Communities. It’s key criteria:
An equitable tax system is:
- progressive, requiring higher-income households and corporations to pay a greater share of income in taxes than lower income ones;
- fair and without loopholes, havens and other arrangements that can be used to shield income from taxation;
- neutral, that is, does not create incentives for particular behaviors except when those behaviors are explicitly intended as a goal of public policy;
- adequate to raise sufficient funds to meet social needs and promote the welfare of all; and
- redistributive, shifting income from rich to poor to reduce income inequality and enhance the common good.

In applying these principles, their General Synod called for all income to be taxed at basically the same rate, and any “tax expenditures” to be targeted to impact less wealthy citizens. They favored keeping the corporate income tax and adding a financial transaction tax to moderate speculation toward longer term investment.

Before leaving this historical review, we return to the simple statement: the faithful interact with this world’s ability to facilitate unethical behavior in a unique, often prophetic way. We cling to the principles of Christ while challenging ourselves and the principalities of this world to act in an ever more just manner. We do so for the most vulnerable of the children of God.

V. Principles of a Just Tax System

This report addresses the heart of the matter and its primary implications: to make the U.S. tax system fairer, it needs to be:
- more progressive, taxing those with greater wealth at higher proportions of their income, wealth, and inheritance;
- more transparent, which includes both simplicity and accountability for all preferences and tax expenditures;
- more solidarity-focused, which means reducing the use of tax expenditures, shelters, and havens, and supporting more adequate international tax standards;
- more sustainable, which may mean choosing to forgo taxation by not exploiting nonrenewable resources; and
- more effective, meaning it must produce adequate revenues to provide for the common good, and avoid unwise debt which shifts taxation to future generations.

This section provides a fuller rationale for the principles outlined at the beginning of the recommendations section. The first step was to affirm the work of previous Presbyterians working on the question of fair taxation, even as this report updated that key work from thirty-seven years ago. The value of solidarity is perhaps the most significant addition, though the study team re-thought all of the principles. This was the value seen most at stake in challenging the “race to the bottom,” in order to honor social solidarity within and among nations and ensure multinational corporations contribute to the societies that provide them their wealth.

Thirty-seven years ago, the 189th General Assembly (1977) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America outlined four criteria for evaluating tax systems:
- Equity–Revenue should be generated so that the task of providing for the common good/social services is not borne disproportionately by the poor. Equity should also be sought among generations—judicious use of debt to fund society’s current work must not cause future generations to assume a disproportionate amount of the cost.
- Integrity–The tax system should be free from corruption and characterized by moral wholeness such that taxpayers recognize their communal indebtedness.
- Simplicity–The tax system should be understandable to taxpayers so they can trust the equity and integrity of the system.
- Efficiency–The tax system should generate revenue for the highest output of goods and services, including intangible outputs to increase the public good, with the least amount of administrative cost and so that the return produced is in excess of the amount expended.

Over the years new patterns have emerged that challenge the church’s witness. It is time to refresh the church’s criteria. Thus we propose that these principles be enriched by a new set of principles for a new gilded age: Progressivity, Transparency, Solidarity, Sustainability, and Adequacy.

1. Progressivity:

Each time we approach communion with Christ, we are reminded of his desire to fairly set the table of this world. In our work, equity will be enacted through progressivity:

We seek equity among generations. The failure to adequately fund the work of society today leads logically to one of two outcomes: Today’s work is not completed, or borrowing to fund today’s work causes future taxpayers to assume the cost.
We do not argue that equity is best served by a rigid or legalistic application of this principle. There are times, as in the Great Recession, when economists argue that it is appropriate to borrow. We do assert that equity requires judicious use of debt to fund society’s current work.

a. We embrace progressivity as the overarching concept of an equitable tax system. At the communion table, we are asked to serve the vulnerable, those who are dependent, the poor. Logically, this means faithful work to build a graduated tax system whose rates increase as the level of income increases. Given that the core of tax injustice is that the poor are paying proportionately more (and receiving less and less), then increased progressivity is needed to redress the resulting personal suffering and widening inequity redistribution upward of labor markets dominated by large non-union firms, low wages, and export markets.

b. The demands of equity cause us to reject a flat tax or tax expenditures that are highly regressive. Low-income individuals and families struggling to meet basic living expenses cannot pay taxes at the same rate as the higher-income individual or family. The previously affirmed principle of equity compels the church to affirm progressive tax solutions, including the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC), an effective idea pioneered by Republican economists that helps those working at low wage levels and the communities in which they live.

The believer will note that the current method of generating revenue for social security insurance is regressive, not progressive. The first dollar of a person’s wages is taxed at a flat (not progressive) percentage, while dollars over 115,001 are not taxe at all. It is highly advantageous for the high-income taxpayer but not so for the low-income taxpayer. Hence we advocate phasing out the cap, a simple change that will also ensure the soundness of that system past 2040.

2. Transparency:

It is not necessary only that a tax system be fair; it must be fair visibly, so that taxpayers are assured that all are paying their proper shares of the national tax burden. Transparency addresses the integrity of the system and would increase simplicity—consistent with the scale of the economic actor being taxed and the complexity of our economy.

In the words of St. Paul, the law can be a ‘stumbling block’ to each of us: none of us has clean hands or an envy-free imagination. When we approach the communion table, we are overtaken by grace and realize we are called to wholeness, not perfection. Another word for moral wholeness is integrity, the principle we affirm from our predecessors in 1977. At the same time, we update this principle to the word transparency, as a comprehensive look at taxation must look at organizations as well as individuals.

The tax system we seek is created, administered, and enforced in a manner that invites honesty. Unlike the equitable system described above, the inequitable system is perceived as unfair by taxpayers. If our neighbors do not pay taxes, we feel foolish paying ours. If corporations dodge taxation and receive inequitable tax expenditures, cynicism mounts. Corruption abounds. The law becomes a stumbling block.

Likewise, to sustain integrity, those who administer tax rules are expected to treat the taxpayer with dignity and respect. And the taxpayer should be informed, both about the tax rates and participation by all citizens and corporations, so that the payment of taxes is understood as both a social norm and a good.

Simplicity is an antidote to complexity. Over the past century, the U.S. tax code has added layers of complexity. The time is now for the simplification of structure through the reduction or elimination of tax expenditures. The Assembly recognizes that there is a constituency for each deduction or credit. Nonetheless, reducing tax expenditures generates the additional revenue required and makes the enterprise more understandable. But the problem is not simply that it is hard to quantify expenditures; it is a matter of trust amid entrenched special pleadings.

3. Solidarity:

We recognize that we are dependent on the community we sustain with our taxes. This communal dimension to our gratitude and to our calling prompts a further updating of the four values from 1977: the addition of solidarity.

We see our communal indebtedness as we reflect on our early years and our last days in facilities built with our taxes. We see our indebtedness as our children are reared, educated, and their identity forged with the building blocks delivered through our taxes.

We see our indebtedness as our police and military risk their lives for freedom here and around the world.

We see our indebtedness to society—that is, to one another—as corporations draw on legal and contractual traditions, move goods via roads built with our tax dollars, and hire personnel educated in our schools.

It is this sense of gratitude to the greater good of a knowledge economy developed over time that guides the report in its address to transnational corporations and other entities that weaken the solidarity within and among nations through means.
we have described. The resulting inequities have become publicly notorious and portray a global fiscal system based on cynical exploitation of defective laws, and a kind of law-making that is largely invisible to the public. Conversely, a good tax system fosters an opportunity to strengthen the communities that sustain us. For this reason, above all, we recommend the principle of solidarity.

4. Sustainability:

   Economic and environmental sustainability must go together. The tax system is one of the key ways that productive capacity is targeted to both short-term and long-term need. Prices of products and wages of people carry much valuable information, but markets alone do not reflect moral values and they have a decided short-term bias. This report reflects an overall understanding that the current level of economic inequality in our society—and its recent growth—are both immoral and unsustainable—though inequality is more addressed by the criterion of solidarity. Economic growth has typically been the recipe for addressing inequality: “a rising tide lifts all boats.” But we now see that most of our economic gains are captured by a very small share of the already very rich. According to the Wall Street Journal, 95 percent of the growth in national income between 2009 and 2012 went to the top 1 percent.88 Growth is not only threatening the environment but it is failing to correct inequality or alleviate poverty.

   (To step out of the metaphor, however, a rising tide caused by global warming is raising sea levels, causing vast amounts of economic damage along shorelines, as well as a host of other drought/flood and extreme weather patterns. According to the study by Nicholas Stern commissioned by the British government, the costs of mitigating climate change impacts grow exponentially as they are deferred.89 Already insurance costs for coastal areas are increasing, reflecting risk with increasing accumulation, and pesticide contamination.

   Sustainability as a value in taxation introduces a way to tax growth in a way that addresses externalities, or social and environmental costs, in a new and more holistic way. Sustainability means preventing unintended consequences and taxing to cover costs more immediately. It also means being clearer about incentives to eliminate waste in virtually every form. Thus the understandable goal of controlling carbon by putting a price on it addresses the chief cause of global warming, but all nonrenewable resources require more deliberate use and recycling whenever possible. The trade-offs of development become more stark, and the hazards of population growth are also increased. Even renewable resources require some level of taxation to allow precisely for their renewal—like fisheries around the world, or even fertile soil, which is being depleted by over-use, erosion, and pesticide contamination.

   Climate change and humanity’s contribution to production of greenhouse gases have focused the attention of prior General Assemblies. Drawing upon creation narratives, biblical injunctions, and ethical analysis, our predecessors have spoken prophetically about our sin against creation and God’s longing for its restoration. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved a comprehensive policy, The Power to Change–U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming. This assembly (the 218th General Assembly [2008]) which supported taxing carbon and discussed the pros and cons of “cap and trade” and other policies designed to transition toward a sustainable energy future (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/power-change-us-energy-policy-global-warming/).

   The overall argument for this principle reflects thinking on the re-direction of the economy pioneered by Herman Daly and John Cobb, but the challenge is mustering the political will, nationally and internationally, to test new models, such as that carbon taxes and increased gasoline taxes, that would advance transportation efficiency far more effectively than (still valuable) improvements in car engine efficiency.90

5. Adequacy:

   As described above, the efficient tax system

   • utilizes tax expenditures (in general) for targets that produce a social return in excess of the amount expended;

   • delivers its revenue to the end user with the least amount of administrative cost;

   • works to generate the highest output of goods and services, and intangible outputs to increase the public good.

   Yet efficiency is not an adequate measure in itself, for taxation is not simply a technical calculation that can be separated from social purpose. The debate over “revenue neutrality” can illustrate this reduction of the purpose of tax reform. Adequacy is defined by the objectives that the funding itself is to serve not simply by an arbitrary “neutral.” Efficiency, then, should guide the administration of a tax system, but effectiveness to the purposes of government should help assess tax expenditures and other subsidies, not only for their fairness, but for their aggregate results. Talking about the purposes of government leads us to the framework within which these principles interact.
Thus the report proposes moving from Equity, Integrity, Simplicity, and Efficiency to Progressivity, Transparency, Solidarity, Sustainability, and Effectiveness. These principles work in concert with each other, but also within an overall vision of mutual responsibility, a social covenant.

VI. Note on the Study Team:

As authorized by the General Assembly, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) appointed the following persons to a study team:

The Reverend Kenneth GY Grant, chair, currently a principal in a private firm administering assets for pension plans, endowments, foundations, and private and public funds; providing transfer agency and trading services for investment product; and managing investment trusts for the institutional market; Boston, Massachusetts.

The Reverend Gloria Albrecht, Ph.D., professor of Christian Ethics, Emerita, University of Detroit/Mercy; Detroit, Michigan.

Elder Ellen Pearre Cason, CPA, MBA, principal in a specialized accounting firm; New York, New York.

Elder Simon Park, Ph.D., retired mission co-worker with the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and former professor of accounting.

The Reverend Raymond Roberts, Ph.D. pastor, The Presbyterian Church of Westfield, New Jersey.

Elder Brian Rusche, director of an interfaith social justice advocacy organization; Minneapolis, Minnesota.

By special arrangement, Dr. Edith Rasell, Ph.D., M.D. an economist and staff member of the United Church of Christ, Cleveland, Ohio, served as a member and advisor to the study team.

Consultant services were provided by James S. Henry, Esq., author, public interest lawyer, former chief economist of McKinsey & Company; Sag Harbor, New York.

The Reverend Michael Durst, Esq.; recently ordained in the United Church of Christ; tax attorney and columnist; Bloomberg BNA; consultant at one time to the Internal Revenue Service; served as an advisor to the study team.

Staff assistance: The Reverend Christian Iosso, Ph.D. coordinator, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Louisville, Kentucky.

The Study Team met four times, in Boston, New York, and Cleveland, in addition to the extended public forum meeting in Washington, D.C. An eighth person appointed to the study team was unable to serve.

APPENDIX TO TAX JUSTICE REPORT TO THE 221st GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2014)

A Short Historical Account of Progressive Taxation in the United States and its Ethical Bases

By James S. Henry, Esq.

This is an edited section of a longer work on tax policy by the author, a leader in the Tax Justice movement and former chief economist for McKinsey & Company.

First Efforts

Progressive taxation has very deep roots in U.S. history. This year, 2013, marked the 100th anniversary of the first permanent progressive U.S. federal income tax. But the first crude graduated tax on personal “faculties” actually dates back to 1706 in Massachusetts. A federal income tax was also once proposed to pay the costs of the War of 1812, but the war ended before it could be adopted. At the state level, Alabama, Connecticut, North Carolina, and Virginia all experimented with income taxation before 1850, and Pennsylvania pioneered a 3 percent corporate income tax in the 1880s. The first temporary progressive federal income tax, a graduated tax of 3 to 5 percent on incomes over $11,000 and $185,000 respectively, was proposed by Abraham Lincoln and adopted by Congress in July 1862 to help finance the Civil War. In 1864 the rates were boosted to 5 to 10 percent on incomes from $7,400 to more than $124,000, then simplified in 1867 to a flat 5 percent on incomes over $14,000, and finally slashed to 1870 to 2 percent of income over $33,000. In 1872, this first, generally successful experiment with federal income taxation was repealed by the Grant Administration.

The First Gilded Age and the Christian Social Gospel

Demands to restore a peace-time federal income tax remerged in the so-called “Gilded Age” of the 1880s and 1890s. This was a period of rapid U.S. industrialization and urbanization, which generated prolonged periods of deflation and depression, the “original accumulation” of large family fortunes, and wealth concentration. This was due in part to the sidelining of the income tax from 1872 to 1913, just as elite incomes were soaring, especially in the North. The “labor problem” also emerged during this period, featuring pitched battles between, on the one hand, employers, Pinkertons, police, and federal troops, and striking workers and labor organizers on the other. For the industrialists of the new trusts, this was something of an “Atlas Shrugged” paradise, with minimal labor laws, minimum wages, health and safety regulations, housing laws, securities laws, banking laws, building codes, rights for women and minorities, anti-bribery laws, or limits on selling drugs and alcohol; instead there was child labor, eighteen-hour days, hazardous sweatshops and mines, and mind-numbing squalor and addiction, especially in densely-populated urban slums. This was a time when even the average physical heights of Americans diverged sharply by social class, a “gilded age” only for those of substantial means.95

That late 19th century American world of sweatshops and extreme inequality eventually generated antidotes: in the mines and the shop floor, a radical labor movement; on the farms, the Populist movement; and in the churches, the liberal professions, and the universities, the so-called “Progressive” movement. Each movement had its own particular causes and prescriptions for reform. Over time, however, reviving the progressive federal income tax became one of the causes that united them.

Proposals for a revival of the federal income tax first appeared during this period in the farmer-labor-based Populist and Socialist Party platforms of the 1880s. The Democratic Party, led from 1896 to 1908 by William Jennings Bryan, a devout Presbyterian from Nebraska, quickly coopted it. In 1894, the reformers won a modest 2 percent federal tax on incomes over $99,000 (in $2013). But in 1895 the U.S. Supreme Court ruled 5-4 that a federal tax on property income (unlike one on labor earnings) was unconstitutional.96 This unpopular decision helped to galvanize the demands for tax justice.

This Gilded Age campaign for the federal income tax is especially interesting to us because it was spearheaded by leading proponents and believers in the so-called “Christian Social Gospel” movement. As one historian has described it, this was “one of the most productive intellectual movements to originate from American Protestantism.”97 It was also one of the first attempts to translate religious convictions into a political agenda that would seek popular support.

Originating in the early 1880s, the Social Gospelers included such distinguished Protestant intellectuals as John T. Ely, the Johns Hopkins economist who founded the American Economics Association; theologian Walter Rauschenbusch;98 the Congregational minister Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, whose 1896 book “In His Steps—What Would Jesus Do?” sold thirty million copies, more than any other 19th century publication; John R. Commons, another noted economist; Josiah Strong, a Congregational minister who helped to organize the Federal Council of Churches in 1905-08; the leading Chicago Methodist pastor Harry F. Ward, who drafted the original 11-line Social Creed, and George D. Herron, Woodrow Wilson’s future Ambassador to Moscow.99 In 1908, thirty-three mainline Protestant churches, including the United Presbyterians, the Methodist Episcopalians (Methodists), Congregationalists, the United Lutherans, and the Northern Baptists, came together to adopt a “Social Creed” and found the Federal Council to help tackle such issues.100

Gospel Politics and the Income Tax

Theodore Roosevelt took a special interest in the Social Gospel leaders, inviting several of them to the White House in 1907.101 He became a forceful advocate for a graduated income tax, especially after he left the Presidency in 1909.102

But the key politician involved in the shaping of income tax after it became legal movement was Wilson himself. The son of a leading Southern Presbyterian minister, Wilson had studied with Professor Ely at Johns Hopkins University in the 1880s. He later became a history professor at Princeton, that University’s President, and Governor of New Jersey. In 1911-12, as a leading Progressive, Wilson realized a meteoric ascent to the U.S. Presidency, defeating President Taft, Roosevelt, and the Socialist Party’s Eugene V. Debs in that year’s hotly-contended four-way race.

Wilson achieved this success while maintaining and deepening his commitment to the “Social Gospel” version of Christianity. As he later recalled, “Christianity gave us in the fullness of time the perfect image of right living, the secret of social and of individual well-being. For the two are not separable.”103 Such convictions played a key part in his conclusion—to the consternation of his Wall Street friends—that “The most serious problem facing us today is the concentration of money power in the hands of a few.”

But Wilson was no socialist. Indeed, only a handful of Social Gospelers could be accused of being “Christian Socialists” who questioned the very foundations of capitalism. Rather, Wilson, Bryan, and most key Social Gospelers were simply trying, in Bryan’s words, to practice “applied Christianity.”104 They sought to smooth capitalism’s rough edges with basic reforms like the 8-hour day, the 6-day week, anti-monopoly laws, and taxes on income and wealth.

From a theological standpoint, they believed that Christianity was not just about individual salvation, the after-life, or fervent protestations of belief. As Rauschenbusch wrote, “The Lord’s Prayer is … not the property of those whose chief aim is to pass through an evil world in safety, leaving evil unshaken.”105 They saw Jesus as an activist, even to some extent an enemy of the state, whose spoken words were inspiring, but whose silent deeds were even more inspiring: healing the sick, feeding the hungry, comforting social outcasts, and expelling the money changers, even at the risk of defying conventional religious and political authorities. In their view, it was hard to make sense of such actions if faith alone, absent active involvement, were sufficient for “salvation.”

Of course the Social Gospel thinkers were not the only proponents of the federal income tax. Even some business interests supported it as a substitute for high federal tariffs, which were hurting trade. Nor were the tax rates enacted all that progressive, at first.106 Still, the Social Gospel contributed significantly to providing ethical and religious foundations for Progressive reforms in the pre-war period.107

The 1913 Federal Income Tax

The campaign for the first U.S. peacetime income tax, led by Progressives and supported by the Social Gospel movement, culminated in the 16th Amendment, which was adopted by Congress in 1909 and ratified in 1913 after Wilson’s election. At first the individual income tax was barely progressive—a modest 1 percent tax on net incomes over $4,000 ($90,000 in $2013). For the top .5 percent with incomes above $20,000 ($450,000 in 2013), there was a 2 to 7 percent surtax, with the top rate applying to incomes over $11.6 million ($2013). Since 1909 there had also been a 1 percent on corporate net income above $100,000 ($2013). The first federal estate tax was added in 1916.

Compared to today’s “tax expenditure”-laden environment, this was a pristine income tax. At a time when the average U.S. household earned $16,000, only 358,000 out of 37 million households, or less than 1 percent, had to file federal tax returns in 1913-16, and U.S. Treasury’s Bureau of Internal Revenue could make do with just 4,000 employees.108

But costly wars and income taxation go hand in hand, at least until the 21st century. Under the impact of impending U.S. entry to World War I in April 1917, the Revenue Acts of 1916-17 halved the $90,000 exemption, doubled the minimum rate, and adopted a 4 to 67 percent on incomes over $100,000 ($2013)—the top 5 percent. For corporations there was also a new 12 percent “excess profits” tax regime.109 The 67 percent rate only applied to the top 400 households with incomes over $36 million.

Overall, however, by comparison with regressive excise taxes and distorting tariffs, this new system quickly proved not only fairer, but also could generate enormous sums of tax revenue even in wartime. In 1914 the federal income taxes generated just 10 percent of a much smaller federal revenue base; by 1918, its share of revenue was 69 percent. While the U.S. had only been the 11th country in the world to adopt a nationwide income tax, by then it had the world’s most progressive income tax system. World War I was responsible for accelerating this development, but Wilson and his fellow Progressives and Social Gospel leaders had given it a strong start.

The Expansion of Progressive Taxation in the U. S.

For our purposes, the key point of this story is that for decades the U.S. led the world in fair income and wealth taxation. Furthermore, this experiment with mass-based progressive income taxes was a resounding success. Not only were strong progressive rates adopted and maintained, but mass participation in the tax system soared.110 This was partly because minimum tax rates for people with lower incomes were also raised, and partly because tax authorities decided that millions of ordinary workers—unlike the recipients of property income—would be subject to a withholding tax on wages, rather than voluntary reporting. The resulting broad tax base complemented high progressive tax rates by making everyone pay a little.

Of course there were vehement opponents along the way—for example, Andrew Mellon, the Pittsburgh banking, steel, Alcoa, and Gulf Oil magnate who served as Treasury Secretary under three Republican Presidents from 1921 to 1932. One of the three richest people in the U.S., his series of revenue acts in the 1920s substantially weakened Wilson’s progressive income tax and estate tax. But the Great Depression led to Franklin D. Roosevelt’s victory over Herbert Hoover, and to Mellon’s prosecution for income tax evasion in 1934-35. Especially after 1936, FDR relied on stiff progressive tax rates as well as increased borrowing to finance New Deal spending programs and World War II.

The Great Depression and the war were followed by the Cold War, the Korean War, and a costly arms race. For two decades after World War II, the national security issue helped to justify high progressive tax rates to the public.

During the system’s first fifty years, both individual and corporate progressivity increased significantly. In 1917-20, as a result of the U.S. entering World War I, federal rates on individual incomes were boosted from a 2 percent to 15 percent range to a 4 percent to 73 percent range, with the top rate applying to incomes over $50 million.111 Similarly, during the Depression, federal rates extended from 4 percent on $10,000 to 63 percent on $50,000,000 or more, while during World War II (1941-45) they extended from 10 percent to 94 percent on $50 million or more. Rates peaked at 94 percent for individuals in 1944 and 79 percent for corporations in 1968-69.112 In contrast, as of 2013, the top rate of 39.6 percent for non-capital gains income kicks in at $440,876 (for married couples filing jointly), with no higher rate beyond that.113 Many states also enacted income taxes, as well as estate taxes, property taxes, and sales taxes.

Once in place, these high federal graduated rates tended to be applied to lower income levels, which made the system more progressive. By 1963, at the fifty-year mark, the system was at its peak level of progressivity, with incomes over $100,000 taxed at 75 percent, a 91 percent rate on incomes over $2 million, and a 75 percent-plus rate on corporate income taxes as well.

Of course these were not the actual “effective” tax rates that most people were paying. During the 1930s, for example, as nominal rates increased, U.S. Treasury officials began to notice a sharp rise in non-compliance, including not only misstatements of expenses and income, but also the use of offshore havens to stash income and wealth. A 1937 letter from Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau to FDR complains that at the time, wealthy Americans had started to use “offshore havens” like Panama and Newfoundland (!) to hide their riches.

Second, over time, the high rates also generated a lucrative tax planning industry, as wealthy taxpayers became adroit at exploiting “tax expenditures” like deductions for mortgage interest, investment costs, pensions, and charitable contributions, as well as the market for tax-exempt municipal bonds.114 As tax dodging became more sophisticated, the understaffed IRS of the period accumulated a multi-year audit backlog.

Still, even after taking into account the growth of avoidance mechanisms, the U.S. post-tax distribution of income during this high tax period was significantly less unequal than the pre-tax distribution. Inequalities of wealth and income declined dramatically during World War II, the 1950s and early 1960s, aided not only by the impact of the Great Depression and WWII on large fortunes, but also by steep marginal rates on high incomes.115 At the same time, the ratio of public debt to GDP, which had increased sharply during World War II, steadily declined. During this post-war period the U.S. acquired a dominant position in the world economy, and progressive income taxes allowed the Treasury to share in the very profitable expansion of U. S. businesses.

The Decline and Fall of Progressive Taxation in the U. S.

While “tax expenditures” and tax dodging appeared on the stage quite early, as of 1963 the U.S. federal income tax was still quite broad and progressive.116 The same basic progressive federal structure had prevailed throughout the late 1940s and 1950s. One can debate what the “effective” tax rates really were back then, after taking into account write-offs and deductions, especially for the corporate tax.
But compared with today’s rates, there is little question that the overall federal income tax regime in the early 1960s was much more progressive.

The first modest retreat from progressive taxation began in January 1963, when President Kennedy proposed to cut the maximum individual federal tax rate to 65 percent and the minimum rate to 14 percent, with lower corporate rates as well. Kennedy intended this to be a “demand-side” stimulus for consumption and investment in a period of excess capacity, not as a “supply-side” incentive. But it marked the first time since the 1920s that aggressive rate reductions were proposed for the very top of the income distribution. Interestingly, Kennedy’s proposal was rejected by the Democratic-majority Congress. In early 1964 President Johnson got Congress to cut the top individual rate to 77 percent, and to reduce corporate rates slightly.

For the next decade reductions in progressivity were limited, but the conditions were building for an anti-tax movement. The U.S. economy started to experience more erratic growth, fueled by higher energy costs, increased global competition, and increased political instability around the globe. That period’s prolonged series of unexpected shocks included the 1970 recession, the 1971 decision to float the U.S. dollar, the Arab-Israeli war and the OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Export Countries) oil price spikes of 1973, the 1974-75 recession, and the 1979 Iranian Revolution, which set off another sharp oil price spike. Meanwhile, more and more U.S. multinational corporations (MNCs) and banks started to move their operations, intellectual property, and other assets offshore for tax purposes, taking advantage of new tax code provisions that permitted foreign profits to be stockpiled abroad tax free, as well an expanded offshore haven network and accelerated globalization of trade and investment.

In 1976, the Supreme Court issued the first of several decisions that undercut Congressional attempts to limit the role of money in political campaigns. Over time, this permitted the country’s largest financial institutions, multinational corporations (MNCs), and the wealthy to purchase greater political influence relative to unions, the middle class, and the poor. Abroad, similar interests also began to acquire increased influence in other key OECD (Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development) countries, notably the United Kingdom and Germany.

The Floodgates

Largely as a result of these developments, there was a sharp decline in U.S. income tax progressivity, especially after 1981. This was partly the direct result of the lower nominal tax rates noted above. But there was also a rise in “tax expenditures” that favored special interests, as well as a decline in the IRS’ real resources for tax enforcement. Since the 1990s it also become much easier for MNCs to engage in “legal” tax avoidance by offshoring their intellectual property and trading companies to low-tax havens, allowing them to retain billions in profits abroad tax free.

Finally, there was also a shift of the overall U.S. tax base from progressive federal corporate and individual income taxes to other much less progressive taxes. In particular, the key fact about payroll, sales, property, and non-federal income taxes is that they are not only less progressive than the federal income tax, but regressive. As one recent study of state and local taxation concluded, “Nearly every state and local tax system takes a much greater share of income from middle- and low-income families than from the wealthy.” Indeed, in many localities families with incomes less than $25,000—less than half the median income for a family of four—now pay far higher combined state and local tax rates than those with incomes over $150,000.

While anti-tax lobbyists may note that wealthy individuals now pay the bulk of income taxes, almost all Americans pay these much more regressive taxes, which are virtually unavoidable. Once all these other taxes are taken into account, there has been a clear trend to purchase greater political influence relative to unions, the middle class, and the poor. The anti-tax agenda seems determined to push this even farther, with some advocating the replacement of federal income taxes with VAT (value added) taxes.

Endnotes

1. This data comes from the Economic Policy Institute: http://inequality.org/wealth-inequality/ It does not reflect the gains made by the Forbes 400, for example, due especially to the stock market recovery: http://www.forbes.com/forbes-400/

2. This recommendation would generally support the recently proposed IRS rulemaking, “Guidance for Tax-Exempt Social Welfare Organizations on Candidate-Related Political Activities,” though additional regulation and legislation is likely to be needed to address the sheer scale of political contributions by a small percentage of extremely wealthy citizens and non-citizens (one reason for disclosure of contributor names). See: http://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2013-11-29/pdf/2013-28492.pdf .

3. The goal here is to reduce incentives for corporations to grant salaries, bonuses, and options packages that have little discernable relation to productivity and that often exceed by fifty or more times the average wage of all workers in large firms. An alternative practiced elsewhere would put graduated levies on those corporations with highly elevated CEO salaries, recognizing that the U.S. has been the leader in CEO salary levels, while having near the lowest minimum wage among developed countries. Consideration of the moral impacts of excessive severance and “golden parachute” arrangements is beyond the scope of this report, but a 2010 treatment of the theology of compensation can be found at: http://www.pcusa.org/resource/neither-poverty-nor-riches

4. The General Assembly report, Just Globalization: Justice, Ownership, and Accountability (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/resolution-just-globalization/) called for a “small tax on international capital transactions,” associating such a tax with the “Tobin Tax,” named for the late economist, James Tobin that was to be applied to currency transactions. This language would allow for harmonization with the financial transactions taxes en route to implementation in Europe and now often termed “Robin Hood” taxes: see http://www.robinhoodtax.org/.

7. For a cross-section of 140 countries at all income levels, it turns out that government spending as a share of national income has averaged 23 percent over the past decade. Significantly, for the thirty-four OECD countries at the top of the income distribution—including the U.S., the UK, France, and Germany—it has averaged 33 percent. This data sample is from the World Bank’s World Development Indicators data base (2013). It includes all 140 countries for which the required indicators are available, including all OECD—Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development—countries. The 33 percent overall average is for federal government spending. In the U.S., where state and local government spending is also quite important, the median ratio of government spending at all levels to GDP for 2001–2012 was 32.8 percent, while the ratio for federal government spending alone was 21 percent. U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis (2013) data, James S. Henry analysis.

8. In an earlier and much longer version of this report, economist and lawyer James S. Henry began his assessment of the needs for tax revenue and public investment with the realities of hunger and poor health affecting millions of U.S. citizens, and then documented twelve other consequences of the poverty and inequality tolerated, if not generated, by the concentration of wealth and power mirrored in our tax system.

16. In slightly more detail, there is currently a significant difference between gifts and inheritance that the report’s recommendations seek to eliminate. This relates to how the accumulated gain in value of assets is calculated. Gain upon sale is, generally, the difference between the basis (original cost with certain adjustments) and the sale price (where the sale price is higher). In the sale of a gift, the basis is that of the donor at the time originally bought/acquired. In the sale of an inheritance, the current basis is that on the date of death of the donor and the accumulated unrealized gains from the donor’s purchase to date of death (sometimes decades) are permanently tax-free for both the deceased and the inheritor. Conversely, under the “carryover basis” method, accumulated gains on inherited assets are not taxed until their eventual sale (as is true of gifts), and at that time all accumulated unrealized gains since the donor’s purchase are subject to tax (as is true of gifts). Because there is such dramatically different tax treatment of a gift received a week prior to death, versus an inheritance received a week later, this method would greatly simplify certain distortions of estate tax planning, in addition to related family dynamics.

23. The Hebrew word for covenant, brit, means “to bind.”

24. Note that “obligation” and “religion,” contain the word “ligament,” reflecting their covenantal origins.

25. The word “partner” is associated with covenantal language and expresses equality among the members of the covenantal community.

27. In families covenants are constituted informally as partners negotiate the duties of life together. In larger groups, however, the process of constituting life together is more formal. The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church is an example of how larger group life can take structure and form. Federal theologians claim that Deuteronomy functioned as the constitution for ancient Israel.

28. Revolutionary War patriot (1797) Thomas Paine, in Agrarian Justice (1797), put it this way, “Separate an individual from society, and give him an island or a continent to possess, and he cannot acquire personal property. He cannot be rich. So inseparably are the means connected with the end, in all cases, that where the former do not exist the latter cannot be obtained. All accumulation, therefore, of personal property, beyond what a man’s own hands produce, is derived to him by living in society; and he owes on every principle of justice, of gratitude, and of civilization, a part of that accumulation back again to society from whence the whole came.”

29. For example, Jesus confronted systemic evil of his day when he touched those who were considered unclean (Mk. 5:21–34), told the parable of the Good Samaritan (Lk. 10:25–37), and turned over the tables in the temple (Mt. 21:12).

31. We want to emphasize that our intention is not to disparage business and market institutions, which serve many good and worthy purposes. We do not believe it helpful, as some rhetoric has done, to equate profit with greed. Companies need to stay profitable to stay in business in order to meet human needs.

32. The move to automation was made possible, in part, by the reliance on employer-generated wage data submitted to the Internal Revenue Service. Technology, including the current generation’s work in “big data”, reduced the cost of providing data and increased the efficiency of reporting. Recent innovations include the electronic reporting by financial institutions of cost basis for the calculation of realized capital gains and losses.

38. This paragraph generalizes a number of factors treated at greater length in World of Hurt, Word of Life (2012). Changes that shorten the length of the supply chain (or global distribution of production), some related to energy development within the U.S., may improve the bargaining position of some workers, but as long as high unemployment persists, inequality will be reinforced.

42. Harvard Law Professor Stan Surrey coined the term “tax expenditures” for these preferences back in the 1970s, capturing the essential idea that they are, in effect, government subsidies. The Joint Committee on Taxation uses this definition: “Tax expenditures are defined under the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (the “Budget Act”) as “revenue losses attributable to provisions of the Federal tax laws which allow a special exclusion, exemption, or deduction from gross income or which provide a special credit, a preferential rate of tax, or a deferral of tax liability.” (Pub. L. No. 93-344), sec. 3(3). Quoted from ESTIMATES OF FEDERAL TAX EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEARS 2012-2017, Joint Committee on Taxation, Feb 1, 2013, pub. JCS-1-13.

This reference is from the World of Hurt, Word of Life approved by the 220th General Assembly (2012) and the charter of the Tax Reform Study Team: “Yet we cannot serve two masters. If we are to confront this moral crisis we must recover the biblical values of justice, compassion and covenant community. We must seek nothing less than to place God—not the economy, wealth, or competition—at the center of our lives. In doing so, we will empower our church, our society, and our government to look out for the poor and the sick, the widow, the orphan, and the stranger in the land, to safeguard God’s gift of creation, and to promote and protect the common good. The depth and scale of the challenges force us to respond, not only to the obvious distress of many we know and love, but to the many more God commands us to love. This challenge is more than a call for a new ethical compass in our personal behavior. The work of economic reconstruction today requires something like a new national covenant, a new public framework derived from authentic religious values, to reorient the way wealth is produced and shared and to reclaim the role of government in securing the common good.” 220th General Assembly (2012), World of Hurt, Word of Life, p. 1.

For a study relating noncompliance to effective tax rates for corporations using statistical analysis: Michelle Hanlon, Lillian Mills, Joel Slemrod, “An Empirical Examination of Corporate Tax Noncompliance,” June 24, 2005, online: [http://www.bus.umn.edu/otpr/ WP2005-7.pdf](http://www.bus.umn.edu/otpr/ WP2005-7.pdf). This study largely confirms the anecdotal view that larger and more complex firms (generally multinational) have more options for noncompliance. The business school authors observe that companies with more intangible assets have more opportunity for tax planning. Accepting the concept of “tax aggressive” corporations, where the tax departments may be viewed as profit centers, they find “preliminary evidence that executive compensation is positively related to tax non-compliance,” p. 23.

The committee notes that FATCA is an example of tax compliance theory at work. Here the taxpayer is viewed as a potentially unreliable self-reporter of income. To counteract this propensity third parties are asked to report taxable income, etc. For example, employee income is documented by payroll reporting generated by the employer. Financial institutions are now required to report capital gains, not simply the value realized at the sale of a security. Each of these is an example of third party reporting aided by the emergence of big data and as a result a limitation on tax avoidance or fraudulent evasion.

Contrary to anarchist and libertarian positions that seek to reduce taxes in order to starve governmental functions, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has articulated a policy witness that promotes an appropriate role for the civil society. Freedom requires a funded government and taxes are required to sustain that government. We argue that taxation meet the principles of progressivity, transparency, solidarity, sustainability and effectiveness as defined in this document.

A tax expenditure is a tax credit or deduction that exempts some or all of the tax payer’s income or wealth, as defined at note 34.

The Study Group notes that political rhetoric suggesting that “many people” or the “poor” or another group of the society do not pay taxes is inaccurate. Every working individual pays the social security tax from dollar one of his or her employment compensation. This is a flat tax up to approximately $115,000 in 2014.
87. The study group celebrates that longevity of members of our community of faith. Eighty years old is the new seventy for many. This lengthening of the years of life is made possible by the public health efforts of government. Without taxes and the revenue they provide we would die at a surprisingly early age, as previously.

90. MIT Study: Carbon Tax a “Win-Win-Win” for America’s Future. John Reilly and Sebastian Rausch in a 2012 study, “Carbon Tax Revenue and the Budget Deficit: A Win-Win-Win Solution?” published by MIT “calculated the impact a carbon tax starting at $20 per ton would have using a national economic model that details energy taxes and household incomes. They found that the tax would raise $1.5 trillion in revenue, which could then be used to reduce personal or corporate income taxes, extend the payroll tax cut that expires this year, maintain spending on social programs—or some combination of these options—while reducing the deficit.” See also Valerie Karplus, “The Case for a Higher Gasoline Tax,” The New York Times, February 22, 2013, a summary of a much longer paper in the journal, Energy Economics.

93. All tax bracket figures are in comparable $2013.

94. For historical U.S. individual federal income tax rates and brackets, see http://taxfoundation.org/article/us-federal-individual-income-tax-rates-history-1913-2013-nominal-and-inflation-adjusted-brackets. This source provides inflation-adjusted brackets back to 1913. For earlier periods we have used the historical deflators available at http://www.measuringworth.com/uscompare/#. In the repeal of the income tax during the Grant Administration may be seen some of the same private interests that prevailed in the Teapot Dome and other scandals.

96. The tax in question was a 2 percent tax on bond income. See Pollack v. Farmers’ Loan and Trust Company. 157 U.S. 429 (1895).

102. See the famous progressive speech that Roosevelt made at Osawatomie, Kansas, on August 10, 1910, which included a rousing endorsement of a graduated income tax: http://teachingamericanhistory.org/library/document/new-nationalism-speech/.

106. See Exhibit 8 Appendix Slides: “Family Tax Rates by $2013 Income Level, 1913–2013.” (Slides of data calculations referred to here and below were developed by James S. Henry and are available from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy—ACSWP.)

107. At least on issues not involving race, alcohol, or immigration; from today’s standpoint, some supporters of the social reform were quite politically incorrect when it came to their patronizing attitudes toward blacks and immigrants. Several also became strong advocates of Prohibition, seen as a moral, economic, and public health issue. On questions of racial equality and especially the “Jim Crow” laws that were sweeping the South at the time, the largely white supporters of economic reforms, including Bryan and Wilson, were only intermittently progressive. See Berg, Wilson, op. cit. Indeed, under Wilson’s presidency, Jim Crow laws were extended to Washington D.C. This is one of the few blemishes on Wilson’s otherwise forthright role with respect to progressive causes, from tax justice and labor laws to the League of Nations.

108. See Exhibit 8, Appendix Slides.” Family Tax Rates by $2013 Income Level, 1913-2013.” (as at note 106).

111. All tax bracket figures are in comparable $2013.

113. See Exhibit 8, Appendix Slides:”Family Tax Rates by $2013 Income Level, 1913–2013.”

116. See Exhibit 8, Appendix Slides: “Family Tax Rates by Real $2013 HH Income Level.” On the individual side, in real $2013 terms, tax rates ran from 20 percent on the first $10,000 to $100,000, 38 percent on $100,000 to $500,000, 78 percent on $500,000 to $1 million, 85 percent on $1 million to $5 million, and a full 91 percent on net incomes over $5 million. The nominal federal corporate tax rates were 30 percent on the first $25,000 of net income and 52 percent on income over $25,000, with a 22 percent surtax, for a combined maximum of 74 percent.

117. As of February 2013, the maximum nominal federal rate was 39.6 percent for individuals and 35 to 39 percent for corporations. The marginal nominal corporate tax rate is a temporary 39.1 percent for corporate profits in the narrow bracket $100,000 to $335,000, and 38 percent in the bracket $15 million to $18.3 million due to the phasing out of lower brackets. For corporate from $335,000 to $10,000,000 the rate is 34 percent; for $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 and over $18,333,000, 35 percent.

118. There are heated arguments about what the average effective federal income tax rates on for companies and small business, but the best recent estimate is about 18.5 percent, with far lower rates for MNCs on their non-U.S. profits and royalties. See CTJ(2011): “Corporate Tax Payers and Corporate Tax Dodgers, 2008-2010,” at http://www.ctj.org/corporatetaxdodgers/CorporateTaxDodgersReport.pdf. For US state corporate income taxes, the average effective state corporate income tax rate is about 3 percent. After allowing for interactions, the average combined rate is about 20.9 percent as of 2013. For a corporate view, with less accurate accounting, see Price Waterhouse Coopers, “Assessing Tax: 2013 Tax Rate Benchmarking Study,” available at http://www.pwc.com/en_US/us/industrial-products/publications/assets/pwc-industrial-products-tax-rate-benchmarking-report-2013.pdf; and Tax Foundation (2011, 2013), at http://taxfoundation.org/sites/taxfoundation.org/files/docs/sr195.pdf; http://taxfoundation.org/blog/another-study-confirms-us-has-one-highest-effective-corporate-tax-rates-world Both TF and PWC found much higher average effective rates, at 27 percent. The TF methodology, however, based their calculations on profits reported by companies to the IRS—though the point of tax avoidance is to reduce reported profits below actual profits.

120. See Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), which struck down federal campaign spending limits. This was one of the first in a series of decisions by the court that expanded the role of money in U.S. political campaigns, on the view that “money is speech.”

121. See Exhibit 9, Appendix Slides: “Federal Individual Income Taxes by Reported Income Class—Reduced Progressivity: 1960s to 2000s.” The chart on this data ends in 2004, but the reduced federal income tax progressivity trend continued until January 2013, when the top federal rate was boosted slightly, from 35 percent to 39.6 percent, a 13 percent jump. At the same time, however, a 2011 cap on employee payroll tax rates was removed, allowing them to increase by 2 percentage points, a 15 percent jump. So once take federal payroll tax rates into account, it is not clear that overall progressivity increased in 2013.

124. In 2009, about a third of state tax revenues derived from property taxes. 23 percent were from sales taxes, 21 percent from individual income taxes, just 3.6 percent were from state corporate taxes, 1 percent were from state estate taxes, and 19 percent came from various other generally regressive taxes. [The assembly approved Item 09-17 with amendment. See pp. 15, 39.]

The Self-Study Report of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) to engage, communicate, and collaborate with all areas of the Presbyterian Mission Agency on matters of gender justice advocacy.
2. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) to ask members of ACWC to communicate the work of ACWC to their home synods, presbyteries, congregations, and other PC(USA) constituencies in which they participate and to bring back to ACWC local gender justice concerns from these groups in order to increase the knowledge of ACWC around the church and to inform ACWC’s work with the broader concerns of the church.

3. Urge the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns to use the summary report from the survey conducted by the PC(USA) Research Services to inform its work priorities for the next four years.17

4. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns to continue to advocate for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to an intersectional perspective and approach to gender and racial justice issues, as described in the 218th General Assembly (2008) approved document, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, including advocating for robust action lifting up and celebrating the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God and monitoring the fulfillment of all recommendations made by past and future Women of Color Consultations.18

5. Incorporate the review of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns’ Manual of Operations and meeting minutes as a part of ACWC’s regular Six-Year Self-Study Review process with the General Assembly, removing this responsibility from the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

[6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to comply with the current (November 2013) Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual in maintaining the dual-member relationship with ACWC, in accordance with the instruction that the advocacy committees “shall” have a member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, and in light of the particular nature of the advocacy committee’s mandate to “advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of women’s concerns” and to “monitor the implementation of women’s policies and programs relative to women’s concerns.”19]

[7.] [6.] Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to uphold the instruction given by the 205th General Assembly (1993) to ensure programmatic advocacy: “Under the leadership of those working in the areas of racial ethnic ministries and women’s ministries, ... ensure advocacy and monitoring functions ... throughout the ministries and agencies of the General Assembly.”20

A. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns’ Background & Purpose

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), acknowledging the reality of pervasive societal and institutional systems of racism and sexism, established two advocacy committees with the purpose of holding the denomination accountable to its commitment to gender and racial justice. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) was created by the General Assembly to:

assist the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to give full expression of the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, F-1.0403. The committee shall monitor and evaluate policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church and the world and shall advocate for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society as a whole.21

The committee was created to ensure the PC(USA) is faithful to its commitment to gender justice—both internally and in its witness to the wider world.22 Unfortunately, left in the wake of the creation of ACWC was a major downsizing of the church’s programmatic gender justice work. What was once a full Women’s Ministry Unit became a program area within the National Ministries Division.23 Four committees—The Women’s Ministry Unit Committee, the Women Employed by the Church Committee, the Justice for Women Committee, and the Committee of Women of Color—were all eliminated just...

22 This was in adherence to the Articles of Agreement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at reunion: “The General Assembly Council in its development of a design for the work of the General Assembly shall also ensure the continuance of the advocacy and monitoring functions of the existing Councils on Church and Race (both denominations), Committee on Women’s Concerns (Presbyterian Church in the United States) and Council on Women and the Church (The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America) Until such time as the design for work of the General Assembly is completed and these functions are ensured, the existing structures and functions of these bodies shall be maintained” (Article 5.6) prior to the creation of ACWC. So while the creation of the advocacy committee represents a commitment of the church to maintain some element of monitoring its practices with regards to gender justice, it also represented a major reduction in the priority given to gender justice issues within the PC(USA).

With this noted, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns exists because as a church coming out of the Reformed tradition, the PC(USA) acknowledges that sin is real and that the system will necessarily need tuning and prompting, prodding and adjusting. In a world where people are still mistreated, silenced, and ignored because of their gender, the voice of advocacy for women is still necessary. The denomination was intentional about ensuring resourcing and support to encourage gender justice within the PC(USA), because that voice helps to continually re-create the church to be a better reflection of God’s realm on earth. Sometimes the voice of advocacy calls for looking internally and making some changes within. Other times it challenges the church to be to the world a bold voice and strong example of what is just.

While categorized as a committee of the General Assembly, ACWC’s staff person is lodged in the Executive Director’s Office of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The current requirements for the makeup of the membership of the committee are found in the Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual of Operations:

C. Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)

This advocacy committee shall consist of:

2 clergy women
1 woman church lay employee
1 Presbyterian Women Churchwide Coordinating Team Vice Moderator for Justice and Peace
7 members at-large, chosen to balance the committee geographically, racially and ethnically, and with consideration to age and expertise.
1 Presbyterian Mission Agency Board [member] nominated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to serve a four-year non-renewable term. This voting member fulfills the responsibility of liaison between the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the advocacy committee.

At least four members of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns shall be racial ethnic women. At least two members of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns will be men, but no more than three members may be men.

The intentionally diverse composition of ACWC results in varied experiences, knowledge, and expertise around the table. In addition to the direct membership connections to Presbyterian Women and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, ACWC sends and receives liaison members to the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP). The ACWC also has one member who holds dual membership with ACWC and the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), a position that allows this person voice and vote on both committees. Two members of ACWC also serve as members of the Women of Color Joint Working Group. Throughout the years, ACWC has invited liaisons from the National Association of Presbyterian Clergywomen (NAPC), Racial Ethnic Young Women Together (REYWT), the National Network of Presbyterian College Women (NNPCW), World Mission, and the communications department of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, with varying levels of presence by these representatives. During any meetings that occur in Louisville, ACWC is intentional about connecting with various staff people from the Presbyterian Mission Agency, including staff from Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, Compassion, Peace and Justice, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

B. Assigned Functions for ACWC

The ACWC has direct access to both the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, meaning it can bring policy statements, resolutions, study papers, and advice and counsel memoranda or other correspondence to either body. The ACWC also has a corresponding member with each group who has voice but no vote.

The particular functions assigned to the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns are as follows:

a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on women’s concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or on its own initiative.

b. Advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of women’s concerns including statements concerning pressing issues the Board may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

c. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women’s concerns.

generally jumps into action to get work completed in time to be submitted to the General Assembly. That something essential will come up between that time and the winter deadline, at which point one of the working groups should be brought to the attention of the General Assembly in the form of a resolution. Of course, there is always the chance the next assembly (usually beginning in the fall of non-GA years), ACWC starts to pull together any work that it determines is desired.

In the section directly following this, we will address in detail some of the ways in which ACWC fulfills the functions to which it has been assigned.

As a committee of the General Assembly, ACWC is a policy entity—meaning it doesn’t do any programmatic work. In the fall of 2008, the Presbyterian Mission Agency (then General Assembly Council) underwent a restructuring process that moved the staff for the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) entirely outside of the program area of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women and into the Executive Director’s Office. Along with this structural change came a new emphasis on keeping the policy work of ACWC entirely separate from the programmatic work done in Women’s Ministries. For example, ACWC (outside of its ability to bring resolutions and suggestions to General Assembly) no longer has a direct connection to the production of resources, educational presentations, training opportunities, or determining the direction and foci of gender justice work at the national level of the denomination. As this 2008 restructuring also meant the elimination of their former staff person’s job, ACWC received a new part-time staff person in the winter of 2009.

Unlike the previous staff person, this person was responsible for resourcing the work of the advocacy committee alone and would not have related programmatic responsibilities, as was previously the case.29 Given the new structure, for the purposes of this self-study, we will focus more intently on the work of ACWC after the 2008 restructuring, but will address some of the challenges of the current staffing model further on in the report.30

C. How ACWC Fulfills Its Assigned Functions

ACWC Meetings:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns generally meets face-to-face three times per year for 2–2.5 days. During General Assembly years, there is an additional meeting devoted to working on advice and counsel memoranda for the overtures that come in from the presbyteries and the reports coming out of various task forces and commissions of the General Assembly. The ACWC in some ways functions on the same two-year cycle as the General Assembly. New members are elected onto the committee at each assembly, with other members rotating off. Every late summer or fall after General Assembly, a good portion of ACWC’s first meeting is devoted to orientation of new members. From there, the group assesses that which may have been assigned to them by General Assembly and looks at the work related to gender justice that the assembly may have assigned to various program areas of the Presbyterian Mission Agencies. At this initial meeting, the group sets its goals and priorities for the next two-year cycle leading into General Assembly, focusing on gender justice issues that are particularly relevant in the church and the world at that time. The group then creates working groups as a means of completing the work of the committee. During this last cycle, ACWC functioned with two working groups: (1) Gender, Power and Privilege (focused on issues such as violence against women and reproductive health) and (2) God’s Household (focused on issues such as clergywomen support and theologies emerging from women’s experiences).

The ACWC perpetually keeps the GA-assigned deadlines for responding to referrals and submitting resolutions before them. Over the last six years, all General Assembly deadlines for work have been met by ACWC. As time creeps nearer to the next assembly (usually beginning in the fall of non-GA years), ACWC starts to pull together any work that it determines should be brought to the attention of the General Assembly in the form of a resolution. Of course, there is always the chance that something essential will come up between that time and the winter deadline, at which point one of the working groups generally jumps into action to get work completed in time to be submitted to the General Assembly.

Meeting agendas are created by ACWC’s three-person leadership team and staff and are focused around whatever work the General Assembly may have assigned to the committee, as well as any current issues in the church and society that ACWC may be monitoring. Each meeting begins and ends with worship, and the group is intentional about re-connecting with one another’s lives before launching into work. For the last two years, the committee spends some time near the beginning of each meeting answering the question: “How can ACWC be the best ACWC in the world?” This allows the group to assess the progress of their work, to evaluate their faithfulness to the task they’ve been assigned by the PC(USA), and to consider whether the vision they have for their work within this context is being realized.

29 The new staff person was hired on as part-time staff in 2009, and eventually the position was combined with that of the staff for the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (another policy entity), creating a full-time position that began in August of 2010 and continues today.

30 Agency summaries submitted to General Assembly recounting ACWC’s work going back to 2006 can be found in Appendices 1–4, if more detailed information is desired.
As an extended part of this conversation, ACWC also does a check-in at each meeting to see whether their commitment to holding an intersectional perspective and approach to gender justice issues is indeed being upheld. While the focus of the committee is gender, over the years ACWC has sought to be intentional about taking into account the realities of women who find themselves at the intersection of other social or cultural identities that affect the way they live and move in the world, whether that identity is shaped by race, ethnicity, class, physical ability, etc. Understanding these intersections is essential for understanding what it means to work for justice for all women. For this reason, ACWC has written this practice of checking-in on this commitment into each meeting of the committee.

Outside of the full-group check-in, the leadership team as well as each of the working groups give reports back to the full committee as to what work has been done between meetings. Also, members of the committee who have participated in any events or served as liaisons to meetings on behalf of ACWC between ACWC meetings are held accountable by being asked to give reports, which often lead into discussion about follow-up action or suggestions for collaboration with other groups.

There is effort put into providing an educational component to each meeting, whether that is a presentation by an expert within the committee, a workshop by an expert outside the committee, or a book discussion of something ACWC committed to read to inform their work. Within the last few years, however, ACWC has heard presentations from numerous experts, including: Dr. Gay Byron on Womanist theology and her book, Symbolic Blackness and Ethnic Difference in Early Christian Literature, Dr. Kate Ott on her work with the report, Sex and the Seminary, Nicolette Paterson of the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice, and Reverend Noelle Damico with Elena Stein of Interfaith Action and Gerardo Reyes Cháves from the Coalition of Immokalee Workers on the gender justice issues that the Coalition of Immokalee Workers address, to name just a few of the guests ACWC has hosted. The group has also spent time studying books like Katharine Rhodes Henderson’s God’s Troublemakers: How Women of Faith Are Changing the World and Letty Russell’s Just Hospitality: God’s Welcome in a World of Difference.

The group meets in various locations around the country, depending on what focus the group currently has and what resources ACWC seeks for its work. At times, the group meets in a particular location so as to be able to participate in relevant events, such as the Ecumenical Advocacy Days Conference in Washington, D.C., the Commission on the Status of Women in New York City, or the National Council of Churches General Assembly held in New Orleans, La. Other times, meetings are in Louisville with a concerted effort to make connections and collaborate with staff people at the Presbyterian Center.

Between meetings, countless email communications fly through cyberspace, and untold hours are clocked on conference calls by the subcommittees/working groups of ACWC. As the world moves, ACWC members are constantly tracking those events or served as liaisons to meetings on behalf of ACWC which are held accountable by being asked to give reports, which often lead into discussion about follow-up action or suggestions for collaboration with other groups.

D. Challenges as a Policy Committee

After the restructuring that occurred in the Presbyterian Mission Agency in 2008, maintaining visibility of ACWC’s work has been somewhat challenging. No longer connected to any program area, ACWC relies on its website, Facebook page, articles in the online journal, Unbound, and word of mouth to share the work that it is doing. The committee has made an effort over the last two years to seek out connection with their local congregations and worshipping communities to not only spread the word about ACWC’s work, but to gather information and input about what those around the church see as the most pressing gender justice issues. Even so, the results of the survey conducted by PC(USA) Research Services in conjunction with this self-study revealed that fewer than half (46 percent) of those surveyed reported being very or somewhat familiar with ACWC, while over a quarter (26 percent) reported that they are not familiar with ACWC.

Given ACWC’s assigned functions as a policy committee, it is unclear how heavily the responsibility of making ACWC’s work known lies with ACWC itself. The committee is called to “through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church,” yet the work to which it has been assigned is clearly policy-based, limiting the committee when it comes to producing materials, giving workshops, or taking other actions that might naturally spread the word about ACWC’s work. The committee believes it is important that a wider group of Presbyterians know about and feel some connection to ACWC’s work, but the path toward increasing recognition and connection has become more difficult with the removal of ACWC from the programmatic side of gender justice advocacy work within the Presbyterian Mission Agency. This is an ongoing conversation within the committee, and one of the actions to which the group would like to commit is to individually take ACWC home with them to educate and connect those in their personal Presbyterian circles, as well as to bring back to ACWC the hopes or concerns of those in their local presbyteries, congregations, etc. The ACWC takes seriously the charge to be a prophetic voice for the church, which requires not only solid knowledge of the church’s policy, but also understanding of the connection of those around the church to how that policy might be used as an advocacy tool beyond the church.

This conversation further connects to ACWC’s concerns about the lack of advocacy work happening in the program area of gender justice in Women’s Ministries. The staff who at one time was responsible for programmatic gender justice advocacy had the ability to better connect the wider church to critical issues and work that could be done to move toward gender justice and was in turn able to make the connection between ACWC’s work and the people in the pews. After the 2008 restructuring of the Presbyterian Mission Agency that separated the programmatic gender justice staffing from the policy staffing, ACWC has been informed that they are the only ones responsible for advocacy at this point. This is not how ACWC understands the intentions of the 205th General Assembly (1993), the same assembly that approved the creation of ACWC. That assembly stated regarding the Presbyterian Mission Agency (then General Assembly Council) that, “Under the leadership of those working in the areas of racial ethnic and women’s ministries, it will ensure advocacy and monitoring functions for these areas throughout the ministries and agencies of the General Assemblies.” 32 There is currently not a staff position dedicated to programmatic advocacy, though it seems to be a natural fit within the position of the associate for Gender and Racial Justice. Gender justice work inherently requires advocacy, as equality for women and men in the church and in the world is not yet a reality.

E. Relationship with the General Assembly (Assigned Functions A&C):

One of the assigned functions of ACWC is to prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on gender justice to the General Assembly. 33 This preparation and writing occurs over a two-year cycle and is directly influenced by current events in the church and in the world. It is work often done in collaboration—in particular, with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) or the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and/or other entities with particular expertise both inside and outside of the PC(USA).

Reports and resolutions vary from year to year—some focusing internally, and others looking beyond the boundaries of the PC(USA). The approach of the committee to any issue is always grounded in scripture, responsive to the witness of reformed theology, and emerging from “the voices of people long silenced.” 34 Nothing ACWC suggests to the General Assembly goes into effect unless the General Assembly commits to it by approving it. Here we’ll offer just a few examples of how ACWC has fulfilled this function:

In 2006, ACWC brought a resolution to the 217th General Assembly (2006) calling for a study on the Status of Women in the PCUSA. 35 Among other things, this resolution required ACWC to assess the status of women in elected and staff positions, in decision-making and leadership positions in the PCUSA at all levels through surveys and other data collection methods. After two years, ACWC came back to the 218th General Assembly (2008) and called for a task force to be created to continue this work in a more comprehensive fashion by creating a methodology to access the status of women at all levels in the church. 36 The task force designed the methodology for the research as asked and presented it to the 220th General Assembly (2012). 37 It passed in committee but failed on the floor. A representative of ACWC is now working with the director of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women to advance in the study by using the PC(USA)’s Research Services and seeking grants to fund it. As of the writing of this report, ACWC intends to submit the study to be considered again by the General Assembly, in case that should be necessary.

In 2008, ACWC recognized the growing awareness of and focus on the eradication of human trafficking. For this reason, they brought a resolution to the 218th General Assembly (2008). 38 This resolution passed, and since that time, a Human Trafficking Roundtable has been formed amongst PCUSA staff people working at the Presbyterian Center in Louisville. This year, ACWC has again raised the issue of human trafficking to the attention of the General Assembly, calling for the creation of comprehensive PCUSA policy surrounding this topic.

In 2010, in collaboration with the National Presbyterian Hispanic Caucus, ACWC brought a resolution addressing the situation of violence against women on the U.S./Mexico border. 39 Out of this resolution came a team that traveled to Juarez, Mexico, to learn more and to come home and educate Presbyterians by sharing their experiences and the resources created. 40

At the 220th General Assembly (2012), ACWC member, Belinda Rice, shared her experiences as a member of the team that traveled to Mexico, along with some of the online resources created by the group with attendees of the Women’s Orientation Breakfast. The word about issues of femicide in the border region continues to spread through the work of that team created as a result of ACWC’s resolution.

In 2012, ACWC was required by the General Assembly to respond to two referrals. One of those referrals was to “make recommendations that contribute to a proactive, health-giving ministry to and relationship with our clergywomen” following a review of resources currently available that was to have been done primarily via the Office of Committee on Ministry. Unfortunately, before such a review could occur, the Presbyterian Mission Agency (then the General Assembly Mission Council) restructured, and the Office of Committee on Ministry was dissolved. Since ACWC had been in regular communication with the coordinator of Women’s Leadership Development at the time, ACWC knew of the important work she was doing via a program called Deborah’s Daughters. Through visits around the church, this staff person was gathering information from women clergy about their experiences. Instead of pushing for the original review of resources to be completed, ACWC saw this as an opportunity to support an already functioning, successful ministry and suggested to the 220th General Assembly (2012) that ACWC make its recommendations about clergywomen after reviewing the information gathered in the Deborah’s Daughters visits. The assembly agreed, and ACWC will make recommendations to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) after receiving information from staff in Women’s Ministries.

In the meantime, ACWC has received information via the survey conducted by Research Services in conjunction with this self-study and would call to the attention of the assembly the responses regarding the situation of clergywomen in the PC(USA). A repeated response theme from the survey comments addresses the continuing lack of equity for women teaching elders. Equal pay and equal opportunities for leadership still call for close attention based on the needs expressed. Almost sixty years after the first ordination of women, the church at large is still woefully unaware of all the issues facing women clergy. In addition, there needs to be a wider understanding of what equity looks like and the reality of women’s experiences in the church—all women’s experiences. The ACWC is hopeful that the gathering of information by the program Deborah’s Daughters and the potential work to be done as a result of ACWC’s resolution to the 221st General Assembly (2014) to study the status of women in the church can begin to get at the reality of the situation for women teaching elders in the church. In order to take effective actions to create change, the data needs to be gathered.

Aside from self-initiated reports and resolutions and General Assembly assigned referrals, ACWC carefully reviews all of the overtures and reports coming to the General Assembly from presbyteries and other entities. In response to some of these, ACWC attaches an advice and counsel memorandum to the General Assembly, recommending approval or disapproval, often informing commissioners of particular relevant gender justice issues connected to the overtures or reports, or making specific recommendations of edits to the overture before approval. This function of ACWC is also included in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

One example of this is ACWC’s frequent recommendation to incorporate United Nations Security Council Resolution (UNSCR) 1325 into various overtures addressing situations of violence and war around the globe. The UNSCR 1325 urges the participation of women and the incorporation of gender perspectives into all peace and security efforts and highlights the essential role that women play in peacemaking efforts. This is a perspective often left out of overtures addressing situations of violence and war, but on occasion it has been added by the General Assembly as a result of ACWC’s advice and counsel.

Even while at the meeting of the General Assembly, ACWC is constantly monitoring any new business or commissioners’ resolutions that come in. At the 219th General Assembly (2010), a commissioners’ resolution calling for a renewed commitment to using expansive and inclusive language for God and the people of God was submitted. The ACWC drafted an advice and counsel memorandum for the resolution, advising approval but with a suggested addition, which ultimately became a part of the final, passed resolution.

F. Relationship with the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Assigned Functions A&B):

As a part of their prescribed composition, ACWC has one full, voting member who is also a member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (Board), elected to ACWC by the Board. As the size of the Board has decreased, it has become in-

42 “Advice and counsel memoranda are resources prepared by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns for the purpose of providing information about existing policy, current work on specific topics, recent developments, and other factors useful to commissioners as they consider issues before the assembly” (Standing Rules of the General Assembly, 1426).

46 According to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual of Operations (November 2013), ACWC “shall have members as detailed below ...” including “One Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Member nominated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating and Governance Subcommittee and creasingly more difficult to find members willing and able to serve in this capacity. Unfortunately, at the time of the writing of this report, ACWC has been informed that they will have a former member of the Board serving as their dual member for at least the next two years (2014–2016). This will clearly diminish the tie between the Board and ACWC and make it more difficult for ACWC to keep informed of the work of the Board in order to do its advocacy work in the context of the Board. This relationship was created as one of mutuality, to both maintain the Board’s connection to ACWC and ACWC’s to the Board. Further, ACWC has a particular need to have this strong connection, as part of its assigned functioning is to advise the Board and monitor the implementation of gender justice related policies and programs.\footnote{ Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual of Operations (November 2013), Appendix 1F, p. 35; 41.}

In fact, the Board itself (then called the General Assembly Mission Council) stressed the important role of the advocacy committees’ dual Board member when it commented on the Report of the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee:

> Even though there might be meetings in the future that do not include corresponding members, the [Presbyterian Mission Agency Board] would have the benefit of the perspective of the advisory and advocacy committees through these members of the [Presbyterian Mission Agency Board] who also serve on those committees\footnote{ Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual of Operations (November 2013), Appendix 1F, p. 41.}.

The dual Board/ACWC member has voice and vote on the Board to serve as a voice representing the perspective of ACWC in the deliberations of the Board. Ultimately, the Board has written this essential relationship into the requirements it has for itself in its manual, stating that the advisory and advocacy committees “shall” have members as detailed (including one Board member).\footnote{Report of the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee (Item 09-19 from the 219th General Assembly (2010)) can be read here: http://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3219&promoID=137, see GAMC Comment on Recommendation 4.} This is stronger language than that which is used for other Board-related committees. For these reasons, ACWC has submitted Recommendation 6 at the beginning of this report.

One of ACWC’s co-chairs also serves as a corresponding member to the Board. This member has voice but not vote in the committee and plenary deliberations of the Board. This has also been an important connecting relationship between ACWC and the Board, though this person is not welcome in closed meetings unless specifically invited and so cannot speak on behalf of the committee in such instances where no invitation is extended. Unfortunately, with the removal of a current voting Board member as one of ACWC’s members, ACWC will no longer have a voice at the Board table in any closed meetings to which the member is not invited.

Though they’ve not been approached by the Board, ACWC could potentially serve as a tremendous resource to the Board and would gladly connect with the Board to either give clear gender analysis on various issues, or to prepare something related to gender justice for the General Assembly. In fact, members of ACWC have participated in the creation of a tool that can be used for gender analysis. The tool was created as part of the work of the National Council of Churches Justice for Women Working Group, and can be accessed free of charge online.\footnote{You can view and print the gender analysis tool here: www.ncccusa.org/pdfs/gender4web.pdf.} This is just one example of a place where ACWC’s expertise could connect with and enrich the work of the Board. While according to the functions assigned to ACWC, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may request that ACWC prepare policy statements, resolutions, etc. However, the Board has not made any requests of this nature to ACWC in at least the past six years.

Even so, there has been some effort from both the Board and ACWC to increase collaboration. The special review conducted in 2010 by the General Assembly appointed Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee noted strain in the relationship between the Board and the advocacy and advisory committees.\footnote{The report of the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee (Item 09-19 from the 219th General Assembly (2010)) can be read here: http://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3219&promoID=137.} One result of this review was to put in place a regular check-in between the committees and the Board, which is now reflected in the Manual of Operations of the Board. The nature of this check-in has been to inform the Executive Committee of the Board of the current work of ACWC and to answer any questions about that work. While this ensures a connection is made once every couple of years at the least, ACWC would love to see a more collegial and reciprocal relationship develop as partners in ministry with the Board.

Between General Assemblies, ACWC advocates to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of gender justice. An example of this work is ACWC’s collaboration with ACSWP in raising concerns to the Board about equity in the implementation of the new (2013) compensation model of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The committee had a conference call and expressed in a joint letter with ACSWP its concerns to the Personnel Subcommittee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, advocating for the consideration of some alternative approaches that might more effectively ensure just treatment for all and the avoidance of unintentional bias. Ultimately, the Board chose to make no changes to the compensation model as a result of the suggestions made by the committees.

G. Monitoring and Maintaining PC(USA) Policy (Assigned Functions D, E&F)

Whether General Assembly or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board are meeting or not, at all times, ACWC monitors the implementation of PC(USA) policies and programs relative to gender justice. Much of this is done via conversation with various staff people responsible for programs related to gender justice. The ACWC makes a point of checking in with relevant staff in Louisville on a regular basis to hear what work is being done.

Over the last six years (which mirror the past twenty years\(^5\)), there has been a drastic staffing reduction in the Women’s Ministries area, which is (as of the writing of this study) down to one full-time staff person and two deployed, part-time field staff because of staff vacancies and general reductions in this area. Within the past five years, staff positions and staff people have come and gone in Women’s Ministries. The coordinator for Women’s Leadership Development and staff person holding that position was eliminated, and the position was downgraded to associate level. That associate position was never filled and has since been eliminated. There have been two different people who have come and then left the position of associate for Gender and Racial Justice, neither holding that position for more than a year. The position of Young Women’s Leadership Development has been held by three people in the last five years and has now been reconfigured into the position of mission associate for Women’s Leadership Development and Young Women’s Ministries. This position has recently been filled. Women’s Ministries is now down to two full-time associate-level positions (only one of which is staffed at the writing of this report) and two part-time, deployed field staff for Racial Ethnic Young Women Together and the National Network of Presbyterian College Women.

The lack of staffing and the general trend that continues to slow programming for women is of great concern to ACWC. While ACWC monitors the work being done and makes recommendations to General Assembly for potential new work, ACWC also recognizes the reality is that with such limited staffing, there is only so much that can be done. Short of recommending that hiring happen more expeditiously and that positions no longer get reduced or eliminated, there is little ACWC can do to positively affect the programmatic side of gender justice work within the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

And yet, ACWC regularly brings to GA recommendations with the goal of ensuring implementation of gender justice programming, particularly that to which previous assemblies have committed. Leading into the 220th General Assembly (2012), and after being in conversation with the Women of Color Joint Working Group, ACWC was concerned that few people in the PC(USA) knew about the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God—the decade we’re currently celebrating in which the PC(USA), as a result of a decision of the 218th General Assembly (2008), has committed to lifting up and celebrating the gifts of women of color. For this reason, ACWC brought it to the attention of the General Assembly via a resolution with recommendations to work to make this important decade more widely known, celebrated, and ultimately put into action. The General Assembly voted to approve these important recommendations. You can see that resolution here, or in Appendix 5 of this report.

Looking at the results of the self-study survey conducted by the PC(USA) Research Services Department, there continues to be a disconnect between the importance expressed by the respondents regarding participation and inclusion of women of color and their familiarity with the report, “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and sharing New Harmonies.” As mentioned above, ACWC has continually worked to lift this 2008 report up to the church. The report was commended to the churches for study and action and declared 2009–2019 the Decade for Hearing and Singing New Songs to God. The ACWC’s resolution in 2012 led to the report being re-recommended to the churches by the General Assembly, and the decade was extended to 2022. Unfortunately, it remains true that not many in the church are aware of this Decade for Hearing and Singing New Songs to God.

There have been two Women of Color Consultations since the report was submitted to the General Assembly in 2008. A full report with recommendations from the consultation in 2013 is included in the reports to the 221st General Assembly (2014). However, until these reports are given the priority that was called for by previous General Assemblies and articulated in ACWC’s Self Study Survey Report, it will continue to remain another report gathering dust on the shelves of the denomination. Many Presbyterians have been quick to give lip service to participation and inclusion of all people, but very slow in acting on it. There must be a concerted effort on the part of everyone. In conjunction with this report, ACWC requests that you also read the Women of Color Consultation Report submitted to this General Assembly.

Another important gender justice issue and PC(USA) policy whose implementation ACWC saw falling by the wayside (which was also lifted up in a commissioners’ resolution at the 219th General Assembly (2010)) was that of using inclusive and expansive language for God and God’s people. Our language shapes the way we think about things, and the way we think about things shapes the way we speak. Limiting our language about God to masculine pronouns and images limits our understanding of God and aligns maleness with God while distinguishing femaleness as wholly other from God. While most would agree that God is not male, often the language used to refer to God falls into a masculine rut that fails to reflect the expansiveness of the God we serve. Words hold power, and defining God as male perpetuates the imbalance of power men have over women in the church and in the world. This issue continues to be a priority for ACWC.

A specific instance where ACWC chose to be in conversation with staff of the PC(USA) was following the 2010 Youth Triennium Gathering. A member of ACWC was in attendance at the gathering and noted the language used for God lacked the expansive nature reflective of our expansive God, relying heavily on male terms and pronouns for God throughout the gathering. In response, ACWC wrote a letter and had conversation with staff leading this effort to make suggestions for future planning efforts for that gathering in order to be more faithful to the PC(USA) policy on inclusive and expansive language. The staff was very open to having this conversation, and part of the issue was that some of the speakers were guests who were not necessarily Presbyterian. It is clear that the denomination as a whole could use more education on the importance and value of expansive language, and ideally we could come to a point where even outside speakers agree to honor the denomination’s commitment on language. Until this point, this issue has only been lifted up by ACWC or by programmatic staff in the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministry in the Presbyterian Mission Agency. It is important that intentionality surrounding language be taken up by all of the program areas in the Mission Agency, shaping the work, worship and print/web materials from areas like Theology, Worship and Education, World Mission, just to name a few.

A more recent example of policy monitoring as well as providing policy information to the Stated Clerk and Executive Director is ACWC’s collaboration with ACREC and ACSWP surrounding the contract made with the Hyatt Hotel in Louisville for the 2013 Big Tent. When it was brought to ACWC’s attention that there was a global boycott of Hyatt being called for because of the Hyatt Corporation’s known workers’ rights violations, ACWC worked with their partners to convince the PC(USA) to break the contract it had made with Hyatt for the Big Tent Conference, knowing that a large percentage of the hotel employees being mistreated were women. What motivated the committees to action was their sense that using the Hyatt would contradict PC(USA) policy on workers’ rights, which has historically stood for the fair and just treatment of all workers. After discussion, those responsible for planning the Big Tent did ultimately break the contract for meeting space with the Hyatt. The best news coming out of this is that an agreement has been reached between the workers and Hyatt. The PC(USA) was a part of the movement for justice in a case that will ideally result in fair treatment for the workers.

H. Prophetic Witness (Assigned Function G)

The ACWC is also assigned to “maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of gender justice.”

What unites the members of ACWC always is their commitment to their faith in Jesus Christ and the justice for which that calls, as well as a deep loyalty and love for this church and the commitments for which it stands. Jesus is recorded to have said something about prophets not being accepted in their hometowns. This is sometimes the case for ACWC, as the call for justice is not always one that is easy to hear. For this reason, the committee often faces challenges and roadblocks to the work it is called to do, some which have been named already, and others which will be named below.

The work of gender justice advocacy is incredibly challenging, but ACWC remains committed to this essential task of calling the church and the world to be a better reflection of the realm of God. May it one day be so.

I. Internal Committee Challenges and Goals

The process of self-evaluation and study through this report has allowed ACWC to discern the following challenges and to set goals for addressing these challenges:

1. Time-commitment of serving on the committee, particularly for young women and men.

As is clear from this report, serving on ACWC requires a time commitment that can be challenging, particularly for those in school, in new jobs, or with small children. The contribution of younger members to the work of the committee has proven invaluable, and serving on ACWC is also a leadership learning opportunity for younger Presbyterians.

GOAL: The ACWC is committed to continuing to seek out methods whereby younger members can fulfill their responsibilities to the committee without excessive strain on their lives. This includes using electronic means of connecting and sharing information (i.e. Skype, Go-To Meeting, email, conference calls), negotiating meeting times, duration and location, and being flexible with regards to how work is accomplished.

2. Getting the word out about ACWC’s work.

As referenced in this report, after the restructuring in the Presbyterian Mission Agency that separated gender justice advocacy policy work from gender justice advocacy programmatic work, sharing the work of ACWC has become a challenge. As a committee called to be a prophetic witness to and for the church, ACWC believes their connection to the denomination to be important.

54 You can learn more about the struggle against workers’ rights violations at Hyatt here: http://www.hyattHurts.org/.

GOAL: The committee will continue to consider best practices for getting the word out to the church with regards to ACWC’s work, including being intentional about connecting with local presbyteries, committee members’ congregations, and other PC(USA) constituencies. (See recommendation 2. at the beginning of this report.)

3. Expanding our vision for gender justice advocacy work within the PC(USA).

As a challenge for the denomination as a whole, ACWC has also sometimes fallen into a pattern of focusing solely on the work of Women’s Ministries as the place where gender justice work needs to be done. While this is certainly an essential starting place in many ways, the commitment to gender justice should shape and influence the work of all areas of the PC(USA). The ACWC should serve as a model to the rest of the denomination in how to integrate the work of gender justice in various ways into all that the church does.

GOAL: The ACWC will engage, communicate and collaborate with all areas of the Presbyterian Mission Agency on matters of gender justice advocacy. (See recommendation one at the beginning of this report.)

J. External Challenges and Hopes

Some of the challenges ACWC recognized in the process of self-study and evaluation can be addressed at least in part by the committee itself. Others, like some named in the body of this report and the following examples, are equally or more disconcerting to ACWC, but are ultimately outside the purview of ACWC’s work and control. Even so, ACWC hopes that these challenges can also be addressed:

1. Too much time is spent by ACWC and staff accounting for the work and existence of ACWC.

The ACWC has appreciated this opportunity for self-study, review, and reflection and expects to be reviewed regularly by the General Assembly. However, within the past six years, ACWC has found itself undergoing multiple forms of review. After the normal General Assembly review in 2006, in 2008, ACWC underwent a two-year review as a part of the special review committee formed by the General Assembly as a result of a request by the General Assembly Council (now Presbyterian Mission Agency Board) to review the advisory and advocacy committees. This current two-year cycle (2012–2014) has once again required time spent on the normal General Assembly review. Throughout this entire eight-year period, there have been struggles with individual members of the Board questioning the committee, as well as with subcommittees of the Board challenging the committees’ work. Aside from the distraction and additional work this creates for ACWC on an informal basis, ACWC is also required to submit their minutes and their Manual of Operations to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for regular review. The often difficult relationship ACWC has with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board has in part developed as a result of time spent throughout the years defending why ACWC was created and articulating repeatedly the role of the committee as prophetic witness called to monitor policy and program implementation. Underlying all of this seems to be some general confusion regarding the nature of the relationship of the committee to the Board. Review by a body for which ACWC has monitoring responsibilities is a set up for difficulty and ineffectiveness.

The General Assembly has a system of regular, comprehensive review in place for holding ACWC accountable to the work to which it is called, and the committee believes this system to be effective. Aside from the regular six-year review cycle, ACWC is required to submit an agency review of the work the committee has completed in each two-year cycle for review by the assembly. The challenge every six years of comprehensively studying oneself results in understanding best practices, setting new goals, and making adjustments to be as effective as possible in fulfilling the church’s calling for the committee. For this reason, ACWC is submitting Recommendation 5 at the beginning of this report. Since the General Assembly is the parent body to which ACWC is accountable, it makes sense to incorporate the review of ACWC’s meeting minutes and Manual of Operations into the regular review process. This would also be a step toward alleviating the constant review of ACWC, but would still hold ACWC accountable to the regular review process.

2. Collection of data at all levels of the church in a format disaggregated by gender, race/ethnicity, and age.

There is a tremendous need for disaggregated information concerning women’s participation and experiences at all levels of the church. The 218th General Assembly (2008) directed all six of the PC(USA) agencies to:

- collect, organize, and report data for all research in the church (such as comparative statistics, Presbyterian Panel, data gathered by the Vocation’s office on inquirers, candidates and clergy, the Stated Clerk’s annual statistical report, etc.) in a disaggregated form by race, ethnicity, gender, and age, so that data on women of color and young adult women of color may be identified separately for analysis, where possible and as permissible by law.

Many requests for such data (from ACWC, the Women of Color Joint Working Group, ACREC, and possibly others have come through the past six years, but to no avail. There is often information available about how many men, how many women, and how many racial ethnic people serve, but data is never disaggregated by age and often the various races and ethnicities are left clumped together into one large category. Breaking down the information more extensively is necessary to get accurate data on women of color and young women, for example.

Advocacy requires having accurate information. Accurate data would provide the ability to inform strategies and decision-making, moving the church beyond bold declarations about justice and equality into effective action that makes such declarations a reality.

3. Vacancies in the Women’s Ministries Program area and time spent advocating for advocacy within the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women program area.

As lifted up in the body of this report, over the past six years, the position of associate for Gender and Racial Justice (the programmatic side of gender justice advocacy work) has been vacant more time than it has been filled. The inconsistency of staffing in this position has created a void where programmatic gender justice advocacy is concerned. It is already problematic that there is only one staff person assigned to do advocacy work for two of the most marginalized groups in the church, women and people of color, but the fact of that position being so often vacant compounds the issue.

Further, ACWC has had disagreement with staff from that ministry area regarding the necessity of advocacy work being done from a programmatic angle. As ACWC understands it, the General Assembly required that advocacy work be done from the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW area, which is why ACWC is making Recommendation 7 at the beginning of this report.\(^{59}\) The only way to work toward justice is to advocate for it, and ACWC would like to see this approach embraced once again by programmatic staff working on gender and racial justice.

4. Meaningful follow-through by the Presbyterian Mission Agency on items assigned by the General Assembly.

Unfortunately, it is not uncommon for ACWC to have to advocate for that which the General Assembly has assigned to be completed. In fact, after each General Assembly, ACWC makes a point of monitoring the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency as it has been assigned by the assembly.

Recommendation 4 at the beginning of this report represents one such place of frustration for ACWC. Much of the follow-through on the directives from the Women of Color Consultations has been ineffective or seemingly done just to say it was done. The fact of the lack of knowledge of the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God speaks to this.

5. Part-time staffing for ACWC

The time covered by this self-study has been a period of adjustment to the challenges of having a staff person who is less available to the committee, due to the restructuring that occurred in 2008. While the staff person prior to this restructuring had responsibilities other than ACWC, that person was only working on gender justice issues. The current staffing model requires that ACWC’s staff spend half of her time on gender justice and half on racial justice, with help from an administrative assistant who also has responsibilities for assisting other staff in Louisville. While the issues of gender and racial justice certainly intersect, they are also very much their own, vast areas of work. Expecting one staff person to have the expertise and ability to serve both advocacy committees simultaneously is hardly feasible.

The infeasibility of the staffing situation becomes most apparent as General Assembly approaches. Covering the work of both advocacy committees leading into the assembly, staffing combined meetings, and attempting to be present to support both committees at the assembly have been nearly impossible tasks. Recognizing that extra staffing is not an option, ACWC hopes to continue to struggle collaboratively to consider creative solutions to this situation.

K. Conclusion

As articulated in several places throughout this report, ACWC has gained much from the experience of self-review and study, and is grateful to have had this opportunity. The committee would like to express gratitude to Andrew Whitehead of the PC(USA) Research Services for his help in creating, distributing, and summarizing the results of the survey. Many thanks also to all those who made the time to respond to the survey.

The period of time covered by this review cycle has been one of adjustment for ACWC, particularly as its staffing model has shifted. The ACWC continues to be committed to growing and learning how to be the best ACWC in the world and looks forward to continued conversation on the work of ACWC with commissioners of the 221st General Assembly (2014) in Detroit.

ADVOCACY COMMITTEE FOR WOMEN’S CONCERNS

I. Narrative Report to the 217th General Assembly (2006)

“The Lord is a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble” (Psalm 9:9)

“The Spirit told me to go with them and not to make a distinction between them and us.” (Acts 11:12)

1. Agency Description

The context of women’s advocacy is a human situation where women experience injustice because they are women. Grounded in communal faith in “God [who] liberated the people of Israel from oppression ... [and] covenanted with Israel ... that they might do justice ...” (Book of Order, G-3.0101b) and motivated by painful recognition of sexism within and without, the church explicitly articulated in the Articles of Agreement its commitment to work against gender-based discrimination. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is a contemporary fulfillment of this commitment. Created by the mandate of the 205th General Assembly (1993) at the recommendation of the Report of the Task Force on Shape and Form, ACWC is charged with the responsibility of assisting the church to “... give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 ... monitor[ing] and evaluat[ing] policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church...and advocate[ing] for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society [as a whole]” (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 262).

The ACWC’s assigned functions are delineated in the GAC Manual of Operations (Appendix I, EV, Section VIII.B.), and they include:

- Preparing policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on women’s concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or on its own initiative.
- Advising the General Assembly Council on matters of women’s concerns including statements concerning pressing issues that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.
- Providing advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women’s concerns.
- Assisting the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on women’s concerns and provide information to the church as requested.
- Providing the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on women’s concerns.
- Monitoring the implementation of women’s policies and programs relative to women’s concerns.
- Through advocacy maintaining a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women’s concerns.

The ACWC is a function of the Office of the Deputy Executive Director, General Assembly Council, although staffing is provided by the Women’s Ministries program area, National Ministries Division. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly and the ACWC chair has corresponding member status with GAC and with the General Assembly. The ACWC has ten members nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly. They are chosen based on their individual qualifications and do not represent any constituencies. Current members are Karen Breckenridge (co-chair), Sarah A. Colwill (co-chair beginning in August 2005), Adeline S. deCastro, Dean E. Foose, Jerri Rodewald, Aleida Jernigan, R. Ann (Ani) Lelea, F. William (Bill) Gray, Terry Alexander, and Nancy Neal (co-chair until August 2005). In addition, Lillian Oats (co-chair) is a full voting member of the committee, representing Presbyterian Women. Allison Seed is a full voting member elected to the advocacy committee by the General Assembly Council and also sits on the GAC Executive Committee.

Recognizing the complex ways in which gender inequality manifests itself differently because of class, race, ethnicity, education, age, status in employment, disability, sexual orientation, marital status, and culture, ACWC invites liaisons from other entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to sit with the committee at its regularly scheduled meetings. Those entities are the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), the National Network of Presbyterian College Women (NNPCW), the Racial Ethnic Young Women Together (REYWT), the Presbyterian Health, Education, & Welfare Association (PHEWA), the Congregational Ministries Division (CMD), the Presbyterian United Nations Office (PUNO), and the Worldwide Ministries Division (WMD). In turn, liaisons from the ACWC attend the meetings of the ACSWP, ACREC and the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI). In 1999, the ACWC began to work with the Board of Pensions (BOP) and, in 2002, with the Presbyterian Health, Education, & Welfare Association (PHEWA).

2. Accomplishments

3. Meeting Summary—2004

January 22–24, 2004, in St. Petersburg, Fla. The January meeting included guests Vernon Carroll (chair of General Assembly Council), Mary Elva Smith (associate director, Women’s Ministries and Collegiate Ministries, National Ministries Division), and guest speaker, Dianne Tennis (author of “Is God the Only Reliable Father?”). Considerable working time was spent preparing advice and counsel for issues before and referral items to the 216th General Assembly (2004). The site visit for the January meeting was to the Beth-El Farmworkers Mission, serving the rural populations of Hillsborough, Manatee, and Sarasota counties in Florida. Beth-El helps farm workers move toward self-sufficiency through education, worship, and outreach. It is a coordinated ministry of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). At this meeting the committee approved (by consensus) the following mission statement:

“The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is called by [the] General Assembly to be a voice of justice and advocacy for women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and around the world; in order to give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership (Book of Order, G-4.0403). To this end, we advocate for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of life and work in the Church and society. “Does not wisdom call, and does not understanding raise her voice?” Proverbs 8:1”

July 22–24, 2004, in Seattle, Wash. When the committee met in July 2004, guests included Kathy Lueckert, Deputy Executive Director, General Assembly Council (GAC); Flora Wilson Bridges, Seattle University professor and pastor of Madrona Presbyterian Church; and Elizabeth Stanhope, student, Fuller Theological Seminary (and intern working with Rev. Bridges). Work of this meeting centered on discussing the Mission Work Plan (2005–2006), the effects of downsizing national staff especially in Women’s Ministries (2004), a restructuring of ACWC to a non-hierarchical structure where leadership duties are shared among three co-chairs serving different functions (described below), and a guided discussion with the guests from Seattle Pacific University around issues for women clergy in the church.

The leadership will be a leadership team made up of three co-chairs with differing functions, as follows:

- Co-chair for General Assembly Relations and that person would be identified as the corresponding member to General Assembly and serve as Advice and Counsel chair;
- Co-chair for General Assembly Council Relations and that person would have corresponding member status; and,
- Co-chair for Committee Relations and that person would oversee the internal work group relations and ACWC’s relationships with other committees, particularly where we have liaisons.

The three co-chairs would share moderating duties during regular meetings. This model was chosen after several meetings consideration because it encourage participation of all ACWC members; allows work to be completed without a hierarchy of leadership; and, provides leadership development for members. Liaisons from the committee were designated for Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), Board of Pensions (BOP), Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), National Association of Presbyterian Clergywomen (NAPC), National Network of Presbyterian College Women (NNPCW), and Presbyterian Health, Education, & Welfare Association (PHEWA). A final edit of the clergywomen report was completed and approved for printing (in 2005). The committee generated a list for new work of ACWC and the following were accepted and assigned working groups (recognizing the 216th General Assembly (2004) would generate additional work for the committee): human sexuality, violence (Juarez murders/border issues), status of women in PCUSA, including immigrant churches, and, ordination of Christian educators. The site visit in Seattle was to the Church of Mary Magdalene, a program for women who are struggling to be free from multiple difficulties including homelessness, poverty, and abuse. It is for women who have been robbed and raped emotionally, spiritually, and physically. The Church of Mary Magdalene was founded in 1991 by Presbyterian clergywoman, Jean Kim, who was called in a dream to “plant the cross” for homeless women of Seattle.

October 14–16, 2004, in Princeton, N.J.: The October meeting was situated at the seminary to continue responding to the concerns of clergywomen and female seminarians in the process of ordination. Guests to this meeting were Abigail Rian Evans and Katharine Doob Sakenfeld, professors at Princeton Theological Seminary and fifteen Princeton Seminary female students. The speakers, Professor Evans and Professor Sakenfeld, talked about the experiences of Princeton Theological Seminary in graduating women interested in pastoral leadership. In a later session, the Princeton students and ACWC members had an informal discussion about the students’ experiences with the use of inclusive and expansive language at the seminary. An informational exchange took place regarding pastors’ first calls and moving from seminary to a church. Current campus concerns include: sexual harassment, networking, and social justice issues. In addition to the working groups and assigned topics, a draft of the ACWC Manual of Operations was reviewed by the committee and accepted by consensus. The status of women working group presented five issues before women in leadership positions. They are: leadership (to or criticism of their speaking manner, appearance, etc.); and, mission priorities (sexual harassment, inclusive/expansive language, etc.). The working group on inclusive/expansive language distributed a draft of the Trinity report being written by a task group in collaboration with the Office of Theology and Worship to the entire committee for consideration and feedback at a future meeting.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) fulfilled the responsibility to prepare statements, reports, recommendations, and advice and counsel to the General Assembly on issues that impact the status and well being of women in the following ways:

- Prepared thirty-two advice and counsel memoranda on nineteen overtures, two commissioner resolutions, and one report, affecting women and their children coming before the 216th General Assembly (2004). Several were written in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. Additionally, ACWC resourced six committees. The ACWC also participated in the Women’s Orientation Breakfast and in the Women’s Ministries Luncheon.

- Held an open consultation at the 216th General Assembly (2004) to hear ongoing concerns of clergywomen in the church. This was in response to 2003 Referral: Item 04-01. Report, Clergywomen’s Experiences in Ministry: Realities and Challenges, Recommendation10. That the General Assembly Instruct the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) to Provide a Forum at Future Gen-elected the Reverend Sarah Colwill as a member of the Leadership Team replacing Nancy Neal beginning at the August 2005 meeting.

The next day, ACWC and ACREC met jointly and focused on immigration issues in the California context. The speaker was Nuri Robins. The committees spent January 21 (before their meeting) in a joint education session about cultural proficiency led by the Reverend Kikanza Poppen; Diana Stephen, associate, Network Support/Rural and Small Church Ministries, NMD; the Reverend Carolyn Visser; Vicky Wahl; Kathy Callies; Marion Cramer; Wendy Figland; the Reverend Peter Funch; Cal Hansen; Florence Hoff; Marian Judy; Dianne Larson; Paula Larson; Vi Leonard; Crystal Page; Julie Pearson; Carolyn Petik; the Reverend Tom Pickles; the Reverend Richard (Dick), Linda, and Ann Poppen; Diana Stephen, associate, Network Support/Rural and Small Church Ministries, NMD; the Reverend Carolyn Visser; Vicky Wahl; and Delores Walter. Diana Stephen highlighted in her presentation that “there is an economic crisis within rural communities and thought must be given to how policies affect these rural communities. There is a deep hurt—this (farming/ranching) is a vocation that is becoming industrialized. Large companies are exhausting the land, the animals, the water, etc. and accepting no responsibility for the damage they do. This is a global issue.” She went on to note that women serve as pastor for many small and rural churches. The salaries are very low, however, there are many opportunities. She and Kathryn Baker raised other issues in the area: domestic violence, prevalence of depression, and a high suicide rate. Health care is an issue as the closest (physical or mental) health care can be more than 100 miles away. This was the context for the field exploration and interviews with local pastors, elders, and community members. The ACWC extended the meeting by one day to include extensive field trips into the surrounding communities. This was an eye-opening meeting, renewing ACWC members to raise issues of the local effects of globalization on communities and women in particular.

Networking, Monitoring and Communication—In addition to the exposure to local advocates in areas where ACWC’s regular meetings are held, the very make-up of the ACWC allows for networking, monitoring, and evaluating procedures, policies, and programs among General Assembly entities and program areas. Through staff to the ACWC, networking around public policy issues is carried out through the Public Policy Advocate Team (PPAT) made up of GAC staff, representing several program areas; the Cross-Caucus meetings of the Racial Ethnic Ministries; and through involvement in issue oriented inter-staff meetings and conferences. The ACWC moved toward stronger partnership and more open communication with ACSWP and ACREC in planning joint meetings in January 2005.

In these ways a monitoring of broad concerns related to women of color, immigrant women, and working parents (child care) can be more efficiently affected. Likewise, such issues as domestic violence and other examples of violence against women, sexual misconduct policies, economic concerns as pay equity, women and health, and many other gender-related concerns can be lifted up and addressed in concert with other program entities of the church, making new partnerships possible.

The ACWC was invited to be a consulting partner to listen and be a resource for participants at the National Consultation of Racial Ethnic Women in the PC(USA) in October 15–17, 2004. The consulting partners, in partnership with the consultation organizers, developed a strategic plan (released in 2005) to address issues identified by the women of color. This event is recognized later in this report as the Women of Color Consultation. Appropriate issues will be considered by ACWC for future advocacy work. [See Other Actions section for information regarding the joint resolution from ACWC and ACREC.]

January 22–24, San Francisco, Calif.: The ACWC, ACSWP, and ACREC all convened in San Francisco for their meetings. All three committees spent January 21 (before their meeting) in a joint education session about cultural proficiency led by the Reverend Kikanza Nuri Robins. The next day, ACWC and ACREC met jointly and focused on immigration issues in the California context. The speaker was Betty Canton-Self, executive director for the Interfaith Coalition for Immigrant Rights (ICIR). Discussing issues of citizenship, farm workers, home services, and federal issues, the committees explored ways they can continue working in a coordinated way on their mutual concerns and identified important areas of potential collaboration. As a result, ACWC and ACREC acted on items to increase their future collaboration on issues of mutual concern, intentionally meeting together once a year, and have their leadership and liaisons meet by conference call twice a year. Helen Locklear, Deputy Executive Director, GAC, met with the ACWC to discuss the Mission Work Plan and its critical role in directing the committee’s work. Work groups discussed continuing issues from the 216th General Assembly (2004) and projected projects. The ACWC wrote a letter to the GAC personnel committee regarding the dismissal of two employees in late 2004 and elected the Reverend Sarah Colwill as a member of the Leadership Team replacing Nancy Neal beginning at the August 2005 meeting.

August 10–14, Sioux Falls, S.Dak.: The meeting was delayed until August to accommodate the harvest season and to make meeting in Sioux Falls with farmers possible. The ACWC went to Sioux Falls to discuss the We Are What We Eat report with the persons involved in its prompting and writing and to explore issues for rural churches and women in farming communities around globalization and food security. Guest speakers included: Kathryn Baker, Presbyterian Women (PW); Jeri Lynn Bakken; Bernetta and Dick Burghardt; Holly Butrum; Kathy Callies; Marion Cramer; Wendy Figland; the Reverend Peter Funch; Cal Hansen; Florence Hoff; Marian Judy; Dianne Larson; Paula Larson; Vi Leonard; Crystal Page; Julie Pearson; Carolyn Petik; the Reverend Tom Pickles; the Reverend Richard (Dick), Linda, and Ann Poppen; Diana Stephen, associate, Network Support/Rural and Small Church Ministries, NMD; the Reverend Carolyn Visser; Vicky Wahl; and Delores Walter. Diana Stephen highlighted in her presentation that “there is an economic crisis within rural communities and thought must be given to how policies affect these rural communities. There is a deep hurt—this (farming/ranching) is a vocation that is becoming industrialized. Large companies are exhausting the land, the animals, the water, etc. and accepting no responsibility for the damage they do. This is a global issue.” She went on to note that women serve as pastor for many small and rural churches. The salaries are very low, however, there are many opportunities. She and Kathryn Baker raised other issues in the area: domestic violence, prevalence of depression, and a high suicide rate. Health care is an issue as the closest (physical or mental) health care can be more than 100 miles away. This was the context for the field exploration and interviews with local pastors, elders, and community members. The ACWC extended the meeting by one day to include extensive field trips into the surrounding communities. This was an eye-opening meeting, renewing ACWC members to raise issues of the local effects of globalization on communities and women in particular.
October 6–8, Tempe, Ariz.: The ACWC located their October meeting at Cook College and Theological School, a Presbyterian racial ethnic school, in Tempe, Arizona, to re-familiarize themselves with concerns regarding Presbyterian racial ethnic schools. The committee stayed in the conference center and met on-campus for all their meetings. The ACWC spoke with Larry R. Norris, president; Vivian Winter Chaser, director of Public Relations; Minta McIntosh, volunteer in mission and coordinator for the Conference Center; and Maramlyen Tokeak, student body president. Our hosts shared cultural stories, songs, and hospitality in addition to explaining history, describing the student body, and financial/survival concerns of racial ethnic schools, in general, and Cook College, in particular. Racial ethnic schools was a topic of concern raised at the 216th General Assembly (2004).

The ACWC fulfilled the responsibility to prepare statements, reports, recommendations, and advice and counsel to the General Assembly on issues that impact the status and well-being of women in the following ways:

- Prepared advice and counsel memoranda regarding draft reports, policies and staffing concerns, and/or delivered letters of concerns with GAC entities.
- Delivered a letter to the Office of General Assembly recommending to all General Assembly entities, presbyteries, and synods that 10 percent of what people spend on meetings should be spent locally.
- Delivered an advice and counsel memorandum to the Governance Task Force, GAC, expressing concerns over the proposed changes in the structure of the General Assembly Council.
- Delivered two letters, raising the committee’s concerns with the Office of Theology and Worship regarding staffing/hiring and in response to a draft of the Trinity report and inclusive/expansive language.
- Delivered a letter enclosing the brochure, Well Chosen Words (2005), to all Presbyterian seminaries to promote the importance of using inclusive/expansive language in theological education.
- Monitored issues and concerns before the PC(USA) in reports from ACSWP, ACREC, Working Group on the Trinity, Theological Task Force on Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Church, Presbyterian Washington Office, Presbyterian United Nations Office, and other entities that address women’s concerns.
- Delivered a letter to the GAC personnel committee regarding employee dismissals in late 2004.
- Continued, in partnership with others, a review of the church’s policies on sexual misconduct by the clergy.
- Received a report from ACWC staff who attended the Association for Women’s Rights in Development (AWID) Forum in Bangkok, Thailand, through the Office of Women’s Advocacy.
- Moved to a non-hierarchical structure of having a leadership team of three co-chairs with differing functions.
- Produced, through collaboration with Women’s Ministries and the Women’s Advocacy Office, an updated version of Well Chosen Words (2005 revised document, PDS #72-839-05-003) and the Clergywomen’s Experiences in Ministry: Realities and Challenges 2003 (revised document 2005 available online at www.pcusa.org/womensadvocacy/clergywomen/clergywomen-report05.pdf).
- Submitted the ACWC Manual of Operations for approval and comment by the GAC.
- Collaborated with the Stated Clerk and Moderator in writing a letter to all presbyteries and synods in response to the referral item from 216th General Assembly (2004) in regard to problem pregnancies.
- Received and endorsed the report (2005) from the Women of Color Consultation(2004).
- Formed a working group with ACREC that will work on responding to the recommendations from the consultation and monitor the church’s response to the report. The full report is included in the ACREC report as Appendix A: Report and Recommendations from the Women of Color Consultation.
- Designated two members and two former members to serve on a self-study committee and began the process of preparing for ACWC to be reviewed at the 217th General Assembly (2006).
- Submitted ACWC’s annual narrative report to the General Assembly Council (March 2005).

Networking, Monitoring and Communication—The very make-up of the ACWC allows for networking with General Assembly entities and program areas. Through staff of ACWC and of the Women’s Advocacy Office, networking around public policy issues is carried out through the Public Policy Advocate Team (PPAT) made up of General Assembly Council staff, representing several program areas; the Immigration Table made up of GAC staff; the Sexual Misconduct table; and the Cross-Caucus meetings of the Racial Ethnic Ministries. Staff also collaborates strongly with Presbyterian Women, especially the Justice and Peace committee of the Churchwide Coordinating Committee (CCT) and the Racial Ethnic Dialogue group.

The ACWC issue reports, approved by past General Assemblies, are made available through the Office of Women’s Advocacy in the Women’s Ministries program area. These reports serve as a means of communicating with the larger church and are available through the Presbyterian Distribution Service (PDS). Report information is also available on the web at www.pcusa.org/womensadvocacy/acwc/reports. Recent reports include:

1. 2004 Referral: Item 05-03. Recommendation 4. That the General Assembly Request the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, Following Review of Resources Currently Available to Meet the Needs of Clergywomen in the Call Process and in Pastorates, to Make Recommendations That Contribute to a Pro-active, Health-giving Ministry to and Relationship with Our Clergywomen—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (Minutes, 2004, Part I., pp. 77, 389–90).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) continues to review available resources and is researching recommendations that will be reported to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

III. Recommendations

A Recommendation to Study the Status of Women in the PC(USA)

ACWC recommends that the 217th General Assembly (2006):

1. Request ACWC to assess the status of women, in elected and staff positions, in decision-making and leadership positions in the PC(USA) at all levels through surveys and other data collection and evaluation;
2. Report progress and initial findings to the 218th General Assembly (2008) to measure the extent to which gender justice has been achieved in the church, measuring presence and acceptance of women, to get the facts on the current status of women in leadership positions in an effort to support and further the inclusion of women in leadership positions in the PC(USA), at all levels. The primary areas of this first ever such survey for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will focus on:
   a. The extent of women in leadership positions at all levels of the PC(USA) in elected and staff positions, in decision-making and leadership positions.
   b. Attitudes about women in leadership – including how women in leadership positions are perceived and accepted, by both members and staff.
   c. Describing how women in leadership positions are treated, including compensation, in comparison with male colleagues, by both members and staff.

3. Prepare a final report to the 219th General Assembly (2010) to include recommendations for action, qualitative and quantitative data describing women in the various decision-making and leadership positions, and identifying patterns of women’s participation in the church and factors influencing positively and/or negatively upon their participation.

4. Direct the GAC to provide sufficient funding and staff support to ensure the research and analysis for a complete measurement of the status of women in the PC(USA).

5. Equip all GAC staff and members to be responsive to the needs of all women as part of their continuing commitment to valuing the gifts that all people bring to the PC(USA). GAC staff and members should continue to be encouraged to reflect on and incorporate the values articulated in the Report on Creating a Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004).

Rationale

This year marks three significant anniversaries for women in ordained leadership within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Therefore, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) believes this requested study to be particularly timely. There has not been a comprehensive study of the status of women within the denomination. ACWC is charged with the responsibility of assisting the church to live out its commitment to justice for women by “monitoring and evaluating policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church, . . . and advocating for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society.”

This survey will be a way for the Committee to carry out its mandate, provided on its creation by the 205th General Assembly (1993), to ensure advocacy and monitoring of justice for women throughout the church. Describing the qualitative and quantitative realities of women leaders in all levels of the church, the report will set the context of ACWC’s work for years to come.

It is especially important to know the extent to which the church is responding to the following two sections of the Book of Order:

G-40403 which states that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes . . . shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church.

G-9.0104 a, which states that governing bodies of the church shall be responsible for implementing the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and participation as stated in G-4.0403. All governing bodies shall work to become more open and inclusive and shall pursue affirmative action hiring procedures aiming at correcting patterns of discrimination on the basis of the categories listed in G-4.0403.

This study will reaffirm past General Assemblies’ commitments to the inclusion of women in decision-making and leadership in all levels of the church and their equitable treatment. It will also show how far we have come and how far we have left to go in fully realizing and reflecting that “. . . In sovereign love God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community.”

The reports will show areas for celebration. It is also expected to identify specific areas needing more attention, including identifying specific barriers that need to be addressed to bring about the full acceptance and equitable treatment of women in the PC(USA)’s leadership. The final report will contain recommendations for action.

The value of “including the rich diversity of God’s people in the leadership” of the PC(USA) at all levels was the subject of (2005) “Open Letter to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding “Creating A Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” The signers included the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council. This survey will further the acceptance and support of women in the decision-making and leadership positions of the PC(USA).

Funds Requested—see attached Financial Implications form to the report.

IV. Other Action Items

ACWC received the report from the Women of Color Consultation (WoCC) and formed a joint working group with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) to review the recommendations of the consultation. ACWC and ACREC have submitted

Appendix 2

2008 Agency Summary—Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)

“The Lord is a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble” (Psalms 9:9)

“The Spirit told me to go with them and not to make a distinction between them and us.” (Acts 11:12)

…[Be] doers of the word, and not merely hearers…” (James 1:22)

1. Introduction

The context of women’s advocacy is a human situation where women experience injustice because they are women. Grounded in communal faith in “God [who] liberated the people of Israel from oppression … [and] covenanted with Israel … that they might do justice …” (Book of Order, G-3.0101b) and motivated by painful recognition of sexism within and without, the Presbyterian church explicitly articulated in the “Articles of Agreement” its commitment to work against gender-based discrimination. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is a contemporary fulfillment of this promise. Created by the mandate of the 205th General Assembly (1993) at the recommendation of the Report of the Task Force on Shape and Form, ACWC is charged with the responsibility of assisting the church to give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 . . . monitor[ing] and evaluat[ing] policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church … and advocate[ing] for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society [as a whole]. (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 262)

2. Assigned Responsibilities

The ACWC’s assigned functions are delineated in the GAC Manual of Operations (Appendix I, EV, Section VIII.B.), and they include:

- Preparing policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on women’s concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or on its own initiative;
- Advising the General Assembly Council on matters of women’s concerns including statements concerning pressing issues that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly;
- Providing advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women’s concerns;
- Assisting the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on women’s concerns and provide information to the church as requested;
- Providing the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on women’s concerns;
- Monitoring the implementation of women’s policies and programs relative to women’s concerns; and,
- Through advocacy maintaining a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women’s concerns.

The ACWC is a function of the Office of the Executive Director, General Assembly Council, and connects to it through the executive administrator, though its direct staffing is provided by the associate of women’s advocacy in the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW ministry area. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly. The ACWC has organized itself with a leadership team of three co-chairs: two serve as corresponding members to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council respectively. A member of ACWC is a voting member of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment committee (MRTI). There are twelve members of the committee, ten members are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly. They are chosen based on their individual qualifications and do not represent any constituencies. Members who left the committee in June 2006 were: Allison Seed (General Assembly Council), Dean Foose, Lillian Oats (Presbyterian Women), Ani Lelea, and Aleida Jernigan. Members who joined the committee in June 2006 were Mary Carter, Maria Cardenas Baez, Aisha Brooks-Lytle, Louise Davidson (Presbyterian Women), and Manley Olson (General Assembly Council). Two members resigned during this reporting period—Aisha Brooks-Lytle, in late 2006, citing life circumstances that did not allow her to fully participate (in her letter she cited a lack of understanding what the time requirements of the committee were before her election from the floor); and Mary Carter, in early 2007, due to a diagnosis that prevented her from completing her term. In November 2007, two members were appointed by the Reverend Joan Gray, Moderator of the 217th General Assembly (2006), as recommended by the General Assembly Nominating Committee—the Reverend Dr. Gay Byron and Belinda Rice. Their first meeting with ACWC was January 2008.

3. Accomplishments

a. 2006–2007: ACWC Met Three Times

(1) August 3–6, 2006, in Boise, Idaho

- Visits were made throughout southwestern Idaho and southeastern Oregon, addressing healthcare, mental health and social services, domestic violence services, and banking as it affects family farms;
Member orientation, Website updates, and generative conversations about the work of the committee;

Emerging issues were discussed and prioritized for work during the two years between General Assemblies and three workgroups were formed: Health and Human Sexuality, Rural/Urban Issues, and Status of Women/Language;

Jerri Rodewald was elected as co-moderator to fill the one year unexpired vacancy left when Lillian Oats was not re-elected; and,

Adeline DeCastro and Jerri Rodewald were elected to the Women of Color Consultation Task Force.

(2) October 26–28, 2006, in Washington, DC

Met with the Reverend Elenora Giddings Ivory and other members of the staff of the Washington Office, addressing criminal justice, domestic violence prevention and education, school crisis response programs, empowering victims of crime, and reproductive health issues;

Health and Human Sexuality workgroup distributed a letter to all Presbyterian members of Congress stating PC(USA)’s policy on women’s reproductive rights and health care;

Absentee policy was adopted by ACWC;

Agreed to work with ACSWP in developing the pay equity resolution; and,

Jerri Rodewald, Terry Alexander, Rebecca Harrison, and Jack Terry were appointed to a communication subcommittee.

(3) February 15–17, 2007, in Louisville Kentucky;

Elder Jerri Rodewald elected to serve a full term as co-chair, term to begin in August 2007;

Staff guests: Peggie Blenman, HR director, and the Reverend Dr. Marcia Myers, director, Office of Vocation;

Forum presented jointly to ACWC and ACREC focused on post-Katrina issues;

Communications subcommittee met with designer, Dana McMahan, to scope the new Website;

Health and Human Sexuality workgroup held three-part educational session with guest speaker, the Reverend Dee Dale (MCC);

Status/Language workgroup met with Research Services; and ACSWP coordinator, the Reverend Dr. Christian Iosso, updated ACWC on work currently being done by them.

b. 2007–2008: ACWC Met Three Times

Met with the Reverend Joan Gray, Moderator, 217th General Assembly (2006); the Reverend Curtis Kearns, executive administrator (GAC), Board of Pensions executives and appropriate staff; and a Presbyterian Historical Society representative who provided an educational session;

Consulted with the General Assembly Nominating Committee: the Reverend Cindy Edwards, GANC member and contact for ACWC; and Valerie Small, staff;

Attorney Julia Thorne, manager of Immigration Services (PC(USA)) provided information and continuing education regarding immigration issues in preparation for the October meeting;

Health and Human Sexuality working group hosted a education program on gender with guest speaker, Chris Paige;

Consulted with Joel Hanisek, UN representative, and Jonathan Crooms, young adult intern, Presbyterian United Nations Office, about international gender justice issues; and,

Met with the Reverend Dr. Joseph Small, director, Theology, Worship, and Education ministry to receive an update on several items coming to that office out of the 217th General Assembly (2006).

(2) October 18–22, 2007, in Merida, Yucatan, Mexico;

Met jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) for large sections of the educational and cultural portions of the meeting—focus of these sessions to examine what pushes immigration to the US, the a/effects on communities in Mexico and the Presbyterian Church of Mexico;

Visited San Pablo Presbyterian Theological Seminary and Chichen Itza;

Participated in a listening tour of Dzan, Yucatan, Mexico, a primarily Mayan community where we interacted with villagers and were hosted by municipal leaders and the nonprofit organization, IndeMaya;
● Approved the new logo for ACWC;
● Jointly reviewed the revised Form of Government, drafted letter for FOG Task Force, and appointed joint working group with ACREC to schedule a follow-up conversation; and,
● Approved the ongoing work of the working groups to develop final proposals for action at the 218th General Assembly (2008).

(3) January 24–26, 2008 in Louisville, Kentucky
● Leadership Team: representatives from ACWC and ACREC leadership met with Karen Schmidt, deputy executive director for Communications and Funds Development, and Dianna Ott, coordinator, Creative Services;
● Met jointly with ACREC and Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) in two sessions;
  —Discussion with the Reverend Dr. Cliff Kirkpatrick, Stated Clerk, regarding denominational issues and celebrated his service;
  —Joint committee work also saw discussion about the assembly with guests Vernon Broyles, Office of the General Assembly, and Nancy Hamilton, GAC executive associate; and,
  —Extensive review of actions being taken by the three committees to the 218th General Assembly (2008);
● Working Groups perfected recommendations for ACWC report to General Assembly regarding:
  —Immigration Detention; Trafficking of women; Beginning process for extensive research project on the status of women in the PC(USA); and, persons to recommend as committee resource people to the 218th General Assembly (2008);
● Reviewed and adopted narrative report and the pay equity resolution to be jointly submitted with ACSWP to the 218th General Assembly (2008);
● Selection of the Advice and Counsel team and resource persons;
● Welcomed newly appointed ACWC members, the Reverend Dr. Gay Byron and Belinda Rice, to fill vacancies in the class of 2010;
● Elected Elder Adeline DeCastro as co-chair to a two-year term to begin August 2008;
● Recognized outgoing elected members with thanks, to Karen Breckenridge, Nancy Neal, and Manley Olsen (GAC); and,
● Participated in Presbyterian Center worship celebrating the life of Dr. Martin Luther King.

4. Highlights

a. Status of Women/Language

The work group focusing on the Status of Women and Language had many ongoing projects this year. We have monitored the work being done by different entities as instructed by the 217th General Assembly (2006), including the creation of an E-hymnal and the report concerning ordination of Christian educators. We communicated with PC(USA) seminaries and leaders to encourage the use of inclusive and expansive language. We commissioned the Presbyterian Panel, in November 2007 (see www.pcusa.org/research/panel), to gather information regarding the attitudes and assumptions toward women’s leadership in the church. We also reviewed this data and concluded that an extensive study on women in the church would be beneficial to our work of advocating for justice within the church. The study will benefit the whole church as it will set a baseline for comparisons, reveal where women are and are not in the structures and measure the quality of their participation at all levels of the church. A portion of this work may be accomplished in approving the joint resolution from ACSWP and ACWC for a study of pay equity within the PC(USA). This comes in response to the referred action of the 200th General Assembly (1999).

b. Rural/Urban Affairs

The Rural and Urban Affairs work group is charged with monitoring Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) policies and work regarding immigration/detention, homelessness, hurricane/disaster relief, trafficking in persons, globalization, and gender-based violence. The work group followed up on work assigned to it by ACWC, partners, and the 217th General Assembly (2006). A study of church policies and current realities regarding trafficking in women/adults led to the conclusion that the General Assembly must encourage congregations and presbyteries to engage in stronger outreach to and advocacy for trafficked persons. In partnership with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, the effects of globalization were examined while in the Yucatan of Mexico. A review of denominational policies on for-profit prisons and just immigration, as well as practices of for-profit detention centers and conversations and observations in Mexico resulted in the conviction that PC(USA) policy statements did not address serious concerns about immigrant detention practices in the United States. Two actions came out of this work: one expanding the concern and work against human trafficking and one seeking action regarding immigration detention in the United States.

c. Health and Human Sexuality

The Health and Human Sexuality Work Group has focused on emerging issues relating to women’s health; access to medical care, pharmaceuticals and counseling (including availability, affordability, and accuracy); and gender and sexuality information, education, and equity. We have prepared for proposed overtures to General Assembly through an education program for ACWC members with the help of experienced educators and pastors. Recognizing the sexualization of women in culture and in the conversations of the church about reproductive health, the work continues.

d. Women of Color Consultation Task Force and Joint Working Group

The 217th General Assembly (2006) recommended the creation of a task force on the Women of Color Consultation. Made up of seven persons, this task force was launched in October 2006, completing its work and reporting to the 218th General Assembly (2008) in a separate report. Constituted jointly by ACWC and ACREC, in consultation with Presbyterian Women and the National Cross Caucus, the task force studied the recommendations, which came from the Women of Color Consultation in 2004. In addition to analyzing and determining what progress had been made, the task force designed and recommended a mechanism for monitoring future progress by the denomination. The task force modeled cultural proficiency and antiracism models in its work together. The joint working group for ACWC and ACREC continues to review this work and looks forward to implementing and monitoring their suggested actions.

e. Communications Subcommittee

A subcommittee on communications was also established by ACWC shortly after the 217th General Assembly (2006) in response to the review. The ACWC Website has been separated from the women’s advocacy Website for clarity and easier access and has been redesigned. A new logo was commissioned and an informational brochure will be ready for the 218th General Assembly (2008).

5. Actions of the Committee for Consideration of the 218th General Assembly (2008)

   - Resolution to Study Immigration Detention in the United States
   - Resolution to Expand the Church’s Ministry with and Advocacy Against Human Trafficking
   - Resolution to Explore the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the PC(USA)

6. Other Actions

   - God’s Work in Women’s Hands: Pay Equity and Just Compensation, jointly submitted with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

7. Appreciation

   The Reverend Molly Casteel became associate for Women’s Advocacy and staff for ACWC in September 2005. With her arrival, and the continuing administrative support of Leigh Harper, senior administrative assistant, ACWC has functioned well with a large portfolio of work. The co-chairs and committee express their sincere and deepest appreciation.

(GAMC), Louise Davidson (PW). Members who joined the committee in June 2008 were Darcy Lynn Metcalfe, N’Yisrela Watts Afriyie, Chris Wolfe (PW), and Jan Martin (GAMC). Sarah Colwill resigned at the close of General Assembly 2008 due to family obligations. Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty was elected to complete her two year term.

3. Accomplishments

   a. 2009–10: ACWC Met Four Times

      (1) March 13–16, 2009, in New York, New York

      • The committee met at the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) United Nations Office just following the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women meeting. Joel Hanisek, U.N. Representative for the PC(USA) hosted the group.

      • Dr. Serene Jones, President of Union Theological Seminary, spoke to ACWC about women as political agents within religious contexts.

      • Catherine Bordeau, intern with Ecumenical Women at the United Nations, spoke to the group about faith at the U.N. and gender in the church.

      • Sister Marie Bernard Alima Mbalula, Secretary, Democratic Republic of the Congo, addressed the committee on the use of rape as a weapon of war in the DRC.

      • Committee member, Dr. Gay L. Byron, Professor of New Testament and Christian Origins at Colgate Rochester Crozer Divinity School, spoke with ACWC about Womanist Theology and her latest academic work.

      • Linda Valentine, GAMC Executive Director and Michael Kruse, GAMC Vice-chair, had a conversation with the group in response to the most recent GAMC restructuring.

      • The committee had the opportunity to travel to Newark for a port tour and visitation of the Elizabeth, New Jersey Immigrant Detention Center.

      (2) July 16–18, 2009, in Louisville, Kentucky

      • The committee discussed the GAMC Employee Handbook changes at length.

      • The committee spent extensive amounts of time responding to inquiries from the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee.

      • The Health, Sexuality, and Faith work group of ACWC met with Martha Bettis Gee, GAMC Associate for Child Advocacy, to discuss pornography and its connections with human trafficking.

      • The Thea-ologies work group of ACWC met with Dr. Johanna van Wijk-Bos and Dr. Lee Hinson-Hasty to discuss women’s the-logies being taught in Presbyterian seminaries.

      • Marissa Castellanos, Project Manager, Kentucky Rescue and Restore Victims of Human Trafficking, spoke to the entire committee about human trafficking.

      • Pat Hendrix, GAMC Sexual Misconduct Ombudsperson, informed ACWC about the sexual misconduct policy in the PC(USA).

      • Valerie Small, Office of the General Assembly Manager of General Assembly Nominations and Moderatorial Staff Services, explained the nomination process for members of ACWC.

      • Curtis Kearns, GAMC Executive Administrator, addressed the new ACWC staff position description with the committee.

      • The committee had a conversation with two representatives from the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee, Doug Megill and Sylvia Washer.
October 29–31, 2009, in Pasadena, California

- The committee had the opportunity to hear from Dr. Kate Ott of the Religious Institute, who spoke to them about the study she directed, entitled, Sex and the Seminary, looking at what seminaries are doing to cultivate sexually healthy religious professionals.
- The group continued discussion with Curtis Kearns, GAMC Executive Administrator, about their new staff person.
- Marsha Fowler and Ann Hayman educated ACWC about the PC(USA) report on HIV/AIDS.
- Ron Kernaghan, Chair, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), informed ACWC of what ACSWP is taking to General Assembly this year.
- Rev. Carol Tomkins led the group in a discussion on the new Form of Government.

January 21–23, 2010, in Louisville, Kentucky

- The ACWC member, Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty, spoke to the group about the Advisory and Advocacy Review Committee’s final report.
- The work groups finalized what they will take to the General Assembly.
- The ACWC met jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and ACSWP.
- Julia Thorne, Attorney in the Office of Immigration Issues, OGA, spoke to the group about immigration and detention and her work with the PC(USA).
- The ACWC elected a new leadership team that will take over after the 219th General Assembly (2010) in Minneapolis.
- The ACWC, along with ACREC, had the opportunity to meet with Michael Kruse, GAMC Vice-chair, and Sue Ezell, GAMC Justice Mission Committee Chair, over dinner and discussed the relationship between the advocacy committees and the GAMC.
- Laurie Griffith, Manager of Judicial Process, OGA, addressed the group on sexual misconduct, particularly in the context of clergy and internet pornography.
- Cynthia Holder Rich from ACREC had a discussion with the group about the Belhar Confession.
- Curtis Kearns, GAMC Executive Administrator, gave the group some GAMC updates.

4. Highlights

a. Women of Color Joint Working Group

The 217th General Assembly (2006) recommended the creation of a Task Force on the Women of Color Consultation. Made up of seven persons, this task force was launched in October 2006, completing its work and reporting to the 218th General Assembly (2008) in a separate report. Constituted jointly by ACWC and ACREC, in consultation with Presbyterian Women and the National Cross Caucus, the task force studied the recommendations, which came from the Women of Color Consultation in 2004. In addition to analyzing and determining what progress had been made, the task force designed and recommended a mechanism for monitoring future progress by the denomination. The Women of Color Joint Working Group created by the 218th General Assembly (2008) as a permanent monitoring committee. The Women of Color Joint Working Group, a combined committee of ACREC and ACWC, continues to work to monitor all General Assembly referrals assigned to them pertaining to concerns of women of color in the PC(USA). ACWC will bring some of their recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

b. Status of Women Task Force

The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved ACWC’s recommendation to study the status of women at all levels of the church, calling for the creation of the Status of Women Task Force. While restructuring slowed the initiation of this group and its work, the Status of Women Task Force has been created and met once in January 2010. The task force will continue its assigned function and report back to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

c. Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus

The Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus contacted ACWC in September 2009 asking for assistance in advocating on behalf of the women of Ciudad Juarez, Mexico. In conjunction with the caucus, ACWC wrote a letter to the Stated Clerk and Moderator of the General Assembly requesting they send a letter to the president of Mexico and the governor of Chihuahua asking them to tend to the violence being done against women and their families. Beyond this, ACWC will bring a recommendation to the 219th General Assembly (2010) to form a study group on the situation in Juarez and provide bilingual study materials to churches on the border.

d. Youth, Technology, and Pornography

The Health, Sexuality, and Faith work group of ACWC spent much of its time working in conjunction with Martha Bettis Gee, Associate for Child Advocacy, GAMC, on issues of pornography and youth. They are currently examining the need for updates to the 1983 report on pornography which contains no relevant discussion of the impact of technology on the pornography industry. Included in the group’s discussion have been the issues of clergy abuse of pornography and pornography as a vehicle for the trafficking of children. The work group intends to keep this issue at the fore of its work.

e. Sex and the Seminary

During the October 2009 meeting of ACWC in Pasadena, California, the group had the opportunity to hear from Dr. Kate Ott of the Religious Institute and director of the study, Sex and the Seminary. Dr. Ott presented the group with some of her work regarding the importance of religious professionals having been educated in sex and sexuality. The Thea-ologies work group of ACWC is continuing to work with Dr. Ott and consider ways in which the PC(USA) might improve the sex/sexuality education of those preparing to lead the denomination.

Rachel Sabbath Initiative

During their October 2009 meeting, ACWC also learned from Dr. Kate Ott about the Rachel Sabbath Initiative. Through this initiative, the Religious Institute is calling denominations and congregations to raise awareness and support the U.N.’s goals of reducing maternal mortality rates and improving access to reproductive health care around the globe. As more than half a million women in the world die each year and more than one million children are left motherless because of the lack of proper health care for pregnant women, ACWC hopes to connect the PC(USA) with this project in the near future, see http://www.religiousinstitute.org/initiative/rachel-sabbath-initiative-saving-womens-lives-0 for more information.

A Time of Transition

The great majority of the past two years has been focused on internal matters for ACWC—restructure and review. In November, 2008, three positions in the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW Area were eliminated as a result of restructuring in that ministry area. The positions eliminated were: Office of Women’s Advocacy, Office of the National Network of Presbyterian College Women, and the Office of Racial Ethnic and Young Women Together. The women were terminated from their positions and escorted out the same day.
This greatly impacted the work of ACWC, particularly since the October 2008 meeting had been cancelled due to budget restrictions. There was no opportunity for consultation regarding the status of projects, nor, after working with staff for three years, any closure allowed.

The ACWC requested time on the agenda of the General Assembly Council at its March meeting to discuss the manner in which staff was dismissed, and the restructuring. Earlier in March, however, Executive Director Linda Valentine and Michael Kruse, Vice-chair of the General Assembly Mission Council, came to the ACWC meeting for that purpose. One conclusion resulted in ACWC participating in a discussion about the rewrite of the GAMC Personnel Policies. This is being done with ACREC and ACSWP, and is continuing. Although GAMC approved the personnel policies at their September 2009 meeting, assurance has been given to the three committees that changes can be made following further consultation. The primary issue for ACWC is that of same-day separations.

After the restructuring, ACWC was no longer connected in any way with Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW. There is no longer an Office of Women’s Advocacy (OWA) within REWM/PW. The senior administrative assistant for OWA and ACWC was promoted to another position within REWM/PW, eliminating any staff support for ACWC. A temporary, part-time staff was hired February 15, 2009. Her one-year contract has been extended through General Assembly of this year.

Actions of the Committee for Consideration by the 219th General Assembly (2010)

- Resolution to Study Violence Against Women and Children on the Mexico-U.S. Border
- Resolution to Reaffirm Support for the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW)
- Resolution to Ensure Staffing for Women’s Advocacy in the PC(USA)
- Resolution to Explore the Intersection of Gender and Race
- Resolution to Adapt the Session Annual Statistical Report (SASR)
- Response to Referral Item 09 -12 with Recommendation to Extend the Work of the Status of Women Task Force

Final Response to 2004 Referral: Item 05-03. Recommendation 4. That the General Assembly Request the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, Following Review of Resource Currently Available to Meet the Needs of Clergywomen in the Call Process and in Past-torates, to Make Recommendations That Contribute to a Pro-active, Health-giving, Ministry to and Relationship with Our Clergywomen—

Recommendation 3. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) to Create a Permanent Joint Working Group on Women of Color in the Church, to Be Made Up of Two Members of ACREC and Two Members of ACWC, Appointed by the Leadership of Each Committee—From the Women of Color Consultation Task Force (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 964–77).

Appendix 4

Agency Summary—Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) 2012

“The Holy One is a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble” (Psalms 9:9)

“The Spirit told me to go with them and not to make a distinction between them and us.” (Acts 11:12)

...[Be] doers of the word, and not merely hearers...” (James 1:22)

1. Introduction

The context of women’s advocacy is a human situation where women experience injustice because they are women. Grounded in communal faith in God who liberated the people of Israel from oppression and covenanted with Israel that they might do justice, and motivated by painful recognition of sexism within and without, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) explicitly articulated in the Articles of Agreement its commitment to work against gender-based discrimination. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is a contemporary fulfillment of this promise. The new Book of Order continues to uphold this commitment: “In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person” (Book of Order, F-1.0403). Created by the mandate of the 205th General Assembly (1993) at the recommendation of the Report of the Task Force on Shape and Form, ACWC is charged with the responsibility of assisting the church to:

give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 ... monitor[ing] and evaluat[ing] policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church...and advocate[ing] for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society [as a whole]. (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 262)

2. Assigned Responsibilities

The ACWC’s assigned functions are delineated in the GAMC Manual of Operations (Appendix I, VII.C., p. 23).

They include:

a. Prepare[ing] policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and Advice and counsel memoranda on women’s concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Mission Council, or on its own initiative.

b. Advis[ing] the General Assembly Mission Council on matters of women’s concerns including statements concerning pressing issues the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

c. Provid[ing] advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women’s concerns.

d. Assist[ing] the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on women’s concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

e. Provid[ing] the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on women’s concerns.

f. Monitor[ing] the implementation of women’s policies and programs relative to women’s concerns.

g. Through advocacy maintain[ing] a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women’s concerns.

The ACWC is housed in the Office of the Executive Director, General Assembly Mission Council. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly and General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). The ACWC has organized itself with a leadership team of three co-chairs: two as corresponding members to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council respectively. One member of ACWC is a voting member of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI). There are twelve voting members of the committee; ten members are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) and elected by the General Assembly. They are chosen based on their individual qualifications and do not represent any constituencies. One member is the current moderator for Justice and Peace of Presbyterian Women and one member is a member of the General Assembly Mission Council, chosen and sent by that body. The committee also has a number of liaison members: Carmen Rosario from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), Erica Harley from the National Association of Presbyterian Clergywomen (NAPC), KT Ockels from World Mission of the General Assembly Mission Council, and Margryette Boyd from Racial Ethnic Young Women Together (REYWT), who joined the committee as liaison in 2011. During this term, the committee had representation from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) through Marsha Fowler, Gloria Albrecht, and Eric Mount, who each attended one or more meetings in that role. Members who rotated off the committee in July 2010 are Gay Byron, Adeline de Castro, and Maria Cardenes-Baez. Members who were elected to the committee in July 2010 were Barbara Adams Smelter, Samuel Chung, and Joann Haefong Lee. Samuel Chung’s position was declared vacant after two unexcused absences and has not yet been filled. Voting members who continued on from the previous term were Terry Alexander (MRTI), Jerri Rodewald, Jan Martin (GAMC), N’Yisrela Watts-Afriyie, Bill Gray, Darcy Metcalfe, and Chris Wolf (PW).

The ACWC met five times:

a. September 9–11, 2010, in Louisville, Kentucky

• The committee spent a significant amount of time on introductions as this was the first meeting for those elected at the 219th General Assembly (2010).

• The committee reviewed their work at General Assembly and looked ahead to what items they would need to monitor in the coming years.

• Nancy Young, coordinator for Racial Ethnic & Women’s Leadership Development Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges, met with the group to share her vision for her work and to hear about the work of ACWC.

• Vince Patton, who was soon to be Executive Administrator, joined the group for lunch and conversation.

• Unzu Lee, Presbyterian Women associate, reported to the group about the National Council of Churches’ project “Language Matters,” (later to be called “Words Matter”).
Linda Valentine, Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) shared some of the work of the GAMC with the committee.

The committee spent significant time determining how to divide their work into smaller working groups, and then spent time in those groups to determine work for the next two years. The committee organized themselves into three working groups: Health and Sexuality, Women and the Church, and Violence Against Women.

The committee’s focus in this meeting was ecumenical and interfaith relations, which influenced their decision to meet in New Orleans, where the National Council of Churches (NCC) was holding their general assembly.

The committee heard from Meagan Manas and Ann Tiemeyer of the NCC on the many ecumenical projects of the NCC related to gender justice. In particular, they heard about the beginnings of the project, “Words Matter,” as well as the Fistula Stories Project. They also learned about the NCC’s Justice for Women Working Group, a group of ecumenical women who focus on partnering to work on various gender justice issues. One member of ACWC, as well as ACWC’s staff person, participate in the work of this group. This keeps ACWC connected to the work of other denominations, which often serve as good resources in a time when resources are limited.

The committee participated in a group-building session as part of bringing on the new members and strengthening the work relationships of those who had been on ACWC for a time.

The committee heard Cecilia Casal’s report of the ecumenical trip she participated in to Columbia, Ecuador, and Venezuela.

The committee working groups decided which issues they would focus on for this two-year cycle.

The committee was able to attend a portion of the NCC’s general assembly.

The committee met in Washington, D.C., in conjunction with the Ecumenical Advocacy Days Conference, which was focused on gender justice issues. Following their meeting, the committee attended the conference.

The Reverend Dr. J. Herbert Nelson met with the committee to share some of the work of the Office of Public Witness.

Committee member, Darcy Metcalfe, reported on her experience at the United Methodist Church’s Sexual Misconduct Conference and expressed her interest in looking further into the Safe Child policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Committee member, Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty, reported on her time in Hungary.

Committee member, Belinda Rice, reported on her work with the General Assembly committee assigned to study the situation of violence on the Mexico-U.S. border.

Committee member, Jerri Rodewald, reported on her time in New York at the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women.

Glenn Northern of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America and Nicolette Paterson of the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice met with the committee to discuss reproductive justice in the current context of the United States.

Linda Valentine, Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council, met with the committee to hear more about their work.

d. September 15–17, 2011, in Louisville, Kentucky

The committee worked on updating the ACWC manual of operations.

SanDawna Ashley, associate for Gender and Racial Justice, met with the committee and shared some of her work with them.

Tom Hay, director of operations, Office of the General Assembly, came to have a conversation with the group about the lack of childcare provided at General Assembly.

The committee spent time discussing the importance of the ACCRA confession and the Bible study written by Dr. Margaret Aymer and published by Presbyterian Women.

Committee member, Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty, gave an update of the work of the Status of Women Task Force.

Lisa Robbins and Ruth Gardner from the General Assembly Mission Council’s Human Resources department shared with the group the gender equity audit they are preparing for the next General Assembly.

Valerie Small, manager of General Assembly Nominations, met with the group to discuss best ways to include and encourage the participation of younger women on the advocacy committee.

Vince Patton, Executive Administrator of the General Assembly Mission Council, discussed the staffing for the committee.

The Health and Sexuality working group met with Claire Lewis and Michael Harper to discuss the church’s new online adolescent development curriculum.
e. January 17–19, 2012, in Louisville, Kentucky

• The committee met to finalize its work going into the 220th General Assembly (2012).
• Valerie Small, manager of General Assembly Nominations, and Amy Kim Kyremes-Parks of the General Assembly Nominating Committee met with ACWC to discuss nominations to ACWC going to General Assembly.
• Patrick Heery, managing editor for Unbound, met with the committee to discuss his work with this interactive, online journal of social witness.
• The committee met jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to discuss their work for General Assembly.
• Three members of ACWC had attended the Women of Color Consultation in October of 2011, and Joann Lee led a discussion on her experiences at that event and on the consultation report going to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

4. Highlights

a. Status of Women Task Force

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns continued to stay connected to and support the work of the Status of Women Task Force, and is looking forward to the potential acceptance of the task force’s recommendations. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved ACWC’s recommendation to study the status of women at all levels of the church, calling for the creation of the Status of Women Task Force. While restructuring slowed the initiation of this group and its work, the Status of Women Task Force has been created and met once in January 2010. The task force will continue its assigned function and report back to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

b. Protecting Access to Reproductive Health Services

The Health and Sexuality working group of ACWC monitored the development of legislative limitations on the availability of and access to reproductive health services for men and women in the United States and internationally. They studied “truth in advertising” issues related to self-described “abortion counseling clinics,” and questioned the availability of adequate scientific sexuality education. Further, they examined the inactivity by the PC(USA) in advocating for existing church policies and reviewed new PC(USA) materials and policy regarding sexual misconduct.

c. Ecumenical Focus

The committee has found that connections made through various ecumenical channels have provided resources and information for the committee that would otherwise have not been possible. Connections to the National Council of Churches’ Justice for Women’s Working Group and intentional participation in conferences like Ecumenical Advocacy Days and in groups like Ecumenical Women at the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women have deeply benefitted and informed the work of ACWC. The committee values ecumenical partnerships, particularly in a time when resources are limited in all denominations.

d. Young Women

The committee continues to be committed to working toward intentional inclusion of younger women in the work of the committee, and has spent considerable time considering the ways in which it could be more welcoming to younger women. Some of the younger members currently on ACWC have been instrumental in considering ways in which serving on the committee could be made more accessible to young women.

e. Intersectionality

The committee has worked to become more aware of and intentional about the places where women’s issues intersect with those of race, class, disability, etc., recognizing that most women find themselves at the intersection of more than one social identity marker that may influence the way they are treated and experience the world.

f. Partnering with Programmatic Staff of the GAMC

The committee is still working to adjust to the still relatively new separation of gender justice policy and program work. They have been intentional about staying connected with the staff of Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/ Presbyterian Women, and look forward to continuing to build their relationships with these women in order to make the work of gender justice in the church as effective as possible.

g. Staffing Shifts

As of shortly following the 219th General Assembly (2010), ACWC has begun sharing their staff person with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC). This provides a definite challenge to both committees in having adequate access to the resources staff provides and in finding meeting times that don’t overlap or occur too close together. The committee is concerned about how staff will manage at the General Assembly, when demands of both committees will be extremely high.

5. Actions of the Committee for Consideration of the 220th General Assembly (2012)

a. Resolutions in Response to Assigned Referrals

• A Resolution to Continue the Work of Deborah’s Daughters (Response to 2004 Referral: Item 05-03)
6. ACWC’s 2012 Resolutions

- A Resolution to Encourage Participation in the Words Matter Project
- A Resolution on Justice for Survivors of Sexual Assault
- A Resolution to Ensure Implementation of Updated and Detailed Safe Child Policy in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

Appendix 5

[Taken from the Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 871–72, electronic version.]

Item 10-20

A Resolution to Recommit to Celebrating the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Call on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to recommit to honoring and celebrating women of color, extending the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God to 2022.

2. Direct the Moderator, Stated Clerk and Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) to communicate by the end of 2012 with congregations, presbyteries and synods, seminaries, campus ministries and conference centers asking them to recognize the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God and incorporate it in worship, conferences, training events and other activities.

3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) to provide annual funding in the amount of $7000 for the Joint Working Group (up to eight members) to meet independently of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns once each year, to be incorporated into the per capita budget every year.

4. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) to include the Joint Working Group in the planning of future Women of Color Consultations.

5. Direct General Assembly Mission Council (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) to lift up the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God in its web-based and print publications periodically throughout the decade.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 09-13. Report, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies, Recommendation 3. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) to Create a Permanent Joint Working Group on Women of Color in the Church, to Be Made Up of Two Members of ACREC and Two Members of ACWC, Appointed by the Leadership of Each Committee—From the Women of Color Consultation Task Force (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 964–77).

The Joint Working Group was formed as a permanent committee as a result of the recommendations that came from the Women of Color Consultation Task Force, which were approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 964–77). They had their first meeting in July of 2009 in conjunction with a joint meeting of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC). They met again in January 2010, doing the work of monitoring the church’s response to issues and concerns raised in the initial Women of Color Consultation. They brought to the attention of both advocacy committees a number of issues directly affecting women of color. The Joint Working Group has not met since, due to the inability of the group to currently function under the parameters originally established for them. The ACWC is recommending new provisions for the Joint Working Group in order that this permanent monitoring committee established by the 218th General Assembly (2008) can continue to carry out its mandated work.

As reported to the 219th General Assembly (2010), the Women of Color Joint Working Group along with ACWC and ACREC have been discouraged by the lack of or inadequate responses to their referral monitoring inquiries. By the 219th General Assembly (2010), two years of the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God had gone by largely unrecognized. While the referrals from the 218th General Assembly (2008) called for the Decade to be communicated widely, requests from the Joint Working Group and the advocacy committees asking for such promotion and education resulted in no action. This decade (2009–2019) was intended to call the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to hear and sing new songs—those of women of color—in order to more faithfully represent and reflect all people of God, celebrating in particular the lives and gifts of women of color. (See Hearing and Singing New Songs To God: http://www.pcusa.org/media/uploads/acrec/pdf/woctaskforcereport.pdf) Clearly, the Joint Working Group has found this lack of response discouraging and disheartening. While some effort has recently come from the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to acknowledge the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, these efforts to publicize the Decade have come almost three years after it was supposed to have begun. The Joint Working Group suspects this sudden action is in direct correlation with the need to report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) on what has been done, and would draw the assembly’s attention to the late date at which this minimal action has been taken.

In passing the recommendations from the Women of Color Consultation Task Force, the 219th General Assembly (2010) reaffirmed the commitment of the PC(USA) to be a community of “full participation and representation” of every member of the body of Christ (Book of Order, F.1.0403), while also acknowledging that this commitment still requires a tremendous amount of intentionality and work—especially when it comes to the genuine and equitable inclusion of women of color in the life and decision making of the church. Sadly, in 2012, three years after the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God was to have begun, very few people in the denomination know what it is.

Restructuring within the GAMC (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) has also had a direct effect on the Joint Working Group. When the Joint Working Group was formed, the advocacy committee staffing situation was of a different model from what exists now. This has direct bearing on the Joint Working Group’s ability to come together to meet. When the Joint Working Group was formed, each advocacy committee had their own staff person to resource them with expertise in their particular area of advocacy and to assist them in completing their work. This allowed the two committees to meet once a year at the same time in the same place, where they would use a portion of their time to come together to share their work with one another and often work together on intersecting issues. Due to restructuring of the GAMC (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency), since 2010, the two advocacy committees have shared one staff person. Since one person cannot resource and assist two groups at one time, the advocacy committees can no longer meet simultaneously. The Joint Working Group (who also share the same staff person as the advocacy committees) is thus unable fulfill the directive from the 218th General Assembly (2008) to meet when the advocacy committees meet together.

When they were able to meet directly following those simultaneous advocacy committee meetings, the Joint Working Group (four of whose members are on the advocacy committees) was able to save tremendously on travel cost. Four of their (up to) eight members were able to have their travel covered by the advocacy committees, with whom those four were already meeting anyway. Neither advocacy committee incurred any extra cost, as this was one of their regularly scheduled meetings. The only travel cost the Joint Working Group had to pay was for their two to four at-large members. Given the structure of the current staffing situation, this scenario is no longer possible, meaning that in order for the Joint Working Group to continue to meet once a year as mandated by the 218th General Assembly (2008), their budget must be increased. They have to this point only been allotted only $3060 a year, which cannot cover travel and meeting expenses for six to eight people.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) has the opportunity to recommit to our call to be a church that more faithfully and fairly reflects the diversity of the body of Christ. Given that the 218th General Assembly (2008) saw fit to create the permanent Joint Working Group, the church has a responsibility to continue to support this group. The booklet describing the history, context and mandate of the Joint Working Group, called Hearing and Singing New Songs to God (http://www.pcUSA.org/media/uploads/acrec/pdf/wocctaskforcereport.pdf), is available online, so making this resource and the context of the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God known would cost little to nothing. To begin the Decade again would serve to show our willingness to admit that we haven’t yet done what we committed to do, but that from this point we will indeed lift new songs to God and in our actions reflect our commitment to celebrating the lives and gifts of women of color in this denomination.

Research Services Summary Report of Survey Conducted Review of General Assembly Permanent Committee: Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns

Introduction

During the latter half of 2013 Research Services contributed to a review of one of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assembly permanent committees by surveying representatives of various denominational constituencies about the work of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC). In carrying out this evaluation, Research Services collaborated with the PC(USA) staff members who work with the ACWC.

The following are highlights from the survey results:

• Among all respondents:
  ◦ Nearly half (46%) report being very familiar (15%) or somewhat familiar (31%) with the ACWC. Over one quarter (26%) report being not familiar with the ACWC.
  ◦ Eight in ten respondents (82%) believe it is very important that the General Assembly and its agencies and committees work toward gender justice in the PC(USA), with another 11% of respondents finding such work somewhat important.
  ◦ When asked if the PC(USA) should keep the ACWC, almost two-thirds of respondents (63%) answer yes, their work is very important. Another 14% respond yes, their work is somewhat important. Almost one-fifth of respondents (17%) answer that they don’t know.

• Among respondents who are at all familiar with the ACWC:
  ◦ When asked if the work of the ACWC supports the mission of the PC(USA), three-quarters (75%) answer yes, very much. Another 20% answer yes, somewhat.
Almost three-fourths (74%) of respondents believe that the ACWC has been very faithful (53%) or somewhat faithful (21%) to its stated purpose over the last seven years. Over one-fifth (21%) of respondents, however, report they don’t know how faithful the ACWC has been to its purpose statement during this time.

Over eight in ten respondents (82%) believe it is very important for the PC(USA) to have the ACWC. Another 10% of respondents believe it is somewhat important for the PC(USA) to have the ACWC.

The remainder of the report will explore various aspects of the survey and how various sub-groups responded. Readers can refer to Appendix A for the percentages of responses for each category of every question.

Constituencies Surveyed

Research Services surveyed nine different constituencies. These were:

- 237 members of the National Association of Presbyterian Clergywomen
- 67 participants in the Commission on the Status of Women
- 136 members of the Justice and Peace Network
- 141 members of Presbyterian Women
- 99 members of the Feminist Agenda Network
- 38 committee members from the 2012 General Assembly
- 181 Discipleship in the Global Community newsletter subscribers
- 90 Presbyterian Mission Agency staff

These constituencies were grouped together to create three sub-groups. The 2012 General Assembly committee members and the selected PMA staff formed a general Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) group (identified hereafter as General PC(USA)). The National Association of Presbyterian Clergywomen, Commission on the Status of Women, Justice and Peace Network, Presbyterian Women, and Feminist Agenda Network formed a sub-group of groups doing work similar to the ACWC (identified hereafter as Similar Work). The Discipleship in the Global Community newsletter subscribers formed a general justice-related group (General Justice).

Response Rates

The total response rate among all groups of respondents was 47%. In the end, 427 surveys were completed out of 902 individuals invited to participate (there were 87 invitations returned due to incorrect email address). Table 1 displays the response rates for each of the three sub-groups identified above.

Characteristics of Survey Respondents

When asked if they are a teaching elder (minister) in the PC(USA), half of respondents (50%) say that they are, with nearly four in ten (38%) being active and the rest (12%) being retired. The survey also asks respondents to indicate their role or affiliation with the PC(USA), with results as follows. Thirty-six percent of respondents are members of a PC(USA) congregation. Eleven percent are staff of one of the six General Assembly agencies, and 11% are clerks or ruling elders on the session of a congregation. Almost a fifth of respondents (19%) report being an other ruling elder (not currently serving on session). Seventeen percent of respondents are either leaders or members of a congregational Presbyterian Women circle. Seventeen percent of respondents report being members of the National Association of Presbyterian Clergywomen. (Percentages here add up to more than 100% because respondents could select more than one role or affiliation with the PC(USA).)

A majority of respondents are women (88%). Over three-quarters of respondents (78%) identify as white, while 20% identify as racial/ethnic.

Familiarity

Almost half (46%) of respondents report being very familiar (15%) or somewhat familiar (31%) with the ACWC. A sizable number of respondents (26%) report that they are not familiar with the ACWC. Almost half of General PC(USA) respondents (48%) and Similar Work respondents (46%) are very familiar or somewhat familiar with the ACWC, while fewer General Justice respondents (38%) report being so.
Respondents who are at least “slightly familiar” with the ACWC were asked how they would rate their familiarity with the work the ACWC has done in the past seven years on each of nine topics. (See Figure 1.) Of these topics, respondents report being most familiar with the work of the ACWC on gender-inclusive language when talking about people (57% very familiar) and expansive language for God (54% very familiar). Almost half of the total sample is very familiar with the ACWC’s work on the participation and inclusion of women of color (49%) and violence against women (48%).

Nearly half of respondents (45%) are not familiar with the ACWC’s work over the past seven years on feminicide in Juarez. Almost four in ten (39%) are not familiar with the ACWC’s work on the (?) Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God.

Among the sub-groups of respondents, over half of General PC(USA) respondents are very familiar with the ACWC’s work over the past seven years on gender-inclusive language when talking about people (64%), expansive language for God (62%), and participation and inclusion of women of color (55%). Over half of Similar Work respondents were very familiar with the ACWC’s work on gender-inclusive language when talking about people (55%), expansive language for God (51%), and violence against women (51%). Over half of General Justice respondents were very familiar with the ACWC’s work on gender-inclusive language when talking about people (63%) and expansive language for God (58%). For all three sub-groups, the two topics with which respondents were least familiar were feminicide in Juarez and the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God.

Faithfulness, Effectiveness, and Support

Among respondents who are at least “slightly familiar” with the ACWC, over half (53%) believe that over the past seven years, ACWC has been very faithful to its stated purpose:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns is called by the General Assembly to be a voice of justice and advocacy for women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and around the world, in order to give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership. To this end, we advocate for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of life and work in the church and society. 'Does not wisdom call, and does not understanding raise her voice?' Proverbs 8:1.

Another 21% report that the ACWC has been somewhat faithful to this purpose. A significant minority of respondents (21%), however, don’t know how faithful the ACWC has been to this purpose. Each of the sub-groups’ responses generally mirror the findings from all respondents.

Respondents who are at least “slightly familiar” with the ACWC were also asked how effective this committee has been over the past seven years in five specific areas. (See Figure 2.) Majorities of these respondents believe the ACWC has been “very effective” or “somewhat effective” in each of these areas.

When respondents who are at least “slightly familiar” with the ACWC were asked if the work of the ACWC supports the mission of the PC(USA), three-quarters (75%) overall answer yes, very much. Another 20% respond yes, somewhat; only 1% does not believe the work of the ACWC supports the mission of the PC(USA). Figure 4 displays the level of agreement among the sub-groups regarding whether or not the work of the ACWC supports the mission of the PC(USA).

ACWC’s Perceived Strengths and Weaknesses

Respondents who are at least “slightly familiar” with ACWC were asked how strong or weak the ACWC is in seven specific areas. A majority of respondents report that the ACWC is very strong or somewhat strong in each of the areas: expertise in women’s concerns (77%), responsiveness to women’s concerns (75%), expanding the vision for gender justice within the PC(USA) (74%), research and analysis of women’s concerns (66%), monitoring General Assembly policies and procedures (66%), representativeness of the PC(USA) as a whole (63%), and as a voice for transforming society (59%).

A significant minority of respondents report that they don’t know if the ACWC is strong or weak in each of the seven areas, with the largest percentages responding don’t know for the following: monitoring General Assembly policies and procedures (27%), representativeness of the PC(USA) as a whole (24%), and research and analysis of women’s concerns (22%).

Figure 5 displays the findings for areas of greatest strength among each of the sub-groups sampled. While some differences among the groups exist, over half of all respondents in each sub-group believe the ACWC is very strong or somewhat strong in all of the areas listed.
Respondents who are at all familiar with the ACWC were asked how important it is for the PC(USA) to have the ACWC. Over eight in ten respondents (82%) believe it is very important, and another 10% believe it is somewhat important. Only 2% of respondents believe it is somewhat important for the PC(USA) to have the ACWC, while only 1% respond not important and 4% are of no opinion or not sure.

Among the three sub-groups, around three-quarters or more of each believe it is very important that the PC(USA) has the ACWC (Similar Work, 85%; General PC(USA), 74%; General Justice, 74%). (See Figure 6.) No respondents in the Similar Work or General Justice sub-groups believe that it is not important for the PC(USA) to have the ACWC, compared to 6% of respondents in the General PC(USA) sub-group.
When asked if the PC(USA) should keep the ACWC, six in ten respondents (63%) say yes, their work is very important. Another 14% respond with yes, their work is somewhat important; 4% say yes, their work is slightly important. Only 1% of respondents believe that no, their work is not important, while another 1% respond no, the PC(USA) has achieved gender equality. One in six (17%) respond don't know.

Across sub-groups we find that over half of respondents in the General PC(USA) group (53%) and General Justice group (55%) believe that the PC(USA) should keep the ACWC because their work is very important, with over two-thirds of the Similar Work group (68%) answering the same. One-fifth (20%) of those in the General Justice sub-group, 18% of those in the General PC(USA) sub-group, and 17% of those in the Similar Work sub-group respond that they don't know if the PC(USA) should keep the ACWC.

Comparing the responses of men and women to the question of whether the PC(USA) should keep the ACWC, two-thirds of women (66%) and fewer than half of men (45%) answer yes, their work is very important.

Most Important Issues for ACWC to Address

Society-wide and/or Global Issues

Respondents who are at least “slightly familiar” with the ACWC were given a list of 14 society-wide and/or global issues, and asked to choose the three that are the most important for the ACWC to examine and make recommendations to the General Assembly about. (See Table 2.) Over half of respondents identify human trafficking (66%) and domestic violence (51%) as one of the top three society-wide and/or global issues the ACWC should examine, while three in ten select equal pay for women and men (33%) and reproductive health (31%).

Among each of the sample sub-groups, human trafficking (General PC(USA), 70%; Similar Work, 67%; General Justice, 55%), domestic violence (51%; 53%; 42%), and equal pay for women and men (30%; 34%; 29%) are consistently the top three society-wide and/or global issues cited as most important for the ACWC to examine and address.

Denominational Issues

Respondents who are at all familiar with the ACWC were also given a list of seven denominational issues, and asked to choose the two they believe are the most important issues for the ACWC to examine and make recommendations to the General Assembly about. (See Table 3.)
Over half of respondents (52%) identify pay equity for women teaching elders (ministers) and other PC(USA) women staff as one of the two most important issues the ACWC should examine and address within the denomination. Four in ten respondents chose representation of women in PC(USA) leadership (41%) and participation and inclusion of women of color (40%) as one of the two most important denominational issues for the ACWC to address.

Among the General PC(USA) and General Justice sub-groups, the two denominational issues selected most often as ones that the ACWC should examine and address are participation and inclusion of women of color (General PC(USA), 47%; General Justice, 53%) and pay equity for women teaching elders (ministers) and other PC(USA) women staff (45%; 47%). For the Similar Work sub-group, pay equity for women teaching elders (ministers) and other PC(USA) women staff (54%) and representation of women in PC(USA) leadership (46%) are the two most important issues.

Attitudes toward Gender Issues

In consultation with the ACWC, the survey included a battery of questions that focused on attitudes toward a number of different gender issues. The results from this section will provide an ideological context within which the previous set of results can be understood.

Working toward Achieving Gender Justice in the Denomination, American Society, and Throughout the World

Among all respondents, eight in ten (82%) believe that it is very important for the General Assembly and its agencies and committees to work toward gender justice in the PC(USA). Similarly, 82% of the General Justice sub-group and 86% of the Similar Work sub-group also think that working toward gender justice in the PC(USA) is very important. However, just over two-thirds (67%) of the General PC(USA) sub-group believe that working toward gender justice in the PC(USA) is very important.

Analyzing this question by the gender of the respondents reveals that six in ten men (62%) believe it is very important that the General Assembly and its agencies and committees work toward gender justice in the PC(USA), compared to over eight in ten women (85%).

When asked whether the PC(USA)’s councils should do more to support women teaching elders (ministers) even at the expense of supporting other constituencies, over half of all respondents (56%) answered either yes, much more (19%) or yes, somewhat more (37%). One in ten respondents (11%) believe the PC(USA)’s councils should do nothing more, while 14% of respondents don’t know.

When asked whether the PC(USA) should direct more or fewer resources toward achieving gender justice throughout American society, 22% of all respondents answer direct many more resources, 40% respond direct somewhat more resources, and 18% choose direct the same amount of resources. Very few respondents want to direct somewhat fewer resources (2%) or direct much fewer resources (3%). Fifteen percent respond that they don’t know whether the PC(USA) should direct more or fewer resources toward this end.

When widening the lens even further by asking whether the PC(USA) should direct more or fewer resources toward achieving gender justice throughout the world, 32% of all respondents answer direct many more resources. Thirty-four percent respond direct somewhat more resources, and 16% choose direct the same amount of resources. Again, few respondents answer either direct somewhat fewer resources (3%) or direct much fewer resources (2%). Fourteen percent of respondents don’t know whether the PC(USA) should direct more or fewer resources to this cause. (See Figure 8 for how each sample sub-group responds to this question.)

Figure 8: Sub-groups’ Opinions About Whether the PC(USA) Should Direct More or Fewer Resources Toward Achieving Gender Justice Throughout the World

Gender Inequality in the PC(USA)

When asked about how widespread gender inequality is in the PC(USA), 24% of all respondents believe it is very widespread. Four out of ten respondents (41%) believe it is somewhat widespread. One in ten (10%) are neutral, while fewer believe it is either somewhat rare (7%) or very rare (1%). Almost one-fifth of the sample (17%) responded that they don’t know how rare or widespread gender inequality is in the PC(USA).

Regarding responses among the sub-groups, those individuals in the Similar Work sub-group more often believe that gender inequality in the PC(USA) is very widespread (26%), compared to 20% of the General Justice sub-group and 19% of the General PC(USA) sub-group.

When looking at this same question in terms of the gender of the respondents, a much larger percentage of men believe gender inequality in the PC(USA) is very rare or somewhat rare (17%) compared to women (7%). Many more women view gender inequality in the PC(USA) as very widespread or somewhat widespread (67%) compared to men (53%).

Respondents were asked whether women or men have more opportunities for career advancement as teaching elders (ministers) in the PC(USA). Over half (58%) believe that men have many more opportunities for such career advancement. Over one-fifth of the total sample (23%) believe men have more, but only slightly more, opportunities. Thirteen percent of the sample choose don’t know/not sure when asked about gender inequality in career advancement for teaching elders (ministers) in the PC(USA). Among the sub-groups, the Similar Work sub-group has the most respondents (63%) who perceive men as having many more opportunities for career advancement as teaching elders (ministers), compared to the General PC(USA) group (46%) and General Justice group (45%).(See Figure 9.)

Gender Inclusive Language and Expansive Language for God

As discussed earlier in this report, respondents who are at least slightly familiar with the ACWC were asked how they would rate their familiarity with the work the ACWC has done on nine specific topics over the past seven years. More respondents report being very familiar with the ACWC’s work on gender inclusive language and expansive language for God, compared to any of the other specific topics listed (see Figure 1). When all respondents were later asked how important it is to them, personally, that worship services use gender-inclusive language when talking about people, Among all respondents, almost two-thirds (63%) believe it is very important. Another 18% believe it is somewhat important. Over one-tenth (13%), however, believe it is not important.

Among the sub-groups, respondents in the Similar Work sub-group are most likely to believe gender-inclusive language is very important (67%), compared to the General Justice (57%) and General PC(USA) (50%) sub-groups.

When asked how God is best understood, almost half of respondents (49%) believe God is best understood in gender-neutral terms (beyond gender). Four in ten (41%) believe God is best understood in both masculine and feminine terms. Just 8% believe God is best understood in masculine terms, with no one responding that God is best understood in feminine terms.

In looking at the sub-groups’ responses to the question of how God is best understood, while a majority of each sub-group believes God is best understood in either gender-neutral or both masculine and feminine terms, the General PC(USA) sub-group has the largest percentage of respondents (19%) who believe God is best understood in masculine terms (compared to the General Justice (7%) and Similar Work (6%) sub-groups). (See Figure 10.)

Figure 10: How God Is Best Understood, by Sub-Group

Conclusion

Overall, respondents demonstrated both a high regard for the work of the ACWC but somewhat limited knowledge and familiarity with the ACWC. A clear majority of the respondents believe:

• The work of the ACWC supports the mission of the PC(USA)
• The ACWC has been faithful to its purpose statement over the last seven years
• It is very important for the PC(USA) to have the ACWC
• It is very important that the General Assembly and its agencies and committees work toward gender justice in the PC(USA)
• The PC(USA) should keep the ACWC because the work of the committee is important

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-17

Comment on Item 09-17—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is in compliance with the appendix to its Manual of Operations, cited by the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns. The language in the appendix reads: “This Advocacy Committee shall consist of … one Presbyterian Mission Agency Board nominated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating and Governance Subcommittee and elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to serve a four-year non-renewable term. This voting member fulfills the responsibility of liaison between the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Advocacy Committee.” The Manual of Operations also includes this provision: “When no current member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board has the gifts or abilities required to serve on particular boards or entities that require Board representation, the Board Nominating Committee may select nominees from past Board members.”

At its February 2012 meeting, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board elected a voting member to serve a four-year, nonrenewable term (expiring in 2016) on the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns. This member completes his service on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board at the conclusion of the 221st General Assembly (2014), having served since 2008. However, his term on the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns is not complete until 2016, creating the concern raised by the advocacy committee.

This concern was raised by staff in February and options have been relayed to the advocacy committee, including asking the duly-elected board member to resign from the advocacy committee before the end of his term (so that a current board member might be elected), and considering a shortening of the length of the term of service on the advocacy committee (if the member must be a board member for all four years on the advocacy committee, then this shortens the list of eligible members by one third, and finding members with sufficient time to serve on all the required additional committees has become quite a challenge.) The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board advises the General Assembly to disapprove Recommendation 6 since the Manual of Operations is being followed, and alternate solutions are being discussed.

Item 09-18

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) set the membership of the GACOR committee as fourteen members-at-large, distributed as equal as possible from the regions described by Standing Rule I.1.d. No two members shall reside in the same presbytery.

Rationale

To be faithful stewards at a time of reduced resources and anticipating mid council restructuring, the GACOR proposes a reduction from sixteen members. Recognizing that our work is expanding, we further recommend that membership should be no fewer than fourteen members. Standing Rule (I.1.d.) describes the four regions used to determine the location of General Assembly meetings to distribute them nationally. These regions will provide the nominating committee guidance to maintain geographic distribution of GACOR membership.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-18

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 09-18.

The ACREC disagrees with this recommendation to reduce the General Assembly Committee on Representation’s (GACOR’s) committee members. The GACOR should remain, at the minimum, at its present levels, at least for the next two years. The GACOR was recently given additional responsibilities, including developing affirmative action and supplier diversity goals for six agencies. In order to timely complete the work that has been assigned, more not fewer committee members are needed.

Further, any reduction in the GACOR committee size also decreases the potential for diversity, particularly the racial ethnic representation. Simply consider the number of “identified,” if not “officially recognized,” racial ethnic groups that are part of the PC(USA) and the “inclusiveness” and “participation in decision making” guaranteed by the Articles of Agreement, and it becomes clear that diminishing the size of GACOR is not feasible.

Item 09-19

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Direct the GACOR to convene a table with leaders, designated by the six agencies for the purpose of developing a standard definition of supplier diversity for the PC(USA), and any related terms or criteria necessary; and also to

a. revise any appropriate manuals and guidelines; and
b. report back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

2. Direct the six agencies of the PC(USA) (PMA, Office of the General Assembly [OGA], Presbyterian Publishing Corporation [PPC], Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. [PILP], Foundations [FDN], and Board of Pensions [BOP]) to

   [a. provide annual status reports on supplier diversity (all strata) to GACOR.]

   [b. provide annual status reports on representation of women, persons of color, and persons with disability in its employment (all strata) to GACOR.]

Rationale

Rationale for Recommendations 1 and 2a

The 220th General Assembly (2012) gave a primary role to the GACOR regarding the review and recommendation of new goals for supplier diversity and AAEO for each of the six agencies of the PC(USA), in consultation with the agencies and advocacy committees (Item 11-17 Rec. 2–2g, from the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 45, 1103-05 of the CD; pp. 33, 250-251, 1091-93 of the print copy). Resuming this practice in 2013, GACOR receives annual data reports in these areas and interprets them in their biennial reports to the assembly.

It has become clear in the first year of implementation that there is confusion on what qualities or conditions constitute diverse suppliers. It will be difficult to determine if the goals are appropriate when there is no consensus on what the terms mean. There is a need to develop a standard definition and criteria for supplier diversity. The GACOR is the logical convener of a table where representatives from the agencies themselves determine a standard, as they have the expertise to do so in consultation. The purchasing manager in the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) is an essential partner in these discussions.

Reporting back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) will declare the agreed standard to the whole church and will be used by GACOR to evaluate work in these areas as well as determining when revision of goals for supplier diversity are needed. This will also assist the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) in its cultural proficiency reviews of the agencies in a six-year cycle.

The GACOR reports biennially to the assembly, but the six-year cycle of reviews of supplier diversity and its benchmarks will take place more regularly. Therefore, an annual reporting of this data will better equip the committee in its designated work. Recommendation 2a. and 2.b. simply makes clear the expectation of annual reporting.

Rationale for Recommendation 2b

Like the response to the previous referral, GACOR reports biennially to the assembly, but the six-year cycle of reviews of affirmative action/equal employment opportunity goals and benchmarks take place more regularly. An annual reporting of this data will better equip the committee in its assigned work.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-19

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-19—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 09-19.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) recently was designated as the church entity to recommend revisions to affirmative action and EEO goals and policies, including supplier diversity. See Item-11-17, Privilege, Power and Policy: The Church as an Employer (2012). Supplier diversity is the modern name for minority vendor policy. Minority Vendor Policy was established in 1984 and was defined as “the purchase of goods and services ... from businesses owned by racial ethnic people.” A goal of 10 percent was set for all purchases made by church agencies from companies owned by women and people of color. As such, it is important to understand the parameters and practical definition of “supplier diversity.” In practice, however, are agencies purchasing goods and services from a minority-owned firm? What percentage of ownership is required? Would a nonminority owned firm with more than 50 percent of its workforce comprised of racial ethnics qualify? What policies are in place to allow for other companies to be considered. It is important that this is clearly understood. The GACOR should develop this standard definition of “supplier diversity” in consultation with the six agencies.

Given the global crisis for lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) persons and their families in eighty-one countries where homosexuality is illegal and the impact of persecution that threatens their lives, health, and safety, the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does the following:

1. Encourages each Presbyterian to hold in prayer our LGBT sisters and brothers in the countries where they are vulnerable around the world.

2. Encourages the Presbyterian Mission Agency to create educational resources about the critical global LGBT situation and forward those resources to synods and presbyteries for study and action.

3. Encourages Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations to consider preparations to provide sanctuary, safety, and support for LGBT refugees and asylum seekers.

[Financial Implications: $9,726 (2015) PMA]

Rationale

God’s global family includes Presbyterians in more than 100 countries with Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission partnerships in more than fifty countries. In eighty-one countries where homosexuality is illegal, God’s global family includes lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) people who face persecution for simply being who they are, for whom they love, and with whom they create a family. Harsh sentences including life in prison can be imposed in a growing number of countries such as Uganda and Nigeria.

In addition to the criminalization of homosexuality, the death penalty can be imposed in ten countries. Persecution in the form of anti-propaganda laws such as in Russia engenders violence against LGBT persons and hinders HIV-AIDS and human rights work. Evangelism and pastoral care that could be offered to LGBT persons and their families in these countries by local congregations and our mission co-workers is significantly compromised because of criminalization and persecution.

Scripture, the Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) inspire and require solidarity and ministry with the LGBT people and their families around the world whose well-being and very lives are threatened by the laws of their own countries and the resulting experiences of oppression and persecution.

A Brief Statement of Faith proclaims to the world the way the Holy Spirit inspires us “to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace” (Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 70–71).

Psalm 9:9: “The Lord is a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble.”

Matthew 25:34–40:

“Then the king will say to those at his right hand, ‘Come, you that are blessed by my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me something to drink, I was a stranger and you welcomed me, I was naked and you gave me clothing, I was sick and you took care of me, I was in prison and you visited me;’ Then the righteous will answer him, ‘Lord, when was it that we saw you hungry and gave you food, or thirsty and gave you something to drink? And when was it that we saw you a stranger and welcomed you, or naked and gave you clothing? And when was it that we saw you sick or in prison and visited you?’ And the king will answer them, ‘Truly I tell you, just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me.’”

Doing Justice:
Justice is the order God sets in human life for fair and honest dealing and for giving rights to those who have no power to claim rights for themselves. The biblical vision of doing justice calls for:

a. dealing honestly in personal and public business
b. exercising power for the common good,
c. supporting people who seek the dignity, freedom, and respect that they have been denied,
d. working for fair laws and just administration of the law,
e. welcoming the stranger in the land,
f. seeking to overcome the disparity between rich and poor,
g. bearing witness against political oppression and exploitation,
h. redressing wrongs against individuals, groups, and peoples in the church, in this nation, and in the whole world

Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, 10.4, Lines 65–71: “In a broken and fearful world the Spirit gives us courage … to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace.”

The encouragement of social activism in the world is a sign of the community of God. The Book of Order states this in F-1.0304:

The great ends of the church are:

- the proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of humankind;
- the shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God;
- the promotion of social righteousness; and
- the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world.

ACSWP Advice and Counsel on Item 09-20

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-20—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-20.

This commissioners’ resolution is consistent with existing PC(USA) policy. The PC(USA) historically supported the basic human rights of all people, including prima facie discrimination against sexual minorities. The UN Human Rights Committee has urged states to pass antidiscrimination legislation that expressly includes sexual orientation, and to prohibit in their constitutions all discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity.

Furthermore, the U.S. has recently begun to recognize violence against sexual minorities as grounds for asylum. Immigration Equality helped more than two hundred LGBT asylum petitions, a 250 percent increase from 2009.

ACWC Advice and Counsel on Item 09-20

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-20—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-20.

The commissioners’ resolution clearly states the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s long-standing belief in the basic human rights of all of God’s children. LGBTQ persons share the same humanity as heterosexual persons and are equal partners in the body of Christ. Patriarchal definitions of men and women are socially constructed and limit the full humanity of all. Therefore, encouraging Presbyterians, as they are able, and providing resources to equip them to become advocates for LGBTQ persons, even to the point of offering sanctuary to those forced to flee, will enhance the church’s ministry to brothers and sisters who suffer in so many places across the world.

[The assembly answered Item 09-21 by the action taken on Item 09-07. See pp. 32, 39.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Advocating Regulation of Ammunition.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) advocates legislation to regulate ammunition and urges federal and state governments to enact such legislation.

Rationale

In one year, on average more than 100,000 people in America are shot in murders, assaults, suicides and suicide attempts, accidents, or by police intervention (statistics from the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence).

Nearly 3,000 children in the United States are killed by guns each year (Children’s Defense Fund, “Protect Children, Not Guns, 2012” [Washington, D.C.]).

In one given year, 17 people in Finland, 35 people in Australia, 39 people in England and Wales, 60 people in Spain, 194 people in Germany, 200 people in Canada, and 9,484 people in the United States were murdered with guns (statistics from the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence)

The gun murder rate in America is twenty times higher than any other developed country.

In December 2012, twenty first graders and six of their teachers in an elementary school in Connecticut were killed by a crazed gunman with an assault rifle.

After the tragic shooting in Aurora, Colorado, Mayor Bloomberg of NYC lamented that showing sympathy to the victims is fine but what is needed is action to address the crisis.

Finally, President Obama has called for an action agenda to prevent further gun violence.

At this time, legal and illegal gun owners can easily buy ammunition for those guns online, at a superstore, or at a gun show.

The Justice and Peace Committee of the Presbyterian Women of Detroit in past polls of our membership found that gun violence was one of their top concerns.

In studying the issue, the Justice & Peace Committee believes that regulating ammunition would help prevent further gun violence ... not really banning bullets but making it a lot harder to get the ammunition to shoot those guns.

Ammunition would only be sold by licensed sellers and the buyer would have to show proof that he or she has had a background check.

This proposal does not take away the rights of what the National Rifle Association and gun owners say is their constitutional right to bear arms. (Second amendment: “A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms shall not be infringed.”)

Other countries with strong gun regulation laws don’t have the mind-blowing statistics of people killed and wounded by guns as we do in America. We MUST assure peace and tranquility to the people of the United States of America.

This proposal has been approved by the Coordinating Team of the PWPD, the Social Justice and Peacemaking Committee of the Presbytery of Detroit, and the Presbytery of Detroit.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-21—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 09-21 be approved with amendment as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.] “The 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) advocates [that federal and state governments]

“[1. enact] legislation to regulate ammunition[. guided by Gun Violence, Gospel Values, as approved by the 219th
General Assembly (2010)]. [and urges federal and state governments to enact such legislation]

“[2. invest in the development, promotion, and use of ‘smart gun’ and ‘smart ammunition’ technologies that will help to prevent unintended and accidental shootings and aid law enforcement in reducing gun violence.]”

This commissioners’ resolution recommends the regulation of ammunition of firearms. As noted in the Rationale of this item, the number of gun deaths in the United States far outstrip gun deaths in countries with stronger regulation, where guns and ammunition are harder to access.

Regulation of ammunition is consistent with current General Assembly policy related to gun violence. Specifically the 218th General Assembly (2008) called for a ban on high-capacity magazines and “for new technologies, such as microstamping, in which identifying information from a gun is transferred onto bullet cartridges, which allow law enforcement to more easily trace guns and solve crimes” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 859).

Such tracking of firearm ammunition would be a significant step forward in gun violence prevention. According to of Justice report found last year that at least three companies … had developed owner-recognition abilities. The manufacturers argue that these new technologies could prevent suicides, accidental shootings, and death of police officers whose guns were wrested away in a struggle.”

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-21

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-21—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-21.

In light of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns’ strong support for ending gun violence (see Items 09-01 and Item 09-07), ACREC also strongly supports Item 09-21. It stands to reason that the call to enact laws to restrict easy ac-tss to guns would be accompanied by legislation to regulate ammunition as well.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-21

Comment on Item 09-21—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

This commissioners’ resolution calls for the regulation of ammunition of firearms. It is consistent with current General Assembly policy related to reducing gun violence, the most recent of which is Gun Violence, Gospel Values approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010). The 218th General Assembly (2008) called for items related to ammunition regulation. Specifically, the 218th General Assembly (2008) called for a ban on high-capacity magazines and “for new technologies, such as micro-stamping, in which identifying information from a gun is transferred onto bullet cartridges, which allow law enforcement to more easily trace guns and solve crimes” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 859). This resolution would serve to reiterate this position and make PC(USA) witness on gun violence reduction more explicit.

Item 09-22

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Encouraging Parental Leave Policy.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) encourages presbyteries and denominational agencies to adopt parental leave policies with minimum terms of six weeks at 100 percent of prorated annual salary [that does not require the employee to exhaust other types of paid leave] and full housing allowance. Parental leave is negotiated when a teaching elder/employee of an agency or partner is to give birth or is to adopt a child.

Rationale

Currently many presbyteries do not have policies in place to assist teaching elders in negotiating parental leave. The burden often falls on the teaching elder to advocate for his or her own needs without support of their presbytery.
In the case of birth or adoption, it is important that both fathers and mothers have the opportunity to establish strong bonds with their child.

Additionally, the church should model what it means to treat staff with compassion and care for their physical, emotional, and spiritual health.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-22

Overture on Item 09-22—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-22 with amendment: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

The United States is one of four countries in the world that does not mandate paid maternity leave (others are Lesotho, Swaziland, and Papua New Guinea). Our economic peers far exceed us: Switzerland mandates 98 days of maternity leave at 80 percent pay, Canada mandates 119 days of maternity leave at 55 percent pay, and France mandates 112 days of paid maternity and paternity leave at 100 percent pay (Source: International Labour Organization: http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2013/02/04/maternity-leave-paid-parental-leave-_n_2617284.html.)

The 216th General Assembly (2004) of the PC(USA) urged “synods, presbyteries, congregations, and individual Presbyterians to advocate for local, state, and federal legislation that might strengthen family life...[including] more paid leave for the care of dependent persons and child-related activities” (Transforming Families p. 16), calling for better parental leave broadly within the U.S. This commissioner’s resolution would bring church policies closer in line with what the PC(USA) has called for as a just vision for the nation as a whole.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-22—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 09-22 and that the policy include family leave for caregiving responsibilities.

While parental leave is emphasized in this overture, other family leave could be included, to open up an opportunity for participation by those with responsibilities to care for people with disabilities, elder care, etc.

According to a 2012 study by the National Center for Children in Poverty, the U.S. is one of only four countries that have no guarantee of paid time off for new parents. The Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) allows for job protection; however, there are limits to who this law applies to and it does not mandate that leave be paid. Some states have mandates to address the shortcomings of FMLA, but this issue remains a concern in many states as well as in our church. For many families, if their parental/family leave is not paid, then it is not an option.

Family leave policies benefit children, parents, and employers in several ways. Research indicates that children whose mother returns to work within the first twelve weeks after birth are less likely to be breastfed, less likely to be up-to-date on immunizations and pediatric check-ups, and are more likely to present with externalizing behavior problems. In addition, mothers who are able to spend significant time with their child after birth experience fewer depressive symptoms than those who have to return to work earlier. Fathers who are able to have longer leaves remain more involved in child rearing activities even once they’ve returned to work (research taken from Paid Leave in the States: A Critical Support for Low-wage Workers and Their Families. by Sarah Fass. March 2009. http://www.nccp.org/publications/pub_864.html).

When a child’s parents experience these benefits, the child experiences additional benefits in the quality of interaction with her or his family. Employers also experience benefits when they adopt generous parental leave policies by increasing job morale, loyalty, and productivity.

Our church is called to be an example to the world and this resolution provides presbyteries and other denominational agencies an opportunity to be an example to other employers that we value the quality of life for children and their families.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-22

Comment on Item 09-22—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

At the Presbyterian Mission Agency, we believe a balanced life, with time for work, leisure, and spiritual nature, makes us healthier and more productive. Because the Presbyterian Mission Agency has more than fifty employees, it must comply with the Family and Medical Leave Act (“FMLA”), which allows eligible employees, to seek up to twelve weeks of leave, including parental leave for the birth of a child or for placement of a child for adoption or foster care. Employees who are entitled to FMLA leave following the birth of a child or for placement of a child for adoption or foster care may also receive parental leave benefits. The Presbyterian Mission Agency has a parental leave policy, by which time off runs concurrently with leave under the FMLA policy. Employees who have exhausted all of their available paid time off are entitled to parental time off at 60 percent of their regular pay and with full benefits. The personnel policies of the Presbyterian Mission Agency offer generous leave policies and permit parental leave for both mothers and fathers, and it is not limited to teaching elders, as called for by the commissioners’ resolution.

[The assembly approved Item 09-23 with amendment to refer. See pp. 15, 40.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Requesting the Release from Prison of Mr. Oscar Lopez Rivera.

[The 221st General Assembly (2014) directs the Stated Clerk to petition, on behalf of the General Assembly, President Barack Obama for the release of Mr. Oscar Lopez Rivera.]

[Whereas the 221st General Assembly (2014) has received Item 09-23, commissioners’ resolution, on requesting the release from prison of Mr. Oscar Lopez Rivera.]

[Whereas the committee believes it may not have sufficient information for the 221st General Assembly (2014) to add its voice to efforts to secure release of Mr. Oscar Lopez Rivera from prison;]

[Therefore, the committee asks the 221st General Assembly (2014) to refer Item 09-23 to the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the Stated Clerk for further study and discernment and, if appropriate, take timely action.]

Rationale

Mr. Oscar Lopez Rivera has been in prison for thirty-three years as a result of a series of political events with which he was determined to be associated. World leaders, such as the Bishop Desmond Tutu and the ecumenical organizations within Puerto Rico, have endorsed the efforts in favor of the release of Mr. Lopez Rivera. In addition, the Puerto Rico governor, the resident commissioner in Washington, the legislature and leaders of the three political parties have petitioned for the release of Mr. Lopez Rivera.

The concept of justice has as a goal the transformation of the convicted individual so he or she may return to the free community and reincorporate back into society. Mr. Lopez Rivera has demonstrated during his years in prison to be a person free of resentment for his imprisonment. He has dedicated his knowledge, time, and resources while in prison to provide positive role modeling to others while volunteering to establish a reading and writing program for prisoners. He has been also dedicated to painting and to writing poetry. In addition, his actions in prison give testimony of his hope to be free with honor, dignity, safe and sound.

Furthermore, Mr. Oscar Lopez Rivera’s sentencing was an exaggerated showing of power and injustice for his actions, and for he is today, the Puerto Rican political prisoner who has served the longest prison sentence.

Therefore, we the commissioners of the Presbiterio de San Juan, Presbiterio del Suroeste, and Presbiterio de Noroeste present this commissioners’ resolution asking the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to join the multiple ecumenical and Puerto Rican voices petitioning President Barack Obama to release Mr. Oscar Lopez Rivera from prison.
“The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed me to bring good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim release to the captives and recovery of sight to the blind, to let the oppressed go free ...” (Lk. 4:18).

Item 09-Info

A. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns Agency Summary

The committee is composed of twelve regular members representing African Americans, Native Americans, Latina/o Americans, Asian Americans, Middle Eastern Americans, and European Americans.

The 2012–14 membership of the committee is as follows: Carmen Rosario (chairperson; National Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterian Caucus representative; member of Women of Color Joint Working Group, corresponding member to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the General Assembly); Lilia Ramirez (vice chair; Hispanic/Latino at-large; liaison to the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC); member of Women of Color Joint Working Group); Debbie Batisse-Kleiman (secretary; Native American, at-large); Noushin Framke (chair of Resource and Referral Subcommittee; Middle Eastern American, at-large; dual-member of Mission Responsibility Through Investment [MRTI]); Mark S. Jones Sr. (chair of Study and Comment Subcommittee; National Black Presbyterian Caucus representative); Clay Antioquia (dual member from the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, Native American); David Esterline (European American member at-large); Buddy Monahan (Native American Consulting Committee representative); Patricia Petty Morse (chair of Climate for Change Subcommittee, African American, at-large); Samson Tso (National Asian Presbyterian Caucus representative; liaison to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy [ACSWP]); Raafat Zaki (National Middle East Presbyterian Caucus representative; Vacancy (Asian American, at large); *Aida Faris (served as the National Middle East Presbyterian Caucus representative and as vice chair of ACREC from August 2012–December 2013); Kevin Johnson (liaison from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy [ACSWP], African American); Barbara Adams Smelter (liaison from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, African-American).

The committee was staffed by Courtney Hoekstra, associate for Advocacy Committee Support, Presbyterian Mission Agency, and Sherri Pettway, administrative assistant, Presbyterian Mission Agency.

As of August 2013, the committee had one vacancy in the Asian American at-large position.

1. Assigned Functions

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) works to fulfill its General Assembly mandate to provide advocacy and monitoring on issues affecting people of color in both church and society. The committee evaluates social trends in church and society and provides advice and counsel to the General Assembly (GA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB). The committee addresses issues, including civil rights, racial justice, environmental justice, economic justice, public education, law enforcement, health care, employment, and housing as they directly impact communities of color and thereby the entire body of Christ. The committee also monitors the implementation of programs and policies approved by the church that impact the participation and quality of life for people of color within the church. The committee works in close cooperation with other agencies and entities within the church, including the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to fulfill its responsibilities. The ACREC’s assigned functions, as stated in the Presbyterian Mission Agency Manual of Operations include:

a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or on its own initiative.

b. Advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of racial ethnic concerns including statements concerning pressing issues that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.
c. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of racial ethnic concern.

d. Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on racial ethnic concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

e. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.

f. Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies and programs relative to racial ethnic concerns.

g. Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concern.

The committee has direct access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, and its chair has corresponding member status with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and with the General Assembly.

2. Officers for 2012–2014

While the original 2012–2014 Executive Committee of ACREC consisted of Carmen Rosario, chair; Aida Faris, vice chair; Debbie Battise-Kleinman, secretary; David Esterline, chair of Resource and Referral Subcommittee; Mark S. Jones Sr., chair of Study and Comment Subcommittee, committee membership changes and time-commitment challenges resulted in the slate as listed here as of November 2013: Carmen Rosario, chair; Lilia Ramirez, vice chair; Debbie Battise-Kleinman, secretary; Mark S. Jones Sr., chair of Study and Comment Subcommittee; Noushin Framke, chair of Resource and Referral Subcommittee.

3. Accomplishments

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns used its regularly scheduled meetings to explore a wide range of topics of special interest to the committee and its work. The ACREC is committed to and has participated in antiracism and cultural proficiency training at each of its meetings. The committee also hears and responds to reports at each meeting from all of the caucus/council/coordinating committee representatives and liaisons to and from other groups. At each meeting in Louisville, ACREC connects with the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the director of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, the associate for Gender and Racial Justice, and the Racial Ethnic Leadership Development manager, when possible.

Following the 220th General Assembly (2012) the committee met as follows:

a. August 22–25, Louisville, Ky.: ACREC’s first meeting after General Assembly consisted of new-member orientation, which included learning about ACREC’s history and functioning, meeting some staff people in the Louisville office, and generally getting a feel for the work of the committee. At this meeting, ACREC participated in antiracism training, installed its new executive committee, reviewed actions taken by the General Assembly, met with several staff people, and set some priorities for the current cycle of work.

In 2013, the committee continued its work with the following schedule of meetings and content summaries:

b. January 17–19, Louisville, Ky.: ACREC met via Skype with Sung Yeon Choi-Morrow of Interfaith Worker Justice to discuss concerns about the global boycott called on Hyatt Hotels and the PC(USA) plan to use Hyatt as one of the Big Tent hotels. The committee discussed follow-up on several General Assembly actions. The ACREC met with and received updates from several staff people, including Rhashell Hunter, director of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, Vince Patton, Racial Ethnic Leadership Development manager, and Teresa Waggener, coordinator of Immigration Issues. The committee led the Presbyterian Center staff in worship in the chapel.

c. July 29–31, Louisville, Ky.: The ACREC spent time in discussion on several important racial justice current events, including the George Zimmerman trial results and changes made to the Voting Rights Act. Several members of the committee had participated in conversations or committees that resulted as actions of the General Assembly, so the group heard reports and discussed follow-up actions regarding the review of ordination exams, the study to be done on incarceration, and the work of the National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force, to name a few. The ACREC met and consulted with several staff people, including Christine Hong, associate for Theology: Interfaith Office of Theology and Worship, and Charles Wiley, coordinator, Theology and Worship.

d. November 6–8, Dallas, Tex.: The ACREC elected Vice Chair Lilia Ramirez to take the place of Aida Faris. The committee discussed the panel on race at the Big Tent. In September of 2013, a consultation was held between caucus representatives, advisory and advocacy committee representatives, and the Stated Clerk, Executive Director, and Moderator of the General Assembly regarding the role of the caucuses in the church. The ACREC discussed possible follow-up for the continuation of this conversation. The ACREC subcommittees worked extensively on drafts for resolutions to be brought to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

In 2014, the committee had its final full-committee meeting prior to General Assembly:

e. January 16–17, Louisville, Ky.: The committee met jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to discuss business going to General Assembly. The ACREC worked to complete all of its reports and resolutions in order to submit the reports in time for review by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Some members of the Climate for Change Subcommittee also had meetings with various representatives of the six PC(USA) agencies to hear more about the agencies’ six-year cultural proficiency plans in preparation for the completion of ACREC’s biannual Climate for Change Report.

4. Items of Business for the 221st General Assembly (2014)

The following items were sent to the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. A Review of Efforts Regarding Cultural Proficiency and Creating a Climate for Change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

3. A Resolution to Develop a Churchwide Antiracism Policy.

5. A Resolution to Educate Against and Help Prevent Voter Suppression.

B. Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) Agency Summary 2012–2014

“The [Holy One] is a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble.” (Ps. 9:9)

… [Be] doers of the word, and not merely hearers. …” (Jas. 1:22)

1. Introduction

The context of women’s advocacy is a human situation where women experience injustice because they are women. Grounded in communal faith in God who liberated the people of Israel from oppression and covenanted with Israel that they might do justice, and motivated by painful recognition of sexism within and without, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) explicitly articulated in the Articles of Agreement its commitment to work against gender-based discrimination. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is a contemporary fulfillment of this promise. The new Book of Order continues to uphold this commitment: “In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person” (Book of Order, F-1.0403). Created by the mandate of the 205th General Assembly (1993) at the recommendation of the Report of the Task Force on Shape and Form, ACWC is charged with the responsibility of assisting the church to give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 ... monitor[ing] and evaluat[ing] policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church...and advocate[ing] for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society [as a whole]. (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 262)

2. Assigned Responsibilities

They include:

a. Prepar[ing] policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on women’s concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or on its own initiative;

b. Advis[ing] the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of women’s concerns including statements concerning pressing issues that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly;

c. Provid[ing] advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women’s concerns;
d. Assist[ing] the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on women’s concerns and provide information to the church as requested;

e. Provid[ing] the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on women’s concerns;

f. Monitor[ing] the implementation of women’s policies and programs relative to women’s concerns; and,

g. Through advocacy maintaining a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women’s concerns.

The ACWC is housed in the Office of the Executive Director, Presbyterian Mission Agency. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly and Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB). The ACWC has organized itself with a leadership team of three co-chairs: two serve as corresponding members to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board respectively. One member of ACWC is a voting member of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI). There are twelve voting members of the committee; ten members are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) and elected by the General Assembly. They are chosen based on their individual qualifications and do not represent any constituencies. One member is the current moderator for Justice and Peace of Presbyterian Women and one member is a member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, chosen and sent by that body. The committee also has liaison members: Lilia Ramirez from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), Cheryl Thorne from the National Association of Presbyterian Clergywomen (NAPC), and Marsha Fowler and Eric Mount from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. (Eric was generally the member to attend meetings.) Members who were elected to the committee in July 2012 were Kerri Allen (filling a two-year partial term from a vacancy), Louise Davidson, Mary McClintock Fulkerson, Jack Hodges (from the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board), Sheila Louder (Presbyterian Women moderator for Justice and Peace), Jacob Parsons-Wells and Susie Wiggins. Voting members who continued on from the previous term were Barbara Adams-Smelter, Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty (dual member of MRTI), Joann Haejong Lee, Darcy Metcalfe, and Belinda Rice. Belinda Rice resigned from ACWC in January of 2014.

3. Gatherings and Foci

At each of ACWC’s meetings, the committee reviews and evaluates its work. The ACWC has also committed to checking in on having an intersectional approach to gender justice, taking into account the various intersections of women’s identities, including but not limited to considering race, physical and mental ability, class, etc. Each meeting includes reports from all liaison and dual members on the work of the groups to whom they are connected. Whenever possible, when meeting in Louisville ACWC connects with the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, the director of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, the associate for Gender and Racial Justice, and the Racial Ethnic Leadership Development manager.

a. 2012–2014: ACWC Had Five Regular Meetings

• The committee spent a significant amount of time on introductions and orientation, as this was the first meeting for those elected at the 220th General Assembly (2012).

• The ACWC met with several staff people at the Presbyterian Center in Louisville to learn about their work and the connections of the work being done by the Presbyterian Mission Agency with ACWC’s work.

• The committee reviewed their work at General Assembly and looked ahead to what items they would need to monitor in the coming years.

• The ACWC determined a focus for their work in the next two-year cycle, including forming two working groups to accomplish their work.

(2) February 7–9, 2013, in Louisville, Ky.

• The ACWC coordinated and held an open conversation on gender justice advocacy and the work of ACWC at Harvey Browne Memorial Presbyterian Church in order to connect the work of ACWC and the concerns of people in the pew.

• The committee met with the associate for Young Women’s Leadership Development to hear about her work.

• The ACWC discussed the proposed new compensation plan of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, as well as the Dependent Care Reimbursement policy.

• The committee discussed the call for global boycott on Hyatt hotels and the need to address the fact that Hyatt had been booked as one of the hotels for the Big Tent in Louisville.

(3) April 3–4, 2013, in Washington, D.C.

• The committee met in Washington, D.C., in conjunction with the Ecumenical Advocacy Days Conference. Following their meeting, some members of the committee attended the conference.
The Reverend Dr. J. Herbert Nelson met with the committee to share some of the work of the Office of Public Witness.

The ACWC reviewed and approved a joint letter with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board regarding concerns about the proposed new compensation plan of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The committee discussed the relationship it had formed via a letter sent to women newly ordained in a new denomination in Mexico and how to maintain this relationship.

ACWC member Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty addressed the group on “Women and an Economy of Sharing.”

ACREC member and liaison to ACWC, Lilia Ramirez, shared with the group about her time with the women in Mexico in the newly formed reformed denomination.

The committee began discussion of resolutions to General Assembly.

The committee met to finalize its work going into the 221st General Assembly (2014).

The committee met jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to discuss their work for General Assembly.

The ACWC reviewed and revised its self-study report.

b. Highlights

(1) Self-Study Review Process

The ACWC is under its normal six-year review by the 221st General Assembly (2014) and put a great deal of work into the report throughout this work cycle. The committee would like to draw your attention to that report, also submitted to this assembly, for more in-depth information on ACWC’s work and goals for the future.

(2) Becoming the Best ACWC in the World

Undergoing a larger review has led to ACWC’s commitment to check in at the beginning of each of its meetings with the question, “How can ACWC be the best ACWC in the world?” This question allows the committee to evaluate the work it has been doing and to consider how to be more effective in its work in the future.

(3) Young Women’s Participation

The committee continues to be committed to working toward intentional inclusion of younger women in the work of the committee, and has spent considerable time considering the ways in which it could be more welcoming to younger women. Some of the younger members currently on ACWC have been instrumental in considering ways in which serving on the committee could be made more accessible to young women. The committee has adjusted its meeting schedules and relied more on technology for making connections and getting work accomplished.

(4) Intersectionality

The committee continues to work to become more aware of and intentional about the places where women’s issues intersect with those of race, class, disability, etc., recognizing that most women find themselves at the intersection of more than one social identity marker that may influence the way they are treated and experience the world.

(5) Partnering with Programmatic Staff of the Presbyterian Mission Agency

The separation of gender justice policy and program work within the Presbyterian Mission Agency continues to be a challenge for ACWC’s work. They have been intentional about staying connected with the staff of Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, and look forward to continuing to build their relationships with these women in order to make the work of gender justice in the church as effective as possible.

c. Actions of the Committee for Consideration of the 221st General Assembly (2014)—ACWC’s 2014 Resolutions

“A Resolution to Begin the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)”;
“A Resolution to Address Child/Youth Protection Policies and Resources in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.”);

“A Resolution to Support Hotel and Hospitality Workers through the Adoption of Just Policies and Principles in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.”);

“A Resolution on Developing a Comprehensive Social Witness Policy on Human Trafficking as a Human Rights Issue”;

“The Self-Study Report of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.”

C. General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) Agency Summary

“Now there are varieties of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are varieties of services, but the same Lord; and there are varieties of activities, but it is the same God who activates all of them in everyone” (1 Cor. 12:4–6, NRSV).

“… Let us love, not in word or speech, but in truth and action” (1 Jn. 3:18, NRSV).

Introduction

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) is a permanent standing committee of the general assembly, mandated by the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Book of Order (G-3.0103), The Manual of the General Assembly (including the Standing Rules of the General Assembly and the Organization for Mission) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action. Since it was constituted in 1983, GACOR has a long history of leadership, training, and service to the denomination.

The GACOR helps the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) become the church that God calls us to be, a church that includes diverse persons from the abundance God provides, an inclusiveness that represents the fullness God has created. We serve as a conscience within the denomination, keeping its attention on the quality of its community and always pointing toward a greater openness to voices not always heard, to leaders routinely overlooked, and to seek decision making processes that enable full participation.

Assigned Responsibilities

The GACOR, in its constitutional mandate, promotes, reviews, advises, advocates, and consults with the General Assembly and its entities, committees, councils, and divisions in order to ensure that the principles of inclusiveness and diversity are implemented. How we function as the body of Christ is important both internally (structures, procedures, ways of interacting) and externally (social witness, mission, ministry). The church seeks to live into the abundance of the gifts given to it for its mission by helping it express that diversity and more fully accomplish our common ministries. To do this most faithfully, the church needs to have the widest possible participation. This rich diversity of membership and participation particularly includes race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography and theological convictions. At the national level, the church (as the body of Christ) is equipped with the widest possible diversity, by election and employment, for its life and it is called to select broadly from those leaders for its bodies.

Accomplishments

From January 2012 to December 2013, we have accomplished much and wish to highlight the following:

1. Advised the Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the slates for special committees and commissions.

2. Consulted with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) on the six-year cultural proficiency plans of the six General Assembly agencies.

3. Adapted to staffing transitions resulting from a restructure in the Office of General Assembly (March 2013).

4. Met with representatives of the six PC(USA) agencies regarding Recommendation 2, of Item 11-17, business referred by the 220th General Assembly (2012).

5. Engaged the six agencies in conversation regarding their employment practices.

6. Advocated for diversity in leadership by

   a. participating in caucus discussions with the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) leadership, and

   b. continuing communications with the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC).
7. Attended to communications improvements with mid councils and interested parties by launching a blog (“In Spirit in Truth”), creating a new logo, revising brochures, and updating our website, and doing so in many places in Korean, Spanish, and English.

8. Designated members as liaisons with partners and caucuses to improve mutual communication with underserved communities.

9. Offered advice and counsel at Committee on the General Assembly (COGA) and PMA Board meetings.

10. Consulted with the Climate for Change Task Force on their final report resulting in referrals to GACOR.

12. Created a working group to integrate referrals from the General Assembly regarding employment.

13. Attended Big Tent.

14. Hosted the 2013 Synod COR Training Event with the theme, “There’s Power in the Patchwork: Unity in Diversity,” in Chicago with representation from eleven synods and very positive responses to plenary sessions (e.g. Contextual Bible Study of Acts 6; Martin Luther King Jr.: Confronting Viral Narratives of Race; Non-Healings in the Hebrew Bible; and, An Interactive Exercise in Church Building), workshops (Vision, Obstacles, and Directions: The Work of COR Beyond the Numbers; Scenario Planning: Developing Agility in the COR Movement; Bonhoeffer and the Harlem Renaissance; Polarity Management; and, Practicing God’s Radical Hospitality), and an interpretation of the event in a painting by the Rev. Shawna Bowman.

16. Improved response rate of synods reporting data to the GACOR reaching a completion of the 2012 report by ten of sixteen synods (75 percent).

17. Worked with OGA staff and the IT department of Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop and launch a new, user-friendly Synod COR web portal for 2012 and going forward. The 2013 report (of 2012 data) had a high response rate to completion (within three weeks of being available, 50 percent of synods had reported).

18. Compared demographics from the last four General Assemblies (2006, 2008, 2010, and 2012) with results showing three areas needing attention:
   a. Younger Commissioners: While the youth of the church is present through the active participation of YAAD’s, data shows that at the 220th General Assembly (2012) had no commissioners whose age was less than 25.
   b. Racial Diversity of Commissioners: A significant disparity of racial ethnic participation remains (although limitations in the racial and ethnic sensitivity classification system do not translate into accurate proportions of participation).
   c. An increasing gap: When the information from previous years (2006, 2008, 2010) is compared to 2012 data there was little to minimal increase in racial ethnic commissioners, while there was an increase of 179 (33 percent) in white commissioners.

Membership

Class of 2014: Ms. Deborah Fair (Synod of the Covenant), Ms. Cindy Lou Ray (Synod of Lakes and Prairies), the Reverend Martha Ross-Mockaitis (Synod of Lincoln Trails); the Reverend Heather Walchar (Synod of Mid-America), Mr. Patrick Nelson (Synod Northeast), the Reverend Amy Mendez (Synod Rocky Mountains), and Ms. Dora V. Martinez (Synod of the Southwest).

Class of 2016: the Reverend Dr. Tom Kirkpatrick (Synod of Alaska-Northwest), the Reverend Myung (Martin) Han (Synod of the Living Waters), Dr. Tressie Muldrow (Synod of Mid-Atlantic), the Reverend Rubén Ortiz-Rodriguez (Synod of Puerto Rico), the Reverend Héctor M. Rivera-Vélez (Synod of the Sun), Mr. Issa Sayar (Synod of the South Atlantic), Ms. Josephine (Jo) C. Mueller (Synod of Southern California and Hawaii), Ms. Wanda Tanner-McNeill (Synod of the Trinity).

Resignation/Vacancy since January 2013 (in the Class of 2014): Mr. Kenneth Bartlett-Preston (Synod of the Pacific)

Words of Thanks

On behalf of the 221st General Assembly (2014), the General Assembly Committee on Representation expresses its thanks and appreciation to Teaching Elders Amy Mendez and Heather Walchar and Ruling Elders Deborah Fair, Dora V. Martinez, Patrick Nelson, and Cindy Ray for their dedicated service to the church through membership on the GACOR. Due to illness, Dora V. Martinez was unable to complete the last six months of her term, and the committee thanks her for her considerable contributions to our work. The GACOR wishes to thank Ruling Elder Kenneth Bartlett-Preston, who found it necessary to resign his position in early 2013. Kenneth’s contribution was important and valued and he is missed.

The GACOR is grateful for the staff assistance of the Reverend Molly Casteel, Assistant Stated Clerk and coordinator for Representation, Inclusiveness and Ruling Elder Training, and Diane Minter, senior administrative assistant for Mid Council Ministries. The committee is grateful for other staff who have supported them in this period: Flora Daniel, Tasia Spencer, Joyce Evans (who retired in 2013), and Molly Williams.

Note:

- Feminicide is defined as the killing of women, girls, or infants by males because they hate females, have a sense of superiority over females, for sexual pleasure, or by an assumption of ownership over females.
- Expansive language refers to descriptions of God that seek to broaden our expressions of God. Rather than using only a small number of terms to refer to God (e.g., Father, Creator, Lord, Almighty), a move toward more expansive language might also use terms such as Redeemer, Creator, Mother, Breath of Life, I Am, and Giver and Renewer of Life.

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns purpose statement states: "The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns is called by the General Assembly to be a voice of justice and advocacy for women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and around the world, in order to give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership. To this end, we advocate for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of life and work in the church and society. 'Does not wisdom call, and does not understanding raise her voice?' Proverbs 8:1."

ACWC has been a beacon for the church over the years it has been in place. More attention should be given to it by all the agencies of PCUSA.

I am very involved with Peace and Justice in PW and my Presbytery but truthfully I can't remember hearing of this group. Please send me more information.

When you ask me to limit it to three, that doesn't mean the other topics aren't important, they are! Both ACWC and ACREC were weakened by administrative changes several years ago. Program work on justice for women has been weakened even more. Distance from women ministers' organization and PW has weakened policy and program. Despite these problems, the volunteers have worked to hear God's voice and witness to it in the church.

ACWC is so important, but even more important is that the church listen to their findings and suggestions and respond. They have an important voice, but are paralyzed as far as creating very much change in the denomination. Backing them with funding for education, perhaps, or hiring more responsive staff in PMA....I'm not sure what it would take, but it's such a disappointment to me, as a young person, to watch the larger church ignore them.

Not sure how much input the ACWC has in relationship to staff policies. In the last few down-sizings, women in their 50s held the bulk of lost jobs. That's complex to decipher because each case is different personnel-wise. However, it is an ugly pattern that should be addressed somehow.

Wouldn't it be wonderful if people really were equal...not dependent on gender, race or ethnicity?

As an Executive Director of an ecumenical women's organization, I'd like to learn more about ACWC as I know practically nothing about this ministry in our denomination.

The work may be (and is) important, but it is not necessarily as important as other work of the denomination. When resources are shrinking, we need to be making decisions, not in the absolute, but comparatively. These are ethical choices. All things matter, but what matters more? The survey might have been stronger if it has asked for such. If I had to choose, for example, between the ACWC and expanding resources for youth ministry or congregational transformation, I would choose the latter. I would be more concerned about providing pastoral leadership for congregations in general, rather than concerned about the gender of that leader. The only exception might be with some of the racial-ethnic congregations. The Sister to Sister program has been a great benefit in that regard. But that sprang from PW grassroots.

I filled this out because I keep receiving it and felt a bit guilty for not doing it. I really don't know enough about the ACWC to be answering any questions.
In a culture where it seems that we are reverting to "old ways of doings" - it is vital that PC-USA continue to be proactive & continue to educate not just our members, but society as a whole. Please make every effort to continue to fund and equip the ACWC. Only now are we beginning to see substantive changes in American culture with regard to human trafficking and the global connection of the U.S. to this vast network of abuse for women of all cultures. Continue to support the UN Commission on the Status of Women. Their work is vital both nationally and globally. There is much, much to do and only now are we beginning to discern that more are actually listening. Keep it going!!

It is important to continue working for the voices of women in the world, especially in countries where they are mistreated.

I am a former member of the ACWC. The work of the ACWC is hindered by lack of sufficient staff AND the fact that it is a policy-making body only. They are not allowed to do any programmatic work. There is no advocacy within the Women's Ministries. Women's Ministries does not use the word "advocacy"; rather they use the term "gender justice". Gender justice is vastly different from advocacy. Consequently, there is very little, if any, programmatic advocacy going on related to women's issues. The work of the ACWC is also ignored or diminished by the Mission Agency in assigning follow-up work from the General Assembly pertaining to women's issues. Often ACWC had to struggle to get issues into the system for GA consideration. The less-than-effective work that takes place is not because ACWC has not done its job. They do a fine job within the limitations they are given. Very frustrating!

Anything the denomination and the ACWC can do to support and affirm the work of clergywomen is great!

The ACWC is woefully understaffed and underfunded and this provides severe challenges for the committee to be able to carry out their work effectively. I am also concerned that some leadership in the PCUSA does not recognize or value the importance of this work in the church and the world.

I consider myself very connected and involved in the denomination, and it concerns me how unfamiliar I am with the ACWC. I don't know how that can be corrected, but I think it's worth some conversation.

We need ACWC because there is no longer a Women's Ministry office in the PMA. There is a Young Women's Leadership (temporary) person - but all the work for women that was being done is no longer happening. This is a travesty for the PCUSA.

I'm sorry that I do not know more about what ACWC is doing. Will have to make a point of looking into it. Theoretically I believe it is an important committee to be the eyes, ears and conscience for our church.

Until I received this survey I was not aware that this committee continued to exist. I was on Women's Concerns Team for Synod of Northeast for many years. GREAT experience and did good work. The issue of inclusive language is more serious now than it was in the 1970's. The denomination is operating out of sense of fear and scarcity. Shame on us! Our faith gives us courage to do what is right. Where are the leaders??

Of course we still need ACWC's work. Their work is not finished until women's work, ideas and opinions are viewed on par with men's. That will take many years.

Honestly, I have as many complaints as I do kudos. I feel the ACWC is extremely important, but as a young woman who is heavily active in many areas of PC(USA), I think the ACWC and committees like it need to be given the room to truly work for what God has called all of us to do. The institutional systems of PC(USA) seem to keep committees of the GA and Mid-Councils stuck with trying to continually reinvent the wheel. There are some great things that have been done in years past, but greater things could have been done- and I hope they do get done in the future. Thanks for asking :)

I would support such a committee that worked for gender equality in the PCUSA. But the broad range of "Women's Concerns" takes ACWC far afield and leads them to support Concerns that are the view of some, but not in a way representative of the diversity of men and women in the PCUSA.

I think their work is very important as it lifts up issues of equality for women both within and outside of the PCUSA. This education needs to continue as the church seems "behind the times" in regard to this issue. I appreciate their work even though I may not know all they encompass and/or accomplish.

One more example of broadening our horizons would be to include "Chaplain" as a teaching elder option. In Monmouth Presbytery approximately 10% or our teaching elders are chaplains: hospice, hospital and law enforcement. Thank you!
ACWC is one of the last supports for women's concerns in the PC(USA). Women's issues and support for them financially and voiced by the denomination/GA continue to be eliminated and sidelined. Please keep ACWC funded and active.

I am not very familiar with the actual of the work of this committee. However, I strongly believe that there are important issues for women worldwide which need addressing by the PCUSA, by the Churchwide PW, and our government. I support you in any efforts in this direction.

There are so many voices that seek to be heard. I am grateful that ACWC remains persistent but not necessarily strident.

I hope the ACWC will continue to exist and do its work.

PCUSA is an example of gender equality to the point women may have an edge. A good way to check this is to review the last 2 years of positions that were filled at the Center in Louisville.

Until there is equity for women in positions of responsibility and justice is available for vulnerable women in our world, we need the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns. I spent seven years of my life (part-time) working for women's concerns at the Presbytery and Synod level and have travelled to Central America and Africa and have seen first-hand how women are disrespected, harassed and misused. Blessings on the Advocacy Committee!

I am shamefully ignorant of a lot of the work of the ACWC but want to become more involved in our church and especially in activities that benefit women.

My concern is how much digging on the web site it takes to find the ACWC information. How do you find it when you don't already know about the committee or function?

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns does what it can within the system as we have it, but it is sometimes only "somewhat effective" because their advocacy is not always heeded or taken fully into consideration. I believe their voice is important, but the church is not paying enough attention and making structural changes necessary to fully live into a world where gender-justice exists.

Advocacy Committee should continue to promote racial equity and justice within PCUSA.

Even though it is mostly ignored by the wider church, ACWC needs to be a voice for justice for women. Maybe we will be heard someday.

I am grateful for the opportunity to participate in this much needed survey...Look forward to many changes as a result.

ACWC is one of the few vestiges of hope that we have since reunion with the Southern strain of our denomination. Sexism and racism ran rampant in the south and continues today. I was a member of the national committee to reorganize finances between us. It took three years. I traveled the denomination in the south. It is quite unfortunate that our whole church is now suffering from these "isms." Some questions here in this questionnaire are misleading and impossible to answer like "should the PC (USA) councils do more to support women teaching elders even at the expense of supporting other constituencies?" Women are a majority, we do not get opportunities as do men. One white woman has been moderator of our Presbytery over the past several years, no women of color and none sent to GA as delegates. An disproportionate number of men are sent into leadership positions in the denomination while equally qualified, and often more qualified ethnic women, are passed over. Men are disproportionately represented in all areas of opportunity in the church; that imbalance must be corrected to enable a proper and complete response to God's mission in the world. Correcting this historical imbalance should not be seen as favoring women or disadvantaging other historically favored constituencies. We were once making progress in the UPUSA, I am sorry to see us losing ground and fall back so far. I look into a hopeful future and know that change will come where all God’s children are present and included.

At 77 years of age, and a retired Clergywoman, I am frightened by a younger generation of PC(USA) women, elders & clergy, who take for granted all we fought for. As a result they seem to no longer feel it's important to use expansive language for God, or to demand equal pay for women who work in and for the church. Little girls and young mothers are still sitting in the pews thinking they aren't as important as boys and men. Please, the work of the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns must continue.

This work is critical, especially as some Presbyterian churches are leaving the PC(USA) and reversing gains in women's status. The PC(USA) must take a strong stand for equity for women within church and society.

Once I left a position on a National Committee, I did not track the work of ACWC actively. Do they need to be more visible? I'm not sure. Perhaps their work is best done (more effectively?) when done incognito? Not sure.

ACWC is the only committee that addresses the concerns and needs of women in the church. There are so many issues that demand attention, but not much staff. Therefore, this committee is crucial to the work of the church.
I have been a member of NAPC for two years now and have just begun to see the great need for this advocacy committee work in our churches and in our world. Thank you.

It is pretty much invisible. I'm on the Presbytery PW Coordinating Team, and I have heard nothing of them. I am a member of NAPC, and I have heard nothing of them. I'm nominal Head of Staff for my presbytery, and I have heard nothing of them. Where have they been hiding???

I am greatly concerned that at the last downsizing May of 2012 there was a highly disproportionate amount of women in their "50's" downsized. It makes me think that the experience of women in their 50's is not highly valued.

I generally find the advocacy of the ACWC to be much more liberal than my beliefs, and I think it tends to be more liberal than the beliefs of most PCUSA members.

In the past few reorganization and/or reduction-in-force situations within the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of General Assembly, it feels like a disproportionate number of women over the age of 50 were adversely affected. I would hope to see ACWC raise this as an issue to be looked at in future similar situations.

I was first introduced to the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns last year while preparing to be a delegate to the United Nations 57 Commission on the Status of Women. For some time I had been questioning if God was leading me in a different direction professionally but as I learned about all the work done by through the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns and heard the horrific stories of injustice and abuse during CSW57 my prayers were answered. Scripture tells us "if you do it unto one of the least of these my brethren, you do it unto me". So as Christians, we can not ignore our responsibility to everyone in this global society who has any form of power and control used against them. Silence hides the violence and unless the silence is broken domestic violence/family violence/intimate partner violence will ultimately be "the silent killer of the family unit and thus society". The bottom line is, I can't emphasize enough what a vital role the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns plays within PC(USA). While they have experienced disruption due to the staffing changes and reorganizations of the Mission Agency, they remain faithful to the mandate given to them. I wish they were more assertive of their role in calling the church to new and emerging issues as well as partnering with other committees for intersectional work.

Advocacy for opportunities, equality and justice for women--locally, nationally and internationally--is extremely important work!

Choosing only three issues is very difficult when attention and work is needed in each of the arenas named and others that were not included. A greater investment needs to be made across the church and around the world in these concerns. Considering the limited number of staff and the size of the committee they do amazing work.

Commitments to the staff and to all who serve on the committee.

This is a hard working committee that has helped keep women's issues before our denomination. Let's let them continue to speak up for women!

Keep up the good work! Also know that similar concerns and issues exist in the Church of Scotland (as indeed in many other denominations) but without the important work of an in-house organization similar to ACWC. Basically female ministers have to act and talk like traditional men in order to advance in the Church of Scotland. ACWC is the voice for the PCUSA racial ethnic women. This would be the committee that stands for ALL women. Thanks for the prophetic ministry of ACWC!

Since retirement I do not have a good knowledge of ACWC. I do support them.

The work of this committee is very important to me. It is very important that it be staffed by competent dedicated women who are committed to the values of gender justice, inclusive language and expansive gender neutral terms for God.

Women's concerns seem to be having a lower priority at the PC(USA) national level. That is why we need a strong ACWC.

This committee is essential to the work of maintaining women clergy in much better positions and to receive equal pay and equal treatment. The work has not been accomplished and the committee is not nearly as effective as it could and should be. I pray this committee becomes more committed to its work and does not stop until it is accomplished.
1. The work of ACWC has suffered in the last decade due to constant reduction in staff support and budget. It is a farce to ask about the adequacy of this work in the context of little actual interest on the part of the national executive staff. Waiting 5 years for a weakly adequate response to the pay equity mandate of GA is an example. 2. Your multiple choice categories are inadequate and display a weak understanding of women's issues as they interconnect and impact women differently depending on race/ethnicity and economic class. For example, access to reproductive health services is connected to pay equity is connected to domestic violence, etc. Choosing between these is like choosing between food and clean air. 3. Finally, the goal is not to add women to a traditionally masculine institution or patriarchal theology. The goal is to uncover the fundamental heresies that support the subjugation of anyone. 4. ACWC, weakened as it is, is essential to the hope that the PCUSA may someday reject its worship of corporate America and become the exhibition of the Reign of God which is its only purpose for existence.

We must base our advocacy in biblical concerns, like God's concern for the widow and orphan, especially the poor. We seem to be more concerned about being politically correct rather than biblically correct. It is more important to use language about God that is inclusive of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the Prince of Peace than being concerned about gender. Evangelism and justice must be merged in this area of social concern. We must condemn the sin of abusive violence and offer avenues of healing.

One of my biggest concerns is that as our denomination's membership continues to age, there is still a stigma with some congregations that throw up a brick wall at the idea of having a female pastor. Education truly needs to be directed towards search committees that have this antiquated point of view. However, gender inequality issues in the global landscape has varied cultural implications attached to it. Threatening to challenge these cultural establishments could be as destructive as it could be constructive.

I feel that we need to add not just the Pastors, Teaching Elders, and Ruling Elders but also for the Administrative Assistants, Receptionist, and other general staffing who are women. We tend to exclude these people out of mix but they are part of the backbone in which helps hold the Church together and are or should be considered just as important.

ACWC has always been an excellent resource for Presbyterian Women/ Horizons. The staff, committee and statements/resources from ACWC provide faith-based, justice-oriented guidance on women's issues. Staff resources for ACWC have been consistently reduced in number and expertise over the last decade. No active, effective advocacy for women exists in the PC(US)A aside from the little work which volunteers can accomplish. Only lukewarm support for existing PC(USA) reproductive health policies. Timid response to need for sexual/gender education programs for youth. Church management is too shy of criticism in educating about/advocating for existing church policies.

ACWC is very important. Where I puzzled over whether to say more resources ought to be devoted, it's largely because they are already doing good work. The number of women ministers in our presbytery has certainly increased but they tend to be in the smaller churches, sometimes not full time. Personally, I have no objection at all to being called a woman, HuMAN, feMale, person, etc. If Jesus called God "Father", I am not inclined to argue.

ACWC needs to be a voice for justice in the church because injustice at home is a weak foundation for justice work in the world. We need to practice justice in the institution as well as preach it from the pulpit.

Very important! And underappreciated because ACWC is on the leading edge, and the PCUSA is very patriarchal and sexist.

This work is important but no more important than what is happening in the world. In too many countries and cultures women and girls are to be used and abjured. That has to stop, now. Education of girls and women must happen for them to be able to stand up for themselves

I suspect that ACWC is a much needed committee in the PCUSA led by incredibly gifted people. I am embarrassed to say that I simply don't know about it, or don't make direct connections between things that I receive and the ACWC. I seek in my call, and to a great extent I believe the parish I serve, is sensitive to gender issues, we use neutral language, or expanded language for God - we would be allies!!! And yet on most of the questions I checked "I don't know."

This is critical work in the PCUSA and one of the most prophetic, Spirit-filled places where God's wisdom, justice, challenge, and love can be spread in the church. I am very thankful for the work of ACWC.

In this survey regarding expansive language for God, the name Creator is used in both the current and new categories. After taking the survey I would have answered the first question, how familiar am I with the ACWC as very familiar, my computer is too slow to page back to the beginning. Sorry.

My involvement with the work of the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns has been limited; but any Committee for Women's Concerns should be ongoing. We need a multicultural approach rather than the 1960s interest groups approach. You need to advertise. I am an elder commissioner to Presbytery and have never heard of acwc. Your work is vital to PCUSA in its ministry. I am also a certified ruling elder. You could advocate for women being given commissions in churches.

I could not just pick three of the items in the question I did not answer. We are in a time when the Advocacy Committee is most needed and needs full support. There needs to be more conversations to young women about what it is to be a Presbyterian Women and then break it down to sexual orientation and race. More resources to be provided to women of color. More conversations to involve men on women issues.

It's more important for me to be known as a woman with a disability than a woman who is white! If I had not gone to CSW I would not have known it even existed. I believe that few women in congregations know about it. It seems, at least to me, if you aren't interested enough to keep up on the PC(USA) are you own you are clueless.

I believe that existence of ACWC is extremely important to the life of the church. However, ACWC has lost its ability to be viewed as a respected voice within the church. Rather than being seen as effective voice and resource for the church leadership, they are often seen as nuisance protesters. As a result, when ACWC raises issues, more energy is spent in how to quiet the complaints (and ultimately make them go away) rather than taking them seriously. ACWC in its most effective and healthy form, needs to be seen by the entire church as an effective voice of advocacy and a respected resource. Advocacy cannot just be about expressing anger in the face of problems. Effective advocates need to know how to build strong relationships so their voice can be respected and heard. It is sad that ACWC has lost that vision. It is also sad that when thinking about gender equality, we tend to focus on teaching elders. There are horrific gender inequality situations at other levels of the church. ACWC need to be an advocate for ALL women of the church. Not just select few groups.

It is hard to give you a full assessment about the value and effectiveness of the ACWC with set questions with set answers. There's no way to qualify my responses to accurately reflect my thoughts on each topic.

Do not believe the church should advocate against scripture for unconditional abortion or link it to women's health NOR advocate for the acceptance of homosexual practices as appropriate to a Christian lifestyle and witness to the world. Believe the ACWC should advocate for Christian principles that honor and uplift women in concert with and not contrary to the living Word of God.

I am not personally familiar with the work of the committee-- I do have clergy women colleagues who feel very strongly this issue. I am grateful for the opportunity to respond to the call of God by serving as a pastor of a new church development. I am aware that my gender has limited some from participating but change in attitude comes from positive experiences. When women are given opportunities to preach, lead, and serve in every area and they clearly exhibit gifts given by God hearts begin to change.

I was disappointed in the representation of ACWC proposals at the 2012 GA, both in committee business at on the Assembly floor.

I'm concerned that I'm not familiar with this group. I have heard more about them in the last couple of years. Thank you for allowing me to be part if the survey. Please let me know what and when I can be of service.

There is a need to communicate the ACWC to congregations. Let PW at both the congregational and presbytery level that you have speakers to come and speak about issues.

I would like to know more about what ADCW does.

GO GO ACWC

I have been an ordained minister for 12 years, a ruling elder for 4 years previous to my ordination and have never ever heard of the ACWC or anything they do. As much as I do feel the PCUSA had made improvements in gender issues, there is still much lacking in many areas. Where I see the greatest need is in the area helping clergy couples be fully recognized and yet not penalize smaller churches who call clergy couples by making each have to pay full medical as well as many other issues that affect clergy couples.

I consider ACWC to be extremely important in the work of the church.
With the great reduction of the programmatic work of the denomination in the area of women and women's concerns, the advisory and advocacy work becomes even more crucial. It is extremely important that this entity continue to advocate and educate about unbiblical concerns that are particular to women as the new/er generation doesn't always know about or appreciate the issues. The ACWC work is very important. The ACWC keeps congregations aware of issues that affect women in the US and the globe. The work of ACWC is an excellent partnership between Presbyterian Women and ACSWP. The three ministries working together is awesome and is a great witness that the denomination cares about women issues. Patriarchy is a wily beast. Gender and racial equality will come when power is shared. We are changing a 5,000 year old system of thinking and doing. Its hard work. Women need all the allies we can get. Thank you. While I think Women's Concerns, both in the denomination and the wider social justice issues, are important to advocate for, I am not familiar with the specific work this committee does in order to properly evaluate its effectiveness and the use of it's funds toward that goal. In recent years, downsized or dismissed national staff have been predominantly older and female. ACWC needs to monitor closely what is happening here in terms of fair supervision, rewritten job descriptions, and younger people being hired, at lower pay, to perform the same work.

On Amending W-4.9000 Concerning the Church’s Role in Legal Marriage and Services of Christian Covenant—From the Presbytery of Lehigh.

The Presbytery of Lehigh respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall W-4.9000 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“W-4.9001 Christian Marriage Blessing of a Christian Covenant

“Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. Christian marriage includes the legal civil aspects, but it is only one type of Christian covenantal relationship through which two persons enhance each other’s walk as disciples of Christ.

“Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (CRE) are not agents of the state but of the Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders shall not preside over a legal civil marriage. The role of those representing Christ and his church is to bless covenant partnerships as they are called to bless, and to refrain from blessing as they are called to refrain. As representatives of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) they may participate in the establishment of a legal civil marriage insofar as conscience dictates providing that the state’s representative presides over the civil requirements and is present to sign the official documents.

“In a service of Christian marriage a Covenant, lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, vows are exchanged, and publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

“W-4.9002 Preparing for Marriage a Service of Christian Covenant

“a. In preparation for the marriage service of Christian Covenant, the teaching elder† shall provide for a discussion with the couple concerning

“(1) the nature of their Christian commitment, assuring that at least one is a professing Christian,

“(2) the legal requirements of the state,

“(3) the privileges and responsibilities of Christian marriage covenant,

“(4) the nature and form of the Christian marriage covenant service,

“(5) the vows and commitments they will be asked to make,

“(6) the relationship of these commitments to their lives of discipleship,

“(7) the legal requirements of the state.

“This discussion is equally important in the case of a first marriage, a marriage after the death of a spouse, and a marriage following divorce.

“If the Marriage Partnership Is Unwise

“b. If the teaching elder is convinced after discussion with the couple that commitment, responsibility, maturity, or Christian understanding are so lacking that the marriage partnership is unwise, the teaching elder or commissioned ruling elders (CRE) shall assure the couple of the church’s continuing concern for them and not conduct the ceremony blessing. In making this decision the teaching elder or CRE may seek the counsel of the session.
“This discussion is equally important in the case of a first marriage, a marriage after the death of a spouse, and a marriage following divorce.

“W-4.9003 Time and Place of the Service

A service of Christian marriage Covenant should be celebrated in the place where the community gathers for worship. As a service of Christian worship, the marriage service is under the direction of the teaching elder† or CRE and the supervision of the session. (W-1.4004-.4006)

The marriage A service of Christian Covenant ordinarily takes place subsequent to civil proceedings, but may be held concurrently if the State’s representative presides over the civil requirements and is present to sign the official documents.

The service of Christian Covenant ordinarily takes place in a special service which focuses upon marriage as a gift of God and as an expression of the Christian life. Others may be invited to participate as leaders in the service at the discretion of the pastor. If the civil ceremony is held concurrently, the state’s representative shall be understood to preside during the civil portion, while the blessing shall be under the direction of the teaching elder or CRE. Celebration of the Lord’s Supper at the marriage blessing service requires the approval of the session, and care shall be taken that the invitation to the Table is extended to all baptized present. The marriage service of Christian covenant may take place during the Service for the Lord’s Day upon authorization by the session. It should be placed in the order as a response to the proclamation of the Word. It may then be followed by the Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper. (W-2.4010; W-3.3503)

“W-4.9004 Form and Order of Service

“The service of Christian covenant begins with scriptural sentences and a brief statement of purpose. The man and the woman covenant partners shall declare their intention to enter into Christian marriage mutual commitment and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness. The service includes appropriate passages of Scripture, which may be interpreted in various forms of proclamation. Prayers shall be offered for the couple, for the communities which support them in this new dimension of discipleship, and for all who seek to live in faithfulness. In the name of the triune God the teaching elder† or CRE shall declare publicly that the woman and the man are now joined in marriage there has been confirmation of Christian covenant. A charge may be given. Other actions common to the community and its cultures may appropriately be observed when these actions do not diminish the Christian understanding of marriage. The service concludes with a benediction.

“W-4.9005 Music and Appointments

“Music suitable for the marriage service of Christian Covenant directs attention to God and expresses the faith of the church. (W-2.1004) The congregation may join in hymns and other musical forms of praise and prayer. Flowers, decorations, and other appointments should be appropriate to the place of worship, enhance the worshipers’ consciousness of the reality of God, and reflect the integrity and simplicity of Christian life. (W-1.3034; W-1.4004-.4005; W-5.5005)

“W-4.9006 Recognizing Civil Marriage

“A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of the vows by the husband and wife, and the public declaration by the teaching elder† reflect the fact that the woman and man are already married to one another according to the laws of the state.

Rationale

Both church and state have important, but different, roles in matters related to marriage, and unequal influence when it comes to questions of legality. In the legal sphere the state sets the agenda, establishes the laws, defines terms, and determines the responsibilities of its agents. In the legal sphere, the church currently reacts to these matters, and serves as an agent on behalf of the state.

As the relationship between church and state currently exists, the state has framed issues of marriage, and the church has been forced to respond. Teaching elders in a particular jurisdiction may find their freedom of conscience threatened by current law, or challenged in anticipation of changes to the law. Like-minded sessions may find themselves facing discontent and fervor over an issue largely settled in the congregation they serve because of the settled, or unsettled, condition in the state where they live. Whole denominations may be torn asunder because of questions asked solely in the legal and legislative branches of government.

This situation is untenable. While the state’s authority is to be respected in its sphere, “the state has by divine appointment the task of providing for justice and peace”1, the church’s role in marriage has waxed and waned over the centuries, frequently under the influence of the state. Without diminishing the role of the state in its determinations, the church must consider its role as an agent of the state.
Jesus said “Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar’s, and to God the things that are God’s” (Mt. 22:21). With the Theological Declaration of Barmen, we profess

We reject the false doctrine, as though the church, over and beyond its special commission, should and could appropriate the characteristics, the tasks, and the dignity of the State, thus itself becoming an organ of the State (Book of Confessions, The Theological Declaration of Barmen, 8.24).

This action would prohibit teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders from presiding at the legal civil marriage of a couple, that is, solemnizing on behalf of the state, but permit them to bless covenant partnerships as they are called to bless, and to refrain from blessing as they are called to refrain. Such representatives of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may participate in the legal civil marriage as conscience dictates, insofar as the state’s representative presides over the civil requirements and is present to sign the official documents. Christian Confirmation of the Covenant may also take place separate from completion of the legal civil requirements.

Endnote

Scripture tells us that, in the as yet unredeemed world in which the church also exists, the State has by divine appointment the task of providing for justice and peace. [It fulfills this task] by means of the threat and exercise of force, according to the measure of human judgment and human ability. The church acknowledges the benefit of this divine appointment in gratitude and reverence before him. It calls to mind the Kingdom of God, God’s commandment and righteousness, and thereby the responsibility both of rulers and of the ruled. It trusts and obeys the power of the Word by which God upholds all things.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 10-01

Advice on Item 10-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 10-01.

The ACC perceives that some issues raised by this overture and the rationale provided for it are already addressed in our Constitution:

1. Pursuant to F-3.0101, the PC(USA) already recognizes that “God alone is Lord of the conscience” and that “Therefore we consider the rights of private judgment, in all matters that respect religion, as universal and unalienable.”

2. Section G-2.0105 currently provides for all persons in ordered ministry that “freedom of conscience with respect to the interpretation of Scripture is to be maintained” within certain bounds.

3. Section W-4.9002b already grants discretion to a teaching elder to determine whether she or he will or will not officiate at a civil marriage or service of Christian marriage.

4. Determination of who may be authorized to officiate at a civil marriage is the responsibility of the state government.

5. There is no need to amend the Constitution to empower a teaching elder, commissioned ruling elder, or session to participate in or approve a service of recognition of a civil marriage. Section W-4.9006 already provides for a service of recognizing a civil marriage.

If the General Assembly decides to approve this overture, the following should be considered:

1. The word “covenant” is used in other ways and contexts throughout the Constitution. The assembly may consider how the definition of covenant included here may affect interpretations of “covenant” in other sections of the Book of Order. For example, “covenant life” (G-1.0101), “covenant relationship” (G-1.0102), “covenant community of disciples of Christ” (F-1.0303), “covenant of membership” (G-1.0301), “covenant together” (G-1.0201), etc.

2. Laws regarding civil marriage may vary from state to state. This language in the Book of Order will not prohibit a state from considering a “service of Christian covenant” to be a valid civil marriage with the result that the presiding teaching elder may unintentionally violate this requirement.

3. The overture proposes that teaching elders and CRE’s “shall not preside over a legal civil marriage,” but only preside over services blessing such a legal civil marriage. The assembly needs to be aware that approval would remove the church’s participation in marriages as understood in the first two sentences of W-4.9001, which remain unchanged in the overture.

4. The proposed amendment would substitute “service of Christian covenant” for “marriage.” The term “marriage,” however, is also used in the proposed language resulting in inconsistency and possible confusion.
5. It will be the teaching elder’s responsibility to determine the implications of this requirement for his/her pastoral role.

6. The overture would remove the freedom whether or not to preside at legal civil marriages.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 10-01. This overture creates a category called Christian Covenant. The duality of Christian Marriage and Christian Covenant results in an inequality in a situation where the commitments and expectations of the union of persons are equal.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 10-01

Comment on Item 10-01—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Item 10-01 from the Presbytery of Lehigh seeks to amend W-4.9000 in the Book of Order on the understanding of marriage. There are many aspects to this amendment, but one concerns the relationship of civil and church roles in services of Christian marriage.

The earliest Reformed patterns for marriage in the American colonies included separate civil and Christian recognition. The couple would be legally married by a civil authority, and then would receive Christian solemnization subsequently. This separation of the civil and religious aspects of marriage is practiced by many Reformed churches, and in many countries around the world.

In American history, this pattern changed before the American Revolution largely as the result of Anglican influence where the king was head of the church and the state. In this understanding, the minister was understood as a representative of the church and an agent of the state who therefore could perform the legal and religious functions simultaneously. This later pattern has endured and is reflected in W-4.9000 on marriage.

Item 10-02

On Amending W-4.9000, Marriage—From the Presbytery of the Cascades.

The Presbytery of the Cascades respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Amend W-4.9000 by striking the current text and replacing it with the following:

“Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage involves a unique commitment between two people, traditionally a man and a woman, to love and support each other for the rest of their lives. The sacrificial love that unites the couple sustains them as faithful and responsible members of the church and the wider community.

“In civil law, marriage is a contract that recognizes the rights and obligations of the married couple in society. In the Reformed tradition, marriage is also a covenant in which God has an active part, and which the community of faith publicly witnesses and acknowledges.

“If they meet the requirements of the civil jurisdiction in which they intend to marry, a couple may request that a service of Christian marriage be conducted by a teaching elder in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), who is authorized, though not required, to act as an agent of the civil jurisdiction in recording the marriage contract. A couple requesting a service of Christian marriage shall receive instruction from the teaching elder, who [shall] [may] agree to the couple’s request only if, in the judgment of the teaching elder, the couple demonstrate sufficient understanding of the nature of the marriage covenant and commitment to living their lives together according to its values. In making this decision, the teaching elder may seek the counsel of the session, which has authority to permit or deny the use of church property for a marriage service.

“The marriage service shall be conducted in a manner appropriate to this covenant and to the forms of Reformed worship, under the direction of the teaching elder and the supervision of the session (W-1.4004–4006). In a service of marriage, the couple marry each other by exchanging mutual promises. The teaching elder witnesses the couple’s promises and pronounces God’s blessing upon their union. The community of faith pledges to support the couple in upholding their promises; prayers may be offered for the couple, for the communities that support them, and for all who seek to live in faithfulness.

“A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the statements made shall reflect the fact that the couple is already married to one another according to the laws of the civil jurisdiction.

“[Nothing herein shall compel a teaching elder to perform nor compel a session to authorize the use of church property for a marriage service that the teaching elder or the session believes is contrary to the teaching elder’s or the session’s discernment of the Holy Spirit and their understanding of the Word of God.]”

Rationale

The PC(USA) has a long history of working for social justice and equal rights for all people.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) churches throughout the denomination are seeking to be inclusive, welcoming communities of Christian faith and are committed to honoring diversity and promoting peace, health, and justice in personal relationship, church, community, and the world.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) churches throughout the denomination also have a long history of struggling with issues of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender (GLBT) equality; working within the structure and standards of the PC(USA) and also taking actions of ecclesiastical defiance when their conscience leads them to believe the teachings of Jesus require such actions.

As requested by the 220th General Assembly (2012), many churches have been studying the issue of marriage equality both in the pulpit and through adult education classes.

The Presbytery of the Cascades stands with those in the PC(USA) who believe that the teachings of Jesus call for radical inclusion of all people and that the actions of Jesus, passed down in Scripture, showed unconditional love and equality for all people. We believe that God created each of us with many differences, including sexual preferences, and that those differences are to be celebrated as part of the creative plan of God.

Support of marriage equality is consistent with our faith tradition. The covenant of marriage requires love and commitment; qualities that are in no way gender specific.

Failing to allow for marriage equality continues to have negative consequences for the Body of Christ, the Church, in that it gives some of our members fewer rights than others, treating them as second-class members. This is inconsistent with the teachings of Jesus. Valuing the worth, health, and happiness of our children and youth, requires that they are allowed to grow wholesal and holy in a church that embraces them and their visions of their future loving relationships. To deny marriage to the GLBT community will continue the discrimination they already experience and increase the level of stress and mental health issues that make this community more susceptible to substance abuse, depression, and suicide.

Marriage equality, on the other hand, will reduce the numbers of young people who find banning gay marriage to be hypocritical, unfair, and not the act of a caring Christian congregation.

The Book of Order of the PC(USA) should be amended to allow marriage between “two people” rather than limiting marriage to “between one man and one woman” and to allow PC(USA) church officials to perform marriage ceremonies between same-sex couples.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of Heartland with Additional Rationale.

Rationale

This overture lifts up love and commitment as the primary values of a marriage rooted in faith. As such, it excludes no couple from receiving the guidance and blessing of the church in their marriage.

This corrects the erroneous statement in the Directory for Worship that civil law only recognizes marriage between a man and a woman.

This makes explicit the right and duty of teaching elders* to exercise pastoral discretion both in agreeing to officiate at a marriage ceremony for a particular couple, thus acting as an agent of the state, and in declining to do so.
This more concise language comports with the intent of the new Form of Government. It relieves teaching elders, sessions, and communities of faith from detailed stipulations about their actions, and emphasizes their broader responsibilities when asked to play a role in the celebration of a couple’s marriage covenant.

*As in other places in the Directory for Worship, the use of “teaching elders” in this paragraph should be understood to include ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of East Iowa (with Additional Rationale)

Rationale

Marriage is no longer a civil contract

Christians in the Reformed Tradition view marriage not as a sacrament bestowed by the church but as a blessing that two people seek on a contract they are entering under auspices of the state. The church has defined marriage, first, as “… a gift God has given to all humankind. …” (W-4.9001) and at the same time has said, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001). In at least fourteen states and the District of Columbia, this civil definition is no longer true.

As the number of states allowing same-gender marriage increases, more and more Presbyterian ministers are being asked joyfully to perform a worship service of marriage for same-gender congregants much like they provide for their heterosexual congregants.

Christian marriage is a covenant

The wording of the proposed amendment places primary responsibility on teaching elders to utilize their pastoral discretion in counseling the two people to be married specifically about the covenant of marriage “and commitment to living their lives together according to its values.” While teaching elders may still act as agents of the state in signing the marriage contract, the emphasis of the proposed wording of Item 10-02 places higher value on the church’s belief that marriage is a gift from God to all of humankind and that the marriage ceremony itself is a response to God’s Word in an act of worship.

Use inclusive language

General Assemblies in 2010 and 2012 each had the opportunity to issue an authoritative interpretation that would provide immediate direction to teaching elders and sessions regarding the Directory for Worship. Both times, the General Assembly allowed parliamentary maneuvering to prevent them from even allowing these overtures to come to a vote on the plenary floor.

Replacing the wording in our Directory for Worship with wording that utilizes a more inclusive language, focuses on the covenant of marriage rather than the civil contract, and is in keeping with the intention of the new Form of Government to provide a framework by which we shall operate rather than detailed stipulations to the current language, thus providing clear direction for all teaching elders and sessions and allowing them to adopt this passage to fit their own sense of calling as it relates to marriage in this time and in this place.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of San Francisco (with Additional Rationale).

Rationale

Marriage is primarily about love, mutual support, and lasting faithfulness. Many states are increasingly recognizing that marriage is beyond gender. It refers to the commitment of two people to live beside each other with a love expressed as tenderness and justice. It refers to the deep promise to live together through the thick and thin of their journey together through the years. It refers to the mystery in which the love of God meets, is joined to and made manifest in the love of two people whose hearts are a home place to each other. The notion of marriage is demeaned by any lesser definition.

This overture removes the incorrect statement that civil law recognizes marriage only between a man and a woman. That statement is no longer true in thirteen states, the District of Columbia, and many federal agencies including the IRS. Recognizing this, some states, including California after the right for all couples to marry was restored by the courts, are already ahead of the church in moving the legal definition of marriage beyond gender. Let us remember that the most prevalent form of marriage described in the Scriptures is polygyny (patriarchal polygamy with multiples wives who were considered property of their husbands). There have been many definitions of marriage over the years. Since we live in a culture that recognizes the covenants between two people, this overture expressly encourages monogamous covenantal fidelity.

The present authoritative interpretation places Presbyterian ministers in the inevitable position of choosing to follow the current authoritative interpretation of Section W-4.9000 in the PC(USA) Constitution or to follow those other portions of our Form of Government that calls on them to offer the same pastoral care to all of their parishioners. Where the worship service of marriage for same-gender loving couples is recognized under the law of some states, it is neither fair nor pastoral to exclude members of a congregation by declining to perform their marriage on the grounds of gender alone. In practical terms, what this authoritative interpretation means is that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders will be able to exercise their pastoral responsibilities without running the risk of prosecution by the church. Such prosecutions have placed a formidable financial and spiritual burden on councils of the church.

No teaching elder or session would be required to perform services of marriage that would violate their conscience. Changing the Directory for Worship in this way would move the church away from fear and reprisal, and closer to its own teaching on the hospitality of God and the welcome which that implies. This change also confirms that the decision making for hosting and performing such ceremonies is done at the local level with the pastor and session who know the couple best. Ultimately, this would also allow gay and lesbian teaching elders the right to be married in their own congregations. It should be hoped that those pastors who cannot perform such ceremonies for those who request them would find other teaching elders nearby or in their presbytery who may be willing to do so to preserve the pastoral connections of the couple within the church.

This overture is consistent with the overall intention of the new Form of Government that maintains the shared responsibility of the teaching elder, the session, and the community of faith, while reducing the detailed stipulations for action within that framework.

*As in other places in the Directory for Worship, the use of “teaching elders” in this paragraph should be understood to include ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area (with Additional Rationale)

Elements of a Rationale

Explain why amending the current description is important to families and to the church. This particular approach:

1. Places primary emphasis on love, mutual support, and lasting faithfulness as the values of marriage.
2. Removes erroneous statement that civil law recognizes marriage only between a man and a woman.
3. Emphasizes both relationship and distinction between civil law and Reformed theology.
4. Emphasizes the teaching elder’s primary responsibility to the values of Christian marriage as a covenant in responding to requests for marriage service.
5. Upholds pastoral discretion in deciding whether or not to perform a marriage, whether it is a marriage between two people of the same gender or of different genders in jurisdictions that allow same-gender marriage.
6. Maintains the framework of responsibility for teaching elder, session, and the community of faith, while reducing detailed stipulations for action within that framework, thereby following through on the overall intention of the new Form of Government.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of Hudson River (with Additional Rationale)

For decades the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been struggling with how to be truly welcoming and truly just, as Jesus has called us to be. We have struggled with how to assure a full and unbiased search process so that minorities are included. We have asked ourselves who can be ordained and who can be married in our church.

For much of our nation’s and our church’s history, the marriage question focused on interracial couples.

In 1878, the Supreme Court of Virginia invalidated the marriage of a white woman and a black man on the grounds that interracial marriage was contrary to God’s plan. “[C]onnections and alliances so unnatural that God and nature seem to forbid them,” the court asserted, “should be prohibited by positive law, and be subject to no evasion.”

“God and nature.”

These were the grounds on which white supremacists successfully upheld so called miscegenation laws for another one hundred years, during which time interracial marriage was prohibited in thirty states.

One of the few people to openly condemn miscegenation laws was the philosopher Hannah Arendt, who in 1959 boldly stated that the right to marry whom one chooses is the most fundamental of all human rights:

The right to marry whoever one wishes is an elementary human right compared to which “the right to attend an integrated school, the right to sit where one pleases on a bus, the right to go into any hotel or recreation area or place of amusement, regardless of one’s skin or color or race” are minor indeed. Even political rights, like the right to vote, and nearly all other rights enumerated in the Constitution, are secondary to the inalienable human
The right to “life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness” proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence; and to this category the right to home and marriage unquestionably belongs.

It would be another seven years before the Supreme Court of the United States took up the question of whether the laws prohibiting interracial marriage were unconstitutional.

The PC(USA) wasn’t content to stand by while the justices deliberated.

The 835 delegates to the UPCUSA 177th General Assembly (1965) of the then 3.3 million-member church concluded that there are “no … theological grounds for condemning or prohibiting” marriage between consenting adults merely because of racial origin (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1965, Part I, p. 409).

Today, when one out of every fifteen marriages is interracial, most Presbyterians embrace Jesus for his inclusivity.

Jesus, we’re the first to say, was not a racist.

And yet we don’t often consider that prohibiting the right of our fellow Christians to marry someone of the same gender is wholly analogous to prohibiting the marriages of people of different races.

Indeed, in 2003, when Massachusetts Chief Justice Margaret Marshall wrote for the majority in Goodridge v. Dept. of Public Health, the first ruling by a state’s highest court that same-gender couples have the right to marry, she made the analogy herself:

> Recognizing the right of an individual to marry a person of the same sex will not diminish the validity or dignity of opposite-sex marriage, any more than recognizing the right of an individual to marry a person of a different race devalues the marriage of a person who marries someone of her own race. … That same-sex couples are willing to embrace marriage’s solemn obligations of exclusivity, mutual support, and commitment to one another is a testament to the enduring place of marriage in our laws and in the human spirit (http://masscases.com/cases/sjc/440/440mass309.html, p. 337).

To deny the privilege of being married in the church and declaring before God the promises of fidelity and caring, limits the pastoral capacity of our clergy and our church.

It is now time to allow, not force, but allow, our clergy and churches to perform weddings in jurisdictions where it is legal for same-gender couples as a sign of our pastoral care.

Let us remember that it is Jesus who gave us the example of welcoming all to fellowship and ministry with him. It was our Lord who stood against the tyrannical bias of his day when he welcomed Mary to sit at his feet as a disciple, and when he ate with Zacchaeus and declared that salvation was his, and when he healed the Roman centurion’s servant even though he was Israel’s enemy.

In the spirit of Jesus, it is time to say to those in the LGBT community that you are welcome, that you are fully members of the PC(USA).

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of Genesee Valley (with Additional Rationale)

At issue is the Presbyterian understanding of the nature of Christian marriage and a pastor’s and session’s responsibility and ability to extend appropriate pastoral care. As more and more states (fourteen at this writing) authorize marriage between same-gender partners, pastors, and sessions trying to be responsible in providing pastoral care to church members by officiating at marriages in the church building find themselves increasingly constrained by the provisions of W-4.9000 of the Directory for Worship as interpreted by the 203rd General Assembly (1991) and subsequent decisions of the General Assembly’s Permanent Judicial Commission.

In light of the increased flexibility offered by the new Form of Government for conducting the mission of the church, it is time for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to amend the Directory for Worship to provide comparable flexibility in extending pastoral care to church members in same-gender partnerships.

The report of the Special Committee on Civil Union and Christian Marriage, which the 219th General Assembly (2010) approved and commended to the church, offers important background to the biblical, theological, historical, cultural, and pastoral issues involved here (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 909ff).

The following brief observations support the amendment requested above:

* The Bible and the Reformed tradition reflect many patterns and forms of legal, religiously approved marital relationships.¹ The nostalgically remembered pattern of marriage of 1940s America cannot be taken as normative from a biblical or theological point of view.

* The understanding of marriage has changed through the years and was often geared more to property rights or political advantage than to a mutual, loving relationship.²
* Marriage is a contract regulated and licensed by the state. This was recognized in the ancient church and in Protestant churches since the Reformation.

* There are legitimate differences of interpretation of the passages regarding homosexual relationship in the Bible. The present regulation forces Presbyterian elders to act based on one interpretation, with which many disagree as a matter of conscience.

* Jesus in his public ministry broke down the barriers that separated people. He identified with those who were outcasts and marginalized by society. The gays and lesbians are considered outsiders by many today. The church needs to witness to the inclusive love of Jesus for all people.

* To prohibit clergy and congregations from fulfilling a legitimate request for pastoral care binds the conscience of clergy and prevents them from fulfilling their pastoral responsibilities.

* In 2010, the presbyteries approved Amendment A, allowing persons in same-sex relationships to be ordained. These church members should be allowed to be married if the state issues them a marriage license and their teaching elder determines that their marriage is advisable.

* The statement restricting marriage to “one man and one woman” addresses polygamy in 17th century England. The statement that marriage is “between a man and a woman” reflects conventions of the mid-20th century and is descriptive, not prescriptive. This overture is necessary to clarify those ambiguities and antiquated statements contained in W-4.9000.

* This amendment is also necessary to align our Directory for Worship with the principles of justice and equitable Foundations of Presbytery Polity (F-1.0403) that states “… In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. …”

In light of the above we believe positive action on this overture is warranted.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of New York City (with Additional Rationale)

Since July 2011, the State of New York has allowed two people of the same gender to marry. It is now simply untrue that “marriage is a civil contract between one man and one woman,” as the Book of Order now states. Although some New York pastors in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have declined to perform such marriages in keeping with their conscience, many others are caught in an untenable position: their conscience tells them to exercise their pastoral responsibility and perform the marriage but the church tells them to fear prosecution. Such prosecutions have already placed tremendous financial burden on presbyteries, diminishing the church’s ability to effectively evangelize and perform necessary mission work.

We Are Called to Make Disciples

According to the Book of Order, we declare,

The good news of the Gospel is that the triune God—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—creates, redeems, sustains, rules, and transforms all things and all people. … proclaiming the Lord’s favor upon all creation. … In Christ, the Church participates in God’s mission … by proclaiming to all people the good news of God’s love, offering to all people the grace of God at font and table, and calling all people to discipleship in Christ. Human beings have no higher goal in life than to glorify and enjoy God now and forever, living in covenant fellowship with God and participating in God’s mission. [F-1.01]

… No person shall be denied membership for any reason not related to profession of faith. The Gospel leads members to extend the fellowship of Christ to all persons. Failure to do so constitutes a rejection of Christ himself and causes a scandal to the Gospel. [G-1.0302]
According to this, Presbyterians call all people to discipleship in Christ, live to glorify God, extend the fellowship of Christ to all people, and recognize that none of us earn or deserve God’s grace.

The Marriage Ceremony Is Worship

In our order for worship, we listen to the Word, proclaim the Word, and respond to the Word. Responding to the Word is a demonstration of the love of God for God’s people.

“The response to the proclamation of the Word is expressed in an affirmation of faith and commitment. … Response to the Word also involves acts of commitment and recognition. … acts of commitment which may appropriately be included as response to the Word are (a) Christian marriage, …” [W-3.3500, W-3.3502, W-3.3503] According to this, Presbyterians view Christian marriage as an act of worship.

Our Polity

One part of our current Presbyterian polity specifically excludes a group of people when it comes to worship: those people in loving, committed, Christian relationships who are also of the same gender and wish to marry. However elsewhere in our polity, we hold up the words of Jesus Christ:

“… There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise” (Gal. 3:27–29). … The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. … [F-1.0403]

Conclusion

We are all discerning God’s Word for us. And as surely as we are all unique creations of the loving God, we will each of us disagree from time to time. But if we profess to call all people to Christ, to call all people to proclaim God’s love for us in worship, to guarantee full participation in worship to all persons, we must give teaching elders and sessions the discretion to choose to recognize the covenant of Christian marriage for two people of the same gender who seek to enter into marriage with love and faithfulness, just as we allow teaching elders and sessions the discretion to choose otherwise. To do anything else unfairly denies this group of our membership the opportunity to fully worship our God.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of Transylvania (with Additional Rationale)

1. Section W-4.9001 of the 2013–2015 Book of Order, titled “Christian Marriage,” states in part: “… Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.” This is no longer true in California, Connecticut, Washington, D.C., Delaware, Hawaii, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Washington and in cities, counties, and states with partial recognition of “marriage between two people” (Colorado, New Mexico, Nevada, Oregon, Wisconsin, and six tribes in Oklahoma). Therefore this language must be changed or interpreted to reflect what is true.

2. Civil law with respect to marriage differs from country to country, and the aspects of marriage differ from culture to culture and change over time within a culture. The Census Bureau and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services have documented dramatic changes in the practice of marriage in the past fifty years. We must be the church in the midst of the present reality. Christian same-sex couples who marry do not cause these changes in our culture, nor would their marriages in the church cause harm or disrespect to heterosexual marriages. To the extent that Christian heterosexual marriage can model for all heterosexuals the rule of love rooted in faith, so Christian same-sex marriage can model for the LGBT (Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgendered) community the same rule of love rooted in faith.

3. The Holy Spirit guides the Church in particular places and at particular times. We approach the issue of same-sex marriage with humility and with awareness that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been oblivious in some cases and divided in others on a number of significant social issues, including slavery, suffrage, segregation, and the ordination of women and LGBT members. In these examples, at least some part of the church discerned the Spirit’s guidance in a way we would no longer understand to have been God’s will for God’s world. Sincere, passionate Presbyterians today discern God’s will with respect to same-sex marriage in different ways. We, in this time and place, cannot foresee how God will work with these different understandings. But, in humility and love, amending or reinterpreting the language in our Book of Order permits both understandings to move forward in the life of the church.

4. The Bible includes many patterns and forms of marriage and marital relationships, and cultural aspects of marriage reflect its different time and place. But in their time and place, they presented no barrier between God and humankind. God works with and through men and women in whatever time and place they live. And God will continue to do so, no matter what the PC(USA) decides with respect to same-sex marriage. Our job is to work with God or get out of God’s way.
5. The Book of Order protects a minister’s obligation and right to exercise pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at the marriage service of any particular couple. The Book of Order also allows councils to make decisions concerning who they will and will not ordain to office. This authoritative interpretation (AI) and/or amendment will allow local councils (church sessions) to make their own decisions about the unique circumstances of each marriage, based on the laws of their state and their discernment of the Holy Spirit’s guidance. This AI and/or amendment will allow ministers to use their discretion in states that have changed their civil law concerning marriage. No minister or church is ever required to participate in a particular marriage. And no minister or church can participate in a same-sex marriage that violates the civil law of the state where it would take place.

6. The social witness policies of the PC(USA) have consistently advocated an end to discrimination based on sexual orientation. States recognizing marriage equality have ended such discrimination in civil marriage. To fail to apply those same standards to our own institution is unconscionable. The PC(USA) currently approves and participates in heterosexual marriage while prohibiting same-sex marriage. Marriages of either type should be founded on the rule of love and supported and strengthened by the institutional church.

7. This AI and/or amendment, allowing discretion by teaching elders and councils in states where civil laws regarding marriage have changed, will bring us into line with our mission partners in countries that allow marriage equality: Argentina, parts of Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, portions of Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom (England and Wales), and Uruguay. This change might be received critically by some mission partners; that happened after the 2010 change in ordination standards. However, mission fields that broke partnership with the PC(USA) over ordination have found new ways to work together in mission outside the previous structures. Our mission worldwide has more integrity where we recognize differences among cultures and choose to work together despite those differences, always under the rule of love. In truth, there is broad diversity of thought and conviction within the church and between the PC(USA) and any of its mission partners on any given issue. We can move and act as the body of Christ only when we identify our commonalities and work together despite our differences. We can, with God’s help, become a light to the world.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of Albany (with additional Rationale)

As witnesses to God’s grace, it is time for the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to affirm clearly our common understanding of the value and meaning of marriage, rather than focusing on our disagreement about who may marry. Grounded in the Reformed understanding of marriage as covenant, the proposed substitute text for W-4.9000 lifts up the values of love, mutual support, and lasting faithfulness both for the married couple and for the faith community, thus answering the call in the recent study document issued by the Office of Theology and Worship: “a proper Christian understanding of marriage will claim again the role of the church as a fundamental approving and supporting community in which a marriage of two persons may not only make an appropriate beginning but in which also that marriage may be supported. Without making marriage a sacrament or supplanting the state, the church may offer, as it does in infant baptism, a community in which covenants are made and publicly acknowledged, are nurtured and brought to fulfillment” (“Christian Marriage in the Presbyterian Church [U.S.A.],” p. 26).

The recent adoption of the new Form of Government points the way toward clarification of our understanding of marriage by focusing on principles of theology and polity. In that spirit, this overture proposes a substitution for rather than a revision of the present text of W-4.9000, where detailed specification of procedures blurs the focus on principles. The substitute text seeks to uphold the intention of the new Form of Government to create a broad constitutional framework within which the councils of the church may adapt practices, procedures, and structures to the needs of particular mission.

Given the role of civil law in defining marriage, as it has been recognized from the beginning of the Reformed tradition, the current differences among civil jurisdictions regarding the gender of persons qualified to marry necessarily create different contexts for the mission of the church. Within the United States, as of August 2013, thirteen states (Connecticut, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, California, Washington, Maine, Maryland, Rhode Island, Delaware, Minnesota, and Vermont), Washington D.C., and two Native American tribal jurisdictions (Coquille, Suquamish) legally permit marriage between two people of the same gender as well as two people of different gender. The statement in the current text of W-4.9001, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man,” is factually inaccurate.

Within their particular contexts for mission, teaching and ruling elders are responsible for determining appropriate pastoral care for a couple requesting a service of Christian marriage. “The worship of God in the Christian community is the foundation and context for the ministry of pastoral care . . . .” (Book of Order, W-6.4000; see also W-6.3002 and W-6.3011), and a service of Christian marriage is a form of worship. In the interest of pastoral care, the proposed substitute text for W-4.9000 does not specify the gender of the couple requesting a service of Christian marriage, but emphasizes the authority of both the teaching elder and the session either to comply with or to deny such a request. Corresponding emphasis is placed on the fact that the teaching elder is not obliged to act as an agent of the state or other civil jurisdiction. The proposed text thus permits but does not mandate the participation of teaching elders and sessions in marriages of same-gender couples.

Such permission is justified by principles of theology as well as polity. “The biblical vision of doing justice” summarized in the Book of Order includes “supporting people who seek the dignity, freedom, and respect that they have been denied” (W-7.4002c), and surely this category includes people who are lesbian, gay, bisexual, or transgender. Whether support for these people should include the right to marry depends in part on whether biblical references to marriage between persons of different gender are to be taken as definitions of marriage or rather as examples. The latter interpretation is supported by the early use of marriage as an example of the type of relation promised between God and the people of God (Hosea 2:14–23), some of whom, of course, are male and some female. The Confession of 1967 recognizes this principle of exemplification: “The relationship between man and woman exemplifies in a basic way God’s ordering of the interpersonal life for which he created mankind” (Book of Confessions 9.47). Extending the gift of marriage to same-gender couples offers a means of “ordering of the interpersonal life” as an act of pastoral care. Having made a commitment of lasting faithfulness to each other before God and the community of faith, the couple who have entered into Christian marriage have a solemn responsibility to uphold that commitment. The faith community, in turn, have responsibility for continuing spiritual support and pastoral care for the couple. In its mission to society as a whole, the church thus helps to create a culture of faithful, loving, lasting relationships. Real meaning is given to the opening statement in the current text of W-4.9000, and preserved in the proposed substitute text: “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the wellbeing of the entire human family.”

Current Text of W-4.9000 [Text in brackets appears as marginal notes or footnotes in printed edition]:

W-4.9001 Christian Marriage

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

[W-4.9002 Preparing for Marriage]

a. In preparation for the marriage service, the teaching elder shall provide for a discussion with the man and the woman concerning

(1) the nature of their Christian commitment, assuring that at least one is a professing Christian,
(2) the legal requirements of the state,
(3) the privileges and responsibilities of Christian marriage,
(4) the nature and form of the marriage service,
(5) the vows and commitments they will be asked to make,
(6) the relationship of these commitments to their lives of discipleship,
(7) the resources of the faith and the Christian community to assist them in fulfilling their marriage commitments.

This discussion is equally important in the case of a first marriage, a marriage after the death of a spouse, and a marriage following divorce.

If the Marriage Is Unwise

b. If the teaching elder is convinced after discussion with the couple that commitment, responsibility, maturity, or Christian understanding are so lacking that the marriage is unwise, the teaching elder shall assure the couple of the church’s continuing concern for them and not conduct the ceremony. In making this decision the teaching elder may seek the counsel of the session.

W-4.9003 Time and Place of the Service

Christian marriage should be celebrated in the place where the community gathers for worship. As a service of Christian worship, the marriage service is under the direction of the teaching elder and the supervision of the session. (W-1.4004–4006) The marriage ordinarily takes place in a special service which follows upon marriage as a gift of God and as an expression of the Christian life. Others may be invited to participate as leaders in the service at the discretion of the pastor. Celebration of the Lord’s Supper at the marriage service requires the approval of the session, and care shall be taken that the invitation to the Table is extended to all baptized present. The marriage service may take place during the Service for the Lord’s Day upon authorization by the session. It should be placed in the order as a response to the proclamation of the Word. It may then be followed by the Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper. (W-2.4010; W-3.3503)

W-4.9004 Form and Order of Service

The service begins with scriptural sentences and a brief statement of purpose. The man and the woman shall declare their intention to enter into Christian marriage and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness. The service includes appropriate passages of Scripture, which may be interpreted in various forms of proclamation. Prayers shall be offered for the couple, for the communities which support them in this new dimension of discipleship, and for all who seek to live in faithfulness. In the name of the triune God the teaching elder shall declare publicly that the woman and the man are now joined in marriage. A charge may be given. Other actions common to the community and its cultures may appropriately be observed when these actions do not diminish the Christian understanding of marriage. The service concludes with a benediction.

W-4.9005 Music and Appointments

Music suitable for the marriage service directs attention to God and expresses the faith of the church. (W-2.1004) The congregation may join in hymns and other musical forms of praise and prayer. Flowers, decorations, and other appointments should be appropriate to the place of worship, enhance the worshipers’ consciousness of the reality of God, and reflect the integrity and simplicity of Christian life. (W-1.3034; W-1.4004–4005; W-5.5005)

W-4.9006 Recognizing Civil Marriage

A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of the vows by the husband and wife, and the public declaration by the teaching elder† reflect the fact that the woman and man are already married to one another according to the laws of the state.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse (with Additional Rationale)

At issue is the Presbyterian understanding of the nature of Christian marriage and the responsibility and ability of a pastor and session to extend appropriate pastoral care. As more and more states (fourteen at this writing) authorize marriage between same-gender partners, pastors and sessions trying to be responsible in providing pastoral care to church members by officiating at marriages in the church building find themselves increasingly constrained by the provisions of W-4.9000 of the Directory for Worship as interpreted by the 1991 General Assembly and subsequent decisions of the General Assembly’s Permanent Judicial Commission.

In light of the increased flexibility offered by the new Form of Government for conducting the mission of the church, it is time for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to amend the Directory for Worship to provide comparable flexibility in extending pastoral care to church members in same-gender partnerships.

The report of the Special Committee on Civil Union and Christian Marriage, which the 219th General Assembly (2010) approved and commended to the church in 2010, offers important background to the biblical, theological, historical, cultural, and pastoral issues involved here.

The following brief observations support the amendment to the Directory for Worship requested above:

* The Bible and the Reformed tradition reflect many patterns and forms of legal, religiously approved marital relationships.¹

* The understanding of marriage has changed through the years and was often geared more to property rights or political advantage than to a mutual, loving relationship.²

* Marriage is a contract regulated and licensed by the state.³ This was recognized in the ancient church and in Protestant churches since the Reformation.⁴

* There are legitimate differences of interpretation of the passages regarding homosexual relationship in the Bible.⁵ The present regulation forces Presbyterian elders to act based on one interpretation, with which many disagree as a matter of conscience.

* Jesus in his public ministry broke down the barriers that separated people. He identified with those who were outcasts and marginalized by society. Gay and lesbian individuals are considered outsiders by many today. The church needs to witness to the inclusive love of Jesus for all people.⁶

* To prohibit clergy and congregations from fulfilling a legitimate request for pastoral services binds the conscience of clergy and prevents them from fulfilling their pastoral responsibilities.

* In 2010, the presbyteries approved Amendment A allowing persons in same-sex relationships to be ordained. These church members should be allowed to be married if the state issues them a marriage license and their teaching elder determines that their marriage is advisable.

* The statement restricting marriage to “one man and one woman”⁷ addresses polygamy in 17th century England.

In light of the above we believe positive action on this overture is warranted.

Endnotes

2. Ibid., pp. 3 and 27

5. Ibid., pp. 11, 13 (item 3), and 20–21.

Currently in our churches and communities, same-gender couples are living together in loving, committed, monogamous relationships. They are raising children, caring for aging parents, and making positive contributions to their communities. These couples include new and longtime members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Their relationships are equivalent to a marriage in every way but formal recognition by the church and by most states in which they live, though an increasing number of states are recognizing their relationships as marriages and many others recognize civil unions.

By reforming the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship we would recognize committed, lifelong relationships that are already being lived out by our members. We would honor and support the love and commitment they practice in their lives every day. We would bear witness to the love of God as it is expressed between these couples and as we offer that love to them on behalf of the church.

In addition, as the legal recognition of same-gender relationships goes through transitions throughout the country, PC(USA) clergy and sessions are faced with complex decisions regarding ecclesiastical authority and property use. It is important to remember that while a teaching elder may act as an agent of the state in performing legal marriages, a teaching elder may also act as an agent of the church in performing a Christian marriage that is not recognized by the state. An example would be the marriage of an 80 and 85 year old who do not want to legally be married because of the loss of a pension but who do want to be married in the eyes of the church. In this case the teaching elder would not invoke the power given by the state in pronouncing the marriage.

Same-gender couples who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can come to their minister and request that minister to prepare them for marriage and solemnize said marriages as an agent of the state, only to be denied that important time of pastoral care and ministry because of the current interpretation of the provisions replaced by this amendment. These marriages create certain privileges and responsibilities for the married couple and their families within the community and the church that cannot be ignored. Among other things, civil marriage bestows a new status on this couple and designates them as a unique social unit; it delineates their family structure and makes the other their next of kin; it establishes parental and societal rights and responsibilities for them; and establishes their rights of inheritance along with creating larger familial relationships.

All of these issues affect this new family and their lives in the church. Broadening the language to reflect a broader, but distinctly reformed and covenant-centered understanding of marriage removes the polity barriers faced by some ministers, sessions, church members, and other Christians while continuing to honor the laws of each state and the individual consciences of every ruling and teaching elder and congregation.

Overtures directly addressing marriage equality in the United States and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have come before the last two General Assemblies. The 219th Assembly (2010) completely failed to substantively address the marriage-related overtures that were before it. The 220th General Assembly (2012) failed to substantively address overtures related to authoritative interpretation of the marriage provisions at issue in this overture and, by a narrow margin, failed to approve changes to W-4.9000. Then and now, though in substantially different fashion, the proposed changes to W-4.9000 are intended to recognize: (1) the contemporary reality of civil marriage under the law, (2) the ecclesial reality of marriage equality in the polity of our mainline sisters and brothers in Christ and, most importantly, (3) the theological reality that our longstanding tradition of reforming our understanding of the marital covenant faithfully leads us to now recognizing and solemnizing that covenant regardless of the gender of the parties involved.

In the ecclesial trial of one of the last major cases on marriage equality in the Presbyterian courts, the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Presbytery of the Redwoods (1) gave thanks “for the courageous and heartrending testimonies of the married couples who shared with us their great hurt through the policies of our church … [and] for the joy in marriage they shared with us”; (2) asked “for forgiveness for the harm that has been, and continues to be, done to them in the name of Jesus Christ” and (3) implored the General Assembly “to listen to these testimonies, which are now part of this record, to take them to heart, and to do what needs to be done to move us as a church forward on this journey of reconciliation.” See Decision of the PJC of the Presbytery of the Redwoods, dated August 24, 2010. Similarly, in the GAPJC decision, Southard v. Presbytery of Boston, February 4, 2010, five members of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission expressly recognized that the current language of the Constitution with regard to marriage is at odds with numerous other provisions mandating “the acceptance of our gay, lesbian, and bisexual brothers and sisters into the full fellowship of the church,” and “urged the General Assembly to amend the constitution to allow for the marriage of same-sex couples in the PC(USA) and otherwise welcome gay, lesbian, and bisexual people into the full fellowship of the church.”

As of the time this overture is proposed (October 8, 2013), both the legal and ecclesial landscapes have dramatically changed since those 2010 opinions. Marriage equality is nationally recognized with the invalidation of the Defense of Marriage Act by the United States Supreme Court in 2013 and (as of September 2013) thirteen state governments (those of Massachusetts, California, Connecticut, Iowa, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Maine, Maryland, Washington, Delaware, Rhode Island and Minnesota), along with the District of Columbia, the Coquille Indian Tribe, the Suquamish tribe, the Little Traverse Bay Bands of Odawa Indians, the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians, the lipay Nation of Santa Ysabel, and the Confederated Tribes of the Coquille Reservation issue same-sex marriage licenses. Further, court rulings mandating marriage equality are on appeal in New Mexico and New Jersey. Rulings and legislative action are pending in a number of other states, including Illinois. If Illinois adopts marriage equality this year, a proposal supported by a majority of Illinoisans, more than 40 percent of the United States’ citizenry will live in jurisdictions recognizing marriage equality.

For the sake of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and for the good of loving, monogamous, same-gender couples in our church and for the community and for the greater ministry of our clergy, sessions, and churches, we propose these changes to the Directory for Worship.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of Redwoods (with Additional Rationale)

Throughout our communities, church, and nation, same-gender couples are living life and nurturing their families together in loving, committed, monogamous relationships. They are raising children, caring for aging parents, and making positive contributions to their communities. These couples include new and long-time members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In a growing number of states, the marriages of these same-gender couples have legal recognition, and are correctly honored as having equal character, quality, and dignity as any other marriage. Sadly, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has until now failed to honor in our Constitution (and in related judicial decisions) the full dignity and humanity of these couples, these families, and these marriages.

This overture seeks to amend W 4.9000 of the Constitution so that it more fully and faithfully reflects the expansive love of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and honors all families, without discrimination. By changing the marriage provisions of the Directory for Worship, we would recognize committed, lifelong relationships that are already being lived out by our members. We would honor and support the love and commitment they practice in their lives every day. We would bear witness to the love of God as it is expressed between these couples and their families and as we offer that love to them on behalf of the church.

In addition, as the legal recognition of the marriages of same-gender couples goes through transitions throughout the country, PC(USA) clergy and sessions are faced with complex decisions regarding ecclesiastical authority and property use. Teaching elders/ministers of Word and Sacrament currently can face ecclesiastical charges if they perform marriage ceremonies or civil unions that may be legal in their state. Same-gender couples who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can come to their minister and request that minister to perform their marriage as an agent of the state, only to be denied that important time of pastoral care and ministry because of church law. These marriages create certain privileges and responsibilities for the married couple and their families within the community and the church that cannot be ignored. Among other things, civil marriage bestows a new status on this couple and designates them as a unique social unit; it delineates their family structure and makes the other their next of kin; it establishes parental and societal rights and responsibilities for them; and establishes their rights of inheritance along with creating larger familial relationships. All of these issues affect this new family and their lives in the church.

Broadening the language to offer marriage to any two people removes the religious barriers faced by ministers, sessions, church members, and other Christians while continuing to honor the laws of each state. Changing the language in this way emphasizes that the Directory for Worship defines marriage within the bounds of our denomination and does not determine what is legal or illegal in civil law. This overture recognizes that the civil, legal definition of marriage is in transition within and among the states. This overture honors the dignity of all same gender couples and their families throughout the PC(USA).

In 2010 and then again in 2012, the 219th and 220th General Assemblies failed to act on the substantive marriage-related overtures that were before it, each time suggesting that presbyteries continue in conversation. The inaction of these General Assemblies has left these families officially outside the pastoral care of the church in marriage. Faithful pastors and sessions do courageously celebrate, and officiate, and participate in the marriages of same-gender couples, but they do so in the PC(USA) under the threat of ecclesiastical prosecution. Now, in 2014, it is even more clear that this constitutional amendment is necessary to recognize the full dignity of same-gender couples and their families. At the time of the drafting of this overture marriage was legal for same-gender couples in thirteen states and the District of Columbia. More than 30 percent of the population of the United States now lives in states that recognize the marriage of same-gender couples. This is a reality from which the PC(USA) can no longer hide. This reality requires a faithful response that recognizes the full dignity and humanity of all families.

A growing number of members of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission have called for a constitutional amendment like the one proposed here—as they have had to consider the prosecution of faithful pastors for celebrating the marriages of same-gender couples. In recent decisions, the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission has used its power of authoritative interpretation to interpret the current language of the Constitution as barring any participation by a teaching elder/minister in the marriage of a same-gender couple. Dissenting from those decisions, in the 2010 decision in Southard v. Presbytery of Boston, February 4, 2010, five members of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission expressly recognized that the current language of the Constitution with regard to marriage is at odds with numerous other provisions mandating “the acceptance of our gay, lesbian, and bisexual brothers and sisters into the full fellowship of the church,” and “urged the General Assembly to amend the Constitution to allow for the marriage of same-sex couples in the PC(USA) and otherwise welcome gay, lesbian, and bisexual people into the full fellowship of the church.”

Two years later, six members of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission called on the church to amend its Constitution to more faithfully reflect the Gospel, as follows:

We cannot perpetuate the idea that LGBT couples are children of a lesser God. They are ethically and spiritually the equals of heterosexual couples in the eyes of our Lord. None of us can honestly declare to a committed couple that somehow homosexuals reflect a more perfect image of the God we worship than they who view their gender differently. Our denomination has failed to do justice to the LGBT community while emphasizing the traditions of heterosexual marriage which are embodied in W-4.9001.

As Christians we claim the high goal of loving and including all, then seek to exclude the LGBT community. This second-class (or worse) treatment proclaims the hypocrisy of our present interpretations. Since the Directory for Worship is part of our Constitution and the majority has found that it may give rise to disciplinary cases, then it should be immediately amended to clearly state that we fully welcome the LGBT community into their rightful place in our church, including allowing them to marry.

The language of this amendment places primary emphasis on love, mutual support, and enduring faithfulness, and it affirms pastoral discretion in deciding whether or not to celebrate any particular marriage. For the sake of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and for the good of loving, same-gender couples in our church, and for the community and for the greater ministry of our clergy, sessions, and churches, we propose these changes to the Directory for Worship.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of Southern New England (with Additional Rationale)

The church is now in a state of disunity regarding same-gender marriage. Such disunity is costly to the church’s treasure, time, and more importantly, its witness to Jesus’s call to loving covenant.

During such a time, we must be humbly conscious of the work of the Holy Spirit through Christian conscience. Teaching and ruling elders and their congregations have come prayerfully to recognize that some faithful same-gender couples are asking to be held to the same standards of mutual love and commitment as heterosexual couples. To deny the availability of Christian marriage for otherwise qualified same-gender couples is to reject their equal inheritance through Christ. That rejection denies our traditional belief that marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind.

Additionally, teaching elders who act in good conscience and officiate at the weddings of same-gender couples they deem ready for Christian marriage find they may be charged with the offense of violating their ordination vows for an act that the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) has said was not clearly prohibited when those vows were taken. In the current situation, compliant teaching elders, sessions, and congregations may find themselves to be denying the common humanity that is at the very focus of church life and worship.

Historic descriptions of marriage (including W-4.9000), as descriptions, are no longer accurate or complete. Their use as prescriptions has preempted the historic relational, pastoral roles of teaching elders and sessions, their discretion and conscience. The proposed amendment will reprioritize those roles and honor Christian conscience.

The GAPJC has acknowledged that existing interpretations have exacerbated disunity and has requested guidance. The proposed overture to amend the Directory of Worship would provide that guidance.

Throughout Scripture marriage is used as a metaphor for Christian unity, for God’s love and covenant with us, for the union of Christ and the church. May the church act to make this metaphor ever more evident.

Concurrence to Item 10-02 from the Presbytery of National Capital (with Additional Rationale)

As witnesses to God’s grace, it is time for the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to affirm clearly our common understanding of the value and meaning of marriage, rather than focusing on our disagreement about who may marry. Grounded in the Reformed understanding of marriage as covenant, the proposed substitute text for W-4.9000 lifts up the values of love, mutual support, and lasting faithfulness both for the married couple and for the faith community, thus answering the call in the recent study document issued by the Office of Theology and Worship: “a proper Christian understanding of marriage will claim again the role of the church as a fundamental approving and supporting community in which a marriage of two persons may not only make an appropriate beginning but in which also that marriage may be supported. Without making marriage a sacrament or supplanting the state, the church may offer, as it does in infant baptism, a community in which covenants are made and publicly acknowledged, are nurtured and brought to fulfillment” (“Christian Marriage in the Presbyterian Church [U.S.A.].,” p. 26).

The recent adoption of the new Form of Government points the way toward clarification of our understanding of marriage by focusing on principles of theology and polity. In that spirit, this overture proposes a substitution for rather than a revision of the present text of W-4.9000, where detailed specification of procedures blurs the focus on principles. The substitute text seeks to uphold the intention of the new Form of Government to create a broad constitutional framework within which the councils of the church may adapt practices, procedures, and structures to the needs of particular mission.
Given the role of civil law in defining marriage, as it has been recognized from the beginning of the Reformed tradition, the current differences among civil jurisdictions regarding the gender of persons qualified to marry necessarily create different contexts for the mission of the church. Within the United States, as of August 2013, thirteen states (Connecticut, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, California, Washington, Maine, Maryland, Rhode Island, Delaware, Minnesota, and Vermont), Washington D.C., several counties in New Mexico, and five Native American tribes legally permit marriage between two people of the same gender as well as two people of different gender. The statement in the current text of W-4.9001, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man,” is factually inaccurate.

Within their particular contexts for mission, teaching and ruling elders are responsible for determining appropriate pastoral care for a couple requesting a service of Christian marriage. “The worship of God in the Christian community is the foundation and context for the ministry of pastoral care . . .” (Book of Order, W-6.4000; see also W-6.3002 and W-6.3011), and a service of Christian marriage is a form of worship. In the interest of pastoral care, the proposed substitute text for W-4.9000 does not specify the gender of the couple requesting a service of Christian marriage, but emphasizes the authority of both the teaching elder and the session either to comply with or to deny such a request. Corresponding emphasis is placed on the fact that the teaching elder is not obliged to act as an agent of the state or other civil jurisdiction. The proposed text thus permits but does not mandate the participation of teaching elders and sessions in marriages of same-gender couples.

Such permission is justified by principles of theology as well as polity. “The biblical vision of doing justice” summarized in the Book of Order includes “supporting people who seek the dignity, freedom, and respect that they have been denied” (W-7.4002c), and surely this category includes people who are lesbian, gay, bisexual, or transgender. Whether support for these people should include the right to marry depends in part on whether biblical references to marriage between persons of different gender are to be taken as definitions of marriage or rather as examples. The latter interpretation is supported by the early use of marriage as an example of the type of relation promised between God and the people of God (Hos. 2:14–23), some of whom, of course, are male and some female. The Confession of 1967 recognizes this principle of exemplification: “The relationship between man and woman exemplifies in a basic way God’s ordering of the interpersonal life for which he created mankind” (Book of Confessions, 9.47). Extending the gift of marriage to same-gender couples offers a means of “ordering of the interpersonal life” as an act of pastoral care. Having made a commitment of lasting faithfulness to each other before God and the community of faith, the couple who have entered into Christian marriage have a solemn responsibility to uphold that commitment. The faith community, in turn, have responsibility for continuing spiritual support and pastoral care for the couple. In its mission to society as a whole, the church thus helps to create a culture of faithful, loving, lasting relationships. Real meaning is given to the opening statement in the current text of W-4.9001, and preserved in the proposed substitute text: “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 10-02

Advice on Item 10-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 10-02.

This overture proposes to strike W-4.9000 in its entirety and replace it with new section W-4.9000. This includes revising the definition of marriage to “two people” and allowing teaching elders to perform marriage ceremonies between same-gender couples.

Similar overtures have been considered by previous General Assemblies. The 220th General Assembly (2012) voted to answer those overtures by a call for “a season of serious study and discernment” concerning its [the PC(USA)] meaning of Christian marriage using material prepared by the Office of Theology and Worship.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s advice on this overture is the same as its advice to the General Assembly Committee on Civil Unions and Marriage in 2012 (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 1164ff) and is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overture. The overture does not propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind,” rather the overture seeks to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AlIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of the proposed language is perceived tension between Scripture, the Confessions, and the Book of Order. The assembly will need to articulate the reasons for changing the current definition of Christian marriage.

If the assembly approves this overture, a constitutional issue that should be considered is the use of the word “shall” in the third paragraph (“who shall agree to the couple’s request only if . . .’’). This could be interpreted to limit the teaching elder’s ability to deny performing a service of Christian marriage for any reason other than that given in the overture.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of Item 10-02.
A. Introduction

The Christian Church has influenced societies over the centuries and throughout the world through its understanding of the love of God and neighbor. In the particular area of marriage, the Church has grown in its understanding of mutuality and mutual respect between marriage partners and the nature of the families that are created by such unions. Thus the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy—which has worked on matters of marriage, family, and human sexuality since the 1970 General Assembly Report on Sexuality and the Human Community—does not take the process of change lightly. Rather we pray that commissioners and the larger church can see God’s hands both holding us and leading us on the path of grace.

In this Advice and Counsel (A&C) memorandum, part of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s assigned role for the General Assembly on matters of social ethics and Christian conscience, we ask commissioners to look at several theological and polity considerations that we believe justify sending a constitutional change to the presbyteries. In another Advice and Counsel memorandum on Item 10-03, we address the matter of an authoritative interpretation (AI) that would not propose a re-definition of marriage but allow marriages to be performed in jurisdictions where it is legal without subjecting ministers, couples, and congregations to judicial charges within the Presbyterian system.

We draw here on the wisdom of the many concurring overtures sent in for this Item 10-02, as well as concerns in Items 10-01 and 10-05, which we recommend to answer by action on this item. We also cite sections from the 2012 Advice and Counsel memoranda of both our own committee, ACSWP, and the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC). In 2012, ACSWP and ACC both did not take positions on the variety of overtures on marriage presented and we recommended study by the church, for which the Office of Theology and Worship and many of our seminaries are to be commended for assisting.

B. Theological and Ethical Framework

A basic way to look at the question of whether to change the definition of marriage is to ask whether the addition or extension of a benefit to a new category of persons takes anything away from the existing category or set of persons. Increasingly, around us in our culture and the developed world, heterosexual married couples are not threatened by the extension of the blessing and structure of marriage to GLBT people. Honoring deep yet equalizing traditions of gender complementarity remains possible for many Christians and other neighbors, while other forms of complementarity and partnership are also celebrated. Christian theologians and pastors have, in fact, often been in the lead in thinking through new forms of inclusion even as our churches have struggled to define the issues at stake. While the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and much of the church has focused on the moral bottom-line of fairness in what is now termed, “marriage equality,” this is not to deny the rich and beautiful traditions of marriage that we believe the church is still called to uphold. As Reformed Christians, we believe the biblical core of our faith supports the extension of the benefits of marriage as this overture proposes, while also affirming that no minister or session would be required to perform or permit inclusive marriages against their own conscientious convictions.

C. Polity Framework Considerations

In 2012, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution produced a single comprehensive A&C to address a variety of marriage and civil union overtures, without taking a position either for or against (See pc-biz.org for any of the items in Committee 13 of the 2012 General Assembly). We find excerpts from that memorandum continue to be helpful:

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church …

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures …

These sentences require interpretation: Does the second sentence (civil contract) describe a subset of the first (gift to all humankind), or is it a description of how the gift is conferred? Does the second sentence (civil contract) control and subsume the third (Christian marriage)? Is the language of “woman and a man” descriptive or proscriptive?

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “… civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is proscriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity …

…the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.
Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that questions about W-4.9000 and its relationship to same-gender couples have been addressed to the General Assembly since 1991. Increasing societal acceptance of same-gender couples, laws enacted by some states allowing marriage by same-gender couples, and our own denomination’s struggles over ordination standards have all contributed to the increase of items before the General Assembly seeking change, definition, or interpretation of this section of the Directory for Worship. The church’s concerns for the pastoral care of its members also contribute to the frequency and urgency of these questions. The appointment of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage (2008) and the request for the change in the Board of Pensions policy regarding benefits for same-gender couples are an indicator of the urgency of these matters…

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender…”

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy would note three things about the polity concerns identified by the 2012 ACC statement: that the church’s freedom to define marriage remains essential even if the decision is made to maintain a complementary understanding of civil and religious roles; that the affirmation of marriage as a gift of God to all is primary; and that marriage is not simply a dimension of pastoral care as it has Christian covenantal and communal dimensions. We understand the re-written section of the constitution proposed in this Item 10-02 that these three basic factors would remain unchanged. Our concern for this basic framework is the primary reason for our demurral on Item 10-01, which would separate too strongly the religious and civil aspects of marriage.

D. Theological and Ethical Considerations

1. The ACC excerpts quoted above note the factor of “urgency,” certainly seen again at this assembly, but which can actually be extended before the 1991 date they cite to 1978, if the full dimensions of that year’s report on ordination standards are included. Although these thirty plus years are short in terms of theological tradition and the life of God, many faithful members of our church have been waiting much of their lives to be fully included in our worship life as a people of God. It is primarily because ACSWP shares the sense of urgency with the proponents of Item 10-02 and its concurrences (and other Items before this Committee) that we recommend that Item 10-07 not be adopted. Certainly the number of states and countries allowing marriage equality is increasing rapidly based upon human rights and equal treatment provisions of civil constitutions. This is a reason to begin the constitutional process as well as to provide an Authoritative Interpretation.

2. The justice argument that civil unions provided adequate or even equal basis for rights and respect for same-gender relationships has been proven false, in our view. Although it remains the position of some that same-gender relationships should not imitate or conform to heterosexual norms, the downsides of a “separate but equal” approach are hard to compensate for in the public and legal spheres. Item 10-05, while representing a creative possibility in some respects, would seem to us to fall prey to the weaknesses of a “two-track” approach. Theologically, ACSWP would also note the hopes of a more holistic approach to marriage and sexuality matters as far back as 1970, as well as in 1991.

3. The theological focus of the church and use of its resources would be improved if a constitutional change were approved. This is part of the logic of Item 10-06, applied to A1’s, and it is relevant in the longer constitutional and theological context as well. The suffering of individuals and couples rejected by parts of the church and alienated from the love of Christ and Christian faith—these are the deepest costs to the Body. At the same time, the struggle for equal regard for same-gender persons within the Christian community has also had and has importance, as even costly litigation may illuminate the best values of the church. Now, however, our church and others may be able to turn more fully to an evangelism wedded to a fuller sense of justice and actually do more justice to a range of other urgent concerns. Certainly a church that affirms marriage equality—as proponents note—would seem likely to have more success in outreach and mission with younger adults in the United States.

E. Social Witness Policy Considerations, Especially for Families

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy has been concerned about strengthening families for many years, working with ethicists who look at the economic and cultural factors such as low pay and systemic inequality that have put enormous pressures on parents and those considering parenthood. The assembly’s past policies on families, however, also give shed light on the current choices before the assembly regarding marriage.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved the policy Transforming Families. In its historical analysis, the policy points out that Scripture contains several forms of marriage and family, none of which is a “precise equivalent of contemporary marriage and family life” (C.1). It notes that the development of monogamous marriage took place over time in Hebrew (and other) societies. And it points out that “the Reformed tradition embraced marriage as a good for all in society, Christian or not” (C.1). As the Book of Order states, “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well being of the entire human family” (W-4.9001).
Transforming Families (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/transforming-families/) also states that while the marital-biological family is a basic form of family, it is neither “exhaustive nor exclusive” as a family form, and “it does not fully exemplify God’s ordering of interpersonal life.” Moreover, the policy recognizes that the forms and purposes of family have evolved as God’s ordering of equal gender relationships has become clearer. In these ways, the church has acknowledged that forms of marriage and family are shaped by of historical and cultural developments. Today we would find some of the previous forms and some of the interpersonal relationships that they embodied falling short of our understanding of God’s will for humankind and human well-being.

Having said this, this policy did not address specifically the question of same-gender marriage and family. It assumed without comment the previous policies of the church that called for the same protections and civil rights for same-gender families that are equal to those of married heterosexual families. Equality under the law is one principle. But the church also recognizes the importance of these protections and rights to the capacity of such families to do what good families do: nurturing children, deepening love, providing material support, caring for the young and the sick and the aged, and creating a context for growth in faith. The church has understood that same-gender couples, and homosexual persons, have the same need and desire for the pastoral care of the church. Thus, it offers the blessing of the church on same-gender unions and committed itself to the wellbeing of children in same-gender unions as it has to all children (Transforming Families, p. 31).

Finally, Transforming Families ends with a vision of a church and society “which welcomes and nurtures all persons regardless of their family circumstances” and a church that rejects “attitudes or practices that value some more highly than others - based on gender, age, class, ability, ethnic origin, sexual orientation, or any outward condition” (Recommendations, #2).

Still, these policies did not include same-gender couples in the church’s understanding of marriage. The intent of Item 10-02 (and others) is to embody in the church itself an equal recognition that same-gender faithful and committed relationships are included in the gift of marriage God intends for humankind. These items set before the 221th General Assembly (2014) the question of whether the church’s commitment to equality of civil rights for same-gender persons is possible if the church itself does not receive such relationships into its body on an equal basis with opposite-gender relationships.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 10-02.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given in this overture.

The ACWC believes that in withholding the right to marry from same-gender loving people, the church is upholding a patriarchal standard for humanity. Committed to standing against patriarchy and its effects within the world and the church, ACWC advocates giving access to all that Christian marriage provides to same-gender couples in committed and loving relationships who are in the PC(USA).

The proposed amendment is a clear and compelling statement reflecting the gift of God that marriage provides to human beings. It encourages healthy families, congregations, and communities.

Item 10-03

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000 to Affirm Pastoral Discretion in Performing Marriage Ceremonies—From the Presbytery of Heartland.

The Presbytery of Heartland overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to issue the following authoritative interpretation of the Book of Order, W-4.9000:

“Worship is a central element of the pastoral care of the people of God (W-6.3001, W-6.3010) in which a teaching elder’s discernment of the leading of the Holy Spirit is indispensable. The necessity of ensuring the exercise of freedom of conscience in the interpretation of Scripture (G-2.0105) in the planning and leadership of worship has deep roots in our Reformed tradition and theology. Because a service of marriage is one form of such worship, when a couple requests the involvement of the church in solemnizing their marriage as permitted by the laws [of the civil jurisdiction in which the marriage is to take place] [of the place where the couple seek to be married], teaching elders* have the pastoral responsibility to assess the capabilities, intentions, and readiness of the couple to be married (W-4.9002), and the freedom of conscience in the interpretation of Scripture (G-2.0105) to participate in any such marriage they believe the Holy Spirit calls them to perform.
Exercising such discretion and freedom of conscience under the prayerful guidance of Scripture, teaching elders may conduct a marriage service for any such couple in the place where the community gathers for worship, [if] [so long as it is] approved by the session; or in such other place as may be suitable for a service of Christian worship. In no case shall any teaching elder’s conscience be bound to conduct any marriage service for any couple except by his or her understanding of the Word, and the leading of the Holy Spirit. The authoritative interpretation of this section by the 203rd General Assembly (1991) (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395, paragraphs 21.124–128), and the subsequent authoritative interpretations of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission relying upon it, are withdrawn and replaced with this authoritative interpretation.”

*As in other places in the Directory for Worship, the use of “teaching elders” in this paragraph should be understood to include ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service.

Rationale

The civil legal framework of marriage has changed since the constitutional provisions and other rulings that govern marriage in the PC(USA) were put into place.

The constitution protects a minister’s obligation and right to exercise pastoral discretion in matters such as whether or not to officiate at the marriage service of any particular couple.

Clarifying the constitution in this way will contribute to the peace and unity of the church.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbyteries of Baltimore, Boston, Northern New England, Transylvania, and the Twin Cities Area.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of San Francisco (with Additional Rationale)

Rationale

A Christian understanding of marriage, as a covenant in which people pledge to share their lives and encourage one another’s growth and deepening discipleship, is one of the most distinctive offerings of the church to a culture in which people and relationships often seem disposable. It is a blessing not only for the couple but also for the gathered faith community, where other couples find their own marriages strengthened by witnessing the promises made by the new couple. Marriage services are also a significant evangelism opportunity for congregations, as they invite the new couple, their families, and their friends, to consider a distinctive view of covenantal life, and to witness the church’s welcome.

Under current Presbyterian polity as enunciated by authoritative interpretations, teaching elders may bless same-gender relationships, and they may also receive authority directly from the state to perform civil same-gender marriage ceremonies. However, many teaching elders hesitate to perform such marriages for fear of facing ecclesiastical charges. And since same-gender marriages are currently not recognized by the church, teaching elders must take care not to misrepresent such ceremonies as conferring church recognition of a same-gender marriage.

Uncertainty regarding the PC(USA)’s present position on celebration of same-gender marriages may hinder congregations’ outreach and evangelism, particularly in states that now permit same-gender marriage. In the fourteen states where same-gender marriage is legal, thousands of teaching elders and sessions may be reticent to offer the welcome and pastoral care their biblically informed consciences lead them to do. Indeed, pastors and congregations may even be dissuaded from celebrating the covenantal commitments of their own parishioners, if those church members or officers are lesbian, gay, or transgender.

We in the San Francisco Bay area live in an area where nearly a sixth of our neighbors identify as GLBT (gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender), while only a comparatively few worship in any worshiping community on any weekend. Our congregations, sessions, and teaching elders want to exhibit the “love and justice of Jesus Christ” to our community (W-4.4003i). Our teaching elders want to spend their “energy, intelligence, imagination, and love” (W-4.4003h) caring for their parishioners, not wasting resources on ecclesial litigation. Of course, pastors and sessions whose own consciences cannot allow them to support these unions have complete pastoral discretion not to do so.

It is time for the church to resolve the pastoral crisis confronting clergy in states where marriage equality is the law of the land. As our own General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) recently ruled,

In light of the number of cases coming before this Commission and the convoluted grounds upon which cases are brought and decided, it would be beneficial for the church to provide a definitive position regarding participation of officers in same-gender ceremonies whether civil or religious.

(Newark v. McNeill, Disciplinary Case 221-02)
While the PC(USA) has not yet elected to recognize same-gender marriages, it is essential that the denomination state clearly and unambiguously the right of a teaching elder to conduct civil same-gender marriages and to bless those relationships in PC(USA) worship services, so that those teaching elders may confidently and compassionately minister to their congregations.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of Maumee Valley (with Additional Rationale)

When a couple seeks to be married in the church, rather than in a civil setting, they want the support of the people of God for their pledge of lifelong commitment. Will we continue to withhold this support, or will we welcome them fully and give a blessing to the gift of love that God has placed in their hearts? Will we encourage them to fully participate in the life of the church and to raise children in the body of Christ? There is no stated “biblical definition” of marriage. Indeed, much of what the Bible describes as marriage or intimate relationships—bigamy, polygamy, concubinage, socioeconomic bridal negotiations, levirate marriage—is no longer part of Christian matrimony. Where do we go from here, then?

There is debate over what the Book of Order intends to say in W-4.9000. Is it descriptive of one particular marriage scenario, or is it prescriptive of the only marriage scenario? The Directory for Worship repeatedly stresses the importance of worship in the exercise of pastoral care: “The worship of God in the Christian community is the foundation and context for the ministry of pastoral care as well as for the ministry of nurture in the faith” (W-6.4000). The Preface to the Directory for Worship explicitly states that “this directory ... uses language about worship which is simply descriptive” (Preface, b). There are numerous descriptions of usual practice in the directory that are not followed to the letter by pastors and congregations. This is within the Reformed tradition of “ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda,” blessing neither preservation for preservation’s sake nor change for change’s sake. The church is not the agent of its own reformation; God is the agent of reformation, and the church is the object of God’s reforming work. This is what Pastor John Robinson had in mind in 1620, when in his final sermon to the Pilgrims departing for the New World, he reminded them that God does not reveal God’s whole truth to any one person at any one point in history: “… I am verily persuaded the Lord hath more truth [and light] yet to break forth from His Holy Word” (http://www.newtestamentpattern.net/christian-articles/sundry-thoughts/the-words-of-john-robinson_mayflower).

We must continually be open to hearing the new things God is saying to us through the Word. It was this ever-renewed, ever-revealing light that led us away from the scriptural interpretations once used to keep slavery in place, to justify anti-Semitism, to limit the role of women in society and in our denomination, to justify the despoilment of the environment, to authorize physical punishment of children at home and school, and to rationalize homophobia, for example. In fact, the Book of Order is designed to be very fluid, constantly open to amendment, change, and reform. Procedures for modifications are understood as a means to faithfulness as God leads us in discernment. For example, it was this openness to new paths revealed to us by God that led to the 2011 Book of Order amendment (10-A) that removed the issue of sexual orientation from the ordination process for deacons, elders, and ministers.

The authoritative interpretation being sought will confirm the long-standing role of teaching elders and ruling elders in exercising non-judgmental inquiry, as they seek to understand and live out the Scriptures and their ordination vows. The political maneuvers of recent years have impinged on the fulfillment of those vows taken by our congregational officers and most especially by our clergy. Current interpretations of the Book of Order, W-4.9000, give the impression that those authorized by their ordination in the PC(USA) to solemnize marriages are not permitted to perform that service for same-gender couples, especially by our clergy. Current interpretations of the polity maneuveres of recent years have impinged on the fulfillment of those vows taken by our congregational officers and most exercising non-judgmental inquiry, as they seek to understand and live out the Scriptures and their ordination vows. The polity’s sake nor change for change’s sake. The church is not the agent of its own reformation; God is the agent of reformation, and the church is the object of God’s reforming work. This is what Pastor John Robinson had in mind in 1620, when in his final sermon to the Pilgrims departing for the New World, he reminded them that God does not reveal God’s whole truth to any one person at any one point in history: “… I am verily persuaded the Lord hath more truth [and light] yet to break forth from His Holy Word” (http://www.newtestamentpattern.net/christian-articles/sundry-thoughts/the-words-of-john-robinson_mayflower).

We must continually be open to hearing the new things God is saying to us through the Word. It was this ever-renewed, ever-revealing light that led us away from the scriptural interpretations once used to keep slavery in place, to justify anti-Semitism, to limit the role of women in society and in our denomination, to justify the despoilment of the environment, to authorize physical punishment of children at home and school, and to rationalize homophobia, for example. In fact, the Book of Order is designed to be very fluid, constantly open to amendment, change, and reform. For example, it was this openness to new paths revealed to us by God that led to the 2011 Book of Order amendment (10-A) that removed the issue of sexual orientation from the ordination process for deacons, elders, and ministers.

The authoritative interpretation being sought will confirm the long-standing role of teaching elders and ruling elders in exercising non-judgmental inquiry, as they seek to understand and live out the Scriptures and their ordination vows. The political maneuvers of recent years have impinged on the fulfillment of those vows taken by our congregational officers and most especially by our clergy. Current interpretations of the Book of Order, W-4.9000, give the impression that those authorized by their ordination in the PC(USA) to solemnize marriages are not permitted to perform that service for same-gender couples, as they routinely do for heterosexual couples. As legal marriage for same-gender couples becomes a reality in a growing number of venues*, this supposed prohibition requires more and more teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders either to discriminate against some couples, contrary to their conscience, or to risk involving themselves and their congregations in judicial process. Pastors are facing the impossible dilemma of choosing between, on the one hand, their ordination promises to “pray for and seek to serve the people with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love” (W-4.4003h), to “love your neighbors and work for the reconciliation of the world” (W-4.4003f), and to “try to show the love and justice of Jesus Christ” (W4.4003i(3)), all up against, on the other hand, the promise to “be governed by our church’s polity” (W-4.4003e). The current interpretation painfully interferes with pastors’ ability to exercise their discretion in providing pastoral care. Resolution of this conflictual situation need not remain impossible for a denomination that has traditionally drawn strength from its capacity for mutual forbearance. A pastor in the PC(USA) is not under any compulsion to perform a marriage that s/he deems inappropriate. It is also the long-standing practice of Reformed faith to allow freedom of conscience in all nonessential matters, and homosexuality was not considered an essential in the past. Same-gender marriage was scarcely on the radar as recently as a generation ago.

What happened in the relatively recent Presbyterian past has been at times a convoluted journey through our polity. The requested authoritative interpretation (AI) does not seek to amend W-4.9000; rather, it clarifies that conducting a service of worship that does not follow W-4.9000 to the letter is not an offense that should subject a minister to the threat of discipline. The requested authoritative interpretation removes a prior AI, issued by the 203rd General Assembly (1991) at a time when there was no possibility in this country of conducting a legal marriage service, civil or religious, for a same-gender couple. The requested AI also removes the subsequent AIs by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) that rely upon that 1991 AI.
The GAPJC has itself acknowledged that the current language of the Book of Order is silent as to same-gender marriage and that it was a split decision of the GAPJC that created an offense where none previously existed:

We understand the Decision to be an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, to mean that officers of the PC(USA) who are authorized to perform marriages shall not hereafter perform a same sex union ceremony in which or with respect to which such officer states, implies or represents to be a marriage or the equivalent thereof. While the Commission did not find Spahr guilty as charged herein, in part because her conduct occurred under prior authoritative interpretations, we understand that future noncompliance with the authoritative interpretation of the Decision will be considered to be a disciplined offense. ([emphasis added] Disciplinary Case 218-12, Concurring Opinion [Spahr 1, http://oga.pcusa.org/media/uploads/oga/pdf/pjc21812withconcurrences.pdf]).

The GAPJC reaffirmed that the supposed offense was its own creation, when it determined that Jean Southard did not commit an offense in performing a marriage for two women; if the supposed offense were inherent in the Book of Order, Rev. Southard would have been guilty:

“This Commission concluded in Spahr that prior authoritative interpretations lacked mandatory language. Southard conducted this ceremony two months prior to Spahr. Sensitive to the authoritative interpretation in Spahr, this Commission agrees with the SPJC that Spahr cannot be applied retroactively to the facts of this case. Therefore, Southard did not violate the Book of Order or her ordination vows by erring in her constitutional interpretation. She did not commit an offense because the applicable authoritative interpretation (Spahr) had not yet been promulgated.” ([emphasis added] Disciplinary Case 220-02 [Southard, http://oga.pcusa.org/media/uploads/oga/pdf/pjc 22002.pdf])

If the GAPJC has the authority to create an offense by authoritative interpretation, the General Assembly—a much larger and more representative body—has the same authority as the GAPJC to correct that action (G-6.02). The Book of Order does not address same-gender marriage. The Directory for Worship was written before same-gender marriage seemed like a possibility. To pass an AI that allows sessions and pastors discretion to do, or not to do, same-gender marriages merely addresses a situation that is not explicitly covered in the Book of Order. If the current section on marriage were intentional in its exclusion, it would explicitly say, “Marriage is to be (or ‘shall be’) between a man and a woman.” Section W-4.9001 does not say that, and previous attempts to make it say that have failed. Notwithstanding, no PC(USA) minister can ever be required to participate in a marriage service against his or her conscience. In cases such as this one, a determination of offense requires clear demonstration of a violation against Scripture or the Constitution, in which the terms of a mandate are unambiguous and expressly stated. In this case and in the other recent cases related to it, it is strikingly significant to note the absence of arguments upon perceived biblical warrants or directly applicable mandates in our Constitution and the presence of simple descriptive, not prescriptive, bases. The authoritative interpretation of these sections (W-4.9000–4.9006) by the 203rd General Assembly (1991) is no longer factually correct and does not adequately prioritize the discretion granted to teaching elders and sessions in both providing pastoral care and overseeing services of worship.

In this case and the other recent decisions, the principal concern is that the GAPJC has forged a standard upon an extremely fragile provision, employing a strained interpretation that does not provide the necessary legal foundation for resolution of our dilemma and does not foster pastoral guidance in the life of the church. It does not take into account the changes in the understanding of marriage, especially by persons of faith in Jesus Christ. Will we welcome all couples to participate fully in the life of the church? Will we encourage all families to raise children as members of the body of Christ? By relying so heavily on W-4.9001, the GAPJC has ruled upon convention rather than church law. The definitive clarity that the church deserves and expects in this continuing and vexatious dispute awaits deeper foundational judgment as well as more precise legislation.

On July 24, 2011, the State of New York extended the right to marry to couples of the same gender, joining Massachus-sets, Connecticut, Iowa, Vermont, New Hampshire, and the District of Columbia. Since that date, California, Delaware, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Rhode Island, Washington, and New Jersey have also extended the right to marry to same-gender couples. Many Presbyterian teaching elders, including several in our presbytery, are receiving requests from their lesbian and gay congregants to celebrate their marriages in the Christian community. They assume they would be afforded the same pastoral care provided to other members.

The Directory for Worship acknowledges that marriage is a “civil contract” and therefore regulated by the state (203rd General Assembly [1991] in Baltimore). It was written before the possibility of civil marriage between persons of the same sex was contemplated. Likewise, the 1991 General Assembly’s authoritative interpretation that distinguished between a “same-sex ceremony” and a marriage, the 2000 Benton decision of the GAPJC, and the 2008 Spahr decision were all ad-dressing ceremonies that were not legal civil marriages. In this interim, when the definition of civil marriage is changing, the Book of Order requires interpretation to be applied to a variety of circumstances. One of the most pressing is the pastoral crisis that results when same-sex couples ask the teaching and ruling elders of their congregation to permit and participate in their marriage services under Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) auspices, and those elders must hesitate for fear of challenge in church courts.

Worship is the central context of pastoral care for Christians:

“The worship of God in the Christian community is the foundation and context for the ministry of pastoral care as well as for the ministry of nurture in the faith” (Book of Order, W-6.4000; see also W-6.3002 and W-6.3010).

Lesbian and gay Presbyterians seeking the care of their church do not wish to provoke controversy, endanger their pastors, or embroil their congregations in judicial proceedings. Like heterosexual couples, they simply want the support of their faith community as they undertake the commitments and responsibilities of marriage. When the possibility of prosecution looms over pastors who are endeavoring to fulfill their promise to “… pray for and seek to serve the people with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love” (W-4.4003h), anguish extends to the couple, the pastor, the congregation, and eventually the whole church.

Therefore, we propose an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 to clarify the ambiguities it contains. Much of the section is written in permissive or advisory language. The Preface to the Book of Order states that “SHALL and IS TO BE/ARE TO BE signify practice that is mandated” while “SHOULD signifies practice that is strongly recommended” and “MAY signifies practice that is permissible but not required.” The Preface to the Directory for Worship (section b) states: “In addition to the [above] terms defined in the Preface to the Book of Order, this [Worship] directory also uses language about worship which is simply descriptive.” For example there is a logical conflict between the description of “Christian marriage” as an expression of “Christian commitment” and the allowance that one of the partners might not even be “a professing Christian” (W-4.9002a(1)). The descriptions of Christian marriage, if prohibitive of ceremonies in which every detail does not conform to the descriptions, would forbid teaching elders from officiating at interfaith marriages because they might, among other things, “Diminish the Christian understanding of marriage.” If W-4.9000 was intended to set normative, mandatory, exclusive standards for what the PC(USA) considers marriage, then those who conduct marriages would also be at risk for allowing music that fails to “[direct] attention to God and express the faith of the church” (W-4.9005) or for allowing “flowers, decorations, and other appointments” (Ibid) that do not “reflect the integrity and simplicity of Christian life” (Ibid). There is nothing in the text of W-4.9000 that makes the “man and woman” description mandatory and the other details not mandatory. If officiating at the marriage of a same-gender couple is an offense, then any ceremony not conforming to every detail of W-4.9000, even a heterosexual marriage, is likewise an offense.

The comments of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2001: “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254). There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals.

The enactment of laws that make it possible for same-sex couples to enter into a civil contract raises the question then of whether the key to performing marriage ceremonies to be held in a church and conducted by teaching elders or commissioned ruling elders is the civil contract or the gender of the parties. The traditional distinctions held by the PC(USA) are no longer as clear.

Pastors and sessions need the General Assembly’s assurance of their freedom and discretion to provide the pastoral care that their members require. This freedom is based on the same principle as W-4.9002b, which provides that pastors are free, as their judgment dictates, not to officiate at marriages that their members and others are contracting.

In the absence of mandatory language in the Book of Order that would prohibit a service of Christian marriage for any couple that is legally permitted to marry, the assembly should give such assurance of freedom and discretion in the form of this proposed authoritative interpretation. It will prevent deep grief for church members who might otherwise be denied the pastoral care of the church and it will protect pastors and sessions from judicial challenge for exercising their pastoral responsibilities.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of Long Island (with Additional Rationale)

The Session of the Setauket Presbyterian Church takes seriously its vows to “pray for and seek to serve the people with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love” (W-4.4003h), to “love [our] neighbors and work for the reconciliation of the world” (W-4.4003f), to “try to show the love and justice of Jesus Christ (W-4.4003i3), and to “be governed by our church’s polity” (W-4.4003e). We also take seriously our pastoral and leadership role as elected by a congregation that is socio-politically and theologically diverse.

The Setauket Presbyterian Church is the fifth oldest congregation in the denomination (1660), with a history of putting faith and principles into action dating at least from organized resistance to British occupation during the American Revolution. We are a More Light church and a member church of the Covenant Network of Presbyterians. From our history and our public stance, it is logical that same-sex couples would come to us, as indeed they have, trusting that we will welcome them and their families, and that we would provide the same pastoral care and congregational support in the name of Christ that a church is called to offer to all people.

The civil laws of the State of New York allow same-sex marriage, but the present interpretations of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do not. This created personal conflict for each of us, and, as we grappled with it together, distress and sadness in the session as a whole. We saw that the language in W-4.9001 describing civil marriage was no longer adequate or accurate, at least when applied to a growing number of states (including our own) and other nations worldwide. As we studied, prayed, and reflected over two months and three session meetings, the following issues rose to the surface:

Suppose, we reasoned, one of the same-sex couples in our church family adopted a baby, presented her for baptism, and also asked to get married now that that was possible. We realized that we could baptize the baby, but not marry the couple. We could even approve their reception on our property, but not their wedding. That seemed illogical and unfair to us, no matter how kindly we broke the news to them. We saw that no matter which way we turned, we would be breaking one or another of our ordination vows.

We learned that in the Reformed tradition, teaching elders have always had pastoral responsibility to assess the appropriateness of any marriage, and that sessions had similar responsibility in assessing the impact on “proclamation of the Gospel” and “demonstration of the Kingdom of God to the world” in their approval of the use of church buildings. We understood those parallel responsibilities to be part of the checks and balances built into our polity. We grieved that the current interpretation of the descriptive language in our Directory for Worship interferes with this trust and these responsibilities.

We observed that, as a church, we bless heterosexual marriages contracted under civil law because for century’s marriage partners have testified that their bond is a means of grace. We felt that when same-gender partners testify that their committed relationships have the same benefit, it was right to give them the same blessing. We acknowledged that as the world changes, same-gender couples are actually doing something profoundly conservative by asking to be held, through public covenant, to the same standards of faithfulness and mutual love that the church expects of heterosexual couples.

We were concerned for the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We remembered that our Lord Jesus spent very little time in the Temple, and most of his time among the people. On many occasions we see him following the spirit of the law, when he found it in conflict with the letter. The spirit of marriage is alive and well in two people who express a heartfelt desire to unite their spirits and their lives with each other and with God. It would be against that very spirit to deny them that right.

Out of our established commitment to peace and justice, we reflected that as Jesus taught us to fight for the oppressed, in our time there is perhaps no better example of what Jesus meant than the one before us now. It seemed to us unimaginable to think that Jesus would deny two people who seek to live their lives in union, with him and with each other, the ability to do so. Recognizing our duty as Christians to fight for justice for all of God’s people, we realized that in this case, if we do not make a change in the church, we are not only refusing to fight for the oppressed, we are in fact the oppressors.

Moreover, we were deeply concerned for the faith of our children. We were startled to read the statistics published by the conservative evangelical Barna Foundation: that 85 percent of unchurched young people under age 29 believe the church is hypocritical; 87 percent believe that it is judgmental, and 91 percent believe it is anti-homosexual. Digging further, we discovered that conservatives and liberals alike are alarmed at the growing rate at which young people are falling away from the churches. Although there are undoubtedly many contributing factors to this, we could not dismiss the Barna statistics as irrelevant.

Our denomination as a whole has for decades maintained a consistent civil rights stance on behalf of LGBTQ people in matters of civil law, no matter how we are still working out the details of polity. This is something of which the young people in our congregation are proud. We wanted to contribute to an environment of pastoral concern rather than ecclesiastical litigiousness as our denomination works through the huge transitions now shaping society.

For all these reasons, we wanted to be part of the solution, and through due denominational process, to return our polity to its historical position: an expectation of prayerful discernment on the part of teaching elders and sessions, where marriage in the church intersects with marriage in the still-evolving law of the land.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of New York City (with Additional Rationale)

Recent changes in civil law permitting couples of the same gender to marry have created a pastoral crisis in a significant number of jurisdictions where many Presbyterians reside. Within the United States, as of August 2013, thirteen states (Connecticut, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, California, Washington, Maine, Maryland, Rhode Island, Delaware, Minnesota and Vermont), Washington, D.C., and two Native American tribal jurisdictions (Coquille, Suquamish) legally permit marriage between two people of the same gender as well as two people of different gender. Within these jurisdictions, faithful members of PC(USA) congregations are approaching teaching elders expecting the same pastoral care to be extended to couples of the same gender that is regularly extended to couples of different gender. They are requesting a service of Christian marriage, an occasion for the worship of God, and therefore based on the foundation for the ministry of pastoral care (Book of Order, W-6.4000; see also W-6.3002 and W-6.3011).

A pastoral crisis arises from the fact that the PC(USA) Constitution no longer offers clear guidance concerning qualifications for marriage. The statement in the Directory for Worship, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001), is factually inaccurate. Until the Directory of Worship is revised to recognize changes in civil law and to clarify the implications of those changes for marriage in the PC(USA), the General Assembly needs to affirm what has not changed: namely, the responsibility of the individual teaching elder to determine the couple’s fitness to marry based on their “commitment, responsibility, maturity, or Christian understanding” (W-4.9002b). The proposed authoritative interpretation provides such affirmation.

While the process of constitutional change takes its course, the proposed authoritative interpretation invites all members of the PC(USA) to experience God’s grace through gracious regard for each other. Under the proposed authoritative interpretation, not only may pastoral care be extended to same-gender couples, but teaching elders and sessions who agree to extend such care may face less threat of judicial action. By contrast, existing authoritative interpretations, which would be withdrawn by the present proposal, not only arise from judicial action but open the prospect of further litigation as the courts of the church struggle for clarity in an unclear constitutional context. The proper means to achieve such clarity is the constitutional process involving the church as a whole. We will be better prepared to engage in that process if we use the means now available to practice gracious interactions with each other.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of The Western Reserve (with Additional Rationale)

Same-gender couples seek to be married in the church for the same reasons as heterosexual couples—and they will continue to marry. The question is whether the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will welcome them, or drive them away; celebrate and witness their mutual commitments, or leave them without the support of the faith community for the solemn covenant they are entering.

Current interpretations of the Book of Order, W-4.9000, give the impression that those authorized by their ordination in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to solemnize marriages are not permitted to perform that service for same-gender couples, as they routinely do for heterosexual couples. As legal marriage for same-gender couples becomes a reality in a growing number of countries, U. S. states, and other civil jurisdictions, this supposed prohibition requires more and more teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders either to discriminate against some couples, contrary to their conscience, or to risk involving themselves and their congregations in judicial process. Pastors are facing the impossible dilemma of choosing between their ordination promises to “pray for and seek to serve the people with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love” (W-4.4003h), “love your neighbors and work for the reconciliation of the world” (W-4.4003f), and “try to show the love and justice of Jesus Christ” (W-4.4033i), or the promise to “be governed by our church’s polity” (W-4.4003e). The current interpretation unacceptably interferes with pastors’ ability to exercise their discretion in providing pastoral care.

The Directory for Worship repeatedly stresses the importance of worship in the exercise of pastoral care: “The worship of God in the Christian community is the foundation and context for the ministry of pastoral care as well as for the ministry of nurture in the faith” (W-6.4000). See also, for example, W-6.3010, W-6.3002.

The Preface to the Directory for Worship explicitly states that “this directory also uses language about worship which is simply descriptive.” There are numerous descriptions of usual practice in the directory that are not followed to the letter by pastors and congregations.

The requested authoritative interpretation (AI) does not seek to amend W-4.9000; it simply clarifies that conducting a service of worship that does not follow W-4.9000 to the letter is not an offense that should subject a minister to the threat of discipline. The requested authoritative interpretation removes a prior AI, issued by the 203rd General Assembly (1991) at a time when there was no possibility of conducting a legal marriage service for a same-gender couple, and subsequent AIs by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) that rely upon it.

The GAPJC has itself acknowledged that the current language of the Book of Order is silent as to same-gender marriage, and that it was a split decision of the GAPJC that created an offense where none previously existed:

We understand the Decision to be an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, to mean that officers of the PCUSA who are authorized to perform marriages shall not hereafter perform a same sex union ceremony in which or with respect to which such officer states, implies or represents to be a marriage or the equivalent thereof. While the Commission did not find Spahr guilty as charged herein, in part because her conduct occurred under prior authoritative interpretations, we understand that future noncompliance with the authoritative interpretation of the Decision will be considered to be a disciplinable offense. [emphasis added] Disciplinary Case 218-12 Concurring Opinion (Spahr 1, [http://oga.pcusa.org/media/uploads/oga/pdf/pjc21812withconcurrences.pdf])
The GAPJC reaffirmed that the supposed offense was its own creation, when it determined that Jean Southard did not commit an offense in performing a marriage for two women; if the supposed offense were inherent in the Book of Order, Rev. Southard would have been guilty:

This Commission concluded in Spahr that prior authoritative interpretations lacked mandatory language. Southard conducted this ceremony two months prior to Spahr. Sensitive to the authoritative interpretation in Spahr, this Commission agrees with the SPJC that Spahr cannot be applied retroactively to the facts of this case. Therefore, Southard did not violate the Book of Order or her ordination vows by erring in her constitutional interpretation. She did not commit an offense because the applicable authoritative interpretation (Spahr) had not yet been promulgated. [emphasis added] Disciplinary Case 220-02 (Southard, http://oga.pcusa.org/media/uploads/oga/pdf/pjc22002.pdf)

If the GAPJC has the authority to create an offense by authoritative interpretation, the General Assembly—a much larger and more representative body—has the authority to correct that action (G-6.02).

Ministers whose study of Scripture, with the guidance of the Holy Spirit, has led them to affirm same-gender marriage, are following their understanding of Jesus Christ, who placed himself on the margins with people others considered unclean, unworthy, and immoral, and lifted up love and compassion. They note that the Bible reflects many patterns and forms of legal, religiously approved marital relationships. They appeal to Presbyterian principles of biblical interpretation, including reading in context, the use of knowledge and experience, the centrality of Jesus Christ, interpretation of Scripture by Scripture, the rule of love, and the rule of faith (Presbyterian Understanding and Use of Holy Scripture, http://www.pcusa.org/media/uploads/resolutions/scripture-use.pdf). They believe that turning away same-gender couples harms gay and lesbian persons and their families, creates injustice, hinders evangelism, and violates their understanding of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

These ministers are seeking the freedom of conscience to act on their convictions that is safeguarded in our Historic Principles of Church Order, and the mutual forbearance required for maintaining the unity of the body (F-3.01).

The same principles protect those whose study of Scripture leads them to a different conclusion. No minister can ever be required to participate in a marriage service against his or her conscience.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) acknowledges that faithful Presbyterians earnestly seeking to follow Jesus Christ hold different views about what the Scriptures teach concerning the morality of committed, same-gender relationships. Therefore, while holding persons in ordered ministry to high standards of covenant fidelity in the exercise of their sexuality, as in all aspects of life, we acknowledge that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does not have one interpretation of Scripture in this matter. We commit ourselves to continue respectful dialogue with those who hold differing convictions, to welcome one another for God’s glory, and not to vilify those whose convictions we believe to be in error. We call on all Presbyterians to join us in this commitment. (action of the 220th General Assembly 2012, http://www.pc-biz.org/MeeitngPapers/(S(zuvchv5dex1dkpgphysjezk0))/IOBView.aspx?m=ro&id=4063)

The requested authoritative interpretation follows the reasoning of the members of the GAPJC who dissented in the Spahr 2 decision (Disciplinary Case 220-08, February 2012, http://oga.pcusa.org/media/uploads/oga/pdf/pjc22008.pdf)

We respectfully dissent from this Decision [that declared that Janie Spahr had violated the Book of Order by conducting services that were and are legal marriages].

The majority judges this case primarily in relation to the decisions in Spahr (2008) and Southard (2011) in a conviction that, behind its judicial interpretation, there is in the Constitution an explicit basis against officiating in a same-sex marriage. In fact, this conviction rests upon an assumption rather than explicit constitutional rule. It is grounded principally upon one section, even one sentence, in the Directory of Worship, that is claimed to have clear and obvious legal status. The Commission assumes here and in earlier cases that W-4.9001 presents a legal basis for denying the permissibility and validity of same-sex marriage because it presents a “definition” of marriage as exclusively between a man and a woman. This assumption is flawed. This provision in the Directory of Worship cannot serve effectively as a judicial criterion.

There are several reasons why W-4.9001 is incapable of bearing the legal significance and weight that the Commission has placed upon it. First, this paragraph emerged decades ago, in a very different time and context. In its language and descriptions, it reflects conventions of a time when same-sex unions presented little, if any, cultural concern or attention... Secondly, W-4.9001 is an introductory narrative for a distinctive, introductory section on marriage, outlining its biblical and theological characteristics as background to provisions of pastoral practice and nurture...To claim that this paragraph is primarily and intentionally in nature forces an artificial warp upon its evident narrative purpose. As a fourfold theological outline of Christian marriage in narrative form, in no way is it clear or obvious that it proposes regulatory imperative or legal intention. Certainly, it does not have the kind of language or format that the church has come to expect in definitive juridical statements, the kind of “shall” language that is common to our order in providing regulatory lines for boundaries of action or proscribed behavior.

This is all to say that, in cases such as this one, a determination of offense requires clear demonstration of a violation against Scripture or the Constitution, in which the terms of a mandate are unambiguous and expressly stated. In this case and in the other recent cases, it is strikingly significant to note the absence of arguments upon perceived biblical warrants or directly applicable mandates in our Constitution and the presence of mere definitional bases.

In this case and the other recent decisions, our principal concern is that this Commission has forged a standard upon an extremely fragile provision, employing a strained interpretation that does not provide the necessary legal foundation for resolution of our dilemma or foster pastoral guidance in the life of the church. By relying so heavily on W-4.9001, the Commission has ruled upon convention rather than law. The definitive clarity that the church deserves and expects in this continuing and vexatious dispute awaits deeper foundational judgment as well as more precise legislation.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse (with Additional Rationale)

As the Presbyterian Church U.S.A. wrestles with its understanding of the nature of Christian marriage, pastors and sessions strive to be faithful in providing appropriate pastoral care to church members who seek to be married. As of October 28, 2013, fourteen states have legalized civil marriage for same-gender couples among their 100 million citizens. Teaching elders in those states must risk disciplinary action if they seek to give to same-gender members of their churches the same pastoral care that they offer to other members, officiating at their marriages. For leaders in many Presbyterian churches in these states, this constitutes a crisis of conscience. Until the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) determines how to resolve the conflicting definitions of marriage in the Directory for Worship and civil law, teaching elders in those states that authorize same-gender marriage need to be protected from judicial action for carrying out their responsibility to provide pastoral care to church members.

Here in the State of New York, same-gender couples have been able to be married since June 2011. Since then, hundreds of same-gender couples have approached their pastors, requesting to be married in the church where they are members. Some pastors have consented and conducted same-gender wedding ceremonies, either in the church or in another location; a few of these pastors have been charged and convicted, at considerable expense to themselves and their presbyteries. Some pastors have declined out of scruples of conscience. Others have declined out of respect for the denomination’s policy or because they were intimidated by the prospect of disciplinary action. These pastors generally tried to make other arrangements, either having a minister of another denomination conduct the wedding or conducting a service of blessing after the couple had a civil marriage. When their pastor declined to conduct their wedding, most same-gender couples felt a sense of rejection from their own faith community, and many then joined a different church where they could be married or left church altogether.

One pastor in the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse was approached by a same-gender couple who had been together for seventeen years, requesting to be married. The pastor consulted with the session, which disapproved of having a marriage that would expose the pastor and the church to disciplinary action. The pastor then regrettfully arranged for a minister colleague to conduct the couple’s marriage, but the pastor conducted a service of blessing for the couple afterward.

In the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse, one third of our churches are united or federated churches, usually with a church of a denomination that allows same-gender marriage. In at least one case, a same-gender couple sought to be married by the Presbyterian pastor of their united church. The pastor arranged for a minister of another denomination to conduct the wedding in the couple’s church building, an awkward arrangement at best! A similar situation arose when a Presbyterian pastor serving a church of one of our Formula of Agreement partners had to invite another minister to officiate at the marriage of one of their same-gender member couples. Another couple, both active leaders of the church, requested that they be married in the church sanctuary by their pastor (a Presbyterian serving under the Formula of Agreement). The couple had been together for nearly forty years and to refuse to extend pastoral care in this situation was unthinkable.
The above overture would give relief to teaching elders and sessions in our presbytery, so that they could discharge their responsibility to provide pastoral care to their church members, including to the same-gender couples in their congregations who seek to be married in their church, without risking disciplinary action or having to resort to tortuous and generally unsatisfactory alternatives.

Sensitive to the authoritative interpretation in Spahr, this Commission agrees with the SPJC that Spahr cannot be applied retroactively to the facts of this case. Therefore, Southard did not violate the Book of Order or her ordination vows by erring in her constitutional interpretation. She did not commit an offense because the applicable authoritative interpretation (Spahr) had not yet been promulgated. [emphasis added] Disciplinary Case 220-02 (Southard, [http://oga.pcusa.org/media/uploads/oga/pdf/pjc22002.pdf]).

If the GAPJC has the authority to create an offense by authoritative interpretation, the General Assembly—a much larger and more representative body—has the authority to correct that action (G-6.02).

Ministers whose study of Scripture, with the guidance of the Holy Spirit, has led them to affirm same-gender marriage, are following their understanding of Jesus Christ, who placed himself on the margins with people others considered unclean, unworthy, and immoral, and lifted up love and compassion. They note that the Bible reflects many patterns and forms of legal, religiously approved marital relationships. They appeal to Presbyterian principles of biblical interpretation, including reading in context, the use of knowledge and experience, the centrality of Jesus Christ, interpretation of Scripture by Scriptured, the rule of love, and the rule of faith (Presbyterian Understanding and Use of Holy Scripture, http://www.pcusa.org/media/uploads/resolutions/scripture-use.pdf). They believe that turning away same-gender couples harms gay and lesbian persons and their families, creates injustice, hinders evangelism, and violates their understanding of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

These ministers are seeking the freedom of conscience to act on their convictions that is safeguarded in our Historic Principles of Church Order, and the mutual forbearance required for maintaining the unity of the body (F-3.01). The same principles protect those whose study of Scripture leads them to a different conclusion. No minister can ever be required to participate in a marriage service against his or her conscience.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) acknowledges that faithful Presbyterians earnestly seeking to follow Jesus Christ hold different views about what the Scriptures teach concerning the morality of committed, same-gender relationships. Therefore, while holding persons in ordered ministry to high standards of covenant fidelity in the exercise of their sexuality, as in all aspects of life, we acknowledge that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does not have one interpretation of Scripture in this matter. We commit ourselves to continue respectful dialogue with those who hold differing convictions, to welcome one another for God’s glory, and not to vilify those whose convictions we believe to be in error. We call on all Presbyterians to join us in this commitment. (action of the 220th General Assembly (2012), http://www.pc-biz.org/MeetingPapers/Slzucvhe5dscxlqkphhizek00i/10BView.aspx?m=ro&id=4063)

We respectfully dissent from this Decision [that declared that Janie Spahr had violated the Book of Order by conducting services that were and are legal marriages].

The majority judges this case primarily in relation to the decisions in Spahr (2008) and Southard (2011) in a conviction that, behind its judicial interpretation, there is in the Constitution an explicit basis against officiating in a same-sex marriage. In fact, this conviction rests upon an assumption rather than explicit constitutional rule. It is grounded principally on one section, even one sentence, in the Directory of Worship, that is claimed to have clear and obvious legal status. The Commission assumes here and in earlier cases that W-4.9001 presents a legal basis for denying the permissibility and validity of same-sex marriage because it presents a “definition” of marriage as exclusively between a man and a woman. This assumption is flawed. This provision in the Directory of Worship cannot serve effectively as a judicial criterion.

There are several reasons why W-4.9001 is incapable of bearing the legal significance and weight that the Commission has placed upon it. First, this paragraph emerged decades ago, in a very different time and context. In its language and descriptions, it reflects conventions of a time when same-sex unions presented little, if any, cultural concern or attention. ... Secondly, W-4.9001 is an introductory narrative for a distinctive, introductory section on marriage, outlining its biblical and theological characteristics as background to provisions of pastoral practice and nurture. ... To claim that this paragraph is primarily and intentionally legal in nature forces an artificial warp upon its evident narrative purpose. As a fourfold theological outline of Christian marriage in narrative form, in no way is it clear or obvious that it proposes regulatory imperative or legal intention. Certainly, it does not have the kind of language or format that the church has come to expect in definitive juridical statements, the kind of “shall” language that is common to our order in providing regulatory lines for boundaries of action or proscribed behavior.

This is all to say that, in cases such as this one, a determination of offense requires clear demonstration of a violation against Scripture or the Constitution, in which the terms of a mandate are unambiguous and expressly stated. In this case and in the other recent cases, it is strikingly significant to note the absence of arguments upon perceived biblical warrants or directly applicable mandates in our Constitution and the presence of mere definition-al bases.

In this case and the other recent decisions, my principal concern is that this Commission has forged a standard upon an extremely fragile provision, employing a strained interpretation that does not provide the necessary legal foundation for resolution of our dilemma or foster pastoral guidance in the life of the church. By relying so heavily on W-4.9001, the Commission has ruled upon convention rather than law. The definitive clarity that the church deserves and expects in this continuing and vexatious dispute awaits deeper foundational judgment as well as more precise legislation.

As of the time this overture is proposed (October 8, 2013), both the legal and ecclesial landscapes have continued to evolve, constantly increasing the number of clergy and congregations placed in the untenable conflict between current interpretations of this provision and their sense of pastoral call and obligation. Marriage equality is nationally recognized with the invalidation of the Defense of Marriage Act by the United States Supreme Court in 2013 and (as of September 2013) thirteen state governments (those of Massachusetts, California, Connecticut, Iowa, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Maine, Maryland, Washington, Delaware, Rhode Island, and Minnesota), along with the District of Columbia, the Coquille Indian Tribe, the Suquamish tribe, the Little Traverse Bay Bands of Odawa Indians, the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians, the lipay Nation of Santa Ysabel, and the Confederated Tribes of the Colville Reservation issue same-sex marriage licenses. Further, court rulings mandating marriage equality are on appeal in New Mexico and New Jersey. Rulings and legislative action are pending in a number of other states, including Illinois. If Illinois adopts marriage equality this year, a proposal supported by a majority of Illinoisans, more than 40 percent of the United States’ citizenry will live in jurisdictions recognizing marriage equality.

In addition, a teaching elder is primarily a servant of God and not primarily an agent of the state. When performing legal marriages, a teaching elder is both an agent of the state and a servant of the church. However, some teaching elders, being led by God and their consciences, and with the permission of their sessions, may feel called to choose to exercise their call as servants of the church in performing marriages that are not legal according to the state. Historically this has happened when teaching elders have refused to participate in state-led discrimination. Teaching elders have performed marriages for elderly couples who wanted the blessing of God and their church community without losing their pensions, on which they were dependent. Likewise, teaching elders have performed marriages for church members who do not have “legal” status according to the state for a variety of reasons but who seek God’s blessing and the support of their church community in their life partnerships. Decades ago, teaching elders who were exercising their freedom of conscience were performing marriages for inter-racial couples before the state considered them legal. Teaching elders are answerable to God and not to the state as long as they do not misrepresent the state.

Further, to continue to interpret these provisions as a definitive statement and assertion that “Christian marriage” can exist only between a man and a woman puts the PC(USA) in a position of great arrogance with regard to our sister denominations, particularly among our fellow mainline churches. Christian marriages between same-gendered couples are celebrated in Episcopal, UCC, American Baptist, and Lutheran churches (among others) every week in this country. To retain an interpretation that purports to say otherwise constitutes a denial of the faithfulness of our sisters and brothers in the faith that is simply not Presbyterian, and a violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of our status of full communion with our brothers and sisters in the Evangelical Lutheran Church and the United Church of Christ by denying the “Christian” character of the marriages they are celebrating.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of the Redwoods (with Additional Rationale)

This overture asks this General Assembly to exercise its constitutional authority to issue an authoritative interpretation of the Constitution that affirms the constitutional pastoral discretion of teaching elders to solemnize and celebrate marriages (and to extend pastoral care in marriage) without discrimination against same-gender couples and their families.

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) grants equal authority to issue “authoritative interpretations” of the Constitution to both (1) this General Assembly sitting as a legislative body, and (2) the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (the GAPJC). The GAPJC can authoritatively interpret the Constitution in the context of a case that comes before it. This biennial General Assembly similarly has the equal constitutional authority to authoritatively interpret the Constitution through its overture process. This authority includes the authority to withdraw previous authoritative interpretations issued by either previous General Assemblies or prior GAPJC decisions.

In a series of judicial decisions in disciplinary cases, the GAPJC has created restrictions on the pastoral discretion of pastors to participate in the marriages of same-gender couples, as those marriages are now legally recognized and celebrated in thirteen states. See Spahr v. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Case no. 220-08 (February 20, 2012). As explained at length in the dissents in those judicial decisions, those restrictions are not found anywhere in the plain language of the Constitution, but rather have been created and articulated through the power of “authoritative interpretation.” Moreover, those judicially created restrictions have caused great harm to same-gender couples and their families, and to pastors and congregations who seek to faithfully extend pastoral care in marriage to all families without discrimination.

This overture proposes an authoritative interpretation that affirms the constitutional pastoral discretion of teaching elders to solemnize and celebrate marriages (and to extend pastoral care in marriage) without discrimination against same-gender couples and their families. By recognizing this constitutional discretion and responsibility, the authoritative interpretation clarifies that the provisions of the Directory for Worship related to marriage—by their terms—do not prohibit a teaching elder/minister of Word and Sacrament from officiating at a marriage service of a same-gender couple. The overture seeks to provide clarity in response to disciplinary proceedings that have been brought against faithful teaching elders/ ministers of Word and Sacrament who have celebrated the marriages of same-gender couples, consistent with their constitutional responsi-
ciplinary proceedings have invoked W-4.9001 as a disciplinary offense, even though that section contains no mandatory or prohibitive language. The cost to the church is the prosecution—with no basis in the plain language of the Constitution—of pastors who are faithfully living into their responsibilities under the constitution and Gospel.

As a growing number of members of the GAPJC have indicated in dissenting opinions, the provisions of the Directory for Worship related to marriage are descriptive, and not prohibitive. “W-4.9001 is an introductory narrative for the whole section on marriage, outlining its biblical and theological characteristics as background to provisions of pastoral practice and nurture. Its content serves to establish a progression of four theological claims (gift, civil contract, covenant, commitment) as a foundation for the church’s general understanding of marriage” (see Southard v. Presbytery of Boston (February 7, 2011); Spahr v. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Case no. 220-08 (February 20, 2012)). They have further explained that “the language in [the marriage provisions] is not obviously legislative, in the sense of providing regulatory lines that define or proscribe behavior.”

Section W-4.9001 contains four descriptive statements describing marriage as a gift, a civil contract, a covenant, and a lifelong commitment. None of these descriptive statements contains or constitutes a prohibition or mandatory standard. Section W-4.9001 is neither a mandatory nor a prohibitive directive. Moreover, this section of the Directory for Worship does not mention or address the marriage of same-gender couples. Neither does it prohibit a minister of Word and Sacrament from celebrating a legally sanctioned marriage in a service of Christian worship.

Section W-4.9001 contains none of the language that the Book of Order instructs must be present to set forth a mandate or a prohibition. Because this principle is so fundamental, it is captured on the first pages of the Book of Order: “In this Book of Order (1) SHALL and IS TO BE/ARE TO BE signify practice that is mandated; (2) SHOULD signifies practice that is strongly recommended; (3) IS APPROPRIATE signifies practice that is commended as suitable; (4) MAY signifies practice that is permissible but not required” (Preface to the Book of Order [emphasis and caps in original]). Indeed, the GAPJC not long ago affirmed that the phrase “should not” in our polity “is not prohibitive” (Session of Second Presbyterian Church v. Eastern Oklahoma Presbytery, Remedial Case 217-5, at p. 4.)

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does assign to teaching elders/ministers of Word and Sacrament the responsibility for pastoral care, and repeatedly advocates and mandates inclusion and the full participation of all people in the life and care of the church. Prohibiting lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) women and men from celebrating their marriages in services of Christian worship cuts them off from the pastoral care of the community that is required by our faith and our Constitution. This overture asks the General Assembly to clarify that the plain language of the provisions of the Directory for Worship related to marriage (W-4.9001 and following) do not prohibit this pastoral care—and specifically, that they do not prohibit a teaching elder (also referred to as a minister of Word and Sacrament) from officiating at a marriage service of a same-gender couple, as the couple and their families seek to celebrate marriage as a gift from God honored in Christian community.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of Salem (with Additional Rationale)

The 220th General Assembly (2012) acknowledges that faithful Presbyterians earnestly seeking to follow Jesus Christ hold different views about what the Scriptures teach concerning the morality of committed, same-gender relationships.” Many PC(USA) pastors arrive at a faithful interpretation of Scripture that leads them to understand committed same-gender relationships not as sinful, but as loving, faithful, human relationships. Therefore, in states where marriage is legal for such couples, these pastors would want to honor those relationships before God and in the faith community without fear of prosecution.

The threat of prosecution effectively binds the conscience of these welcoming pastors. This authoritative interpretation does not change in the fact that no minister can be forced to participate; it allows for freedom of conscience (G-2.0105) whatever one’s interpretation.

Denying same gender couples, in states with marriage equality, the right to celebrate their commitment in the context of their faith community communicates that they are not entitled to the same rights and privileges as other members of the congregation.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of Santa Fe (with Additional Rationale)

This overture comes from the Presbytery of Santa Fe at an important time in the history of our state, as well as of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and of the nation. Beginning at the end of August 2013, eight counties in New Mexico began to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples, citing the equal protection clause of the state constitution. Within the first three months more than 1,700 same-sex couples in New Mexico were issued marriage licenses. On December 19, 2013, the New Mexico Supreme Court ruled unanimously that: “We hold that the State of New Mexico is constitutionally required to allow same-gender couples to marry and must extend to them the rights, protections, and responsibilities that derive from civil marriage under New Mexico law” (From the NMSC opinion written by Justice Edward Chavez). With this ruling, New Mexico became the seventeenth U.S. state with full civil marriage for same-sex couples.

There are, as of January 6, 2014, seventeen U.S. States, the District of Columbia, and six Native American tribal jurisdictions with same-sex marriage, as well as seventeen other countries. The rapid expansion of the number of states in which same-sex marriage is now legal has been accompanied by dramatic shifts in public opinion in support of same-sex marriage, as well as the U.S. Supreme Court’s overturning of key portions of the Defense of Marriage Act, and the extension of federally recognized marital rights to legally married same-sex couples across the country. The circumstances regarding the issue of civil marriage have, thus, changed radically from the status quo that existed when the PC(USA) Constitution was written, and when previous authoritative interpretations were issued.

As elsewhere across the U.S., the change in the civil law in our state (or, in its interpretation) has immediately confronted our pastors and churches with a dilemma. The issue of marriage is a pastoral issue for the church, rooted in our biblical and theological understandings. Across the country there are many members and friends of the church who have felt that they could not turn to their own pastors and faith communities in order to be married. They have felt constrained to turn to civil authorities and ministers of other denominations, often despite the desire of their pastor and church session to be able to minister to and with them in a public witness and blessing of their marital covenant. In other cases (Spahr, Southard, etc.) ministers who have acted in conscience to preside at the marriages of same-sex couples have faced judicial inquiries and disciplinary actions.

Section W-4.9001 of the Book of Order describes marriage as “a gift [of] God … to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family,” and as “a civil contract between a woman and a man.” The latter description, however, is no longer exclusively true. As already noted, in many jurisdictions the civil contract of marriage has now been extended to include... same-sex couples as well. Christian marriage is further described as a covenantal relationship “through which a man and a woman [hereafter referred to as ‘the couple’] are called to live … together before God their lives of discipleship.” The marriage service is described as being one in which “a lifelong commitment” is made by the couple, “publically witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.”

Ministers in our church (teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders) function as officers of the state as they conduct marriage services and oversee the signing and filing of the legal documentation. The Christian marriage covenant is a commmitment made before God by the couple, in the context of the community of faith. Ministers are responsible, among other duties, to “direct” the service of worship in which the marriage is celebrated (W-4.9003). They are also responsible to “provide for a discussion” with the couple concerning various aspects of marriage in relationship to both the legal requirements of the state and the privileges and responsibilities involved in the covenant of Christian marriage. Ministers have the discretion to decide for themselves whether or not to conduct a marriage service (W-4.9002). Such decisions are made on the basis of the minister’s discernment of the couples’ commitment, responsibility, maturity, and Christian understanding, and prayerfully informed and guided by the minister’s freedom of conscience in the interpretation of Scripture (W-4.9002, and G-2.0105).

In the matter of same-sex marriage, as in all matters of faith and practice, Presbyterians seek the Spirit’s guidance in understanding the witness of Scripture to the issues of our day. We also turn to the confessions of the church seeking guidance in their historical witness. Yet, as the confessions themselves acknowledge, these documents were the products of their day and time and do not necessarily speak directly to the matters now before us. (See Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.02–03, and 9.43.) The confessions speak descriptively, but not necessarily prescriptively.

We recognize that for many the understanding of marriage has now changed to include the marriage of same-sex couples. This is a position held in good conscience by many in the church, as well as in civil society, but not by many others.
Opinion is divided. We acknowledge that our current understandings of Scripture and tradition differ widely, as they have on other issues in past times. We also acknowledge that both opinions are rooted in sincere faith by those who hold them, and both are expressed in the living out of the gospel in our congregations and communities. We affirm that on either side of this issue our understandings are provisional, but, hopefully, also grounded in our earnest, prayerful, and mindful seeking of God’s will and guidance. It is not our desire to impose our views on one another, but, recognizing the great diversity of opinion that exists within the church at this time, to respect the freedom and honor the sincerely held views of all, even as we pray for a clearer discernment of God’s will in these matters.

Where charity and love abide, there God is found. From the beginning the church has struggled as it has encountered new peoples, times, and circumstances, with the issue of what is required of Christian disciples versus what is permitted in the freedom of the Gospel. (As in Acts, Galatians, etc.) This has always caused tensions within the covenant communities of disciples we are called to be, and the wisdom of the church has been to seek to balance commitment to the truth of God with mutual forbearance in love for those with whom we may disagree.

Concurrence to Item 10-03 from the Presbytery of Southern New England (with Additional Rationale)

The church is now in a state of disunity regarding same-gender marriage. Such disunity is costly to the church’s treasure, time, and more importantly, its witness to Jesus’s call to loving covenant.

During such a time, we must be humbly conscious of the work of the Holy Spirit through Christian conscience. Teaching and ruling elders and their congregations have come prayerfully to recognize that some faithful same-gender couples are asking to be held to the same standards of mutual love and commitment as heterosexual couples. To deny the availability of Christian marriage for otherwise qualified same-gender couples is to reject their equal inheritance through Christ. That rejection denies our traditional belief that marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind.

Additionally, teaching elders who act in good conscience and officiate at the weddings of same-gender couples they deem ready for Christian marriage find they may be charged with the offense of violating their ordination vows for an act that the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) has said was not clearly prohibited when those vows were taken. In the current situation, compliant teaching elders, sessions, and congregations may find themselves to be denying the common humanity that is at the very focus of church life and worship.

The GAPJC has acknowledged that existing interpretations have exacerbated disunity and has requested guidance.

The proposed authoritative interpretation ensures that while the church is in this period of discernment and disagreement over same-gender marriage, teaching elders officiating over same-gender marriages where such marriages are permitted by law can act in good conscience, and that faithful and honest dialogue can happen in a context of pastoral care rather than chilling prosecution and judicial action.

Throughout Scripture marriage is used as a metaphor for Christian unity, for God’s love and covenant with us, for the union of Christ and the church. May the church act to make this metaphor ever more evident.
In long-standing Christian tradition, civil authority has played a primary role in the regulation of marriage. Christians in the Reformed Tradition view marriage not as a sacrament mediated by the church but as a blessing that two people seek on a contract they are entering under auspices of the state. This blessing is a moment of great joy in the church and in the lives of those on whom it is conferred, but Christian marriage does not change the status of those two people. Marriages that are not blessed by the church are nevertheless recognized in Presbyterian churches.

Because of the integral connection between civil and Christian marriage, the church must contend with the fact that states have passed legislation or are operating under judicial rulings that make legal marriage equality an option for two people of the same gender. Since March 2010, the District of Columbia, and since January 2013, the State of Maryland, have been allowing two people of the same gender to marry. Thirteen states, the District of Columbia, several counties in New Mexico, and five Native American tribes allow same-gender marriage. This complicates pastoral care options. The issue comes to a head in the decision about whether teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders will officiate at marriage ceremonies of two people who have legally obtained a marriage license and whether the session will permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Although some pastors in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have declined to perform such marriages in keeping with their conscience, many others are caught in an untenable position: their conscience tells them to exercise their pastoral responsibility and perform the marriage but the church tells them to fear prosecution. Such prosecutions have already placed tremendous financial burden on presbyteries, diminishing the church’s ability to effectively evangelize and perform necessary mission work.

The issue is critical because worship is the central context of pastoral care for Christians. In our order for worship, we listen to the Word, proclaim the Word, and respond to the Word. Responding to the Word is a demonstration of the love of God for God’s people.

“The response to the proclamation of the Word is expressed in an affirmation of faith and commitment. … Response to the Word also involves acts of commitment and recognition. … acts of commitment which may appropriately be included as response to the Word are (a) Christian marriage ….” (W-3.3501, W-3.3502, W-3.3503).

The church has defined marriage, first, as “... a gift God has given to all humankind …” (W-4.9001) and at the same time said, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001). In thirteen states, the District of Columbia, several counties in New Mexico, and five Native American tribes, this civil definition is no longer true. The 219th General Assembly (2012) Advisory Committee on the Constitution stated,

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008,

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community … (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1169)

Teaching elders and sessions need the General Assembly’s assurance of their pastoral discretion to provide the care that their members require. This is based on the same principle as W-4.9002b, which provides that pastors are free, as their judgment dictates, not to officiate at marriages their members and others are contracting. In the absence of mandatory language in the Book of Order that would prohibit a service of Christian marriage for any two people who are legally permitted to marry, the assembly should give such assurance in the form of the proposed authoritative interpretation. The authoritative interpretation will prevent deep grief to church members who might otherwise be denied the pastoral care of the church; it will protect pastors and sessions from judicial challenge for exercising their pastoral responsibilities; in the spirit of mutual forbearance widely urged in recent years by General Assemblies and their task forces, it will promote the peace, unity, and purity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 10-03

Advice on Item 10-03—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) disapprove Item 10-03

This overture proposes an authoritative interpretation which would allow the exercise of pastoral discretion and freedom of conscience in conducting a marriage service for any couple as permitted by the “laws of the place where the couple seeks to be married.” It suggests an interpretation contrary to the clear statement of W-4.9000.

Section W-4.9001 and related citations (W-4.9002a, W-4.9004, W-4.9006) limit marriage to couples who are “a woman and a man.” Because these statements are clear and unambiguous, they can not be interpreted in a manner that is inconsistent with their plain and ordinary meaning.
The Book of Order is not based upon state and civil law, but the church’s understanding of Scripture and Reformed theology. As noted in Southard v Presbytery of Boston (GAPJC 2012, 220-02), “While the PCUSA is free to amend its definition of marriage, a change in state law does not amend the Book of Order.”

Freedom of conscience is a foundational principle of the PC(USA) (G-2.0105) but must be exercised within certain bounds. The exercise of freedom of conscience in and of itself is not necessarily a violation of polity or an obstruction of constitutional governance. Such freedom of conscience, however, is not freedom of action. All persons in ordered ministry have a duty to fulfill constitutionally mandated responsibilities.

If it is the will of the assembly to change the definition of marriage, such a change is better accomplished by amendment of W-4.9000 rather than by authoritative interpretation.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of Item 10-03.

A. Introduction

In our Advice and Counsel (A&C) memorandum on Item 10-02, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy provides a five-part affirmation of the constitutional change in the description of marriage proposed in that item. This A&C provides a complementary affirmation of the authoritative interpretation proposed by this overture. The authoritative interpretation (AI) proposed would not change the constitutional definition of marriage and hence would not “short circuit” consideration of the constitutional change Item 10-02 recommends.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) is the body elected by the General Assembly to provide analysis and recommendations for action of matters Christian conscience affecting the church’s engagement with the world. The ACSWP and its predecessors in both denominations have addressed matters of marriage, family, and human sexuality on a regular basis starting in 1970. As the committee’s mandate directs, it considers the biblical, theological, and empirical dimensions of social challenges in light of previous General Assembly policy (See Item 11-Info for more on ACSWP). At the same time, because the matters before Assembly Committee 10 are also polity matters, we also quote below from the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The ACSWP approaches the matter of the authoritative interpretation as a justice concern as well as a theological and pastoral matter. As in the case of a constitutional change that would support marriage equality, the committee does not believe that the extension of the benefits of marriage to additional categories of people causes a loss to those already enjoying legal marriage, and in fact believes that the biblical core reflecting God’s incarnational love points toward greater inclusion.

B. Polity Considerations

In 2012, both ACSWP and the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) did not endorse specific overtures. The ACSWP at that time advised further study while noting that civil or “holy” unions, permitted by the General Assembly, were not providing full equality and legal standing for same-gender couples. Further, the distinction between marriage, which was to create a new status for the couple, and the blessing of a civil union that existed prior to that blessing, was fast eroding. In fact, as many pastors know, many Presbyterians and Americans generally believe that marriage is a sacrament, despite Calvin’s teaching that it is an ordinance designed primarily for companionship within the framework of covenant fidelity. The need for equal inclusion has only increased since that time in our view.

The advice of the ACC in 2012 was contained in a comprehensive memorandum that covered both constitutional changes and authoritative interpretation. By not taking a position, but evaluating the various options, the ACC made it clear that it preferred the constitutional change route but acknowledged that AI’s had been used and in fact, by distinguishing sharply between blessing of civil unions and marriages, had added elements to the interpretation of the Directory of Worship section W-4.900 that were not there previously. Authoritative interpretations, in fact, complement the constitutional process and, in the case of instant Item 10-03, are designed to reduce conflict and costly judicial process while forcing no pastor to violate his or her conscience.

The ACSWP quotes here from the 2012 ACC memorandum:

The church has defined marriage, first, as “a civil contract between a woman and a man.” In 1991, the General Assembly adopted an authoritative interpretation which said, “since a Christian marriage performed in accordance with the Directory for Worship can only involve a covenant between a woman and a man, it would not be proper for a minister of the Word and Sacrament to perform a same-gender union ceremony that the minister determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony.”

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008:
The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254). There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals.

The enactment of laws allowing the marriage of same-gender couples sets in relief whether the defining variable for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s definition of marriage is the civil contract or the gender of the parties. The traditional assumption that marriage is a civil contract between a man and a woman can no longer be taken for granted.

[... section not quoted]

Each of the overtures seeking authoritative interpretation has some inconsistency with previous authoritative interpretations. All are premised on a rationale based on the Preface of the Directory for Worship that “…this directory also uses language about worship that is simply descriptive.” Item 13-10 posits that since there is no mandatory language (“shall,” “is to be,” “are to be”) in sentences describing a couple as a man and a woman, it is not mandated that the couple be a man and a woman. Previous authoritative interpretations (e.g. Spahr) appear to be based on the language of the Preface that the language “between a man and a woman” “… set standards and presents norms for the conduct of worship in the life of congregations and … councils.”

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

It is the view of ACSWP that any AI would be appropriately “insufficient,” though not necessarily problematic, and that the concurrences to Item 10-03, particularly those from the Presbyteries of Chicago and Western Reserve, provide constructive ways forward.

C. Theological and Ethical Considerations:

The overtures under consideration here support the church’s commitment to civil equality and nondiscrimination. They emphasize the new importance of expressing and extending that equality into the church’s worship and pastoral care in those states that have legislated marital equality. In doing so, they recognize the complementarity that has long existed in the Reformed Tradition between the role of the state in legalizing marriage and the role of the clergy who pronounce a couple married and sign their state license. None of these items would compel pastors to officiate at same-gender marriages in violation of their conscience. None of these items would apply to states that have not legalized same-gender marriage, and none presumes to restrict a theology of marriage for the church, although the General Assembly has in the past focused on such theology through the recommended forms of marriage services.

The ACSWP points to its’ A&C on Item 10-02 for a fuller presentation of past church policies, particularly that on Changing Families (2004), which addressed factors affecting family life. We would only note that additional recommendations to support families were adopted by the General Assembly in the 2012 report, World of Hurt, Word of Life, which called for economic reconstruction based on communion values.

In light of the range of theological views in the church and the continuing movement toward marriage equality in the culture, ACSWP encourages commissioners to adopt an Authoritative Interpretation that may permit the household of faith to grow, particularly among younger adults. The alternatives, including protracted litigation, are less desirable. Perhaps it would even be fair to transpose the statement quoted from Gamaliel in Acts 5:39 about the early church’s growth: “But if it is of God, you will not be able to overthrow them. You might even be found opposing God!” Certainly not every current in the culture is “of God,” but in this area of life even the empirical data seem to suggest that the church extend the benefits of marriage.

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000 to Affirm Pastoral Discretion in Performing Marriage Ceremonies—From the Presbytery of East Iowa.

The Presbytery of East Iowa respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to issue the following authoritative interpretation of the Book of Order, W-4.9000:

“Section W-4.9000 of the Book of Order describes marriage as a lifelong union between a man and a woman. Historically, teaching elders* have been entrusted to decide, on a case-by-case basis, whether to officiate at the marriage of a particular couple (W-4.9002b). In the course of premarital preparation, teaching elders have assessed each couple’s capabilities, intentions, and readiness to be married. Teaching elders have exercised discretion and judgment in various ways (for example, in the cases of divorced persons seeking remarriage; interfaith and interracial couples; and, in more recent years, in the blessing of same-gender relationships). Teaching elders have the pastoral responsibility to assess the capabilities, intentions, and readiness to be married of any couple as permitted by the laws of the place where the couple is seeking to be married. Exercising their discretion, teaching elders may conduct a marriage service for any such couple in the place where the community gathers for worship, if approved by the session; or such other place as may be suitable for a service of Christian worship. In no case shall any teaching elder’s conscience be bound to conduct any marriage service for any couple except by his or her understanding of the Word, and the leading of the Holy Spirit. The authoritative interpretation of this section by the 203rd General Assembly (1991) (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395, paragraphs 21.124–128), and the subsequent authoritative interpretations of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission relying upon it, are withdrawn and replaced with this authoritative interpretation.

*As in other places in the Directory for Worship, the use of “teaching elders” in this paragraph should be understood to include ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service.

Rationale

Marriage is no longer a civil contract

Christians in the Reformed Tradition view marriage not as a sacrament bestowed by the church but as a blessing that two people seek on a contract they are entering under auspices of the state. The church has defined marriage, first, as “… a gift God has given to all humankind …” (W-4.9001) and at the same time said, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” [W-4.9001]. In at least fourteen states and the District of Columbia, this civil definition is no longer true.

Our current polity assumes interpretation

In the case of the Reverend Laurie McNeill, tried for the offense of being married to her female spouse (Newark v. McNeill, Disciplinary Case 221-02), the Presbytery of Newark Permanent Judicial Commission (PPJC), acquitted McNeill of the charges against her and declared:

If, as the Prosecution contended, W-4.9001 set mandatory standards which any PCUSA ordained officer or member must follow in order for his or her marriage to be a marriage in the eyes of the PCUSA, then any “marriage” which is contrary to any of the provisions of W-4.9001 (and its companion provisions W-4.9002–4.9005), even as between heterosexuals, would be an offense. In particular, the third and fourth sentences would have to be read to require not only that the marriage is between a man and a woman but that it is also between two Christians and that it be acknowledged by the “community of faith.” If the “woman and man” language is mandatory, then the “for Christians” and “publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith” provisions also must be mandatory. There is nothing in the text which makes one mandatory and one not mandatory.

Immediate relief is needed for Iowa pastors

Since April 2009, Iowa has been allowing two people of the same gender to marry. This complicates pastoral care options for Iowa pastors. Although some Iowa pastors in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have declined to perform such marriages in keeping with their conscience, many others are caught in an untenable position: their conscience tells them to exercise pastoral responsibility and perform the marriage but the church tells them to fear prosecution. Such prosecutions have already placed tremendous financial burden on presbyteries, diminishing the church’s ability to effectively evangelize and perform necessary mission work.

Teaching elders and sessions need the General Assembly’s assurance of their pastoral discretion to provide the care that their members require. In the absence of mandatory language in the Book of Order that would prohibit a service of Christian marriage for any two people who are legally permitted to marry, the assembly should give such assurance in the form of the proposed authoritative interpretation.

Please see the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns Advice and Counsel on Item 10-03:

This overture asks the General Assembly to approve an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 describing the rights and responsibilities of pastors in states in which civil unions or marriages of same-sex couples are permitted by law. The overture cites Book of Order statements noting that a marriage ceremony is a type of worship service that a pastor has freedom of conscience to conduct. Pastors, after examination of the couple, guided by scripture and with agreement of session (if the ceremony were to be held in the church), have the discretion and freedom to conduct any service of marriage.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns is committed to eliminating the patriarchy that persists today within the church and society. God’s justice, as we have come to understand it through the teachings of Jesus Christ, recognizes the equality of all God’s children, each of whom is made in God’s image. Providing this authoritative interpretation will effectively grant pastors and sessions the freedom of conscience to care for couples of like gender who desire the affirmation of the church and commitments required of Christian marriage, treating them as the equals they are in God’s eyes.

On Amending W-4.9001, Christian Marriage—From the Presbytery of Midwest Hanmi.

The Presbytery of Midwest Hanmi overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall W-4.9001 be amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end of that section: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“W-4.9001 Christian Marriage

“Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

“For the purpose of God’s mission, presbyteries and sessions may define marriage as a civil contract between two persons within the boundary of the state law.”

Rationale

1. Scripture, the Word written, is the most solid foundation for bearing testimony to Jesus Christ, the living Word. The church has maintained important traditions of the church and thus must maintain them based on the Word of God (F-1.01, F-1.0203, F-2.04, F-2.05, F-3.0107, W-1.1004).
2. Reformed churches must share the love of Jesus Christ to all people with their contemporary cultures and languages while they are continually reformed (F-1.0301, F-1.0302c, F-1.0401, F-1.0403, F-2.01, F-2.02, G-1.0302, W-1.2005, W-1.2006).

3. Though the theological interpretation of Scripture may be diverse, it should not contribute to the division and confusion of the church (G-2.0105).

4. Church leaders must govern the churches of God with freedom of conscience (F-3.0101, G-2.0105).

5. Congregations engage in the mission of God in their particular contexts. Thus session and presbyteries determine standards of ordination for their elders (F-3.0102, F-3.0202, G-1.0101, G-2.0104b).

6. Though the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) honors civil contracts, every state has different opinions on them.

7. Though the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should be open for individuals to lead Christian lives with freedom of conscience, it should also preserve its faith, heritage, and theology. Though the church should seek to embrace everyone, this must be done for the benefit of all of the communities of the people of God (F-1.0302a, F-3.0101, F-3.0102).

8. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is currently losing a lot of members. Though all the congregations in other mainline denominations are losing their members, we cannot deny the fact that the drastic decrease of members in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has resulted from theological debates about marriage within our denomination.

9. In order to amend the confessional documents that are the most fundamental criteria of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) theology, proposed amendments should receive the approval in writing of at least two-thirds of presbyteries. Therefore, we must deeply reconsider to determine the definition of marriage that influences the confession of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with the approval of half of the presbyteries (G-6.03d).

10. We suggest that sessions and presbyteries, councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), should determine the definition of marriage so that congregations can recognize diversity among us, and each congregation and presbytery can maintain its own faith and traditions and bear witness to the Gospel of Jesus Christ in their own particular contexts (F-1.0302, F-1.0304, F-1.0403, F-1.0404, F-3.0101, F-3.0104, F-3.0105, F-3.0107).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 10-05

Advice on Item 10-05—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 10-05.

Item 10-05 proposes to amend W-4.9001 by adding a new paragraph at the end of that section: “For the purpose of God’s mission, presbyteries and sessions may define marriage as a civil contract between two persons within the boundary of the state law.”

The addition of this paragraph would allow presbyteries and sessions to define marriage in a manner that is inconsistent with sections of the Book of Order.

- W-4.9001 Christian Marriage: “… Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. …” (the paragraph preceding the proposed addition).

- W-4.9002a Preparing for Marriage: “In preparation for the marriage service, the teaching elder shall provide for a discussion with the man and the woman concerning … ”

- W-4.9004 Form and Order of Service: “… The man and the woman shall declare their intention to enter into Christian marriage and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness. …”

- W-4.9006 Recognizing Civil Marriage: “… The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of the vows by the husband and wife, and the public declaration by the teaching elder reflect the fact that the woman and man are already married to one another according to the laws of the state.”

The Book of Order is based upon the church’s understanding of Scripture and Reformed theology. Presbyteries and sessions are currently not authorized to take action in conflict with the Constitution. There is an inherent conflict with allowing lower councils to take actions or make decisions that are contrary to the Constitution. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it is the will of the assembly to change the definition of marriage, the assembly should amend the language in W-4.9000 and related citations.
If the intent of the overture is to permit councils to have the ability to allow or refuse to allow same-gender marriages, it is not explicitly stated in the overture.

On Rescinding the 1991 Authoritative Interpretation Concerning Teaching Elders Performing Marriages for Same-Gender Couples and Sessions Permitting Such Ceremonies in their Facilities—from the Presbytery of New Castle.

The Presbytery of New Castle overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to revoke and repeal its 1991 Authoritative Interpretation (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395, paragraphs 21.124–128, Re.91-23)* concerning teaching elders/ministers of the Word and Sacrament performing marriage ceremonies involving same-gender couples and prohibiting sessions from permitting the use of church facilities for this purpose.

Rationale

There now are twelve states and the District of Columbia where same-gender marriage is legal. Two of these states are among the nation’s largest: California and New York. Delaware and Maryland, which comprise New Castle Presbytery, are two of these as well, both of which legalized same-gender marriage in 2013. It seems clear that more states will join this group in the coming years. But some will not.

The United States Supreme Court, in United States v. Windsor, ruled that the Defense of Marriage Act of 1996, which allowed states where same-gender marriage was illegal to discriminate against such persons, was unconstitutional.

The legalization of same-gender marriage in an increasing number of jurisdictions puts Presbyterian pastors and sessions in a bind. Clearly, many local Presbyterian congregations have gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered members. Pastors probably feel it most because of their natural instinct to minister to their flock. They may be distraught when a same-gender couple, who are church members, come to them and ask the pastor to officiate at their legal wedding. Session elders feel it because loyal and legitimate church members only wish to be married in their own church, but cannot under the 1991 authoritative interpretation (AI).

Repeal of this AI will not affect churches and Presbyterians in jurisdictions where same-gender marriage remains illegal. This overture does not affect the definition of marriage found in the Directory for Worship.

On the other hand, retention of this authoritative interpretation invites defiance by our teaching elders. Any such defiance invites complaints under the Rules of Discipline. At one level, adjudicating such complaints is a waste of time and resources for the presbytery. Worse, it risks a plethora of presbytery-level permanent judicial commission decisions that will waste the time and money of synods and the General Assembly.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 10-06

Advice on Item 10-06—from the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 10-06.

In 1991, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution was asked to provide an opinion on the use of church facilities, and whether a minister is in violation of the Book of Order with regard to same-sex unions. The ACC advised that there was no mention in the Book of Order of same-sex unions (ceremonies). The committee further advised that if a session considered a ceremony the equivalent of marriage, it “would not be sanctioned” under the Book of Order because of the definition of marriage at W-4.9001. The ACC further advised that

- the session was responsible for the use of the church buildings and facilities, so it should not allow the use of the facilities if the session determined the ceremony was the same as a marriage ceremony; and

- Christian marriage performed in accordance with the Directory for Worship can only involve a covenant between a man and a woman, and it is not proper for a minister to perform a same sex union that the minister determines the same as marriage. (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 395)

In 1994, in response to a request regarding pastoral authority in performing marriages, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution issued the following advice:

... the General Assembly has also been reluctant to limit the pastoral ministry of individual ministers or sessions as they seek to nurture their members in accordance with the church’s directives . . .

... in the end each and every request for pastoral blessing needs to be considered within its own context. (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 186, paragraph 21.012)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a long tradition of trusting pastors and sessions with careful and prayerful discernment about what constitutes faithful worship and compassionate pastoral care appropriate to the circumstances of their members and communities. For the peace, unity and purity of the church, it is vital that this tradition be reaffirmed. (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 441)

In 2000, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution was asked to provide advice on a proposed authoritative interpretation affirming the rights of pastors and sessions to determine what appropriate pastoral care and worship activities shall take place in and around the life of a congregation.

The ACC’s advice quoted the 1991 authoritative interpretation: “Pastors and sessions are free to determine what appropriate pastoral care and worship activities shall take place in and around the life a congregation. Even so, they are bound by the Constitution and obliged to follow it” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 442).

The deletion of the 1991 Authoritative Interpretation would remove the guidance it provides regarding the permissibility of teaching elders performing same sex union ceremonies and sessions giving approval to the same.

The deletion of the 1991 authoritative interpretation would not change the definition of marriage in W-4.9000.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 10-06.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns is committed to eliminating the patriarchy that persists today within the church and society. God’s justice, as we have come to understand it through the teachings of Jesus Christ, recognizes the equality of all God’s children, each of whom is made in God’s image. Patriarchal views define those not conforming to certain gender roles as somehow less than human and therefore not worthy of the pastoral care that Christian marriage provides to heterosexual committed and loving couples.

Rescinding this authoritative interpretation will effectively grant pastors and sessions the freedom of conscience to care for couples of like gender who desire the affirmation of the church and commitments required of Christian marriage, treating them as the equals they are in God’s eyes.

On Creating a Task Force to Identify Common Ground and Reconcilable Differences with Respect to Same-Gender Marriage—from Eastern Korean Presbytery.

The Eastern Korean Presbytery respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to do the following:

1. Create a task force, consisting of no less than twelve elders with diverse theological, racial, ethnic, and cultural backgrounds to formulate tangible recommendations to the 223rd General Assembly (2018), with responsibilities to

   a. identify common ground and reconcilable differences in biblical understanding and confessional interpretation with respect to same-gender marriage;
b. study the nature, scope, and controversies of the same-gender marriage laws legalized in certain states;

c. assess the impact of such laws and related sociopolitical changes on the ministry and mission of the church;

d. provide the local presbyteries and congregations with theological guidelines for their ministry, as to understand and apply the concepts and functions of family and parenting based on biblical norms and ethics; and

e. bring forth practical and futuristic recommendations that would not only strengthen and promote unity within the church, but also solidify ministries and missions with ecumenical partners locally and globally.

2. Direct all councils to take no actions on the same-gender marriage issue until such recommendations are received, discussed, and disposed by the General Assembly.

Rationale

The 220th General Assembly (2012), having received conflicting reports from the study of civil union and Christian marriage*, directed the whole church to “enter into a season of serious study and discernment concerning [the] meaning of Christian marriage,” in “a desire to promote the peace, unity, and purity of the church,” and it is now time to gather our wisdom and search together for a concrete, practical and unifying resolution.

In a short period of time a dramatic shift in our biblical interpretation and polity application concerning human sexuality has caused confusion, division, and resentment, resulting in weakening, rather than strengthening of the ministry and mission of the church. Many presbyteries and local congregations are experiencing membership loss, poor morale, and increasing financial burdens as a result.

Several overtures have already been advanced in an effort to change the definition of marriage, while social debates, as well as complex legal maneuvers, continue, and theologians, philosophers, and lawmakers are yet to offer boundaries for acceptance of and approval for the new cultural development.

We recognize that divisive actions are often chosen through the means of offensive drive in the midst of confrontation, rather than prayerful search for a common ground, which we repent as our confession warns us against “the human tendency to idolatry and tyranny” (Book of Order, F-2.05).

The burgeoning of sociopolitical debate on and hastened implementation of same-gender marriage inevitably invites criticism of incongruity with biblical and theological understandings, which causes further confusion and disunity for all engaged in the pastoral and public ministries, and ultimately threatens the already fragile goals of peace, unity, and purity of the body of Christ.

While it is important for effective ministry to adapt to changing needs in our society and culture, it is imperative for the church to discern and prophetically declare the role and function of each Christian and congregation in applying Christ’s teachings to each changing need. In the course, it is not surprising that apostolic teachings are found often incompatible with the prevailing cultural norms. Thus, in attempting contextualization to the rapidly changing sociocultural milieu, we need to recalibrate our understanding, as we endeavor to be transformed through spiritual renewal, rather than conforming to prevailing culture.

As we strive toward the goal of oneness in Christ, the church ought to invigorate her efforts to uncover common theological understandings of human sexuality, marriage, family, and parenting.

Although recent denominational studies often emphasize apparent differences in biblical understandings of marriage in different times and cultural settings, it is fundamentally critical for us to grasp a clear sense of marriage and family, as they reflect God’s character, perfect harmony and unity, the Triune God, and the revelation of the great mystery of Christ’s love for the church. Marriage and family are the central human relationships that God has gifted each person to achieve the embodiment of Christ in our daily walk.

Society in general and people in younger generations in particular expect the church to provide a practical guideline with persuasive rationale that they can apply in their search for God’s purpose in the confusing world and directing themselves towards godly lifestyles.

Throughout church history, Christians have struggled to discover new answers in the midst of apparent disparity between “the transformation of society by seeking justice and living in obedience to the Word of God” (Book of Order, F-2.05), which in our times has been epitomized in the understanding of human sexuality, marriage and family.

It is of critical importance for presbyteries, sessions, and elders to develop strategies to adequately nurture, support, and embrace God’s people in heterogeneous cultural backgrounds and theological orientations (Book of Order, F-1.04, G-3.0301). Clear understanding and discernment are particularly important for presbyteries whose boundaries include states and localities that have different societal and legal demands for same-gender marriage.
In short, it is not time to decide the church’s direction by vote, but to engage in serious and prayerful study aiming to develop a definitive guideline that would not only unify the church, but also promote effective ministry to the changing, confusing world.

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 10-07.

This overture proposes a four-year study of same-gender marriage by a task force with twelve theologically diverse elders. The task force would report to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

While the intent is seeking unity on this topic, the ACWC does not believe theological diversity is all that is needed to resolve this issue within the church. Specific skills for evaluating gender concerns, theological issues, social and psychological costs, legal implications, and the nature of church membership are required.

As the rationale for this overture notes, cultural norms, civil society’s laws, and even church practice have been changing rapidly with regards to the rights of same-gender couples. At this rate, the completion of an exhaustive and expensive four-year study may find the results and recommendations are no longer an issue for church and society. In addition, such a study only prolongs the inequities and pastoral struggle created by our current policies.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns therefore advises the overture be disapproved.

Comment on Item 10-07—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly requests that commissioners and advisory delegates carefully consider any items of business that would raise the per capita rate. The COGA made a commitment to bring no increase to the per capita rate to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by making significant reductions in the per capita budgets, which included reductions in staff. We would ask that other means be found within existing committee structures to accomplish the same task.

On Peace Discernment—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

2. Thank the many Presbyterians who accepted the invitation of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to participate in church-wide discernment on peace and violence in the light of the witness of Jesus Christ using the process and materials in the interim report.

3. Recognize God’s call to the church to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response to the challenges of violence, terror, and war.

4. Affirm our responsibility as people of faith to earnestly seek effective, loving, nonviolent responses to conflict in our daily lives, in our communities, and in our world.

5. Dedicate ourselves to respond to acts and threats of violence with ministries of healing, peacemaking, prayer, and reconciliation.

Rationale

The Peace Discernment Steering Team was formed at the direction of the 219th General Assembly (2010) to design and implement a broadly participatory process to “seek clarity as to God’s call to the church to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response to the challenges of violence, terror, and war” and to “identify, explore, and nurture new approaches to active peacemaking and nonviolence” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 68). The interim report, “Encountering the Gospel of Peace Anew: An Invitation to Discernment and Witness,” was developed by the team (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 1333ff). The 220th General Assembly (2012) encouraged congregational, presbytery, college, and seminary groups to engage in the process described in the report.

Participants in these study groups have found the process compelling and transformative. Presbyterians are eager to continue to discern God’s will for a peaceful world and to seek new nonviolent approaches to conflict resolution.

In its call for a comprehensive commitment to nonviolence in all aspects of personal and community life, this overture builds on and expands the rich tradition of support for peacemaking in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

In its call for a comprehensive commitment to nonviolence in all aspects of personal and community life, this overture builds on and expands the rich tradition of support for peacemaking in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

In four Hudson River Presbytery congregations, their combined high school youth group participated in Lenten studies of peace discernment, resulting in a remarkable document written entirely by the young adults. We have found it instructive for our congregations, and commend it to the broader church:
Causes of Violence

When people turn to violence, it is usually out of ignorance, fear, instinct, or anger. We believe we need to find a way to address these causes of violence before they become acts of violence. Acting in the moment is not enough; we must solve the root problem or risk it happening again. We must also address what happens after the moment of violence—if we don’t make a change for the better, we are allowing violence to continue. Violence is based on hate and fear, and hate and fear are based on ignorance. With better education, we feel we can both help to stop the hatred and fear, and redirect it into more constructive expressions. The fact that violence is glorified in our society is an obstacle to peace, but this can also be changed through education. People often see violence as their only means of expression, but they must learn that there are more effective ways to get their voices heard. Violence leads to violence; intelligence leads to intelligence, and love leads to love. We must spread what we wish to see more of in the world.

Responses to Violence

We recognize that self defense is not the same as aggression, but also know that even in protection, violence is not the best solution. We also recognize that sometimes violence is a necessary response, but should not be our first or only response. We sometimes need to be reminded that violence or inaction are not our only two choices, and to consider other options before acting, both as individuals, as a church, and as a nation. Nonviolent actions have proven to be more effective in achieving change than fighting back. Turning to violence can be too easy, and though non-violence is hard, its reward is greater. Violence is based on hatred and fear, but nonviolence is based on love.

On Power

We acknowledge the difference between power from within—power of will, of conviction, of love—and power from without—power over others, and being in control. Inner strength of conviction and morals can be a powerful source of inspiration to bring about change. Love is Jesus’ power and is one of the most powerful forces in the world. Power over others is different than power over yourself. Using power to frighten or intimidate and restrict or bind others is not just. Power from within tends to be a positive force, but power over others tends to be a negative force.

Can We Justify Violence?

We need to be able to see how quickly we become the evil we are trying to fight. Killing our enemies just makes us the new enemies; we become as bad as the people we are fighting. We know that the means do not justify the ends and using violence can never lead to true peace, even with the best of intentions.

Questions Exploring Violence in Our Society

We question how to live peaceful lives if others do not. Where is the line between being peaceful and being passive? In what ways can we defend and protect ourselves without resorting to violence? How can we find the strength to live in a way that contradicts society? We look for these answers in Jesus, but they are not easy answers.

Peace is a long but necessary journey, and one that we must be willing to take together.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 11-01 be approved as amended: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

“2. Thank the many Presbyterians who accepted the invitation of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to participate in church-wide discernment on peace and violence in the light of the witness of Jesus Christ using the process and materials in the interim report.

“3. [Recognize God’s call to the church] [Recommend that presbyteries engage in the next stage of the discernment process to consider what it would mean for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response to the challenges of violence, terror, and war, in contrast to the church’s current “just peacemaking” overall approach].

“4. Affirm our responsibility as people of faith to [earnestly] seek effective, loving, nonviolent responses to conflict in our daily lives, in our communities, and in our world.

The Advisory Committee believes that most Christians could support these recommendations, though they would likely differ about what it would mean to say that God calls “the church to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response.” The commitment behind this overture is admired, but in its original language it preempts the second stage of the discernment process that is designed to go to the presbyteries, if the commissioners approve the recommendations of “Risking Peace in a Violent World,” Item 11-11. In other words, unamended, this overture would commit the General Assembly to a position in favor of nonviolence that has not been considered in the presbyteries and which, to judge from Presbyterian Panel survey data, is not necessarily the “fundamental” response of most Presbyterians today.

The rationale to the overture comes close to defining nonviolence as the only legitimate stance for Christians. “In its call for a comprehensive commitment to nonviolence in all aspects of personal and community life, this overture builds on and expands the rich tradition of support for peacemaking in the Presbyterian Church (USA)” [italics added].

The word, “fundamental,” indeed may be accurate to the overall witness of the New Testament and the example of Jesus Christ, a matter that the third affirmation proposed in Item 11-11 seeks to test. Also the word, “fundamental,” need not be understood as making nonviolence “mandatory in all circumstances,” although “comprehensive” would suggest that.

While the PC(USA) does have a rich tradition of peacemaking, it has accepted that some violence, under certain circumstances, may be, tragically, justifiable as a last resort to protect the innocent, advance justice, maintain order, and uphold the rule of law. The fine additional rationale provided by the young adults in four congregations of Hudson River Presbytery seems to agree with the proposed amendments: “We also recognize that sometimes violence is a necessary response, but should not be our first or only response.”

In recommending support of this overture, as amended, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy agrees with its proponents that nonviolence a key question for Christians, particularly as our species—and all species—face challenges of climate change that no weapons or warfare are likely to solve.

On Turning Attention to the Plight of the Church That Is Suffering Due to Sectarian Violence and Persecution in Egypt and Other Parts of the World—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh.

The Presbytery of Pittsburgh overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct our attention to the plight of the church of Jesus Christ that is suffering due to [maltreatment,] sectarian violence, and persecution in Egypt, [Iraq, Syria, Iran, Palestine, Israel, N. Korea, Pakistan, India, Central African Republic, Sri Lanka,] and other parts of the world. In [so] directing [such] attention to this plight, we call upon the PC(USA) to be a catalyst that calls all Christians [in the United States and] across the globe to unite in support and prayer for our brothers and sisters in Christ who are suffering.

This support should be reflected in direct interaction with the persecuted [and beleaguered] church[es] through means not limited to but inclusive of:

[•] [1.] [Refuge and] [Showing] hospitality [to Christian brothers and sisters who have come to the United States as refugees];

[•] [2.] Mediation with civil authorities and local governmental representatives [for adequate services to all refugees in the United States];

[3. Sharing information and coordinating concern with other churches through ecumenical bodies, in consultation with partners in the Middle East and other areas of sectarian tension;]

[4. Directing the Office for Public Witness and the Presbyterian Office at the United Nations to inform and equip Presbyterians to advocate for just peace throughout the Middle East.]

[• Mobilizing the global Christian community to defend, encourage, and protect;]

[•] [5.] [Leadership development and consultation] [Directing Presbyterian World Mission and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance to consult with mission partners in the Middle East, and seek increased financial support through church-wide appeals to support mission partners’ efforts to provide relief for Christian refugees in/from the region;]

[6. Calling on the government of the United States to examine its role in the Middle East, to seek to ensure that future involvements in the region be consistent with the promotion of justice and freedom for all, including religious liberty, and "to ensure that military intervention of any kind is undertaken as a “last resort” and reflects a high consensus among democratic nations that it may serve a “just peace.”"

[Financial aid;]

[•] [7.] [Pervasive] [P]rayer [without ceasing for our sisters and brothers in Christ who suffer for the sake of the Gospel]

[Financial Implication: Presbyterian Mission Agency—$18,500 (2015)]

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has an illustrious history of being agents for the Kingdom of God that furthers a positive impact upon the world and society. Our global situation at the dawn of the 21st century is pockmarked with growing sectarian violence that is sweeping innocent Christians into the fatal grip of merciless evil.

Jesus calls us to be peacemakers (Mt. 5:9), which positions us to intervene where there is no peace. Jesus informs us that we will be persecuted, but we are not to ignore a sibling in need.

As Jesus prayed in the Upper Room his “high priestly prayer” as recorded in John 17, he petitions God that his disciples would all be one as he is one with the Father. The global Christian Church cannot sit idly by watching our siblings in Christ being ruthlessly driven from their homes and in many cases executed for their faith.

As the early church was being established, we note in the Book of Acts the trials and tribulation the first disciples endured, yet they intervened with the authorities reflecting the love of Jesus Christ and bearing witness to the truth of the gospel message. The church must be engaged to provide support and encouragement to those who are suffering. If the church of Jesus Christ does not stand up for their sisters and brothers in the faith, who will? Jesus warns in Matthew 25 that if we overlook the needs of those who are imprisoned, hungry, naked, and hurting then we have overlooked him!

According to a recent article in the Washington Times (12/23/12), nearly one third of the total world’s population identify themselves as “Christian.” There are 2.2 billion Christians. Of those, nearly 50 percent represent access to crucial resources that can affect a positive impact for support of the persecuted church; we are compelled to respond to the cry, “Hosanna.”

and other religious communities. Among its affirmations:

“6. [7. Urging the United States State Department to include in its annual reports on the status of human rights in other countries an assessment of the impact of U.S. and allied foreign and military policies on religious minorities and their exercise of religious freedom.]

“[Financial aid;]

“[8. Pervasive] [p][P]rayer [without ceasing for our sisters and brothers in Christ who suffer for the sake of the Gospel].”

The proponents of this overture are rightly concerned with the situation of Christians in minority religious situations in the Middle East and elsewhere. They present several biblical bases for international action in Christian solidarity. This is a continuing concern of the General Assembly as various countries with state-endorsed religion, some allied with the United States and receiving substantial foreign and military aid, restrict the practice of Christianity and other faiths. In 2010, before the revolutions that changed leadership in Tunisia, Egypt, and elsewhere in the region, the General Assembly stated:

For tolerance of religious pluralism, freedom of worship, and protection of Christian communities and in line with principles [of humanitarian and human rights law]… the 219th General Assembly (2010)…recognizes the efforts made by the Egyptian government and civil society to ease the growing climate of tension between the country’s Christians and Muslims, and urges that the root causes of fear, anger, and the growing incidence of violent outbreaks be addressed, in order to restore mutual trust and to enable all citizens to enjoy their full and equal rights.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) approved the resolution, “For Human Rights and Civic Freedom: Movements for Democratic Change in the Arab World,” from which the quoted words in Recommendation 6 above are taken. That resolution takes very seriously the situation of Christian churches in the Middle East and the impacts of several wars on Christian and other religious communities. Among its affirmations:

In mission and ecumenical partnerships with indigenous Christians, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to continue its educational, medical, religious, and justice work in ways that support the fulfillment of human aspirations and the freedom of all citizens to worship without discrimination, including ancient Christian communities and other religious minorities. In this service, the church will continue to differentiate its mission, even in humanitarian relief, from the work of the United States military and other governmental agencies. (…)

Presbyterians are encouraged to consider travel in predominantly or partly Arab and Muslim countries, taking into account justice and security concerns, and connecting when possible with Christians in those nations. (See: http://www.pcusa.org/resource/human-rights-and-civic-freedom-movements/).)

That 2012 resolution also cited the 1974 resolution, “Christian Social Witness in Repressive Societies and United States Responsibility,” which begins: “Urges the congregations and individual members of the Presbyterian Church to offer specific and continuing prayer for all people under any repressive regime including Christians who are suffering because of their witness to Jesus Christ.” The amendments proposed recognize that not all mistreatment is “official,” and that the vulnerability of Christian communities in certain areas should be an enduring concern of Christians everywhere.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-02

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 11-02.

As with any other part of the church, ACREC agrees with this overture that when our brothers and sisters cry out for solidarity, we as the body of Christ need to respond. No matter that the sectarian violence in Egypt today is complicated and has connections to domination and colonization by Western powers, the church cannot stand by and ignore the “Hosanna” calls, which take us to the early Christians who had the same call, “Hosanna! We beseech you, save us!” The Christians of Egypt are some of the oldest communities of our tradition and before it is too late, as with the Christians of Iraq who had to flee after 2,000 years of living in their homeland when the U.S. military invasion/occupation began in 2003, we must heed this call for help from Egypt.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-02

Comment on Item 11-02—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The suffering of the church in Egypt and other parts of the world is not only “due to sectarian violence and persecution.” There are many factors involved, including geopolitical and economic factors. The General Assembly should consider all the factors that result in and contribute to sectarian violence. For example, our mission partners in the Middle East have clearly pointed out that U.S. government policies (and Western attempts to dominate in general) affect them adversely by fueling sectarian tension. Therefore, the role of the U.S. government (often seeking national or special interests rather than principles the U.S. purports to support) should be addressed by the overture.

The overture names only the church in Egypt, and fails to mention the suffering of other Christian populations in the region. For example, following the 2003 American-led invasion of Iraq, more than half of the country’s Christian population became refugees. Likewise, the plight of Syrian Christians, Palestinian Christians, and others in the Middle East should not be neglected. Additionally, while the overture mentions “Other Parts of the World,” it does not consider countries outside of the Middle East, such as North Korea, Pakistan, Nigeria, and Sudan, where Christians suffer from maltreatment no less than in the Middle East.

Use of the word “persecution” mischaracterizes the nature of the maltreatment of Christians in Egypt and elsewhere in the Middle East, and in many cases would be an unhelpful exaggeration. At the same time, the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly maintain ecumenical and interfaith relationships and humanitarian programs that can enable efforts such as those requested by the presbyteries submitting this overture.

On Removing Cuba from the List of State Sponsors of Terrorism—From the Presbytery of Long Island.

The Presbytery of Long Island overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Petition the [p]resident of the United States and the U.S. Department of State to remove Cuba from the list of state sponsors of terrorism as soon as possible.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate this petition to the president and the U.S. Department of State.

3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate for this result in cooperation with the appropriate denominational and ecumenical organizations in Washington.

Rationale

On March 1, 1982, Cuba was added to the U.S. Department of State’s list of state sponsors of terrorism because of Cuba’s alleged ties to international terrorism and its support for terrorist groups in Latin America. State sponsors of terrorism provide logistical and financial or political support to groups that carry out terrorist attacks on civilians, and there is no evidence that Cuba has provided such support in recent decades or is currently providing it.

To the contrary, Cuba has made international commitments to combat terrorism, has ratified all twelve international counterterrorism conventions, and has offered to sign a bilateral agreement with the United States on counterterrorism. In an immediate response to the September 11, 2001, attacks on New York City and Washington, D.C., by Islamist militants belonging to Al Qaeda, Cuba expressed solidarity with the U.S. condemning the attacks and offering Cuban airports for the emergency diversion of airplanes from U.S. airports.

Cuba is a sponsor of the peace talks between the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia—People’s Army (Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia—Ejército del Pueblo or FARC) guerrillas and the Columbian government and is playing a constructive mediating in these talks in an effort to bring an end to one of the regions’ longest-standing conflicts and has been lauded by the Columbian government for its assistance. Cuba collaborates with the U.S. in counter-drug traffic efforts, interdicting narcotic shipments in the Caribbean and has been publicly thanked by the United States government for this cooperation.

Under these circumstances, keeping Cuba on the list of state sponsors of terrorism weakens the credibility of the entire list. In the past, other countries such as Iraq and Libya have been removed from the list of state sponsors of terrorism. Removing Cuba from the list would send a positive signal to all Latin American governments and would enhance the image of the U.S. in this hemisphere and around the world.

Concurrence to Item 11-03 from the Presbyteries of Santa Fe and Southeastern Illinois.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this overture be approved.
The State Department currently lists four countries as “State Sponsors of Terrorism”: Cuba, Iran, Sudan, and Syria. The significance of this designation has to do with the application of three laws:

section 6(j) of the Export Administration Act, section 40 of the Arms Export Control Act, and section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act. Taken together, the four main categories of sanctions resulting from designation under these authorities include restrictions on U.S. foreign assistance; a ban on defense exports and sales; certain controls over exports of dual use items; and miscellaneous financial and other restrictions. Designation under the above-referenced authorities also implicates other sanctions laws that penalize persons and countries engaging in certain trade with state sponsors. (http://www.state.gov/j/ct/list/c14151.htm)

As the overture notes, countries such as Libya and Iraq have been removed from the list. Other countries not on that list may come immediately to mind as being of far greater danger to their neighbors and to their own populations. More importantly, the designation appears to be untrue by the State Department’s own reporting. The Council on Foreign Relations reviews human rights and intelligence reports to which there is public access and summarizes: “intelligence experts have been hard pressed to find evidence that Cuba currently provides weapons or military training to terrorist groups. In 1998, a comprehensive review by the U.S. intelligence community concluded that Cuba does not pose a threat to U.S. national security, which implies that Cuba no longer sponsors terrorism” (2010: http://www.cfr.org/cuba/state-sponsors-cuba/p9359). In their view, Cuba remains on the list because it may have relations with countries that may oppose the United States in some measure (Iran, Venezuela), it may shelter or hold foreign nationals of interest to the United States (not necessarily terrorists), and it may still be an important political concern for parts of the Cuban exile community.

In the past, the General Assembly has asked Congress to rescind the Cuban Democracy Act (1992) and the Helms-Burton Act (1997), both measures which reinforce the embargo (see Item 11-05). The assembly has also called on the Cuban government to respect the full range of human rights. Lifting the designation of “state sponsor of terror” does not suggest or imply approval for all of the laws and practices of the government of Cuba, but it would be consistent with past General Assembly policy and accurate to the current state of affairs. It would likely be taken as an incentive for positive actions on Cuba’s part, and would also normalize the behavior of other nations that carry on trade with Cuba while taking measures to avoid contacts with the U.S. that would trigger the three laws cited above. Especially with the high US surveillance related to the Guantanamo Bay prison, if Cuba were actually involved in supporting terrorism it is likely that the public would have heard about it in some way.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-03

Comment on Item 11-03—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency has been engaged in mission with church partners in Cuba since 1890 https://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/global/cuba/. In 1967, the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba (IPRC) was established as an autonomous denomination. Nine presbyteries have established partnerships with the IRPC. Travel restrictions and sanctions make these partnerships more difficult.

In February 2014, the Office of Public Witness, together with Church World Service and the Latin America Working Group, hosted a delegation of ecumenical leaders from Cuba in Washington, D.C. The purpose of the visit was to advocate for normalized U.S. relations with Cuba. Removing Cuba from the List of State Sponsors of Terrorism and lifting all restrictions for both U.S. and Cuba travel were among the issues discussed in the joint deliberations with the State Department and Congressional Offices http://www.pcusa.org/news/2014/3/18/cuban-church-leaders-press-normalization-us/.

[The assembly answered Item 11-04 by the action taken on Item 11-10, Recommendations A, B, C, & D. See pp. 65, 66.]

On the Use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles (Drones)—From the Presbytery of Genesee Valley.

The Presbytery of Genesee Valley overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to:

1. Call on all countries to halt the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles as weapons of war for all military, paramilitary, and surveillance activities whether by state-sponsored armed forces or by private groups or paramilitary units or contractors.
2. Call on the United States to stop the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles on its borders aimed at restricting the movement of peoples.

3. Recognizing that the UN Charter gives the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and that in fulfilling this responsibility the council can establish a UN peacekeeping operation, the General Assembly calls on the United Nations Security Council to authorize the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles in peacekeeping operations only when such usage is restricted to decreasing military conflict and protecting civilians.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate to those in positions of national leadership in the United States for the cessation of the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles as weapons of war in military, paramilitary, and surveillance activities both in foreign countries and within the United States.

5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate with the member states of the United Nations for the cessation of the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles as weapons of war in military, paramilitary, and surveillance activities.

6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate within the UN community that the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles in peacekeeping operations be restricted to decreasing militarization and protecting civilians.

7. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to assist presbyteries directly impacted by the presence of Unmanned Aerial Vehicle bases through the creation of electronic theological resources expressing the position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) towards Unmanned Aerial Vehicles and strategies for nonviolent protests of drone bases.

8. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to facilitate collaborative efforts between presbyteries directly impacted by the presence of Unmanned Aerial Vehicle bases with other organizations both outside and within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in order to determine the best way to respond to this increasingly utilized first-strike weapon of choice.

9. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Presbyterian Mission Agency to monitor developments in Unmanned Aerial Vehicle technology and use and to inform the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) of such developments and any related needs for new policy.

Rationale

Since 2002, the United States has used Unmanned Aerial Vehicles, commonly called drones, in approximately 425 strikes, killing more than 3,500 people (“The Shadow of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles” in Unbound, May 25, 2013). Many of the victims have been women, children, and innocent noncombatants. While there is the temptation to find, in this remote methodology of waging war, a measure of security through distance, the reality is that this method of attack neither meets the standards of the traditional teaching on military activity as established by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) nor effectively takes into account the realities of communities who live under the constant threat of strikes. Additionally, the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles as weapons of war has been shown to be tantamount to unauthorized targeted assassinations of both foreign nationals and, in a few cases, United States citizens challenging both the sovereignty of other nations and the due process of the system of justice valued by those in the U.S.

In Pakistan alone, the use of strikes has led to an increase in anti-United States sentiment (Dawn News Service, 1-22-13). In that region, a destabilized country only leads to the threat of increased terroristic responses to United States military might. In the brokenness of the world and the callousness with which we approach the deaths of civilians in other countries, children who have had to bury their parents have the potential of continuing the cycles of violence that first descended out of the sky, obliterating any semblance of normalcy in their own lives. Additionally, tragically, those who work as pilots for Unmanned Aerial Vehicles have begun reporting an increase in the experience of PTSD stemming from their actions against foreign domestics (New York Times, 02/25/13).

In addition, reports have indicated the use of unmanned aircrafts along the border between Mexico and the United States (National Public Radio, 06/11/13). This represents a threat to the privacy of U.S. citizens in that border area while serving as a prelude to the certain use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles by municipal police forces (Public Broadcasting Service, 04/18/13). This furthers the founded fears of U.S. citizens who worry that the efforts to maintain a peaceful existence are being undertaken at the cost of constitutional civil liberties. This also suggests a moral and ethical cost of which we would do well to take note.

The Charter of the United Nations gives the UN Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. The council may adopt a range of measures as it seeks to fulfill this responsibility. Those measures may include the establishment of a UN peacekeeping operation.

Peacekeeping has unique strengths, including legitimacy, burden sharing, and an ability to deploy and sustain troops and police from around the globe, integrating them with civilian peacekeepers to advance multidimensional mandates.

UN Peacekeepers provide security and the political and peacebuilding support to help countries make the difficult, early transition from conflict to peace.
UN Peacekeeping is guided by three basic principles:

• Consent of the parties;
• Impartiality;

The nature of the mandates assigned to UN peacekeeping operations by the Security Council has expanded significantly in response to changing patterns of conflict. “Today’s multidimensional peacekeeping operations are called upon not only to maintain peace and security, but also to facilitate the political process, protect civilians, assist in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants; support the organization of elections, protect and promote human rights and assist in restoring the rule of law.” (Ibid)

Given the geographic, political and meteorological realities faced by current and future peacekeeping operations, the use of unmanned aerial vehicles allows peacekeeping missions access to regions otherwise too vast and costly for the peacekeeping mission to protect. By using unmanned aerial vehicles, with partnership of the host government, peacekeeping operations are able to promote peace in far larger regions with fewer armed soldiers.

As members of the prophetic tradition of the followers of Jesus, we are called to stand for peace even when that stance is judged as less than expedient in creating safety and security for the country. In our efforts to walk in the footsteps of Jesus of Nazareth we must remember that it was his work of redemption on the cross that welcomed people from all over the world into the family of God. With that familial relationship comes the responsibility to treat each other as we would desire to be treated and to love each neighbor to the same degree that we seek to love ourselves. The use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles by the United States threatens to introduce an ease in battle and separation from the sights of war that ensures war in this fashion will simply become second nature to the country that uses them. As a church we must stand against those who seek to use violence in the vain attempt to enjoy a peaceful existence and call for an end to the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

In concurrence with the concerns of the proponent presbyteries, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this overture be answered by the approval of Item 11-10, Resolution on Drones, War, and Surveillance, with the addition to that resolution of the following recommendations:

1. Add the following recommendations to Item 11-10, Recommendation A.:

“[9. Recognizing that the UN Charter gives the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and that in fulfilling this responsibility the council can establish a UN peacekeeping operation, the General Assembly calls on the United Nations Security Council to authorize the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles in peacekeeping operations only when such usage is restricted to decreasing military conflict and protecting civilians.

“[10. Direct the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations to advocate with the member states of the United Nations for comprehensive conventions to govern the use of Unmanned Aerial Vehicles as weapons of war in military, paramilitary, and surveillance activities, with priority on the protection of all noncombatants and enforceable limitations on the justification, scope and duration of such activities, and the prevention of weaponized UAV proliferation.]

2. Add a new Recommendation E to Item 11-10 to read as follows:

“[E. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program to assist presbyteries and individual Presbyterians through the creation of downloadable electronic and limited-run print theological resources building on this Resolution on Drones, War, and Surveillance, to facilitate collaborative efforts with other organizations both outside and within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in order to determine the best ways to respond to this increasingly utilized weapon of choice, and with the Office of Public Witness and the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, to monitor developments in Unmanned Aerial Vehicle technology and use and to inform the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) of such developments and any related needs for new policy.]”

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy would affirm the serious concerns raised in this overture, which are shared by many in our society and around the world. For this reason it is bringing a Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance to this General Assembly (Item 11-10). The ACSWP resolution responds to many of the concerns raised by this item, but does not reject all military and surveillance uses of drones by nation states. The recommendations related to the United Nations, in fact, would seem to fit better within the larger resolution, given that the UN normally draws on the military forces of member nations. Instead of calling for the (highly unlikely) prohibition of the use of drones by nation-states, the approach recommended urges that their use be restricted by internationally agreed upon rules of war and subject to greater legal oversight and public transparency.

Along with the weaponized drones that cause the greatest concern about creating more enemies and extending the battlefield, is the use of drones in surveillance. This is also highly unlikely to be ended, but also in need of much greater accountability. It is also impossible to approach the issue of surveillance by drone in isolation from surveillance in other forms. Many of the U.S. military bases around the world, in fact, include “listening stations” of various kinds. Data collection from drones, piloted aircraft, electronic “vacuuming,” text and phone messages is all part of a picture justified by a concern for counter-terrorism. Though drones raise specific moral questions about the character of the warrior and respect for due process and human rights—seen in the U.S. military’s not counting the deaths of civilians killed by various methods in Iraq, Afghanistan, Pakistan, Somalia, and elsewhere—the resolution addresses common elements of secrecy, lack of accountability and oversight, and the need to improve both domestic and international law on surveillance and secret warfare.

Thanks in part to The Thoughtful Christian, published by Presbyterian Publishing Company, some of the theological and ethical resource called for in the overture has already been produced. If commissioners believe that the Resolution on Drones, War, and Surveillance puts drone use in a framework that can engage with U.S. and UN policymakers, then some of the elements from this overture can improve that resolution. The theological questions of moral distance and dehumanization as well as of military violence generally would be part of any resources for study and action developed from the resolution, so the recommendation from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is not to reinvent the wheel on resources but to build on what has already been written for this assembly.

The deployment and semi-covert use of weaponized drones has clearly outpaced moral reflection and oversight, and the Resolution on Drones, War, and Surveillance recommends eliminating and preventing some uses entirely, while recognizing that the problems with this technology overlap with those of other weapons and surveillance systems. Precision targeting with drones does not prevent killing innocent people, even if it kills fewer than stealth bomber strikes. The General Assembly has rejected other weapon systems in the past that fail to discriminate between combatants and noncombatants, making them inherently immoral. In the case of nuclear weapons, the General Assembly approved a thorough report developed over several years, Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age (1988) (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/christian-obedience-nuclear) that continues to provide bases for analyzing weapons of mass destruction. The challenge of drones is a different challenge, but still very much within the moral purview of a Christian vision of just peace.

Comment on Item 11-04—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly requests that commissioners and advisory delegates carefully consider any items of business that would raise the per capita rate. The COGA made a commitment to bring no increase to the per capita rate to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by making significant reductions in the per capita budgets, which included reductions in staff. We would ask that other means be found within existing committee structures to accomplish the same task.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-04

Comment on Item 11-04—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The General Assembly has addressed issues of war and peace on numerous occasions through the years. This includes speaking to specific weapons, for example land mines and nuclear weapons, and the questions about the morality of their use.

Drones represent a new technology not fully addressed in any current PC(USA) policy related to weapons of war. The approval of this overture or the report from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy would establish policy to guide the work of programs of the Presbyterian Mission Agency called to address these matters.

On Lifting All Travel Restrictions for U.S. Citizens Traveling to Cuba—From the Presbytery of St. Augustine.

The Presbytery of St. Augustine overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to:

1. Petition the president of the United States, the U.S. Department of State, and the U.S. Treasury Department’s Office of Foreign Assets Control to remove all of the restrictions on travel by U.S. citizens to Cuba, which it is legally possible for them to do, and to openly and vigorously advocate to Congress the repeal of all laws restricting the constitutional right of U.S. citizens to travel to Cuba.
2. Petition the majority and minority leaders of the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives to work to repeal all of the laws restricting travel to that nation.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate this petition to the president, the U.S. Department of State, the Office of Foreign Assets Control of the U.S. Treasury Department, and to the congressional leaders cited above.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate for this change in policy in cooperation with other appropriate denominational and ecumenical organizations in Washington.

Rationale

We laud our government for lifting a number of the restrictions instituted by the previous administration on travel to Cuba. This has made it possible for thousands more U.S. citizens to visit that country.

The Cuban government reported that in 2012 approximately 475,000 U.S. citizens visited relatives in Cuba and that another 98,000 U.S. citizens also visited Cuba that year under educational and religious licenses.

However, millions of U. S. citizens are unable to visit Cuba because of restrictions still in place that limit travel to that nation.

Speaking to the Organization of American States in 2013, U. S. Secretary of State, John Kerry, stated that “our people are actually our best ambassadors.”

In Cuba the average monthly wage is less than the equivalent of $22 (U.S.) per month, and most Cubans depend on remittances from outside the country for basic necessities. Although the Cuban government provides a monthly food allotment for each person, it only provides food for less than half a month. Thousands of retirees depend on food aid from churches in order to survive. Many of them have incomes of only the equivalent of $8 (U.S.) per month.

In 2012 the Cuban government announced that it would be laying off 500,000 government workers in the next few years. It also announced that it would allow approximately 200 types of private businesses. Thousands of Cubans have begun private enterprises.

Increased travel by U. S. citizens will help supports thousands of these Cuban entrepreneurs and will enable them to purchase food and clothing and provide for their other basic needs.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-05—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this overture be approved.

Travel to Cuba is currently possible under general or specific licenses from the Office of Foreign Assets Control of the U.S. Treasury. Travel restrictions are part of the more general blockade that dates back to the period after the Revolution (1959) and subsequent deterioration of U.S.-Cuba relations, including the missile crisis and the failed invasion sponsored by the Central Intelligence Agency at the Bay of Pigs. As the Treasury website states: “The Cuban Assets Control Regulations, 31 CFR Part 515…, were issued by the U.S. Government on July 8, 1963, under the Trading With the Enemy Act in response to certain hostile actions by the Cuban Government” (http://www.treasury.gov/resource-center/sanctions/Programs/Documents/cuba.pdf). Put simply, tourism and commerce are not permitted but general licenses can allow educational and religious activities by groups and specific licenses can be granted for individual and one-time purposes. The rules for these licenses were changed to allow more “people-to-people” tourism in 2011 (http://www.nytimes.com/2011/07/10/travel/at-long-last-legal-trips-to-cuba.html?pagewanted=all& r=0).

Many observers propose that increased travel to Cuba is paradoxically doing what the long years of the blockade have not achieved: opening up the society. Past General Assemblies have called for normalization of relations and an end to the blockade overall (PCUS: 1972, 1977; UPC: 1977, 1982 [particularly noting travel restrictions]; PCUSA: 1990, 1992). Given changes in U.S. policy regarding the region overall, as well as changes in Cuba, this is an appropriate updating of the church’s long-standing concern.

On Authorizing a Consultative Process to Provide Guidance for the Church’s Response to the Dramatic Changes Taking Place in Cuba—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

The Presbytery of Santa Fe, meeting in Albuquerque, New Mexico, February 8, 2014, in order to obtain a careful analysis of the ongoing complex situation in Cuba to guide the response of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the councils and congregations of the church, overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014), meeting in Detroit Michigan, June 14–21, 2014, to direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in consultation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency, to design and implement a consultative process that would involve:

1. An extended meeting of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in Cuba, including representatives of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Cuba Partners Network, to view the Cuban situation directly and to consult with experts in the Cuban government, the University of Havana, the Cuban Council of Churches, and the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba, with the agenda developed in consultation with the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba. The program should include not only hearings but also visits to locations and projects where the effects of the ongoing changes in Cuba and efforts to implement them by both governmental and religious agencies can be observed. The use of the consultation model and a regular meeting of the committee itself will save the cost of a task force and enhance the mutual conversation of our churches as called for in the 1986 Mutual Mission Agreement.

2. A follow-up consultation in the U.S., preferably in Washington, D.C., at which members of the ACSWP who had participated in the Cuba consultation and representatives of the Cuba Partners Network and appropriate Presbyterian Mission Agency staff, would consult with U.S. governmental agencies and committees and religious and other nongovernmental organizations concerned with Cuba policy to explore response to the evolving changes in Cuba by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), both through mission engagement and public policy advocacy.

3. Preparation and submission of a report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) with recommendations for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission engagement and public policy advocacy.

4. Preparation and submission to the Presbyterian Mission Agency of interim reports and recommendations for action consistent with existing policy on matters deemed urgent.

Rationale

The year 2014 marks the 45th anniversary of the basic policy toward Cuba adopted by the 181st General Assembly (1969) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA) stating that “consistent with the right of self-determination … the United States Government should immediately take steps to re-establish normal relations with the Government of Cuba. This should include the lifting of the trade embargo against Cuba. … The three United States military bases in Latin America should eventually be dismantled, subject to negotiation with Panama and Cuba” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1969, Part I, pp.742, 744). Subsequent General Assemblies have reaffirmed and amplified this policy as U.S. policy toward Cuba has changed under succeeding administrations, though the fundamental realities first addressed in 1969 remain largely unchanged.

The 198th General Assembly (1986) approved a Mutual Mission Agreement between the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), authorizing a Partnership in Mission that included; “exchange of seminary professors and students”; “participation of the Presbyterian Reformed Church in Cuba in the Mission to the USA Program”; “joint ministry in peacemaking programs”; “exchange programs between youth, women, and other groups”; and “relating middle governing bodies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with the Presbyterian Reformed Church in Cuba” (Minutes, 1986, Part I, pp. 589–90), subsequently amended also to authorize partnerships between congregations of the two denominations. This agreement opened the way to a mission partnership of unprecedented breadth and depth between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba currently involving some fifteen presbyteries and synods, ninety congregations, the Outreach Foundation, the Presbyterian Cuba Connection, and Living Waters for the World working together in the Presbyterian Cuba Partners Mission Network. At its annual meeting in 2013, the Cuba Partners Network, the World Mission Division of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba affirmed the intention to work cooperatively as a “community of mission practice.”

The continued involvement of thousands of members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with the life of their sisters and brothers in Cuba and their experience of the impact of the continued U.S. embargo on them and all the people of Cuba give the PC(USA) an unusually profound insight into the human impact of U.S. policy toward Cuba and an almost “personal stake” in continuing to seek just and peaceful relations between our two nations. Recent changes in Cuba bring new urgency to that quest and new hope for its successful outcome.

The government of Cuba has embarked on an apparently irreversible course of fundamental change that affects the daily life of Cubans, has opened up new opportunities for individual initiative, is enabling the churches to move into social space in new ways, is leading to greater and more positive involvement in the Latin American/Caribbean region, is brokering negotiations for peaceful solutions to long intractable conflicts, is permitting Cuba dissidents to travel abroad freely, and has led to the freeing of political prisoners. These individual changes are clearly part of a complex process of reform that continues to unfold, sometimes with weekly announcements.

These continuing developments present an opportunity for the United States government to abandon the policy of isolation rooted in the dynamics of the Cold War, a policy consistently opposed by the General Assembly through the last forty-five years. Continuation of that policy not only seeks to isolate Cuba but also isolates us from Cuba and the opportunity to encourage and assist that sister nation in its efforts toward reform. Restoration of normal diplomatic and commercial relationships would clearly be in the best interests of our nation as Cuba interfaces more and more with the world.

These developments also present new opportunities for mission engagement with our daughter/sister Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba as that church explores new possibilities for witness and service as the continuing dynamics of change unfold in Cuba. The process of change in Cuba is complex and ongoing. The process of consultation called for in this overture will provide the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with carefully explored guidelines for effective future mission engagement and public policy advocacy.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee advises that this overture be approved with amendment to Recommendations 1.–3. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“1. An extended meeting of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in Cuba, including representatives of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Cuba Partners Network, to view the Cuban situation directly and to consult with [the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba on matters of mission and witness and through their auspices include relevant] experts in the Cuban government, the University of Havana, the Cuban Council of Churches [and other religious leaders] [- and the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba, with the agenda developed in consultation with the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba]. The program should include not only hearings, [worship, and theological reflection,] but also visits to locations and projects where the effects of the ongoing changes in Cuba [as they relate to the religious life of the church] and efforts to implement them by both governmental and religious agencies can be observed. The use of the consultation model and a regular meeting of the committee itself will save the cost of a task force and enhance the mutual conversation of our churches as called for in the 1986 Mutual Mission Agreement.

“2. A follow-up consultation in the U.S., preferably in Washington, D.C., at which members of the ACSWP who had participated in the Cuba consultation and representatives of the Cuba Partners Network and appropriate Presbyterian Mission Agency staff, would consult with U.S. governmental agencies and committees and religious and other nongovernmental organizations concerned with Cuba policy to explore response to the evolving changes in Cuba [as they relate to the religious life of the church] by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), both through mission engagement and [public policy advocacy] [social witness].

The survival and strength of the Presbyterian Church in Cuba is a gift of God, working through the dedicated lives of ministers and members who have experienced “lean years,” and yet kept their hands to the Gospel plow. The faithfulness of PC(USA) congregations and partners, throughout the many years of blockade and Cold War and Central American wars, is to be honored as well. But this overture calls for more than honoring and maintaining connection, important as those tasks are. It calls for two consultations designed to draw upon the learnings of many years and current analysis to assess best ways for our two churches to move forward in a very dynamic environment.

The amendments proposed are meant to emphasize the Reformed Christian understanding of mission that connects our theology with the broad range of human life over which God is sovereign, while recognizing the current legal structures governing travel to Cuba (also noted in the Presbyterian Mission Agency comment). Religious life and Christian discipleship in the Reformed tradition clearly include more than liturgical practice. Both our churches share this incarnational understanding and a commitment to partnership; hence the amendments clarify the key role of the Presbyterian Church of Cuba in any contacts with Cuban official, academic, and civil society representatives. The amendments also make explicit the theological and ethical dimension implicit in the overture and previous Cuba social witness policies, some of which are noted in the overture.

Commissioners may be aware that the life of the Iglesia Presbiteriana-Reformada en Cuba has been of great concern to Presbyterians in the United States since the revolution and its aftermath severed relations with what was once part of the Synod of New Jersey. The wonderful growth of the mission partnerships among Presbyterians, noted in this overture, testify to the depth of relationship. The experiences of the Spirit of Christ across ideological lines enrich the lives of Christians in both cultures and help us understand the unique place of the church in each society.

While the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has repeatedly expressed concern for full human rights and improvements in relations between governments that so affect our Christian witness and mission, the last in-depth analysis of Cuban developments prepared for the General Assembly was in 1990. The growth of mission partnerships was in fact a recommendation in that policy statement. Both predecessor denominations had cooperated in a major study in 1978–1979 (published in Church & Society, July–October, 1979), and both had monitored tensions in the Caribbean and Central American region in the 1980s. A 1997 statement summarizes statements in the recent period: “Presbyterian General Assemblies have repeatedly called upon the United States to pursue a policy of reconciliation and negotiation with the Cuban government” (Minutes, Part 1, 1997, p. 589).

Clearly there remain legal issues for any consultations among Christians from the two nations, despite increased commerce and travel across the strait below Florida. (See National Geographic for a recent mainstream account of changes occurring: http://ngm.nationalgeographic.com/2012/11/new-cuba/gorney-text). The method proposed is low cost and an appropriate and customary part of expenses determined by General Assemblies. As stated, the purpose of the consultations is to go beyond news accounts and government statements and to help advance Presbyterian mission and witness in a time of widely acknowledged change. Given the depth of Presbyterian relationships and history, it seems appropriate we join in careful and prayerful thought about what God is doing in Cuba and how that can guide both our churches in the future.

Comment on Item 11-06—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

This overture displays a familiarity with the remarkably strong relationship that has remained between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Presbyterian Church in Cuba over the years. It recognizes the significant changes underway within Cuba and in that country’s relations with other nations in the Caribbean, Latin America, and Europe. The overture proposes a cost-effective way to build upon the work of the Cuba Mission Network and the mission partnerships that have made our Presbyterian witness and connection so distinctive and durable. The dual consultation model is designed to include a diversity of voices framed by the mission of the church. The consultation in Cuba, to be developed with our mission partners, would be arranged by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and World Mission in full accordance with the requirements of U.S. law and the hopes of that church. As in other social witness and mission reports prepared for the General Assembly in the past, the goal is to gather faithful persons with significant experience and expertise whose prayer and reflection may help guide both our churches for years to come.

Item 11-07

On Commemorating the 100th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide—From the Presbytery of Los Ranchos.

In order to mark the centennial of the Armenian Genocide in 2015, to remember the suffering of the Armenian people, and to give thanks for their continuing witness, the Presbytery of Los Ranchos respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take the following measures to testify to this tragedy and to help ensure that no other peoples experience such suffering:

1. Urge congregations and individuals to

   a. recognize the Armenian Genocide, which claimed 1.5 million lives of Armenians from 1915 to 1923 and displaced more than one million more;
b. express deep sympathy to the Armenian people and designate April 24th of every year hereafter as a day of remembrance of the 1.5 million Armenians who fell victim to the first genocide of the twentieth century;

c. honor the provisions of American and international law and the role of American and international justice institutions in preventing the recurrence of similar mass killings, atrocities, and population removals and bringing the perpetrators of any such crimes to justice; and

Furthermore, believing that the international recognition of this genocide is a necessary condition for the prevention of similar crimes that may occur in the future, the General Assembly:

2. Supports the designation of “genocide” for the deaths of 1.5 million Armenians and the expulsion of one million more from the Ottoman Empire during the period from 1915–1923, recognizing the systemic elimination of a population group as a crime against humanity in keeping with the 1947 Geneva Convention on Genocide.

3. Directs the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to

   a. call upon [the] [President Obama] and the Congress of the United States of America to recognize and condemn the deaths and expulsion of Armenians from the Ottoman Empire during the period from 1915–1923, as a genocide, and to communicate this resolution for that purpose;

   b. communicate this resolution to ecumenical partners and organizations nationally and internationally;

   c. ensure suitable time within the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to observe the anniversary of the Armenian Genocide and to honor those organizations, countries, and individuals who assisted Armenian refugees, including the work of the Jinishian Memorial Program.

4. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to

   a. encourage appropriate observance of the 100th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide, [designating Sunday, April 26, 2015, as the 100 year anniversary commemoration day in Presbyterian churches] including the preparation of educational and liturgical resources, drawing on the witness of prior assemblies and other historical records, and participation in travel, conferences, and other memorials [to be made available on the web at least two months prior to 4/26/2015];

   b. encourage the United States to endorse the highest human rights standards for all agencies and actions of the United States government, including protection of minority and/or subjugated populations from genocide and ethnic cleansing;

   c. work cooperatively with other churches and communions in both advocacy and encouraging appropriate artistic, musical, and other cultural forms of remembrance.

Rationale

The year 2015 marks the 100th anniversary of the start of the Armenian Genocide. Between 1915 and 1923, some 1.5 million Armenians perished and more than a million were deported from their homeland, Western Armenia, in present-day Turkey.
Many others died of starvation and epidemics during forced marches or in concentration camps. Through execution and deportation, plundering of property, sexual abuse, and torture, the Armenian presence was systematically expunged from Asia Minor. The Armenian Genocide has been condemned by the international community as a crime against humanity. Concise accounts of these events can be found at the following Web sites:

We give thanks to God for the continuing witness of Armenian Christians. Since 301 CE, this first Christian nation has borne witness to the sovereign justice of God and the saving love of Jesus Christ. Today their tenacious faith is evidenced by three million in the Armenian nation and six million in diaspora around the world.

Historical Witness of the General Assembly

The General Assemblies of 1918–1923 included actions regarding the suffering of the Armenian people in the immediate wake of what were termed “atrocities” in the period before 1947 when the term, “genocide,” came into use. Many American Presbyterians, including President Wilson, viewed the Allied victory in World War I as an endorsement of self-determination for subject peoples of the defeated empires. The assemblies of the time supported the League of Nations and were also concerned for Syrian and Assyrian Christians under Ottoman rule, as evidenced in these excerpts:

- Minutes, General Assembly of the 130th General Assembly (1918) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (PCUSA):

  The Standing Committee on Foreign Missions, through its chairman, Rev. Joseph A. Vance, D. D., presented a resolution on the state of the Armenians and Syrians which was adopted as follows:

  The Committee on Foreign Missions, having had referred to it a telegram from the National Armenian Relief Committee in New York City, on the subject of the increasing destitution among nearly 3,000,000 of Armenians, Syrians, and other Christian races of Western Asia, recommends the adoption by the General Assembly of the following Resolution:

  Resolved, That the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., hereby expresses its deep sympathy with the suffering Armenians, Syrians, Persians, and other races of Western Asia, and commends their cause to the continued generosity of our people as represented by the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee, so long as these distressing war conditions may continue. (Minutes, PCUSA, 1918, Part I, pp. 219–20)
Minutes, General Assembly of the 131st General Assembly (1919), PCUSA:

Resolved, That one Sunday during this year should be appointed by the Moderator and Stated Clerk, whereon a strong plea should be made by all Presbyterian pastors from their pulpits in behalf of those suffering Christians in Turkey and Persia; and collections should be taken and sent to the American Relief Committee for Armenians and Syrians in New York. (Minutes, 1919, Part I, p. 254)

We commend to the Church at large the appeal for help for the people in these lands, and urge our people to make liberal response to the Syrian-Armenian Relief Fund, that the hungry may be fed, the naked clothed, and the homeless housed. (Ibid. p. 260, Item 7(h), paragraph 2)

Minutes, General Assembly of the 132nd General Assembly (1920), PCUSA:

6. Papers were received bearing upon the situation in Armenia. This answer is recommended:

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church records its most emphatic protest against the massacres and all other acts of inhumanity to which the Armenians, the Hungarians, the people of Transylvania and other peoples of the war stricken areas have been subjected. We also express our hope that at a very early date all such harsh and cruel treatment shall be at an end.

In line with this expression we present the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. (a) express sincere sympathy with the Republic of Armenia and its national aims; (b) that we protest vehemently against the repeated atrocities committed upon such a faithful people; and (c) that we endorse the Near East Relief for its great service to stricken Armenia. (Minutes, PCUSA, 1920, Part I, p. 179)

Along with other sections and forceful language, the 132nd General Assembly (1920) of the PCUSA endorsed an action of the Federal Council of Churches which cited “cable dispatches from Lord Bryce and other British leaders interested in the Christian peoples of the Near East declare that ‘Unless America joins to help bear the burdens, we see no hope of delivering the subject races of Turkey. … America alone is in a position to do, with comparative ease, what ought to be done in that country for its pacification, for the protection of people there, and for the setting up of a safe and righteous government… She [the U.S.] should not shrink from declaring her willingness to take such an advisory or mandatory responsibility if the allied nations and the peoples of the East” determine this would be constructive” (Minutes, PCUSA, 1920, Part I, pp. 205–6).

Third section: “That we urge America to take this more intimate part in Eastern affairs so that the peaceful work of missions may continue to render its helping hand and that those now in exile from Armenia and Persia may return to their homes and the pursuit of their ordinary vocations unmolested” (Ibid. p. 206)

Fourth section: “That copies of these resolutions signed by the Moderator be sent to the President and to our representatives in Washington and that they be printed and put into the hands of all ministers…” (Ibid. p. 206)

Current Witnesses

• The Tenth Assembly of the World Council of Churches, meeting in Busan, South Korea, adopted a memorial resolution on the Armenian Genocide:

“…the 10th Assembly of the World Council of Churches, meeting in Busan, Republic of Korea, from 30 October to 8 November 2013, requests the general secretary to:

A. Organize in 2015, around the commemorative 100th anniversary date 24 April 2015, an international conference in Geneva on the recognition of and reparation for the Armenian Genocide with the participation, among others, of WCC member churches, international organizations, jurists, historians and human rights defenders.;

B. Organize an ecumenical prayer service commemorating the victims of the Armenian Genocide at the Cathedral of Geneva in conjunction with the international conference; and

C. Invite member churches of the WCC to pray for the memory of the Armenian martyrs around the dates of the international conference and also for recognition of the Armenian Genocide.” (http://asbarez.com/115900/world-council-of-churches-to-observe-genocide-centennial/)

• In 2013, the Governing Board of the Conference of European Churches also recognized “the other 600,000 Christians of Aramean, Chaldean, Assyrian, and Greek descent, including Catholics and Protestants, who were also massacred along with their Armenian brothers and sisters.” (http://press.ceceurope.org/fileadmin/filer/cec/CEC_Documents/Gov_Bd_November_2013_Docs/7_GB2013_Doc_14_7_CEC_Public_Issues_Statement_Armenian_Genocide_FINAL.pdf.)
The Advisory Committee advises that this overture be approved with the following amendments as follows:

1. Amend Recommendation 1.c. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

   “c. honor the provisions of American and international law and the role of American and international justice institutions[, such as the International Criminal Court,] in preventing the recurrence of similar mass killings, atrocities, and population removals and bringing the perpetrators of any such crimes to justice; and

2. Amend the Recommendation 4. by adding a new section “d.” to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

   “c. work cooperatively with other churches and communions in both advocacy and encouraging appropriate artistic, musical, and other cultural forms of remembrance[.]

   “[d. consider appropriate ways to include reference to the suffering of Assyrian, Chaldean, Syriac, Greek, Kurdish, and other peoples under Ottoman rule, and to later genocides and mass population removals, for which the Armenian experience may be considered a prototype.]”

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has repeatedly affirmed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and subsequent affirmations of international human rights law, including instrumentalities such as the International Criminal Court still in need of U.S. support.

The overture’s own rationale provides further policy base in General Assembly statements on the need to stop massive tragedies from being visited on minority peoples and to provide for self-determination within a just international framework. Their overture also mentions other peoples affected by imperial policies of the early 20th century in that part of the world. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy believes it would be consistent with the concerns of the proponents to include in any resources prepared appropriate mention of other instances of such inhumanity, including perhaps more recent cases such as Cambodia, Rwanda, and parts of the former Yugoslavia.

Commissioners may question whether naming the Armenian suffering a genocide contributes to eventual restoration of relations with the nation or majority population of Turkey. In our view, to call such a great tragedy a genocide is to cry out for understanding all of the forces that tempt all stronger ethnic and religious groups to oppress, demonize, and victimize neighbors. This awareness that history must be faced with realism and humility, and the experience that people recover dignity by having their suffering acknowledged, both argue for the use of term genocide for an event that is increasingly well-documented.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy would note a recent (April 2014) statement of historical condolence by the contemporary Turkish government that deserves commendation and that may point to a more complete acknowledgment of Armenian suffering. We would join in the hope that these communities and others still affected by actions of the Ottoman Empire can reach greater conciliation and truthful mutual understanding in the years ahead.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 11-07 with amendment to Recommendation 4.a. as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown with an underline and with brackets.]

   “a. encourage appropriate observance of the 100th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide, [designating Sun-day April 19th, 2015, as the 100-year anniversary commemoration day in Presbyterian churches,] including the preparation of educational and liturgical resources [and bulletin inserts,] drawing on the witness of prior assemblies and other historical records, and participation in travel, conferences, and other memorials[. to be made available on the web at least one month prior to 4/19/2015].”

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns strongly supports this item because it is an important component in the healing process for the descendants of the Armenian Genocide. After 100 years, Turkey still denies that genocide took place and holds the position that Armenians were massacred as collateral damage in World War I. Historians overwhelmingly agree that Armenians were ethnically cleansed by the collapsing Ottoman Empire at the end of WWI because of their religion—they are Christian—and had the unfortunate circumstance of their homelands being located in the heart of the Ottoman Empire, which could not be shed like some far-off parts of the empire were when the Ottoman Empire was carved up at the end of the war (e.g. like Mesopotamia, North Africa, etc.).
Turkey became the modern nation state in 1922. The Armenians who had lived in their ancestral homelands for more than 3,000 years did not fit into the Turkish plan of “Turkey for the Turks” and a campaign of ethnic cleansing is now well documented, notably by Turkish historian, Taner Akam, author of the groundbreaking book, A Shameful Act: The Armenian Genocide and the Question of Turkish Responsibility (2006). In his pioneering and landmark assessment of Turkish culpability, Akam uses “key Ottoman, European and American sources, to reveal that the mass killing of Armenians was no byproduct of WWI, as long claimed in Turkey, but a deliberate, centralized program of state-sponsored extermination” (Publishers Weekly, http://www.publishersweekly.com/978-0-8050-7932-6).

The official Armenian commemoration on April 24th will be on a Friday. The ACREC advises that Presbyterian churches commemorate the loss of life in the Armenian Genocide on the Sunday April 19th, equipping congregations with the information before Armenia’s commemoration day, Friday, April 24th.

For further information—the weekend after April 24th will be the 100-year anniversary of the tragedies of the Gallipoli Campaign in which more than 120,000 soldiers died on both sides of WWI in the battle to take Constantinople. The Allied powers (Entente) who lost at Gallipoli included large numbers of soldiers from the Australia and New Zealand Army Corps (ANZAC). Those countries, along with other Commonwealth countries, will be commemorating the tragic loss of life on the 25th and 26th of April with many events in Turkey, while Turkey itself hosts the 100-year commemorations of their victory at Gallipoli.

Western Sahara: Occupied, Non-Self-Governing Territory, and Test Case for International Law

In response to a referral by the 220th General Assembly (2012) of legal and other factors affecting the status and future of the territory of Western Sahara, the Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Urge the U. S. Department of State and the U. S. ambassador to the United Nations to continue to call upon the community of nations to support self-determination for the people of the region known as Western Sahara in accord with prior UN resolutions and determinations of international courts, including provision for a supervised referendum in which the human rights of all Sahrawi and others residents are protected and a fair, internationally recognized settlement is achieved, and the proposal of the United States for human rights observers in this effectively occupied, non-self-governing territory.

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to work with ecumenical and interfaith partners and other nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) in support of these efforts on behalf of Western Sahara, and to give attention as feasible to justice issues in other non-self-governing trust territories, territorial possessions, and occupied territories.

3. Direct the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to monitor the activities of international corporations in Western Sahara in which the Foundation or Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may be an investor, including the Potash Corporation (currently in church portfolios), initiating correspondence on the impacts of that firm’s mineral extraction, and recommending appropriate further corporate social responsibility measures consistent with the concerns noted above.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, to monitor matters of human rights and religious liberty in Western Sahara and other countries across the Northern Africa region where ethnic and religious tensions and undemocratic governance may threaten international peace and security, and make recommendations on public policy and economic witness as appropriate.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2012 Referral: Item 14-NB. Recommendation. The 220th General Assembly (2012) directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), Presbyterian Ministry to the UN, and Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to study and consider actions to bring justice to the disputed territory of Western Sahara, considered by many international jurists to be illegally occupied by Morocco, including the issue of corporate engagement and the renewal of diplomatic efforts to support self-determination, and report to the 221st General Assembly (2014). (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 61, 64, 1347 of the CD; p. 280 of the print copy)

Introduction: This response begins by describing the concern of the minister commissioner who initiated this action on behalf of Western Sahara, a territory on the Northwestern coast of Africa, South of Morocco and North of Mauritania. The response continues with a short review of the history of this disputed region, a review of its relevance to other matters of self-determination, particularly the occupation of Palestine, and concludes with recommendations for further study and action. The debate over Palestine has received far more attention from the 2012 and previous assemblies. As a supporter of nonviolent economic pressure on Israel to end that occupation, the commissioner maintained that the church should take a morally consistent position on an analogous situation: that of Western Sahara. The 220th General Assembly (2012) affirmed that the matter was worthy of further study and directed Presbyterian Mission Agency staff to prepare a report to guide action by the next General Assembly. Because the case raises important moral and legal questions, it requires careful exposition. Commissioners pressed for time may wish to read only the first and last two sections.

Posing the question: The commissioner drew the Peacemaking and International Affairs Committee’s attention to the work of Stephen Zunes, one of the most steadfast advocates of self-determination for Western Sahara. Zunes, a political scientist at the University of San Francisco, is an expert on nonviolent social change, including faith-inspired strategies of resistance. Zunes has listened to the voices of Western Sahara people, voices that are hard for us to hear directly. His position is concisely stated:

Morocco, like Israel, is in violation of a series of United Nations Security Council resolutions and a landmark decision of the International Court of Justice regarding their occupation. Morocco, like Israel, has illegally moved tens of thousands of settlers into the occupied territory. Morocco, like Israel, engages in gross and systematic human rights abuses in the occupied territories. Morocco, like Israel, has illegally built a separation wall through the occupied territories. Morocco, like Israel, relies on the United States and other Western support to maintain the occupation by rendering the UN powerless to enforce international law. Morocco, like Israel, is able to maintain the occupation in part through the support of multinational corporations.

This set of claims requires examination, but Zunes takes this comparison to suggest that nonviolent economic pressure should be put on Morocco in the same manner that Israel—or Israel’s settlements—are the focus of a boycott, divestment, and sanctions (BDS) campaign. Further, he contends that the campaign for Palestine would be strengthened if such a similar campaign were directed at the government of Morocco and the companies supporting its rule in Western Sahara. Other analogous situations could be considered for this strategy (China over Tibet, India over Kashmir, and Indonesia over East Timor in the past). At the case of Western Sahara is arguably clearest due to a history of unfulfilled United Nations resolutions. At root both the Western Sahara and Palestinian struggles are seen to be about the enforcement of international law.

In addition to the academic work of Stephen Zunes and Jacob Mundy, a careful review of the legal debate over Western Sahara was published by the New York Bar Association’s Committee on the United Nations in June, 2012. Other summary background resource for this study can be found in The Situation of Human Rights in the Palestinian Territories Occupied Since 1967, published by the United Nations in September, 2012. Key legal opinion on Western Sahara’s status and use of its resources is that of UN Undersecretary for Legal Affairs Hans Corell in 2002.

There are three primary, if partial, counter-arguments to the position of Zunes and others. The first is to claim that Morocco has a right or sufficient justification to annex Western Sahara, (either through recognized historical links or through a regional security argument). Second, Western Sahara is listed by the United Nations as a “Non-Self-Governing Territory,” one “whose people have not yet attained a full measure of self-government,” according to the UN Charter’s definition. Thus, even if the actions of Morocco are effectively occupation, its legal status is different. And third, on a practical level, the domination of a relatively small group of people by others who share a somewhat similar history, religion, and ethnicity, is not of the same strategic and geopolitical significance as the occupation of Palestine, which keeps approximately twelve million people stateless and without full human rights on the basis of different ethnicity and religion.

Because the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) takes public positions based upon social witness policies that are, in turn, based on biblical and confessional understandings as well as analysis of data and “facts on the ground” (such as this report), it is essential to note the church’s long support for human rights and self-determination (including liberation from colonialism). To cite the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948):

that every individual and organ of society ... shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction.

To make the applicability of the declaration fully universal, Article 2 states:

... no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, trust, non-self-governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty [italics added].

Brief Recent History: Western Sahara is about the size of Great Britain but with a population estimated at 550,000. The territory was colonized by Spain and called Spanish Sahara. That period lasted from the late 1800s through 1976. Thus it lasted as a colony longer than many countries decolonized in the 1960s. Like other former colonies, its boundaries reflect outside interests as its inhabitants were primarily nomadic Arab tribes, generally known as Sahrawis. Members of these tribes comprise the nationalist Polisario Front that began a struggle for independence from Spain in 1973. Polisario Front stands for “Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro.”
The people of Western Sahara, like those of Morocco, are almost exclusively Sunni Muslim. There are no church partners of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Western Sahara.

The Franco dictatorship in Spain was encouraged toward decolonization both by UN policies and a popular rebellion. Madrid indicated that it would hold a referendum on the future of the territory in 1975. At the same time, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) ruled in October of 1975 in favor of the right of self-determination for the Sahrawi people, against claims by both Morocco and Mauritania. Morocco’s claims were based on traditions among some tribes to pledge support to the Sultan of Morocco. For Mauritania, there were close ethnic ties among some Mauritanian and Sahrawi groups. A special United Nations mission had visited the territory in 1975, reporting that a strong majority of the population supported independence with the Polisario rather than incorporation into either Morocco or Mauritania. (A recent commentator, Mohammed Daadaoui, responding to Zunes’ pro-independence position cited above, reiterates the Moroccan traditional claims.)

No referendum was held in 1975, however. To strengthen its claims to the territory and effectively prevent Spain from holding the referendum, the Moroccan government organized a march reported at more than 300,000 people, crossing the border from a southern Moroccan city and going several miles into Spanish Sahara. In Jacob Mundy’s analysis, “Madrid was put in a no-win situation because the UN Security Council refused to stand up to Morocco. … Following the Nov. 14, 1975, Madrid Accords between Morocco, Spain, and Mauritania, they began a tripartite administration [through] the final withdrawal of Spain at the end of February 1976. That Morocco’s military control of Western Sahara began while the territory was still under Spanish jurisdiction is relevant to its status.

The War Period

The day after power passed from the Spanish to Moroccan and Mauritanian authorities, the Polisario ceremonially established the Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic. Conflict began between Polisario forces and the Moroccan and Mauritanian militaries. Mauritania withdrew from Western Sahara in 1979, following a series of losses to Polisario forces and internal political strife, but the conflict between Morocco and the Polisario continued. (Mauritania has less than 4 million people, including an estimated 140,000 slaves; Morocco has about 35 million people). In the 1980s, the Moroccan military constructed an extended sand wall (“the Berm”) to secure the most populous and productive parts of the territory, including its entire coastline. Initially, it protected only key cities, but by 1987 the Berm enclosed two thirds of Western Sahara, excluding primarily desert wasteland in the east of the territory.

Completed with landmines, fences, and electronic surveillance, the Berm was effective at discouraging extended Polisario raids in Moroccan-controlled territory prior to a ceasefire in 1989. Morocco controls the area within the Berm; the Polisario controls the Free Zone east of it and observes the ceasefire. Thus the Berm is largely unpatrolled, though there are Moroccan military forts and bases at key locations behind it.

Ceasefire

Sporadic violence between Polisario and Moroccan forces had continued until 1991, when the United Nations Security Council passed a resolution recalling terms agreed to by both parties two years prior. The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) was established by Security Council resolution 690 (1991) of 29 April 1991, in accordance with “the settlement proposals,” as accepted on 30 August 1988 by Morocco and the (Fronte POLISARIO). MINURSO monitored the ceasefire, to which both sides acceded, and took steps, such as identifying and registering voters, in preparation for a referendum on the sovereignty of Western Sahara.

Due to the Moroccan government’s rejection of MINURSO’s proposed voter rolls, again there was no referendum. The Houston Agreement, reached by Moroccan and Polisario representatives after the expected 1992 referendum failed to materialize, anticipated a referendum in 1998, which, similarly, did not come to fruition. The UN Security Council passed a resolution in 2003 endorsing the “Baker Plan,” a plan developed by UN special envoy James Baker. The Baker Plan called for five years of local rule (under Moroccan sovereignty), followed by a referendum on independence. This plan was disregarded by the Moroccan government.

As a kind of counter-proposal and as a response to a stalled process, in 2007 Morocco offered a plan for limited autonomy well short of independence. This plan provides for greater local rule, accompanied by a referendum that would give Western Saharan voters (including Moroccan residents, but possibly excluding those living outside Moroccan control) the option between full Moroccan rule or limited autonomy under Moroccan sovereignty. Rejected as a false choice by the Polisario and many Sahrawi, neither this referendum nor the establishment of empowered local government has taken place. Moroccan media generally refer to Western Sahara as the “Southern Provinces.”

Situation on the Ground

Western Sahara has been under Moroccan rule for thirty-eight years. During that time, conditions and demographics have changed dramatically, but the sentiments of most Sahrawi have not. While a minority (mainly Sahrawi born and living in Morocco proper) vocally oppose the Polisario and agree with Moroccan claims to the territory, the vast majority of Sahrawis resent Moroccan rule and the political oppression that enforces it. Those living within the Moroccan controlled area are split on preference for complete independence or for strong autonomy with ties to Morocco (usually hoping for something stronger than what is offered by the 2007 autonomy plan). Universally, even among Sahrawi who support Moroccan rule, there is a desire that the police and security forces be Sahrawi instead of Moroccan, as they presently are.3

Moroccan rule is enforced by systematic political repression that violates human rights, albeit on a limited basis. Effectively, there is only limited freedom of speech. While people may privately speak out against Moroccan rule, public statements, public protests, and even possession of the Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic flag are typically met with arrest and often with beatings. A 2007 cable from the US Embassy in Morocco’s capitol, Rabat, (revealed by WikiLeaks) reports that in Layoune (the most populous city), “in general, young Sahrawis are afraid to be out at night due to fear of the police. Sahrawis are still being arrested and beaten for political offenses.”4 Protests in 2005 were met with a broad crackdown,5 and a 2010 raid, which left several dead, was condemned by the UN Security Council.6 Groups advocating for human rights or Sahrawi self-determination have been prevented from registering as NGOs (nongovernmental organizations) and denied access to the legal system.7 A strong police presence in Layoune (disproportionate to the city’s small crime rate) stands ready to respond to unrest and harasses, arrests, and encourages known human rights protesters and advocates of independence to emigrate (deportations have also occurred).8

For the Polisario-linked population living in refugee camps in Algeria, it is important to recognize that Algeria exerts some control over the Sahrawis and is not a democracy. Algeria, in fact, fought a very brutal war with Algerian Islamists, costing approximately 200,000 lives, and still has internal and external security concerns. As this is written, the fourteen-year rule of its president, Abdelaziz Bouteflika, continues despite his having had a stroke in April of 2013. Rule by the National Liberation Front of Algeria is expected to continue, despite relative economic stagnation, whether or not Bouteflika remains president. So far the Arab Awakening has not led to much change in Algeria or in the response of the Polisario. If Algeria treats the Sahrawis and Polisario as a proxy to weaken its Moroccan neighbor, it is not clear that this is a very active effort.

Economics and Demographics

Western Sahara has an undeveloped economy with unproven but potentially rich mineral resources. A leaked U.S. State Department cable doubts that Western Sahara could be economically viable as an independent country, discounting the world’s fourth largest phosphate deposits and some probable reserves of gold, uranium, oil, and other minerals, in addition to still-rich fisheries.9 For now, the Moroccan government is providing subsidies, which included an $800 million investment program from 2004 to 2008. Layoune has a government subsidized desalinization plant that provides water at a significant loss. Other basic goods, such as gasoline and cooking oil, are subsidized. Moroccan businesses enjoy a tax-exemption. The Moroccan government has invested in fishing, Western Sahara's largest industry (two-thirds of total employment), building fishing villages, and training people to fish.10 Residents of Western Sahara benefit from this government support, though with control of their own resources, Sahrawis could conceivably have a much higher per capita income.

Moroccan subsidies exist alongside discrimination and restriction of political freedoms. While fishing has come to be the most significant employer, it still employs few Sahrawis. The Sahrawi have historically lived inland, and have little tradition of fishing. According to an embassy cable, “well-informed government supporters as well as critics agreed with reports Embassy has long heard that a large part of the fishing concessions are controlled by GOM [Government of Morocco] security officials, specifically including Army Chief Benanni and Gendarmerie chief Benslimane. Kalihenna and Sahrawi businessman close to him have reportedly also been rewarded with lucrative fishing licenses.”11 Corruption, however, is certainly not unheard of in Morocco itself.

Morocco appears likely to achieve victory on demographic and financial grounds, despite lack of progress towards a formal resolution to the conflict, as tax breaks and subsidies provide incentive for Moroccans to settle in Western Saharan cities. Rabat holds greater financial resources, and has shown itself willing to use those resources as a velvet glove to win tacit acceptance of its rule, while wielding its iron fist swiftly to crush hints of resistance. The Polisario, in contrast, has neither significant military nor significant financial capabilities, and continues to exist primarily because the Algerian government provides necessities to the refugee camps it controls (which contain approximately 100,000 people).

The United States government sees Morocco as a strategic ally, and, while maintaining that the Moroccan government must participate in serious negotiations with the intention of holding a referendum, supports Morocco with significant foreign aid. Such expenditures cost $182.9 million in 2012, and were mostly economic. United States’ monetary support for Morocco’s military was higher during the cold war (about $40 million per year), but has decreased in the last two decades (only $4 million in 2000, though that amount may have since increased slightly). Officially neutral, the United States government effectively accepts the status quo, while quietly encouraging movement towards an agreement and referendum. France, Morocco’s former colonial power, has a closer relationship and greater influence.

Western Sahara exports octopus and sardines, as well as other fish, and one significant farm exports 5,000 tons of tomatoes annually to Europe and Canada. These products are labeled “Produit du Maroc” (Product of Morocco) before being shipped. Some road salt and phosphate rock is exported to European countries, Venezuela, and New Zealand (the road salt is mined by Crystal Mountain, a U.S. company). Kosmos Energy, a U.S. company, is active in offshore oil exploration, and PCS Fertilizer and Mosaic Co. may have purchased Western Saharan mined phosphate rock. Saharan sand is shipped to repair Canary Island and other beaches. Excepting fishing, the economic impact of international trade is small, and U.S. companies hold a small portion of that trade.

The arguments against forcing Morocco to allow a referendum or even to put human rights monitors in Western Sahara (proposed by the United States in April, 2013, responding to sporadic protests) center around the alleged dangers of instability, such as a situation of weak government with Islamic insurgents or tribal divisions. While the Polisario is sometimes criticized for Socialist-sounding language, it is not an Islamist movement. Yet the claim is that terrorist groups could set up in the open territory. Jenn Abelson, reporting for the Boston Globe in June, 2013, reported:

“An independent state is not viable in Sahara. You have to be very clear for security reasons. Today what is happening in Mali is happening in the Sahara. It is threatening the security of the Sahara and everywhere,” said Youssef Armani, minister delegate of foreign affairs and cooperation of the Kingdom of Morocco, in a meeting with journalists in May. “There is no room for a failed state in the region.”

In contrast to that claim (from a palace-appointed official), the Sahrawis practice a form of Muslim jurisprudence that rejects Salafi-style extremism and is more liberal than Moroccan Islam when it comes to women’s rights to equal inheritance and divorce rights and women’s public leadership roles. According to Zunes and Mundy, intra-Polisario disputes have mainly been solved peaceably. Algeria (as noted above) is very unlikely to ally itself with Islamic extremism.

Legal Questions and United Nations Status

Western Sahara is formally listed by the United Nations as a “Non-Self-Governing Territory.” This is a term distinct from “colonization” or “occupation.” It identifies an area as possessing neither independence nor formal incorporation in another country. United States territories such as Guam and the U.S. Virgin Islands are included, but some colonial possessions, such as Singapore, were included in this list before being granted independence. Palestine is not on the list of Non Self-Governing Territories, but is considered occupied; hence there is some difference in UN categorization. Spain is annually listed as an “administering power” of Western Sahara by the UN General Assembly’s 4th committee, so in a sense Morocco is controlling a once Spanish-administered non-self-governing territory. Except for a 1975 resolution calling for Morocco to withdraw its initial “Green March” into W. Sahara, security council resolutions focus on the referendum and do not explicitly call for Morocco to exit.

At the same time, in 1979, the UN General Assembly (Resolution 34/37) deplored what it called Morocco’s occupation of Western Sahara. According to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), “… it makes no difference whether an occupation has received Security Council approval, what its aim is, or indeed whether it is called an ‘invasion,’ ‘liberation,’ ‘administration’ or ‘occupation.’”

According to Harvard University’s International Humanitarian Law Research Initiative, “The UN has formally agreed that Western Sahara is an occupied territory; therefore all parties would be obligated to follow the mandates of the Geneva Convention IV.” Occupation is strongly implied in the 2002 UN Legal Counsel opinion because it clearly says Morocco did not lawfully come into possession of Western Sahara practice, from leaked diplomatic cables and outside observer reports, Western Sahara seems to be occupied and many NGO’s use the term.
Questions of international law with regards to Western Sahara revolve around two key principles, the right to self-determination and the right to territorial integrity. The referendum was designed to address the former principle, after the UN determined that the Sahrawis were indeed a people. The latter principle is negated by the Berm, a wall of separation dividing the territory; international law states that territory seized in war is not legitimately possessed by the conqueror and should not be colonized. That the population continues to self-identify as Sahrawis, despite the de facto annexation and economic subsidies, suggests that a referendum still could go against Morocco if one were held.

If it is the case that self-determination must be allowed (as is the position of the New York City Bar’s Committee on the United Nations, which uses the word “occupation” to describe the situation), then the continued suppression of that right through the possession of the territory without movement towards a referendum is illegal and pressure must be put on the government of Morocco to allow for a referendum. Excepting many members of the Arab League and a few other nations, most nations have not recognized Morocco’s annexation and eighty-four have recognized Western Sahara as a nation, as has the African Union (many of whose members can recall the de-colonization process quite clearly).

“Divesting of All Occupations?” The Analogy Between Western Sahara and Palestine

To return to the commissioner’s original proposal, it seems clear that both Sahrawis and Palestinians are denied self-determination and that their land and resources are controlled undemocratically by neighboring powers who have brought in waves of settlers. Along with demographic pressure, there is cultural pressure to relinquish identity and history. Clearly the situation of Palestine is much more in the world’s eye and a particular cause of resentment to Muslims, as noted in much testimony on terrorism and anti-U.S. attitudes. Yet the determination of whether to apply similar BDS pressures cannot be made simply on the basis of the scale of public awareness or the number of people involved. Especially to respond to Zunes’ initial comparisons, there must also be some contrasts made between the situations of the Sahrawis and the Palestinians.

In general, Morocco’s occupation or annexation seems much less violent than that of Israel’s subjugation of the Palestinians, and it is accompanied by economic subsidies, rather than the economic stranglehold Israel maintains throughout the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and especially Gaza. Furthermore, Israel is engaged in an ongoing campaign of dispossession that denies citizenship to Palestinians and deports those without residency permits, while Morocco seeks to incorporate Sahrawis as citizens and does not create internal borders via checkpoints, fences, and special sections of its Berm. Nor does Morocco discriminate against Sahrawis on the basis of their religion, while Israel clearly treats even its acknowledged 20 percent Arab population as second-class citizens, none of whose religious sites (Muslim or Christian) are afforded protection by law from encroachment or isolation. Israel also maintains constant surveillance and frequent incursions into the Palestinian territories that would, by analogy, be the territory on the Eastern side of the Berm.

True, as with Palestinians, many Western Saharans live as refugees (more than 25,000 in Mauritania; between 100,000 and 125,000 in Algeria), but it is not clear that a negotiated agreement in Western Sahara would necessarily restrict their right of return, even if that agreement meant limited autonomy. Nor does the Polisario make land claims on Morocco, whose borders are not undeclared, as are Israel’s. Thus it could be argued that the situation of Western Sahara could be more amendable to nonviolent agreement, possibly within an agreed upon trial period for any new arrangement, though this idea is somewhat similar to the failed 2003 peace plan. Conversely, due to relative similarities in ethnic and religious heritage, the Sahrawi people are likely more in danger of long-term absorption into the Moroccan population.

Divestment of securities in companies active in Western Sahara, for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), would mean employing criteria and processes of dialogue that would evaluate a range of strategies for accomplishing the objective of self-determination. Those criteria include practical factors, such as significant allies and media scrutiny, that speak to the effectiveness of economic pressure, and matters of principle that speak to the integrity of the church as investor (or purchaser, if boycott is envisioned). The initial step in any corporate responsibility work by the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), however, is to begin with research and dialogue with any companies in which the PC(USA) holds investments. This could include seeking information on the employment status of native Sahrawis and the strategic value of products to the Moroccan government, police, and military. Other steps may include shareholder proposals to change corporate policies where improvement rather than cessation is sought. (These processes were done in the “selective, phased” divestment process with key companies that cooperated with South African apartheid, and the same approach has been taken with key companies supporting Israel’s settlements in Palestine.)

Conclusion:

The issues raised by the case of Western Sahara are serious and prompt responsible action by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to support the human rights consensus of United Nations’ and other legal authorities. The situation of the native Sahrawi people is worthy of attention and the resolutions of the United Nations should be implemented, namely referendum and measures to improve human rights. The de facto annexation of the territory bears similarities to Israel’s occupation and effective colonization of Palestine, and other longer processes of nations incorporating other territories into their borders. While the situation of the Sahrawis is not identical to that of the Palestinians, this assessment would support further international justice advocacy for the Sahrawi people, both with governments and with Islamic, interfaith, and ecumenical bodies.

Item 11-09

[The assembly approved Item 11-09 with amendment. See pp. 65, 67.]

A Resolution on Behalf of Dominicans of Haitian Descent and any Others Impacted by the Decision 168/13 of the Constitutional Court of the Dominican Republic—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) requests that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to
   a. engage in advocacy for international and local support in favor of Dominicans of Haitian descent and any others impacted by the decision 168/13 of the Constitutional Court of the Dominican Republic,
   b. speak out against statelessness and deportation for Dominicans of Haitian descent and any others impacted by this law,
   c. advocate in favor of equal treatment and access to basic human rights, privileges, and public services for all Dominicans regardless of the nationality of their ancestors.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to write a pastoral letter to congregations in the U.S.A., partner churches in the Dominican Republic, related political offices in Washington, D.C., and the embassy of the U.S.A. in the Dominican Republic about:
   a. the discrimination against Dominicans of Haitian descent and any others impacted by this law,
   b. its consequences toward Dominicans living in the U.S.A.,
   c. its impact in our local congregations that have Dominican members [who’s] [whose] legal status in the U.S.A. may be jeopardized by this decision,
   d. recognition of the injustice and atrocity committed against them, e. the official position of our denomination against all discrimination toward Dominicans of Haitian descent and any others impacted by this law.

3. Encourage the church at all levels—synods, presbyteries, local churches, national committees, and Presbyterian Mission Agency—to
   a. support different initiatives on behalf of Dominicans of Haitian descent and any others impacted by this law,
   b. educate, equip, and empower Presbyterians in relation to this topic,
   c. pray for our brothers and sisters who may be impacted as a result of the interpretation of this article in the Dominican Constitution and court ruling.

Rationale:

“When an alien resides with you in your land, you shall not oppress the alien. The alien who resides with you shall be to you as the citizen among you; you shall love the alien as yourself, for you were aliens in the land of Egypt” (Lev. 19:33–34, NRSV).

“You shall love your neighbor as yourself” (Mk. 12:31, NRSV).

The 2010 Constitution of the Dominican Republic defines the criteria for Dominican nationality as follows: “Any person born within the national territory with the exception of children born of foreign members of the Diplomatic mission and consulates, foreigners who are in transit or reside illegally in the Dominican territory.”

On September 23, 2013, the Constitutional Court of the Dominican Republic handed down decision 168/13, whereby it gave a new interpretation as regards the acquisition of nationality by individuals born in the country to foreign parents who are in transit or undocumented.

In point 5.1.d., the decision states, “that not all people who have been born in the Dominican Republic are born Dominicans.” The decision reads further, “a person who is not born Dominican … the child of a foreigner mother who at the time of birth is in an irregular situation and , consequently, cannot justify her entrance and permanency in the Dominican Republic” (5.1.j).18

Based on this interpretation, individuals who previously had been recognized as having Dominican nationality were de-nationalized. This controversial citizenship ruling would affect individuals who formally registered as Dominicans as far back as 1929. They would retroactively no longer qualify for citizenship (5.1.e). So, the potential number of stateless people grows each day, impacting at least three generations of Dominicans.

Many Dominicans who are second or third generation of Haitian descent or any others impacted by this law, who are fully assimilated, who have little or no ties to Haiti or other country of origin of their ancestors, barely speak Creole or any other language different than Spanish, will be in risk of deportation and to remain stateless in the country where they were born. This uncertain future will keep many in a legal limbo.

This court ruling impacts our local PC(USA) congregations, which have Dominican members who may be impacted by this law jeopardizing their legal status in the U.S. In the case of Dominicans who are not U.S. citizens and live here, any future legal process to adjust their status will be in risk since they will be stateless.

Basic human rights and privileges would be denied, like access to public services (health, education, work, shelter, etc), equal participation, citizen and nationality rights.

It is necessary for our denomination to state its position against all discrimination towards Dominicans of Haitian descent and any others impacted by this law, understanding the impact on Dominicans living in the U.S.A and in our local churches since thousands of people could be affected.

Item 11-10

Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance

As with the introduction of past military technologies, the development of moral and legal guidance for the use of drones (remotely piloted aircraft) and cyber/digital surveillance has trailed their deployment. To help remedy this, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

[The assembly approved Item 11-10, Recommendation A., with amendment. See pp. 65, 67–68.]

A. Affirm the following statement and approve Recommendations A.1.–A.8. as follows:

Drones used by the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and United States Armed Forces for national security can easily penetrate enemy lines and linger to conduct surveillance, which enables them to isolate and identify targets more accurately, choose blast trajectories, and use lower-yield weapons. Because they can attack with less collateral damage than other weapons and without jeopardizing the lives of U.S. military personnel, military officers and civilian leaders are tempted to use them frequently, sometimes in ways that violate national sovereignty and human and constitutional rights. Because they arouse resentment among local populations, even when used sparingly, military drones may undermine strategic objectives (such as winning support of a population facing an insurgency). Because drone programs have been secret, they cripple the capacity of citizens to interpret the “blow-back” they arouse and to exercise democratic oversight over foreign policy. And because they are already receiving substantial research and development funding in the U.S. and elsewhere, they are increasingly “the new face of war.”

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

1. Encourages the church to engage in and lead the public in a robust discussion of the moral use of drones in national security. This discussion should be informed by biblical principles, as well as “Just War” and “Just Peacemaking” criteria.

2. Opposes in principle the targeted killing or assassination of suspects without warrant or due process outside of the context of declared military engagement or observed terror activity, and grieves the collateral deaths of civilians that are inevitable, if less than with some other weapons, and the deaths of our enemies themselves if these weapons facilitate.

3. Urges the United States Congress to pass legislation governing military drones. These laws should articulate procedures that put checks on executive power and establish civilian oversight. The goal is to ensure that in any justification of targeting human beings that the Constitutional rights of U.S. citizens are protected, international law upheld, noncombatants safeguarded, U.S. strategic goals served, and the larger goal of peace and justice advanced. To these ends, the Central Intelligence Agency should not run any part of the weaponized drone program and should focus on intelligence collection as its primary mandate.

4. Urges the U.S. to make public and submit its rules for military drones to institutions of the international legal community for analysis and evaluation so that, together with other nations, we may develop international conventions governing their use and prevent a ‘drone race.’ Under the Law of Armed Conflict (LOAC), the United States and other nations should be held responsible for drone uses that violate the rules of war or human rights such as acts of terrorism; assassination (killing without due process); destruction of natural resources, habitat, and infrastructure; and other crimes.

5. In the absence of conventions outlawing drone use in combat or counterterrorism, urges that targeted killings of suspected terrorists be given more effective judicial and congressional review through the use of warrants, advocates for the accused (such as a privacy advocate and/or opposing counsel in Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act/surveillance court proceedings), and regular after-the-fact public reporting by any and all secret courts, so that elected bodies may evaluate the costs and benefits of counterterrorism measures and find alternatives, and so that no one person, even a president acting in military capacity, could order the killing or indefinite detention of a suspected enemy exempt from judicial review.

6. Urges, in cases where the proposed targeted killing of suspects amounts to the declaration of war, that congressional approval (beyond surveillance court approval) be sought, as for other wars, and that any such declaration or approval include tax revenues sufficient to cover all costs expected from these military operations.

7. Supports the prohibition of fully autonomous or “robot” drones that designate targets and “decide” to shoot combatants based on computer calculations and automated reactions and urges review of targeting decisions such as those based on tracking call phone SIM cards that may lead to unintended deaths.

8. Instructs the appropriate offices of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly, in ecumenical and interfaith cooperation whenever possible, to advocate for such legal protections of human rights and regulation of military drones (UAVs), and to produce resources to interpret and assist discussion and exploration of the use of remotely piloted aircraft and related technologies.

[The assembly approved Item 11-10, Recommendation B., with amendment. See pp. 65, 68.]

B. Affirm the following statement and approve Recommendations B.1.–B.3. as follows:

Since drones are able to linger over targets for large spans of time without detection, their domestic use by governmental agencies, commercial enterprises, and civilians presents significant privacy and civil liberties concerns.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

1. Encourages the church to engage in and lead the public in a robust discussion of the moral dimensions of domestic drone use, including Federal Aviation Administration regulations.

2. Recommends that the United States Congress[, other Federal, state, and/or local agencies, as appropriate,] pass legislation [and/or regulations] governing the use of domestic drones so that Constitutional rights are upheld.

3. Urges the adoption of policies that would prevent domestic drones from being weaponized.
The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

1. Encourages the church to engage in and lead the public in a robust discussion of the morality of digital and electronic surveillance and of cyber warfare justifications.

2. Recommends the United States Congress pass legislation to increase accountability of surveillance agencies and commercial contractors engaged in surveillance. In particular, we call for greater transparency of the purposes and budgets of all “secret” agencies, including the expanded Special Operations Command (USSOCOM), even those whose regular operations may be justifiably concealed from most U.S. citizens for security reasons. We encourage the development of new forms of congressional oversight to monitor the government’s collection and use of phone, internet, and text message “meta-data.” We commend laws to protect whistleblowers, prevent collection of personal data without a warrant, and ensure diversity in judges reviewing warrants for individual surveillance, data-mining, and indiscriminate or bulk data collection, including that of non-U.S. nationals and foreign leaders.

3. Understanding that routine leniency toward people who violate their security clearances would undermine operational security, we encourage the consideration of pardon and/or the mitigation of punitive sentencing for whistleblowers along with rigorous analysis of any damages alleged to national security. To the extent that potential suspects fall under civilian rather than military jurisdiction, Department of Justice procedures should allow for the public interest to be represented appropriately in court. In cases where military tribunals do not allow for the full exercise of Constitutionally protected rights, as at Guantanamo and arguably in several whistleblower cases, the Department of Justice should be able to make appeals within the civil justice system.

[The assembly approved Item 11-10, Recommendation D., with amendment. See pp. 65, 68.]

D. Affirm the following statement and approve Recommendations C.1.–C.3. as follows:

The church’s emphasis on spiritual freedom of conscience and the work of the Holy Spirit in community lead us to maintain that congregational life is protected from governmental and commercial intrusion. In order to uphold both privacy rights and the separation of church and state, we regard all spaces of worship as surveillance-free zones. Aware of the potential for abuse by both government agencies and criminal enterprises, surveillance of individuals should only intrude into congregational life under extraordinary circumstances and in each case should require a warrant or court order. [Recognizing the role of technology in facilitating overreaching surveillance, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) encourages the church to examine its own technological choices and, where feasible, use hardware and software, such as Free and Open Source software, that allows us to avoid participation in this surveillance except under extraordinary circumstances with a warrant or court order.]

Rationale

[Note: In order to test the ideas behind this resolution, an earlier version of this rationale was widely distributed as a resource for Adult Education by special arrangement with The Thoughtful Christian, a product of the Westminster/John Knox Press. The Advisory Committee expresses its appreciation to the Press for this arrangement, and welcomes comment on it.]
Drones or unmanned aircraft systems (UAS) are remotely piloted aircraft used for surveillance and/or destruction of military targets. Drones are controversial because they have become a key element of contemporary warfare, allowing the killing of opponents without risk to the drone operator and generally without due process or public notice. Compared with the fifty targeted killings during the Administration of George W. Bush, by February 2013 the Obama Administration had used drones more than 350 times, killing an estimated 3,500 people, mainly in Afghanistan, Pakistan, Yemen, and Somalia. This brief study will examine the moral risks of using a method of warfare more similar to execution, the political risks of “blowback” from populations living under weaponized drones, and the dangers of a drone race among countries using new aerial platforms for boundary maintenance and the expansion of control. Unless new rules can be developed and enforced internationally, drones will increasingly be the new face of military intervention and occupation as well as intelligence gathering.

There are also an increasing number of peaceful uses for these unmanned aircraft, some of which can be quite small and tailored to particular functions. Surveillance, however, is a primary drone function and one that frequently overlaps with the increase in cyber and digital surveillance by a variety of means. Documents revealed by whistle-blowers have revealed the enormous and intrusive scope of previously undisclosed surveillance of U.S. citizens, effectively treating all citizens as suspects and providing little public accountability for personal and mass data collected. Wide-ranging surveillance by the National Security Administration and other of the sixteen U.S. intelligence agencies has also violated the privacy of world leaders and possibly involved industrial espionage, a practice we deplore in cyber warfare efforts of other nations.

On May 23, 2013, President Obama addressed some of the moral and legal questions about the military use of drones, announcing that some new rules had been put in place, while still keeping the actual rules under secret classification. While suggesting that the use of lethal drones would be reduced and shifted from the CIA to the military, the president defended their continued use in the new period of more focused warfare, particularly in Afghanistan and Pakistan so long as our troops are there. After describing the range of drone uses, this study will look at the main ethical and legal questions and then return to the question of what kind of war their use implies. Drone warfare and its processes of target selection are likely to illustrate the tensions between governmental secrecy and public accountability for some time to come.

The surveillance work of drones raises broader and unavoidable considerations about electronic surveillance generally, which are treated in a section following the assessment of drones below.

A. Peaceful and Military Purposes

Aerial surveillance by spy plane became well-known with the shooting down of a U-2 reconnaissance plane in 1960 by the Soviets. Subsequently, the United States came to rely more on satellites, and with the advent of global positioning devices (GPS) on handheld smartphones with location applications, what had formerly been restricted to government surveillance has become widely accessible. Similarly, a wide sweep of engineering advances in cameras, telecommunications, nanotechnology, and computerization allow for real-time video of virtually any location on earth.

The primary peaceful uses for drones or UAVs—unmanned aerial vehicles—are in the following areas:

1. Policing and border surveillance, including the use of smaller drones to relay information from individual residences and inaccessible accident scenes.
2. Newsgathering, in some cases where manned helicopters would previously have been used.
3. Weather forecasting and atmospheric measurement, such as by the “Global Hawk” used by NASA, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Drones may also help in rescuing flood victims as well as tracking extreme weather.
4. Agricultural uses such as crop dusting and irrigation control.
5. Traffic control and crowd assessment.
6. Protection of archeological sites and endangered species, including measurement of climate change impacts.
7. Search and rescue operations across vast expanses of water or land.

The commercial and governmental use of UAVs in the United States is governed by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). Previous height restrictions (to 400 feet), no-fly zones around airports, and requirements that drones be kept in eye-range are all under review with many more permitted uses emerging. Along with official uses, the dangers of surveillance by neighbors and other forms of intrusion raise questions about privacy and civil liberties, extending the definitions of what might constitute reasonable search, permissible observation, and potential publication of images. While drones are used to patrol the U.S.-Mexico border and even to penetrate further into Mexico, several U.S. jurisdictions such as Seattle have sought permits to use drones for policing purposes. One city, Charlottesville, Virginia, became the first to oppose the domestic use of drones. Their February 4, 2013, resolution reads, in part: “The rapid implementation of drone technology throughout the United States poses a serious threat to the privacy and constitutional rights of the American people.”5

The military uses of the some 11,000 drones possessed by the United States have been mainly related to surveillance and the replacement of ground or submarine-based missile platforms. Since 2002, the United States has been the primary user of drones in warfare, equipping the airplane-sized Predator and Reaper drones with sophisticated missiles designed to hit targets of varied size. There are also smaller drones, such as the 400-pound Shadow, or the backpack-sized Switchblade, that carry little or no weaponry.6 Lesser numbers of drones have been produced by Russia, China, Israel, and Iran, and as many as seventy countries have some form of drone or aerial robot.

The basic operation of large and small drones is by pilots on the ground, often based in the United States, who are able to observe targets for long periods of time due to advances in flight duration. This capacity for prolonged observation has reportedly added to the accuracy of drone targeting and a reduction in civilian deaths (often termed “collateral damage”). The work of drone pilots has been compared to video-game play, but the strain of long observation, the detailed knowledge of their human targets and the required examination of sometimes gristy impact scenes has led to forms of PTSD among drone operators.7 This kind of stress can be intensified rather than relieved by the daily transitions from the warzone on screen to normal family life on a safe U.S. military base.

Under the rules of war, drone pilots (and the people they may be with) are legitimate military targets. While the lives of drone pilots in the U.S. may be physically safe, the life of spotters and intelligence personnel on the ground in remote areas of Pakistan, Yemen, or Somalia is less so. U.S. military and covert personnel as well as local opponents of Al Qaeda, Taliban, or other groups send in data to guide the selection of targets, often with remarkable precision. Other targeting comes through identification of cell phone frequencies and intercepted communications. Sometimes the status of targeted persons is disputed, with allegations that U.S. forces are given the names of family or tribal opponents who may not be members of terrorist, Islamist, or other opposing groups. In some cases “signature” strikes are unleashed at suspected opponents who fit a suspect profile by appearing to position a roadside bomb, for example. In at least one case the U.S. has acknowledged targeting a wedding party; local groups allege more civilian deaths than the U.S. military.8

At least in some cases, authorization for the killing of suspects comes from the president of the United States himself. While the use of drones had been an official secret up to May 23, 2013, it was made known that potential targets were presented to President Obama by top security officials. Although the killing or capture of Osama bin Laden was directed to be done by a special forces team, similar reviews of suspected targets are carried out on a regular basis to eliminate the leaders of Al Qaeda. The revelation of this “hands-on” role by the president has been affirmed by some and criticized by others as a diminishment of his office.9 Others maintain that presidential oversight reflects the moral seriousness with which the Executive Branch of government takes the use of drones.

B. New and Still Evolving Technologies and Applications

A major center for new drone development in the United States is Dayton, Ohio, partly due to the presence of the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base and the Air Force Institute of Technology.10 Some military drones are piloted from that base and many start-up companies are also located there, some receiving grants from DARPA, the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. One DARPA initiative is to support the development of drones that mimic birds and even insects and hence would be difficult to detect.11 Researchers are concerned to build in mechanisms that will prevent drone crashes or the “hacking” or jamming of drone controls. These concerns are magnified when robot drones are contemplated that process their own photographic and other data, identify targets by use of preprogrammed pattern recognition, and “decide” to fire without human input. Beyond the Dayton area concentration of drone entrepreneurs, established military contractors such as Lockheed Martin and Boeing are also working on drones.

Robotic defenses that identify threats, target, and “decide” to fire are already part of the AEGIS system that defends American Naval ships. It is claimed that in November of 2012 the Department of Defense issued a ten-year moratorium on robotic drones, to analyze the ethics of “smart drones,” as there is concern about the moral implications of self-directed robot drones that remove human decision from the killing process.12 Israel has developed a hovering drone called Harpy that can be programed to attack any radar signal that its programming does not recognize, while other work on robotics is picking up steam.13

II. Key Ethical Issues

The military use of drones brings into play traditional “Just War” criteria as well as newer considerations related to the technology and the nature and even name of our current hostilities. Just War criteria include just cause (usually self-defense), last resort, legitimate authority, right intent (redressing a wrong), and likelihood of success, seen as a victory that is also a just peace, or at least an outcome better than would have obtained without war. There are also rules for the just conduct of war, proportionality of response to threat, protection of civilians, and avoidance of atrocities.14

The newer considerations have to do with the role of soldiers and targets on an uncertain battlefield with an indefinite timeline. At least in the current theatres of drone warfare, the soldiers controlling drones do not put themselves at risk while... those being targeted may have no knowledge of their degree of risk. The first group is comprised of professional soldiers, but may include contractors and personnel from the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). The second group may see themselves as local patriots defending their homeland or devout Muslims protecting Islam from contamination. When killed, members of the second group are often seen as martyrs, which underlines the religious dimension to warfare in the greater Middle East.

A. Just Cause

Speaking to a new approach to drone warfare on May 23, 2013, President Obama referred to the post-9/11 Authorization for Use of Military Force as the basis for ongoing military operations against Al Qaeda, including the use of drones. That legislation, adopted 9/18/01, authorized force against any groups or nations responsible for the terrorist attack on the United States and since has been extended to cover military operations in Iraq, Somalia, Yemen, and elsewhere, even against groups that did not exist in 2001. Yet one of the implications of the president’s speech was that the scale of the war on terror was to be reduced, suggesting that the threat level from overseas terrorists had declined and hence the argument for warfare based on self-defense is weakened. One main alternative to a war model for pursuing purported terrorists is a policing model that would treat them as criminals to be brought to justice, but this would also call into question the need for summary execution by drone-fired missile or other means.

B. Last Resort

This criterion would support the use of drones in cases where neither the U.S. military nor that of the host country could capture and detain suspects posing an imminent danger to the United States or its allies. A “white paper” leaked in February 2013 used the concept of “imminent” threat to assert the potential danger from active terror suspects at any time or place, widening the battlefield, extending the potential duration of military action, and justifying the drone killing of U.S. citizens, such as Anwar al-Alwaki in Yemen in September 2011. Also called a “drone memo,” this sixteen-page document figured in the confirmation hearings for John Brennan, new CIA director, with the senators largely agreeing that necessity required some use of drones, with the notable exception of Senator Rand Paul, who filibustered to receive assurance that no U.S. citizen would ever again be targeted. (Mr. Paul’s filibuster revealed bipartisan discomfort with drones, but he did not receive an unequivocal assurance about potential U.S. targets.) In terms of overseas strategy, an alternative here might be to consider negotiation and other political/cultural/communal ways to end a thirteen-year war, but this would require redefining the goals of the conflict and perhaps the nature of the enemy. Perhaps ironically, some military and CIA officials want to keep troops in Afghanistan partly to protect drone bases there.

C. Legitimate Authority

Allies in NATO, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, had more than nominal commitments of troops in Afghanistan for varying periods, and a smaller number sent troops to Iraq. This article cannot examine the origins of either primary war, nor the role of the U.S. in Somalia and Yemen, but in no case was war formally declared against another state, nor was war authorized by the United Nations Security Council. Al Qaeda and related groups continue as targeted non-state actors, more in the Arabian Peninsula and the Horn of Africa than in Afghanistan and Pakistan, where the Taliban are the primary U.S. opponents, waiting for the bulk of U.S. troops to leave in 2014. The G.W. Bush Administration described the overall U.S. effort as a “War on Terror,” its opponents “an axis of evil.” The question with the use of drones in this context, however, is whether they make it easier and less public to spread hostilities across national boundaries. Even if it is allowed that under U.S. law, the president as commander-in-chief can initiate irregular warfare without a declaration of war, and can keep a CIA-run drone war unacknowledged for six years, this does not answer whether the U.S. and its allies were initiating wars of choice without satisfying criteria of international legitimacy.

D. Intent and Likelihood of Success

The stated purpose of current drone use, as of May 2013, is to “dismantle terrorist networks,” when there is no possibility of capturing, detaining, and trying alleged terrorists. It has been necessary to disavow vengeance and any intent to fight Islam, although many U.S. citizens and public figures consider Islamic fundamentalists to be our enemies. Again, without tracing the shifting rationales and strategies behind our military engagements in the larger Middle East, the question is whether drone warfare carries a likelihood of success. Here it has the decimation of Al Qaeda’s older leadership to claim as victory, yet revenge-seeking militants, including suicide bombers, appear frequently in Afghanistan, Pakistan, and other countries (not to mention Iraq). One scholar has argued that drone warfare has not only produced a hatred of the United States and its drone pilots, sitting far away in dishonorable safety, but that the clear (if denied) approval of drone use by Pakistani and Afghan governments has led to their de-legitimation. Further, Taliban and other groups have gone after the compromised pillars of traditional society, tribal elders and religious leaders, leaving profound disorder and reigniting historic tensions. A counter-argument here would be that weakened societies and failed states need outside support and drones are the most efficient way to provide it.

E. Conduct of War Regarding Drone Strikes

In terms of the conduct of war, President Obama has maintained that drone strikes are more proportionate and spare many more civilian lives than conventional missiles or occupations. They also put fewer U.S. troops in harm’s way than insurgency campaigns. These contenations seem accurate, even if the long-range stated objectives of stable, prosperous, and democratic societies seem quite distant. As one Yemeni witness told a congressional panel, “Now, however, when they think of America, they think of the fear they feel at the drones over their heads. What the violent militants had failed to achieve, one drone strike accomplished in an instant.”

The newer considerations of inadvertent destabilization and target-creep on a shifting battlefield have already been suggested: drone warfare, in legal scholar David Cole’s word, may be too “easy.” Cole points to the clear drop off in numbers of captured Taliban and Al Qaeda as deaths by drone have risen, wondering if the desire to protect U.S. personnel from the risks involved in capture missions has changed the equation for drone use: “In short, drones radically reduce the disincentives to killing. And that may well make a nation prone to use military force before it is truly a last resort. That certainly seems to be what has happened here.”

F. Protection of Civilians

Just War Theory mandates that combatants and noncombatants be distinguished in order to protect noncombatants’ lives. The ability of drones to linger undetected over their targets for long hours gives them the ability of identify and isolate targets, choose a blast trajectory, and use lower yield munitions, lowers the possibility of collateral damage as compared with alternative means of target acquisition (for example, sending in special operations forces, or calling in an airstrike). Granting that drone kills may be generally “cleaner” than conventional missiles, there have been some reports that the automatic targeting of cell phone signals (SIM cards) without other confirmation has led to deaths of civilians near those carrying the phones.

G. Moral Harm to Soldiers

Because Drones linger over targets for a long time, drone operators get to know their targets. Because drone operators are familiar with their targets, they also do their own damage assessment. They see the results of their actions: civilian deaths, the grief of loved ones, the slow deaths and suffering of their targets. This contributes to a form of PTSD that psychologists call “moral harm,” a sense, now well-documented among drone operators, that they have done something immoral and violated something sacred. The asymmetrical dimension of drone warfare, the fact that they do this from the safety of well-protected communities within the U.S. and leave the military base to, say, pick up their kids after school, heightens this sense of moral discontinuity.

III. Legal Questions

The use of remotely piloted aircraft to target suspects raises basic questions of due process under both U.S. and international law. Beyond the Fifth Amendment’s basic concerns for a fair trial, perhaps the most applicable U.S. law is contained in Executive Order 11905, Section 5 (g), signed by President Ford in 1976 after Senator Frank Church’s Select Committee on Intelligence had examined a range of CIA assassination efforts (targets included Patrice Lumumba of Congo, Fidel Castro of Cuba, Ngo Dinh Diem of S. Vietnam). That section reads “no employee of the U.S. Government shall engage in, or conspire to engage in, political assassination.” In 1981, President Reagan issued Executive Order 12333, which in Section 2.11 reads, “No person employed by or acting on behalf of the U.S. Government shall engage in, or conspire to engage in, assassination.” This removes the modifier, “political,” from assassination. Does drone warfare, largely carried out by the CIA as part of its shift to covert military action since 9/11, constitute summary execution or assassination?

International law is closer to the U.S. Bill of Rights. The UN International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (rati fied by the U.S.) reads: “Every human being has the inherent right to life. … No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his (her) life.” To justify targeted killings by drones, one needs to maintain that they fall within the laws of war.

IV. Possible Christian Responses

Because the impact of drones is related to both military policy and cultural awareness, Christian responses need to include application of ethical principles and analysis of growing trends in popular culture. The former considerations of justice toward combatant and civilian targets are crucial, but the latter trends may support what becomes a normalized acceptance of constant surveillance and possible militarized response to civilian demonstrations for social change. As Mike Bridle of Dronestagram states, “It’s important to distinguish between military and civilian drones, between many types of drones, while understanding the way technologies flow between violent and nominally peaceful uses and the results of this flow, such as heightened fear, surveillance culture, and lowered empathy.”

There has been some address by churches to the challenge of drone warfare and the use of autonomous robot warplanes. In Britain, an ecumenical group that included pacifist Catholics convened a conference in July of 2012. In the United States, an ecumenical letter coordinated by the Friends (Quakers) was addressed to President Obama in 2013, questioning the use of drones. The Society of Christian Ethics held a roundtable at its 2012 annual meeting that included a formal discussion of drone warfare among scholars Michael Walzer, Stephen Carter, and Andrew Bacevich, with Carter and Walzer defending their use within limits and Bacevich—a former Army Colonel—generally opposing. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assembly has addressed drones in a limited way, also in 2012:
The practices of undeclared war, including cyber attack, targeted killing by drone aircraft and other means, covert infiltration and “false flag” operations (that set up others for blame), expand government power, and threaten civil liberties as well as the national sovereignty of other nations.

So far, few denominational bodies have addressed the moral challenges raised by drone warfare at any length, although this is likely to change as “Just Peacemaking” criteria are increasingly applied to analyze the overall effectiveness of this strategy. Inevitably, there is the logical question of what the dominant nations will allow to be done under United Nations auspices to regulate the use of drones by convention and eventual treaty. This seems far away, and the subsidized growth of the drone industry will make such regulation both more difficult and more needed as drones become part of the international arms trade. At the same time, drone use is expanding on the borders and increasingly inside the United States, meshing with questions of domestic civil liberties raised by other forms of surveillance.

One summary question is whether the new kind of war described by President Obama is still actually defined by George W. Bush and the one-sided projection of force worldwide, justified as protection of “the homeland.” Does the more “comprehensive” counterterrorism strategy still define the United States’ role in the world in primarily military terms, controlled by the commander-in-chief’s definition of what constitutes an emergency? Has President Obama, in fact, made somewhat principled improvements to a tactic, while letting that tactic still dictate too much of our nation’s strategy or approach to the world? If this is seen to be the case, then the U.S. will continue to suffer from vision-deficit disorder and what we call “terrorism” will only be the shadow of what others call “empire,” all of which will be potential battlefield. If, however, the use of drones is seen as an effective form of policing terrorism, and terrorism is seen as the inevitable response of some of the dispossessed, then their use may be accepted conditionally as part of national security operations alongside policies to reduce the causes of terrorism and increase collective security.

V. Cyber Surveillance and Other Electronic Data Collection

In July of 2010, The Washington Post ran a series of stories on the scope of secret government agencies, including those created since the tragic events of 9/11/2001. At that time, they identified 1,271 government organizations and 1,931 companies working in the areas of counterterrorism, homeland security, and intelligence, in approximately 10,000 locations across the United States, and estimated that 854,000 people held top-secret security clearances. In June of 2013, The Guardian newspaper began to publish documents collected by one of those people holding a top-security clearance, a private contractor named Edward Snowden. Aware of the fate of Corporal Bradley (now Chelsea) Manning (more below) and other whistleblowers, Mr. Snowden chose overseas asylum (currently in Russia) before the publication of his unauthorized disclosures began. The chief reporter who handled the enormous cache of secret electronic files, Glenn Greenwald, Esq., prudently remains based in Brazil. The debate continues to rage over Snowden’s actions and those of the National Security Agency, whose files were released, raising hard questions about the freedom and privacy of all citizens, and perhaps their security as well.

A recent Washington Post commentary quotes cyber security expert Peter Singer who put the disclosed documents into three categories:

(a) leaks revealing espionage against U.S. adversaries and rivals;
(b) legally questionable activities targeting U.S. citizens thru backdoors, fudging of policy/law, etc.
(c) un-strategic actions targeting American allies that has led to huge blowback on U.S. standing and U.S. business

Both Singer and foreign affairs blogger, Max Fisher, then suggest that how one feels about Snowden reflects on which of his leak areas is of greatest concern. For the intelligence agencies, the disclosures regarding U.S. spying seem treasonable, regardless of whether individuals are harmed directly. Terrorists and other enemies now know better how to evade our various surveillance vehicles. For citizens worried about civil liberties, the domestic spying makes everyone a suspect and violates our privacy. It also makes private companies complicit in allowing the government at the very least to data-mine our meta-data, and raises questions about access to content of our phone calls in at least 30 percent of cases (presumably including all overseas phone calls). For our allies and people with a sense of humor, listening in on the German chancellor and violating the privacy of our allies and their companies is embarrassing and trust-damaging. The mention of “backdoors” refers to exploiting defects or built-in access points in encrypted software, dedicated and/or proprietary computer programs, and cable and cellular networks. Snowden has been threatened, denigrated, and accused (so far without proof) of collusion with other nations, but was apparently able to collect unknown quantities of documents on his own with relatively simple equipment from within a spy agency itself.

The recommendations for surveillance proposed in the resolution for the General Assembly address mainly the first two categories of concern, the responsible defense and security of the United States and others (which ideally involves nonmilitary means in most cases), and the protection of the rights of citizens (without denying these protections to foreign nationals). Much has been written on the topics and the advisory committee has a selection of studies and reports beyond those cited in the endnotes. We proceed here to provide some background on civil liberties that introduces themes identified by past General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and then comment on the most recent (as of this writing) address by President Obama on surveillance, that of January 17, 2014.
A. Recent Background on the Post 9/11 Growth of Surveillance, Including the Roles of Whistleblowers and the Press

According to Human Rights law professor, William Quigley:

On May 27, 2011, President Obama, over widespread bipartisan objections, approved a Congressional four-year extension of controversial parts of the Patriot Act that were set to expire. …These provisions allow the government, with permission from a special secret court, to seize records without the owner’s knowledge, conduct secret surveillance of suspicious people who have no known ties to terrorist groups and to obtain secret roving wiretaps on people.35

A particular Patriot Act provision, on “material support,” refers to assistance given to terrorist organizations that may be taken to include communications, “expert advice and assistance,” with such organizations, broadly defined. Under expansive definitions, some reporting on organizations may be restricted and “Friend of Court” briefs by third parties prevented. The Obama Administration’s Justice Department was challenged on this, but upheld 5-4 by the Supreme Court in Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project.36 One purpose for surveillance on U.S. citizens in the United States is to uncover all contacts with potentially terrorist groups, including funding as well as physical threats. Watch lists are part this and there are a host of tracking devices and electronic sources of information that the government may access beyond actual phone calls. We lead with reference to 9/11 and the Patriot Act because that fear of terrorism continues to be the justification for much of the growth of surveillance organizations.

While all nations have some kind of intelligence service, the United States preserves its democratic character by constitutional checks and balances, including the Bill of Rights and public accountability, for example, the free press. The reach of national security can thus be seen in the obstacles, good and bad, placed in front of the disclosure of government “secrets.” Most Presbyterians would acknowledge some role for government secrecy, and though it tends to augment governmental power, such secrecy cannot become a basis for reflexive distrust. Matters of legality and morality are and should always be matters of open debate, with faith groups bringing their traditions and intuitions to the discussion.

Before the extensive (and continuing) disclosure of NSA files, WikiLeaks, a self-styled cyber-accountability group, was well-known for its release of thousands of classified documents from U.S. embassies—including confirmation of official corruption in Tunisia, Libya, and other countries that aided the “Arab Spring.” Thousands of field reports from Afghanistan described lack of progress in that war and noted many civilian deaths not reported elsewhere, arguably making for a more truthful public debate.37 Defenders of government secrecy pointed to the diplomatic damage done by disclosing confidential reports and the danger to the trust and security among those who cooperate with U.S. officials, while critics pointed out that few specific negative effects were ever presented, even for later documents not “scrubbed” with the assistance of The New York Times and Guardian (Britain) newspapers.38 The treatment of Corporal Bradley (now Chelsea) Manning, convicted of being the source of the documents, included prolonged forced nudity and solitary confinement in a remote prison, raising questions about due process and whistleblower treatment.39

The Washington Post 2010 investigative report on intelligence claimed that the culture of secrecy was self-perpetuating and hard to monitor. Another test case for the treatment of whistleblowers occurred in a case carried over from the Bush to the Obama Administration, that of senior National Security Agency (and former military officer) Thomas Drake. Prosecuted under the Espionage Act, Drake was accused of being a primary source for reporter Siobhan Gorman of the Baltimore Sun. Gorman “wrote a prize-winning series of articles for the Sun about financial waste, bureaucratic dysfunction, and dubious legal practices in NSA counterterrorism programs.”40 Jane Mayer provided a lengthy analysis of the case,41 which William Quigley summarized:

They charged a National Security Agency adviser with ten felonies under the Espionage Act for telling the press that government eavesdroppers were wasting hundreds of millions of dollars on misguided and failed projects. After their case collapsed, the government, which was chastised by the federal judge as engaging in unconscionable conduct, allowed him to plead to a misdemeanor and walk.42

Other reasonably well-known censorship cases include the memoir by former CIA agents; Ali Soufan’s The Black Banners,43 and Glenn Carle’s The Interrogator.44

Any particular case can be debated, of course; concerned citizens have to assess broader patterns. In the Drake case and those two books, long-time U.S. agents involved in the “war on terror” claim that they crossed moral lines that became hard for them to justify in terms of the values and purposes of their country. To make sense of testimonies like theirs, Mark Danner speaks of the United States after 9/11 entering a “state of exception,” when traditional moral restraints were and remain suspended.45 Our recommendations suggest the need to distinguish clearly between whistleblowing and espionage, as these cases illustrate.

In assessing the policies and practices of the United States, the once covert use of drone aircraft in Pakistan provides an example of the limits of secrecy. Admiral Denis Blair, former director of National Intelligence for the Obama Administration, publicly argued that this program should be run by the military rather than the CIA, as “Covert action that goes on for years doesn’t generally stay covert.”46 The use of drones in Pakistan as well as Afghanistan raised two sets of questions for U.S. citizens, one related to the morality of targeting individuals outside an established battlefield setting,47 and one related to foreign relations (both of which are treated earlier in this background paper).48 Our recommendation for ending CIA involvement is guided by Blair’s assessment and that of many other military and foreign policy analysts. It should be noted that the trend toward using covert operatives for reconnaissance, counterterrorism, and training indigenous groups has paralleled the growth of the drone program. As of 2012, the U.S. Special Operations Command (USSOCOM) budget had quadrupled from 2001 and its ranks had doubled to an estimated 66,000 uniformed and civilian personnel, reportedly operating in as many as 120 countries.49

The range of government data collection that concerned the 217th General Assembly (2006) related to the disclosure of large-scale warrantless wiretapping that appeared to violate provisions of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) of 1978.50 That act established a secret intelligence court and the use of “national security letters.” Other information disclosed the use of electronic “data mining” among all the international e-mail and phone transmissions harvested by the government’s listening posts. Subsequent legislation has updated FISA with some restrictions on the roles of internet service providers subject to government access and other forms of warrantless information gathering now deemed not to violate the Fourth Amendment against unreasonable search and seizure.51 We address this further below, but it is important to note that the struggle for accountability is ongoing.

Technological advances in data-gathering can appear benign or worrisome, depending partly on how aware citizens are of the limits to their privacy.52 Some recent concern has focused on the amount of personal information disclosed for commercial purposes by such companies as Facebook and Google, whose value is partly constituted by once-private data provided by users that is linked to advertising. Most users of those services willingly trade privacy for connection and convenience. Another source of data are Global Positioning System (GPS) applications in mobile phones; such devices can also be put on vehicles without a warrant for ease in tracking suspects. Potentially more worrisome are patterns lifted up by William Quigley two years ago, drawing on studies by the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) and Center for Constitutional Rights:

- Wiretaps for oral, electronic or wire communications, approved by federal and state courts, are at an all-time high. Wiretaps in year 2010 were up 34 percent from 2009, according to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

- The Electronic Frontier Foundation documented thousands of violations of the law by FBI intelligence operations from 2001 to 2008 and estimate that there are over 4,000 such violations each year. President Obama issued an executive order to strengthen the Intelligence Oversight Board, an agency that is supposed to make sure the FBI, the CIA, and other spy agencies are following the law.

- Western companies sell email surveillance software to repressive regimes in China, Libya and Syria to use against protestors and human rights activists. Surveillance cameras monitor residents in high-crime areas, street corners, and other governmental buildings. Police department computers ask for and receive daily lists from utility companies with addresses and names of every home address in their area. Computers in police cars scan every license plate of every car they drive by.

- There are at least 72 fusion centers across the U.S., which collect local domestic police information and merge it into multijurisdictional intelligence centers, according to recent report by the ACLU. These centers share information from federal, state and local law enforcement and some private companies to secretly spy on Americans.53

Space does not permit a longer discussion of the role of major internet and financial companies in relation to government National Security Letters, which enjoin cooperation in providing data and trump consumer privacy considerations. Like the government, the companies face skilled hackers and have their own data security concerns. An interesting illustration of interlocking considerations (and media concentration) concerns Amazon, which as a contractor provides Cloud computing services to the CIA, clearly collects vast amounts of consumer data itself, and whose chairman, Jeff Bezos, owns the Washington Post, which is expected to report objectively on government data collection.54

B. Constitutional Protections and the Church’s Concerns for Human Rights and “Free Exercise” of Religious Freedom

In the 2006 “Resolution on Human Rights in Time of Terrorism and Torture,” the General Assembly called for the humane treatment with due process for all combatants held by U.S. forces anywhere in the world, and support[ed] the provisions of the Bill of Rights and the principles of judicial review and congressional oversight over Executive Branch operations, now including counterterrorism, Homeland Security, and domestic surveillance programs, both classified and publicly acknowledged. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 867)

That resolution also called for “the protection of the right of privacy for U.S. citizens against intrusion by government or private entities” (Ibid.).

Traditionally, the focus of Presbyterian and other religious engagement with civil liberties is the First Amendment’s first phrase, the “Establishment clause,” which guides the separation of church and state. Yet the founders wisely saw the freedoms of worship, speech and press, assembly, and “to petition for redress of grievances,” connected with each other, and combined them all in the First Amendment. Particular Christian concerns for freedom, justice, and peace are addressed in various later amendments (now totaling twenty-seven), but the First Amendment itself ensures the capacity of individuals and groups to address any of those and other topics. A notable example of the Presbyterian church’s use of its voice on behalf of civil liberties in general was the eloquent 1953 Letter to Presbyterians of the General Assembly Council that challenged McCarthyism and its distortion of national security fears.55

The General Assembly’s most extensive treatment of religious and civil liberties, God Alone Is Lord of the Conscience (1988), is named for the key Presbyterian belief in God’s direct address to the individual conscience. That thorough statement considered civil disobedience, aid to religious schools, prayer in public schools, Sabbath observance, tax exemption, and other questions, including government intervention in religious affairs. This last matter has direct bearing on the possibility of government surveillance of worship activities.

In 1984 and possibly before, the U.S. government sent covert agents into several congregations of the Presbyterian and American Lutheran churches in order to investigate the “Sanctuary Movement,” which protected persons fleeing from government-sponsored violence in El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and other countries. In January 1986, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the American Lutheran Church, and four of their congregations, filed suit alleging that the undercover operation (later acknowledged) violated the free exercise of religion. Freedom of the pulpit and of parishioners to speak truth was clearly connected to freedom of speech.

That lawsuit, described in the booklet, “Why Churches Fight Government Infiltration,” bears some analogy to efforts by Muslim congregations in the U.S. to address more recent government surveillance and use of informers, intended to track down terrorism. Though the issues are different, the First Amendment principle of noninterference and the need for warrants for entry, search, and seizure stipulated by the Fourth Amendment, have clear bearing. Government surveillance and pressure under an expanded understanding of the “material aid” statute has severely limited Muslim charities that give funds overseas for any purpose, and thus jeopardizes any religious giving across borders that the government may wish to discourage. The Associated Press uncovered a specific program of the New York City Police Department, done in cooperation with the CIA, that involved “mosque crawlers” who investigated worship services based on the ethnic profile and reputation of the mosques.

In the current context, all PC(USA) funds sent overseas must comply with the Treasury Department’s Office of Foreign Asset Control, which means assuring that each grant or disbursement to recipient or intermediary does not go to someone on a published list of proscribed persons and entities (that listing is available on line: www.treasury.gov/ofac/downloads/t10sdn.pdf). Other watch-lists and security reviews have made it more difficult for nationals from many countries to receive visas, reducing numbers of international students, tourists, mission partners, “International Peacemakers” of the Peacemaking Program, and participants in church gatherings such as the Uniting General Assembly of the World Communion of Reformed Churches (June 2010, Grand Rapids, Michigan).

To recognize the context of fear of Muslim and other terrorism is not to enter into a full analysis of its scope and of the status of allegations and arrests made over the years since 9/11. Nor does this report to address specifically the use of torture, which the assembly strongly condemned in 2006 when it also called for the closing of extraterritorial prisons (such as Guantanamo). Yet the “mission creep” of police power, in a country already characterized by the highest level of incarceration in the world, raises concern for overreaction and the weakening of legal safeguards. Before 9/11, church concern about torture (the Eighth Amendment’s “cruel and unusual punishment”) had to do with the U.S. criminal justice system, including the effects of prolonged solitary confinement on the mental health of inmates.

C. The Current State of Surveillance and Question of the Surveillance State

On January 17, 2014, President Obama addressed the nation on the matter of NSA bulk phone data collection and other programs, such as PRISM, which pull in vast amounts of cyber data and digitized information. He was prompted by the continuing leaks from Edward Snowden and by the report of an advisory committee that he had appointed. The appointment of that advisory task force, the Review Group on Intelligence and Communications Technologies, was itself prompted partly by congressional displeasure at limits on their own oversight. Those limits were displayed when Snowden’s proof of widespread domestic surveillance forced the director of national intelligence, James Clapper, to retract sworn testimony of March 2013. In that testimony, Clapper denied that citizen data was collected. Because their own oversight is secret, legislators who knew Clapper spoke falsely could not challenge him.

The Review Group, chaired by Richard Clarke (author of Against All Enemies, a book on the security failures of the George W. Bush Administration), recommended that the government leave all the bulk phone data with the telecommunications companies. The NSA could request to access it when needed, but in that way would not continue to amass that citizen data. While accepting a few of the Review Group’s forty-six recommendations, the president continues the policy of NSA collection as he and his national security team weigh alternatives.

A more critical report on the phone data collection operation (first authorized secretly in 2006) was released on January 23, 2014, by the Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board, a “watchdog” body authorized by Congress. This report did not address as wide a range of surveillance activities as the President’s Review Group, but the privacy board analyzed the legal justifications given by the FISA court for the specific program authorized to collect all U.S. citizen phone records, and the actual results of that program. The FISA court and NSA claimed support from section 215 of the Patriot Act, but that section only authorizes the FBI (not NSA) to collect business records relevant to specific terror investigations. Despite its enormously overstepping limits on citizen privacy, the privacy board found “no instance in which the program directly contributed to the discovery of a previously unknown terrorist plot or the disruption of a terrorist attack.” Thus the privacy board recommended that the program be ended.

On the basic question of whether the government can conduct warrantless or secret surveillance on its citizens, two court cases also addressed the situation: on December 16, 2013, Justice Richard Leon ruled that the NSA data vacuuming violates the Fourth Amendment’s protection against unreasonable search and seizure, and on December 27, 2013, Justice William H. Pauley III ruled that the data collection was permissible, based on a reading of the 9/11 Commission Report and subsequent disclosures. It is hoped that the president’s expected March 28, 2014, deadline for a decision on bulk data collection and storage will take these contrasting decisions and reports into account. To summarize the president’s current position from his January 17 statement:

… in terms of our bulk collection of signals intelligence, U.S. intelligence agencies will only use such data to meet specific security requirements: counterintelligence; counterterrorism; counter proliferation; cybersecurity; force protection for our troops and our allies; and combating transnational crime, including sanctions evasion. In this directive, I have taken the unprecedented step of extending certain protections that we have for the American people to people overseas. I’ve directed the DNI, in consultation with the attorney general, to develop these safeguards, which will limit the duration that we can hold personal information while also restricting the use of this information. The bottom line is that people around the world, regardless of their nationality, should know that the United States is not spying on ordinary people who don’t threaten our national security and that we take their privacy concerns into account in our policies and procedures. This applies to foreign leaders as well.

The recommendations made by the General Assembly address a range of the president’s, and the nation’s, concerns:

1. The fairness of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court, whose establishment in the 1970s was noted above. This FISA court approves virtually all NSA, CIA, and other requests for data gathering. Its members are appointed by Chief Justice of the Supreme Court John Roberts, and it turned out all but one on the bench in 2013 were Republican appointees. The president has recommended that Congress amend the FISA law so that in some circumstances the court hears testimony from other parties than the NSA in order to represent potential targets or the public interest. The president has declassified decisions of the court that give the public more knowledge, but thirty-five of forty decisions uphold meta-data collection and—while sometimes pressing the NSA for more focused surveillance requests—the court consistently grants those requests.

2. The status of whistleblowers. The president has issued a presidential directive to prevent retaliation against government employees, but this does not address the case of Snowden, who was a contractor.

3. The matter of secrecy and public trust. Are the provision of review by a secret court and a congressional panel sworn to secrecy enough protection for civil liberties? The president may sound admirably self-critical in terms of what the NSA has done as part of his administration, but Congress and the U.S. public need to be stronger parties in the conversation and decision-making.

On the final recommendation, the General Assembly’s concern is not only ethical but religious. What is the quality of prayer and spiritual life when the “eye in the sky” is not a metaphor for God’s providential care, but a constant, secret monitoring drone? Is worship a form of data that can be collected? And what if the church or any of its members or ministers were to criticize the government—a consistent practice in Reformed history? The short answer to these questions is that faith is about trust, and surveillance erodes trust. Faith is also about our freedom to love God and, in a subtle way, surveillance may erode our inner freedom. Thus, the resolution’s final recommendation, Statement D, maintains that there should be a zone from which both government and market are excluded; in fact, a sanctuary where we nurture faith and communicate with prayer, beyond all electronic devices.

_Risking Peace in a Violent World: Affirmations for Presbyterian Consideration_

Convinced, despite years of war, that peacemaking is still the “believers’ calling,” and inviting Presbyterians across the church to help determine the shape of that calling for a new day, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Approve the process below for engaging presbyteries in the second stage of the discernment process initiated by the 219th General Assembly (2010) for final report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

2. Approve the five affirmations for presbytery discussion of new directions in our Presbyterian peacemaking witness.

3. Receive the five-part explanatory rationale and summary of focus group findings to be sent out with the affirmations.

In addition to that discernment process, the 221st General Assembly (2014):

4. Commends those congregations and individuals who have affirmed the “Commitment to Peacemaking” and faithfully maintained steady support over the years for the Peacemaking Offering to sustain and adequately staff the Presbyterian Mission Agency peacemaking programs and to fund creative congregational and presbytery initiatives.

5. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to continue to help interpret the discernment process outlined in Recommendations 1.–3. Above.

6. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to work with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy as it develops resources and assists networks to support international peacemaking on current and emerging challenges such as South Sudan and areas in need of reconciliation and reconstruction such as Syria, Iraq, Afghanistan, and Colombia, while addressing domestic peacemaking in such areas as gun violence, violence in families, and concern for returning veterans.

7. Affirms the value of peacemaking as part of the “compassionate prophetic discipleship” of “Presbyterians joyfully engaging in God’s mission for the transformation of the world,” within the vision of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Process of Discernment for Presbyteries: As the next stage in a six-year process of discernment, the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directs the Stated Clerk to send to each presbytery, electronically and in print, the following five affirmations and supporting rationale with the request that they discuss and take an advisory vote on each affirmation and send the results of those votes, along with a summary of the floor discussion, back to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy [by July 1, 2015.] to help guide the preparation of a report on peacemaking directions for the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

The affirmations for churchwide discussion and advisory vote:

1. We affirm that peacemaking is essential to our faith in God’s reconciling work in Jesus Christ, whose love and justice challenge hatred and conflict, and whose call gives our church a mission to present alternatives to violence[,] [and] fear, [unjustified force] and misused power.

2. We confess our complicity in the world’s violence even as we pray for the Spirit’s courage to “unmask idolatries,” to speak truth about war and oppression, and to stand with those who suffer[; and to respond to acts and threats of violence with ministries of justice, healing, and reconciliation].

3. We reclaim [the power and authority of] Jesus [Christ,] [as] Prince of Peace, [Christ the] [and] Reconciler[,] who proclaims God’s reign, who inspires the prophetic church, forgiving, healing, and undoing violence, and who overcomes evil through the cross and resurrection.

4. We seek to understand the nonviolent revolutions and armed struggles of our time [through the Gospel of Peace] by drawing on the traditions of [Christian pacifism,] just war, just peacemaking and active nonviolence, and by cultivating moral imagination through prayer, study, and engagement with friends and enemies. [Even as we actively engage in a peace discernment process, we affirm our responsibility of continuing the long tradition of support by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for our sisters and brothers who serve in the U.S. military, veterans, and their families.]

5. As disciples of Jesus Christ, we commit ourselves [to work first for nonviolent change in our personal and communal lives,] [earnestly to seek and promote loving, nonviolent responses to conflict in our daily lives, in our communities, and in our world, and] to risk calling our nation back from the practices of empire to the highest ideals of our heritage, and to practice boldly the things that make for peace.

Rationale

I. INTRODUCTION

In a broken and fearful world the Spirit gives us courage to pray without ceasing, to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced,
A. Title and Purpose

The commitment of the church to peace and reconciliation has a central role in Christian vocation. For Presbyterians it is a matter of creedal standing, briefly yet powerfully set forth in the Brief Statement of Faith (1991) cited above, and outlined at greater length in The Confession of 1967. Wording from both confessions is echoed in the title of this report. We acknowledge not only a “fearful” but a violent world, even as we hear God’s call in our time to take new risks to challenge our country’s over-reliance on military might and under-investment in “the things that make for peace.” Thus the title invokes The Confession of 1967’s prophetic phrase: “This search [for peace] requires that the nations pursue fresh and responsible international understanding” (Book of Confessions, 9.45).

B. Introduction: The Request for Presbytery Votes, and the Organization of this Background Report

In 2010, on the 30th anniversary of Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling and the formation of the Peacemaking Program, the 219th General Assembly (2010) authorized the creation of a six-year discernment process to take a new and fresh look at peacemaking in the church’s life. The assembly’s action combined overtures seeking to review and strengthen the church’s policy thinking and program after almost a decade of war, and to examine particularly the nonviolent understanding of Jesus’ call to discipleship. A steering committee was appointed to devise opportunities for the broad membership of the church to explore not simply the effectiveness of the church’s peacemaking work and its threefold offering, but the basic nature and scope of the Gospel’s mandate for peacemaking.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) authorized study materials to be distributed (after testing in committee) and approved a two-stage process of face-to-face discussions in both congregations and councils, and then of presenting a set of concise affirmations to the presbyteries. This is the steering team’s report made through the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and in consultation with the Peacemaking Program. After some background on Presbyterian peace witness and the peace discernment process, we provide a summary of the responses from the discernment groups that helped shape what became five affirmations. The affirmations clearly build on each other, but presbyteries can decide whether to consider the five as a set or vote on them individually to assess the degree to which they may, or may not, represent that presbytery’s views.

This background report then provides rationales for each of the five affirmations to be sent to the presbyteries. The five proposed affirmations honor the range of viewpoints within the church while testing new directions; they are not statements of policy but propositions for serious debate. We respectfully ask presbyteries—which we know well—to make time on their busy docket to consider the affirmations. We know it will take some leadership and we pray for gracious listening as well as wise moderating. What might those admittedly general affirmations mean in your presbytery, and for your children, and for our discipleship?

Our Presbyterian process values differences of opinion as efforts to speak the truth in love under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Voting is part of the work of the body to build consensus over time, and Presbyterians do not usually see unanimity or total agreement as necessary for decision. We both take corporate stands, believing that the church as a body should not be silent, and at the same time we affirm that “God alone is Lord of the conscience,” making space for dissent. It is for those reasons we would like to see the vote tallies, but it is up to each presbytery to determine how to report, and some may wish to approve their own affirmations or amend the ones presented here.

Recommendations 4.-7. (before the affirmations) clarify continued support for the Peacemaking Program and offering while the discernment process is underway, seeking to keep faith with the decisions of previous assemblies and to address current threats to peace and security.

C. Background on Presbyterian Peace Witness and Peacemaking

For focus, we have put a short survey of Christian and Presbyterian approaches to peacemaking prior to 1980 in a brief appendix (A), along with summaries of Just War, Just Peacemaking, and active nonviolence principles.

A key understanding from the later 20th century is that peacemaking has come to be seen as central to Christian witness and as a large enough concept to unite both those tending toward nonviolence or pacifism and those operating within the Just War or justifiable war tradition. Most Presbyterians, in fact, are not absolutists and hold values from both main Christian approaches to war and physical violence. Peacemaking emphasizes common ground. As former chief of chaplains, Kermit Johnson, wrote in an essay on “Just War and Nuclear Deterrence,” Just War “Like pacifism, [it] is rooted in the commandment: ‘Thou shalt not kill.’ It is a presumption against violence, ‘the presumption in favor of peace and against war.’”¹¹ He then went on to consider whether there could be cases of “tragic necessity” when nuclear war could be considered a “lesser evil” and meet the just war criteria.

This is the kind of prayerful thinking that is not always easy, but that thousands of thoughtful Presbyterians have engaged in through the Peacemaking Program and now most recently in the Peace Discernment process. Our church has been gifted with theological ethicists of the first order helping shape public responses to war within and well beyond the church itself. Other Presbyterians in the military and military contractors—and probably all Christians at one time or another—have also Presbyterian church thinking about peace not only considers the impacts of major wars in which Presbyterians have fought, but notes the tolerance that has grown since the 1940s for conscientious objection to all war (pacifism) and to specific wars perceived to violate just war and other criteria. This acceptance may have at first recalled the votes in 1936 and 1938 when majorities of the presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. voted to remove just war language from the Westminster Confession, which was then the church’s only confessional standard. Those votes did not reach the supermajorities needed for constitutional change. Then World War II received strong support from the churches, but the Cold War, the nuclear threat, the Civil Rights movement, and Vietnam led to a new wave of individual conscientious objectors and more understanding of Eisenhower’s “military-industrial complex.” It was in that context that the church adopted The Confession of 1967 with its inclusion of strong social ethics concerns for economic and racial justice, family life, and peace:

God’s reconciliation in Jesus Christ is the ground of the peace, justice, and freedom among nations which all powers of government are called to serve and defend. The church, in its own life, is called to practice the forgiveness of enemies and to commend to the nations as practical politics the search for cooperation and peace. This search requires that the nations pursue fresh and responsible relations across every line of conflict, even at risk to national security, to reduce areas of strife and to broaden international understanding. Reconciliation among nations becomes particularly urgent as countries develop nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons, diverting their [hu]manpower and resources from constructive uses and risking the annihilation of [hu]mankind. Although nations may serve God’s purposes in history, the church which identifies the sovereignty of any one nation or any one way of life with the cause of God denies the Lordship of Christ and betrays its calling. (Book of Confessions, Section 9.45)

That bold declaration grounded the idea of a shared church calling that was developed in Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling. This document offered a broad biblical, theological, and ethical basis for Christian peacemaking but also identified some more specific directions for that mission: efforts to reverse the worldwide arms race; “conversion of the economy from military to civilian production;” and continuing attention to how justice relates to peace. Because we are asking presbyteries to affirm the work of peacemaking in the first affirmation, we note key developments in Presbyterian peace witness after 1980 in that first of the five rationales.

D. The Peace Discernment Process

The present Peace Discernment Process, initiated by the 219th General Assembly (2010) and affirmed by the 220th General Assembly (2012), differs from previous studies in that it seeks broader participation from across the denomination and focuses more on the example and teaching of Jesus and the early church. The full texts of the discernment materials and response forms used are available on-line at: https://www.pcusa.org/resource/peace-discernment-interim-report-encountering-gosp/.

These discernment resources, some of which are reflected in this report, were designed to introduce “ministries of peacemaking and justice-seeking that honor the Gospel, the history of the church, and the movement of the Holy Spirit …” and to inform eventual recommendations of new policy and action (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 69). The resources were presented to and partly tested by the Peacemaking and International Affairs Committee of the 220th General Assembly (2012), which recommended that the discernment process proceed: http://pc-biz.org/MeetingPapers%28S%28tusr3jzthk2ncc5l11qekaul%29%29/IOBView.aspx?m=ro&id=4015&promoid=254.

Presbyterians in more than forty-five congregations and eighteen presbyteries came together in small “focus groups” to pray, to reflect, to engage in individual and congregational discernment, to “seek clarity as to God’s call to the church to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response to the challenges of violence, terror, and war; and identify, explore, and nurture new approaches to active peacemaking and nonviolence” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 68).

Most participants found that the Peace Discernment Process encouraged meaningful sharing that was powerful and engaging. They appreciated the opportunity to hear varied perspectives and opinions in a framework where almost everyone had at least one loved one with experience in war. Some were surprised at the level of trust that developed in their small groups, allowing individuals (including veterans) to risk being vulnerable and speak about difficult personal experiences they had had with violence. One participant called it “a very holy process.”

E. Nonviolence, Just War, and Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling

Presbyterians generally agree that peacemaking is the calling of all believers, but they differ about whether violent means of peacemaking are faithful to Jesus’ life and witness. Some focus on Jesus’ call to love our enemies and his sacrifice on the cross, and they conclude that violence can never be a faithful Christian response to violence, injustice, or evil in the world. They gravitate toward nonviolence. Others point to Jesus’ defense of the poor and oppressed, the weak and vulnerable, and believe that violence or coercion can be justified in restraining evil forces and defending the innocent. Their perspective assumes a public responsibility to maintain order and a policing if not a military function. They gravitate toward the just war tradition. For many participants, the Peace Discernment Process was their first introduction to both the methods of nonviolent action and the criteria of just war.
F. Lamenting Our Culture of Violence and War

It is clear, after more than ten years of war, that a majority of Presbyterians are deeply concerned about the enormous human and economic costs of war—the hundreds of thousands killed in Iraq and Afghanistan, the millions displaced, the thousands of U.S. soldiers killed or injured, the trillions of dollars spent, and the damage done to our economy. Understandably, there was a focus on those wars where our country has been most directly involved, but many were aware of other wars and long conflicts initiated and suffered by others. A majority of Presbyterians are also deeply worried about the violence pervasive in U.S. culture—the high incidence of gun violence compared to other countries; school shootings; violence against women; violence in media, sports, and entertainment; and the underlying structural violence of economic injustice and social oppression (racism, sexism, other exclusions).

Many appreciate the important connection between justice and peace. They understand that direct, physical violence is often caused by injustice, and that a genuine peace can only be brought about by working toward justice and equity for all. Many lifted up God’s vision of shalom, affirming that peace is a rich mosaic of human flourishing within the global community in the broader context of God’s good creation.

G. A Desire to Learn Peacemaking Skills

At the same time, many expressed a sense of being overwhelmed by the enormity of the issues, particularly at the national and international level. Weary of the stream of grim news of bombings and terrorism, there were questions about what our years of war had achieved. Some questioned the effectiveness of both social policy statements and the primarily educational approach of the Peacemaking Program, facing a political system dominated by money. They are looking for direction and guidance about how individuals and congregations can take effective action to further justice and peace. In this vein, there seems to be broad interest in learning concrete peacemaking skills that they can use in their daily lives—skills in nonviolent communication, negotiation, mediation, community organizing, social movement building, and nonviolent direct action.

H. Challenging U.S. Militarism

While many Presbyterians are not ready to renounce violence as a means of restraining evil or protecting the innocent, most of the discernment participants would nevertheless support:

- Just Peacemaking initiatives to promote justice and prevent war.
- Downsizing the military-industrial-surveillance complex.
- Economic conversion from a war economy to a peace economy.
- Shifting resources from the military to international diplomacy and development.
- Ending policies of preemptive attack, targeted assassination, and torture, which lead to violent “blowback” and which seemed immoral to many discernment group participants.
- Moving the U.S. away from the role of global policeman, finding other ways to support international structures of security cooperation.

Given the high level of motivation in the discernment groups, a representative survey of Presbyterian opinion was commissioned from Presbyterian Research Services. While the questions presented by the Presbyterian Panel survey instrument were necessarily shorter, there is considerable similarity in overall outlook to the written narrative summaries from the discernment groups (http://www.presbyterianmission.org/media/uploads/research/pdfs/nov_2012_panel_summary_violence_and_war.pdf).

With that summary of discernment discussion findings, we turn to the five affirmations that are being proposed as support for an ongoing and enriched peacemaking agenda for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The affirmations are offered for discussion, not as policy stands to be either approved or rejected in their present form.

II. FIVE AFFIRMATIONS FOR 21ST CENTURY CHRISTIAN PEACEMAKING

A. Affirmation #1: We affirm that peacemaking is essential to our faith in God’s reconciling work in Jesus Christ, whose love and justice challenge hatred and conflict, and whose call gives our church a mission to present alternatives to violence and fear, unjustified force and misused power.

The 192nd General Assembly (1980) of the UPCUSA adopted Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling, the denomination’s most comprehensive policy on matters of international violence and war. It declared that:

- The church is faithful to Christ when it is engaged in peacemaking.
- The church is obedient to Christ when it nurtures and equips God’s people as peacemakers.
The church bears witness to Christ when it nourishes the moral life of the nation for the sake of peace in our world. (http://oga.pcusa.org/media/uploads/oga/pdf/peacemaking.pdf, pp. 5–6)

Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling broadened the concern for individual conscience to affirm that peacemaking was the calling of all believers, particularly in the face of nuclear and other Cold War dangers. Invoking Isaiah’s vision, it emphasized our global interdependence and international connection. With New Testament themes, it presented a holistic understanding of peace and encouraged a wide range of church engagement. It affirmed that “peacemaking is an indispensable ingredient of the church’s mission. It is not peripheral or secondary but essential to the church’s faithfulness to Christ in our time” (Ibid., p. 18). Since that time, peacemaking has become broadly accepted, integral to our prayers and hymns, and evident in our preaching, teaching, and public witness.

Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling led to the creation of the influential Presbyterian Peacemaking Program and established a special offering to provide funding for it. The Peacemaking Offering, traditionally received on World Communion Sunday, has raised at least $2 million each year, providing support for the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program and part of the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, as well as peacemaking ministries in local congregations, presbyteries, and synods. The innovation of having the offering go to three levels of the church speaks to the wisdom of developing institutional capacity not only in what is now the Presbyterian Mission Agency, but also bringing together resources for intentional creativity at the regional and community levels.

For more than thirty years, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program has provided a variety of opportunities and resources to the church, including holding annual peacemaking conferences, publishing curricula for all ages, itinerating international resources for intentional creativity at the regional and community levels.

Engaging Church, Society, and the World as Peacemakers

Presbyterians engage in peacemaking in a variety of ways. Through worship, prayer, and Bible study, they point to the reality of God’s peace-giving, nurture the spiritual life of their communities, and equip people to share the gospel message of peace throughout the world. Presbyterian peacemakers foster respectful communication using resources such as “Seeking to Be Faithful Together: Guidelines for Presbyterians During Times of Disagreement.” They fight for affordable housing, better schools, and funding for social services through faith-based community organizing campaigns. They work to reduce gun violence in the United States. They join with ecumenical and interfaith partners in struggles for human rights and economic justice in countries around the world. Presbyterian peacemakers risk nonviolent accompaniment, walking alongside church leaders threatened with political violence in Colombia. They seek to make peace with the earth by living more sustainably themselves, and challenging legislators to resist the pressures of special interest lobbies and instead support forward-looking policies that reflect wise stewardship of the planet. Countless additional examples of faithful peacemaking could be cited. We have much good peacemaking work to celebrate in our church!

Presbyterian Peacemaking Witness and Just Peace

Since 1980, careful studies and prophetic statements have addressed the nuclear danger, particular military interventions and their rationale, and the relation of religion, violence, and terrorism. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), since 1988, has held a virtual “nuclear pacifist” position, opposing first use and retaliation and calling repeatedly for disarmament. That policy statement, Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age, suggests that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a kind of “just peace” church, with its images drawn primarily from the Old Testament:

The church in the nuclear age must shift its energies from considerations of just war to the urgent and primary task of defining and serving a just peace. A nuclear stalemate or even the elimination of all nuclear arms is still far from God’s shalom. Shalom is the intended state of the entire human race. It involves the well-being of the whole person in all relationships, personal, social, and cosmic. Shalom means life in a community of compassionate order marked by social and economic justice. Peace without justice is no peace; that is why the Bible so often reflects God’s special concern for the poor and powerless.

The great biblical visions of global peace—words into plowshares, every family under its own vine and fig tree—are fundamental to thinking about just peace. Such a peace is ultimately God’s gift; we need to avoid the proud illusion that we can create it by human effort alone. But Christian obedience demands that we move toward that peace in all possible ways: by extending the rule of law, advocating universal human rights, strengthening the organs of international order, working for common security and economic justice, converting industry to peaceful production, increasing understanding of and reconciliation with those we identify as enemies, developing peacemaking skills, constructing concrete manifestations of just peace across barriers of conflict and injustice, and other means. (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 450)

In 1998, the assembly approved a resolution on just peacemaking, which embodies the tension involved in endorsing military intervention as a method to prevent such things as genocide and seeks to move the church’s thinking beyond the traditional categories of just war, crusade, and pacifism. Along with a realism that has been characteristic of much Reformed ethics (and some liberation theologies), that resolution affirms a preference for strong peacemaking initiatives, noting of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):
In keeping with these principles and policies, General Assemblies have also called for responsible withdrawals by the United States from Iraq (2004) and Afghanistan (2010); the 2004 General Assembly prophetically and controversially termed the Iraq war “unwise, illegal, and immoral.” The resolution on “Religion, Violence, and Terrorism” (also 2004) endorsed a “policing” approach to terrorism and responds to the charge sometimes made that religion engenders violence. And in 2008, the General Assembly “commended for study” a careful ethical assessment of the Iraq war entitled “To Repent, To Restore, To Rebuild, and To Reconcile,” which includes the concepts of public forgiveness and “honest patriotism” as developed by Donald Shriver.

One of the key questions wrestled with by Peace Discernment participants was whether the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) could consider becoming a “peace church” on the model of the Mennonites or Quakers, who have long held pacifism to be a key expression of Christian love and part of the nature of the church itself. A variant of this question was whether an individual congregation could declare itself a “peace church,” going beyond the Commitment to Peacemaking. Some recent theological discussion has proposed nonviolence for the majority of Christians as well, deliberately challenging the compromises seen to accompany public responsibility.

The wording of this first affirmation does not propose that nonviolence necessarily be an essential mark of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as it is for the traditional peace churches. Rather, it proposes that we have: “a mission to present alternatives to violence and fear, unjustified force and misused power.” The word “unjustified” signals the understanding of many Presbyterians that force may justified; they would draw a line not between violence and nonviolence, but between justified and unjustified use or restraint of legitimate force. Edward Long, a leader in Presbyterian peace thinking, notes how today’s pervasive acceptance of war’s inevitability so often becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy. How does the church resist being transformed by that world of nations that is in constant overt and covert military struggle? This is where our peacemaking approach must go beyond words and engage in transformative worship and action, creating needed alternatives for our society as well as ourselves.

An updated Reformed approach was explored by a large number of congregations in the mid-1980s using the study guide, “Presbyterians & Peacemaking: Are We Now Called to Resistance?,” written by Ronald Stone and Dana Wilbanks. That congregational process and a parallel conversation among scholars virtually unique among denominations generated some of the thinking about resisting violence that went into Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age. In the case of the Peace Discernment participants, some held to fully nonviolent positions while a larger number argued that responding to injustice sometimes requires actions on the spectrum of force that includes physical violence. The overall consensus was to choose nonviolent alternatives whenever possible without making nonviolence an absolute position.

The Peace Discernment steering team (as noted below) thought it important to consider nonviolence in relation to the example of Jesus and the witness of much of the earliest, pre-Constantine church. This is not to deny our traditional Presbyterian appreciation of how justice and love, like Old Testament and New, must always go together. Biblical scholars Donald Gowan and Ulrich Mauser address this relationship of love and justice:

In view of the fact that Jewish thought and practice alike reserved the incorporation of all nations into God’s world of peace for the world to come in which idolatry has ceased and one law of one God is universally acknowledged, there can hardly be any doubt that the Pauline mission… regarded the powers of the eschaton as driving forces which call forth historical realization. The prince of peace is in the Pauline mission not only the historically identifiable person Jesus of Nazareth, nor only the meta-historical redeemer, but also the continuous presence of God’s ultimate peace in the stream of time.

Given this rich history of peacemaking and the vital ongoing work of making peace, it seems only fitting that we reaffirm the centrality of peacemaking, and renew our dedication to this central calling as followers of Jesus Christ. At the same time, as an integral part of honest and authentic peacemaking, we must confess our complicity in the violence of our world.
Confessing Our Complicity in Violence

Making peace means engaging the critical issues of our times. Yet, as those who are deeply immersed in peacemaking know so well, faithful peacemaking must be spiritually rooted and sustained by the Holy Spirit. The heart and mind of the peacemaker must be liberated from conformity to culture and renewed in the mind of Christ (Rom. 12). This transformation is itself peacemaking work. John Calvin reminds us that the human heart is “a factory of idols.” Therefore, healing the violence in our lives—not only the violence we do and the violence that is done to us, but our sinful capacity to countenance violence and to accept it as normal—must be integrated into a holistic theology of peacemaking. The peacemaker must even confess the kind of complicity that comes from failing to avert violence even after great effort, a feeling shared by many who opposed the second Iraq war. Such awareness that we are all responsible for some measure of violence is an important admission of imperfection.

In this section we move from an overview that looks at violence in our culture and its structures to a closer look at the factors at work in the Iraq and Afghan wars in particular. This gives violence an admittedly broad definition. A strict definition, for example, is suggested by Mark Douglas: “a forceful action that intends to cause unwanted injury to another.” The adjective, “structural,” modifies this definition to the operation of institutions and social structures that causes injury or deprivation to others.

The commitment to peace that stands at the heart of Christian obedience requires that Christians take an honest look at the extent to which they are complicit in the violence that characterizes the society of which they are a part. This complicity is present despite good intentions to avoid it and worthy efforts to live by the ideal of peace. Identifying and confessing this complicity is difficult and painful work—one that is often side-stepped or ignored. This complicity has not necessarily come about through deliberate malice, but inheres in the very course of living in an imperfect and fallen world, a world in which the human condition is marked by sin. No matter how much we as Americans can be proud of our ideals, if we fail to acknowledge our shortcomings we only increase the probability we will perpetuate them.

As the church engages in its discernment process, it must look honestly at our society and its history. It is hard to admit that violence has characterized much of our history and continues to dominate much of our current behavior. The land in which we live was frequently taken from native peoples by force. The independence we value so proudly was achieved by a violent revolutionary war. Our national wealth was advanced with the brutality of the slave system that was abolished only with a civil war. We have profited from violence used to subdue workers and to control access to natural resources.

We are addicted to violence for purposes of entertainment. Bullying is common in our schools, and violence in video games. The most popular sports often inflict injury, concussions, and trauma. More than 30,000 people are killed each year by guns, many of them suicides. In the U.S., one in every four women experience domestic violence during their lifetime. We have stationed armed forces throughout the world on a quasi-permanent basis and defend ourselves with weapons that are used in the places where others live—often striking the innocent in the effort to destroy the guilty. A large segment of our economy involves the production and sales of armaments. And for many in politics, to apologize is blasphemy or betrayal.

Much of the hurt that is experienced in our society is produced by what is termed “structural violence,” what the second affirmation calls, oppression. Our social and economic systems seem to condemn a growing number of people to lives of poverty or fear—even when public investment and other measures could boost unemployment and raise wages. Concentration of ownership and regressive taxes have enabled 1 percent of Americans to reap almost a quarter of our nation’s income every year and to control over 40 percent of our nation’s wealth. Workers overseas are paid much less and often endure far worse conditions to keep our prices low and top salaries high. An economy dependent on the burning of carbon fuels threatens not only our future, but that of others. The purchasing of influence by corporate power undercuts our democratic system. Physical assaults may not be involved or necessary in these processes, but they are nevertheless forms of violence.

It is not this report’s purpose to make a complete inventory of the extent to which we are complicit in violence. This is a task of ongoing prophetic scholarship, educational thoroughness, and moral inquiry to which the discernment being commenced by this report must address itself. The task must be ongoing; subtle forms of coercion will always emerge, carried by “sanctioned ignorance,” “false polarization,” and the confusion of “virtual” reality with actuality. Most of all, as we know through our prayers of confession, this kind of disciplined self-searching requires the capacity of the church and its members to transcend our own confining self-interest. Yet it is an essential aspect of being redeemed, of being transformed by grace. Society tends to honor the team player, the person who with excitement and verve cheers on whatever is being done. When we affirm the need for confessing our complicity we may prompt denial and hostility. To counter that normal human tendency is a vocation to heroic and prophetic humility without which the culture around us will never be healed.

It is not easy to unmask the powers. We all wear masks to some extent and therefore need others to help us take them off. Those who embrace idolatries usually believe they are defending the truth. They—and we—need to dialogue with those who differ from us—listening to them and hearing even the unspoken challenges to our views and unconscious ideologies.
Discernment means prophetic criticism even of our so-called prophetic criticism. Yet confession and apology and repentance can unlock the enormous powers of truth and love.

With regard to that unconscious complicity, theologian Walter Wink believes we have embraced “the Myth of Redemptive Violence,” the widespread belief that violence saves, that war brings peace, that might makes right. “The belief that violence ‘saves’ is so successful because it doesn’t seem to be mythic in the least,” Wink writes. “Violence simply appears to be the nature of things. It’s what works. It seems inevitable, the last and, often, the first resort in conflicts. If a god is what you turn to when all else fails, violence certainly functions as a god. What people overlook, then, is the religious character of violence. …”

From this perspective, violence is an idol, a false god. Violence does not save us from evil, sin, and death. It only adds to evil, sin, and death. As the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., put it: “The ultimate weakness of violence is that it is a descending spiral, begetting the very thing it seeks to destroy. Instead of diminishing evil, it multiplies it. … Returning violence for violence multiplies violence, adding deeper darkness to a night already devoid of stars. Darkness cannot drive out darkness: only light can do that. Hate cannot drive our hate: only love can do that.”

To the extent that we have put our faith in violence instead of God, we must repent of our idolatry, for we cannot serve two masters. As Christians we confess that Jesus is our Lord and Savior, no other. Our security does not rest in violence, but in God. On a deep level, anthropologist Rene Girard argues that the saving power of Jesus’ life comes from his unmasking the way that spirals of violence create and condemn victims who are in fact innocent. Our discipleship, instead, commits us to an upward spiral that weakens the powers of domination.

2. Structural Violence

The descending spiral of violence to which King referred often begins with “structural violence”—the social and economic structures that oppress and impoverish people, preventing them from meeting their basic human needs and realizing their full human potential. The structural violence of injustice and oppression can lead to the violence of revolt and rebellion that then leads to the retaliatory violence of government repression, which then only compounds the structural violence of injustice and oppression and leads to further revolt followed by yet more repression. This is not to say that all violent crime in poor areas is a form of revolt, but to say that those neighborhoods themselves are a form of crime against their inhabitants.

While direct physical violence is more visible and attracts more media attention (“If it bleeds, it leads”), structural violence is far more widespread and arguably does much more harm over time. We see it manifest in hunger and homelessness, poverty and disease. The processes of oppression noted above include patterns of inequality and exclusion called the “isms” of racism, sexism, classism, heterosexism, and ethnocentrism. These patterns operate at interlocking levels—institutional (policies and practices), interpersonal (group and individual) and cultural (social norms and valuing). Most Americans know that the “isms” exist, but the common discourse in our country narrowly addresses discrimination that happens at the interpersonal level—when someone makes a blatantly derogatory comment or is accused of doing so. Most Americans are unfamiliar with how the isms operate on a more insidious social level and unaware of their exacting toll. Yet, those millions of “lives of quiet desperation” are reflections of coercive inequality. We dehumanize ourselves and degrade others by unconsciously supporting patterns that pin our opportunities for well-being on our neighbors’ marginalization. Structural violence militates against our Christian calling to be in authentic loving relationship with our neighbors, near and far.

3. Violence Against the Earth

We are also doing violence to the earth and its creatures. The globalized economy is built on the untrammeled extraction of finite resources, the exploitation of cheap labor, and a no-limits-to-growth ideology, resulting in dangerously compounding climate change. We are destroying ecosystems, depleting precious natural resources, melting glaciers, raising sea levels, and causing a massive extinction of species as our waste products like greenhouse gases alter the ecology of the entire planet. Severe weather fluctuations are already causing tragic increases in hunger. In the book Tropic of Chaos (2011), Christian Parenti warns that climate change is creating desperate refugees and the potential for serious violence in many regions.

4. The Global Context for the Afghanistan and Iraq Wars

To confess our complicity in general without grieving for the two significant wars of the last thirteen years would be fairly painless. Yet to confess without addressing the underlying dynamics is too sentimental. Here we look briefly at the context for the Afghan and Iraq wars, which is partly international structural violence, and then address the somewhat differing tragedies they involve. We return to the issues of U.S. superpower status in discussion of the fifth affirmation.

From a global perspective, we who live in the U.S. are among the richest 20 percent of the world’s population. (Consider that 40 percent of the world’s people attempt to live on less than $2 a day.) The world’s income distribution resembles the shape of a champagne glass, with the top 20 percent of the world’s people who live in the world’s wealthiest countries receiving 83 percent of the world’s income. The next 20 percent receive 10 percent of the world’s income. The remaining 60 percent of the world’s people share the 7 percent of world income that is left.
Global economic inequality is nothing new. As far back as 1948, George Kennan, head of the U.S. State Department planning staff, wrote the following in a secret policy planning study:

> We have about 50 percent of the world’s wealth, but only 6.3 percent of its population. … In this situation, we cannot fail to be the object of envy and resentment. Our real task in the coming period is to devise a pattern of relationships which will permit us to maintain this position of disparity. … To do so, we will have to dispense with all sentimentiality and day-dreaming; and our attention will have to be concentrated everywhere on our immediate national objectives. … We should cease to talk about vague and … unreal objectives such as human rights, the raising of living standards, and democratization. The day is not far off when we are going to have to deal in straight power concepts. The less we are then hampered by idealistic slogans, the better.11

How do we “maintain this position of disparity”? What does it mean to “deal in straight power concepts”? Thomas L. Friedman, the foreign affairs columnist for the New York Times, explains it this way: “The hidden hand of the market will never work without a hidden fist—McDonald’s cannot flourish without McDonnell Douglas, the builder of the F-15. And the hidden fist that keeps the world safe for Silicon Valley’s technologies is called the United States Army, Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps.”14

Though there were multiple sources of our country’s original wealth, our privileged economic position is preserved through U.S. military power, as well as through military aid and weapons sales to governments around the world. Even though it is a violation of U.S. law, the weapons we sell to foreign governments are sometimes used by their militaries against their own people in order to maintain a stable environment for corporate investments. Militarization makes corporate-led globalization possible. Whether militarization itself is finally profitable is one of the questions that Afghanistan and Iraq raise.

5. The Iraq and Afghanistan Wars

Since the terrorist attack on September 11, 2001, involving four hijacked civilian airplanes and approximately 3,000 civilian casualties, the United States has been engaged in two significant wars and a limited intervention in Libya. The war in Afghanistan has been a joint operation with NATO member armies as was the military intervention in Libya. The war in Iraq was initiated without United Nations authorization and involved a “coalition of the willing,” with Great Britain most notable among the U.S. allies. The General Assembly’s calling the Iraq War “unwise, immoral, and illegal,” was based on a clear rethinking of just war teaching: preemptive war was seen as antithetical to last resort; nonexistent weapons and regime change were not seen as just cause; unilateral action spurned the legitimate authority of the UN; and while military success was assured, democratization through military occupation was seen as a questionable way to achieve a just peace.

The Iraq and Afghanistan Wars have been extremely costly in both human and economic terms. The number of Afghans, Iraqis, and Pakistanis who have died in the fighting are estimated to be in the hundreds of thousands. Our repentence must include the long refusal of our occupation forces to count those deaths. Their survivors face many of the same issues that U.S. war veterans do, but without the medical and social support. War refugees and internally displaced persons number 7.8 million. More than 6,100 U.S. soldiers have been killed and more than 46,000 have been injured. Multiple deployments have put enormous stress on U.S. soldiers and their families, whose lives have been changed forever by the experience of war. Even after soldiers return home, war continues to take its toll through unemployment, domestic conflict, depression, alcohol and drug addiction, post-traumatic stress disorder, moral injury, and/or suicide.

The Iraq and Afghanistan Wars will cost the United States alone an estimated $3–$4 trillion when current and future veterans’ costs are added up; the costs of reconstruction, rehabilitation, and military activity by other countries involved is estimated to be another $3 trillion. Most Americans now question whether these military interventions have been worth the enormous cost in lives, national treasure, and reputation, particularly as it is not at all clear what they have achieved. This adds to an “increasing sense of the impotence of military might” (p. 11) and the belief that “the main problems of the world will not yield to military solutions,” (p. 15) as Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling put it.

A case can be made that disproportionate militarization is bankrupting the U.S. economy and creating additional structural violence or oppression. While weapons manufacturers continue to post record profits during a deep recession, our nation’s cities and states are in a state of fiscal crisis, public services and welfare programs, especially for our more vulnerable citizens, are being slashed, and the federal debt due to war remains high.

The money we use each year to prosecute the war in Afghanistan could fund the Head Start program for the next fifteen years, but instead many children will grow up with an inferior education. With the money we spend in Afghanistan, we could provide health coverage to every American, thereby, according to a Harvard study, saving 45,000 American lives in one year. The budgets for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan could fill the budget gaps in all the states, preventing deep cuts in programs to the poor, the sick, and the uneducated. Furthermore, by some reckonings, the number one source of our nation’s debt, about which we hear so much these days, is military related—as Joshua Holland writes, “It’s a tragic irony that so much of the discussion surrounding the public debt centers on “entitlements” like Social Security (which hasn’t added a penny to the national debt) when we’re still paying for Korea and Vietnam and Grenada and Panama and the first Gulf War and Somalia and the Balkans and on and on.”15
Choices between the ability to kill militants and civilians on the other side of the globe and the ability to provide for the health and education of our children, choices to spend $700 billion over the last decade on new weapons (which by the secretary of defense’s own admission have been marginal in enhancing military capabilities) instead of spending that money on green energy or infrastructure—these are moral choices, and we are arguably making the wrong ones. The U.S. is in danger of what Paul Kennedy, author of The Rise and Fall of the Great Powers, calls “imperial overstretch”—when a nation commits so many resources overseas to maintain its empire that the nation implodes from within.

In the 2010 General Assembly debate over the resolution to call for withdrawal from Afghanistan, six years after the church had called for an end to the Iraq war, it was claimed that the strategic goals for the 2001 invasion had been met with the dispersal or death of Al Qaeda leaders and downgraded military capacity of the Taliban. To stay longer was to accumulate enemies and support a corrupt government without adding much to regional or global security. Those judgments may be criticized, but they accepted a stronger initial justification for war than was the case in Iraq. Yet our moral accountability as a nation in both countries has to do not only with the invasion and occupation but the final cease fire and the future prospects for those nations. If Iraq is any indication, those prospects are not good. While our preeminent military role in the world does not make us accountable for all world problems, these two wars will be very hard to defend before the bar of history and history’s judge.

To approve this affirmation is to acknowledge the interlocking web of violence in our lives, our society, and the world, and to call the church to confession. War and oppression are closely intertwined. Engaging violence in ourselves and in the structures of our society and our world is essential to the integrity of our faith, yet daunting, complex, even overwhelming. With a spirit of repentance, then, we turn back to the heart of our faith.

C. Affirmation #3. We reclaim Jesus as Prince of Peace, Christ the Reconciler who proclaims God’s reign, who inspires the prophetic church, forgiving, healing, and undoing violence, and who overcomes evil through the cross and resurrection.

1. The Life and Teachings of Jesus

Since Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling was adopted in 1980, there has been another kind of explosion: in historical scholarship about Jesus of Nazareth. While this scholarship is enormously varied, and involves a wide range of early Christian texts, it offers the church much rich reflection on the interaction of Jesus, the peasant population, the Jerusalem authorities, and the Roman army. Many of the participants in the discernment process were familiar with works by Marcus Borg, N.T. Wright, Walter Wink, Elizabeth Schlusser Fiorenza, Elaine Pagels, John Crossan, John Meier, Richard Horsley, to name some of the best known. Jewish and Muslim scholars have added their volumes to this mix. It is safe to say that most of the discernment participants—like our steering team members—see a clear predilection for nonviolence in the example and teachings of Jesus. Scholarly opinion is more divided, but even those who emphasize Jesus’ engagement in confrontation and conflict rarely link him to violent revolution.

In this section we will look first at recent interpretations of Jesus, and then propose ways that new emphases and learnings may be considered in future Presbyterian peacemaking theology and formation.

Let us first heed Luke Timothy Johnson, however, who warns that our faith is not in the object of any scholar’s historical-critical reconstruction.16 Johnson insists that for the church the canonical collection of literary texts called the New Testament is united in witnessing to the meaning of the Jesus story, and that meaning is found in a pattern consistent with the cross and resurrection. For him: “Jesus’ existence as one of radical obedience toward God and self-disposing service toward others forms a pattern for all humanity that can be written in the heart by the Holy Spirit. It is this pattern that Paul designates as the nomos Christou (“the law of Christ,” or, better, “pattern of the Messiah”).”17 The first question, then, is whether peacemaking or nonviolence is part of that basic pattern.

Without attempting a survey, we choose very different scholarly positions from which to look at Jesus and violence, beginning with the work of Richard B. Hays in The Moral Vision of the New Testament (1996):18

Our exegetical investigation of Matthew 5: 38–48 has led to the conclusion that the passage teaches a norm of nonviolent love of enemies. … Do the other texts (than Matthew) in the canon reinforce the Sermon on the Mount’s teaching on nonviolence, or do they provide other options that might allow or require Christians to take up the sword? When the question is posed this way, the immediate result—as Barth observed—is to underscore how impressively univocal is the testimony of the New Testament writers on this point. The evangelists are unanimous in portraying Jesus as a Messiah who subverts all prior expectations by assuming the vocation of suffering rather than conquering Israel’s enemies. …

When Hays turns to Paul, he lifts up Romans 12, noting “though the governing authority bears the sword to execute God’s wrath (13:4), that is not the role of believers.” As Paul’s military metaphors make clear, “the weapons of our warfare are not merely human” (2 Cor. 10:4). Hays carries through a review of the New Testament and considers Revelation as a counsel to endurance. He considers texts that are cited to allow for violent or military action, seeing in the Temple cleansing a prophetic confrontation, and the references to soldiers “dramatize the power of the Word of God to reach even the unlikeliest people” (like tax collectors). His summary: “from Matthew to Revelation we find a consistent witness against violence and a calling to the community to follow the example of Jesus in accepting suffering rather than inflicting it.” The challenge for Hays that he faces directly is the disjunction between this interpretation of nonviolence in the New Testament and the witness of the Old Testament, which he sees providing the only possible scriptural bases for the Just War and Holy War traditions.
For contrast, we turn to a biblical scholar with a sociological starting point, who sees Jesus more focused on achieving justice than peace, per se, and leading a social movement that challenged the social order as much as it sought to reform Israel’s religious life. Nonetheless, Richard Horsley states:

Jesus, while not necessarily a pacifist, actively opposed violence, both oppressive and repressive, both political-economic and spiritual. He consistently criticized and resisted the oppressive established political-economic-religious order of his own society. Moreover, he aggressively intervened to mitigate or undo the effects of institutionalized violence, whether in particular acts of forgiveness and exorcism or in the general opening of the kingdom of God to the poor.19

Analytically, Horsley considers injustice to be a form of structural violence and sees, particularly clearly in the Gospel of Mark, Jesus’ nonviolent resistance to a host of malevolent powers. He considers his own work, including Jesus and the Spiral of Violence (1987) to provide a broader basis for nonviolence than selected quotations from Jesus and Paul, as he sees a first Century cultural context where religious and political allegiances are deeply entwined.20 Horsley’s Jesus is primarily a prophet out to renew a religious and social covenant; his interpretation, like many recent readings of Jesus, does not emphasize eschatological or apocalyptic themes, but does stress the importance of the crucifixion.

Walter Wink sees in Jesus “a third way” that resists evil through nonviolent means, an approach that outflanks and subverts aggression, sometimes by choosing to suffer. From this perspective, turning the other cheek, offering more clothing than a coat, and going the second mile are examples of the “weaker” party taking the moral initiative and humanizing the opponent, “forcing” him or her to recognize one’s own humanity without resorting to violence. This is a strategy with social and cultural implications, potentially breaking cycles of subjugation and humiliation, exposing injustice in power dynamics, and neutralizing and undermining the threat of violence.21

Wink’s interpretation is a way of accounting for a prophetic and nonviolent life that posed a clear alternative to the domination systems of his time. It does not deny the violent imagery in some of Jesus’ parables, though Margaret Aymer has shown how deeply those images go.22 It presents a Jesus of inner power who, when a Samaritan village refused to host him, refuses his disciples’ idea “to command fire to come down from heaven and consume them.” Jesus rebukes them, saying, ‘You do not know what spirit you are of, for the Son of Man has not come to destroy the lives of human beings but to save them’ (Lk. 9:51–62). Similarly, images of Jesus’ exorcizing evil can also be seen as his engaging with violent forces, but in peace scholar Andrea Bartoli’s words, they are not so much nonviolent as “de-violencing.” That kind of healing can involve spiritual convulsion, as it undoes or disarms the violent spirits from those possessed. This suggests that Jesus may not fit a specific “nonviolent” definition, but maintains that his willingness to face conflict was never a choice for violence.

Of Jesus’ death on the cross, Martin Luther King Jr. said: “Jesus eloquently affirmed from the cross a higher law. He knew that the old eye-for-an-eye philosophy would leave everyone blind. He did not seek to overcome evil with evil. He overcame evil with good.”23 “Those who want to save their life will lose it,” Jesus says, “and those who lose their life for my sake, and for the sake of the gospel, will save it” (Mk. 8:35). Following Christ involves sacrifice. It leads to the cross. But it also holds out the promise of resurrection and new life.

2. The Example of the Early Church

Following on from the life and example of Jesus Christ is the important realization that for the first three centuries, most Christians embraced a nonviolent witness. Early Christians in Rome refused to engage in any violence because they trusted that their love for fellow citizens would point people to the new day dawning in Jesus Christ. The first Christians lived according to a nonviolent code, with frequent martyrdom.

Early Christian theologians, reading the Hebrew Scriptures through the lens of Christian faith, took with utter seriousness the prophecies of Micah and Isaiah, asserting that the Messiah had indeed come, and that the time had come to enact their prophecies of beating their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. They did not interpret the violence in their Scriptures (our Old Testament) as giving them license to kill. Indeed, there is no affirmation of killing or war in the writings of the early Church, nor is there the idea that Christians making war would make the world a better or safer place.

The early writings are replete with prohibitions against killing of any sort, some of which even denied the Eucharist to persons who engaged in such acts. The early Christians would not watch killings, either by viewing legal executions or by attending gladiatorial games. There is scholarly debate over why the early Christians avoided violence, and some Christian soldiers in that period have been identified, but the general witness is clear.

In the fourth century, the church’s relationship to the Roman Empire and to violence changed. The Roman emperor Constantine, converted to Christianity in 312 CE and began promoting the faith instead of persecuting it. By 380 CE, Christianity would become the state religion. During this period, Christians started to take up arms, sometimes with inducements of money or property. The change was such that while in 303 CE it was generally forbidden for Christians to serve in the military, by 416 CE only Christians were allowed to serve.

Christian reflection on the wars of the Roman Empire contributed to the creation of the just war doctrine, developed initially by Bishop Augustine of Hippo on ideas from Bishop Ambrose of Milan and Cicero. The just war theory established of power in families, tribes, nations, and empires lays the foundation for what philosopher Nicholas Wolterstorff calls, “world-formative Christianity.” For Reformed Christians, in fact, his early book, Until Justice and Peace Embrace (1983), has been seen as a counterpoint to John Howard Yoder’s, The Politics of Jesus (1972), a ground-breaking Mennonite case for the relevance of a pacifist Jesus and a pacifist church to the world. The difference in focus and scope of argument illustrates the difference in approaches. In Wolterstorff’s words:

> If the Bible were to be a comprehensive guide for our social activities, it was essential that the Calvinist take the Old Testament seriously. Appeals to the Old Testament in Calvinism have a function similar to appeals to nature in Thomist Catholicism (and in Lutheranism). It is fascinating to observe, in his Letters and Papers from Prison, that as Bonhoeffer moves toward world-formative Christianity and away from a formative version of Christianity based on inwardness and religious practices, he also begins to emphasize the importance of the Old Testament. He saw, as did the Calvinists, that the New Testament in isolation gives insufficient guidance for the new praxis.25

With the Old Testament comes the need to interpret the violence attributed to God and that attributed to human beings, and to do that in relation to newer views of Jesus. Those views, as we have seen, show him avoiding violence but not conflict, seeking reconciliation with justice, and resisting evil by yielding to God in such a way that Albert Curry Winn called him the original “reverse fighter.”26 The third affirmation proposes new thinking for the church, such as that done in Jerome F.D. Creach’s Violence in Scripture (2013), which wrestles with the bloodiest texts about conquest, holy war, vengeance, hell, and judgment, and does so in response to portrayals of Jesus like that of Richard Hays’ above.27 The challenge for those of us influenced by Christian Realism is not to use the Old Testament only to confirm Reinhold Niebuhr’s famous quip, “original sin is the only empirically verifiable doctrine of the Christian faith.” This is untrue to the Old Testament, which gives us visions of shalom, rules to restrain evil, and prophets of a new covenant, and unfair to Niebuhr, whose senses of paradox and irony always helped him move “beyond tragedy.”28

Much of the traditional Reformed reading of pacifism was that it was impossibly perfectionist and entailed renunciation of power (as in priestly vows) or withdrawal from the world (whether in monasteries or in sectarian communities like those of the Anabaptists). It may have worked for the early church, so that thinking went, but they were not powerless and on the margins by choice. Jesus’ teachings were sometimes considered impossible ideals, or to be a short-term ethic in anticipation of an imminent end of the world. This background section has suggested that better argued interpretations of Jesus’ mission can help renew our peacemaking witness.

At the same time, it is clear that faithful resistance—as much of our General Assembly just peacemaking statements recognize—has a force to it, and thus that nonviolence itself can be a form of coercion. Daniel Ott states this explicitly in his argument for “A Realistic, Public, Christian Pacifism,” arguing that “A realistic pacifism must be a pragmatic pacifism that acknowledges that even physical coercion may in a few instances be necessary as a result of our ‘responsibility to protect.’” Yet for Ott, even in policing, “nonviolent strategies are morally superior … through the ability of nonviolence to engage in conflict while honoring the moral primacy of human life.”29 This is to anticipate the next affirmation and its supporting background rationale.

Two final observations may help us in reclaiming or renewing our understanding of Jesus the Peacemaker. The first has to do with the context for both most of the Old Testament and for the early church. That context was empire. The Hebrew people were first enslaved by and then liberated from the Egyptian Empire. The nation of Israel was conquered first by the Assyrian Empire, and later by the Babylonian Empire. Eventually, the Judeans living in exile in Babylon were allowed to return to Jerusalem as a result of the expansion of the Persian Empire. And the entire New Testament takes place in the context of a Roman Empire supported by conquest and slavery. Both John the Baptist, for us the last of the great Hebrew prophets, and Jesus of Nazareth, the One to whom he pointed, called for repentance, proclaiming the Reign of God. They spoke of the Reign of God as an alternative social order based on a rival set of values to those of the Roman Empire. Here is the choice put before the early Christians, imagined in contemporary preaching style:
For all its monumental cultural achievements, the Roman Empire was a system of domination; the Reign of God on the other hand, is a domination-free order. The Roman Empire was based on economic exploitation; the Reign of God is based on economic justice. The Roman Empire was based on violent pride; the Reign of God on nonviolent love. The Roman Empire projected a matrix of iron-fisted control; the Reign of God sings the songs of freedom. The Roman Empire was built on layers of oppression; the Reign of God is founded on the hope of liberation. The Roman Empire’s brutality struck fear in its subjects; the Reign of God offers the balm of healing. The Roman Empire promised peace through victory; the Reign of God promises peace through justice.30

The point of these illustrations is that international relations are complex and that the churches, to offer credible witness, need to have capacity for analysis as well as passion for peacemaking. In this section we present first emerging nonviolent strategies that are clearly preferable to continued dictatorships protected by short-sighted alliances, commercial interests, and massive weapons sales. We note the contributions made by Just War and Just Peacemaking categories, and their limitations. (See Appendix A for brief listings of Just War, Just Peacemaking and nonviolence principles.) This section concludes with the claim that the church’s capacity to “nourish(es) the moral life of the nation” (to quote The Believers’ Calling) depends on its own capacity to nurture a moral imagination to envision new relationships and take risks for peace.

1. Nonviolent Direct Action and Nonviolent Ethos

Nonviolent direct action, best known from the work of Mohandas Gandhi and Martin Luther King Jr., has proven to be a powerful means of wielding power in a variety of conflicts. This is the source behind the earlier examples: the nonviolent “people power” that freed the Philippines, the pro-democracy movements in Poland, East Germany, and Czechoslovakia that ousted communist regimes in 1989, the anti-apartheid movement in South Africa, supported by international economic pressure, that brought an end to white minority rule. With them are lesser known cases, such as the nonviolent student movement in Serbia that ousted a weakened Slobodan Milosevic in the year 2000, or the peace achieved in Mozambique with the explicit assistance of Roman Catholic mediators. Christians participated in these movements for social change, using methods of nonviolent action reminiscent of the civil rights movement that changed the United States.

Nonviolent direct action—the use of protest marches, strikes, boycotts, sit-ins, and more—is a means of wielding power, a technique for waging conflict, just as guerrilla warfare, conventional warfare, and terrorism are also means of waging conflict. Nonviolent direct action is distinct from some methods of conflict resolution in that it seeks to surface, escalate, or intensify, conflict. It does not require its practitioners to be committed to a philosophy or ethic of nonviolence, so long as they follow the methods and stay united. Indeed, people often choose nonviolent action for pragmatic reasons rather than religious, moral, or ethical ones.

Nonviolent people power movements have shown themselves capable of overthrowing dictators, thwarting coups d’état, defending against invasions and occupations, challenging unjust systems, promoting human rights, and resisting genocide. A recent study, “Why Civil Resistance Works: The Strategic Logic of Nonviolent Conflict,” by Maria J. Stephan and Erica Chenoweth, compared the effectiveness of violent and nonviolent resistance campaigns in conflicts between non-state and state actors between 1900 and 2006. The study found that “major nonviolent campaigns have achieved success 53 percent of the time, compared with 26 percent for violent resistance campaigns.” Jesus’ third way of nonviolent action may not work in all circumstances, but the historical record shows that its contemporary analogues are a powerful means of engaging in conflict and can be used successfully in struggles for justice, human rights, and self-determination.

The work of nonviolence theorist, Gene Sharp, From Dictatorship to Democracy, was widely used as a manual during Arab Awakening. Widely translated and reprinted, it contains practical guidance for assessing the weak points of repressive governments and building movements, along with a list of 198 nonviolent methods. Sharp’s strategy would suggest, for example, that though the Syrian protesters were right to try nonviolent means at first, they had not prepared enough of the population for the regime’s response and the influx of extremists pursuing a proxy war. Though Sharp (himself a minister’s son) stresses the pragmatic applicability of the strategies to struggles anywhere, as Christians we are particularly interested in relating them to our “world-transformative” ethos and motivating hope.

Nonviolence may be thought of as both an end and a means. It is an end in that it refers to the future world we long for—a world free from violence and war, free from hunger and poverty, free from injustice and oppression, and full of God’s love, justice, and healing. We may understand it as Jesus’ “kingdom of God”; Martin Luther King Jr.’s ‘beloved community,’ or Walter Wink’s ‘domination-free order.’ Leo Tolstoy’s reading of Jesus in the Gospels influenced Gandhi in finding the satyagraha or truthforce in his religious tradition. Henry David Thoreau’s civil disobedience would be an example of nonviolence as an ethic or applied philosophy of life. As an ethic it has often been disparaged as a form of withdrawal or an attempt to escape complicity in life’s power struggles. Certainly parts of the Mennonite tradition reflect that withdrawal, while Quakers often represent deep and tenacious engagement, even with powers they oppose. Yet the paradigmatic Mennonite story of Dirk Willems, escaping imprisonment for his faith, yet turning back to rescue a persecutor from drowning, and then burnt at stake, is not about withdrawal. It is about being willing to suffer out of love.

These alternative visions and actions can contribute to the church’s embodied witness by helping it be a “contrast model” to more violent, hierarchical, or competitive social relations. Nor is nonviolence or pacifism based solely on a personal ethic of imitating Jesus. A communal ecclesiology can involve clear beliefs about everyone sharing in the gifts of the Spirit and about God’s interaction within human nature and within dedicated, worshiping communities. Personal and collective forms of nonviolent action are described later in the report under the heading of “things that make for peace,” but they are ideally rooted in the life of the church.

Thus we wonder and ask the church to wonder with us: what would it look like if the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) reoriented more of its common life around the Prince of Peace and reemphasized the nonviolent example of his life and witness in our preaching and teaching, our spiritual formation and worship, and our public witness in our violent world?

Many Presbyterians have rarely given serious attention and reflection to questions of violence and nonviolence, war and peace. They have not heard these subjects addressed in sermons, nor have they talked about them in Christian education classes. We heard from many participants that the Peace Discernment process was their first introduction to the ideas of Christian nonviolence. At the same time, many were also unfamiliar with the actual content of the Just War and Just Peacemaking approaches. As a denomination, we need to do a much better job of teaching peace to people in the pews.

2. Just War Principles and Just Peacemaking Initiatives

These background sections have mentioned the just war tradition at various points, starting with the quote from Chaplain Kermit Johnson, who applied its categories of ethical decision to nuclear war. He concluded that even various “tactical” nuclear war scenarios could not be justified. In light of Augustine’s insistence on right intention, Ron Stone argued that the threat of “mutually assured destruction” could not be justified, even though the Roman Catholic bishops’ pastoral letter, “The Challenge of Peace,” accepted deterrence conditionally, saying it was not “adequate as a long term basis for peace.” That was in 1983. The General Assembly’s opposition to nuclear war in Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age (1988) is also based partly on just war criteria, as was its stand on the Iraq war (2004). The clear implication of the church’s stand against the Iraq “war of choice” is to rule out the purported doctrine of preemptive war practiced by the second Bush administration in absence of a real or imminent threat. Indeed, if the discernment discussions revealed any consensus on a specific policy, it was to oppose preemptive war.

The just war tradition is intended to serve as a constraint on the use of military force—to minimize the violence used in achieving a particular objective. All of the criteria must be satisfied if military action (jus ad bello) is to be considered morally justifiable: just cause, right intention, proper authority, last resort, reasonable hope of success. Once a nation has committed to military action, that conduct (jus in bello) must adhere to two additional criteria—proportionality and discrimination (avoiding noncombatants).

Though we have seen the utility of just war criteria as a means of assessment, their flexibility is often exploited by those seeking war or defending the necessity of certain war practices. Critics question the practical value of just war criteria if they do not give clear direction to decision makers about which course of action is more moral. Some in the Christian Realist camp challenge the “natural law” bases of just war (such as the right to self-defense) and doubt that war can ever be a fully rule-governed activity.

A case in point: World War II, the so-called “Good War,” is widely considered to have been a “just war.” However, it did not meet all of the criteria of a just war. U.S. involvement in the war was certainly prompted by just causes—responding to the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor and countering the aggression of Nazi Germany in Europe. But the conduct of the war devolved into “total war” with both sides bombing cities indiscriminately, killing hundreds of thousands of noncombatants, culminating in the U.S. atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in pursuit of unconditional surrender and possibly to signal Russia. The 158th General Assembly (1946) responded: “Christians know that war is evil. The use of the atomic bomb means that war reaches a degree of destruction which multiplies this evil beyond human concept.” They went on to call for “… immediate cessation of the manufacture of atomic bombs.”

Despite the elasticity of just war criteria, as long as U.S. military actions are presented as morally justifiable based on those criteria (whether or not there is a declaration of war), it is important that Presbyterians be well-versed in this tradition so that they can participate intelligently in the public debate and not be deceived by national leaders bent on using military force. The 1988 Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age statement recognized that most acceptance of war is based not on just war thinking, but on often unthinking obedience to the state and political forces; hence various means of resistance were seen as consistent with Reformed teaching.

The most important baseline approach to the just war tradition that has evolved in post-World War II ethical thinking is to underline the presupposition or grounded preference for nonviolence to be used with just war criteria. This understanding is augmented in the just peacemaking preventive measures that build on the principle that war is a last resort. Resort to violence in war, as many in the military know as well as civilian victims, is inevitably tragic and frequently means suspending moral criteria in the name of survival. Christopher Hedges, a former war correspondent, has also illuminated the virtually addictive thrill of combat violence.

The ten Just Peacemaking practices were put together by an ecumenical team of ethicists coordinated by Professor Glen Stassen of Fuller Theological Seminary. Based on many lessons from peacemaking involvements and perceived limits of Just War thinking, these practices focus most on how conflicts can be avoided—not least by taking what are called independent initiatives to reduce tensions and thus avoid overt hostilities. (See Appendix C.) An interfaith application of the principles has been published as well. The just peacemaking practices do not presume a pacifist basis, and hence are not an alternative to just war principles, even though they seek to “abolish war.” They underline how much war often results from specific failures of leadership and diplomacy, and from predictable weaknesses of international institutions—including a United Nations hamstrung by Security Council members with individual nation veto power and low standards of member behavior. The international justice system to protect human rights is also kept weak, partly by a United States that refuses jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court and stands outside of basic treaties.

Just peacemaking, like active nonviolence, thus illuminates how much the just war approach is tied to nation states and their sovereignty. Citizenship in nation states is a basis for grounding much human rights law, but human rights law also points beyond and within states, many of which mistreat their people. A searching critique of the just peacemaking construct by one of its ethicist participants points both to its antecedents, in the “Six Pillars of Peace” of the Federal Council of Churches, and the limitations of putting too much weight on alternatives to national policies: “Until just peacemaking incorporates more attention to power, national definitions of purpose, diplomacy, and biblical realism derived from the prophets, it will remain too idealistic.”

What just peacemaking does well is to introduce a whole new body of practical measures for conflict resolution and reconciliation forged in some very difficult circumstances, often with strong Christian inspiration. We look more at “the things that make for peace” in the next section, but simply to look at just peacemaking practice 4: “Acknowledge responsibility for conflict and injustice and seek repentance and forgiveness.” This partly reflects Donald W. Shriver’s An Ethic for Enemies (1995), which applied forgiveness in political and social situations. Among the groups explicitly focusing on forgiveness are Fr. Leonel Narvaez’s Schools of Forgiveness and Reconciliation in Colombia and elsewhere in Latin America, seeking to help heal the effects of “dirty wars,” and the work of Donna Hicks on ways to restore dignity to victims of violence and humiliation.42

What the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and other U.S. Christian bodies have not done fully or effectively is to provide a moral analysis of certain major developments in war-making. These would include what is close to the abdication by Congress of its power to declare war; the movement of many combat functions to private contractors and voluntary enlistees which has the effect of making it more and more a profit making enterprise (often financed by borrowed money); and the development of incredibly sophisticated weaponry in robotics, nanotechnology, drones, and more. (The 2014 ACSWP resolution on drones and surveillance addresses some of this.)

3. The Church and the Military

As long as Presbyterians continue to serve in the U.S. military, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a responsibility to care for active duty soldiers, veterans, and their families. Our denomination does this by providing chaplains to the military through the Presbyterians Caring for Chaplains and Military Personnel (PCCMP). The mission of these ministers is “to provide military personnel with a visible reminder of the HOLY in the midst of combat and chaos.” Chaplains serve as noncombatants; they are prohibited from carrying firearms. They offer worship, prayer, and Bible study, and spend much of their time providing pastoral care and counseling to the soldiers in their units. Chaplains also may serve as a moral voice on the battlefield, where life and death decisions are being made on a daily basis. Chaplains are often the only ones in the chain of command who can hear and hold the terror of young soldiers facing death, and hear and hold the remorse in taking the life of another human being. Chaplains themselves carry a large burden in being present in war as enemies also made in the image of God are objectified and killing becomes routinized. Indeed, military training is designed to break down the innate reluctance to take the lives of our fellow human beings, to make killing normal, normative, and necessary. Furthermore, war doesn’t end when the deployment is over; its lingering effects continue long after veterans return home.

Our congregations also have a role to play in supporting military families while their loved ones are deployed overseas and after they return home. Multiple deployments put enormous stress on soldiers and on the spouses and children they leave behind. Even when soldiers return physically unscathed, parts of the soul can remain on the battlefield. This can mean depression, suicidal thoughts, Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, sometimes augmented by serious doubts or lack of support for the wars. Veterans need the love and care of congregations who will welcome them home and listen to them with wisdom. The church has a special responsibility to help heal the moral and spiritual wounds of its sons and daughters who have been scarred by war. For instance, in the Greek Orthodox tradition there is a ritual cleansing from the spiritual defilement of violence. A new approach to the “moral injury” of war has been pioneered by Rita Nakashima Brock and Gabriella Lettini, working with retired Army Chaplain Herman Keizer.44

The PC(USA) also has a responsibility to our youth and young adults to help them examine their own moral consciences and to work through the ethical arguments for serving in the military versus declaring oneself a conscientious objector to war. Young people are presented with these important decisions early in their lives. We fail them if we do not equip them to make these decisions faithfully and wisely. The 1969 General Assembly report on War, Peace, & Conscience is still relevant here, even though there is no current military conscription. The major report, Ministry to Persons in the Armed Forces, adopted by the General Assembly in 1975, contains much valuable analysis of both chaplaincy work and short term programs like the Emergency Ministry on Conscience and War of the late 1960s.35

4. Inviting in the Moral Imagination

In our peace discernment process, we were inspired by the writings and the grassroots peacemaking work of John Paul Lederach, a Mennonite veteran of “peace-building” who has mediated conflicts for the last thirty years. Others, like Andrea Bartoli in the Roman Catholic tradition, and the emerging “forgiveness” school, also introduce imagination in cultivated ways. Lederach identifies the moral imagination as the capacity to imagine and design processes within the real-life challenges of violence without being caught up in destructive patterns. Lederach maintains:

If we are to survive as a global community, we must understand the imperative nature of giving birth and space to the moral imagination in human affairs.

*We must face the fact that much of our current system for responding to deadly local and international conflict is incapable of overcoming cycles of violent patterns because our imagination has been corralled and shackled by the very parameters and sources that create and perpetuate violence.*48

The moral imagination is activated when “politics as usual” fails to deliver. The moral imagination requires the capacity to risk a new world. This risk is embedded in three related capacities: to imagine ourselves in a web of relationships in which all parties are knit together, to embrace the complexity of every conflict, and to act creatively, especially given the risks it takes to imagine peace. Peace-building requires that people be able to envision their interconnectedness and mutuality. Daniel Ott, in his adaptation of Christian Realism, emphasizes how much peacemakers have to see that real change is possible and not be stuck in fatalism or determinism. Without the inner strength of hope, Christians would not have led in the struggles to abolish slavery, honor women’s equality, pay workers fairly, protect the rights of children, or fight global warming today.
Moral imagination also involves the capacity to rise above polarities of “us and them” and divisions of “with us or against us,” and reach beyond accepted meanings. “Paradoxical curiosity” is the gift of respecting complexity, seeking something beyond what is visible, and discovering unexpected potentialities. To take a risk is to step into the unknown without any guarantee of success or safety. For many people caught in conflict, violence is known, and peace is a mystery. Because peace-building typically requires people to move toward a new, mysterious, and unexpected future, it is a difficult journey. And yet, Christ clearly calls us to join him in risking peace and transforming conflicts by boldly practicing the things that make for peace.

E. Affirmation #5: As disciples of Jesus Christ, we commit ourselves to work first for nonviolent change in our personal and communal lives, to risk calling our nation back from the practices of empire to the highest ideals of our heritage, and to practice boldly the things that make for peace.

As followers of Jesus Christ, we are called to seek first the kingdom of God. Peacemaking is part of our seeking that reign or commonwealth where God’s will is done on earth as it is in heaven. Until that day, prophetic discipleship involves risk, and in this section we realize our proposal may challenge many. We propose it, not so much that our country’s national security be at risk, but for our church to challenge the way our nation has extended its understanding of national security into the world.

It is clear, after more than twelve years of war, that a majority of Presbyterians are deeply concerned about the enormous human and economic costs of war—the hundreds of thousands killed in Iraq and Afghanistan, the millions of people displaced by the violence, the thousands of U.S. soldiers killed or injured, the trillions of dollars spent and the damage done to our economy. This report has noted that a majority of Presbyterians are also deeply worried about the pervasive violence in U.S. culture—in gun violence, sports, entertainment, and our tolerance for hunger, poverty, abuse, and neglect. Just as we seek to be just and loving in our own lives and in our congregations, so as Reformed Christians we believe the church is called to invite the nations of the world into new understandings of how to respond to violence in our time. To many, the church is called by the scriptures to be a counter-cultural community, as it was in its first three centuries of growth, pointing toward the kingdom of God.

In this section we look at the sometimes controversial concept of empire, understanding that the U.S. is not the only empire, and that empires come in several kinds. Under that heading we address the purposes of power and propose that our peacemaking calling means helping our nation change its orientation to the world, from superpower to something less grandiose. We do not see the U.S. losing its military preeminence any time soon, but it would be good to be number one again in some other measures of national achievement. Attacks on “empire” are nothing new: Christians have been comparing their governments to Rome from the Renaissance, the Reformation, and the Enlightenment through to our day. And yet, the word still names with power the human and economic costs of war—the hundreds of thousands killed in Iraq and Afghanistan, the millions of people displaced by the violence, the thousands of U.S. soldiers killed or injured, the trillions of dollars spent and the damage done to our economy. This report has noted that a majority of Presbyterians are also deeply worried about the pervasive violence in U.S. culture—in gun violence, sports, entertainment, and our tolerance for hunger, poverty, abuse, and neglect. In this section we look at the sometimes controversial concept of empire, understanding that the U.S. is not the only empire, and that empires come in several kinds. Under that heading we address the purposes of power and propose that our peacemaking calling means helping our nation change its orientation to the world, from superpower to something less grandiose. We do not see the U.S. losing its military preeminence any time soon, but it would be good to be number one again in some other measures of national achievement. Attacks on “empire” are nothing new: Christians have been comparing their governments to Rome from the Renaissance, the Reformation, and the Enlightenment through to our day. And yet, the word still names with power the human and economic costs of war—the hundreds of thousands killed in Iraq and Afghanistan, the millions of people displaced by the violence, the thousands of U.S. soldiers killed or injured, the trillions of dollars spent and the damage done to our economy. To many, the church is called by the scriptures to be a counter-cultural community, as it was in its first three centuries of growth, pointing toward the kingdom of God.

Thus this affirmation lifts up a vision of God’s Reign of justice and peace as an alternative standard to power relations predicated primarily on force. The United States is not unique in the inevitable competition among nations seeking their own interests. China, Russia, and other major powers maintain empires through trade, alliances, and force. Ethnically different sections of some countries may be controlled by majorities and even internally colonized. Our role remains dominant, however, despite the tragedies of Iraq and Afghanistan, and the interests for which we sustain our massive military presence around the world remain largely unquestioned. On one level, it is honest patriotism to challenge U.S. foreign and military policies that seek to dominate the rest of the world in order to maintain our “American Way of Life” at the expense of others, especially “the least of these.” But it is also a matter of Christian discipleship, and this requires us always to be clear who “we” are: Christians and citizens who do not confuse the cross with the flag.

To say we seek nonviolent change first is to acknowledge that for many Presbyterians as individuals and as citizens there may be a last resort to violence. Yet our first goal or presupposition is peace, with justice, and our dispositions and our disciplines can be much strengthened in this direction. Our confirmation and adult education classes can teach forgiveness, reconciliation, and conflict resolution as practical strategies, and our public witness can look more wisely and critically at the national interests we are called to fund or defend. To support this recommendation is not only to seek to be nonviolent in our own lives, but to seek to reorient our society away from the lure of empire and its structures of domination toward the promotion of a sustainable global community in which everyone’s basic human needs are met and security assured.

1. Colonialism, Empire, and Post-Colonial Empire

The church stood in opposition to the Roman Empire until the fourth century, when it arguably began a long symbiotic relationship. As subsequent European empires expanded, they did so often with the blessing of the Church. Explorers and conquistadors conquered lands and peoples with Christian missionaries at their side. This was true of the Spanish, the Portuguese, the French, and the British, as they all came to the New World in the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries. Elsewhere in the world, powerful nations exercised their power to control the land and resources of others in a variety of ways, often settling regions, dispossessing native inhabitants, imposing new languages, cultures, and religions. For some one-time colonies, even after independence, relationships of dependency remained with the former colonizers.
In the case of the United States, original hopes of being a New Israel took new forms on the frontier and manifest destiny led to wars of conquest, however rationalized. Pax Romana became Pax Americana. In the 20th century the U.S. has controlled countries by supporting military dictators, such as Marcos in the Philippines, the Somozas in Nicaragua, and the Shah in Iran. We extend our influence and leverage by providing governments with military and economic aid, and with military equipment comes training and enduring relationships with foreign militaries, whatever their human rights records. Where there has been resistance to U.S. hegemony, whether it be the Cuban Revolution, or the Sandinista Revolution in Nicaragua, the Iranian Revolution in some respects, the U.S. has reacted with military and economic force.

As Christians living in the U.S. today, difficult as it may be, it is incumbent upon us to recognize that we live in what is perceived to be the heart of empire. Even in our own faith community, the World Alliance (now Communion) of Reformed Churches, issued a declaration containing a sophisticated concept of empire that still delivers mail to our address. The Accra Assembly (2004) defined the term: “In using the term “empire” we mean the coming together of economic, cultural, political and military power that constitutes a system of domination led by powerful nations to protect and defend their own interests.”47 That declaration criticized the unregulated or “neoliberal” market system in ways that were prophetic in light of the credit crash of 2008, but its larger claim was that economic globalization was strengthening inequality among and within nations, to the benefit of those at the top of a hegemonic order. We may not think easily about “hegemony,” but that’s part of the point. As Americans, we don’t think twice about the U.S. maintaining approximately 750 overseas military bases in 130 countries. But imagine some other country wanting to operate a military base on U.S. soil!

Given the freedom and prosperity most Presbyterians experience inside the U.S., we don’t often challenge the status quo, except perhaps on domestic surveillance. If we raise our voices in opposition to U.S. empire, we may not speak very loudly. But like Jesus, John the Baptist, and the Hebrew prophets before them, the Church today has a prophetic calling. As the Body of Christ, the Church continues the work of Christ in the world. We have a responsibility to speak truth to power, to challenge the status quo, to be a voice of conscience to our nation and to the world.

2. Aspects of “Empire” in U.S. Policy Today

Three crucial developments in U.S. foreign and military policy have arisen since 1980: the Carter Doctrine, the Powell Doctrine, and the Bush Doctrine. The Carter Doctrine says that the U.S. government reserves the right to use military power to guarantee access to Middle East oil. The Powell Doctrine expressed the U.S. aspiration to “full spectrum dominance,” that is, the ability of the U.S. military to bring dominating military force to bear on any situation anywhere on the planet. The Bush Doctrine of “preventive war” claims that the U.S. government has the right to “defend” itself against putative or imagined threats by striking adversaries preemptively. All three of these foreign policy strategies rely on a military role and can be termed, “militarism,” though the Obama administration has criticized the Bush doctrine and not stated a doctrine for its own increasing reliance on drones and special operations forces.

For most of our history, the size of the U.S. military mirrored the immediate threat or task to which it was directed. After the end of the Cold War, the size and capability of our military seemed to take on a life of its own, independent of any specific threats. Americans had grown to see it as their right and responsibility to police the world, and powerful interests benefited. Then the tragedy of 9/11 occurred, prompting a virtual doubling of military and surveillance expenditure even independent of the two wars, which were funded by debt.

Today our nation’s ability to project armed force beyond our borders is second to none. We have the best trained and equipped armed forces in the world, and we spend more on our military than do the countries with the next ten highest military budgets combined. The United States is by far the largest arms dealer in the world. U.S. weapons sales tripled in 2011 to a record high of $66.3 billion, accounting for more than three-quarters of the global arms market. The U.S. military budget is larger than all other federal programs except Social Security. The U.S. retains a web of military bases around the world from which to project force, carry on surveillance, and protect oil and other resources. U.S. military intervention had become relatively normal since the end of the Cold War—in Haiti, Somalia, Bosnia, Kosovo, the Persian Gulf, and then Afghanistan and Iraq II opened new horizons, including Pakistan, Yemen, and various military assistance operations in the Western Hemisphere. Hardly a year or two has passed without a significant military action. Living in a state of war has become the rule rather than the exception.46

National security has become the overarching interest with which the United States approaches the world. Since “the war on terror” began, covert operations, surveillance, and drone missiles have taken on a central role. The growth in the U.S. intelligence community has been staggering. According to a July 2011 series in The Washington Post, some 1,271 government organizations and 1,931 private companies then worked on programs related to counterterrorism, homeland security, and intelligence, with an estimated 854,000 people holding top-secret security clearances. The threat of terror is not to be dismissed, but that label may conceal the way that globalization creates cross-border networks of grievance and covert operations kept secret to us (such as providing arms, training, surveillance data) de-stabilize traditional societies.49

Perhaps more importantly, the entire spectrum of our nation’s engagement with the world is becoming more militarized. U.S. military forces are increasingly being used to do things that have not usually been considered part of their job—things like nation building, which had been handled by the State Department and through international diplomacy. The extent to which our nation’s priorities have been skewed toward the military is illustrated by the resources we invest in it compared to what we spend on diplomacy and development. The base funding of the Department of Defense is more than ten times that of the State Department and USAID. Rather than a once hoped for “peace dividend,” our military planning is still guided by the goal of “full spectrum dominance,” and remains predicated on maintaining overwhelming superiority.

There are voices for change within the military itself. One of the more comprehensive comes from Captain Wayne Porter, USN, and Colonel Mark Mykleby, USMC, whose proposal for a new “National Strategic Narrative” was endorsed and summarized by Anne-Marie Slaughter, a professor of international affairs and briefly director of Policy Planning in the State Department. Their proposal is for five shifts in approach:

1. from a dominant position of control to credible influence in a more open geopolitical system;
2. from containment to sustainability, based on domestic re-development and better modeling of the behavior we seek in other nations;
3. from deterrence and defense to civilian engagement and competition, which would re-emphasize trade and diplomacy, while still modernizing “a security complex that includes all domestic and foreign policy assets”;
4. from zero sum to positive sum global politics/economics,” preferring interdependence and universal values to isolation and exclusion of other nations;
5. from national security to national prosperity and security,” a shift that would involve a new National Prosperity and Security Act to replace the 1947 National Security Act.

In Slaughter’s summary, she sees the officers adjusting the balance between exceptionalism and universalism toward the latter value, still seeking to be “leader of the free world,” but in a healthier and actually less military way.

3. Economic Drivers or National Purposes

President Eisenhower’s prophetic warning about the unwarranted influence of the military-industrial complex from 1961 has become more relevant than ever. More accurately called the military-industrial-congressional complex, or “the iron triangle,” it is an interlocking system of mutually reinforcing interests with very little outside oversight. Supported by “political engineering” that distributes military contracts across many congressional districts, the complex creates and sustains its own bureaucratic momentum. The question is simply how much private interests are dictating national interests, and whether we have come to confuse such interests with national purposes? Nonviolence seeks to put a moral bottom line under foreign policy, while peacemaking works more broadly to see that our purposes remain larger than our interests.

The United States’ vast military and intelligence establishments go far beyond the intent or imagination of our nation’s Founders, whose views could loosely be called isolationist, opposed to ‘foreign entanglements’ in John Adams’s words. George Washington himself counseled against a significant standing army: “Overgrown military establishments are under any form of government inauspicious to liberty, and are to be regarded as particularly hostile to Republican liberty” (Farewell Address, September 17, 1796). And James Madison wrote: “Of all enemies to public liberty, war is, perhaps, the most to be dreaded, because it comprises and develops the germ of every other. War is the parent of armies; from these proceed debts and taxes; and armies, and debts, and taxes are the known instruments for bringing the many under the domination of the few.”

By contrasting the practices of empire with “the highest ideals of our heritage,” we affirm that our country should have a significant role in the world and one of benefit to all. It is a key role of the church to help inspire our culture to see new possibilities, and it is not isolationist to be opposed to much military intervention. At times the use of power is justified and may serve those high ideals of democracy and world community; the danger is both the momentum of our enormous arsenal calling to be used, and the mindset that may confuse power and responsibility.

4. Challenges in Pulling the United States Back from “Empire” Practices

Professor Andrew Bacevich, a career military officer now a professor of political science and incisive commentator on American military policy, analyzes a phenomenon he terms “Washington rules.” These rules consist of the “American credo,” which is the assumption that the United States is “exceptional” or “indispensable”—that it alone has the duty and the calling to “lead, save, liberate, and ultimately transform the world.” Complementing the belief in American exceptionalism is a consensus across the spectrum of the American political elite regardless of political party. This consensus insists that international peace and order require the U.S. to project military power anywhere across the globe and that the U.S. follow a policy of global interventionism. The twin pillars of “Washington rules”—American exceptionalism and the global police role—have a stranglehold on American foreign and military policy, according to Bacevich. Voices that question this consensus, as the church has done on numerous occasions, are ruled out as outliers, too radical, or naïve and unrealistic. The result is a self-reinforcing system of decision-making that discounts the calls for moral restraint or efforts to see the other nation’s point of view.

Therefore, the church must be realistic about the nature of its influence. In light of the Iron Triangle noted above, three main factors influence military spending: (1) powerful multi-national corporations have a vested interest in perpetuating the machinery of war and seeing it as a necessity. Weapons must be used and new orders placed for profits to be maintained over time; (2) political careers must be continued and economic benefits from the military-industrial complex deliver the goods to constituencies back home, even if other forms of public investment would create more jobs; and (3) the dramatic rise in the power of the Pentagon and the massive “defense” establishment over the past seventy years has created a huge and dominant sector of government with ever-increasing demands. These three extremely powerful factors in the decision-making process regarding war form a political “micro-climate” largely impervious to outside influence. In fact, the phrase “micro-climate” is deceptive, for it is an enormous part of our country’s life, too often underestimated by churches and other reforming groups.

It is true that the Reformed tradition has long affirmed that the state can indeed be an instrument of God’s purposes in history (Romans 13). But it is also true that the Word of God warns us that the state can also be an instrument of the Beast (Revelations 13). These texts pose the basic question of whether the United States functions more as an empire pursuing its own interests than as a faithful instrument of God’s will. In these historical circumstances, nonviolence represents a counterlogic, a sharper contrast, and a counterweight to the machinery of permanent war and seemingly perpetual cycles of violence. The Reformed tradition makes careful provision for responsible resistance to government overreach, based on its covenantal vision of national purposes, and this more constructive vision is the core of the alternatives to misused power that the church seeks to present. That covenantal vision, in fact, was expressed in Puritan John Winthrop’s first use of Jesus’s metaphor of a “city set on a hill” for the new settlement they were building. Nowadays we are clearer, perhaps, than Winthrop was, that human rights and respect for international law are essential building blocks in any such construction, but he was clear enough that for the community to last “we must be willing to abridge ourselves of our superfluities for the supply of others’ necessities.”

5. The Things That Make for Peace

We Presbyterians are looking for direction and guidance about how we, as individuals and congregations, can take faithful and effective action to reduce violence and war, to further justice and peace. In this vein, there is broad interest in learning concrete peacemaking skills that we can use in our daily lives. Indeed, if we are to be effective peacemakers, able to actually reduce violence and injustice in our various contexts, we need to receive education and training in the “things that make for peace.” We need to study and practice nonviolent means of conflict resolution (such as nonviolent communication, negotiation, and mediation) and nonviolent methods for social change (such as faith-based community organizing and nonviolent direct action) to help bring about a more just and peaceful world. (See Appendix C for brief descriptions of these approaches.) We also need to become more familiar with just peacemaking initiatives, which can help prevent war, and just war principles, which are intended to limit war, so that we can be more effective advocates for justice and peace in the public square. Jesus’ own statement, “would that you knew this day the things that make for peace,” was addressed to the whole of Jerusalem, and was followed shortly by his “cleansing of the Temple” (Lk. 19:42–46).

6. Interfaith Understanding

Among the most important peacemaking approaches for Christians today are practices of interreligious understanding that build mutual respect and the ability to hear what is most important to the other, without vetoes or mischaracterization. Religions are often blamed for being the cause of conflict and violence in the world. Religious identity is impossible to separate from other dimensions of personal identity, yet those who blame religion isolate it as the primary causal factor. In reality, political, ethnic, and economic factors bear much more responsibility for creating the underlying conditions that lead to violent conflict. Nonetheless, religions have within them a storehouse of resources to promote peace and reconciliation and Presbyterians should be quite familiar with the Christian basics—starting with the Golden Rule—“Do to others as you would have them do to you” (Lk. 6:31)—found in some form in all of the world’s major religions. In many cases cited in Peacemakers in Action: Profiles of Religion in Conflict Resolution, edited by David Little, public dialogue between religious leaders from opposing groups can help create breakthroughs for reconciliation.

Little also sees religious peacemakers playing key roles in “enforcement, peacekeeping, institution-and-capacity building, and agreement-making.” The work is less in the first area, which can involve coercion to end violence (as in Bosnia and Kosovo), and the second, which can be diplomatic language for outside military monitoring or stabilization forces. But the third and fourth, sometimes considered part of “Track Two,” unofficial or citizen diplomacy, frequently involve religious peacemakers in developing organizations and even rituals for social harmony and then creating positive contexts for Track One, or formal peace negotiations. Such efforts built empathic understanding in South Sudan and Northern Ireland, for example, although the relationships built can remain fragile.

7. Truth and Reconciliation Commissions

Under the fourth affirmation we noted ways that public forgiveness and apology were included within the just peacemaking framework. Truth and reconciliation commissions are also ways of bringing perpetrators to acknowledge, if not actually confess, the truth of their actions before their victims or the survivors of their victims. Allan Boesak has pointed out the danger that a collective evil, like apartheid, can be reduced to the actions of individuals who are then blamed on the group’s behalf, but he has also pointed to the way that victims can regain their voices and dignity through publicly recognized and respected grief. Naturally, the work of truth and reconciliation commissions must follow the actual achievement of ceasefires and the presence of outside observers (like a Jimmy Carter) and religious leaders (like a Desmond Tutu) can be extremely helpful. The key thing, though, is that such commissions are moral inventions and they can lead to more healing and more creativity. We need more arenas where longer term hostilities can be defused and young people inspired and new leaders born. Could we even address structural violence this way, and recognize more veterans of social conflict who carry moral injuries?

8. Accompaniment and Nonviolent Third-Party Intervention

Nonviolent direct action is usually engaged in by the “weaker” party in a conflict. In the past few decades, however, there has been growing experience with third parties, who are not part of a conflict, intervening nonviolently in the hopes of deterring violent attacks and human rights violations. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has played a part in this through its Colombia Accompaniment Program, which has brought more than ninety trained accompaniers to stand in solidarity with the Iglesia Presbyteriana de Colombia whose leaders had been killed and members intimidated. The World Council of Churches has cosponsored an accompaniment program in Palestine to protect Palestinian school children and others from settler and Israeli army violence. The goal in such efforts is “to see and be seen.” At a less-intense level, court watchers and election monitors do variants of this work.

9. Teaching Peace in the Church; Being Peace in the World

The more personal dimensions and disciplines of active nonviolence and peacemaking are already being practiced in many churches where strangers are welcomed, prisoners are visited, veterans brought in, and perhaps “international peacemakers” hosted and interfaith dialogues sponsored. Some mission trips also seek to cross once-hostile boundaries, or to help build new friendships. Suspicion of “the Russians” still exists, racism still poisons our cities, Islamophobia is manipulated to prevent empathic understanding: all are addressed in some congregations. Some also teach children nonviolence and ways to prevent bullying, and increasing numbers are speaking up about the constant menace of gun violence. We believe these life-giving practices are of God and offer life to the church and witness to the world.

Peacemaking is a faith commitment; it is a calling rather than a conclusion. It constitutes the lens by which reality is brought into focus; the value system by which the meaning and significance of threats are determined. With humility, we recognize that just as the nationalistic exceptionalism of empire distorts, so a concern for universal human rights may not be the full key to the healing of the nations. If the U.S. were to reduce its footprint, would benign forces take the place of our military? Would the churches push for constructive multilateral ways to fill power vacuums and help create order through collective security—or are we simply weary of war? We have spoken of citizen diplomacy; could we see ourselves assisting others with citizen-based defense? At the core of all these risks in seeking peace is the choice to resist violence, and it is not just a personal choice.

The word, “making,” in peacemaking, is poesis in Greek. The Gospel of Peace is Christ, who is our peace, who gives to us ministries of reconciliation, who makes us ambassadors of God’s commonwealth and reign. But perhaps God also calls us to be poets of peace, composers, crafters, creators, hearers and doers of peace. We end with three true stories.

Three Examples of Risking Peace

- The French village of Le Chambon risked peace in sheltering 5,000 Jews fleeing the Nazis during World War II. The driving force behind the rescue effort was Andre Trocme, the Huguenot (French Reformed) pastor of the village. Deeply committed to Christian nonviolence, on Sunday mornings he would preach the Sermon on the Mount, love of God and love of neighbor, reverence for life, and the necessity of resisting evil with good. The people of Le Chambon hid Jews in their homes and farmhouses and arranged for them to reach the safe haven of neutral Switzerland. In doing so, they risked their lives. Occasionally, the Gestapo raided the town. Leaders were arrested and imprisoned, and some were later killed. But despite the repression, the resistance in Le Chambon continued to the end of the war.

In the last months of German occupation, the Tartar Legion commanded by SS Colonel Metzger was poised to destroy the village and its inhabitants. But a second German officer, Major Schmehling, commandant of the German Army post in Le Puy, dissuaded Metzger from attacking. Years after the war, Schmehling told Trocme of the fateful conversation: “Colonel Metzger was a hard one, and he kept insisting that we move in on Le Chambon. But I kept telling him to wait … I told Metzger that this kind of resistance has nothing to do with violence, nothing to do with anything we could destroy with violence. With all my personal and military power I opposed sending his legion into Le Chambon.”

- More recently, on August 20, 2013, a school bookkeeper, Antoinette Tuff, risked peace when a gunman walked into her school. Twenty-year-old Michael Brandon Hill entered the Ronald E. McNair Discovery Learning Academy near Atlanta with an AK-47 and 500 rounds of ammunition intending to shoot and kill as many people as he could. Ms. Tuff was scared but remained calm. She had received training in how to respond to dangerous situations like this one. And she found courage and strength in her Christian faith. She recalled her pastor’s teachings about “anchoring and how you anchor yourself in the Lord.” She was able to talk Hill down and convince him to surrender to police, thereby averting another mass shooting. “It was all God,” she said. “I was just praying.”

- The U.S. risked peace in September 2013, when it opted not to launch air strikes against Syria in response to an August 21 chemical weapons attack against civilians, but instead negotiated an international agreement to disarm the Syrian government of all of its chemical weapons. President Obama had threatened a military response as a consequence for violating international norms. Military intervention seemed imminent. Then U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry made an off-the-cuff remark that air strikes could be averted if Syria turned over all its chemical weapons to the international community within a week, but Syria “isn’t about to do it and it can’t be done.” This rhetorical suggestion was taken up as a serious proposal by Russia and received a positive response from Syria. Where once military intervention was being touted as the only option for responding to the use of chemical weapons in Syria, the U.S. stumbled into a diplomatic alternative that had not been seriously considered. Whether the countries involved in that proxy war have encouraged a serious peace process since is another question.

God is always doing a new thing. It is the nature of God to gather up all the occasions of the past, and with immense healing power, weave transforming possibilities into the emerging moment. The future is constantly arriving, a future whose radical and redemptive newness it owes to the creative work of the Poet of the World, the Lover of Souls, the Lord of the Church, who declares, “Behold I make all things new.” Let us welcome the new thing that God is doing, risk peace and transform conflict by boldly practicing the things that make for peace.

APPENDIX A
Brief Summary of Christian and Presbyterian Approaches Prior to 1980

There is no question but that the centrality of peace as a distinctive feature of Christian fidelity goes back to the Bible, to the idea of shalom in the Hebraic tradition and to the idea of being peacemakers in the teachings and pattern of Jesus’ own fidelity to God. But translating this concept into policies that further human well-being has challenged Christian thinking ever since the church ceased to be bands of dedicated believers existing as outsiders within Greco-Roman culture.

Two main traditions developed within the Christian movement that were dedicated to the goal of peace, but understood responsibility for achieving it in different ways. The first, claiming a strong grounding in the New Testament and the practices of the early church, is Christian pacifism; the other, the just war tradition, grows out of the realization that when Christians become holders of authority and exercise office in a political world they may be called upon to use violence for the protective love of neighbor and for the maintenance of justice and order. Both of these moral stances need to be seen as very different from the views that religion may use violent means to advance its own interests—the premises of an ethic of the crusade, or that nationalisms or ideologies may claim de facto religious sanction for dominating others—the major causes of war for more than two centuries, particularly in Europe and countries colonized by European empires.

During the Protestant Reformation some groups, from which the “peace churches” emerged, understood Christian discipleship to require the repudiation of violence in the manner of the earliest church. Other groups, from which most mainline Reformed bodies emerged, understood Christian discipleship to allow for the restrained, and hence legitimate, use of the sword to preserve justice and order. Presbyterian Confessions generally contain just war positions in relation to the role of the magistrate, or civil government. These two main Christian approaches to war and violence retained theological coherence as Christians sought to apply them through revolutions and wars of conquest, liberation, defense, and humanitarian intervention. American Presbyterians participated in and justified the Revolutionary War, the Civil War, World Wars I and II, and the Korean conflict, but have been less and less of one mind on smaller wars like Vietnam, the Nicaragua/Contra war, the two Iraq wars, and Afghanistan.

Back in 1936 and 1938, when pacifist sentiment was strong in American Social Christianity, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. sent the presbyteries proposals to remove just war language from the Westminster Confession, which was then the church’s only confessional standard. While a majority of the presbyteries voted to remove or amend the language, in neither case did the outcome reach the supermajority of presbyteries required to accomplish that result.

During WWII, which had the overwhelming support of most Americans following Pearl Harbor, two important developments took place. First, some individual Presbyterians felt called to be conscientious objectors and were generally supported in taking this position (or at least benignly tolerated) by the church. That support made it amply clear that a pacifist conviction was a legitimate form of Christian discipleship. (The influence of the votes in the 1930s may be seen here). The second development found the Presbyterian church in cooperation with many other denominations giving extensive thought to what would constitute a just and durable peace. Studies were undertaken both in the denominations and in ecumenical bodies which explored such concerns and were staffed with competent specialists. That work contributed to support for the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the United Nations and was likely to have helped the undertaking both in the denominations and in ecumenical bodies which explored such concerns and were staffed with competent specialists.

The development of the Cold War and its tendency to divide the world into two polarized positions eventually brought increasing questions about the wisdom and adequacy of military and particularly nuclear means for establishing peace and justice on a worldwide scale. Many Christian ethicists at the time argued that the draft laws should recognize the validity of conscientious objection on just war grounds as well as on fully pacifist grounds, and the General Assembly of 1967 emphatically reaffirmed the right of Presbyterians to be conscientious objectors. (See Conscience, Conscriptio, and the Church.) This action highlighted the legitimacy of conscientious differences about participation in war by individuals, and made individual integrity a foundational reference point for moral reflection. That action did not overcome the differences between pacifist and just war commitments in the church’s corporate stand, but it clearly undercut any presumption that just war thinking inevitably means subservience to the policies of the state or that pacifism is unacceptable because it is unpatriotic.

Thus the recent history of our church is marked by a persistent belief in the importance of peace but also by continuing good faith disagreements as to what kinds of policies and commitments most faithfully translate that central belief into prudent and responsible action. Some of these disagreements have challenged the Peacemaking Program, the primary agency through which Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling and other social witness policies were to be implemented. Some have been impressed with what the church has done in the last quarter century, particularly the extent to which it has managed to be critical of the prevailing trends in the society of which it is an integral part. Others feel that the program has been insufficient in its vigor and lacking in prophetic intensity and are disturbed by the fact that at the same time the church has been engaged in this program the country has become more and more involved in the use of military ways of meeting the threat of terrorism and other international crises, and has landed on what amounts to a permanent war footing.

APPENDIX B
DEFINITIONS

A very succinct summary of just war principles: Those applying to the decision whether or not to go to war (jus ad bellum).

1. There must be just cause.
2. There must be right intention.
3. The action must be undertaken by the proper authority.
4. The action must be taken as a last resort.
5. There must be a reasonable hope of success (to defend, protect, or otherwise gain a just peace).

Those applying to the conduct of war (jus in bello).

1. The force or violence used must be proportional to the result intended.
2. Noncombatants are not to be directly attacked.

Ten Principles of Just Peacemaking

1. Support nonviolent direct action.
2. Take independent initiatives to reduce threats.
3. Use cooperative conflict resolution.
4. Acknowledge responsibility for conflict and injustice and seek repentance and forgiveness.
5. Advance democracy, human rights, and religious liberty.
6. Foster just and sustainable economic development.
7. Work with emerging cooperative forces in the international system.
9. Reduce offensive weapons and weapons trade.
10. Encourage grassroots peacemaking groups and voluntary associations.

Six Elements of Nonviolent Strategy (More from a faith perspective)

1. Nonviolence is for the strong rather than the weak. It is a difficult discipline that eschews cowardice. It is not nonresistance but a particular method of resistance.
2. Nonviolence does not seek to “defeat or humiliate” the opponent, but to win them over. It is not employed for the purpose of scoring points but as a means of creating “the beloved community.”
3. Nonviolence directs itself “against the forces of evil rather than against persons who happen to be doing evil.” One may despise a particular form of evil, but one may not despise the doer of the evil.
4. Without making suffering into something to be sought, nonviolence can bring home the truth that “unearned suffering is redemptive.” It can be creatively enacted in ways that transform evil into a potential for good.
5. The attitude of nonviolence must be within the heart of the individual as well as his outer actions. “The nonviolent resister not only refuses to shoot his opponent but he also refuses to hate him.”
6. Nonviolence “is based on the conviction that the universe is on the side of justice.” The practitioner can believe that she is not going against the grain of what is ultimate, but seeks rather to exemplify what is ultimate: redemptive suffering love.

Nonviolent Communication

Too often the words we use, especially in conflictual situations, escalate tensions rather than reducing them. We use words as weapons to blame, judge, criticize, or dominate others. At the same time, we don’t listen well. What we hear is distorted by our own prejudices and misconceptions.

Nonviolent communication is a process developed by Marshall Rosenberg that helps people to exchange the information necessary to resolve conflicts and differences peacefully. When using nonviolent communication, people listen deeply to themselves and others and articulate their observations, feelings, needs, and requests, honestly and respectfully with empathy and compassion. Nonviolent communication can help bring healing and reconciliation to interpersonal relationships in a variety of settings. More information is available from the Center for Nonviolent Communication (http://www.cnvc.org).

Interreligious Understanding

Religions are often blamed for being the cause of conflict and violence in the world. Religious identity is impossible to separate from other dimensions of personal identity, yet those who blame religion isolate it as the primary causal factor. In reality, political, ethnic, and economic factors bear much more responsibility for creating the underlying conditions that lead to violent conflict. Nonetheless, religions have within them a storehouse of resources to prevent violence and promote peace and reconciliation. For example, the Golden Rule—“Do to others as you would have them do to you” (Lk. 6:31)—is found in some form in all of the world’s major religions. Increasing interreligious understanding through interfaith dialogue is critical to peacemaking in the 21st century. Some Presbyterian teaching elders and congregations have been involved in interfaith dialogue in their local communities, particularly between Christians and Jews. These conversations are important and to be encouraged. At the same time, efforts to promote interreligious understanding and reconciliation must expand to include Muslims and other faith traditions. Strengthening these bonds of mutual respect and understanding between the religious traditions has a stabilizing effect in society.

Training and educational resources are available from a number of organizations, including the Tanenbaum Center for Interreligious Understanding (https://www.tanenbaum.org), the Berkley Center for Religion, Peace & World Affairs (http://berkleycenter.georgetown.edu), the Religion and Peacemaking Program of the U.S. Institute of Peace (http://www.usip.org/religionpeace), the Program on Religion and Reconciliation at the Kroc Institute for International Peace Studies (http://kroc.nd.edu/research/religion-conflict-peacebuilding/program-religion-reconciliation), the Council for a Parliament of the World’s Religions (http://www.parliamentofreligions.org), and Religions for Peace (http://www.religionsforpeace.org)

Conflict Resolution Skills

Methods of conflict resolution such as negotiation and mediation seek to settle disputes peacefully through mutual agreement. We encounter conflict regularly in our day-to-day lives—at home, at work, in school, and in our congregations. Knowing how to manage and resolve these conflicts well is essential to the well-being of ourselves and others. But few people ever receive training in conflict resolution.

Many community mediation centers offer training in conflict resolution skills. For church leaders who want to learn the skills needed to address conflict in church settings, the Lombard Mennonite Peace Center (http://www.lmpeacecenter.org) offers a Mediation Skills Training Institute for Church Leaders. Excellent educational resources are also available through the Program on Negotiation at Harvard Law School (http://www.pon.harvard.edu).

Faith-Based Community Organizing

Congregations have joined together in faith-based community organizations to work for social and economic justice in their communities. By building relationships with one another they discover their shared self-interest. By organizing their people and money, they build the power they need to influence key decision makers in government and business to act in the community’s interests. Working across lines of religion, race, and class, these interfaith community organizations have fought for affordable housing, better schools, funding for social services, and a host of other issues. These efforts that address causes of structural violence, and hence contribute to less violence in families and communities.

Training in faith-based community organizing is available through four national organizing networks: the Industrial Areas Foundation (http://www.industrialareasfoundation.org), the Gamaliel Foundation (www.gamaliel.org), the PICO National Network (http://www.piconetwork.org), and the Direct Action and Research Training Center (DART) (http://www.thedartcenter.org/).

Nonviolent Third-Party Intervention

Most nonviolent direct action has been used by one or more parties directly engaged in a conflict. However, in the past few decades there has been growing experience with third parties, who are not part of a conflict, intervening nonviolently in the hopes of deterring violent attacks and human rights violations. Organizations such as Peace Brigades International (http://www.peacebrigades.org), Witness for Peace (http://www.witnessforpeace.org/), Christian Peacemaker Teams (http://www.cpt.org/), Nonviolent Peaceforce (http://www.nonviolentpeaceforce.org/), and the Ecumenical Accompaniment Programme in Palestine and Israel (http://www.eapni.org/), recruit, train, and deploy volunteers who provide an international nonviolent presence in areas of violent conflict.

The Presbyterian Church (USA) has played a part in this through its Colombia Accompaniment Program (http://www.presbypeacefellowship.org/colombia/accompaniment), which began in 2004 at the request of the Presbyterian Church of Colombia (IPC). Colombia church leaders who had spoken out against human rights violations and who had supported families displaced by decades of war were facing threats of political violence. They asked the PC(USA) to send international companions to stand with them and provide a measure of safety for them as they carry out their prophetic ministry. In response to their request, the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship has worked with PC(USA) World Mission and the IPC to train over 130 volunteers, of whom 90 have been deployed as short-term mission workers to Colombia. Accompaniers practice a ministry of presence with the IPC and with the displaced communities and human rights leaders with whom they work. The primary goal is to be a nonviolent presence of Christian support and solidarity with our church partners in the IPC, to “see and be seen,” and to share the story with churches and communities in the U.S. through prayer, education, and advocacy efforts.

Wilbanks, eds., The Peacemaking Struggle: Militarism & Resistance (Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1985), p. 197. Johnson went on to determine that even various “tactical” nuclear war options then being advocated would not fit the criteria of Just War.

2 Much recent mainline pacifist discussion has been prompted by the writings of John Howard Yoder, Stanley Hauerwas, and a number of Roman Catholic priests (whose vows forswear violence).

4Presbyterians may be proud of the serious theological and ethical discussion of war and peace issues by Presbyterian scholars represented in several collections of essays, in particular: Ronald H. Stone and Dana Wilbanks, eds., The Peacemaking Struggle: Militarism & Resistance (Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1985) and Ronald H. Stone and Robert L. Stivers, eds., Resistance and Theological Ethics (Lanham: Rowman & Littlefield, 2004). With some writing more than once, thirty-six scholars participated in this work, representing most Presbyterian seminaries and a number of colleges and universities.

10Rene Girard’s work gives depth to the concept of unmasking and has been part of Presbyterian ethicists’ discussions of the persistence of violence. An example of his view: “Christ does not achieve this victory through violence. He obtains it through a renunciation of violence so complete that violence can rage to its heart’s content without realizing that by so doing, it reveals what it must conceal … because it will be recorded and represented with exactness in the Passion narratives.” Girard, Rene, I See Satan Fall Like Lightning (Maryknoll: Orbis, 2001), p. 140.

11Robert McAfee Brown notes Brazilian Bishop Dom Helder Camara’s version of this in, The Spiral of Violence (Dimension Books, 1971); Brown’s own Religion and Violence (Westminster, 1973) presents a pioneering assessment of structural violence.

17Ibid., p. 149. Historical, literary, and other criticism can illuminate ways that texts and traditions developed, but Johnson, a biblical scholar himself, questions especially the use of Gnostic texts without passion narratives, as he relates “narrativity” to materiality.

18While appreciating Hays’ respect for the scriptural canon, Luke Timothy Johnson takes issue with him on his methodology for making ethical applications. For reviews by Johnson and four others: http://www.westmont.edu/~fisk/articles/mvntreviews.htm.

20 See Richard A. Horsley, Jesus and the Powers (Mpls: Fortress, 2011) for a recent synthesis of his work. Horsley sees Jesus as a prophet in the covenantal tradition and movement leader, rather than an apocalyptic visionary, wisdom teacher, or self-proclaiming messiah. As a transforming public martyrdom, the crucifixion amplifies Jesus’ message and carries great power not only for occupied Israel but for all on the margins seeking hope.

On Helping to Remedy the Tragic Conditions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo—From the Presbytery of Boston.

The Presbytery of Boston respectfully overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take the following actions to help remedy continuing tragic conditions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate to the president of the United States, the U.S. State Department, appropriate Congressional leaders and international bodies the need to ensure that the fundamental human rights of all peoples are fully respected by the strengthening of transparent, accountable, and effective institutions and the impartial application of the rule of law in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC); and, in particular, to call upon the government of the United States to work diligently and, where possible, in concert with other nations and religious and humanitarian organizations to

   a. end sexual- and gender-based violence and to facilitate the investigation and prosecution of military or paramilitary leaders who use or condone the use of rape as a strategy of war;

   b. halt the recruitment of child soldiers (i.e., any person under the age of [sixteen] [eighteen]) and bring to justice military or paramilitary leaders responsible for such recruitment;

   c. promote transparency in extractive industries to prevent the trade in minerals from being used to finance conflict or violations of human rights; and

   d. assist the government of the DRC to rebuild and strengthen the country’s educational system as a necessary condition for economic growth, political stability, and effective democratic participation within the nation.
2. Direct Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate for public policy that is consistent with the objectives set out in Recommendation 1 (above), building on existing treaties and encouraging international cooperation, collective security, and accountable monitoring processes for the DRC and those of its neighbors facing similar threats.

3. Direct Mission Responsibility Through Investment to study the merits, costs, and logistics of making the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) “conflict-free” with regard to investments in extractive industries by its agencies and to report its findings to 222nd General Assembly (2016), and to initiate usual processes of corporate engagement with firms operating or trading with the DRC.

4. Encourage presbyteries, congregations, and individual members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to
   a. pray with the people of the Congo for justice, peace, and the impartial rule of law that respects all people in the DRC;
   b. participate in the Congo advocacy initiatives of the Presbyterian Mission Agency;
   c. join the Congo Mission Network as it accompanies partners in the DRC and involves U.S. Presbyterians in the PC(USA)’s ministry of advocacy; and
   d. consider supporting the “conflict-free” campaign to end the use of products that use conflict minerals.

[Financial Implications: $2,500 (2015), $2,500 (2016) PMA]

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [PC(USA)] has a long history of involvement in the Congo and a deep concern for the country’s people. The ministry of U.S. Presbyterians, notably the Reverend William Shepherd, Lucy Gantt Sheppard, and the Reverend Samuel Lapsley, helped to lay the foundation for strong and vibrant Presbyterian communities in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) today.

In the past year, the DRC and its neighbors have taken significant steps to promote peace and stability, particularly in the nation’s war-torn eastern regions. The surrender of the paramilitary M23 rebel movement has brought renewed hope to communities of the east, yet many armed groups remain active in the DRC. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [PC(USA)] is called to continue to accompany its Congolese partners and the peoples of the DRC as they strive for justice, peace, and security during this time of transition. Building on the action of the 220th General Assembly (2012), which aimed to reduce the incentives for indiscriminate and wholesale violence in the DRC and to implement educational and governance policies that can begin to rebuild the shattered lives of the people, this overture adds some specific steps that continue our support of our brothers and sister in the DRC. Now is the time for the PC(USA) to advocate for and encourage the critical but usually thankless work of reconstruction.

The struggle for control of the DRC’s mineral wealth remains an important source of conflict. As the Presbytery of Boston so eloquently stated in their rationale of 2012:

… For more than 120 years, foreign powers and a domestic elite have systematically exploited the Congo’s riches, while the vast majority of the Congolese people realize little if any benefit. Today, much of the trade in these valuable resources continues to be controlled by other countries and illegal militias. The profits that they derive from the sale of “conflict minerals” are used to finance a violent struggle for territory and power that has claimed as many as six million lives in the past twelve years and has inflicted disease, poverty, and gross violations of human rights on millions more. Women remain the primary victims of this protracted conflict, especially in the war-torn northeast region, and rape continues to be practiced with impunity as a strategy of war and subjugation. The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved a Resolution on Just Globalization that expressed its concern for the impact of global commerce on the integrity of creation, trade justice, and human rights and called, among other things, for action by U.S. agencies to promote transparency in international financial transactions. The subsequent 218th General Assembly (2008) endorsed the “Publish What You Pay” campaign for transparency in extractive industries.

Although the Congo gained independence from Belgian colonial rule in 1960, its people have never had an opportunity to taste the fruits of freedom and self-rule. … the recent election held in November 2011 was found by electoral observers from the Congolese Catholic Bishops’ Conference, the Carter Center and the European Union to be so seriously flawed that the announced results lacked credibility. Consequently, Congo advocates around the world, including the Congo Mission Network of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), have joined the Congolese Catholic Bishops and human rights groups in calling for a review of the recent election processes and their results. Both the 213th General Assembly (2001) and the 217th General Assembly (2006) called upon the U.S. government to commit resources to promote free and fair elections in the Democratic Republic of Congo."

(Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1306 of the electronic copy)

The corruption of the previous regimes and the destruction of infrastructure and the tax base by the war has left the government of DRC ill-equipped to take effective measures to restore its sovereignty or the rule of law in Eastern Congo. And by this time wholesale rape and the abduction of boys and girls by all these armed groups has come to seem the normal means of waging war.

Continued advocacy for the rights of women and children to not be raped and/or coerced into serving as sexual slaves and/or as soldiers is critically necessary to rebuild the social fabric of the DRC. Continued support for education is necessary to create an informed and active citizenry that is a condition for the creation of a government that is accountable and that respects the rights of all its peoples to the transparent and impartial rule of law.
Conflict Minerals

The term “conflict minerals” is used to describe minerals extracted (looted) from mines controlled by armed groups, the trade in which is used to finance continuing warfare and human rights abuses. The Eastern provinces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) are the current epicenter of these conflicts which are associated with horrific human rights abuses. Local artisanal miners and small companies have had their lands and mines expropriated, often being subjected to a scorched earth policy of total destruction of local villages, crops, and infrastructure. The worst instances of indiscriminate rape, killings, and the displacement of hundreds of thousands of people can be directly attributed to the armed gangs and militias that have been pillaging the Eastern Congo for the past twenty years. (See Wikipedia for a list of sixty-two citations plus bibliography on this topic.)

Because these minerals are a large source of the income used to arm the groups, refusal to purchase products that have been made with these minerals has become a priority. Until the violence against the peoples of the DRC ends, no progress can be made in the restoration of a functioning economy and civil society that meets the needs of the people. Therefore, in 2010 the U.S. Congress included Section 1502 of the Dodd-Frank Financial Accountability Act that was signed into law on July 21st. This section requires publicly listed companies and some publically traded bond funds to report on their use of conflict minerals in all their products.

On August 12, 2012, the SEC issued a final rule on the reporting requirements that covers tin, tantalum (coltan), tungsten, and gold. All of these products are widely used in consumer electronic devices as well as almost all industrial and consumer goods machinery that includes electrical components (think the electronics in your automobile). Several companies have already taken steps to comply with the law and others are in the process of doing so. However, as the law does not cover any foreign company that is not publically listed in the United States and therefore exempts most Asian companies, many U.S. companies are fighting the requirements of the law in court. As reported by ProBono Australia and accessed on 20140129 at: http://www.probonoaustralia.com.au/news/2014/01/corporate-battle-over-conflict-minerals#:

US Corporations are taking a stand against the complex and comprehensive requirements of the reporting, branding it time-consuming and costly, and a breach of free speech by forcing companies to publicly condemn themselves.

The appeal is the latest in a line of legal challenges by major industry groups including the US Chamber of Commerce, the Business Roundtable and the National Association of Manufacturers, a coalition representing some of the world’s biggest corporate powers.

Because continued advocacy to eliminate the use of conflict minerals is critical to removing the incentive to wage war on defenseless villages and towns, it is important that the PC(USA) take a stand against the exploitation of the peoples of the DRC. The twin evils of forced labor and human trafficking are rampant in the Eastern DRC largely as a consequence of the greed fostered by these minerals.

As so aptly summarized by the in Item 14-02 of 2012: “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the global community have an opportunity to support initiatives such as those of the Congolese Presbyterian churches to foster a new generation of Congolese people with an active commitment to participatory democracy, peace, and accountable governance” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1306 of the electronic copy).

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 11-12.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns supports this overture that recognizes the vulnerability of women and children as a result of the lawlessness in the eastern area of the DRC. Gangs and militia continue to fight over valuable “conflict” minerals. They abduct girls and boys to fight in these gangs and the reality is that girls are used as sex slaves as well as combatants. Rape of women and girls is a reality and is used as a weapon of war.

We commend the 220th General Assembly (2012) for its recommendation to include women in any peacemaking process in the DRC. However, the combatants are far from efforts to resolve the situation peacefully. The kind of international pressure both diplomatically and financially this overture suggests have the potential to create conditions that would be compelling enough to bring all parties to the table.

By ending the violence, bringing justice and assistance to those whose basic human rights have been violated, and eliminating lawlessness, the DRC can begin to provide the kinds of services and education women and girls need to be productive members of their communities.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-12

Comment on Item 11-12—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Item 11-12 was drafted by the Advocacy Committee of the Congo Mission Network (a PC(USA) Community of Mission Practice) with input from PC(USA) partners in Congo: the Presbyterian Church of Congo, the Church of Christ in Congo, and the Presbyterian Church of Kinshasa. These partners have asked PC(USA) to advocate, on their behalf, for the U.S. government to address the need in DR Congo for heightened respect of human rights and more effective governance. Our partners have specifically voiced concern for the need to address the issues of gender-based violence, child soldiers, extractive industries, and need for improved education. By approving this overture PC(USA) would be giving voice to the concerns of our Congolese church partners and addressing the root causes of poverty that have caused this resource rich country to be at the very bottom of the Human Development Index.

A Resolution on Developing a Comprehensive Social Witness Policy on Human Trafficking as a Human Rights Issue—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Direct the Advisory Committee for Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns to appoint four members to a Reference and Study Task Group, with staff for the committee to be appointed by the PC(USA) Human Trafficking Roundtable.

2. Direct this Reference and Study Task Group, with the help of a consultant, to review the current PC(USA) policy regarding human trafficking and propose comprehensive human trafficking policy grounded in a human rights based approach for the denomination, by:
   a. Examining the ways in which poverty, lack of or under-employment, and discrimination make women, men, and children vulnerable to traffickers;
   b. Considering all types of modern day slavery (on a global and national level) including forced labor, sex trafficking, bonded labor, debt bondage, involuntary domestic servitude, forced child labor, child soldiers, child sex trafficking, and organ harvesting;\(^\text{20}\)
   c. Consulting with a variety of groups working on the issue of trafficking, including Freedom Network, U.S.A.; the Coalition of Immokalee Workers, and End Child Prostitution and Trafficking (ECPAT), and General Assembly programs and ministries;
   d. Defining the human rights violations such slavery creates, and
   e. Reporting its findings to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to assist in the research process.

Rationale

Matthew 25:40—The ruler will answer them, “The truth is, every time you did this for the least of my sisters or brothers, you did it for me.”\(^\text{21}\)

\(^{20}\) Definition of human trafficking can be found at the U.S. Department of State Website: <http://www.state.gov/j/tip/rls/tiprpt/2011/164220.htm> (23 January 2014).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) submits this resolution in light of the continuing and large scale tragedy of trafficked and forced labor of adults and children, and in order to provide guidance for the church’s advocacy and ministries with those affected.

The ACWC brought a resolution to the 218th General Assembly (2008) entitled “A Resolution to Expand the Church’s Ministry with and Advocacy Against Human Trafficking.” Though prior to this the General Assembly had made policy statements regarding human rights, slavery, and sex and child trafficking specifically (2001, 2003, 2006), ACWC sought to continue to raise awareness amongst Presbyterians and to inspire the church to action, focusing primarily on the plight of women who are trafficked.

Since 2006, though the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy has included human trafficking in its Human Rights Report, the General Assembly has not passed any official policy on human trafficking. The policy that exists currently does not begin to address the scope and breadth of human trafficking. While important education and advocacy work continues to be done by such groups as the PC(USA) Human Trafficking Roundtable, the policy grounding in which such groups root their work is currently sparse. The denomination-wide demand for this group’s work and resources is steady, but the solid policy commitment of the denomination to working against human trafficking is lacking.

The United Nations’ Protocol to Prevent, Suppress, and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 2000 and entered into force on 25 December 2003. As of October 2013 it has been ratified by 158 states.\(^\text{22}\)

The protocol states trafficking in persons:

“shall mean the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Exploitation shall include, at a minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labour or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude or the removal of organs ... The consent of a victim of trafficking in persons to the intended exploitation set forth [above] shall be irrelevant where any of the means set forth [above] have been used.”\(^\text{23}\)

The Act (What is done)
Recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of persons

The Means (How it is done)
Threat or use of force, coercion, abduction, fraud, deception, abuse of power or vulnerability, or giving payments or benefits to a person in control of the victim

The Purpose (Why it is done)
For the purpose of exploitation, which includes exploiting the prostitution of others, sexual exploitation, forced labour, slavery or similar practices and the removal of organs.\(^\text{24}\)

A report released in 2013 by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime offered a breakdown of victims of human trafficking activities worldwide:

- Trafficking victims have been rescued in 118 countries and represent 136 different nationalities, according to the UNODC.
- Sex trafficking accounts for 58 percent of all human trafficking cases that are investigated around the world. Labor trafficking accounts for 36 percent of the cases.
- Women account for 55 to 60 percent of the victims, and women and girls account for 75 percent of trafficking victims.
- Children account for 27 percent of victims during the 2007 to 2010 time period, up from 20 percent between 2003–2006. Two out of every three child trafficking victims were girls.

In total, there are an estimated 20.9 million people around the world who are victims of human trafficking.\(^\text{25}\)

Although the PC(USA) has social witness policy addressing forms of sexual exploitation and slavery, none addresses forced labor in agriculture, domestic service, and services offered by nail and beauty salons, the removal of organs or child slavery in combat. Clearly, the widely accepted definition above makes it clear that the PC(USA) needs more breadth and depth in our policy on human trafficking. The church is called to articulate and to have a clear policy on this issue. The demand from congregations and the ecumenical community for resources and support addressing the breadth of modern day slavery must be met with an expanded and clear statement of policy.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises approval of this resolution.

The Confession of 1967 refers to “one universal (human) family” (Book of Confessions, 9.44) and the growth of human trafficking, part of the underside of globalization, is an unhappy part of the picture. The resolution correctly notes previous partial treatments of trafficking, several involving forced participation in the international sex trade. Presbyterian Women, Presbyterian World Mission, and other bodies within our church have played an important role in drawing attention to this problem and supporting international action.

At the same time, as the Trafficking Roundtable has reported to the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, the existing General Assembly statements that are to guide Presbyterian Mission Agency program work are limited in scope and overall analysis, including theological analysis of the particular importance of Christian involvement and the potential for more solidarity among churches.

After an ACSWP co-chair and staff member met with World Vision and United Nations staff as well as several “rescue” organizations in Bangkok, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy requested an expert in labor trafficking, the Reverend Noelle Damico, to contribute a brief study to the 2010 Human Rights Update: See http://pc-biz.org/PCBiz_WebApp_deploy/%28S%283225ntetotyrswnuwz3kyqk%29%29/IOBView.aspx?m=ro&id=3207&promoid=134

To quote briefly from that overview:

The use of the legal term ‘human trafficking’ can mislead the public into thinking that the phenomenon is principally about the transport of persons for profit. It is much more than that. It involves all aspects of this exploitative process from recruitment to forcing a person through violence or threat of violence to labor against their will. Also the media often wrongly equates human trafficking with smuggling, where a person consents to be moved across an international border. The critical additional factor that distinguishes trafficking from migrant smuggling is the presence of force, coercion, and/or deception throughout or at some stage in the process—such deception, force, or coercion being used for the purpose of exploitation explains the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. (Recommended Principles and Guidelines on Human Rights and Human Trafficking, Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, United Nations, New York and Geneva, 2002, p. 7.)

Commissioners may thus appreciate that some aspects of this work have already been done over recent years. Yet the development of a coherent framework would be intended to strengthen the church’s witness and capacity to engage a concern likely—unfortunately—to affect millions of involuntary migrants and people vulnerable to exploitation until stronger sets of human rights norms and labor protections are in place.

Item 11-14

Resolution on Sexual Violence within the U.S. Military Services: A 2014 Human Rights Update

Seeking to support efforts to end the continuing problem of sexual assault within the U.S. military, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommend that the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approve the following measures:

1. Support efforts of Presbyterian and other military chaplains to provide pastoral care and advocacy for members of the military who have experienced any form of abuse, including sexual harassment, assault, and rape [or worse].

2. Mandate legislative and military leaders involved in developing policies to eliminate sexual violence within the armed services, including a. Comprehensive mental health evaluation of inductees and periodic mental health assessment of service personnel for risk of sexual violence;
b. Authorization and funding of research on military sexual trauma, the contexts and conditions for its occurrence, and its clinical treatment;

c. Removal of court-martial discretion from the chain-of-command, giving it instead to military prosecutors (and removing the ability of a single officer to invalidate the judgment of a military court or block its enforcement);

d. Reform of the [Veterans Administration (VA)] [Department of Defense] system in relation to treatment of service men and women who have suffered military sexual trauma;

e. Establishing “best practices” for the treatment of military sexual trauma Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder;

f. Coordination of research and implementation with the militaries of allied nations and international treaty organizations; and

g. Develop, implement, and institutionalize policies within military training for education and open discussion of sexual violence, dangers associated with hyper-masculinity and challenges to maintaining healthy relationships in high stress contexts.

3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency [and Office of Public Witness, and encourage the Presbyterian Council for Chaplains and Military Personnel, to urge legislative and military leaders involved in developing policies to eliminate sexual violence within the armed services by:]

[a. providing transfer of victims of sexual violence to a different chain of command upon request of the victim, with a comparable rank and potential for advancement.]

[b. creating a ‘firewall’ between the victim and alleged perpetrator in duty assignment and residence,]

[c. changing ‘status of forces’ agreements with host countries to ensure adequate protection from sexual assault for civilian populations near military bases, including mechanisms for proper prosecutions of alleged perpetrators and proper care of civilian victims.]

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and encourage Presbyterians generally, to support the implementation of policies to prevent sexual violence by U.S. and other military personnel engaged in joint jurisdictions such as United Nations (UN) Peacekeeping and North American Treaty Organization (NATO), both within these forces and among vulnerable refugee and asylum-seeking civilian populations.

Rationale

Sexual violence is one of the oldest, most pervasive, and most dehumanizing of sins. From the rape of Dinah in Genesis 34 to the one in four women today who will experience sexual violence in their lifetimes, sexual violence leaves a lamentable mark on our culture and faith narrative.

The PC(USA) condemns sexual violence in all its forms and, along with its predecessors, has a long history of advocacy for the rights of women and against sexual violence. This history is evidenced from the Westminster Larger Catechism’s prohibition of rape (Book of Confessions, 7.249) to the 1971 General Assembly of the UPCUSA’s affirmation that “men and women must act as equal partners and contribute to the ministry of the church” to the 219th General Assembly (2008) of the PC(USA)’s study on pay equity and gender.

The PC(USA) has approved several resolutions regarding sexual violence in a military context, where the chain of command creates particular vulnerability for those lower in rank. In 1975, the General Assembly of the UPCUSA declared that “sexism and rigid sex-stereotyping [in the military] … should be vigorously eliminated.” In 1986, the 198th General Assembly of the unified PC(USA) denounced sex tourism and prostitution around military bases and installations. Most recently, the 210th General Assembly (1998) approved a “Resolution on the Military and Sexual Exploitation and Abuse of Women” denouncing rape used as a weapon of war as a human rights violation, a form of torture, and a war crime.

This resolution focuses on a particular context of vulnerability but does not ignore other contexts, including prisons, hospitals, and migrant labor, where such dangers have been addressed.

Sexual violence is not a crime of passion but an abuse of power. The 1998 resolution calls rape “a form of torture … that seeks to degrade and destroy. … Its goal is domination and dehumanization.” Furthermore, sexual violence grows from a distorted understanding of masculinity common to the rhetoric of military training camps: “Military training and socialization often send confusing messages about gender relations. Slogans and other expressions of aggression often equate sexual prowess with dominance and military strength.” Our church in the past has boldly proclaimed, “that which degrades women and which equates maleness with violence and conquest is contrary to the development of a whole, mature person.”
Within the power hierarchy of the military chain-of-command, justice in situations of sexual violence is often obscured. It was in the context of war that King David sexually commandeered Bathsheba and ordered her husband Uriah killed to cover his crime (see 2 Sam. 11, 12).10 As God called the prophet Nathan then, so the Spirit calls the Church today to witness to this abuse of power, calling for an end to sexual violence in the military and a system of justice for its victims removed from the power structure in which the abuse took place.

Historical Overview:

Issues of sexual assault in the military came into public awareness with the U.S. Navy Tailhook scandal of 1991.11 Today, the Uniform Code of Military Justice (Articles 120–120c) explicitly identifies various forms of sexual assault as legally actionable and punishable crimes under military law.12 In spite of this, sexual assaults within the U.S. military continue to rise. In 2005, the Department of Defense established the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) program intended to promote prevention, encourage increased reporting of sexual assault, and improve the military services’ response capabilities for victims. There are five priorities of the SAPR Office (SAPRO). They are:

1. Institutionalize prevention strategies in the military community;
2. Increase the climate of victim confidence associated with reporting;
3. Improve sexual assault response;
4. Improve system accountability; and
5. Improve stakeholder knowledge and understanding of SAPR.13

Yet, in 2012 there were 3,374 reports of sexual assault, a 6 percent increase over the prior year.14 However, the FY2012 SAPRO report released by the Department of Defense (DoD) in May estimated actual instances of sexual assault to number 26,000 cases in fiscal year 2012, a 37 percent increase from 2011, indicating that such cases are massively underreported. In a separate survey, 23 percent of female and 4 percent of male service members reported unwanted sexual contact (USC)—ranging from groping to rape—since enlistment. Even though women in the military experience a markedly higher incidence of sexual assault, because women comprise only approximately 14 percent of the military, the total number of males who have experienced unwanted sexual contact is estimated to be equal to or greater than the number of females who have experienced USC.15 Of the 575 cases that were eventually processed, only 96 resulted in court-martial proceedings, and substantially fewer in conviction.16

The 2014 National Defense Authorization Act, recently signed into law by President Obama, represents a significant attempt to address sexual assault in the military. (See appendix for full list of relevant provisions.) While these provisions are significant and helpful in addressing matters of internal military culture and legal process, they fall short of what is needed. They are (a) not comprehensive, focusing instead on regulatory, legal, and procedural issues; and (b) they do not remove the decision of whether or not to take reported cases to court martial completely out of the chain-of-command and give that decision to military prosecutors. (This matter of judicial independence would affect the accountability of each command jurisdiction and, in turn, would reinforce the accountability of military prosecutors to legal standards within their own chain of command.) The reasons for emphasizing the relative independence of the military’s judiciary have to do with the characteristics of organizations in which abuse occurs.

The World Health Organization’s Guidelines for Medico-Legal Care for Victims of Sexual Violence17 identifies four categories of factors associated with men committing rape. These are characteristics of the following: society, community, relationship, and individual perpetrator. The factors include:

Society: Norms granting men control over female behavior; acceptance of violence as a way to resolve conflict; notions of masculinity linked to dominance, honor, or aggression; norms supportive of sexual violence; norms supportive of male superiority and sexual entitlement; weak laws and policies related to sexual violence and gender equality; high levels of crime and other forms of violence.

Community: Poverty, low socioeconomic status, unemployment, associating with sexually aggressive or delinquent peers, lack of institutional support from police and judicial system, general tolerance of sexual assault within the community, weak community sanctions against perpetrators of sexual violence.

Relationship: Associates with sexually aggressive or delinquent peers, family environment is characterized by physical violence and few resources, strongly patriarchal relationship or family environment, emotionally unsupportive family environment, family honor considered more important than the health and safety of the victim.

Individual Perpetrator: Alcohol and drug use, coercive sexual fantasies, attitudes supportive of sexual violence, impulsive and antisocial tendencies, preference for impersonal sex, hostility towards women, history of sexual abuse as a child, witnessed family violence as a child.
While these factors arise from research in civilian, not military, contexts they nonetheless pertain to recruits and inductees from the civilian sector who would pursue military induction. There are two issues here: First, recruits should undergo a full mental health screening prior to induction that encompasses these factors to assess for level of risk for perpetrating sexual assault. Second, the new law does not contain a provision for (or funding of) research on sexual assault in the military, more specifically a mental health and sociological analysis of the conditions and personality factors that might be predictive of propensities for sexual assault in a military context, the evidence-based efficacy of treatment modalities for victims, and evaluation research for programs of prevention through intervention.

In addition, the new law ignores the discrimination that occurs within the Veterans Affairs hospital system against victims of sexual violence.

... veterans struggling with the devastating mental health effects of military sexual violence who turn to the Department of Veterans Affairs for help will instead find discrimination. Their claims for disability compensation will turn out differently depending on their gender and where they live. And the VA will expect survivors to submit documentation that often does not exist—like official reports of rape or the results of pregnancy or STD tests—while taking veterans who claim benefits for many other forms of trauma at their word.18

The Service Women’s Action Network, in conjunction with the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), has made a series of recommendations that redress the issues within the Veterans Affairs (VA) hospital system. In eighteen specific recommendations, they call upon Congress to:

act swiftly to pass a body of important legislation that reforms VA regulations regarding disability claims based on PTSD for in-service personal assault, improves training and oversight of [VA Regional Offices] with poor records in granting MST [Military Sexual Trauma]-related claims, and improves VA transparency and record-keeping in its treatment of MST-based claims.19

Adequate remediation of the escalating sexual violence within the U.S. military against its own personnel requires a comprehensive and aggressive legislative approach that addresses (a) regulatory and legal parameters, (b) comprehensive mental health assessment of inductees, (c) ongoing risk evaluation of military personnel, (d) adequate clinical treatment of victims of military sexual trauma, (e) vigorous research on sexual assault within the military to establish predictive markers and preventive interventions, and (f) evaluation research of programs to identify best clinical practices in the treatment of military sexual trauma.

Again, this resolution should not be taken to imply that the U.S. military suffers from a unique problem or danger. While some militaries do not report significant levels of sexual violence, others are known even to practice rape as a form of military strategy to demoralize civilian populations. The U.S. military should not be afraid to learn from other militaries, as well as to share its own knowledge of how to “raise the bar” for protection of service members and civilians.

In summary, the core justification of military establishments is to provide protection and security, a mission that is compromised when violence and sexual abuse occur within the military itself. Without addressing larger questions of militarism and the need for other methods of conflict resolution, this statement by the Assembly addresses practical measures to reform a problem that affects millions of U.S. citizens and others exposed to the U.S. military.

Appendix

Recent legislative efforts to address sexual assault in the military from the 2014 National Defense Authorization Act, Section D: “Military Justice, Including Sexual Assault Prevention and Response”:

Sec. 531. Limitations on convening authority discretion regarding court-martial findings and sentence.

Sec. 532. Elimination of five-year statute of limitations on trial by court-martial for additional offenses involving sex-related crimes.

Sec. 533. Discharge or dismissal for certain sex-related offenses and trial of offenses by general courts-martial.

Sec. 534. Regulations regarding consideration of application for permanent change of station or unit transfer by victims of sexual assault.

Sec. 535. Consideration of need for, and authority to provide for, temporary administrative reassignment or removal of a member on active duty who is accused of committing a sexual assault or related offense.

Sec. 536. Victims’ Counsel for victims of sex-related offenses and related provisions.

Sec. 537. Inspector General investigation of allegations of retaliatory personnel actions taken in response to making protected communications regarding sexual assault.

Sec. 538. Secretary of Defense report on role of commanders in military justice process.

Sec. 539. Review and policy regarding Department of Defense investigative practices in response to allegations of sex-related offenses.

Sec. 540. Uniform training and education programs for sexual assault prevention and response program.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-14

Comment on Item 11-14—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Office of Public Witness has engaged in advocacy that seeks to reduce violence against women and girls, provide increased support and services for victims of relationship violence, and various other measures that will primarily benefit civilian victims of crime. In particular, the Office of Public Witness has been active in advocating for the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) and the International Violence Against Women Act (IVAWAA). In the context of recent congressional debates, PC(USA) General Assembly did not have policy that adequately speaks to the role of the military chain of command in the prosecution of military sexual assault. Consequently, the Office of Public Witness remained silent on the bill. If approved, this resolution would speak to that gap in policy.

On Encouraging Use of the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation—From the Presbytery of New York City.

The Presbytery of New York City overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the PC(USA) to do the following:

1. Encourage programs and ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) agencies to give preference to tourism companies and businesses, including but not limited to hotels, airlines, and travel agents, that have signed the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism adopted by End Child Prostitution and Trafficking (ECPAT), as the companies and businesses make arrangements for meetings and travel to meetings.

2. Encourage programs and ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) agencies to make available opportunities for advocacy and education with tourism companies and businesses, including but not limited to hotels, airlines, and travel agents, that have not signed the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism when they are used for arrangement for meetings and travel to meetings.

3. Urge members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to give preference to tourism companies and businesses, including but not limited to hotels, airlines, and travel agents, that have signed the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism when traveling and to engage in advocacy with tourism companies and businesses that have not.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to maintain current information on the status of companies that have signed the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism and to continue to partner with and support ECPAT-USA.

[Financial Implications: $1,500 (2015) PMA]

Rationale

Affirming that each human being is created in God’s image and should be treated with dignity and respect, the General Assemblies of the PCUS, UPCUSA, and PC(USA) have approved reports and statements condemning human trafficking, slavery, and sexual exploitation. Most recently, the 218th General Assembly (2008) approved A Resolution to Expand the Church’s Ministry with and Advocacy Against Human Trafficking (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 1167ff) and On Preventing the Trafficking of Women, Internationally and Nationally (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 1164ff).

As followers of Jesus who welcomed children (Mt. 19:13–15), the General Assembly has repeatedly affirmed our commitment to children and their wellbeing. A Vision for Children and the Church, approved by the 205th General Assembly (1993), expressed this understanding (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp. 644ff).

Children around the world and in the United States continue to be sexually exploited and trafficked.
Individuals travel overseas to exploit children sexually. Air travel provides a primary means of transportation for these “child sex tourists.” Sex tourists usually have said it is legal and culturally acceptable to sexually exploit children in other countries, and often state that the impoverished children benefit by the payment received.

In the United States, traffickers use hotel rooms as venues to abuse children, knowing that systems are not in place to protect the victims. Exploiters seek creative means to move child trafficking off the streets and behind the closed doors of local hotel rooms.

The organization End Child Prostitution and Trafficking (ECPAT) was created in Thailand in 1991 to ensure the right of all children to live free of child prostitution, child pornography, and child trafficking for sexual purposes. There are currently more than eighty groups in the ECPAT network in more than seventy countries. This includes ECPAT-USA. The 217th General Assembly (2006) called the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to partner with ECPAT in the effort to end the sexual exploitation and trafficking of children (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 994).

Developed by ECPAT, the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism sets a standard of responsible business practices that effectively deters child sexual exploitation. It is an industry-driven, multi-stakeholder initiative with the mission to provide awareness, tools, and support to the tourism industry in order to combat the sexual exploitation of children in contexts related to travel and tourism.

The code employs the following six criteria which members of the tourism industry must adhere to once they endorse the code:

1. To establish a policy and procedures against sexual exploitation of children.
2. To train employees in children’s rights, the prevention of sexual exploitation and how to report suspected cases.
3. To include a clause in contracts throughout the value chain stating a common repudiation and zero tolerance policy of sexual exploitation of children.
4. To provide information to travellers on children’s rights, the prevention of sexual exploitation of children and how to report suspected cases.
5. To support, collaborate, and engage stakeholders in the prevention of sexual exploitation of children.
6. To report annually on their implementation of Code related activities.

Nearly 1,300 companies in the tourism industry have signed the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism including Delta Airlines, Adventure Travel Trade Association, Association of Corporate Travel Executives, International Gay and Lesbian Travel Association, Nix Conference and Meeting Management, Sabre Holdings, Carlson Companies, Hilton Worldwide, Wyndham Worldwide, Inn at Saint Mary’s Hotel, Millennium Hotel St. Louis, Real Hospitality Group, E-Trip Africa, Global Exchange, Meaningful Trip, and International Tour Management Institute in the United States.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessors have long used its economic power to stand for equality and justice. Use of the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism in arranging meetings and travel to meetings would allow the church to continue that tradition and seek the human rights of children in our country and around the world.

Concurrence to Item 11-15 from the Presbytery of Hudson River (with Additional Rationale)

This overture requests concrete action that reaffirms the PC(USA)’s long-standing commitment to the health and safety of children worldwide.

Presbyterian participants in recent sessions of the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women are well aware of the excellent work being done by ECPAT.

For signatories of the Code, compliance requires training of staff. For hotels, in particular, this means instruction in warning signs of demeanor, body language, and behavior, in order to distinguish, for example, between a parent traveling legitimately with a child, and an adult with nefarious intent. Staff is trained to alert a manager, who, in turn, will notify law enforcement when there is a suspicious situation. Hotel managers are encouraged to establish a good working relationship, in advance, with local law enforcement, with the goal of protecting children. Similar protocols are followed with other travel organizations. In no case are staff expected to intervene directly.

While not the subject of this resolution, ECPAT is also working to bring attention to the opportunities made available to traffickers and pimps by social media, and to provide “kid-friendly” warning materials. In addition, while federal law provides that an individual under 18 who is arrested for prostitution be treated as a victim, state laws often require punishment as a juvenile offender. ECPAT is leading efforts to pass “safe harbor” laws to eliminate this discrepancy, and to provide assistance to the victims.

Good data is notoriously difficult to obtain. Perhaps 300,000 children are at risk within the U.S.A. UNICEF estimates that trafficking of persons is an industry that generates approximately $10 billion each year, with up to half the victims being children, sold into pornography, prostitution, slave labor, or early marriage.

Both as individuals and churchwide, patronizing companies that honor “The Code,” and encouraging others to join them, are concrete ways by which Presbyterians can combat this abuse of children.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-15

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-15—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises approval of Item 11-15.

The commercial sexual exploitation of children is an abomination. This overture reaffirms the PC(USA)’s long-standing commitment to the health and safety of children worldwide through policy and tangible action. The overture wisely does not make a distinction between international and national travel and tourism, and it calls on agencies of the church to prioritize this matter in their meeting and travel arrangements.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-15

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-15—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 11-15.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns fully supports the overture from the Presbytery of New York City, “On Encouraging Use of the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation.” Advocating, educating, and working to end human trafficking has long been close to the heart of the PC(USA), as exemplified in the many reports, statements, and resources cited in the overture. We also have a long-held concern for the child and how we are called as the church to nurture and protect the child. This overture combines these two longstanding concerns of the PC(USA) and also reflects the ethos of ACWC’s resolution at this General Assembly on “A Resolution on Developing a Comprehensive Social Witness Policy on Human Trafficking as a Human Rights Issue,” (Item 11-18). Both as individuals and as the church, patronizing companies that honor “The Code,” and encouraging others to join them, are concrete ways by which Presbyterians can combat this abuse of children.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-15

Comment on Item 11-15—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

This overture affirms the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and Presbyterian Women being done through the Human Trafficking Roundtable, http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/human-trafficking/. The Human Trafficking Roundtable is a collaborative programmatic effort that works to end the commercial sexual exploitation of children with ECPAT-USA (End Child Prostitution and Trafficking) and ECPAT-International. This roundtable was created in response to previous General Assembly actions calling on the church to condemn the international trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children, http://apps.pcusa.org/ga217/business/overtures/ovt1905.htm http://www.pc-biz.org/MeetingPapers%28S%28zvdsfbe4i0l3qiatt4fkqpoec%29%29/OIBView.aspx?m=ro&id=1539&promoid=7.

This overture asks the agencies of the church and all Presbyterians to use companies that have signed the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism, http://www.thecode.org/.

It also encourages the programs and ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to engage in education and provide opportunities for advocacy with tourism businesses that have not yet adopted the code of conduct. There are resources available to those who would like to engage in advocacy, including a card that individuals can leave with hotels, airlines, and others in the travel industry to encourage them to sign on to the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism, https://www.pcusa.org/blogs/words-plowshares/2013/5/1/ecpat-code/. The PC(USA) is the first denomination to co-brand the Code of Conduct card.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Peace and Humanitarian Aid for Syria.

Concerning the humanitarian crisis, the 221st General Assembly (2014)

1. Calls upon PC(USA) congregations and their members to give even more generously for Syrian humanitarian relief through Presbyterian Disaster Assistance account #DR000081—Middle East/Syria.

2. Calls upon the Syrian government and all opposition forces and armed militants to open the country fully to relief efforts of the United Nations and collaborating international agencies.

3. Calls upon all relief organizations to observe strict political neutrality, avoiding any action that serves the political or military interest of any group, faction, or nation.

Concerning all parties involved in or interfering in the conflict, the 221st General Assembly (2014)

4. Calls upon the government of Syria, the National Coalition for Syrian Revolutionary and Opposition Forces, as well as all other groups to end their savage confrontation, beginning with an immediate ceasefire.

While praising the evident compliance of the Syrian government in surrendering its stock of chemical weapons, as brokered by the government of Russia, the 221st General Assembly (2014)

5. Calls upon all parties involved in the conflict to cease the use of deadly and debilitating industrial gases, such as chlorine, as arms not covered by the chemical weapons agreement.

6. Calls upon the Syrian government to cease the use of ‘barrel bombs’ and other weapons designed specifically to kill and maim massively and indiscriminately in ways that surpass any tactical military goal.

7. Calls upon all opposition forces and armed groups to end the practice of kidnapping noncombatant Syrians and holding hostage international personnel—journalists, relief workers, human rights observers, and clergy among others. Calls upon the government of Syria to end the practice of arbitrary arrests and holding hostage international journalists and human rights observers.

8. Commends those engaged in reported acts of reconciliation that have reduced the level of conflict in some locations, and urges all outside powers to look for ways to help Syrians to sit together to negotiate, reconcile, and cooperate in building a better future together.

Taking note that our Christian partners in the Middle East, including Syria, have sought to remain neutral in the struggle going on about them, denounced all outside interference that is fueling the conflict in Syria, and noting that they oppose foreign intervention, overt or covert, in support of any of the participants in the conflict in Syria, including the provision of weapons, intelligence, combat training, or financial or diplomatic support, the 221st General Assembly (2014)

9. Calls upon the government of the United States to avoid all military interference in the region. Our government should also avoid participating in the “proxy war” by supporting the armed opposition. All foreign interference, including that of our government, has been counterproductive, if not directly contributing to increase of the violence and [that threatens further] destruction of Syria [and regional stability].

10. Calls upon the government of the United States to extend generous financial assistance directly, through international agencies, and in support of the governments of countries beset by refugees with needs that far outrun the abilities of these governments and their institutions to cope.

11. Calls upon our government and the international community to end the use of economic sanctions against Syria as a tool of war or diplomacy. These sanctions are imposing a terrible burden on a desperate people without having any perceptible effect toward ending the conflict or reducing the suffering of noncombatants.

Concerning the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the 221st General Assembly (2014)

12. Calls upon our own members and congregations to pray for the 6.5 million displaced persons within Syria and the 2.6 million others who are now refugees in surrounding countries, to pray for their healing, for their safety, for their sustenance, and for the strength to overcome the psychological traumas that so often accompany such massive social upheaval; to pray also for the congregations and members of the National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon [and all Christian denominations], as they mount efforts to meet the human need that surrounds them whether in Syrian cities and villages or in host families and refugee camps in Lebanon, Jordan, Turkey, and other countries offering refuge.

13. Calls upon our own members and congregations to make concrete the spirit of prayer through acts of sacrificial giving as noted above. Whenever possible, let these gifts be above and beyond other commitments rather than a mere reordering.

14. Calls upon our Presbyterian congregations, wherever possible, to coordinate fundraising for relief efforts not only with other churches and community groups, but also with synagogues, mosques, temples, and other religious institutions as a demonstration that our differing faiths and traditions unite us in the face of human tragedy and need.

Finally, the 221st General Assembly (2014) directs the Stated Clerk to communicate these deep concerns, by the most effective means and as soon as possible, to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) agencies and congregations, to our ecumenical partners in the Middle East, and to the government of the United States, and to the relevant organizations and countries, as identified by appropriate denominational staff.

Rationale

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) expresses its anguish over the tragedy of Syria and shares the lament of Jesus, “... If you, even you, had only recognized on this day the things that make for peace! ...” (Lk. 19:42).

The assembly is guided by the biblical meaning of peace that is more than the absence of war; it is peace rooted in ideas of wholeness, completeness, and well-being together. That is the peace the assembly seeks for Syria and to which individuals, congregations, and governments are urged to contribute.

This 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) begins its response to the continuing tragedies of the civil war in Syria by reaffirming the actions of the 220th General Assembly (2012). Since then, the situation has become far graver, thus demanding further action.

This resolution, as amended, is consistent with the General Assembly’s 2012 position on the expanding Syrian and proxy conflict, and with the guidance of our church partners in the region.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-16

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-16—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 11-16.
Events have unfolded in Syria over the last two years in a most tragic way with terrible loss of life and destruction of entire towns and villages. New refugee populations have been created, some of whom were already refugees from previous conflict situations. Loss upon loss has amounted to unbearable conditions, including death from starvation.

The ACREC commends this resolution to the General Assembly and urges its approval.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 11-16

Comment on Item 11-16—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Because of the involvement of foreign fighters in many of the armed opposition groups, and because of support from other countries that provide financial and diplomatic support to various fighting parties, most Christians in Syria prefer to identify the conflict in Syria as a proxy war.

Christians in the Middle East have not “sought to remain neutral.” Rather, they have denounced all outside interference that is fueling the conflict in Syria, and they have continued to oppose all foreign intervention, overt or covert, in support of any of the participants in the fighting, including the provision of weapons, intelligence, combat training, financial or diplomatic support.

Our partners support the Syrian people’s right to determine the future of their own country, and have called on the Assad Administration to implement needed reforms and end corruption.

Previous General Assemblies have affirmed the right to self-determination. This is consistent with our partner’s requests.

Item 11-17

[The assembly approved Item 11-17 with amendment. See pp. 15, 71.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Iran.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) takes the following actions:

1. Commends and thanks the participants in negotiations with The Islamic Republic of Iran under the Treaty on the Non Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT); strongly supports their efforts; and assures them of our prayers, as they work for successful outcomes.

2. Recognizes that Iran, as a signatory of the NPT, has the right to enrich uranium for peaceful purposes, on condition that they remain in full compliance with the terms of the treaty, including full allowance for inspection of their nuclear facilities to ensure that these are only for non-military purposes.

3. Calls on all participants to refrain from imposing new conditions or new sanctions that would hinder negotiations.

4. Calls on all governments, including the U.S. as well as Iran, to safeguard the rights of all citizens, including the freedom of worship for all people.

5. Commends to those involved in the NPT negotiations innovative, nonviolent, diplomatic approaches including a. taking independent initiatives to reduce threats; and
   b. acknowledging complicity/responsibility for past actions as a basis for progress towards resolution of differences.

6. Encourages grassroots peacemaking groups and voluntary associations, including churches, to become informed and active participants in supporting the work of peace building and reconciliation.

7. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) to nurture relationships that the PC(USA) shares with the churches in Iran through our common membership in ecumenical bodies; also to continue to look for ways of supporting and building relationships with the Christian communities in Iran.

8. Directs the Stated Clerk to convey these decisions to the President of the United States; the secretary of state and the secretary of defense; all members of the U.S. Congress; appropriate officials of countries involved in the nuclear nonproliferation negotiations, including the government of Iran; and the congregations of the PC(USA), all with the advice of appropriate officials in the PMA.
Rationale

This resolution rests on six foundation blocks: (1) the Holy Bible; (2) historic Presbyterian mission work in Iran; (3) “On Supporting a Peaceful, Diplomatic Solution to the U.S.-Iran Issues,” the action of the 220th General Assembly (2012); (4) new developments in nuclear nonproliferation negotiations; (5) nonviolent approaches to peacemaking, as outlined in the denomination’s Peace Discernment Process; (6) the Presbyterian church’s “The Confession of 1967.”

(1) Biblical bedrock: “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called children of God” (Mt. 5:9). With the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we seek to discern what it means to be peacemakers, in the conflict-ridden context of relationships between the U.S. and Iran.

(2) Some history: Christianity was brought to Persia (the land now called Iran) before the end of the first century A.D. Over the centuries, the church there took many paths, reflecting diverse doctrinal positions, national affiliations, and language groups. The churches waxed and waned, as empires came and went. The involvement of American Presbyterian missionaries in Iran started in 1832, when emissaries from the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions visited the city of Urumia, in what is now far northwestern Iran. Over time, their mission work spread to the rest of the country. From their first engagement there in 1832 until Western mission workers were asked to leave the country in 1980, American Presbyterians had an active presence; the roll of Presbyterians who served in Iran for the period up to 1960 has nearly 400 names. Active in establishing outstanding hospitals and schools as well as churches throughout the country, they built a very significant legacy in the country. Iran produced the first modern era constitution in the Middle East in 1906. Presbyterian Missionary Howard Baskerville arrived in Iran in 1907 and was part of the “Constitutional Revolution,” which strived to establish a republic. Baskerville, who died for this cause, is buried in Iran and is remembered as a hero of the early democratic movement. The Evangelical Presbyterian Church in Iran, affiliated in its early years with the Synod of New York of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., was officially established in 1935 as an independent member of the worldwide family of Presbyterian churches (Source: History of the American Presbyterian Mission to Iran, 1834–1960, by John Elder). Today the churches in Iran, impacted by the emigration of Christians, seek to remain strong and faithful, even in the midst of a constantly changing environment. While many Christians in Iran are able to worship freely, others find the practice of their faith to be severely restricted.

This resolution recognizes that freedom of worship has not always been assured in our own country and asks our government to be ever vigilant in protecting it in our own country, especially for Muslims. It also asks the government of Iran to protect the rights of all its citizens, including freedom of worship for all.

(3) The 219th General Assembly (2012) approved “On Supporting a Peaceful, Diplomatic Solution to the U.S.-Iran Issues,” which:

• Acknowledged the church’s support of a peaceful, diplomatic means to resolve the tensions developing as a result of Iran’s nuclear program between the United States, Iran, European nations, Iran’s Arab neighbors, and Israel, and affirmed that the provisions of the Treaty on Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons Act should apply to all nations in the region without double standards.

• Called for the direct, unconditional negotiations between the United States and Iran with the goal of finding and implementing a peaceful resolution and affirmed the longer term goal of reestablishing diplomatic relations.

The full action, approved by vote of 531-127-1, is available on pc-biz (http://pc-biz.org/PC-Biz_WebApp_deploy/(S(31we4zmhnz221iqj3li2s2ta))/IOBView.aspx?m=ro&id=3825).

(4) In June 2013, a new reformist president was elected in Iran with a mandate for change and was installed in office in August. The situation changed profoundly in late 2013 with the initiation of direct negotiations under the Non-Proliferation Treaty, involving the governments of Iran, the United States, China, France, Russia, the United Kingdom, and Germany. In November 2013, those countries negotiated a historic agreement that provided the best chance in decades to ensure that Iran never develops a nuclear weapon. This six-month interim agreement is already rolling back the most dangerous aspects of Iran’s nuclear program. This is a critical moment. We’re closer than we’ve ever been to solving one of the world’s most challenging nuclear proliferation problems (Source: The Field Brief, the Plowshares Fund, Spring 2014).

(5) The PC(USA) action initiated by General Assembly action in 2010 (Item 13-11) and often referred to as the “Peace Discernment Process” explores various nonviolent steps that can be taken to avoid war and promote peace. Three such approaches could be particularly relevant to the current situation in Iran:

• Take independent initiatives to reduce threat. Independent of the slow process of negotiation and aimed at demonstrating a strong wish for success in the negotiations, such initiatives should be visible, verifiable, and ongoing, inviting but not demanding reciprocity. An example might be a gradual relaxation of restrictions on travel to the United States by Iranians, including diplomats nominated to serve their country here. Iran has already relaxed visa requirements for Americans seeking to visit their country.
• Acknowledge responsibility for conflict and injustice, seeking repentance and forgiveness for past actions. The PC(USA) urges the U.S. government to acknowledge its complicity in the overthrow of a freely elected government in Iran in 1953, installing in its place one that was notorious for human rights abuses. The church needs to take the lead in expressing repentance, asking for forgiveness for past actions of our government.

• Encourage grassroots peacemaking groups and voluntary associations. Churches can play a major role in this process.

(6) The PC(USA)’s Confession of 1967 states (Book of Confessions, 9.45):

God’s reconciliation in Jesus Christ is the ground of the peace, justice, and freedom among nations which all powers of government are called to serve and defend. The church, in its own life, is called to practice the forgiveness of enemies and to commend to the nations as practical politics the search for cooperation and peace. This search requires that the nations pursue fresh and responsible relations across every line of conflict, even at risk to national security, to reduce areas of strife and to broaden international understanding. Reconciliation among nations becomes peculiarly urgent as countries develop nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons, diverting their manpower and resources from constructive uses and risking the annihilation of mankind. ...

Iran and the United States have endured more than thirty years of conflict and animosity. Each has done things that the other has regarded as hostile, illegal, and wrong. Neither side trusts the other, often with some justification. In such a situation, movement towards a negotiated settlement, even if both sides agree on the desired outcome—an Iran that is a fully accepted member of the international community, able to develop a nuclear industry for peaceful purposes but with no interest in or ability to produce nuclear weapons—will require time and careful steps to rebuild mutual trust. The United States is by far the stronger party in those negotiations and is allied with several nations (not party to the negotiations) that have obtained nuclear weapons without complying with the NPT. The U.S. government could use its strength—military or otherwise—to seek to impose its will on Iran, which most likely would result in a speedy breakdown of the negotiations, confirming their fears of plots of Western domination in the Middle East. Alternatively, our country could be the leader in taking careful steps to prove our serious intent to resolve the conflict through peaceful negotiations. The church can be a powerful force encouraging our leaders to make this our deep and abiding commitment. As we seek to be Christ’s blessed peacemakers in this particular conflict, may this be our calling.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-17

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-17—from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 11-17. This resolution is consistent with previous General Assembly resolutions on this issue.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-17

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-17—from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 11-17. The ACREC commends this peacemaking resolution and its emphasis on diplomacy and dialogue. We are bound by our scriptures and confessions to be peacemakers. Recognizing that Presbyterians have a long history of mission and witness in Iran, we believe every effort must be made to further the dialogue with the new reform-minded president of Iran who came into office in August 2013 with a mandate to change Iran’s relationships with countries it has been at odds with for years. After thirty-five years of hostility and disagreement between the U.S. and Iran, this is a crucial moment for changing the dynamic. By looking forward and stressing dialogue, condemnation and vilification on both sides can subside, and in time, a better and more trusting relationship can be built, having a beneficial outcome for the entire region.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Concern, Prayer, and Action for Syria and Iraq.

In light of the devastation of prolonged civil [and proxy] war in Syria and Iraq, the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

[In the immediate context of suffering in Syria, Iraq, and among the refugees from those countries:]

1. Encourages congregations and members to pray for the peoples of Syria and Iraq suffering horrific human rights abuses amidst bloody civil wars[,] [that have been expanded by the provision of weapons and fighters from outside countries using these conflicts as proxies for larger power and religious interests];
2. Stands with our Reformed[3] and ecumenical partners in Syria and Iraq who are caught in those conflicts[5][7]

3. Commends the work of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance and other agencies, working in partnership with Middle Eastern churches, to bring relief to refugees and internally displaced persons from the Syrian and Iraqi conflicts, and urges congregations and members to give generous support to that work[4][5]

4. [Asks][Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency and other Presbyterians and congregations to advocate for] the United States and other governments to do what is possible to mediate a just and peaceful settlement of those conflicts.

Rationale

After three years, the Syrian civil war has claimed well more than 100,000 lives, by United Nations and other estimates, a staggering proportion of whom are innocent civilians. More than 2 million refugees have fled the country, and another 6 million are internally displaced. Human rights monitors report indiscriminate attacks, summary executions, kidnappings, torture, rape, and denial of food and medicine as tactics commonly used in the war. Both government and insurgent forces are implicated in the abuses.

The Syrian civil war has become perhaps the largest humanitarian crisis of this century so far. It threatens to split the country apart. The situation grows ever more complicated as rebel factions battle one another as well as the government; foreign actors (including the United States) intervene by supplying weapons, volunteers, and training to various parties; and the overflow from the Syrian conflict strains the capacity and threatens the stability of neighboring countries.

Most recently, the violence in Iraq seems to have become a full-scale civil war that threatens to divide that nation. The civilian death toll—hundreds every month for the past decade—has spiked sharply upward. This conflict, too, has featured multiple armed parties, human rights violations on all sides, foreign involvement, and refugees by the millions.

We in the U.S. churches do not know the solutions to these conflicts. It is hard to anticipate the course they may take in the coming months and years. What we can do is hold the endangered people up in prayer, lend our assistance in relieving their suffering, communicate solidarity to the National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon and other Christian bodies in the region, and encourage the kind of mediated peace processes that hold the best hope for some movement toward peace and justice in Syria and Iraq. That is what this resolution asks the General Assembly to do.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-18—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this resolution be approved with amendment: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“In light of the devastation of prolonged civil war in Syria and Iraq, the growing tensions among power blocs, and the need for a more just world order, the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

“A. In the immediate context of suffering in Syria, Iraq, and among the refugees from those countries:

1. Encourages congregations and members to pray for the peoples of Syria and Iraq suffering horrific human rights abuses amidst bloody civil wars[4][5] [that have been expanded by the provision of weapons and fighters from outside countries using these conflicts as proxies for larger power and religious interests;]

2. Stands with our Reformed and ecumenical partners in Syria and Iraq who are caught in those conflicts[5][7]

3. Commends the work of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance and other agencies, working in partnership with Middle Eastern churches to bring relief to refugees and internally displaced persons from the Syrian and Iraqi conflicts, and urges congregations and members to give generous support to that work[5][7]

4. [Asks][Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency and other Presbyterians and congregations to advocate for] the United States and other governments to do what is possible to mediate a just and peaceful settlement of those conflicts[4][5], grounded in the theological and ethical bases noted below.

“B. In the larger frame and longer term, given the transnational character of these conflicts:

1. Affirms that both the church and the world are called to follow the biblical command to love our neighbors as ourselves (Lev. 19:18; Mt. 22:39), with the understanding that faithful execution of this command requires an exercise of moral imagination: to envision how other peoples and nations view conflicted situations from their vantage points, their values and their interests, and to envision new initiatives for reconciliation;

“[2. Calls on Presbyterians and other U.S. citizens of goodwill to take care in how we look at the world: (a) to resist a simplistic ‘clash of civilizations’ model that pits all Muslims against Western democracy and overlooks political failures and other contributing factors (including blowback against our own policies) that give rise to Islamic extremism; and (b) to resist viewing the conflicts with Russia and China, including the tensions in and around Ukraine, through the old, bipolar, Cold War lens, understanding that new conflicts require development of new frameworks and vision;

“[3. Recognizes that developments in Afghanistan and Pakistan contain some similar dynamics to those in Syria and Iraq and recommends that any continuing foreign presence in Afghanistan be requested by a democratically elected government of that country, that it should be a genuinely multinational force on a time-limited basis, and that human rights, economic development without corruption, and a judicial system that protects the standing of women (as equals, able to testify against family members, receive education, etc.) should be requirements for any continuing U.S. financial aid and security assistance;

“[4. Calls upon the United States government, in concert with other governments, to strengthen and work within the institutions of a just global order (the United Nations, our treaty partners, etc.) so that they more effectively address conflicts within and among nations and emerging power configurations;

“[5. Affirms both that the legitimacy of political authorities rests on their pursuit and execution of justice and that peoples have a right to self-determination through democratic processes that are more than simply elections;

“[6. Honors the prophetic insight that seeking God’s rule and righteousness (Mt. 6:33) means turning from idols of nation and economic security to serve the living God in community with other people and creatures (Deut. 5:7);

“[7. Directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, within its current budget, to consult with Presbyterian political scientists and others to offer theological and ethical guidance regarding the emerging international order, the challenges of peacekeeping in weak and ecologically threatened states, and the role of Christian communities in overcoming resentments, fears, and past injustices].”

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy supports this resolution, but believes, in concurrence with World Mission staff of the Mission Agency, that it is better to characterize the wars devastating Syria and Iraq as proxy wars rather than civil wars. Also, ACSWP believes these wars are an instance of a larger pattern of significant challenges to the relatively unipolar global order that emerged after the Cold War. Other challenges include: possible civil wars in Afghanistan and Libya, China’s assertion of territorial claims over weaker nations in the South China Sea, and Russia’s invasion of another former member of the old Soviet Bloc, seizing territory and pressuring its neighbors.

While no one can know exactly how to address the tragedies in Syria and Iraq, there are many dedicated Presbyterian thinkers in foreign service, the military, corporations active in the Middle East, and in nongovernmental organizations and universities who are called to work on matters of world order and governance. Based on our Christian traditions and peacemaking commitments, it is important to reach out to them, to learn from them, and to work with them in helping shape our nation’s foreign policies, particularly in the wake of two grinding wars that have actually limited future U.S. influence.

The Syria and Iraq conflicts seem to beg the international community to respond to protect human rights, defend the weak, and uphold order and justice. Yet in recent decades the institutions of international order, created by the United States in concert with other nations following World War II, have atrophied. Some are badly dysfunctional. Others are outdated and do not include emerging powers. In light of this situation it is not surprising that voices within and outside the United States of America call for the U.S. to respond with military action.

The situation is not helped by the fact that some frameworks for viewing these challenges are quite limited. Some analysts view conflicts with Russia and China through the old Cold War lens. Others recast the Cold War dualism to see a global contest between a Christian America and Muslim extremists. Those who do not share these simplistic inclinations do wonder what sort of global order should emerge and what America’s role should be in it. Indeed, it would help the church and the world to have more adequate frameworks for understanding the global order. Hence the expansion of this good resolution and the recommendation for further awareness and outreach to Presbyterians involved in these matters.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-18

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-18—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 11-18.
Events have unfolded in Syria over the last two years in a most tragic way resulting in the terrible loss of life and destruction of entire towns and villages. New refugee populations have been created; some were already refugees from previous conflict situations. In Iraq, more than 1,000 civilians have been killed over the past year and, in news as recent as this weekend, violence has erupted again in Iraq where more persons were killed. All efforts for a peaceful settlement by the PC(USA), including those suggested in the resolution, should be advocated and supported.

Item 11-Info

Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) Agency Summary

1. Assigned Responsibilities: Strengthening Presbyterian Social Witness

   Social witness is part of what it means for the church to be “salt” and “light” in the world today. Coming from Jesus’ words in Matthew 5:13–14, the images of Salt & Light also give name to the ACSWP on-line newsletter. They undergird the committee’s faithfulness to its charge:

   The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) serves the prophetic calling of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by providing the General Assembly with careful studies of pressing moral challenges, media for discussion and discernment of Christian responsibilities, and policy recommendations for faithful action.

   This brief narrative summarizes the committee’s responsibilities, its procedures and personnel, its accomplishments and activities.

   In every age, the Spirit calls on the church to discern afresh God’s redemptive purpose in our particular time and place in history. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s work is to help the church discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in relation to contemporary society. In this work, the ACSWP and its task forces draw upon a great wealth of resources:

   - the voices of the biblical text;
   - the wisdom of theological discourse;
   - the guidance of the Reformed confessions;
   - the tradition of past policy statements;
   - the insights of sociopolitical disciplines;
   - the advice of members and all governing bodies of the church;
   - the insights of people who are poor, victims of existing policies, and those who have not had a voice in councils of the church; and

   Social witness can occur at many different points: in a church session, in a presbytery, in an advocacy group, in the participation of Christians in mission, in a meeting of the ecumenical church, in an individual Christian’s brave refusal to “go along” with injustice.

   For Presbyterians, however, decisions about the church’s social witness are made by persons elected to serve in governing bodies (session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly). As councils of the church meet, the elected persons are commissioned “… not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ” (Book of Order, F-3.0204). The advisory committee’s structure and function go back to 1936 when “consecrated” and justice-oriented persons from the Boards of Christian Education and National Missions were elected to a Social Education and Action Committee.

   In providing service and resources to meet the needs of congregations, mid councils, and the General Assembly, ACSWP members find guidance in the mission statement quoted above. Theologically grounded ethical reflection is part of the salt and light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The ACSWP engages with the grassroots in assisting the General Assembly to discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in a world that remains too grim for too many. At the same time, the committee’s membership contains persons with expertise in theology, social ethics, and various other disciplines, almost all of whom hold advanced degrees.
Making a personal social witness begins with very individual ways of growing and developing as a Christian—prayerfully studying the Scriptures, being inspired by Jesus; the prophets, and courageous stands of the church; gaining insight from past ethical witness; connecting one’s faith with others in the Christian community; and then being faithful in the world beyond the church. The ACSWP seeks to be a partner in the ministry of reconciliation, for “each member [who] is the

The churchwide work of the ACSWP is based on ethical guidance from the Scriptures, the Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order. The 1993 General Assembly policy statement, Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness (oga-93-019), provides extensive documentation of key biblical passages and is a useful document in congregational interpretation of the ACSWP and its mission.

All of those biblical texts have a common theme. The Gospel says that to confess Jesus Christ as Lord is to believe that God can and has overcome the powers of sin in the world. Christians do not work alone, but join Christ Jesus who is already at work in our world. John Calvin taught that social concern, expressed by action on behalf of our neighbors, is a central part of the faith. Our historic confessions, the work of theologians, and the actions of 220 General Assemblies have reaffirmed that message. Our faithfulness as Reformed Christians is to be embodied in love and justice.

a. New Developments

The traditional way of transmitting the church’s social witness was print. In addition to the Minutes of the General As-ssembly, since 1908, there were print journals that provided analysis and “how to” for congregations and individuals, agencies and councils of the church.

In 2011, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy launched an internet justice journal, with the support of the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries Area and the larger General Assembly Mission Council [now Presbyterian Mission Agency]. The new journal, Unbound: An Interactive Journal of Christian Social Justice, was designed to strengthen the social witness of the whole church and to be an open forum on areas where new witness is needed. The url (internet address) for the journal is http://justiceunbound.org/: the name “unbound,” refers not only to the lack of binding, but to Jesus’ words at the resurrection of Lazarus, “unbind him,” and to images of prisoners freed. In September 2011, the then General Assembly Mission Council designated the journal to be the successor to Church & Society magazine, which itself continued the work of print journals going back to 1908 (The Amethyst, Moral Welfare, and Social Progress). Back issues of all of these journals have made available through the American Theological Library Association.

A key goal has been to reach twenty- and thirty-something readers, using an intergenerational editorial staff. Despite limitations in the committee’s budget, a recent seminary graduate, Patrick Heery, was hired as managing editor and associate staff of ACSWP. Recognizing his work with Unbound as a form of ministry, Scioto Valley Presbytery ordained him in 2012.
A gifted editor and writer, Heery was hired to edit Presbyterians Today and other mission publications of the Presbyterian Mission Agency in March of 2013.

Ms. Ginna Bairby, another recent seminary graduate, was hired as Unbound’s managing editor and associate for Young Adult Social Witness, starting in September 2013. In the interim, the publication was sustained by Robert S. Moore and the Reverend Tricia Lloyd-Sidle, working on the technical and editorial sides respectively. Ms. Bairby, a former young adult volunteer in Peru and Office of Public Witness (d.c.) intern, is a candidate for ordination in the Presbytery of the James. She has continued the strong performance of the journal and plans for a newer young adult board to complement the twelve established church leaders and thinkers on the current advisory board. Unbound is also guided by staff colleagues from several of the Louisville offices.

In addition to the internet journal, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy maintains a website and distributes an e-newsletter, “Salt & Light.” Unbound links to these and to the various sites of other Compassion, Peace, and Justice misnistries. The emphasis on new technology and nurturing communities of people reflects the findings of the self-study ACSWP presented to and which was approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010). New approaches include using the Thoughtful Christian on-line curriculum to test and distribute timely studies (in 2013 one on drones), building on previous posting of short policy summaries free-of-charge on the Presbyterian Leader website.

Another new development has been the exploration of a “Social Teaching” track or modification of the inter-seminary course long taught at the General Assembly by former Moderator Jack Rogers and David Tomlinson, both professors at San Francisco Theological Seminary. That course, tentatively titled “Presbyterianism: Principles, Practice, and Social Teaching,” was designed for seminarians but may also welcome auditors and others seeking to understand the assembly in-depth and see it as a window into the church. That course was not taught in 2012 but an “open” version is being explored for 2014.

Since the 2012 General Assembly, the committee met in Charlotte, North Carolina; Parkville, Missouri (near Kansas City); Detroit, Michigan (Coordinating Committee); Albany and Schenectady, New York; Ghost Ranch, Abiquiu, New Mextico; and Louisville, Kentucky. In all but the last location, the committee met with representatives of the presbyteries and organizations and congregations doing vital forms of social witness.
In Charlotte, guided by the Reverend Arthur Canada (then on ACSWP), the committee met with the presbytery’s interim executive and a range of mission leaders, visiting sites of ministry for children, homeless women, and victims of human trafficking sponsored by dedicated congregations.

At the Heartland Center, Heartland Presbytery’s conference and camping facility, the committee heard a panel of speakers on renewal of the church, and also spoke with the presbytery executive on ministerial compensation and other issues. The guests discussed ethical and spiritual connections involving food, eating, and health; climate change and repercussions of Midwestern drought; a downtown ministry of hospitality and its insights for the peace discernment process; trends of being connectional but not traditionally institutional; finding consensus rather than division over matters of sexuality and biblical authority; and a review of issues and challenges in which the Heartland Presbytery is involved.

In Detroit, Michigan, the ACSWP Coordinating Committee discussed intensifying pressures on and within that city, and heard updates on the several study teams and resolution projects, visiting a range of church and industrial sites.

In Albany, New York, the committee was informed of downtown ministries including racial and immigrant support and a movement of primarily young adults seeking to strengthen the common good in a context of inequality and unemployment. Meeting with pastors and elders from churches of varying sizes, the committee discussed forms of witness and service including feeding programs, foci on women’s health, early childhood education, voting rights, and the dynamics of ministry in a state capitol. In nearby Schenectady, New York, the committee learned of work with cooperative social ministries, including an outreach to sex workers and an innovative approach to joint congregational witness with a Presbyterian congregation joining with a Reformed Church in America for critical mass in outreach and Christian formation.

At Ghost Ranch, the committee heard from the chairs of the Peace Discernment and Tax Justice study teams, heard from an expert on urban ministry and community organizing, and learned of current conditions in the Presbyterian Church of Cuba at a time of important transition. The committee also discussed the challenge of sexual abuse and violence among vulnerable populations, including church contexts (Roman Catholic and Protestant), among migrant laborers and those in domestic service, and in the U.S. military and around its bases.

In Louisville, the committee concentrated on finalizing reports and consulting with a range of staff and elected leadership.

b. Procedures and Personnel

In support of the work of the assembly, the ACSWP is given direct access to the assembly as it meets biennially. Between sessions of the assembly, the ACSWP also assists the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB), the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), and other agencies of the church as their work involves the development and interpretation of social witness policy.

The committee carries out its responsibilities in five major ways. They are the • development and recommendation of new social witness and policy for approval by the General Assembly;

• interpretation and communication of the General Assembly’s social witness and policy, both to the church and the world at large; • providing advice and counsel to the entities and governing bodies of the church on matters of social witness policy when developments merit social-ethical attention; • providing advice and counsel to the General Assembly when it meets as a governing body (in oral and memoranda form); and • monitoring peace and justice concerns per mandates from the General Assembly. The ACSWP develops and recommends new social witness and policies primarily in response to referrals from the General Assembly (GA) and its entities, and in a manner consistent with the Manual of the General Assembly, “On Forming Social Policy.” This policy development requires depth of theological reflection, breadth of input, and diversity of participation. Before a policy statement is approved, extensive consultation is mandated at all stages of development. Thus, the committee’s work is connected to the concerns of Presbyterians gathered in worshiping and serving communities across the land.

The committee’s Advice and Counsel group carries out the task of providing advice and counsel at the meeting of the General Assembly (GA). This group of elected committee members, together with other staff and resource persons from several Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and Office of the General Assembly (OGA) entities, advises commissioners in assembly committees and other entities about social policies applicable to issues before the assembly. It may also comment on the need or direction for future social policy. Such analysis and recommendations are provided through “Advice and Counsel Memoranda,” by oral testimony before assembly committees, and informally. The ACSWP chair or a co-chairperson is an expert on urban ministry and community organizing, and learned of current conditions in the Presbyterian Church of Cuba operating an outreach to sex workers and an innovative approach to joint congregational witness with a Presbyterian congregation joining with a Reformed Church in America for critical mass in outreach and Christian formation.

The committee’s work is connected to the concerns of Presbyterians gathered in worshiping and serving communities across the land.
The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) members and staff make themselves available for interpretive events and preaching as requested and as time allows. Such events included presentations in nine presbyteries and seven congregations and consultations with a number more. Staff represented ACSWP and Unbound at the Company of New Pastors meeting in Louisville (October 2013), introducing participants to the committee’s work and the social witness policy of the PC(USA) and led workshops at the Montreat College Conference on the theory and practice of social witness and its role in the church.

As part of the peace discernment process, the committee helped the Steering Team convene a consultation at Montreat on New Approaches to Peacemaking with 135 chaplains, professors, and students from thirty-two colleges and universities, almost all related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Papers and presentations from that event contributed to the report, “Risking Peace in a Fearful World,” and brief video interviews of speakers, students, and several professors and chaplains were posted as a special issue of Unbound. In addition to cooperation with Presbyterian college ministry leadership, the Presbyterian Council for Chaplains and Military Personnel sent several experienced military chaplains to participate.

The committee welcomes inquiries through its office in Louisville. All mid councils, churches, and members are encouraged to use the “Presbyterian Social Witness Policy Compilation,” which contains the core of the assemblies’ social policy statements since 1946. It is revised regularly to meet the needs of the church and can be downloaded from the worldwide web at (www.pcusa.org/acswp). The ACSWP holds a stated meeting following each General Assembly to discern and prioritize its work; periodically between the assemblies, to review progress on papers and projects; and in January before an assembly, to edit and approve final drafts for submission to the assembly. This year the committee has prepared the following reports to strengthen current social witness policies:

- Resolution on Sexual Violence within the U. S. Military Services: A 2014 Human Rights Update;
- Risking Peace in a Fearful World: Recommendations from the Peace Discernment Process;
- Tax Justice: A Christian Response to a New Gilded Age;
- ACSWP Agency Narrative;
- Resolution on Justice for Western Sahara;
- Ministerial Compensation and the Theology of Compensation: Incentives and Solidarity;
- The Gospel from Detroit: Renewing our Urban Vision/Mission;
- Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance;
- Resolution on Equal Rights for All Inhabitants of Israel and Palestine and on Conversations with Prophetic Voices.

In preparing this year’s General Assembly reports, ACSWP took into consideration the comments and reflections shared by individual Presbyterians and adult education classes, Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) program ministry areas, and other bodies within our church. From 2012–2013, the committee assisted the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) in the publication of the following reports: World of Hurt, Word of Life: Renewing God’s Communion in the Work of Economic Reconstruction and For Human Rights and Civic Freedom: Movements for Democratic Change in the Arab World. These resources can be downloaded at http://www.pcusa.org/oga/publications or http://www.pcusa.org/acswp/resources.htm.

The ACSWP works collaboratively with the six mission and ministry areas of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), other General Assembly agencies, and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA). The ACSWP has liaisons from the Compassion Peace and Justice ministry area and from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC). When possible, the committee spends time with local church members, relevant presbytery committees, and with ecumenical contacts during its stated meetings. Members and staff of ACSWP have spoken at and distributed policy resources at several presbytery meetings and one synod educational event, and gave workshops at the Ecumenical Advocacy Days cosponsored by the Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C.

As invited, the committee assists in programming an annual gathering of the Social Ethics Network (SEN) (formerly known as the Theological Educators for Presbyterian Social Witness (TEPSW)). This group is composed primarily of Christian ethicists currently or formerly serving in seminaries and other educational institutions related to and/or in covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Since the last General Assembly, the committee assisted with two such gatherings. In the fall of 2012, the SEN met at Auburn and Union Theological Seminaries, New York City, New York; and in the fall of 2013 at Wake Forest Divinity School, Winston-Salem, North Carolina. The ACSWP also hosts a reception for Presbyterians at the annual meeting of the Society of Christian Ethics. The January 2013 meeting was held in Chicago; and the Jan-

221ST GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2014) 911
January 2014 meeting in Seattle, Washington. Other responses by the committee to General Assembly (GA) assignments may be found in the responses to referrals section of the reports to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

East Timor did receive its independence after years of horrific repression and war. Kashmir involves the line of religious division between two nuclear states dating back to their separation. Tibet is acknowledged by most countries to be part of China even if many would favor its cultural autonomy, which seems to be the current position of the Dalai Lama. Zunes points out that centralized autocracies rarely respect the rights of subordinate jurisdictions.

On Amending G-2.0504b to Require Participation in the Benefits Plan of the PC(USA)—From the Presbytery of Kiskiminetas.

The Presbytery of Kiskiminetas overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0504b be amended by adding a third paragraph to read as follows:

“For any temporary pastoral relationship filled by a non-retired teaching elder serving more than half time (20 hours per week), the contract must include participation in the benefits plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including both pension and medical coverage, or any successor plan approved by the General Assembly for the duration of the temporary pastoral relationship contract and future extensions.”

Rationale

The terms of call for installed pastoral positions require participation in the benefits plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including both pension and medical coverage, or any successor plan approved by the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-2.0804).

Only 5,584 congregations have installed pastoral positions covering 6,722 installed pastors (Comparative Statistics 2011). There are 702 fewer congregations with installed positions covering 885 fewer installed pastors than in 2006 (Comparative Statistics 2006).

In 2011, 2,846 congregations have “other leadership,” of which are temporary supply teaching elders (710). At the Board of Pensions minimum participation basis of $40,000, the lost major medical dues is $1,252,440 for 2013. Minimum participation basis for 2014 is $42,000 and for 2015 is $44,000.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 12-01

Advice on Item 12-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to disapprove Item 12-01.

Item 12-01 proposes to amend G-2.0504b by adding a third paragraph:

“For any temporary pastoral relationship filled by a non-retired teaching elder serving more than half time (20 hours per week), the contract must include participation in the benefits plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including both pension and medical coverage, or any successor plan approved by the General Assembly for the duration of the temporary pastoral relationship contract and future extensions.”

The proposed amendment would diminish the presbytery’s authority to set minimum requirements for the terms of service for temporary pastoral relationships. The terms of service for such relationships must meet or exceed any minimum requirements set by the presbytery. The Book of Order does not include a requirement for participation in the benefits plan for temporary pastoral relationships. Determination of titles and terms of service for temporary pastoral relationships are explicitly left to the presbytery.

Terms of service for temporary pastoral relationships, including participation in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), remain the prerogative of the presbytery, as well as deferring to sessions the option of including such participation.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 12-01

Comment on Item 12-01—From the Board of Pensions.

Item 12-01 from the Presbytery of Kiskiminetas seeks to amend the Book of Order to mandate participation in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by all “non-retired teaching elder(s) serving more than half time (twenty hours per week)” in temporary pastoral relationships.
While the Board of Pensions ("the Board") joins the larger church in believing that all people should have healthcare and retirement benefits, it advises that the General Assembly disapprove this overture.

The language proposed, which appears to be modeled on the similar language of G-2.0804 of the Book of Order, would not make anyone eligible for benefits who is not already eligible and could actually be detrimental to the financial condition of the Medical Plan. The Board notes first that any individual meeting the requirements presented by the overture—employment relationship with a particular church, working at least twenty hours—is already eligible to be enrolled in the Benefits Plan. There is no impediment to enrollment due to the temporary nature of their employment relationship. If the goal of the overture is to make individuals eligible, the amendment language fails to do so.

The Board understands that many temporary relationships are structured as such for the express purpose of avoiding mandated participation in the Benefits Plan. Often borne of affordability concerns, the decisions of sessions—and those teaching elders who serve in these positions—to structure positions in a particular way should be respected. A constitutional amendment to mandate participation of those working at least twenty hours could do little other than increasing the number of positions reported as being nineteen hours per week.

Based on the available data, the Board believes that many of those in these non-installed—and currently non-mandated—positions have lower effective salaries than their installed counterparts, even adjusting for the number of hours worked. If this language was added to the Book of Order and enrollment of this population in the Benefits Plan was compelled, it would have the effect of adding individuals at salaries that require subsidization to reach median benefit levels rather than adding a population of those at or above the median. If the goal of the overture is to benefit the financial condition of the Medical Plan, the amendment language fails to do so.

Finally, the overture runs counter to the spirit of the current Form of Government, adopted just four years ago, which has sought to minimize regulation at the national level and encourage flexibility and choice in administration of the church. The presbyteries proposing this overture could choose to adopt this policy for their own churches without requiring a constitutional amendment.

While the Board could administratively manage the influx of members that this proposed amendment may generate, and noting that it shares the concern for all those who serve the church, the Board advises the disapproval of the overture.

[The assembly disapproved Item 12-02. See pp. 16, 17.]

On Directing the Board of Pensions in the Distribution of Pension Benefits of Church Leaders and Administrators of Churches Leaving the PC(USA)—From the Presbytery of Tropical Florida.

The Presbytery of Tropical Florida overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to direct the PC(USA) Board of Pensions to remove and distribute all accumulated pension benefits as a lump check or electronic transfer within 120 days after a teaching elder or administrator, not yet retired, becomes ordained, commissioned, or affiliated with another faith denomination in the position as teaching elder, priest, pastor, minister, clergy, working as an administrator, or a leadership position within another denomination.

Rationale

Why the need for this overture.

By removing all leaving churches, administrators, and teaching elders under the GSA (Gracious Separation Agreement) now participating in the PC(USA) pension programs, it will strengthen the PC(USA) Board of Pension financial position going forward due to the current low-interest rate environment, and removing future financial liabilities associated with departing participants.

Church leaders and administrators of churches leaving the PC(USA) denomination to join other faiths and denominations based on theological and doctrinal differences should not be allowed to continue their participation in the PC(USA) pension benefit program offered to churches, teaching elders, and administrators that remain faithful to the teachings and doctrines of PC(USA).

Currently the PC(USA) pension program is recognized as one on the best administered and funded religious foundations in America. Teaching elders and churches leaving our denomination under GSA currently could be allowed to participate fully in all current and future benefits offered by the PC(USA) Board of Pensions, if this overture is not approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014).
Comment on Item 12-02—From the Board of Pensions.

The Board of Pensions (the “Board”) advises the disapproval of Item 12-02 from the Presbytery of Tropical Florida, which directs the Board to distribute “all accumulated pension benefits” as a lump sum within 120 days after a teaching elder or administrator not yet retired joins another denomination as a clergy member, administrator, or leader in another denomination.

The rationale provided for the recommendation is that this position would strengthen the financial position of the pension fund due to the current low interest rate environment and remove future liabilities. The Board disagrees with the benefits cited by the overture advocate. If the Board’s investment performance exceeds its economic assumptions, having the assets remain in the plan until the former members reach retirement age strengthens the position of the fund. The interest rate to be used for computing the present value of the member’s accrued benefit is 4.5 percent; the lower the interest rate, the greater the liability for the plan.

The proposal is legally and administratively unadvisable. A member’s accrued pension benefits are vested. Under the current terms of the Benefits Plan, with the exception of members who have accrued only a very small benefit due to a short length of service, no member who leaves the employment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and their active participation in the Pension Plan, known as “terminated vested members” or “TVMs”, has the right to cash out their annuity benefit in a lump sum. The only distribution option under the defined benefit plan is an annuity benefit.

Under the Internal Revenue Code, a pension plan can only cash out a pension benefit involuntarily if the present value of the accrued benefit is less than $5,000. Any other form of cash out would require the consent of the pensioner.

To accomplish the goal of the overture, the Pension Plan distribution provisions would have to be amended by the Board to (1) define as a separate class of terminated vested members those members who are targeted by this overture and (2) provide that the sole distribution option available under the Pension Plan to that class of terminated vested members is a lump sum distribution of the present value of their accrued pension credits upon termination of eligible service and employment by another denomination as a clergy member, administrator, or leader. The board of directors has the duty to act in the sole and exclusive benefit of all members and their beneficiaries. Under the Plan, all TVMs are treated equally, whether they have left the service of the church to retire early, change vocations, or work for a corporation or another nonprofit entity, including another denomination. Their accrued pension represents deferred compensation that they accrued for their years of service for Presbyterian employers. The Board does not have the ability to monitor where a terminated employee goes after his or her service with the employing organization and does not have an interest in administering provisions that treat certain former members punitively or differently (better or worse) than others.

Finally, while the Board administers the Benefits Plan within the social norms of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and takes seriously urgings of the General Assembly, the Board notes that the General Assembly does not have the authority to direct the Board of Pensions to amend the Plan. The Board is a separate civil corporation with the fiduciary responsibility to design and administer the Benefits Plan.

The Board appreciates the overture’s compliments about the pension plan’s administration.

On Publishing the Current List of Churches Certified as Relief of Conscience Churches—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to urge the Board of Pensions to post on the website the current list of the churches certified as Relief of Conscience churches.

Rationale

In 1998, the Board of Pensions (BOP) established a Relief of Conscience mechanism (ROC) whereby sessions that objected on grounds of conscience to the BOP Medical Plans policy of paying for abortions could have a portion of their dues set aside into the Adoption Assistance Fund. The Board of Pensions 2012 Annual Review states, “Churches and employing organizations that object as a matter of conscience to the use of their dues for abortion procedures may apply for relief of conscience. A dollar amount equal to the cost of abortion procedures from the prior year is set aside from the Medical Plan dues of employers that have relief of conscience status. These monies are transferred to the Board of Pensions Assistance Program, where they provide a small portion of the funding for Adoption Assistance Grants to Benefits Plan members.”
As of December 31, 2012, there were 491 congregations that have applied for and received ROC status. These congregations wish to publically and practically distance themselves—for reasons of conscience—from the PC(USA)’s practice of paying for abortions because Scripture leads them to conclude that abortion is a grave moral wrong and thus to pay for abortion is to be complicit in sin. To participate in ROC is thus a desire to bear public witness to this conviction without binding the conscience of other Presbyterians who come to differing conclusions. The church has discerned that with its diverse membership, this particular area of disagreement is one in which it is appropriate to offer a formal conscience mechanism, and so it is of concern to the whole church that it functions effectively and efficiently.

Unfortunately, many congregations are unaware that ROC exists at all, and the process to apply, receive, and maintain ROC status is unnecessarily bureaucratic and cumbersome. The congregation’s session must know that ROC exists, must pass a resolution that is directed to the presbytery of jurisdiction that then must act to grant or deny relief of conscience. “If the presbytery grants relief of conscience, it notifies the Board of Pensions. The Board of Pensions in turn acknowledges to the session and the presbytery receipt of their actions and places the congregation or employing organization on the relief of conscience roll.”

In 2008, in response to confusion as to whether a particular congregation had in fact been placed on the ROC roll, the General Assembly directed the Board of Pensions to communicate yearly by mail to each congregation on the ROC roll confirming their status. This communication is important but the process is needlessly burdensome, complicated, costly and ineffective. In the past few years churches who thought they had been on the ROC roll discovered that simple bureaucratic errors had resulted in their failure to be placed on the ROC roll, and thus, learned that their mandatory dues were inadvertently being used for years in ways that violated their consciences. Other churches have missed the yearly letter and thus have had to make inquiries as to their continued participation in ROC.

Publishing the ROC congregations on the BOP website would serve to publicize and promote an established BOP program, avert continued confusion, and streamline the process of confirming ROC status, and utilize the website to save financial and personnel resources related to the yearly mailing. Moreover, publishing the Relief of Conscience congregations provides them the opportunity to effectively bear public witness to the church and the world of their conviction that has caused them to seek ROC status in the first place. In other words, these current unnecessary bureaucratic layers not only cost time and money, but they also act to bind the conscience of churches who wish to make this matter of conscience a matter of public witness. All these problems could be easily solved by simply publishing the list of ROC churches on the website.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 12-03

Comment on Item 12-03—From the Board of Pensions.

Item 12-03 from the Presbytery of National Capital would urge the Board of Pensions (“the Board”) to post on the website the current list of the churches certified as Relief of Conscience churches.

If the General Assembly asks the Board to publish this list on www.pensions.org, we will do so.

As these are matters of conscience, the Board would offer any church or other employer on the Relief of Conscience roll the opportunity to opt out of that listing.

In order to avoid unnecessary duplication of effort, if this overture is approved, the Board would treat it as replacing the direction of the 218th General Assembly (2008) to report information annually.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) confirm the reelection of Thomas F. Taylor by the Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, for an additional four-year term as Foundation president and chief executive officer.

Rationale

At a special telephonic meeting, the trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation unanimously, and with gratitude to God, called and elected Thomas F. Taylor to a second, four-year term as president of the Foundation subject to the confirmation of the General Assembly.

During his first term of service, Taylor led the Foundation through the development and implementation of a strategic plan that has resulted in several significant accomplishments:

- Reversed a downward trend in new assets under management by increasing new assets each year, from $18 million in 2010, to $30 million in 2013.
• Forged key partnerships with Cambridge Associates to manage the Foundation’s fiduciary investments, and with SEI to be the investment adviser to the New Covenant Funds. Both Cambridge and SEI maintain the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to faith-based, socially responsible investing.

• Restructured field staff to emphasize building relationships with congregations and the ministries they support, and building partnerships with pastors. Ministry relations officers determine the stewardship and fundraising needs of partner ministries, and then offer the Foundation’s services to help meet those needs.

• Introduced new services to meet particular needs of the church, including online giving for congregations and ministries, new investment options for church-held endowments, Project Regeneration to assist congregations with repurposing assets for new ministry, and a Financial Health Assessment for congregations.

Taylor received his undergraduate degree with honors in history from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he also earned his Juris Doctorate in law. He received his Masters of Divinity from Yale University—Divinity School, and his Ph.D. from Fuller Theological Seminary in Intercultural Studies.

Prior to joining the Foundation, Taylor was deputy executive director for mission for the General Assembly Mission Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), overseeing six ministry areas that administer the mission work of the PC(USA)’s national offices in more than one hundred countries.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) confirm the following directors of its subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., that have been elected for the year 2013–2014, consistent with the Deliverance for New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., as approved by the 211th General Assembly (1999) and amended by the 212th and 214th General Assemblies (2000) and (2002), and subject to applicable law:

_Foundation Trustee:_ Stephen C. Kelly, banker, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters.

_Other:_ Richard H. White, retired hospital chaplaincy director, white, male, married, clergy, over 50, Synod of the Northeast.

Rationale

Shareholder action was taken on May 14, 2013, to increase the size of the New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., board of directors to seven. Richard H. White was elected to fill the newly created vacancy.

Stephen C. Kelly was elected on September 10, 2013, to fill the vacancy created upon the retirement of Director Lois A. Clarke. Kelly is a current Foundation trustee in his first term.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) direct the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to

1. continue its churchwide gifts program, as well as utilize the Foundation’s subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., for the benefit of churches, church organizations, and individuals who wish to use the foregoing to make gifts as an expression of Christian faith and stewardship;

2. explore and initiate ways to enhance its expertise and capacity in support of planned and deferred giving (including wills emphasis) and to explore the services of New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., that will allow these programs and entities to be ever more effective contributors toward the fulfillment of the Great Commission for the Glory of God.

Rationale

Each General Assembly, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation trustees ask the General Assembly to endorse the Foundation's work in support of mission and ministry throughout the church. This unbroken series of affirmations allows the Foundation to confidently pursue its ministry among congregations, presbyteries, synods, related organizations, and individual Presbyterians. General Assembly validation of our vital work on behalf of mission and ministry is essential to our effectiveness throughout the church.
The amount of $55.8 million was made available through the Foundation for mission in 2013. Additionally, as a ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Foundation’s efforts to nurture the accumulated resources of Presbyterians to further the mission of the church call us to grow the resources that support mission giving for the future. New gifts and accounts amounting to more than $30 million were received over the course of the year.

These striking results are a testament to the power of giving witnessed by the Foundation as it lives its goal of bringing people and mission together. Because of the generosity of faithful Presbyterians over the past five years, the Foundation has made available more than $325 million for the work and mission of the church.

The Board of Pensions recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) confirm the election of Frank C. Spencer as president of the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Rationale

Section 2.1 of the Bylaws of the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) states that,

The President shall be elected by the Board of Directors with confirmation by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The President-elect may assume the position of president with full authority of that office upon election by the Board of Directors and before the next General Assembly at which confirmation will be sought. If the General Assembly declines to confirm the President-elect, the position will be declared vacant immediately with no further action required on the part of the Assembly.

The Board of Pensions, at its meeting on February 28, 2014, elected Frank C. Spencer to the position of president-elect, to assume the office of president on July 1, 2014, contingent on the confirmation of the General Assembly. Mr. Spencer succeeds Robert W. Maggs Jr., as president of the Board of Pensions. Mr. Maggs was elected to the position in May 1999, with his election confirmed by the 211th General Assembly (1999), and will retire in the summer of 2014.

Mr. Spencer most recently served as CEO/president of Habitat for Humanity of Charlotte, North Carolina, where he directed the efforts of that ministry to provide affordable housing and ongoing support to families in Charlotte and El Salvador. Previously, Mr. Spencer served as CEO of Cogdell Spencer Inc., an NYSE traded health-care real estate investment trust. During his tenure, Cogdell Spencer was named one of Charlotte’s Best Places to Work (2009, 2010) and was the leading healthcare design/build company in the United States ranked by annual revenue (2008). Mr. Spencer was honored as a 2009 Ernst and Young Entrepreneur of the Year for the Carolinas.

Mr. Spencer is a candidate for a Master of Divinity degree (2014) at Union Presbyterian Seminary. He holds a Bachelor of Arts in German from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, where he was a Morehead Scholar, and a Master of Business Administration from Harvard Business School, where he was designated a Baker Scholar.

Born in Staunton, Virginia, Mr. Spencer is a ruling elder at Selwyn Avenue Presbyterian Church, a congregation in the Presbytery of Charlotte, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic. In addition to serving on the Board of Directors of the Board of Pensions since 2012, he also served the PC(USA) from 2005 to 2011 on the Board of Montreat Conference Center, including four years as chairman of that board.

General Assembly Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Board of Pensions

Introduction

The General Assembly committee elected to conduct the six-year review of the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is pleased to present this report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Mandate and Process

By action of the 213th General Assembly (2001), all six agencies related to the General Assembly undergo regular review. The purpose of the review process is “to provide an equitable evaluation of the ministries” of these agencies.” The review is to focus on the quality of the relationship of the agencies’ ministry with the mission of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the agencies’ collaborative efforts with other agencies, and the quality of the agencies’ program based on the standards for review. (Agency Review Manual).

Committees on review conduct their work according to the Standards for Review of General Assembly Agencies and present a written report to the next General Assembly. The last review of the Board of Pensions (BOP) was conducted in 2005–06 and reported to the 217th General Assembly (2006).

Agencies are required to do an in-depth self-study as an initial step in the review process. The Board of Pensions (BOP) produced a comprehensive report in 2013. “The Work of the Board: A Self-Study” was forwarded to the review committee and served as a basic and valuable resource for our evaluation. Content of the BOP self-study will not be reiterated here; rather, it stands as a companion to this report.

A review committee of twelve members elected by the General Assembly then engages the agency in a further study and evaluation process that includes on-site visits and interviews. The 2006 BOP agency review included a denomination-wide survey; the current review committee decided not to pursue that option for several reasons. There were cost constraints; the estimated cost of a survey was more than $15,000 and the total budget for the committee’s work was $16,000. The Board of Pensions had just completed a denomination-wide demographic survey, which was presented to a plenary session of the last General Assembly (2012). Further, the time frame coincided with the BOP’s announcement of pending changes to the healthcare benefits plan and the broader context of uncertainty surrounding the Affordable Care Act. Committee members and our advising staff were concerned that any survey designed around the set standards of review would, in fact, elicit responses that, no matter how thoughtful or impassioned, are beyond the parameters of the review we were tasked with conducting. However, this context did alert the review committee to the vital role of good and timely communication in the BOP’s ministry with its members, which was a major focus of our review.

The following persons were elected by the 220th General Assembly (2012) to serve as the Agency Review Committee: Teaching Elders Deborah Block, moderator; Fahed Abu-Akel, Faith Jongewaard, Jim Kitchens, Scott Prouty, Judith Wellington; Ruling Elders Teresa Bryce Bazemore, Dick Coffelt, Karen Garrett, Kent Grimes, Douglas Megill; Ecumenical Representative Maria Curatolo, Episcopal Church.

The members of the committee brought a wide variety of skills and experience to our work with the BOP. Of the teaching elders, five were actively involved in parish ministry at the time and one was honorably retired. There is a perhaps obvious matter of full disclosure here: The teaching elders are members of the health, disability, and retirement plans of the BOP. We hope that this inevitable connection has brought a convergence of interest to this review. We are personally invested in the BOP’s fidelity to its mission. Among the ruling elders was a doctor, lawyers, current and former business and finance professionals—even stated clerks! All teaching and ruling elders have long and deep involvements across the PC(USA), including work with the General Assembly and other General Assembly agencies.

Ms. Curatolo is an executive vice-president of the Church Pension Group of The Episcopal Church.

The committee met twice in person with additional phone conversations and email exchanges over the course of nearly a year. After an initial organizational meeting in May 2013, the committee gathered in September 2013 in Philadelphia for a multi-day opportunity to interview Board of Pensions staff, Board of Pension members and leadership; subsequent interviews were also conducted, in person and by phone, with a sampling of church leaders and plan members. The committee reviewed the extensive self-study and supplementary materials provided by the Board of Pensions, along with board of directors organizational papers and minutes, financial and audit reports, employee training manuals, and member information resources, including the web site. Information was freely offered when requested.

The committee was specifically charged to examine the Board of Pensions in four areas: Church relatedness, collaboration with other agencies, policy and program effectiveness, and cultural proficiency. In every area the Board of Pensions meets or exceeds the goals set by the PC(USA).

Conclusions: Commendations and Encouragements

In concluding its work, the Committee on Review finds no matters within the scope of its responsibility that require recommendations to and deliberation by the General Assembly; however, we have identified the following specific strengths for commendation and areas for ongoing emphasis in meeting the needs of a changing church:

We commend the Board of Pensions for

• Commitment to its mission: providing pension, healthcare, death and disability benefits, and financial assistance for qualifying members who serve or who have served the PC(USA).

• Proactive opportunities for clergy support and development, especially the CREDO program.

• Effective programs for increasing staff diversity, retention, and professional development. We lift up to the church the twenty-five-year average length of employment as a sign of high morale and workplace effectiveness, the emphasis on collaborative and collegial work relationships, and cross-functional teams.

• Initiatives to work collaboratively with the Presbyterian Historical Society and the Presbyterian Foundation.

• A thorough self-study, including a comprehensive demographic study that will provide an essential foundation for its ongoing work, especially with its new executive leadership.

• A new commitment to and a strategy for communicating and interpreting changes in the national healthcare environment (Affordable Care Act) and the denominational plan.

We encourage the Board of Pensions to • Continue to emphasize and develop effective, strategic communication with an increasingly diverse plan membership (rural/urban; special ministry/traditional pastorates; ethnic and language diversity) in a time of significant change in healthcare benefits.

• Take a leadership role in conversations about the relationship between the current structure for Board of Pensions participation and changing models of congregations and congregational leadership.
• Continue efforts toward lowering administrative expenses. In conversations beyond members of the staff and board, concern was often voiced that the agency’s public lifestyle be more consistent with the economic values of the larger church community.

• Have its board of directors reexamine the extent of authority delegated to its committees (for example, the authority delegated to the Compensation Committee to establish the CEO’s compensation without board approval).

• Review the practice of using the same auditors over many years.

• Consider reestablishing representation between the BOP and the PMA to further the spirit and the fruits of collaboration.

• Maximize the contact of regional representatives with plan members to inform, interpret, listen, and communicate member concerns back to the BOP as a new plan is developed and introduced.

We invite the prayerful support of the church as the BOP moves through a significant leadership transition with the retirement of its president and chief executive, Mr. Robert W. Maggs, and the subsequent planned retirement of the executive vice president and chief operating officer, Mr. Francis “Frank” Maloney. We thank both Mr. Maggs and Mr. Maloney for their dedicated and successful tenures in the service of the PC(USA).

Finally, the committee thanks the staff of the Board of Pensions and the Office of the General Assembly for their cooperation and helpfulness to us, and for their service to the church.

Supplementary Information

I. BOP Mission

“Our mission is to provide to qualifying members who serve the community of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) pension, healthcare, death and disability benefits, as well as financial assistance.” Today, with a staff of 185 people, the BOP seeks to fulfill the following responsibilities:

• Design and administer a comprehensive program of retirement, death, disability, medical, and optional benefits for ministers, missionaries, and other church workers.

• Design and administer a program of financial assistance to help meet needs that are beyond the scope of the pension and benefits program.

• Establish and operate a retirement housing program for eligible retirees and their spouses.

• Receive, invest, and disburse the funds required to support these plans and programs for the sole and exclusive benefit of members and beneficiaries of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and other beneficiaries of the assistance and retirement housing programs.”

II. Compliance to the Standards of Review

The Review Committee had the opportunity to examine the work of the BOP and to meet and interview numerous members of the BOP staff as well as members of the board of directors. As a result the committee affirms that the BOP is in compliance with these “Standards of Review” and:

• Has the experience necessary to accomplish its work and has completed it in a manner that is consistent with its servant role in the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

• Demonstrates fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its articles of incorporation and has the exhibited leadership as it guides the church in the work of administering benefits and assistance programs for ministers, church workers, and their families.

• Exhibits practical cooperation with agencies of the church, clearly identifies itself as a part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and honors the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

• Receives directors and officers in a manner consistent with the nomination, election, concurrence, and confirmation process outlined in its bylaws and articles of incorporation and understand the corporate relationships within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

• Has responded to the directives and requests of the General Assembly.

• Recognizes that they manage the Board of Pensions’ assets exclusively for the members of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
• Has properly constituted its board of directors and management in a manner that meets the criteria specified in the review program.

• Is in full compliance with all appropriate external and accrediting agencies and has employed Deloitte & Touche LLP, a qualified and disinterested party, as its auditor.

• Engages in a long-range and short-range planning process, and the results of that planning process have been reported in this document

• Has a clear understanding of and is conversant with the mission, overall condition, and the responsibilities of the various administrative leaders of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

• Has called officers and management who provide excellent overall management of the Board of Pensions and are comfortable in their relationships with staff, staff colleagues in other entities of the General Assembly, and the various constituencies of the church.

III. Church Relatedness

Relationship with the General Assembly

As an agency of the General Assembly, the Board of Pensions is accountable to the General Assembly, and appears as a General Assembly-related corporate body in the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) may elect one of its directors to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Board of Pensions, but has chosen to forgo this privilege in recent years out of consideration for the workload of its board members.

The president of the Board of Pensions and the chair of its board of directors have the privilege of the floor at PMA meetings but without a vote. They are also members of an informal group comprising the chairs and executives of the General Assembly agencies.

Regional Benefits Consultations

The Board of Pensions presents two Regional Benefits Consultations (RBCs) a year, one in the east, another in the west. The RBCs provide synod and presbytery executives, stated clerks, moderators, pension liaisons, and other church leaders an opportunity to learn about Board of Pensions’ plans and programs. They also provide a forum for raising questions and providing important input and feedback. One of our committee members has participated in these consultations and offered a helpful participant evaluation.

Executive Presbyter Forums

The Board of Pensions hosts Executive Presbyter Forums at its offices in Philadelphia three times a year, seeking input from church leaders. Current participants are from California, Colorado, Maryland, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Washington. Through these forums, the Board of Pensions gathers feedback on proposed changes to the Benefits Plan and other programs, and exchanges ideas and listens to input. Executive presbyters gain an early understanding of critical issues before the Board of Pensions and engage in dialogue on the relevant topics.

Pastor Advisory Council

Twice a year, the Board of Pensions hosts the Pastor Advisory Council at its offices in Philadelphia. The Board of Pensions seeks input from this group of fourteen pastors, who serve congregations in California, Georgia, Kansas, Maryland, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin. Board staff members engage them in conversations about proposed changes to the Benefits Plan and other programs, and seek feedback about the needs and concerns of church workers. Our chairperson has been a member of this group and offered helpful information from that perspective.

Relationships with National Presbyterian Organizations

Through the regional representatives and other staff, the Board of Pensions provides liaisons or otherwise relates with the Administrative Personnel Association of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); Association of Presbyterian Church Educators; Association of Presbyterian Interim Ministry Specialists; Association of Presbyterian Tentmakers; Association of Retired Ministers, Their Spouses or Survivors; Presbyterian Women; National Black Presbyterian Caucus (NBPC); National Presbyterian Hispanic/Latino Caucus; National Korean Presbyterian Council; Presbyterian Association of Musicians; Presbyterian Church Business Administrators’ Association; Presbyterian Church Camp and Conference Association; Presbytery Pastoral Care Network; Presbyterian Association of Homes and Services for the Aging; and “Wee Kirk” network.

IV. Policies and Practices
Benefits and Pension Plan

The BOP serves ordained ministers and missionaries of the church, as well as many lay persons employed in various capacities in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) The Benefits Plan is funded by employing organizations and is designed to ensure portability of benefits for members who move from one call to another within the denomination. An underlying principle of the Plan is its “community nature.” The church as a community shares the cost of benefits for all Plan members and their families. Dues are assessed based on the member’s compensation, subject to minimum and maximum amounts that vary by type of benefit, generating dedicated funds from which the needs of all participants may be met. Because of the community nature, there is no direct correlation between contributions made on behalf of a member and the benefits that member will receive. The Pension Plan provides a monthly defined benefit pension payment to each participant for life and a monthly survivor’s pension payment to an eligible survivor, based on credits accrued by a member during his/her service with the church.

The Board of Directors

Management and control of the BOP is vested in the board of directors, members of which are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) and elected by the General Assembly. The principal committees of the board of directors are Assistance and Retirement Housing, Health Care, Investment, Audit, and Pensions. All of the committees have charters. The directors oversee the investment of Plan funds; the management and administration of pension, death, and disability, and medical benefits; and the operation of the board’s housing and assistance programs. They are responsible for oversight of the management of the BOP.

Process for Selection and Review of the President and Chief Executive Officer

The president is elected by the board of directors with confirmation by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The president is the chief executive officer of the corporation and reports to and is responsible to the board of directors for overall management of the corporation. The BOP has in place a process for the selection and review of its president and chief executive officer.

Robert W. Maggs Jr. plans to retire as president and chief executive in 2014 following confirmation of his successor. A search committee, drawn from the board of directors is working with the executive search firm Fraser Keating Associates LLC of New York City. The goal is to present a candidate to the directors for election in the spring of 2014. The president-elect will be presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014) for confirmation. One of the members of this review committee also served on the search committee.

Staff Resources

The Board of Pensions’ goal is to maintain an employee work culture where faith-based values are evident and incorporated into its day-to-day dealings with employees and plan members. In 2012, 81 percent of the 185 employees were exempt, and 19 percent were nonexempt. This reflects a continued transition to a more professional workforce to manage the more sophisticated demands of the Board of Pensions’ operation. Sixty-seven percent of the workforce is female. The workforce is 32 percent racial ethnic, reflecting a positive and consistent level since 2001 and remaining highly reflective of the BOP’s urban northeast location. Ninety-four percent of the nonexempt staff is female and 6 percent is male. More than half, 57 percent, of this group is racial ethnic. This distribution has remained relatively constant since 2000.

Investment Policy and Practice

An important part of BOP’s mission is to prudently manage the assets entrusted to it for the Benefits Plan and other programs. Although held in separate accounts, one portfolio, the Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio, is the primary investment fund for the assets of multiple plans and programs. A long-term investment strategy is required to ensure that benefits will be paid not only today and tomorrow but in decades to come. The Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio had a market value of approximately $7.5 billion on December 31, 2012.

Annual Audit and Compliance with External Regulatory and Accrediting Agencies

The Board of Pensions maintains a professional Internal Audit team and also employs an external audit firm. The team’s primary objective is to assist management and the Audit and Compliance Committee by providing assurance as to the adequacy of internal controls that safeguard the Board of Pensions’ assets, provide reliability of financial data and recordkeeping, and promote compliance with policies, procedures, laws, and regulations. The most recent audit was for the year 2012 completed by Deloitte & Touche LLP.

In concluding the previous review of the Board of Pensions (BOP) at the end of 2005, the General Assembly Committee on Review noted that it was “well satisfied that the BOP is fulfilling its mandate from the General Assembly, doing all that has been asked of it and more.” The review committee made a series of twenty-nine recommendations that were “intended to help strengthen the programs and services of the BOP”. The Board of Pensions leadership has attempted to respond to each of those in the intervening seven years. Our review committee reviewed all the recommendations and the Board of Pensions’ written responses outlined in BOP’s Self-Study. We believe the BOP has properly responded to each of the recommendations.

V. Benefit Plans Update

Demographic Study

A team of staff members conducted the 2010–11 Board of Pensions Demographic Study, the first completed since 1995. The goal of the study, the results of which were presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012), was to create a profile of PC(USA) church servants from multiple perspectives in an effort to gain an accurate picture of the changing face of ministry. The hope is that the findings will help in the analysis of pension and medical plan assumptions as well as in Benefits Plan design. The study threw into sharp focus two trend lines with significant ramifications for the Board of Pensions: a declining PC(USA) membership and an aging population, in both pew and pulpit. The research also showed that the number of small employers within the church community was large enough to be a concern for the vitality of the Benefits Plan. Finally, the study found that, overall, members are satisfied with the value of the plan.

Since the Last Agency Review

Significant events have affected the Benefits Plan since the Board of Pensions last underwent an agency review in 2005. The 219th General Assembly (2010) urged the Board of Pensions to extend benefits to the same-gender domestic partners of members, healthcare reform was signed into law, and volatility marked global financial markets. Rising healthcare costs, already a concern during the last review, are even more critical today. There have been increases in Medical Plan dues as well as in out-of-pocket member costs. The situation led the Healthcare Committee of the board of directors to consider a new medical dues model. The committee announced that it would modify its original consideration and focus on three options agreed upon at its March 2013 meeting. The Healthcare Committee expected to have a formal recommendation for a vote by the full board in June 2013. In the meantime, the board was listening to the concerns of members and churches and other employing organizations and receiving feedback on the three options. As a result the Healthcare Committee postponed providing recommendation to the board of directors for 2014 Medical Dues.

Qualified Domestic Partners

In July 2010, the General Assembly urged the Board of Pensions to amend the Benefits Plan to extend eligibility for spousal and dependent benefits under the plan to same-gender domestic partners of plan beneficiaries on the same basis as it does for opposite-gender married partners. A special committee of the board of directors studied various issues surrounding the matter for more than a year before recommending that directors approve the coverage, which they did on March 3, 2012, with new beneficiaries eligible for coverage under the Benefits Plan effective January 1, 2013.

The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act

The Affordable Care Act or healthcare reform, which President Obama signed into law in March 2010, became a driving force at the Board of Pensions. The BOP staff began studying the law’s requirements, how the requirements might affect the Medical Plan, and how to implement them. The U.S. Supreme Court upheld most key provisions of the law in June 2012. Healthcare reform poses a unique challenge for the board for the following reasons: Unlike most employers that subsidize medical benefits as a tax-free part of total pay, the board plan is structured to subsidize coverage as an integral part of the mission to provide for the health and welfare of those who are called as servants to the church. Any changes considered to the board-sponsored plan need to balance “mission” with escalating costs and long-term dues pressures. The coverage requirement for teaching elders mandated by the Book of Order and the other underlying principles that have guided the plan for decades make achieving premium tax credit eligibility for lower-paid workers difficult. Board communication with all constituent groups, most especially churches and members, needs to reflect an understanding of the potential for conflict between and among the unique interests of each.

The Board of Pensions implemented the design and administrative changes required by incremental healthcare reform regulations, including extending coverage to adult children up to age 26, eliminating lifetime maximums, and eliminating the preexisting condition exclusion for dependent children under age 19. The Board of Pensions changed the prescription drug part of the board’s Medicare Supplement Plan. After researching numerous options that would allow for the maximization of available federal dollars, the board opted to formally establish a Medicare Part D arrangement. The estimated savings of $3 million in the first year meant that the board was able to raise retirees’ dues at a much more modest rate than would have otherwise been necessary.

VI. Closing Remarks

Clearly the BOP possesses the expertise to accomplish the task that has been assigned to it. From President Rob Maggs to the individual representatives on the regional service teams, the Review Committee was impressed with the level of expertise and high commitment to service. This expertise and commitment also extends to the Board of Directors of the BOP. The people serving on the board of directors bring a depth of professional experience and expertise to oversee and set directions for the BOP. The Review Committee was well satisfied that the BOP has both the competence and resources necessary to fully meet the needs of Plan members and their families. The Review Committee was particularly impressed with the ability of the BOP staff and board of directors to articulate a sense of mission. In different ways, each person expressed a sense of being part of an important ministry to the servants of the church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Among the staff are several persons from other communions who share the same strong sense of mission.

We are navigating dramatic, complex, and rapid changes in our church and society in the areas of healthcare and pensions. Our own plan will necessarily face changes as a consequence of global, national, and denominational factors. We look to the BOP for the continued wise management and strong leadership that are hallmarks to its ministry to the PC(USA).

Item 12-B

[The assembly approved Item 12-B. See p. 18.]

General Assembly Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation

The Agency Review Committee on the Presbyterian Foundation brings no recommendations for the 221st General Assembly (2014).

A. Introduction

Background: The General Assembly Committee on Review (“Committee” hereafter) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (“Foundation” hereafter) is pleased to present the 221st General Assembly (2014) a written review of the Foundation.

The Foundation, as one of the six agencies of the General Assembly, is charged by the General Assembly with the responsibility and accountability for raising, stewarding, and distributing funds to support the mission and ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [PC(USA)]. The Foundation, founded in 1799, serves as the fiduciary corporation for the General Assembly, assists all Presbyterians to reach their missional goals through a variety of giving options. In addition to raising money for mission, another of the Foundation’s primary and continuing tasks is to invest and safeguard the assets entrusted to it and to grow them in order to support and enhance the mission of the church. The Foundation works to strengthen congregations, councils, agencies and other entities to ensure that they have resources for mission today, tomorrow, and into the future, and they do this in part by developing gifts and managing funds on their behalf.

The Foundation is the PC(USA)’s national entity specifically called to offer charitable expertise and services that unite and empower Presbyterians and the ministries about which they are passionate. With assets of more than $1.6 billion, the Foundation is one of the largest religious foundations in the United States. Mission programs benefiting from Foundation-held endowments and investments range from scholarships for seminary students to outreach in urban areas to mission fields around the world. In 2013, the Foundation received gifts and deposits of $30 million and in 2012 the Foundation received $25.4 million. The Foundation distributed funds in support of various mission causes in the amount of $63.4 million during 2013, and in 2012 the Foundation distributed $55.9 million.

In 2010 a new vision and strategic plan was adopted by the board of trustees and the Foundation staff. More information about the new innovative tools, services, giving options, and the changed structure of the Foundation’s investment options and management are addressed in Section C. Investment Management, Section D. Foundation Services, and Section E. New Foundation Services.

Foundation Review Process: This review is part of an evaluation process of the agencies related to the General Assembly of the PC(USA) established by the 213th General Assembly (2001). The purpose of the review process is “to evaluate the relationship of their individual [agency] ministry with the mission of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 67, Standing Rule E.10.—Agency Review [new Standing Rule M.4.a.]). The instructions to the Committee on Review were that the committee must conduct the process according to predetermined standards and present a written report to the next General Assembly (Manual of the General Assembly, pp. 83–84).

Purpose of the Review of General Assembly Agencies: The PC(USA) is committed to the understanding that the unity of the Church is a gift of its Lord and finds expression in its faithfulness to the mission to which Christ call it (F-1.030 2a). The basic principles of Presbyterian polity include the responsibility of a higher council to review those ministries for which it is accountable (F-3.0206). The purpose of the review process is to provide an equitable evaluation of the ministry of the agencies of the General Assembly (GA). The review will focus on the quality of the relationship of the agencies’ ministry with the mission of the whole PC(USA), the agencies’ collaborative efforts with other agencies, and the quality of the agencies’ program based on the standards for review.
Two agencies of the General Assembly are reviewed following each meeting of the General Assembly, rotating until all agencies have been reviewed during a six-year time period. Each review process is initiated when a Committee on Review (“committee”) is elected by a General Assembly to participate with a specific agency in a study process, the scope of which is limited to helping the assembly and its agency see that the mission of the church is being fulfilled according to certain standards. (See, Manual of the General Assembly, pp. 83–84.) It is not the intent of the review process to find fault, but rather to evaluate, offer suggestions to strengthen the agency, as well as to offer recommendations for improvement. The agency being reviewed prepares a self-study that becomes part of the materials used by the committee to support the research and preparation of their report to the General Assembly held following their election.

It is important to note that the scope of the review is also limited by the amount of time and resources allocated for the review process. Initially, the eleven members of this committee spent the better part of three days together in October 2012 to be trained for their task by Tom Hay, director of operations for the Office of the General Assembly, who presented a short briefing on the review process and provided the Foundation’s self-study as well as other resources to the committee to introduce information about the Foundation, answer questions, and guide the committee through preparation for the review.

The committee also arranged for the Office of the General Assembly’s (“OGA”) Research Services Office to conduct a survey, based upon input from the committee and following the format and content of the review completed by the previous committee which was subsequently presented to the 217th General Assembly (2006). By keeping similar format and content between the previous and current surveys, changes of responses over time could be compared and included in the summary analyses of the survey responses. The survey was sent to congregations, presbyteries, synods, donors, beneficiaries, life income recipients, and Foundation and other General Assembly agency leaders. The survey was also to be sent to the New Covenant Funds shareholders, however, since the New Covenant Funds were outsourced in 2012 to an investment advisory company (see Section C), it was not possible to survey the shareholders. In August 2013, the committee met for three days to conduct interviews with Foundation staff and board members, as well as leadership and staff from other GA agencies. The results of the survey were reviewed at this same time. (See summary survey findings in Section H; also detailed survey resulted in Appendix C). The committee held a conference call in January 2014 to finalize the written report, following which the report was submitted to the Office of the General Assembly (OGA). The OGA forwarded a copy of the report to the Foundation for their comments prior to presentation of the completed report at the 221st General Assembly (2014).

The committee gathered information for the report during interviews with staff of several other agencies of the General Assembly and organizations within those agencies (See Appendix A for a list of those interviewed). The committee is grateful to the Foundation, New Covenant Trust Company (NCTC), Foundation board members, and the Office of the General Assembly for their helpfulness and cooperation in this process.

The following report is the result of the work of the members of the committee who possessed skills from all facets of church and society. They were versed in matters related to PC(USA) theology, polity, and ethos, as well as investment industry and business communities. The committee notes that it is responsible for the contents of this report and that any errors or omissions are those of the committee and its’ understanding of the information and materials provided to it. The committee relied on the common bond of the mission of the church and the common desire to be faithful to Jesus Christ to complete its task.

B. Collaboration with Other Agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The overwhelming message heard by the Review Committee is that under the Foundation’s current executive leadership the relationships, communication, and collaborative work between the Foundation and the other Presbyterian agencies have improved and grown in recent years. Representatives from the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), Office of the General Assembly (OGA), Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program (PILP), as well as the Presbyterian Historical Society all noted that interaction and collaboration between the Foundation and their agency have increased as a result of greater communication and cooperation between the agencies. The improved relationship with PMA is perhaps the most visible example of reconciliation between the Foundation and its ministry partners. In the words of one Foundation leader, “under Foundation President Tom Taylor’s leadership, the Foundation wants to be helpful with no other goal than being helpful.”

One important example of improved cooperation is the Foundation’s approach to finding ways to leverage restricted and underutilized funds to fit current needs. Agencies feel that there is better transparency on the use of funds invested with the Foundation and the Foundation is viewed as a partner in ensuring that the PC(USA) is a faithful steward of its funds and the support of mission in the church.

Improved collaboration of field staff and programs for interaction and more awareness about the field staff of both the Foundation and the PMA was mentioned by several interviewees. There is shared management of the Board of Pensions (BOP) and Foundation field staff and information technology (IT) resources along with shared investment staff. The One Church, One Field, One Staff initiative started a few years ago is improving coordination of field staff through shared activities, increased collaboration and communication. Regular meetings held by senior management in a program called “Chairs and Chiefs” and “Chief Operating Officers Table” bring together the leadership of the six agencies to work on key initiatives and joint endeavors.
C. Investment Management

The Foundation encompasses three types of investment funds: the Foundation Endowment Fund, New Covenant Trust Company (NCTC), N. A., and New Covenant Funds (NCF). The New Covenant Trust Company, N. A., started in 1998, is a federally chartered, limited-purpose bank, which has trust powers and can serve as a corporate trustee in all fifty states. This subsidiary provides investment advisory services and trust services for individuals, churches, endowments, and charitable organizations. New Covenant Funds (NCF), an open-ended investment family of four mutual funds, was formed in 1999 with moneys from the Foundation’s common trust funds.

The Foundation assets total more than $1.6 billion under management as of December 31, 2013. The largest part of the Endowment Fund (the “Permanent Funds”) is $705 million and the funds held for the benefit of others are $344 million. The largest beneficiary of funds held at the Foundation is the Presbyterian Mission Agency, which includes, among numerous mission funds, two large mission projects, the Jarvie Fund that focuses on constituents in the New York area and the Jinishian Fund that focuses on constituents in the Armenian community. The four mutual funds that comprise the New Covenant Funds and the New Covenant Money Market fund have collective assets of $539 million; the New Covenant Trust Company manages assets totaling $67 million. These assets encompass more than twenty thousand accounts of many different types, from various types of individual trusts and annuities to funds held for other agencies, the largest being the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) for the benefit of mission work of that agency.

The Foundation has heard from donors and beneficiaries who expressed a desire for better opportunities for improved investment performance. Out of the strategic plan adopted by the board of trustees in 2010, it was determined that the Foundation’s investors and shareholders would be best served by a professional asset management company. In 2012, after a multyear investigation and vetting process, the Foundation forged partnerships with Cambridge Advisors (CA) to manage investments of Foundation assets and separately with SEI Investment Management (SEI) to manage New Covenant Funds. Outsourcing of investment management was a significant change in Foundation operations. The Foundation viewed this move as a strategy that allowed the Foundation to focus on its core mission, which is to serve the church. The Foundation included the following comments in their Oct. 2012 Self-Study report:

New partners were identified with Cambridge Associates as the investment advisor to the Foundation fiduciary assets and SEI as the investment advisor to the Foundation sponsored mutual funds, New Covenant Funds. Both firms are experts in their respective areas with Cambridge Associates serving Foundation and Endowment organizations and SEI serving institutional and mutual fund clients. In addition to their investment expertise in their respective field, both offer expertise in mission responsible investing. Due to their scale, both firms have the ability to direct investment managers and funds to comply with the MRTI policies of the church. The Foundation has been and remains committed to upholding the work of MRTI as directed by the General Assembly.

The change in operations transferred certain roles and responsibilities from the Foundation to Cambridge and SEI. As a result, several positions were eliminated or consolidated at the Foundation. Additionally, the appointment of SEI changed the mutual fund governance responsibilities for the Foundation. The net economic effect of these changes was a reduction in net operating expense of roughly $1 million for the Foundation. While the Foundation retains oversight responsibility for the mutual funds and trust fund investments and provides CA and SEI with investment guidelines, the staff time devoted to Securities Exchange Commission (SEC) or Financial Industry Regulatory Agency (FINRA) regulatory activities has been greatly reduced as well as decreased risk of exposure to potentially damaging liability. The change to external management of funds allowed more focus on the Foundation’s primary mission to provide financial expertise to raise funds for ministry and mission.

The Foundation no longer has unilateral decision making ability on fund investments or fund managers. Individual investment holdings and asset managers are now determined by Cambridge and SEI in accordance with investment objectives set by the Foundation. As noted above, the Foundation remains committed to MRTI and Cambridge and SEI have strong track records in that area and both companies include a commitment to MRTI in their respective funds’ prospectus.

The Foundation received criticism in the past for investment performance that trailed certain benchmarks. While it is too soon to reach any conclusion about the long-term performance that CA and SEI produce, the investment performance rationale outlined by the Foundation for choosing investment advisory firms, CA and SEI, seems solid. Initial returns indicate reasonable performance. Investment strategy includes maximum return at an appropriate level of risk; multiple approaches to risk management strategies have been implemented including diversified asset structure, tactical asset allocation, and rebalancing.

The committee heard questions from various ministry partners regarding fees charged by the Foundation for both trust and investment management. The committee felt that the Foundation services are a good value for the fees charged. The Foundation currently offers complete transparency of fees, but perhaps a better strategy for communicating those fees and use of fees would further strengthen ties to all ministry partners and improve investor understanding of the value of the Foundation services provided through those fees.

The committee noted that the service fees charged by the Foundation are used to support the Foundation and are regenerated for mission. Fees charged by the Foundation go directly to pay for the raising of more funds for the mission of the church, which is carried out through local congregations, mid councils, national and international mission efforts, seminaries, camps and conference centers, and other Presbyterian mission endeavors. In the case of for-profit financial services providers, fees charged go to pay either dividends to stockholders or profits to private investors or financial managers, differing from the Foundation’s focus, which is on mission support. Christian benevolence is an opportunity to witness to others.

D. Foundation Services

The Foundation has three basic revenue-generating service areas, as follows:

1. Endowment management
2. Trust company services
3. Mutual funds
In preparation for their work, most committee members did not see on the Foundation Web site that the Foundation services can be split into these clear categories. The “New Covenant” branding of the Trust Company and the Mutual Funds contributed to the lack of clarity about the investment services of the Foundation.

The Review Committee was impressed with the services that the Foundation can provide and has heard from several constituents about the ease of engaging trust services for the benefit of mid councils and other investors. The committee learned that NCTC is more accessible than most trust companies. The church is getting a great resource at a very reasonable cost and the committee feels this message needs to be communicated more effectively throughout the church, in particular to local congregations.

One of the distinctive features of the Foundation is that it reinvests its fees to further the mission of the church and follows investment strategies that accord with PC(USA) values. Such reinvestment allows the Foundation to fund new services that help churches stay relevant, improve financial performance, and promote mission. Three of the many new services are summarized in Section E of this report.

One of the Foundation’s greatest assets is its very competent staff. In 2010, a new president was confirmed by the General Assembly and additional management changes were made in subsequent months that, in concert as the leadership of the Foundation planned and implemented many changes to the benefit of the agencies of the General Assembly, donors, and local congregations, and councils. During 2009, the board of directors developed a 5-Year Strategic Plan that included outsourcing of investment advisory services; implementation began in 2010 and was completed in 2012. The Foundation added new services in response to conversations and input from donors. More information about the Foundation’s Strategic Plan can be found in Appendix B. The importance of having a leader deeply committed and intimately connected to the purpose and witness of the PC(USA) is illustrated by Foundation president, Tom Taylor, who the committee heard is characterized as a face of “church heart and business head” for the Foundation and through his management team and with the board of directors, has inspired and implemented many new dimensions for the Foundation.

E. New Foundation Services

The Foundation has developed several new services for churches and individuals. This section of the report briefly summarizes the key new services.

1. Financial Health Assessment for Churches

This online tool (available at http://assessment.presbyterianFoundation.org) asks the user congregation a short series of questions and incorporates the answers with previously published data about a congregation and a group of similarly situated congregations. The assessment is free and confidential.

The tool provides the user congregation with a report noting both successes and areas for improvement, along with links to helpful resources. Customized recommendations of best practices and other identified opportunities intend to help congregations maximize giving through tithes, offerings, and other means of support for mission and ministry.

2. Project Regeneration

Project Regeneration is a program whereby the Foundation helps congregations transform financially burdensome church buildings into new opportunities for ministry. This Foundation service recognizes that many small congregations are wrestling with the upkeep of a building that has strong emotional value but is creating a financial drain. Project Regeneration also recognizes that many congregations need help responding to changing demographics and are struggling to stay relevant. Examples of the type of work that is done under Project Regeneration are:

- Congregation opted for new ministry for homeless using their church property.
- Congregation decided to allocate a percentage of its resources to join a “parallel start” for a Hispanic new church development.
- Congregation decided to use its building to host neighborhood programs.

3. Presbyterian Mission Exchange

This online service intends to connect donors with mission projects. Donors can connect with ministries that they wish to support, such as a local congregation, the Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, or Wycliffe Bible Translators. Churches can use the tool to develop a culture of generosity within their congregation or enhance an existing stewardship program.

The Mission Exchange offers online giving features plus access to capital campaign, legacy or planned giving, endowment development, and many other stewardship resources. The Foundation provides churches with a suite of tools to help manage the gifts made by members, choose among different investment portfolios, make withdrawals at any time, and enjoy the convenience of online account access. Churches can leverage the Mission Exchange to share specific mission programs of the congregation, the local community and even programs that meet global needs. The Foundation believes that communicating the impact of gifts to a mission program helps keep church members connected and engaged.

F. Donor Attitudes

The Foundation is adapting to a major paradigm shift in philanthropy and mission giving by changing the focus to mission from ministries. The Foundation has found that today’s donor seems to require a more “direct line of sight” to the missions they support. Donors seem less likely to support general appeals for ministry and are more likely to support specific causes. Large unrestricted gifts are not as common today as they were in prior decades. The Review Committee notes that the Presbyterian Mission Exchange is an example of how the Foundation is adapting to this emerging paradigm. Donors can contribute directly online via the Mission Exchange website.

The shift in donor attitudes has created some tension for those in the PC(USA) accustomed to a more traditional, unrestricted donor model but the Foundation is working hard to be responsive to today’s donor. One challenge is managing individual donor desires without creating too many small projects.

G. Cultural Proficiency

The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved A Review of Efforts Regarding Cultural Proficiency and Creating a Climate for Change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with a recommendation for each of the six agencies of the General Assembly to work with the associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment in developing its six-year plan to help implement a cultural proficiency policy at all levels and to develop training and cultural-sensitive programs. The Foundation has developed such a plan that includes: a commitment to Book of Order, F-1.0403; a stated policy for increasing diversity, measurable targets and goals, production of biennial reports.

The Foundation’s policy states that it is committed to the continual review of its policies, procedures, and practices to address issues of inclusiveness in an effort to fully endorse the concepts and principles of cultural diversity. Between 2005 and 2013, the Foundation experienced significant reductions in overall staff (105 employees to 56); however, racial ethnic (increased from 21 percent to 25 percent) and female (increased from 62 percent to 67.9 percent) representation increased. The area of challenge remains in the job category of senior management where there is currently no racial ethnic representation. For the Cultural Proficiency Plan Period 2013 through 2018, the Foundation expects to meet and/or exceed the goals set by the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action.

Goals for the first two-year phase included:

- Staff to be proactive in recruitment, promotion, and employee retention strategies to achieve affirmative action employment goals at all levels of the organization with an emphasis on senior management. Likewise the board committee charged with selecting new trustees also set goals for representation—40 percent female and 20 percent racial ethnic workforce representation at all EEO levels.
- Policy Development and Implementation will address cultural proficiency and produce reports for General Assembly.
- Training will encompass anti-harassment, antiracism, and cultural proficiency and inclusiveness for both current staff and new hires.
- Other areas of goal setting include: supplier diversity, organizational evaluations, and communications.

H. Constituent Surveys—Highlights

During the first half of 2013, Research Services was engaged to conduct a review of the Foundation’s church relations, policies, and effectiveness by surveying PC(USA) constituent groups. The Review Committee spent a great deal of time organizing and structuring the survey, which was an expense to the review process. The committee thanks Jack Marcum Jr., Ph.D., coordinator, Research Services at PMA, who orchestrated the resources to complete and analyze the surveys and who was critical to the survey process of the committee’s work.
Six constituent groups were surveyed and are listed in the table below that shows the response rates to the two most recent surveys. To the Review Committee’s knowledge, there were no similar Foundation surveys done in the intervening years. Absent from the survey group in 2013 are New Covenant Funds (NCF) shareholders. Since Foundation investment management was outsourced to SEI it is no longer feasible to survey NCF shareholders as these mutual funds are now open to investors other than only PC(USA) investors. In addition, Cambridge and SEI have oversight by regulatory agencies, such as FINRA, that would need to have oversight of the survey process and selection of shareholder participants. SEI now has the responsibility and decision-making ability about communication and contact with shareholders through the survey process. SEI effectively blocked any survey of NCF shareholders stating that FINRA and other securities regulators would need to approve this survey process, which would have delayed the survey process and added considerable expense for legal services in order to gain approval to contact NCF shareholders. The committee decided not to pursue a survey of NCF shareholders due to the negative impact of delay and added expense for such solicitation of feedback for the select groups within the shareholders of the funds.

The surveys asked respondents to comment on their familiarity with the Foundation’s mission, services and effectiveness. Interesting data points from the surveys include:

- The response rate decreased materially from 2004 to 2013 for presbytery & synod executives, GA agency leaders and donors. Jack Marcum felt this decrease could be due to the number of different times these constituencies are surveyed. The committee notes that if response rates continue to decrease, the value of the survey may become compromised and be less useful.
- The vast majority of survey respondents listed the following three items as the Foundation’s greatest strengths.
  - Foundation’s reputation.
  - Foundation’s support of the mission of the church.
  - Foundation’s integrity, honesty, and ethics.
- There were eighty-two presbyteries or synods that reported assets invested with the Foundation (endowment, trust company, or mutual funds) in 2004. In the 2013 survey that number decreased to 40 (part of the decrease must be due to a smaller number of presbytery or synod respondents but the committee does not have that data). When asked why the presbytery or synod did not have money with the Foundation in 2013, twelve out of twenty respondents to the question indicated they could get better investment income elsewhere. The committee notes that the Foundation has taken steps to improve investment performance and improved performance that will gradually attract investors back to the Foundation as well provide more information on the use of funds for mission support.
- Respondents were asked to assess the Foundation’s effectiveness in providing various services (e.g., asset management, online giving, socially responsible mutual funds, charitable trusts, etc. The respondents rated the effectiveness by choosing among the following answers:
  - Very effective
  - Effective
  - Somewhat effective
  - Not very effective
  - Not at all effective
  - Don’t know

Respondents were also asked to assess how helpful the same Foundation services would be.

Interestingly, “Don’t know” was often one of the highest percentage answers for effectiveness—even among the presbytery & synod executive and GA agency leader respondents. At the same time, the vast majority of respondents said that the services would be Very Helpful, Helpful, or Somewhat Helpful. This may indicate a communication issue. Respondents have said that various Foundation services could be helpful yet many do not know if the Foundation services are effective.
• When asked to rate the importance of the Foundation’s work to the PC(USA), the vast majority of the respondents replied Very important, Important or Somewhat important. Interestingly, 27 percent of the 246 congregations that responded had no opinion on this question. No other respondent group had such a high percentage of respondents choose this answer. As with the prior bullet, this may indicate a communication challenge in that many congregations may not know about the work of the Foundation. Additional detail on survey highlights is located in Appendix C.

I. Foundation Response to Prior Agency Review Recommendations

[The following text has been paraphrased from the Foundation’s 2012 Self-Study Report]

The Foundation has undergone numerous changes since the last agency review in late 2004 and 2005. The board has turned over, the Foundation and its subsidiary have new CEOs, a majority of the senior management team has changed, and a new strategic plan is in the process of implementation. Some of the key recommendations and responses are listed below.

1. 2004 Recommendation: It is important that the Foundation track progress of the development effort on a monthly or quarterly basis and provide appropriate training and ongoing support for the field staff. The goals and objectives by which the work of the field staff is measured should be refined in light of experience on a regular basis. It would be helpful for the Foundation to consider appropriate strategies by which to reward excellent performance by members of the development staff (e.g. merit raises, other benefits, as funds become available).

   Response: The Foundation restructured its development function into three teams, Ministry Relations, Advisors, and Project Regeneration. These teams conduct quarterly meetings that include training and review of metrics. Metrics have been fine-tuned recently and the teams have received training. In addition, tools have been implemented to track progress against the metrics.

   The Foundation performs salary surveys that are conducted by external parties. The Foundation ensures that ministry relations officers, advisors, and project regeneration staff are compensated in accordance with market salaries and benefits. The Foundation does have a performance management and appraisal process in place. Each person is provided with a mid-year review and annually they receive a formal performance appraisal. Employees are awarded merit increases based on performance against agreed upon metrics.

2. 2004 Recommendation: Development officers should be encouraged to meet with presbytery and synod leaders and make appearances at meetings of presbyteries and other functions as time and funding allows. The committee believes that such a commitment will lead to the building of trust and will result in more opportunities to build relationships with those who might want to use the services of the Foundation.

   Response: The Foundation’s Ministry Relations Officers focus on churchwide relationships. In addition, the Foundation has entered into a partnership with the Board of Pensions where the Board of Pensions regional representatives and the Foundation Ministry Relations officers work together to represent both agencies at mid council meetings. This allows for better coverage and representation to create awareness of how the Foundation can serve the church.

3. 2004 Recommendation: It is important that the Foundation find a senior vice president for marketing who will inspire and lead the marketing staff to provide fresh and effective materials, including the Foundation’s commitment to Mission Responsibility Through Investment or Socially Responsible Investment. The marketing materials of the Foundation should make it clear that MRTI is one of the distinctive commitments that separates the Foundation from standard investment firms.

   Response: The Foundation has employed several marketing directors since the last agency review report. Currently Rob Bullock leads the Foundation’s marketing and communications function. Rob brings a wealth of experience in serving the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Rob has topnotch marketing and communications expertise and leadership. The Foundation believes that with Rob’s leadership the Foundation has more than accomplished the intent of the agency review committee’s recommendation.

4. 2004 Recommendation: Trustees and officers must commit to improved long-term investment performance. The Foundation should consider the use of a consultant to help evaluate its investment strategy. In addition, the Foundation’s leaders should commit to a goal of having the Foundation be a leader among socially responsible funds in terms of investment return every year from 2005 onward.

   Response: The Foundation has made major changes in the structure of its investment function. The Foundation elected to outsource investment management to world-class firms that the Foundation believes provide the best opportunity for benchmark exceeding performance. The complexity and volatility of the financial markets demand that competent investment professionals monitor and have the authority to take action when necessary within the policies set by the Foundation board. The Foundation believes it has engaged firms that have more breadth and depth of expertise than could be hired. In addition, the investment firms have significant influence in the investment industry that allows the Foundation to have more impact in the area of socially responsible investing.
5. 2004 Recommendation: Representatives of the Foundation should meet periodically with persons with similar responsibilities from the Board of Pensions in order to compare notes on investment strategies and returns.

Response: The Foundation and Board of Pensions have collaborated on numerous initiatives over the last several years, including investments. The Foundation has always been very appreciative of the Board of Pensions and the graciousness in which they share their time and expertise with the Foundation. The Board of Pensions was extremely helpful and responsive as the Foundation studied and prepared recommendations for the Foundation’s investment function. Foundation management continues to have productive and ongoing discussions with the Board of Pensions.

J. Recommendations to the Foundation

The committee was impressed by the quality, commitment, and enthusiasm of the Foundation’s senior managers and its board members. All expressed an understanding that the work of the Foundation is to be a good steward of the resources of PC(USA) and to encourage potential donors and investors to support the mission of PC(USA). The committee was also impressed with by the number of interviewees who praised the improved relationships the Foundation has with other agencies and the PC(USA) at large. Based on its work, the Review Committee respectfully offers the following recommendations:

1. We recommend that the roles of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and Foundation be clarified as related to raising funds for mission, and to stewardship of those mission funds once raised. The Presbyterian Mission Exchange is an excellent way to use technology to connect today’s donor to mission projects but it can lead to confusion between the roles of the PMA and Foundation.

2. We recommend the Foundation take steps to communicate the relationship of its three main investment services (endowments, trust company, and mutual funds) and reflect this better on the website. As mentioned in the text above, the “New Covenant” label for the trust company and the mutual funds can lead to confusion.

3. We recommend expanding collaboration of field staff beyond the Foundation and Board of Pensions.

4. We recommend that the Foundation expand its efforts to communicate the value of the Foundation’s services, and that the fees charged by the Foundation for its services represent a unique value to PC(USA) constituents, especially in light of the reinvestment of fees to further the mission of the church.

5. We encourage the Foundation to review its board structure to ensure that it has the proper competencies to fulfill its mandate and to encourage greater collaborating with the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) as they seek to fill these vacancies in service to the whole church. In addition, we encourage the Foundation and the GANC to work diligently with each other to ensure balance of the competency, performance and representation requirements in recruiting and nominating board members.

K. Concluding Comments

We encourage all Presbyterian to seriously consider the Presbyterian Foundation for investment services, financial advice, endowments, and assistance in growing a culture of generosity with the church, and to explore and utilize the newly developed services available to all organizations and individuals in the church.

The following persons were elected by commissioners of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to serve as the General Assembly Committee on Review: Donna Misterly, chair; Clemente H. “Andy” Anzaldua; the Reverend David Bennett; Paul Costel; Anne Drennan; Gordon Enderle; Alan Ford; the Reverend Gary Kidwell (president of the Christian Church Foundation); the Reverend Nancy Muth; the Reverend Irene Pak; and James Tse. Several committee members were able to participate in limited parts of the committee’s work due to illness and other time conflicts.

The members of the committee are grateful to all of the Foundation staff, as well as members of the PMA, OGA, PILP, Presbyterian Publishing Company (PPC), BOP, and the Presbyterian Historical Society for their willingness to meet with the committee, answer all the questions asked, and to provide all the materials that were requested. Their cooperation enabled the committee to perform its work in a thorough and efficient manner.

The committee’s task would have been impossible without the excellent support of Gradye Parsons, Thomas Hay, Kay Moore, and Jack Marcum of the Office of the General Assembly, and Rob Bullock and Anita Clemons of the Foundation.

COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) FOUNDATION

Foundation Strategic Plan
2010–2015
Highlights through 2012

A. Board of Trustees Oversight & Direction

The board of trustees of the Foundation commenced a strategic planning process at its June 2009 board meeting. The board began with discerning and agreeing to the process it would follow. The process included the board developing a five-year vision for the Foundation and turning that vision over to management to develop the plan to achieve the vision. The board appointed an ad hoc committee that consisted of board members and staff to develop the vision. The vision was approved by the board at the February 2010 meeting. The vision is as follows:

Offering gratitude to God and depending on the guidance of the Holy Spirit, the Trustees and staff of the Foundation seek to be faithful to the call of Christ. The vision of the Foundation is to further Christ’s mission through the PC(USA) by:

1. Demonstrating excellence in gathering, administering, responsibly investing, and distributing assets according to our fiduciary call,
2. Partnering in trusted and helpful relationships that advance our stewardship responsibility both within the PC(USA) and beyond,
3. Connecting donors to beneficiaries as a means to increase resources to support Christ’s mission, and
(4) Maintaining a responsible and respectful work environment for our staff and partners while operating a financially sustainable model.

The board directed staff to develop a strategic plan based on this vision and present an update at its June 2010 board meeting and a draft plan at the October 2010 board meeting.

B. Strategic Plan Process

The Foundation staff began drafting the strategic plan in the spring of 2010. During a planning session an external consultant that works extensively with religious and community foundations presented trends in philanthropy, donor preferences and best practices. The senior staff utilized the following process to develop the strategic plan.

1. PEST Analysis:
   a. Political and Legal
   b. Economic and Environmental / Field Work
   c. Sociocultural and Geographic
   d. Technological

2. SWOT Analysis
   a. Strengths
   b. Weaknesses
   c. Opportunities
   d. Threats

C. Establishing Goals

Conclusions from the environmental scan exercises, the PEST and the SWOT, were used to form the process of determining what activities need to take place to reach the vision. Additionally, senior staff contacted and had sessions with numerous nonprofit consultants and religious and community foundations. All of this information assisted in the establishment of goals. Goals were discussed and prioritized based on impact, work plans, budgets, and likelihood of success. After prioritizing the goals, senior staff identified eight key initiatives. The initiatives are discussed in more detail below.

D. Strategic Plan Accomplishments

Accomplishments for each initiative to date are listed below

1.0 Capture the voice of our constituency

   Focus on this initiative has been delayed until other initiatives were complete. At this point, the Foundation is ready to begin working on this initiative. The staff has had in-depth discussions on capturing the voice of our constituency and recognizes that this is not done effectively by distributing periodic surveys. The staff is committed to instilling this in the culture of the organization where the voice of our constituencies is constantly sought and received.

2.0 Clarify our identity

   Senior staff spent considerable time developing the Foundation’s value proposition which serves as our identity. The identity is:

   The Presbyterian Foundation is the PC(USA)’s national entity specifically called to offer charitable expertise and services that unite and empower Presbyterians and the ministries about which they are passionate. The Foundation does so in a trustworthy, clear, and accessible manner that reflects the PC(USA)’s faith-based values.

3.0 Connect potential donors to mission

   This area has received tremendous focus. Numerous external studies, discussions with consultants and informal discussions with donors indicate that donors want transparency with how their gift is used, flexibility and control, and donors want to be able to communicate or be involved with the charitable beneficiary. After numerous discussions, the Foundation decided to invest in technology that will allow for transparency and interaction between the donor and the charitable beneficiary. The Foundation launched a new website in the spring of 2012 called the Presbyterian Mission Exchange. While all of the capabilities are not functional yet, this website begins to offer donors and beneficiaries the capabilities noted above.

   The Foundation has developed or enhanced several services for donors and charitable beneficiaries. With donor preferences changing the Foundation is offering “The Creative Gift Fund.” The Creative Gift Fund is a donor-advised fund that meets the needs of today’s donors. The creative gift fund allows donors to grant principal and/or income and to grant monies to a variety of charitable beneficiaries giving donors the ultimate flexibility and control over their gift. The Foundation has enhanced its ability to accept gifts that are funded with illiquid assets. More and more donors are recognizing the most efficient way to give is making a gift with an asset other than cash. The Foundation has created a network of partners that can assist in liquidating assets and turning those assets into dollars for mission.

   Finally, the Foundation has created a program to assist congregations that are assessing their viability or that have decided to cease doing ministry in their current form. This program is called Project Regeneration. The Foundation is actively working with over two dozen congregations that are prayerfully discerning their future ministry. To date the Foundation is managing over $4 million in assets from this program.

4.0 Define our investment strategy

This initiative is complete. The Foundation board and staff began to study the investment strategy, function, and structure in 2010. This culminated with the decision to outsource the Foundation’s investment functions. New partners were identified with Cambridge Associates as the investment advisor to the Foundation fiduciary assets and SEI as the investment advisor to the Foundation sponsored mutual funds, New Covenant Funds. Both firms are experts in their respective areas with Cambridge Associates serving Foundation and Endowment organizations and SEI serving institutional and mutual fund clients. In addition to their investment expertise in their respective field, both offer expertise in mission responsible investing. Due to their scale, both firms have the ability to direct investment managers and funds to comply with the MRTI policies of the church. The Foundation has been and remains committed to upholding the work of MRTI as directed by the General Assembly.

5.0 Develop an asset gathering system

Early on, the Foundation identified its passion for healthy and vibrant ministries. The Foundation understands its call is to raise, manage, and distribute money for these ministries. Within this context an asset gathering system needed to be implemented that assisted ministries with gathering, managing and distributing assets for their use, not the Foundation’s use. The Foundation decided to structure its asset gathering system for ministries into three different teams.

The first team is the ministry relations team. This team is focused on cultivating and nurturing relationships with congregations, mid councils, institutions, and agencies of the church. With these relationships the ministry relations team will present resources and assist these ministries with raising funds for their benefit.

The second team is the advisor team. As noted above donor preferences have changed and the manner in which donors are making gifts have changed. Gifts and financial services have become much more complex. With this in mind the Foundation has constituted a team of experts in the areas of financial planning, charitable gift planning, estate planning, and investment management. The advisor team is available to any ministry or donor seeking assistance with any of these technical areas.

6.0 Charitable Gift Annuities

Charitable gift annuities are contracts that the Foundation enters into with a donor. The contract calls for the Foundation to pay a fixed annuity to the annuitant for their life. Any residuum from the contract is paid to the charitable beneficiary named in the contract. Over the years, certain contracts have had funding issues due to mortality risk and investment risk. The Foundation has been monitoring its gift annuity program for years to ensure it can meet its commitment to annuitants. Over the past several years, the Foundation has engaged an actuarial firm that specializes in assessing charitable gift annuity programs and developing plans to ensure the pools are funded properly. The Foundation has carried out the plans and is in compliance with all regulatory requirements.

7.0 Simplify systems, workflow and workload

The Foundation has made tremendous progress in this area. The broker dealer formerly owned by the Foundation’s subsidiary has been dissolved and has withdrawn its registration. This eliminated four board meetings per year and reduces regulatory filings and fees. The Foundation’s subsidiary is no longer the investment advisor to the Foundation’s sponsored mutual funds, New Covenant Funds. This eliminated the need for staff to attend New Covenant Funds board meetings and eliminates the regulatory filings and fees associated with operating a registered investment advisor. These actions essentially cut staff board time in half and significantly reduce risk and liability as the Foundation will no longer be subject to SEC and FINRA regulations and exams.

Current initiatives in this area include several systems conversions and some departmental restructuring. The systems conversions focus on moving to industry standard software that is hosted externally. This reduces or eliminates software development responsibilities and the need for the Foundation to maintain hardware, perform back-ups, and ensure disaster recovery as these are the responsibility of the hosting site. Department restructures involve changing or enhancing processes to accommodate the new services offered by the Foundation.

The Foundation has developed a disciplined approach to eliminate unnecessary activities and it is internally known as the Culture of Excellence. It is based on business process management methodologies. The Culture of Excellence program also implements tools and metrics to monitor processes to provide focus for continuous improvement.

8.0 Define better ways to contact and communicate with key constituents

The Foundation has just started the items related in this initiative. These are focus areas for 2012 and will be led by our Marketing department. The Foundation has committed the requisite resources to accomplish this initiative.

COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) FOUNDATION
Presbyterian Foundation Survey
Highlights

In the late spring and summer of 2013, PC(USA) Research Services surveyed representatives of six constituencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) about the Presbyterian Foundation, one of six agencies of the General Assembly. These surveys were developed in consultation with, and at the request of, the General Assembly Committee on Review of the Presbyterian Foundation, which is examining the Foundation as part of a periodic General Assembly-mandated review. A similar review was undertaken in 2004–2005, and most of the questions used on the surveys in 2013 were repeated from that earlier study to allow for exact comparisons.
The six constituencies surveyed are: General Assembly agency leaders; presbytery and synod executives; congregations; beneficiary organizations; donors; and income recipients. Absent from the survey group in 2013 are New Covenant Funds (NCF) shareholders. Due to the change in NCF investment management from FOUNDATION to SEI, NCF no longer has decision making ability about all communication with shareholders. SEI effectively blocked any survey of NCF shareholders claiming that FINRA and other securities regulations do not allow for such solicitation of feedback.

Response rates decreased materially from 2004 to 2013.

- Many PC(USA) congregations surveyed (53 percent) had assets, but fewer than half (39 percent) had endowments.
- For those who had assets, 90 percent of presbyteries and synods and 64 percent of congregations invested with the Foundation or New Covenant Funds.
- Two of three presbyteries and synods (67 percent)—but only one in five congregations (21 percent)—had received gifts made through the Foundation.
- Nearly all presbyteries and synods (92 percent)—but only fewer than two-thirds of congregations (57 percent)—indicated that they were very familiar, familiar, or somewhat familiar with the Foundation.
- Majorities of presbyteries and synods believed that the Foundation is very effective, effective, or somewhat effective in serving presbyteries or synods with existing endowments (74 percent) and those with investment needs (60 percent).
- The table below shows the top 6 responses from the presbyteries and synods when asked to identify the Foundation’s greatest strengths. The rise in importance of social responsibility is interesting.

Similarly, the next table shows the top 6 responses from congregations when asked to identify the Foundation’s greatest strengths. The decline in importance of being Presbyterian is interesting as is the decline in importance of reputation. The survey did not contain follow-up questions to determine whether the Foundation’s reputation is just less important to respondents today or whether the Foundation’s reputation has become tarnished in the eyes of congregations between 2004 and 2013.

- Congregations that did use the Foundation or New Covenant Funds to manage their assets identified the Foundation’s support for the PC(USA)’s mission and the security of their Foundation investments as reasons why they used the Foundation and NCF. Congregations with assets that did not use the Foundation or NCF to manage those assets identified their relationships with individual bankers or brokers as a primary reason for not using the Foundation. The second largest reason for congregations not using Foundation investment services was a lack of familiarity with Foundation or NCF services.
- Nearly all presbyteries and synods (93 percent) and Foundation and other GA agency leaders (97 percent)—but only seven in ten congregations (71 percent)—believed the work of the Foundation is very important, important, or somewhat important to the denomination.
- Almost all Foundation and other GA agency leaders (94 percent) believed to a very great extent, to a great extent, or to some extent that the Foundation is effective in accomplishing its mission.
• Most Foundation donors described their most recent contacts with Foundation staff as excellent or good (81 percent) and said they would definitely or probably recommend the Foundation to others who want to make gifts (84 percent).

• More than three-quarters of Foundation beneficiaries (79 percent) described their most recent contacts with the Foundation as excellent or good. Two-thirds (67 percent) also would definitely or probably recommend the Foundation to others who want to make gifts. Interestingly, the percentage of Foundation beneficiaries who were not sure they would recommend the Foundation rose from 4 percent in 2004 to 24 percent in 2013.

• Seventy-one percent of Foundation life income recipients described their most recent contacts with Foundation staff as excellent or good and seventy-seven percent would definitely or probably recommend the Foundation to others who want to make charitable gifts.

• Foundation donors regarded as the Foundation’s greatest strengths the Foundation’s reputation and its integrity, honesty, and ethics.

• Large proportions of donors (80 percent), beneficiaries (86 percent) and life income recipients (81 percent) viewed the Foundation’s work as very important, important, or somewhat important to the denomination.

COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) FOUNDATION Investment Advisors and Managers for the Foundation Assets
Engagements began in 2012

Cambridge Associates

Overview

Cambridge Associates (CA) is a privately held consulting firm that seeks to help institutional investors and private clients around the globe meet or exceed their investment objectives. They provide comprehensive discretionary management service that is customized for each client’s individual need, free of any conflicts of interest grounded in intensive and independent research.

History

CA was founded in 1973 to serve as an external research arm to educational endowments. Their consulting practice grew out of this solid research foundation and, in turn, their discretionary practice developed organically from their consulting work. Our first discretionary client was in 2001 (for a hedge fund program), and they began their total portfolio discretionary service in 2005. We serve more than 950 current clients, ranging from endowments with $50 million in assets to some of the largest government entities and sovereign wealth funds in the world.

SEI Investment Managers

Overview

SEI (NASDAQ:SEIC) is a leading global provider of investment processing, fund processing, and investment management business outsourcing solutions that help corporations, financial institutions, financial advisors, and ultra-high-net-worth families create and manage wealth. As of September 30, 2013, through its subsidiaries and partnerships in which the company has a significant interest, SEI manages or administers $529 billion in mutual fund and pooled or separately managed assets, including $219 billion in assets under management and $310 billion in client assets under administration.

FOUNDATION COMMENT ON ITEM 12-B

Comment on Item 12-B—From the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation.

The Foundation is tremendously grateful for the work of the Agency Review Committee. Their careful examination of our agency, and thoughtful engagement with our staff and elected leaders and multiple constituents has led to a holistic report and a helpful set of recommendations. We have already begun working to implement several of the recommendations, and will address the others in the months ahead.

Benefits Plan Amendments Report—From the Board of Pensions

The Board of Pensions reports the following amendments to The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Plan”) adopted by the Board of Pensions since the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Rationale

As set forth in Article XIX of the Plan, the Board of Pensions has the sole discretion and authority to amend the Plan, subject to certain approvals and reports to the General Assembly.
• Amendments to the Pension Plan (Articles VI, VII, VIII, and IX) that are in the nature of a benefit reduction or a Pension Plan dues increase are effective only upon approval of the General Assembly. The board must provide written notice of its intent to submit such Pension Plan amendments to the General Assembly and the Plan Members, local churches, and presbyteries at least sixty (60) days prior to the commencement of the General Assembly.

• All other amendments to the Plan adopted by the board are effective as determined by the board, but the board must report the amendments to the next succeeding General Assembly and to the members, local churches, and presbyteries in a reasonable manner.

Since the 220th General Assembly (2012), the board has not adopted any amendment to the Pension Plan that requires the approval of General Assembly prior to becoming effective.

Since the 220th General Assembly (2012), the Board granted Pension Plan experience apportionments in 2013 and 2014, approved disability income benefit increases in 2013 and 2014, and adopted amendments to the Medical Plan to comply with the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, to increase copayments for generic drugs, and to authorize employers to establish employee contribution requirements for family coverage.

The Pension and Retirement Savings plans were also amended to comply with changes to the Internal Revenue Code of Puerto Rico. Those amendments apply only to members who are bona fide residents of Puerto Rico. A table summarizing the Plan amendments is provided below. The effective dates of the amendments are also noted. A copy of the verbatim text of the Plan amendments is available from the Board of Pensions’ corporate secretary.

A letter advising the Benefits Plan Members, local churches, and presbyteries of this report and the amendments was posted to the website of the Board of Pensions on April 10, 2014, and an email was directed to all of the email addresses in the Board of Pensions records advising of that posting. The letter and a complete copy of The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (2014) are available on the website of the Board at pensions.org or by calling 1-800-PRES-PLAN (1-800-773-7752).

A. Presbyterian Church (USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. Report to the 221st General Assembly (2014)

Vision and Mission Statement: In gratitude for God’s abundance, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc (“PILP”) promotes the growth of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Bringing together the visions of church developers and the resources of Presbyterian investors and financial partners.

PILP offers investments providing a competitive financial return plus the opportunity to participate in the expansion of the church through Presbyterian congregations, governing bodies, and mission agencies. PILP offers loans to Presbyterian congregations and mid councils to purchase, renovate, and expand worship and mission space and to promote the growth of the church. Guided by the best practices of the financial industry, PILP is committed to faithful stewardship of the resources entrusted to us for the support of the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

PILP began 2012 with a disbursed loan portfolio of $79.8 million and an additional $12.1 million in commitments pending close and construction loans not yet disbursed. At the end of 2013, PILP had a disbursed loan portfolio of $75.9 million...
In 2013 PILP experienced our thirteenth consecutive year with an annual surplus. It is essential that PILP generate surpluses to assure investors of the strength of our program, to meet regulatory requirement to be profitable three out of the most recent past five years, and to provide capital for future expansion of the program. The combined surpluses from 2012 and 2013 have helped us toward our goal of building our capital adequacy beyond the 5 percent required by regulators. At the end of 2013, PILP had $8.2 million in unrestricted net assets.

PILP’s investment products are securities regulated under The Uniform Securities Act, which is administered by state-by-state. The North American Securities Administrators Association establishes program guidelines for denominational investment and loan programs. At the end of 2013, PILP met or exceeded all of the guidelines. PILP is expected to maintain a capital adequacy ratio of net worth to total assets of 5 percent. At the end of 2013 our capital adequacy ratio was 7.9 percent. PILP is expected to maintain a liquidity ratio of liquid assets to Term Notes and Denominational Account Receipts ("DARs") of at least 8 percent. At the end of 2013 our liquidity ratio was 32.1 percent. PILP is required to limit senior secured debt to no more than 10 percent of total assets. At the end of 2013, PILP had no senior secured debt.

Some commercial lenders may offer low rates or waive certain fees, but PILP is the only lender we know who gives money back to borrowing congregations. Through the “Get the Point” program, borrowing congregations earn rebates based on supporting investments. For 2013 PILP returned $326,608 to borrowing congregations, bringing the total returned to congregations since the inception of the rebate program to $2.8 million.

PILP provides consulting services to congregations and presbyteries to help them develop the appropriate size and timing for construction plans. We explore fundraising, financing opportunities, and requirements for capital projects. Each congregation benefits from the PILP staff’s experience in working with hundreds of congregations.

Demand for new construction loans has decreased in 2012 and 2013. In 2013 we began the process of transferring the ministry of the Church Development Corporation, an investment and loan program of the Synod of Mid-America, to PILP. We are continuing to refinance the loan portfolio of the Synod of the Northeast as their loans mature. These transfers are being implemented at the request of the synods. PILP has maintained careful underwriting standards, believing that relaxed standards do not benefit the lender or the borrower. We maintain a review process for all lending relationships and work intentionally with mid councils, who guarantee our loans. This process has resulted in a loan portfolio that is the envy of most lending institutions. At the end of 2013, PILP had five 30-day or longer delinquencies. These delinquencies have been resolved.

The Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program administers the Church Loan Program, ("CLP") for the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The CLP is the result of many gifts, campaigns, and bequests to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) since 1843. By December 31, 2013, the total endowment for church loans had grown to more than $215 million. The Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program has worked with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to develop a capital grant program to supplement the existing loan program. We have worked with the Foundation and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to secure funding from the Church Loan Program for the 1001 New Worshipping Communities Initiative and the Mission Program Grants Program for the foreseeable future.

The CLP began 2012 with a disbursed loan portfolio of $102.2 million and an additional $6.4 million in commitments pending close and construction loans not yet disbursed. At the end of 2013 CLP had a disbursed loan portfolio of $89.3 million and an additional $6.6 million in commitments, pending closing and construction loans, not yet disbursed. This represents a decrease of 11.7 percent over the two-year period. In 2012 PILP disbursed $7.0 million in new loans from CLP endowment funds and in 2013 disbursed $11.3 million. The maximum loan from CLP is currently $450,000. The maximum project in which CLP participates is $2.5 million. Larger loans are funded by investor funds or participations with synod loan programs or banking partners. Many loan applications received by PILP qualify for funds from both PILP and CLP. These loans are offered to churches as one loan with a blended rate.

Together PILP and CLP represent the Coordinated Loan Program of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) The Coordinated Loan Program is dedicated to providing low-cost loans to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations and mission agencies. At the beginning of 2012 the base interest rate for loans from investor funds for existing congregations was 4.95 percent and 4.0 percent from endowment funds. By the end of 2013 the base interest rate for loans from investor funds rate for existing congregations was 4.45 percent and 3.5 percent from endowment funds. We have introduced special interest rates for congregations refinancing loans from commercial lenders. PILP has remained competitive in an interest rate environment that has experienced large decreases in the cost of funds for all lending institutions.
The program is in sound financial shape. The balance sheet is strong with total assets of more than $104 million. We have received an unqualified audit every year. We have solid relationships with most mid councils and with all of the other General Assembly agencies. We continue to serve a growing number of borrowing congregations. We welcome new individuals, congregations, and mid councils into our investment family almost every week.

Our hope is that PILP will be the premier provider of financing for capital projects within the PC(USA). We want Presbyterians to think about PILP when it comes to financing a capital project. We will not compromise our underwriting standards to grow the business, but will build the kind of relationships that help congregations determine what they can afford and what they cannot. We are building an investment base of individuals that has a vision of investing for financial and mission return.

We remain committed to promoting awareness of the program throughout the church. We will maintain strong and healthy ties with General Assembly agencies and mid councils. We will continue to build a competent and diverse staff to serve the church. PILP is addressing emerging issues within the church and the culture. The program will focus energy on the following areas of activity in 2014:

1. We anticipate that interest rates will increase gradually in 2014. We anticipate that our cost of funds will increase more rapidly than our income from interest on loans. We will manage our interest rates to maintain a margin between our cost of funds and the interest earned on loans of at least 3 percent.

2. We anticipate that more congregations with existing PILP loans will experience financial pressures in meeting their debt obligations. We anticipate requests for modification of loan terms. We will respond to each request individually, while maintaining our policies and practices to safeguard the investments that have been placed with us. We will work with congregations and presbyteries to evaluate every option available to maintain debt service payments. We will continue with the regularly scheduled reviews of each loan in our portfolio in an attempt to identify concerns before they become problems.

3. We anticipate that additional congregations with loans and mortgage grants will ask to be dismissed from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We will work with presbyteries to reinforce the language of the loan documentation, including the acceleration clause making the loan due and payable before the congregation can be released. We will work with presbyteries seeking to provide “gracious separation” for congregations wanting to leave the denomination to understand that the mortgage and guarantee remain in place until the loan is paid in full. This will require working with PC(USA), A Corp., the presbyteries, and congregations to ensure the repayment of existing loans and to provide the documentation and recovery of the funds provided many years ago through mortgage grants.

4. The program will continue to transfer the ministry of the Church Development Corporation to the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program. We are currently administering their $11 million loan portfolio of eighteen loans. We are administering the interest payments, redemptions, and reporting to their board of directors for the $21 million of investments they have sold to individuals, congregations, and mid councils. We will continue to work toward refinancing their loans into the PILP portfolio, and we will use the proceeds of this refinancing activity to redeem the savings certificates and stewardship accounts. We will offer their investors the opportunity to invest the funds from these redemptions in PILP term notes and denominational account receipts.

5. The staff and the board will use the 221st General Assembly (2014) as an opportunity to promote the program, to further strengthen existing relationships, and to establish new relationships among PC(USA) entities, mid council leaders, and congregational leaders.

6. The senior leadership will evaluate and refine the staffing rationale based on staff transitions and shifting workloads that are anticipated in 2014.

7. The program will continue to develop more effective use of social networking and other new technologies. The program will roll out a Facebook page in 2014, as a forum for borrowers, the board, and staff to exchange news and ideas.

8. The staff will further develop our consulting role in advising and guiding churches and presbyteries on financial implications of debt financing.

9. The staff will work to strengthen connections between the marketing team and the underwriting team to create a seamless organization for our customers and prospects.

10. The staff will continue to explore strategic initiatives to fulfill our desire for continued growth in the loan portfolio during this protracted slowdown in loan demand. The marketing staff will use leads from the Annual Statistical Reports and conversations with mid council leadership.

11. Senior leadership will work with the board of directors to determine the best structure for board effectiveness. The board of directors will work with the senior leadership to develop a succession plan for replacement of board members and senior leadership that may result from emergencies or planned events. The board and staff will work collaboratively to explore new markets and products to meet changing needs within the church and the program.
12. We will develop an investment policy to allow for longer term investments of our net assets.

13. We will collaborate with the other agencies of the PC(USA) to determine the appropriate role for the program within the 1001 Worshiping Communities initiative.

14. We will collaborate with the other agencies of the PC(USA) to develop a strategy for the program to begin transferring some of the cost of dependent health care coverage to employees.

The following are just few examples of how endowment and investor funds are helping the church grow:

Neema Community Church, Overland Park, Kansas: Begun in 2003 as a prayer group meeting in an apartment with the participation of only a few African immigrants, Neema Community Church has grown into a vibrant congregation of nearly two hundred souls. Shortly after their formation, Village Presbyterian Church in Prairie Village, generously provided a meeting place for the fellowship allowing them space and time to grow. In 2011, they were officially chartered and began a search for a home of their own. Aided with a loan from the Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, Neema Community purchased an existing church building which will provide more space for worship, Christian education and outreach ministries to immigrants of all faiths that are new to their area. http://neemacommunitychurch.org

Huguenot Memorial Church, Pelham Manor, New York: After contending for years with an antiquated boiler system, numerous broken pipes and resulting water damage, Huguenot Memorial Church began an extensive search for a long-term solution. The more they studied the problem, the more serious they became about geothermal as a solution. With member contributions and a loan through PILP, they have completed installation of a geothermal HVAC system utilizing deep underground water pipes that take advantage of the consistent subterranean temperatures to provide warmth in the winter and cooling in the summer. Though expensive to install, geothermal is touted to have the lowest ongoing cost to operate. The church estimates that their energy cost will be cut in half while providing more consistent and comfortable temperatures throughout all of their buildings. www.huguenotchurch.org

Covenant Presbyterian Church, Lubbock, Texas: For the people who gather in this Lubbock, Texas, church, the term, “Covenant” is not just a name but a way of life. After several years of discernment, they set out to live into a larger vision of God’s mission by making their church a more visible, practicing presence of God’s kingdom and resource to their community. The church building, last renovated thirty-five years ago, had not kept pace with their changing ministry. With a new vision of invigorating programs for children, music, and creating an atmosphere of hospitality, they have reconfigured existing space, expanded and opened up the gathering area, and added classrooms specifically for children ministries. Through the amazing generosity of their members and a loan from PILP, Covenant is embarking on new ministries to reach their community. http://covenantpresbylbk.org

The Board of Directors of PILP is elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and is confirmed by the General Assembly. The 2013 board of directors included: Stephen Bacon, chair; James B. Rea Jr.; Louise Westfall; Linda Scholl; William Nelson; Joyce Smith; Catesby Woodford; Terry Nall; Samuel McNairy; Margaret Jorgensen, vice chair; Linda Bailey; Rebecca New; Josephine Stewart; Connie Tubb; In Yang.

The officers of the corporation in 2013 were: James L. Hudson, president and CEO; James G. Rissler Sr., vice president Finance and Administration and treasurer; Ben W. Blake, vice president, Sales and Marketing; Martha E. Clark, secretary; Mike Kirk, assistant secretary; Laura Olliges, assistant treasurer.

B. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation Agency Summary

1. Mission Statement

A vital part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Foundation cultivates, attracts, and manages financial resources of individuals and institutions to serve Christ’s mission.

2. Summary

The Presbyterian Foundation was established in 1799 to raise, steward, and distribute funds for mission. We work with congregations, councils, agencies, and related ministries to ensure that they have resources for mission today, tomorrow, and two hundred years from now.

The Foundation exists to serve the church and its mission. Our nationwide staff of ministry relationship officers works with pastors, ministry leaders, and individual donors to develop communities of Christian generosity in support of Christ’s mission in the world.

In countless ways, the Foundation offers charitable expertise and services that unite and empower Presbyterians and the ministries about which they are passionate. We strive to do so in a trustworthy, clear, and accessible manner that reflects the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s faith-based values.
The Foundation has much to offer the church:

Stability. The Foundation has been bringing together people and mission for more than two centuries. One of six national agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Foundation is composed of highly skilled officers and support staff trained in the areas of gift administration and compliance, accounting, law, marketing, and a specialized group of ministry relationship officers located around the country to better serve the church.

Connection. We work in leadership and partnership with the whole denomination to fund its mission. The Foundation does not compete with local congregations or any other institution of the church for charitable gifts. To the contrary, we are committed to strengthening these entities by developing gifts and managing funds on their behalf.

Commitment. We provide all Presbyterians with an avenue to realize their philanthropic goals through a variety of giving options. We maintain a strong focus on the Presbyterian values and principles that drive our stewardship initiatives.

3. Ministry Relationships

The Foundation remains true to its original charge from the 1799 General Assembly to solicit from individuals and congregations “pious donations and bequests in order to supply the funds which are absolutely necessary to carry on with advantage the great and charitable work” of the Church.

Our nationwide staff of ministry relationship officers works to cultivate funds for mission and build communities of generosity throughout the church. Combining decades of pastoral and development experience, these officers help church leaders assess the financial health, generosity capacity, and stewardship practices of their congregations, then build on their strengths and address their weaknesses.

4. Project Regeneration

Faithful stewardship of church resources always looks to the future because congregations go through life cycles. The re-invention of a congregation, the closing of a church building, or the merger of multiple congregations can mean more than the end of a previously vibrant ministry. It can also mean the opportunity for the sale or transformation of excess church property into funds for new ministry. It can mean freeing an existing congregation from the burden of supporting a facility that no longer meets its mission needs.

The Presbyterian Foundation is partnering with churches and presbyteries across the denomination to discover and explore creative options for ministries that need adequate funding in order to grow and prosper. Endowment funds are among the many options available to leave a lasting legacy of the faith community by naming a ministry and specific purpose for the use of the fund and provide support in perpetuity.

5. Presbyterian Mission Exchange

Presbyterians are generous by nature—we are passionate about mission and give joyfully to the projects, causes, and organizations that touch our hearts and engage our minds.

To help expedite that generosity, the Foundation has created the Presbyterian Mission Exchange—a web-based giving hub with tools to facilitate easy online donations. Congregations can quickly and easily offer online giving to their members through the Mission Exchange.

Presbyterians can use the Mission Exchange to discover and fund churches and charities that are sharing their gifts to heal the sick, feed the hungry, clothe and shelter the poor, educate and build up their communities, and promote the good news of Jesus Christ throughout the world.

In 2013 alone, 445 donors gave more than $875,000 to 130 congregations and ministries using the Presbyterian Mission Exchange.

6. Wills Program

Annually, the Presbyterian Foundation offers a Wills Emphasis program to congregations throughout the denomination. At the program’s beginning in the 1950s, wills were the main focus of gift development. Currently, that focus has shifted to remembering the church in estate planning. While simple bequests in a will are still important, now the Foundation can provide guidance for complex estate plans in coordination with an individual’s tax and legal advisors.

To complement congregation-based bequest and planned giving efforts, the Foundation offers a package of wills program resources including a leadership guide, website, sample appeal letters, bulletin inserts, social media content, and more. These materials are provided free of charge to any Presbyterian congregation—the only expenses are the shipping and handling costs.
7. Expanded Investment Options

The Foundation and its subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, offer a range of investment services to congregations and related Presbyterian institutions. New Covenant Funds provide an easy entry point and daily liquidity for congregations who want to self-direct their investment portfolio within the PC(USA)’s mission responsibility through investment framework. New Covenant Trust Company offers a variety of more customized investment options to match the congregation’s policy objectives. Presbyterian Endowment Funds are held permanently by the Foundation, invested in a diverse yet socially responsible portfolio by Cambridge Associates, and pay out according to an established spending formula designed to provide stable funding over many years.

Transformational investment options allow congregations and other Presbyterian institutions to invest positively in a series of development projects in Palestine. These projects have been developed in response to the 220th General Assembly (2012)’s call for positive investment in the Palestinian territories.

C. New Covenant Trust Company, N.A.

New Covenant Trust Company, N.A. (NCTC), a subsidiary of the Presbyterian Foundation, was chartered January 2, 1998. The company serves as trustee of various types of trust instruments and provides investment management services. NCTC’s board has enacted policies and procedures to ensure compliance with banking laws and provides oversight of the delivery of services to the Presbyterian community.

NCTC partners with individuals and Presbyterian and related organizations in the delivery of trust services, such as personal trusts, wholly charitable trusts and charitable remainder trusts, and investment management services. These services allow NCTC to create custom solutions such that trust, investment management, and philanthropic goals and objectives can be met. NCTC consistently strives to deliver superior service to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and seeks to enhance opportunities available to Presbyterians to express their Christian faith and generous stewardship.

NCTC provides shareholder services to New Covenant Funds, a family of mutual funds organized with participation from the Presbyterian Foundation. The services provided by NCTC help ensure the investments in New Covenant Funds are aligned with the social witness principles of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The following individuals were confirmed by the 220th General Assembly (2012) and continue in their service as directors of New Covenant Trust Company, N.A.

1. Former Foundation Trustees: Timothy P. Clark (senior bank officer, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters); Sharon Z. Fesler (retired trust officer, white, female, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Lincoln Trails).
2. OGA Designee: Christopher Y. Nicholas (OGA staff, Asian, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters).
3. Presbyterian Mission Agency Designee: Donald S. Hunt (retired bank executive, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Lincoln Trails).

Report and Recommendations from the General Assembly Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar to the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The General Assembly Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar unanimously recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

   Shall the Confession of Belhar be included in the Book of Confessions. [Explanatory notes: (a) Text for the Confession of Belhar can be found as Attachment 1., (b) Biblical citations should be listed in the margins by the relevant text as is shown in Attachment 1, and (c) While not of constitutional character, whenever the Confession of Belhar is printed in the Book of Confessions, it should be accompanied by the original Accompanying Letter from Belhar to explain the context of the confession. This letter is Attachment 2.]

2. Approve “The Accompanying Letter to the Confession of Belhar from the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” as a statement reflecting the confession, conviction, and rationale of the PC(USA) based on the implications of this confession for our life and ministry as a Reformed and Presbyterian community in 21st century North America and commend it to our congregations and presbyteries as they deliberate adding the Confession of Belhar to our Book of Confessions. [Like with the original Accompanying Letter, while not of constitutional character, whenever the Confession of Belhar is printed in the Book of Confessions, it should be accompanied by the Accompanying Letter from the 221st General Assembly (2014) to explain the context of the confession for the PC(USA). This Accompanying Letter for the PC(USA) can be found in Attachment 3.]

3. Call upon all congregations, councils, seminaries, and denominational conferences to engage in serious and prayerful study of the Confession of Belhar and the Accompanying Letters of Belhar during the next twelve months, making use of the variety of resources produced by the special committee and others, which can be found at www.pcusa.org/belhar.

4. Dismiss the Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar with thanks and request that members of the special committee who are willing be available as speakers and resource persons for congregations, councils, and special conferences (noted in Recommendation 3).

Rationale

The 220th General Assembly (2012) approved the action to begin the process of amending the Book of Confessions to include the Confession of Belhar, as provided in G-6.03, and approved the authorization of a budget for education across the church about the confession, in addition to its committee budget for direct expenses (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1527).

Moderator Neal Presa appointed Teaching Elder Clifton Kirkpatrick (Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky) and Ruling Elder Matilde Moros (Presbytery of Hudson River) to serve as co-moderators of the Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar. He also appointed as members of the committee Teaching Elder Edwin Antonio Gonzalez-Castillo (Presbytery of San Juan), Teaching Elder Karen Herbst-Kim (Presbytery of Blackhawk), Teaching Elder Cynthia Holder Rich (Presbytery of Heartland), Ruling Elder Susan Krivenko (Presbytery of Elizabeth), Teaching Elder Mark A. Lomax (Presbytery of Greater Atlanta), Teaching Elder Albert Franklin Masters III (Presbytery of Foothills), Teaching Elder Eliana Maxim (Presbytery of Seattle), Ruling Elder Rodger Y. Nishioka (Presbytery of Greater Atlanta), Teaching Elder Kevin Park (Presbytery of Newark), Teaching Elder Catherine J.S. Purves (Presbytery of Pittsburgh), Ruling Elder Brandt Shields (Presbytery of John Calvin), Teaching Elder Jerry Tankersley (Presbytery of Los Ranchos), and Ruling Elder Elizabeth Raver Wagner, (Presbytery of Charlotte).

The committee held one face-to-face meeting in October 2012, and monthly conference calls between December 2012 and January 2014. Much of the committee’s work was focused on developing educational resources for churchwide use. These can be accessed through the committee’s website, www.pcusa.org/belhar. They consulted with several different constituency groups within the PC(USA) as well as consulting with ecumenical partners in the U.S. and South Africa. They gave significant consideration to the implications of the Confession of Belhar for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at this moment in the church’s history. The sub-themes of Justice, Unity, and Reconciliation framed their approach to the Confession of Belhar and the development of interpretative materials.
The Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar reached a unanimous decision to recommend inclusion of the Confession of Belhar into the Book of Confessions.

We believe in the triune God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, who gathers, protects and cares for the church through Word and Spirit. This, God has done since the beginning of the world and will do to the end.

Matthew 28:19–20

We believe in one holy, universal Christian church, the communion of saints called from the entire human family.

We believe

Ephesians 2:13–20

- that Christ’s work of reconciliation is made manifest in the church as the community of believers who have been reconciled with God and with one another;

Ephesians 4:11–16, Psalm 133

- that unity is, therefore, both a gift and an obligation for the church of Jesus Christ; that through the working of God’s Spirit it is a binding force, yet simultaneously a reality which must be earnestly pursued and sought; one which the people of God must continually be built up to attain;

John 17:20–23

- that this unity must become visible so that the world may believe that separation, enmity and hatred between people and groups is sin which Christ has already conquered, and accordingly that anything which threatens this unity may have no place in the church and must be resisted;

John 13:34

- that this unity of the people of God must be manifested and be active in a variety of ways;

Colossians 3:12–16

- in that we love one another;

Philippians 2:1–5

languages and cultures, are by virtue of the reconciliation in Christ, opportunities for mutual service and enrichment within the one visible people of God;

Galatians 3:27–29

- that true faith in Jesus Christ is the only condition for membership of this church.

Therefore, we reject any doctrine

- which absolutizes either natural diversity or the sinful separation of people in such a way that this absolutization hinders or breaks the visible and active unity of the church, or even leads to the establishment of a separate church formation;

- which professes that this spiritual unity is truly being maintained in the bond of peace while believers of the same confession are in effect alienated from one another for the sake of diversity and in despair of reconciliation;

- which denies that a refusal earnestly to pursue this visible unity as a priceless gift is sin;

- which explicitly or implicitly maintains that descent or any other human or social factor should be a consideration in determining membership of the church.

We believe

2 Corinthians 5:17–21

- that God has entrusted the church with the message of reconciliation in and through Jesus Christ;

Matthew 5:9, 13–16;
2 Peter 3:13;
Revelation 21:1–5

- that the church is called to be the salt of the earth and the light of the world, that the church is called blessed because it is a peacemaker, that the church is witness both by word and by deed to the new heaven and the new earth in which righteousness dwells;

Romans 6:12–14,
Colossians 1:11–14

- that God’s life-giving Word and Spirit has conquered the powers of sin and death, and therefore also of irreconciliation and hatred, bitterness and enmity, that God’s life-giving Word and Spirit will enable the church to live in a new obedience which can open new possibilities of life for society and the world;

James 2:8–9

- that the credibility of this message is seriously affected and its beneficial work obstructed when it is proclaimed in a land which professes to be Christian, but in which the enforced separation of people on a racial basis promotes and perpetuates alienation, hatred and enmity;

- that any teaching which attempts to legitimize such forced separation by appeal to the gospel, and is not prepared to venture on the road of obedience and reconciliation, but rather, out of prejudice, fear, selfishness and unbelief, denies in advance the reconciling power of the gospel, must be considered ideology and false doctrine.

Therefore, we reject any doctrine which, in such a situation sanctions in the name of the gospel or of the will of God the forced separation of people on the grounds of race and color and thereby in advance obstructs and weakens the ministry and experience of reconciliation in Christ.

We believe

Isaiah 42:1–7

- that God has revealed God’s self as the one who wishes to bring about justice and true peace among people;

Luke 6:20–26

- that God, in a world full of injustice and enmity, is in a special way the God of the destitute, the poor and the wronged;

- that God calls the church to follow God in this; for God brings justice to the oppressed and gives bread to the hungry;

Luke 7:22

- that God frees the prisoner and restores sight to the blind;

Psalm 146

- that God supports the downtrodden, protects the stranger, helps the orphans and widows and blocks the path of the ungodly;

James 1:27

- that for God pure and undefiled religion is to visit the orphans and the widows in their suffering;
Micah 6:8 • that God wishes to teach the church to do what is good and to seek the right;

Amos 5:14–15, 23–24 • that the church must therefore stand by people in any form of suffering and need, which implies, among other things, that the church must witness against and strive against any form of injustice, so that justice may roll down like waters and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream;

Psalm 82:1–5 • that the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged;

Leviticus 19:15 • that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others.

Therefore, we reject any ideology which would legitimate forms of injustice and any doctrine which is unwilling to resist such an ideology in the name of the gospel.

Acts 5:29–32; 1 Peter 3:15–18 We believe that, in obedience to Jesus Christ, its only head, the church is called to confess and to do all these things, even though the authorities and human laws might forbid them and punishment and suffering be the consequence.

Jesus is Lord.

To the one and only God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, be the honor and the glory forever and ever.

Accompanying Letter to the Confession of Belhar

This letter was a statement made upon the adoption of the Belhar Confession by the Uniting Reformed Church in Southern Africa

1. We are deeply conscious that moments of such seriousness can arise in the life of the Church that it may feel the need to confess its faith anew in the light of a specific situation. We are aware that such an act of confession is not lightly undertaken, but only if it is considered that the heart of the gospel is so threatened as to be at stake. In our judgment, the present church and political situation in our country and particularly within the Dutch Reformed church family calls for such a decision. Accordingly, we make this confession not as a contribution to a theological debate nor as a new summary of our beliefs, but as a cry from the heart, as something we are obliged to do for the sake of the gospel in view of the times in which we stand. Along with many, we confess our guilt, in that we have not always witnessed clearly enough in our situation and so are jointly responsible for the way in which those things which were experienced as sin and confessed to be sin have grown in time to seem self-evidently right and to be ideologies foreign to the Scriptures. As a result many have been given the impression that the gospel was not really at stake. We make this confession because we are convinced that all sorts of theological arguments have contributed to so disproportionate an emphasis on some aspects of the truth that it has in effect become a lie.

2. We are aware that the only authority for such a confession and the only grounds on which it may be made are the Holy Scriptures as the Word of God. Being fully aware of the risk involved in taking this step, we are nevertheless convinced that we have no alternative. Furthermore, we are aware that no other motives or convictions, however valid they may be, would give us the right to confess in this way. An act of confession may only be made by the Church for the sake of its purity and credibility and that of its message. As solemnly as we are able, we hereby declare before men that our only motive lies in our fear that the truth and power of the gospel itself is threatened in this situation. We do not wish to serve any group interests, advance the cause of any factions, promote any theologies, or achieve any ulterior purposes. Yet, having said this, we know that our deepest intentions may only be judged at their true value by him before whom all is revealed. We do not make this confession from his throne and from on high, but before his throne and before men. We plead, therefore, that this confession would not be misused by anyone with ulterior motives and also that it should not be resisted to serve such motives. Our earnest desire is to lay no false stumbling blocks in the way, but to point to the true stumbling block, Jesus Christ the rock.

3. This confession is not aimed at specific people or groups of people or a church or churches. We proclaim it against a false doctrine, against an ideological distortion which threatens the gospel itself in our church and our country. Our heartfelt longing is that no one will identify himself with this objectionable doctrine and that all who have been wholly or partially blinded by it will turn themselves away from it. We are deeply aware of the deceiving nature of such a false doctrine and know that many who have been conditioned by it have to a greater or lesser extent learnt to take a half-truth for the whole. For this reason we do not doubt the Christian faith of many such people, their sincerity, honor, integrity, and good intentions and their in many ways estimable practice and conduct. However, it is precisely because we know the power of deception that we know we are not liberated by the seriousness, sincerity, or intensity of our certainties, but only by the truth in the Son. Our church and our land have an intense need of such liberation. Therefore it is that we speak pleadingly rather than accusingly. We plead for reconciliation, that true reconciliation which follows on conversion and change of attitudes and structures. And while we do so we are aware that an act of confession is a two-edged sword, that none of us can throw the first stone, and none is without a beam in his own eye. We know that the attitudes and conduct which work against the gospel are present in all of us and will continue to be so. Therefore this confession must be seen as a call to a continuous process of soulsearching, a joint wrestling with the issues, and a readiness to repent in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ in a broken world. It is certainly not intended as an act of self-justification and intolerance, for that would disqualify us in the very act of preaching to others.

4. Our prayer is that this act of confession will not place false stumbling blocks in the way and thereby cause and foster false divisions, but rather that it will be reconciling and unifying. We know that such an act of confession and process of reconciliation will necessarily involve much pain and sadness. It demands the pain of repentance, remorse, and confession; the pain of individual and collective renewal and a changed way of life. It places us on a road whose end we can neither foresee nor manipulate to our own desire. On this road we shall unavoidably suffer intense growing pains while we struggle to conquer alienation, bitterness, irreconciliation, and fear. We shall have to come to know and encounter both ourselves and others in new ways. We are only too well aware that this confession calls for the dismantling of structures of thought, of church, and of society which have developed over many years. However, we confess that for the sake of the gospel, we have no other choice. We pray that our brothers and sisters throughout the Dutch Reformed church family, but also outside it, will want to make this new beginning with us, so that we can be free together and together may walk the road of reconciliation and justice. Accordingly, our prayer is that the pain and sadness we speak of will be pain and sadness that lead to salvation. We believe that this is possible in the power of our Lord and by his Spirit. We believe that the gospel of Jesus Christ offers hope, liberation, salvation, and true peace to our country.

The Confession of Belhar calls us to renew our understanding and confessional affirmation of the “one triune God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.” The confession centers us in the reality of the Holy God of creation, the covenant, and the prophets, who was incarnate in Jesus Christ. The Spirit fills all who have come to know God through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God the Father, and the communion of the Holy Spirit. As the Confession of Belhar affirms, the God whom we worship and serve has gathered us, protected us, and cared for us through the Word and Spirit. “This, God has done and will do, in order to reconcile all things in him, things in heaven and things on earth” (Eph. 1:9–10).

THE ACCOMPANYING LETTER TO THE CONFESSION OF BELHAR from the 221st General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
on the occasion of the adoption of the Confession of Belhar

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is again facing a critical time in its history. We are rent apart by division and schism, we have yet to confront directly and confess the racism that has been a significant force in our own history, and we have shown a failure of resolve to make courageous stands for justice. We believe that the Confession of Belhar, a profound statement on unity, reconciliation, and justice in the church, comes to us as a word from God for this particular time and place for the PC(USA).

We understand confession as both the church’s response to human sin and as witness to our faith. Confession by the church is necessary because sin is present in social injustice and in our conscious or unconscious participation in human suffering. Confession is not a way to cast aspersions or in any way denigrate, castigate, or delimit any person or group of persons. We the church are called to confess sin because the Word of God as revealed in and through the life of Jesus Christ and the Holy Scriptures calls us to bear witness to a just, loving, and compassionate Creator.

The Confession of Belhar calls us to renew our understanding and confessional affirmation of the “one triune God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.” The confession centers us in the reality of the Holy God of creation, the covenant, and the prophets, who was incarnate in Jesus Christ. The Spirit fills all who have come to know God through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God the Father, and the communion of the Holy Spirit. As the Confession of Belhar affirms, the God whom we worship and serve has gathered us, protected us, and cared for us through the Word and Spirit. “This, God has done since the beginning of the world and will do to the end.”

The Confession of Belhar is particularly helpful to our common life as Presbyterians for two reasons. First, it comes to us in a time of Kairos in South Africa, when the church dared to speak with unusual clarity. It can help the PC(USA) speak and act with equal clarity. Second, it focuses the church’s confession on its own life. It is far too easy for the church to look outside of its walls and find fault, all the while ignoring the sin in its own life. Belhar focuses the church’s attention on the way its own life and witness have fallen short of the gospel.

Unity.

We believe that the gospel of God calls the entire universal church into the unity of the one triune God. At the heart of the Creator God revealed in Scripture is the invitation to enjoy the fellowship of the personal God who is one, yet three. The Lord whom we confess has a purpose and plan for the cosmos into which we have all been born by God’s providence. We learn from Scripture of “… the mystery of [God’s] will … set forth in Christ, as a plan for the fullness of time, to gather up [unite] all things in him, things in heaven and things on earth” (Eph. 1:9–10).
To this end, Jesus, the incarnate Son of God, fully human and fully God, offered us new life when he gave his life for us through his incarnation, his crucifixion, and his resurrection. This new life broke down dividing walls of hostility within humanity; transforming hatred into love and making unity a mandate from God. Unity is God’s will for humanity, beyond the differences of Jews and Gentiles, slave and free, male and female, educated and uneducated, rich and poor, and beyond social categories of races. All who heard the good news and believed in God through Christ the Savior were incorporated into the new humanity. Through the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit, those who trusted in Jesus Christ became members of the household of God and experienced themselves as being built together spiritually into a dwelling place for God. This spiritual temple called “the church” was given a mission of proclaiming, living, making visible, and extending the good news of the New Creation in Christ (Eph. 2:11–22).

Presbyterians have confessed this gospel from the early years of our history in America. Yet we have had great difficulty of living into the gift of God’s unity and mission revealed and made possible through the cross of Jesus Christ. Like our brothers and sisters in South Africa, we have been afflicted by the division of the church along racial, political, cultural, theological, and class divisions.

In South Africa the system of “apartheid,” or separation of the races, divided both nation and church into separate spheres. The Reformed Churches of South Africa justified this division and developed theological rationales for this division so that blacks and whites were not allowed to come to the same Lord’s Table. The white settlers who came from Europe to the tip of the African continent came with a vision of a Promised Land that required either the removal of the native Africans or the separation of the races for the sake of racial purity, spiritual well-being, and economic development. The spiritualized gospel adopted by the white church focused upon the saving of souls but had lost its prophetic word and mission for the healing of the divisions caused by human sinfulness.

Reformed/Presbyterian Christians who came to the New World of the North American continent carried with them a sense of their own election and privilege. They too came to a “Promised Land” of new beginnings, seeking freedom and opportunity for themselves. They brought with them an understanding of the gospel that was not whole, that did not understand the completed work of Jesus Christ upon the cross, and that did not call for the church to be visibly one. To complicate matters, in order to develop the New World’s economic base, lands and workers were needed. Native Americans were removed from their lands and African slaves imported to be a source of cheap labor. Human persons were oppressed, defined as property, and denied basic human rights. The church embraced a spiritualized gospel that justified the enslavement of people forcefully and violently captured and held in dehumanizing slavery for the good of white masters and landowners. Every aspect of American culture became divided. Slaves were only counted as 3/5ths persons under the new Constitution of the United States. God’s election, interpreted as social privilege, became a theological justification for chattel slavery and racial segregation.

Privileges based on race, wealth, gender, class, and power became institutionalized and legalized. As a result, we have witnessed to the eleven o’clock hour of Sunday morning as the most segregated hour of life in the United States of America. We Presbyterian Reformed churches found ourselves in betrayal of the gospel of Jesus Christ, in our own internal worship, fellowship, and witness. We continue to live under the specters of racism, classism, sexism, and division, which remain as enduring conflicts and challenges for both church and culture.

Beyond the issues of race and class, Presbyterians in the United States of America have, from the beginning, been troubled by differing theological world views and practices. We have been willing to divide over and over again. Political ideologies, hermeneutical theories, racial prejudices, economic ideologies, and powerful personalities have driven wedges between believers, causing congregations to divide and to seek new affiliations of like-minded believers. Old School/New School believers separated and debated theology. Racial theologies divided the church and nation into north and south and led to the American Civil War. Brothers and sisters went to war reading the same Bible and praying to the same God with the confidence that God was on their sides. Fundamentalists and Modernists did battle over issues of biblical and scientific interpretations. The divisions over the ordination of women remained present into the last century. For the last quarter of the 20th century, the Presbyterian church has argued and divided over human sexuality and how to read its Scriptures in these matters. Once again the reality of diversity has threatened to divide us so that the visible unity of the church now hangs by a slender thread.

We believe that the PC(USA) needs to be called to the unity taught and proclaimed in the Confession of Belhar. Belhar’s witness to the unity of God, the unity created by the good news of Jesus Christ and the power of the Holy Spirit, calls us to the hard work of spiritual transformation and surrender to the way of Jesus Christ who came to unite all believers in the visible communion of the body of Christ, the church.

Belhar asks us to look first at ourselves when faced with church division, rather than moving quickly to blaming those with whom we are separated. It is far too easy to look at others and blame them for division. Belhar directs us to look at our own behavior that has led to disunity. What is the log in our own eye?

Reconciliation.

The Confession of Belhar reaffirms the vision of mission articulated in the Confession of 1967: that God in Christ has done what we could not do for ourselves. The Apostle Paul wrote to the Corinthian church, “All this is from God, who reconciled us to himself through Christ, and has given us the ministry of reconciliation; that is, in Christ God was reconciling the world to himself, not counting their trespasses against them, and entrusting the message of reconciliation to us. So we are ambassadors for Christ, since God is making his appeal through us; we entreat you on behalf of Christ, be reconciled to God” (2 Cor. 5:18–20).

In the 1960s, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) confessed its faith in the reconciling power of God in the context of a society being driven apart by racial divisions, issues of war and peace, poverty and abundance, and by anarchy in sexual relationships.

The Confession of Belhar reaffirms this witness, but more specifically calls the members of this church and the corporate structures of the church to be claimed by the gospel of God, who alone can bring us together as one family of Christ, healing the deep divides that still haunt us all.

We believe that all who have trusted in Jesus as Savior and Lord, and been baptized into the fellowship of Christ’s church, have been welcomed to the Lord’s Table. At the Lord’s Table, we receive by faith the presence of the resurrected Lord. His spiritual presence feeds us with bread and wine. At his Table we are reconciled to God, united as races, tribes of peoples speaking different languages, and representatives of many nations. We are Jew and Gentile, male and female, rich and poor, black and white and every color. We are blue and red, Democrat and Republican, Independent, Conservative and Progressive, Protestant and Catholic and Orthodox. We share in the Lord’s Table as a foretaste of the Reign of God.

In Christ, the hope of glory, we are members of the one family of God. We are brothers and sisters in Christ. And like all human families, we have our differences; we engage in conflicts. We often agree to disagree. We at times are arrogant; other times we are humble toward one another and serve one another. At each moment in time we live by the forgiveness of sins. Over time we come to realize that our life together is only in and through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. This side of the perfection of the New Creation we will all remain sinners and in need of spiritual transformation.

Nevertheless, Christians are called to be seekers of justice, peacemakers, reconcilers, mediators, who extend hospitality and love toward those with whom we differ. Down deep we are longing to embrace our calling, “with all humility and gentleness, with patience, bearing with one another in love, making every effort to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body and one Spirit, just as you were called to the one hope of your calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all and through all and in all” (Eph. 4:2–6).

Therefore, as God’s reconciled people we have promised not to break the covenant in which we are bound through the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. At reunion we attempted to create the PC(USA) as a reunited church in the absence of confessing the sin that had created our original division. In the last several decades, we in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have become increasingly separated into different political, economic, and theological camps. More than ever, we need to be claimed by the gospel of God’s reconciling love. This gospel allows believers to come together, knowing that we have more in common that unites us, than what divides us.

We American Presbyterians have not been able to fully confront our own past in regard to race. The fact is that both streams that came together to form the PC(USA), southern and northern, used theology to justify permanent inequality in church and society. A theology that grew out of giving all glory to God became justification for divinely sanctioned inequality, particularly directed at African Americans. To fully embody God’s ministry of reconciliation, we Presbyterians must confess that we have used God against others in our own church and commit ourselves to new patterns of relationship.

Reconciliation implies repair of that which has been broken. Our verbal and written confessions, while important, are far less than adequate means of repairing the harms done, restoring the losses, and reconciling the relationships that have been historically distorted. Concrete steps are required to produce the healing that we so desperately want and need.

The Confession of Belhar calls us to renew the covenant, to embrace one another as members of one family of God. Jesus Christ calls us to a costly discipleship of dying to ourselves so that we might allow his light to shine through us as a witness into the darkness of our world.

Justice

Jesus began his public ministry in his hometown synagogue in Nazareth (Luke 4). He read from the Scripture of the day, Isaiah 61. ‘“The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed me to bring good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim release to the captives and recovery of sight to the blind, to let the oppressed go free, to proclaim the year of the Lord’s favor’” (Lk. 4:18–19). Then he announced that in the reading of this Scripture, on that day, it had been fulfilled. He was God’s Spirit anointed Messiah who had been sent to inaugurate the Year of Jubilee, the year in which wrongs would be righted, wounds be healed, sins forgiven, slaves set free, sight restored, lands returned to their rightful heirs. It was a day of new beginnings. The kingdom of God was at hand in the person and words of Jesus. With his coming in the power of the Holy Spirit, God’s vision of justice and social righteousness were breaking into a troubled and unjust world.

Isaiah 61 was Jesus’ mission statement and it became the mission statement of the church. His mission was God’s project of healing the cosmos, making right ancient wrongs, reversing the injustices of human society, of lifting up the poor and humble and bringing down the high and mighty, (“to be repairers of the devastations of many generations”). His mission was not only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, but also to believing Gentiles who would welcome his good news. Not all received Jesus, but as to many as turned around and believed, he gave the power to become the children of God (John 1).

As Jesus launched his mission, the poor, the sinners, the wounded, the oppressed, the blind, and the tax collectors gladly welcomed him. It was those whose privilege was threatened by transformation who rejected Jesus. They realized that he was turning the world upside down in a new day of justice and righteousness.

As the ambassadors of Christ’s reconciling love, the apostles, the sent ones, often met resistance and persecution. Many gave their lives to advance the reign of God in their announcement of the good news of God’s gracious presence and new life for those who repented and believed.

We are being called to launch this mission again in our place and time. While the Confession of Belhar arose from the struggle of South African Christians to give witness to the Gospel amidst the injustice of apartheid, we are also being called to give witness in the face of injustice here among us in the U.S.A. We see that injustice in the faces of thousands of First Nation peoples who still live in dire poverty on reservations; in young African American men who are incarcerated disproportionate to their percentage of the population; in the “legal limbo” status of immigrants, and in both native born Latinos who are subject to question in virtually every quarter of the nation; in public policies such as “stop and frisk” and “stand your ground” that put poor, black and brown young men at risk in the public square.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) confesses its commitment to God and to the biblical principles of unity, justice, and reconciliation because in times like these in which we live, we need to remind ourselves and others of our discipleship to Christ and follow God’s mission in the world.

Some will no doubt say that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) already has confessions for the reasons identified herein and more. But we say that these are unique times in the United States of America. The winds of polarization blow strong and threaten the body politic as never before. There is a not-so-subtle dangerous intermingling of God and nation that makes discerning the difference between the two difficult. Historic Reformed theological values are under constant attack. The forces of evil tempt followers of Christ to walk in the spirit of disunity, conflict, and injustice. As we claim the church’s earliest confession, JESUS IS LORD, we put on notice, every principality and power, that the only Sovereign in heaven and earth is on the move.

We, therefore, close with the ringing affirmation found in the final words from the Confession of Belhar:

“Jesus is Lord.

“To the one and only God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, be the honor and the glory for ever and ever.”

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the report and recommendations of the Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar to the 221st General Assembly (2014) be approved.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy affirms the recommendations of the Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar to include The Confession of Belhar and the accompanying letters in the Book of Confessions because they may help renew our commitment to Jesus Christ and to unity, reconciliation, and justice within the church here and within the worldwide Reformed communion. Reformed confessions serve a range of purposes: teaching, church-uniting, polemic, irenic, prophetic and pastoral, among others. Belhar brings its particular gifts, among which we recognize:

1. Belhar is a prophetic expression of the Reformed Christian faith made by a sister church in a critical context of oppression, reminding us of God’s capacity to call the church to creative witness and resistance, and thus may inspire other Christians in similar situations.

2. Belhar’s theological emphasis on reconciliation in relation to justice and unity is important, clear, and especially biblically resonant.

3. Belhar would enrich our church’s understanding of its Reformed confessional heritage by including a Reformed document that does not hail either from Europe or North America.
4. While our circumstance is not the South African one of the 1980s, there are similarities that make the message of Belhar also critical for us, as the special committee’s letter underlines.

5. Belhar combines biblical understandings of grace and gratitude with vocation and responsibility to reform the larger community as well as the hearts of believers. It thus presents a Reformed social ethic in short compass.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy affirms the wisdom of including an accompanying letter from our current situation, understanding that the inclusion of The Confession of Belhar should not be taken to preclude further confessional development by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), possibly involving full communion partners. It is our understanding the accompanying letter seeks to contain elements contained informally in the Frequently Asked Questions brochure about the potential place of Belhar within the Book of Confessions and important considerations concerning the current situation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The matters of disunity and injustice that we face, within and outside the church, need to be named with clarity, and principles and purposes of Reformed confessing need to be reaffirmed, including the understanding that confessions may focus on particular points and do not need to canvass all of scripture. That is, again, a purpose for having a Book of Confessions.

Overall the letter is strong and contains necessary current concerns and some sections that were particularly affirmed by ACSWP:

We are… being called to give witness in the face of injustice here among us in the U.S.A. We see that that injustice in the faces of thousands of First Nation peoples who still live in dire poverty on reservations; in young African American men who are incarcerated disproportionately to their percentage of the population; in the “legal limbo” status of immigrants, and in both native born Latinos who are subject to question in virtually every quarter of the union; in public policies such as “stop and frisk” and “stand your ground” that put poor, black and brown young men at risk in the public square.

Like-wise, the accompanying letter recognizes division in the church and the political economy: “The winds of polarization blow strong and threaten the body politic as never before… the forces of evil tempt followers of Christ to walk in the spirit of disunity, conflict, and injustice.”

Overall, however, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy—God forgive us!—found the letter to be perhaps a bit longer than it needs to be. Several ways of condensing and editing were proposed, seeking simply to streamline, understanding that the letter represents a creative balance of concerns embodied in the special committee. In one or two places, such as paragraph 21, the committee came up with an alternative way of stating a concern that does not suggest that previous General Assemblies explicitly sought to justify inequality:

We American Presbyterians have not fully confronted our own past regarding race. Both streams that came together to form the PC(USA) contained too many individuals and groups who used theology to justify permanent inequality in church and society. A theology committed to giving glory to God was twisted to sanction inequality, particularly directed at African Americans. To embody fully God’s ministry of reconciliation, we Presbyterians must confess that we have used God against others in our own church and commit ourselves to new patterns of relationship.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy did not, however, feel that it should propose amendments to the letter. The intent of the letter is clear. As a body of persons elected by the General Assembly to address matters of Christian conscience in light of our confessional heritage and social teachings, the committee believes that Belhar will strengthen the social witness dimension of the church’s mission, and that the confession itself is the key order of business before this General Assembly.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 13-01.

The members of ACREC support the report and recommendations of the General Assembly Special Committee on the Confession of Belhar with enthusiasm and deep gratitude. We concur with the special committee that the Confession of Belhar is indeed a word from God for the PC(USA) in our time. With the committee we urge congregations, councils, and seminaries to study the Confession of Belhar and the two accompanying letters prayerfully as they consider not only whether the Confession of Belhar should be included in the Book of Confessions but also the implications of the confession and the two accompanying letters for their life and ministry.

We concur with each part of the special committee’s recommendation, including the approval of the Accompanying Letter from the 221st General Assembly (2014). We uphold the Confession of Belhar as a whole and acknowledge its profound relevance for the United States in 2014. To name just one example: although our legal structures are not the same as those of South Africa when the Confession of Belhar was written, the racism of the United States today provides advantages to some and disadvantages to others based solely on “race,” a reality that leads to the “separation of people on a racial basis [and] promotes and perpetuates alienation, hatred, and enmity.” In our situation, we believe with the authors of the Confession of Belhar, that “the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged, ... [and] that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others.”

We have been inspired, and convicted, by the Confession of Belhar for many years. We now urge the General Assembly to approve the recommendations of the special committee and so provide an opportunity for the denomination as a whole to study the Confession of Belhar, consider its relevance for the PC(USA) in our time, and give thanks for the grace of the triune God “who gathers, protects, and cares for the church through Word and Spirit.”

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 13-01.

The ACWC strongly supports the adoption of Belhar as a testimony to the church’s solidarity with South Africa’s struggle against apartheid and a reflection of the church’s contemporary awareness of the ongoing struggles for justice in our world. The confession is timely and an essential witness against the evils of race hatred that still plague our world. The church has been called to advocate and stand in solidarity with all who are affected by marginalization and oppression for whatever reason. The Belhar Confession is a confession that perfectly reflects this concern of the church and how we have been called to be the church in the world of diversity.

The ACWC recognizes that the South African church context in which Belhar was written has differences from the context of discussions in the United States; however, the truth of this confession stretches across all contexts of race, culture, gender, and ethnicity. We agree that the citations of Scripture should be included as well as the attached letters. We also concur for the request of dismissal from the special committee with much thanks, noting their incredible work and dedication in this ministry.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 13-01

Comment on Item 13-01—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

GACOR advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the report and its recommendations. The Belhar Confession makes a profound statement on unity, reconciliation, and justice in the church. It will be an important tool for committees on representation to use in encouraging wide participation and discussion in councils.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of 16 persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

Item 13-02

[The assembly approved Item 13-02. See pp. 16, 24, 25.]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) forward the draft of the proposed Directory for Worship to the church for study and comment in consideration of submitting it to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) for approval. All comments should be directed to the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly by July 1, 2015.

Rationale

In the context of revisions to the Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the 216th General Assembly (2004) called the Office of the General Assembly and the Office of Theology and Worship to undertake a similar analysis of the Directory for Worship to evaluate its effectiveness with guidance in planning and conducting worship that is Reformed and culturally appropriate. A staff team from the Office of Constitutional Services and the Office of Theology and Worship, with assistance from the Office of Research Services, conducted a 2005 study to evaluate the effectiveness and use of the Directory for Worship. On the basis of these findings, the staff team recommended that the Directory for Worship would be more accessible and helpful if it were rewritten in a form that was somewhat shorter and better organized. This recommendation was approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006); however, the response was delayed due to ongoing consideration of a new Form of Government.

Now that this process is complete, the Office of Theology and Worship has produced a revised draft of the Directory for Worship, fulfilling the recommendations given above: shorter, better organized, more accessible, and thoroughly Reformed. In the spirit of the new Form of Government, the revised Directory for Worship seeks to foster freedom and flexibility, with openness to a broader range of worship styles and cultural expressions. In the spirit of Calvin’s “third use of the law,” the revised Directory for Worship is intended to be more than a rule book or scolding finger; this revision emphasizes guidance for those who plan and lead worship, and teaching for the whole people of God.

The Office of Theology and Worship and the Office of the General Assembly organized a consultation on the revised Directory for Worship in September 2013. A diverse group of scholars, pastors, and mid council leaders provided feedback on the proposed revision, which is being incorporated into a second draft. A final report, including the proposed revision of the Directory for Worship, will be presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). PLEASE NOTE that the revised Directory for Worship leaves the section on marriage in the current Directory for Worship (W-4.9000) untouched as that issue will come before the assembly as a separate item. As with the section on ordination in the new Form of Government, the Office of Theology and Worship asks that the church consider this revision of the Directory for Worship apart from debates over the definition of marriage.

This draft will be sent to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly for their information.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Directory for Worship

DRAFT OF REVISION

Preface

This Directory for Worship reflects the conviction that the faith, life, and worship of the church are inseparable. Its theology is based on the Bible, instructed by the Book of Confessions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and attentive to ecumenical relationships. It reflects and encourages a rich heritage of traditions and diversity of cultures.

A Directory for Worship is not a service book with fixed orders of worship and collections of prayers. Rather, it describes the theology that underlies our worship, outlines appropriate forms for worship, and highlights connections between worship and Christian life, witness, and service.

This directory presents standards and norms for worship in the congregations and councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). As the constitutional document ordering our worship, the Directory for Worship is authoritative for this church. At the same time, this directory is intended to suggest possibilities, invite development, and encourage ongoing reform.

Direct references to Scripture, the Book of Confessions, and other sections of the Book of Order are provided in parentheses; other biblical and confessional sources will be indicated in footnotes.

Chapter One: The Theology of Christian Worship

W-1.01: Christian Worship: An Introduction

W-1.0101: Glory to God

Christian worship gives all glory and honor, praise and thanksgiving to the holy, triune God. We are gathered in worship to glorify the God who is present and active among us—particularly through the gifts of Word and Sacrament. We are sent out in service to glorify the same God who is present and active in the world.

W-1.0102: Grace and Gratitude

God acts with grace; we respond with gratitude. This rhythm of divine action and human response—found throughout Scripture, human history, and everyday events—shapes all of Christian faith, life, and worship.

W-1.0103: God’s Covenant

The Old Testament tells the story of God’s steadfast love from generation to generation. To Noah and his family, to Abraham and Sarah, to Moses and Aaron, and to the house of David, God made promises of faithfulness, calling the people to respond in faith. In the fullness of time, God made a new and everlasting covenant with us through Jesus Christ.

W-1.0104: Jesus Christ

Fully human and fully divine, Jesus Christ came into the world to show God’s love, to save us from sin, and to offer eternal, abundant life to all. Jesus is God’s Word—spoken at creation, promised and revealed in Scripture, made flesh to dwell among us, crucified and raised in power, returning in glory to judge and reign.
Jesus Christ is the embodiment of God’s gracious action in history and the model for our grateful response to God. In Jesus we find the full and clear revelation of who God is; in him we also discover who God is calling us to be. Therefore we worship Jesus Christ as Lord, even as he leads us in the worship and service God desires.

W-1.0105: The Holy Spirit

The Holy Spirit manifests God’s gracious action and empowers our grateful response. The Scriptures describe how the Spirit moved at the dawn of creation, anointed Christ in baptism, and was poured out on the church at Pentecost. The same Spirit is still at work in the life of the church and the life of the nations.

The Holy Spirit gathers us for worship, enlightens and equips us through the Word, claims and nourishes us through the Sacraments, and sends us out for service. To each member of Christ’s body, the Spirit gives gifts for ministry in the church and mission in the world.

W-1.0106: Word and Sacrament

In Christian worship Jesus Christ is truly present and active among us, by the power of the Holy Spirit, through the gifts of Word and Sacrament. Wherever the Scriptures are read and proclaimed and the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord’s Supper are celebrated, the church bears witness to Jesus Christ, the living Word. Through these means of grace, God imparts and sustains our faith, orders our common life, and transforms the world. Through these same acts of worship, we share in the life of the Spirit, proclaim the mystery of faith, and give glory to God.

W-1.02: Time, Space, Matter

W-1.0201: Creation and Redemption

All time, space, and matter are created by God, redeemed by Christ, and made holy by the Spirit. Through Christian worship—at certain times, in particular places, and with special things—we participate in God’s plan for the redemption of all time, space, and matter for the glory of God.

W-1.0202: Time

Because God is the author of history, we may worship at any time. The Old Testament records the daily worship of the people of God, but teaches that one day in seven is to be set apart as holy to the Lord. The Gospels all testify that Jesus rose from the dead on the first day of the week. The apostles came to speak of this as the Lord’s Day, alluding to the day of the Lord anticipated by the prophets.

The first Christians began to celebrate Jesus’ resurrection every Lord’s Day, gathering to proclaim the Word and celebrate the Sacraments. The church continues to gather, especially on the first day of the week, to hear the gospel and break bread in Jesus’ name, with the confidence that the risen Lord is with us.

Through two thousand years of Christian history, the church has developed ways of keeping time in Christ—many of them adapted from the feasts and fasts of ancient Israel that Jesus kept. Through the festival days of the Christian year, we mark the Lord’s Nativity, Epiphany, Baptism, Transfiguration, Passion, Resurrection, Ascension, and Reign. Other festival days, such as Maundy Thursday, Good Friday, the Easter Vigil, surround the holy mystery of Jesus’ dying and rising. Still others, such as Ash Wednesday, the Day of Pentecost, Trinity Sunday, and All Saints Day, focus on the church’s life and faith. The seasons of Advent, Christmas, Lent, and Easter offer further opportunities for growth in faith and discipleship as we prepare for or celebrate the major festivals of the Christian year.

The pattern of daily prayer also connects the church with the worship of ancient Israel, centuries of Christian tradition, and Jesus’ own practices. Whether in large assemblies, with small groups, or at home, daily prayer serves as a bridge between public worship and personal affairs, helping us to live out our faith each day.

We mark other occasions in worship, reflecting the cycles of civic and agricultural life, cultural and family celebrations, the commemoration of significant persons and events, and the programs and activities of the church. It is appropriate to observe such things, provided that they never distract from the worship of the triune God.

W-1.0203: Space

Because heaven and earth belong to God, we may worship in any place. The Old Testament describes stone altars, tabernacles, temples, and other places where the people gathered and encountered God. The Gospels tell us that Jesus worshiped at the synagogue and temple, but he also worshiped in the wilderness, on hillsides, and at lakeshores.

The first Christians worshiped at the temple and in synagogues, homes, catacombs, and prisons. The important thing was not the place, but the gathering of Christ’s body—the people of God—and the presence of Christ among them in Word and Sac-
When a space is set apart for worship it should evoke reverence, encourage community, and be accessible to all. A space for Christian worship should include a place for the reading and proclamation of the Word, a font or pool for Baptism, and a table for the Lord’s Supper. The arrangement of these things should express their relationship to one another and their centrality in Christian worship. A space for worship should not be understood as an escape from the world, but a threshold between heaven and earth.

W-1.0204: Matter

Because God created the world and called it good, we use physical things in worship. The Old Testament tells of various things that were used in the worship of God: the ark, linens and vessels, oil and incense, musical instruments, grain, fruit, and animals. At the same time, the prophets warned of the danger of idolatry: mistaking physical things for divine presence and offering objects, instead of ourselves, to God. The Gospels show how Jesus used common things—nets and fish, jars and ointment, a towel and basin, water, bread, and wine—in his ministry of teaching, healing, and feeding. On the cross, he offered his body as a living sacrifice.

The first Christians, following Jesus, took three primary elements of life—water, bread, and wine—as symbols of God’s self-offering to us and our offering of ourselves to God. We have come to call these things Sacraments: signs of God’s gracious action and our grateful response. Through the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord’s Supper, God claims us as people of the covenant and nourishes us as members of Christ’s body; in turn, we pledge our loyalty to Christ and present our bodies as a living sacrifice of praise.

The offering of material gifts in worship is an expression of our self-offering, as an act of gratitude for God’s grace. We give our lives to God through Jesus Christ, who gave his life for us. The practice of offering also reflects our stewardship of God’s good creation. Mindful that the earth and everything in it belong to God, we present tithes and offerings for use in Christ’s ministry and mission.

We offer creative gifts in worship as well, including music, art, drama, movement, media, banners, vestments, vessels, furnishings, and architecture. When such gifts only call attention to themselves, they are idolatrous; when, in their simplicity of form and function, they give glory to God, they are appropriate for worship.

W-1.03: Language, Symbols, and Culture

W-1.0301: The Word Made Flesh

God brings all things into being by the Word. By the gift of the incarnation, this same, eternal Word of God became flesh and lived among us, in a particular person in a particular time and place—Jesus of Nazareth. Our use of language, symbols, and cultural forms in Christian worship is founded on the doctrine of Jesus’ incarnation. Through Jesus Christ, God speaks to us in truth and reaches out to us with grace; through Jesus Christ, we may speak truthfully to God and lift up our hearts with gratitude.

W-1.0302: Language

The mystery and reality of God transcends our experience, understanding, and speech. Our minds cannot comprehend God, and God cannot be reduced to our ways of speaking. Yet we are compelled to speak of the goodness, grace, and glory of the God who is revealed in the world around us, in Scripture, and above all, in Jesus Christ.

The Old Testament speaks of God in personal ways, as creator, covenant-maker, comforter, liberator, judge, redeemer, shepherd, sovereign, bearer, begetter. It addresses God as “Lord,” a word that conveys the sovereignty of God while standing in for the hidden name revealed to Moses at the burning bush. It also borrows images from nature, describing God as rock, well-spring, fire, light, eagle, hen, lion. The Gospels show how Jesus used and adapted these images when speaking to and about God, particularly in his intimate use of Abba, Father. He also claimed some of these terms in speaking about himself—as good shepherd, bridegroom, and Son of Man. New Testament writers continued to use and adapt Old Testament language in speaking about Jesus—especially in their use of “Lord” to convey his sovereignty over the powers of this world, and to connect him to the Holy One of Israel.

Language that faithfully describes and addresses God in worship is expansive, drawing from the full breadth and depth of biblical terms and images for the triune God as it remains faithful to the witness of Scripture. Language that describes and addresses the people of God is inclusive, respecting the diversity of persons, cultures, backgrounds, and experiences of the gathered community. Furthermore, the words we use in worship should be in the common language or languages of those who are gathered, so that all are able to receive good news and respond with authentic expressions of their faith.

W-1.0303: Symbols

Certain biblical images have come to have deeper significance, multiple associations, and lasting meaning for the people of God. We call these symbols. There are numerous examples in the Old Testament—tree, temple, rainbow, river, sheep, scroll, building, body. New Testament writers drew on this deep reservoir of common meaning to convey their understanding of Christ, the gospel, the church, and the realm of God. Certain prominent symbols from Scripture, such as light, book, water, bread, cup, and cross, play an important role in Christian worship. Such things are not to be objects to be worshiped, but signs that point to the grace of God in Jesus Christ.

We come to know God’s Word more fully when it is both proclaimed and enacted in worship. The Old Testament describes symbolic actions in the worship of ancient Israel—fasting and feasting, rejoicing and lamenting, dancing and singing, marking and anointing, cleansing and offering, doing justice and showing mercy. The Gospels demonstrate how Jesus brought new meaning to existing practices of faith—especially baptism and breaking bread—and transformed ordinary acts of compassion—healing the sick, giving alms to the poor, feeding the hungry, and washing feet—into new ways of serving God. Christian worship includes a variety of symbolic actions, with strong ties to these and other biblical practices—gathering and sending, kneeling and standing, speaking and singing, cleansing and offering, marking and anointing, eating and drinking, blessing and laying on of hands. These things convey the gracious action of God, and communicate our grateful response.

W-1.0304: Culture

From its beginning at Pentecost, the church of Jesus Christ has been a community of many cultures and languages, united by the power of the Holy Spirit. The book of Acts and the New Testament epistles record the challenges and controversies of an emerging church that would be “neither Jew nor Greek,” but one in Jesus Christ. As the church has grown and spread over two thousand years, it has taken root and flourished in cultures and lands all around the globe—bearing witness to the love of God for all the world and Christ’s sovereignty in every place. Finally, from the book of Revelation, we know that the company of the redeemed will be a great multitude from every nation, tribe, and people, singing praise to the Lamb of God.

Christian worship is, by its very nature, a cross-cultural event. It emerges from the context of a particular congregation and community. Faithful worship is sensitive to the diversity of traditions and cultures within and beyond the church, incorporating the words, images, symbols, and actions that best convey the good news of Jesus Christ in a particular gathering of God’s people. Furthermore, whenever and wherever we gather in Jesus’ name, we join the praise and prayer of the people of God in every time and place. Therefore, it is fitting that we share stories and sing songs from cultures other than our own as we pray for the church throughout the world.

Chapter Two: The Ordering of Reformed Worship

W-2.01: Sources and Principles

W-2.0101: Sources of Order

Reformed worship is to be faithful to the Holy Spirit who speaks in Scripture. The witness of Scripture provides the church’s preeminent, authoritative source for the ordering of worship. Those responsible for planning and leading worship should also be guided by the wider traditions of the universal church, the wisdom of our Reformed tradition, the culture and context of the worshiping community, and the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

W-2.0102: Form and Freedom

Christian worship has always been marked by a tension between form and freedom. Some traditions have emphasized established orders of worship, seeking to be faithful to the Scriptures. Others have resisted fixed forms of worship, asserting our freedom in Christ. We acknowledge that all forms of worship are provisional and subject to reformation. Fixed forms of worship are valuable in that they offer consistent patterns and practices help to form lives of faith and faithfulness. More spontaneous approaches to worship are valuable in that they provide space for unexpected insight and inspiration. In whatever form it takes, worship is to be ordered by God’s Word and open to the creativity of the Holy Spirit. (F-1.04)

W-2.02: The Worshiping Assembly

W-2.0201: A Royal Priesthood

In Jesus Christ, the church is called to be a royal priesthood, devoted to the service of God in the world. Worship is a collective activity of the people of God and an expression of our common life and ministry. It demands the full and active participation of the whole body of Christ, with heart, mind, soul, and strength. (G-1.03)

The ordering of worship should reflect the richness of cultural diversity in the congregation and the local context in which it ministers. The order of worship should provide for and encourage the participation of all; no one should be excluded for any reason.

Children and youth bring special gifts and grow in their faith through their regular participation in the church’s worship. Those who plan and lead worship should provide for their full participation in the Service for the Lord’s Day.

W-2.0202: Prayerful Participation

Prayer is a gift from God, who desires dialogue and relationship with us. It is a posture of faith and a way of living in the world. Prayer is also the primary way in which we participate in worship. Christian prayer is offered through Jesus Christ and empowered by the Holy Spirit. Faithful prayer is shaped by God’s Word in Scripture and inspires us to join God’s work in the world.

There are many kinds of prayer—adoration, thanksgiving, confession, supplication, intercession, dedication. There are many ways to pray—listening and waiting for God, remembering God’s gracious acts, crying out to God for help, or offering oneself to God. Prayer may be spoken, silent, sung, or enacted in physical ways.

The singing of psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs is a vital and ancient form of prayer. Singing engages the whole person, and helps to unite the body of Christ in common worship. The congregation itself is the church’s primary choir; the purpose of rehearsed choirs and other musicians is to lead and support the congregation in the singing of prayer. Special songs, anthems, and instrumental music may also serve to interpret the word and enhance the congregation’s prayer. Furthermore, many of the elements of the service of worship may be sung. Music in worship is always to be an offering to God, not merely an artistic display, source of entertainment, or cover for silence.

Participation in worship may involve a range of other actions: kneeling, bowing, standing, lifting hands; dancing, drumming, clapping, embracing, or joining hands; anointing and laying on of hands.

The gifts of the Spirit are for building up the church. Every action in worship should glorify God and contribute to the good of the people. Worshipers and worship leaders should avoid actions that only call attention to themselves and fail to serve the needs of the whole congregation.

W-2.03: Ordered Ministries and Leadership in Worship

W-2.0301: Gifts for Service

By their gifts and training, some members of the church are called to particular acts of leadership in worship and have particular responsibilities for ordering the service. These specific roles and responsibilities are undertaken in service to God and to the congregation, and should in no way diminish or overshadow the primary participation of the worshiping assembly. (G-1.03, G-2.01)

W-2.0302: Deacons

Deacons are called to lead the congregation in witness, compassion, and service. While deacons have no particular responsibilities for the ordering of worship, the session and teaching elder(s) should ensure that deacons have regular opportunities to lead in worship, and that their ministries of service, compassion, and witness are reflected in the public services of the church.

In the Service for the Lord’s Day, it is especially appropriate for deacons to read Scripture, lead the prayers of the people, prepare the table for the Lord’s Supper, and offer the charge at the conclusion of worship. (G-2.02)

W-2.0303: Ruling Elders

Ruling elders are called to nurture the common life of the people of God through their gifts of discernment and governance. In a particular congregation, they provide for the church’s worship and encourage the people’s participation. Specifically, when serving on the session, ruling elders: make provision for the regular preaching of the Word and celebration of the Sacraments, corporate prayer, and the offering of praise to God in song; oversee and approve all public worship in the congregation, with the exception of responsibilities reserved for the pastor; determine occasions, days, times, and places for worship; and have responsibility for the arrangement of worship space, the use of special appointments (flowers, candles, banners, paraments, and other objects), and the ministries of music, drama, dance, and visual arts.

In the Service for the Lord’s Day, it is especially appropriate for ruling elders to lead the call to worship, read Scripture, lead in prayer, receive the offering, serve communion and assist at baptisms, and offer the charge at the conclusion of worship. Ruling elders should also cultivate an ability to teach the Word, when called upon to do so. (G-2.03, G-3.02)

W-2.0304: Teaching Elders

Teaching elders (also called ministers of Word and Sacrament) are called to proclaim the Word, preside at the Sacraments, and equip the people for ministry in Jesus’ name. Specifically, teaching elders are responsible for: the selection of Scriptures to be read, the preparation of the liturgy and sermon, the selection of congregational songs, and the use of drama, dance, and other art forms in a particular service of worship.

In the Service for the Lord’s Day, a teaching elder is responsible for proclaiming the Word and presiding at Baptism and the Lord’s Supper. It is especially appropriate for teaching elders to speak the declaration of forgiveness and offer the blessing at the conclusion of worship; like the Word and Sacraments, these are focused expressions of the good news of the gospel. (G-2.05)
In a particular congregation, the order of worship, including printed worship aids or media presentations for a given service, is the responsibility of the teaching elder with the concurrence of the session. The selection of hymnals, service books, Bibles, and other more permanent worship resources is the responsibility of the session with the concurrence of the pastor, and in consultation with church musicians and educators. (G-2.05, G-3.02)

The teaching elder may confer with a worship committee in planning particular services. Where there is a music leader or choir director, the teaching elder will confer with that person on anthems and other musical offerings; the session will see that these conferences take place appropriately and on a regular basis. (G-2.05)

The session is responsible for educating the congregation about the church’s worship, in order to facilitate their full and active participation. The session should also provide for the regular study of this Directory for Worship, particularly in the training of ruling elders and deacons. (G-3.02)

In fulfilling their responsibilities for worship, sessions and teaching elders are accountable to presbytery. Presbyteries should discuss with sessions the character of their congregation’s worship, the standards governing it, and the fruit that it bears in the mission and ministry of the church. Presbyteries should provide instruction in worship, making use of this Directory for Worship in educational events for congregations, the preparation of candidates for ordination, and in the ongoing nurture of teaching elders. (G-3.03)

Chapter Three: The Service for the Lord’s Day

W-3.01: Worship on the Lord’s Day

W-3.0101: The Day of Resurrection

We gather to worship God on the Lord’s Day (Sunday) because the gospels testify that Jesus rose from the dead early on the first day of the week. The Lord’s Day is also called the “eighth day” of creation, a sign of the new creation that has begun with Christ’s resurrection. While we may worship God on any day and at any time, every Sunday service is a celebration of Christ’s resurrection and an anticipation of the fullness of God’s coming reign.

W-3.0102: Word and Sacrament

The Service for the Lord’s Day is a service of Word and Sacrament. We meet in the presence of the living Lord, who appeared to his disciples on the first day of the week—the day he rose from the dead—to interpret the Scriptures and break bread. Following Jesus’ example, the church proclaims the fullness of the gospel in Word and Sacrament on the Lord’s Day.

The Service for the Lord’s Day includes other actions as well: gathering and singing, confession and pardon, prayer and offering, blessing and sending. Through all of these actions, we are drawn into Christ’s presence and sent out in the power of the Spirit.

W-3.0103: The Order of Worship

An order of worship offers a meaningful and reliable structure for the church’s encounter with the living God. Over time, an order of worship helps to shape our faith and faithfulness as the people of God, becoming a pattern for how we live as Christians in the world.

The order of worship offered here for the Service for the Lord’s Day is rooted in Scripture, the traditions of the universal church, and our Reformed heritage. In particular, it seeks to uphold the centrality of Word and Sacraments in the church’s faith, life, and worship. Other orders of worship may well be appropriate in the context of a particular congregation or culture, provided that they are faithful to the Word, open to the Spirit, and dedicated to the glory of God.

W-3.02: Gathering

W-3.0201: Preparing for Worship

Worship begins as the people gather—greeting one another, praying in silence, sharing announcements, or offering music to the glory of God. The act of assembling in Jesus’ name bears witness to the church’s identity and mission as Christ’s body in the world.

W-3.0202: Opening Sentences

A call to worship, typically drawn from sentences of Scripture, expresses God’s invitation to gather as Christ’s body in this place. This action may include a greeting in the name of Jesus Christ or the triune God. Because the session is responsible for the nurture of the community, as well as the oversight of times and places for worship, it is especially appropriate for a ruling elder to lead the call to worship.

W-3.0203: Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs

For millennia the people of God have sung psalms as praise and prayer to God. Early Christians continued to sing, pray, and study the psalms, interpreting them in the light of Jesus’ life, death, and resurrection. Singing psalms remains an important part of the Reformed heritage. To the psalms the church began to add other hymns, canticles, and spiritual songs. Through the ages and from varied cultures, the church has developed many other forms of congregational song, accompanied by a great array of instruments. We draw from this rich repertoire in the Service for the Lord’s Day, singing glory to God.

W-3.0204: Opening Prayer

An opening prayer may be offered, giving thanks and praise to God, expressing joy in the presence of Christ, and calling on the gifts of the Spirit for the gathered community. Alternately, a prayer of the day may introduce primary themes and biblical images for the service that follows.

W-3.0205: Confession and Pardon

Having praised the holiness of God, we must also face the sinful state of our lives, confessing our unworthiness to enter into God’s presence. This turn from praise to confession, emphasized in the Service for the Lord’s Day, is one of the hallmarks of the Reformed tradition.

A call to confession expresses God’s initiative in calling for repentance and promising grace. We approach God with confidence, confessing the reality of sin, captivity, and brokenness in personal and common life and asking for God’s saving grace. The prayer of confession may include the singing of a prayer for grace, such as “Lord, have mercy.” A declaration of forgiveness proclaims the good news of God’s mercy and offers the assurance of pardon in Jesus’ name. Leading this element of worship from the font connects our confession with the grace and cleansing of Baptism, and the baptismal call to new life in Christ. Because of these associations with the ministry of Word and Sacrament, it is especially appropriate for a teaching elder to lead the confession and pardon.

Other actions may follow—a song of praise, such as “Glory be to the Father” or “Glory to God”; a summary of the law or call to faithfulness; and the sharing of peace as a sign of reconciliation in Christ.

W-3.03: Word

W-3.0301: Theology of Proclamation

The Scriptures bear witness to the Word of God, revealed most fully in Jesus Christ, the Word who “became flesh and lived among us” (John 1:14). Where the Word is read and proclaimed, Jesus Christ the living Word is present by the power of the Holy Spirit. Therefore, the reading, hearing, preaching, and affirming of the Word are central to Christian worship and essential to the Service for the Lord’s Day.

A teaching elder is responsible for the selection of Scriptures to be read in public worship. Selected readings should be drawn from both Old and New Testaments, and over a period of time should reflect the full message of Scripture. Selections for readings should be guided by the seasons and festivals of the Christian year, events in the world, and pastoral concerns in the local congregation. Schedules of readings, such as the Revised Common Lectionary, ensure a broad range of biblical texts as well as consistency and connection with the universal church. The teaching elder is also responsible for the version of the Bible to be used in public worship. The Scriptures should be read in the common language(s) of the worshiping community. The congregation should be informed of significant adaptations, paraphrases, or new translations.

The Word proclaimed is to be based on the Word written in Scripture. Preaching requires diligence and discernment in the study of Scripture, listening for the voice of God through the discipline of daily prayer, theological reflection on the message of the gospel, sensitivity to the context of the congregation, attentiveness to what the Spirit is saying to the church, awareness of events in the world, and consistent and personal obedience to Jesus Christ. The sermon should present the gospel with clarity and simplicity, in language that all can understand. The gifts of song, drama, dance, and visual art may be employed in the proclamation of the Word. These other forms of proclamation should be overseen by the session and teaching elder, to ensure that the gospel is presented faithfully. (G-2.03, G-3.02)

We respond to the proclamation of the Word in a variety of ways: confessing the faith of the church, celebrating or reaffirming the Sacrament of Baptism, praying for the church and world, and offering our lives in gratitude for God’s grace. The proclamation of the Word is incomplete if it fails to evoke the response of the people of God. When the Word is proclaimed, we are called, above all, to discern Jesus Christ, receive his grace, and respond to his call with obedience. All of these things depend on the gifts of the Holy Spirit, whom we seek in prayer.
W-3.0302: Prayer for Illumination

A prayer for illumination calls on the Holy Spirit to empower the reading, understanding, proclaiming, and living of God’s Word. This sense of utter reliance on the illumination of the Spirit is an important and distinctive mark of the Reformed tradition. The prayer for illumination precedes the reading of Scripture and preaching of the sermon and applies to all of the readings, as well as the proclamation of the Word.

W-3.0303: Scripture

The public reading of Scripture should be clear, audible, and attentive to the meaning of the text. The session should ensure that readers are prepared for this important ministry. Reading from the church’s Bible, as opposed to loose sheets of paper, conveys a sense of the permanence and weight of the Word of God, and demonstrates the communal nature of the biblical story.

Anyone may be invited to read Scripture, including children and youth. Because deacons are charged with the ministry of witness to the gospel, and ruling elders are responsible for providing for the proclamation of the Word, it is especially appropriate for a deacon or ruling elder to read Scripture.

The role of the congregation is to listen prayerfully, actively, and attentively to the Word that is read and proclaimed. Listening requires expectation, concentration, and imagination. The congregation may also participate in the presentation of Scripture through unison, responsive, or antiphonal readings, or by following along with printed or projected materials. Spoken responses may conclude the reading of Scripture.

W-3.0304: Musical Responses

Psalms, canticles, anthems, alleluias, songs of praise, or other musical responses may accompany the reading of the Word. In the design of the Revised Common Lectionary, the psalm for the day is intended to be a sung response to the first Scripture reading (Old Testament or, in Easter, Acts), giving the congregation an opportunity to reflect on and pray from that text.

W-3.0305: Sermon

A sermon, based on the Scripture(s) read in worship, proclaims the good news of the risen Lord and presents the gift and calling of the gospel. Through the sermon, we are instructed by God’s Word, equipped to follow Christ more faithfully, and inspired to proclaim the gospel in our own words and deeds. The sermon may conclude with prayer, an ascription of praise, or a call to discipleship. In keeping with the ministry of Word and Sacrament, a teaching elder ordinarily preaches the sermon.

W-3.0306: Affirmation of Faith

Responding to the Word proclaimed, we affirm our faith in the holy, triune God. This affirmation of faith is drawn from sentences of Scripture or the creeds, confessions, and catechisms of the church. A congregational song, anthem, or other musical response may serve as an affirmation of faith. Opportunities for personal testimony may also be provided at this time. When Baptism or the reaffirmation of Baptism is to take place, the Apostles’ Creed is spoken in the context of the baptismal liturgy. The Nicene Creed, our most ancient and universal confession of faith, is especially appropriate when the Lord’s Supper is celebrated.

W-3.0307: Baptism and Baptismal Discipleship

The Sacrament of Baptism (W-3.0402–.0408) and other services associated with the baptismal covenant take place as a response to the Word. Such services include the reaffirmation of baptism on profession of faith (W-4.0203), the reception of new members (W-4.0204), commissioning for service (W-4.03), ordination and installation to ordered ministry (W-4.04), transitions in life or ministry (W-4.05), commemorations of communal events, Christian marriage (W-4.06), and witness to the resurrection (W-4.07). An invitation to discipleship may also be spoken at this time, calling worshipers to be baptized or to live into the promises of their baptism.

W-3.0308: Prayers of the People

In response to the Word, we pray for the world God so loves—joining Christ’s own ministry of intercession and the sighs of the Spirit, too deep for words. These prayers are not the work of a single leader, but an act of the whole congregation, as Christ’s royal priesthood. They are to be voiced in such a way that the whole church may say “amen.”

Prayers of intercession and supplication are offered for: the mission and ministry of the universal church and the local congregation; care of creation and the right use of resources; peace and justice in the world; the leaders and peoples of all nations; the poor, hungry, and oppressed; compassion and reconciliation in the local community; healing and wholeness for all who suffer in body, mind, or spirit; and other special needs. These prayers may be led from the communion table or from the midst of the congregation. They may include musical responses or symbolic action.
Because deacons are responsible for ministries of compassion and ruling elders are charged with the nurture of the congregation, it is especially appropriate for a deacon or ruling elder to lead the prayers of the people.

W-3.04: Sacrament

W-3.0401: Theology of the Sacraments

The Sacraments are the Word of God enacted and sealed in the life of the church, the body of Christ. Sacraments are gracious acts of God, by which Christ Jesus offers his life to us in the power of the Holy Spirit. Sacraments are also human acts of gratitude, by which we offer our lives to God in love and service. Sacraments are both physical signs and spiritual gifts, including words and actions, surrounded by prayer, in the context of the church’s common worship. They employ ordinary things—the basic elements of water, bread, and wine—in proclaiming the extraordinary love of God. The Reformed tradition recognizes the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord’s Supper (or Eucharist) as having been instituted by the Lord Jesus Christ through the witness of the Scriptures and sustained through the history of the universal church.

W-3.0402: Theology of Baptism

Baptism is the sign and seal of our incorporation into Jesus Christ. In his own baptism, Jesus identified himself with sinners—yet God claimed him as a beloved Son, and sent the Holy Spirit to anoint him for service. In his ministry, Jesus offered the gift of living water. Through the baptism of his suffering and death, Jesus set us free from the power of sin forever. After he rose from the dead, Jesus commissioned his followers to go and make disciples, baptizing them and teaching them to obey his commands. The disciples were empowered by the outpouring of the Spirit to continue Jesus’ mission and ministry, inviting others to join this new way of life in Christ. As Paul wrote, through the gift of Baptism we are “dead to sin and alive to God in Christ Jesus” (Rom. 6:11).

The Sacrament of Baptism holds a deep reservoir of theological meaning, including: dying and rising with Jesus Christ; pardon, cleansing, and renewal; the gift of the Holy Spirit; incorporation into the body of Christ; and a sign of the realm of God. The Reformed tradition understands Baptism to be a sign of God’s covenant. The water of Baptism flows from the waters of creation, the flood, and the exodus. Baptism thus connects us with God’s creative purpose, cleansing power, and redemptive promise from generation to generation. Like circumcision, a sign of God’s gracious covenant with Israel, Baptism is a sign of God’s gracious covenant with the church. In this new covenant of grace we are washed clean, made holy and whole. Baptism also represents God’s call to justice and righteousness, rolling down like a mighty stream, and the river of the water of life, flowing from God’s throne.

Baptism enacts and seals what the Word proclaims: God’s redeeming grace offered to all people. Baptism is God’s gift of grace and also God’s call to respond to that grace. Baptism calls us to repentance, faithfulness, and discipleship. Baptism gives the church its identity and commissions the church for service in the world.

Baptism is the bond of unity in Jesus Christ. When we are baptized, we are made one with Christ, with one another, and with the church of every time and place. In Christ, barriers of race, status, and gender are overcome; we are called to seek reconciliation in the church and world, in Jesus’ name.

Both believers and their children are included in God’s covenant love. The baptism of believers witnesses to the truth that God’s gift of grace calls for our grateful response. The baptism of our children witnesses to the truth that God claims people in love even before they are able to respond in faith. These two forms of witness are one and the same Sacrament.

God’s faithfulness to us is sure, even when human faithfulness to God is not. God’s grace is sufficient; therefore baptism is not repeated. There are many times in worship, however, when we may remember the gift of our baptism and acknowledge the grace of God continually at work in us. These may include: profession of faith; when participating in another’s baptism; when joining or leaving a church; at an ordination, installation, or commissioning; and at each celebration of the Lord’s Supper. Indeed, Baptism calls for development in faith and decision at every stage of life’s way as we seek to respond with gratitude to God’s gift of grace.

Baptism is to be celebrated on the Lord’s Day, along with the proclamation of the Word and the celebration of the Lord’s Supper in the company of the whole congregation. The presence of the covenant community bears witness to the one body of Christ, into whom we are baptized. When extraordinary circumstances call for the administration of Baptism apart from public worship, the congregation should be represented by one or more members of the session.

As there is one body, there is one Baptism. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes all baptisms by other Christian churches that are administered with water and performed in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

W-3.0403: Responsibility for Baptism

Baptism is to be overseen by the session and administered by a teaching elder or ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service. The session’s responsibilities for Baptism include: encouraging parents to present their children for Baptism without undue haste or undue delay; encouraging new believers to be baptized; examining candidates for Baptism, or their parents or guardians, and instructing them in the significance of the Sacrament; enrolling those who are baptized as members of the congregation; and providing for their ongoing nurture and formation. The congregation as a whole, on behalf of the universal church, is responsible for nurturing baptized persons in Christian life. The session may designate certain members of the congregation as sponsors or mentors for those who are baptized or for their parents or guardians. (G-2.05, G-2.10, G-3.02)

When a child is presented for Baptism at least one parent or guardian will be an active member of a particular congregation, normally the one in which the baptism takes place. The session may consider a request to baptize a child whose parent or guardian is an active member of another congregation. If the session approves such a request, it must consult with the council of the other congregation and notify them when the Sacrament has been administered. Those presenting children for Baptism will promise to nurture and guide them until they are ready to make a personal profession of faith and assume the responsibility of active church membership. (G-1.04)

A council may authorize a teaching elder to preside at Baptism in certain situations beyond the congregational setting, such as hospitals, prisons, schools, military bases, and new worshiping communities. In these cases, the teaching elder is responsible for ensuring that the newly baptized person is enrolled as a member of a congregation. (G-3.02, G-3.03)

W-3.0404: Presentation

Following the sermon, the teaching elder introduces the Sacrament of Baptism with sentences of Scripture; other sentences of Scripture may be spoken by ruling elders, members of the congregation, or ecumenical witnesses. On behalf of the session, a ruling elder presents each candidate for Baptism. Those desiring baptism for their children or themselves express their intent to receive the sacrament. Parents or guardians, sponsors (if applicable), and the congregation make vows to support and nurture those being baptized. No one comes to Baptism alone; we are encouraged by family or friends and surrounded by the community of faith.

W-3.0405: Profession of Faith

Candidates for baptism or their parents or guardians renounce evil and profess their faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior. Those who are being baptized upon profession of faith declare their intent to participate actively and responsibly in the worship and mission of the church. They join the congregation in professing their faith, using the Apostles’ Creed, the ancient baptismal affirmation of the early church.

W-3.0406: Thanksgiving Over the Water

At the place of baptism, a teaching elder leads the people in prayer: giving thanks for God’s covenant faithfulness through history; praising God’s gracious and reconciling action in Jesus Christ; and asking the Holy Spirit to attend and empower the baptism, give deliverance and rebirth, and equip the church for faithfulness.

W-3.0407: The Act of Baptism

Accompanied by a visible and generous use of water, the teaching elder addresses each person by their Christian or given name, and says: “I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit” (Matt. 28:19). The water used for Baptism should be from a local source, and may be applied by pouring or immersion.

Other actions signifying the gift of the Holy Spirit, such as the laying on of hands and anointing with oil, may be included. However, the central act of baptizing with water in the name of the triune God must not be overshadowed.

W-3.0408: Welcome

The newly baptized person is welcomed as a member of the church, the body of Christ. Appropriate gifts may be given, such as a candle (reflecting the light of Christ) or a baptismal garment (signifying being clothed with Christ). The peace of Christ may be exchanged. The Lord’s Supper appropriately follows; those who have just been baptized may be invited to receive communion first.

W-3.0409: Theology of the Lord’s Supper

The Lord’s Supper (or Eucharist) is the sign and seal of our communion with the crucified and risen Lord. Jesus shared meals with his followers throughout his earthly life and ministry—common suppers, miraculous feasts, and the covenant commemorations of Israel, in which the people ate and drank in the presence of the Lord, rejoicing. Jesus spoke of himself as the bread of life, and the true vine, in whom we are branches. On the night before his death, Jesus met with his disciples to share bread and wine, speaking of them as his body and blood, signs of the new covenant. He told them to keep this feast, remembering him. On the day of his resurrection, Jesus made himself known to his disciples in the breaking of the bread. The disciples continued to devote themselves to the apostles’ teaching, fellowship, prayers, and the common meal. As Paul wrote, as often as we share this bread and cup, we “proclaim the Lord’s death until he comes” (1 Cor. 11:26).
The Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper offers an abundant feast of theological meaning, including: thanksgiving to God the Father; remembrance of Jesus Christ; invocation of the Holy Spirit; communion in the body of Christ; and a meal of the realm of God. The Reformed tradition understands the Lord’s Supper to be a sign of God’s covenant. The bread of the Lord’s Supper is linked with the bread of Passover and the gift of manna in the wilderness. The Lord’s Supper thus connects us with God’s saving power and providential care from generation to generation. Like the offering of sacrifices, a sign of Israel’s thanksgiving for God’s faithfulness, the Lord’s Supper is a sacrifice of praise and a sign of our gratitude for God’s steadfast love. The Lord’s Supper represents God’s gracious invitation to an everlasting covenant. The Lord’s Supper also reflects our calling to feed others as we have been fed, and offers a foretaste of that heavenly banquet when God will wipe away every tear and swallow up death forever.

The Lord’s Supper enacts and seals what the Word proclaims: God’s sustaining grace offered to all people. The Lord’s Supper is God’s gift of grace and also God’s call to respond to that grace. The Lord’s Supper nourishes us in righteousness, faithfulness, and discipleship. The Lord’s Supper renews the church in its identity and sends the church to mission in the world.

When we gather at the Lord’s Supper we are drawn into the presence of Christ and united with the church in every place. We join with all the faithful in heaven and on earth in offering thanksgiving to the triune God. We renew the vows we have taken in our baptism, and recommit ourselves to love and serve God, one another, and our neighbors in the world.

The opportunity to eat and drink with Christ is not a right bestowed upon the worthy, but a privilege given to the undeserving who come in faith, repentance, and love. All who come to the table are offered the bread and cup, regardless of their age or understanding. If some of those who come have not yet been baptized, an invitation to baptismal preparation and baptism should be graciously extended.

Worshipers prepare themselves to celebrate the Lord’s Supper by putting their trust in Christ, confessing their sin, and seeking reconciliation with God and one another. Even those who doubt may come to the table in order to be assured of God’s love and grace in Jesus Christ.

The Lord’s Supper is to be celebrated as a regular part of the Service for the Lord’s Day, along with the proclamation of the Word, in the company of the whole congregation. When local circumstances call for the Lord’s Supper to be celebrated less frequently, the session may approve other schedules for celebration, in no case less than quarterly. If the Lord’s Supper is celebrated less frequently than on each Lord’s Day, public notice is to be given at least one week in advance so that all may prepare to receive the sacrament.

W-3.0410: Responsibility for the Lord’s Supper

The Lord’s Supper is to be overseen by the session and administered by a teaching elder or ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service. The session may authorize the celebration of the Lord’s Supper at events other than the Service for the Lord’s Day, including services of Christian marriage, ordination and installation, services of wholeness, ministry to the sick, and services of witness to the resurrection. At all such events, the Word is to be read and proclaimed. Even when such services involve only a few members of the congregation, the Lord’s Supper is to be understood as an act of the whole church, not a private ceremony. (G-2.05, G-2.10, G-3.02)

A council may authorize the celebration of the Lord’s Supper in certain situations beyond the congregational setting, such as hospitals, prisons, schools, military bases, and new church developments. (G-3.02, G-3.03)

W-3.0411: Offering

Christian life is an offering of one’s self to God. In the Lord’s Supper we are presented with the costly self-offering of Jesus Christ for the life of the world. As those who have been claimed and set free by his grace, we respond with gratitude, offering him our lives, our spiritual gifts, and our material goods. Every service of worship should include an opportunity to respond to Christ’s call to discipleship through self-offering. The gifts we offer express our stewardship of creation, demonstrate our care for one another, support the ministries of the church, and provide for the needs of the poor.

Tithes and offerings are gathered as an act of thanksgiving to God. Gifts of food for the poor may also be collected at this time, and the table may be prepared for the Lord’s Supper. All of these gifts are received with a prayer of dedication to God, spoken or sung. Because ruling elders and deacons are charged with the stewardship of the church’s resources and leadership in ministry to the poor, it is especially appropriate for a ruling elder or deacon to lead this prayer. Signs of Christ’s peace and reconciliation may be exchanged, if this did not take place earlier in the service.

W-3.0412: Great Thanksgiving

Following the offering and the preparation of the table, a teaching elder may invite worshipers to the Lord’s Supper with sentences of Scripture. At the table, the teaching elder leads the people in a threefold prayer to the triune God: giving thanks for God’s creative power, providential care, and covenant faithfulness, along with particular blessings of the day; remembering God’s acts of salvation through Jesus’ birth, life, death, resurrection, ascension, and promised return, as well as his institution of the Sacrament (if not otherwise spoken at the invitation to the table or the breaking of the bread); and calling on the Holy Spirit to draw worshipers into the presence of the risen Lord, nourish them in the body and blood of Christ, unite them with Christ in the communion of saints and the church in every place, and send them in mission to the world. The prayer ends with an ascription of praise to the triune God. Musical acclamations, such as “Holy, holy, holy,” “Christ has died,” and “Amen,” may be included. The Lord’s Prayer follows.

W-3.0413: Breaking the Bread

In full view of the people, the teaching elder breaks the bread and pours the cup, or lifts a cup that has already been filled. These actions may be accompanied by sentences of Scripture or performed in silence. The use of one loaf and one cup expresses the unity of the body of Christ and the communal nature of the sacrament. The bread used for the Lord’s Supper should be common to the culture of the congregation; those who prepare the bread should make provision for persons with food allergies. The session will determine what form of the fruit of the vine is used; a non-alcoholic option should always be provided.

W-3.0414: Communion

The bread and cup are shared in the manner most appropriate to the occasion. Worshipers may gather at the table, come forward to meet the servers, or receive the bread and cup where they are. The bread may be broken and placed in people’s hands or they may receive pieces of bread prepared for distribution. They may drink from a common cup, receive individual cups, or dip the broken bread into the cup. Ordinarily ruling elders, deacons, and teaching elders serve the bread and cup; the session may authorize other church members to do so. While the bread and cup are shared worshipers may sing; other music may be offered; appropriate passages of Scripture may be read; or the people may pray in silence.

When all have received the bread and cup the remaining elements are placed on the table. The teaching elder then leads the people in prayer, thanking God for the gift of the Sacrament and asking for grace to live and serve faithfully until the coming of Christ’s realm in fullness.

Immediately after the service, the bread and cup may be shared with absent, homebound, or hospitalized members by two or more persons in ordered ministry. Those who carry out this extended service of communion should be authorized by the session; equipped with the necessary theological, pastoral, and liturgical gifts and resources; and instructed to maintain the unity of Word and Sacrament through the reading of Scripture and offering of prayers.

At the conclusion of the Service for the Lord’s Day, the bread and cup should be removed from the table and used or disposed of in a manner approved by the session, in keeping with the Reformed understanding of the Sacrament and principles of good stewardship.

W-3.0415: If the Lord’s Supper Is Omitted

The Lord’s Supper is integral to the Service for the Lord’s Day, a service of Word and Sacrament. If, in local circumstances and by the decision of the session, the Lord’s Supper is to be omitted from Sunday worship, the service continues after the prayers of the people with the offering and a prayer of thanksgiving and dedication, followed by the Lord’s Prayer.

W-3.05: Sending

W-3.0501: Acts of Commitment

In response to the Word we have received in the Sacraments, we affirm Christ’s call to discipleship through acts of commitment. Such acts of commitment may include: closing hymns, psalms, or spiritual songs that send us out to live the gospel by God’s grace; creative or symbolic actions expressing our resolve to share in Christ’s mission; declarations of intent to prepare for or desire to receive the Sacrament of Baptism, or to reaffirm the baptismal covenant; commissioning to ministries of evangelism, compassion, justice, and reconciliation; farewells to members of the church who are departing; and brief invitations or announcements related to the church’s mission.

W-3.0502: Blessing and Charge

The Service for the Lord’s Day concludes with a blessing in the name of the triune God, such as the priestly blessing or apostolic benediction. Because this blessing is an expression of the gospel of God’s grace and an extension of the ministry of the Word and Sacrament, a teaching elder ordinarily speaks the blessing.

We are blessed in order to be a blessing to others. The charge to the people calls the church to go forth as agents of God’s mission in the world. Because deacons are responsible for the church’s ministry of witness and service, and ruling elders have oversight of the church’s faithfulness to God’s mission, it is especially appropriate for a deacon or ruling elder to speak the charge.

W-3.0503: Service in the World

Christian worship and service does not end at the conclusion of the Service for the Lord’s Day; we go forth to love and serve the Lord in daily living. In so doing, we seek to fulfill our chief end: to glorify and enjoy God forever.
Chapter Four: Pastoral and Occasional Services

W-4.01: Pastoral and Occasional Services

W-4.0101: Flowing from Baptism

As a sign and seal of God’s gracious action and our grateful response, Baptism is the foundation for all Christian commitment. The following pastoral and occasional services are all rooted in the baptismal covenant and flow from the promises of Baptism. Such occasions may be appropriately celebrated following the proclamation of the Word during the Service for the Lord’s Day, or may be recognized in other services of public worship. They are fittingly led from the church’s baptismal font or pool.

W-4.02: Reaffirmation of the Baptismal Covenant

W-4.0201: Nurturing the Baptized

In Baptism each Christian is set free from sin, marked as Christ’s own, sealed by the Holy Spirit, made a member of the church, welcomed to the Lord’s Supper, and set apart for a life of service. It is the responsibility of the whole congregation, particularly exercised through the session, to nurture those who are baptized as they grow in faith and seek to respond to Christ’s call to discipleship. When a person is baptized as an infant or child, the session should equip and support the parent(s) or guardian(s) in this endeavor. When a person is baptized as an adolescent or adult, the session should provide ongoing opportunities for Christian formation and instruction.

W-4.0202: Welcoming to the Table

When children who have been baptized begin to express a desire to receive the Lord’s Supper, the session should provide an occasion to welcome them to the table in public worship. Their introduction to the Lord’s Supper should include ongoing instruction or formation in the meaning and mystery of the sacraments.

W-4.0203: Public Profession

When those who have been baptized as children are ready to make a public profession of faith and accept the responsibility of life in the church (sometimes called “confirmation”), the session should provide an opportunity for them to do so. They are to be instructed in the faith, examined by the session, received as active members, and presented to the congregation in public worship. At this time, they reaffirm the vows of Baptism by renouncing evil and affirming their reliance on God’s grace, professing their faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, and declaring their intent to participate actively and responsibly in the worship, life, governance, and mission of the church. On such occasions, it is fitting for all worshipers to reaffirm the baptismal covenant. (G-1.04, G-3.02)

W-4.0204: New Members

The congregation receives new members by transfer of certificate or by reaffirmation of faith. After they are examined and received by the session, new members should be welcomed in worship. It is appropriate for them to reaffirm the commitments made in Baptism, profess their faith in Jesus Christ, and declare their intent to participate actively and responsibly in the worship, life, governance, and mission of the church. On such occasions, it is fitting for all worshipers to reaffirm the baptismal covenant.

W-4.0205: Renewal and Fresh Commitment

In the lives of believers and in congregational life there are special occasions of awakening, renewal, or commitment; these are appropriately celebrated through the reaffirmation of the baptismal covenant. People should be encouraged to share these decisive moments and stirrings of the Spirit with the teaching elder and session, so that they may be acknowledged and affirmed in public worship.

W-4.03: Commissioning for Service

W-4.0301: Acts of Christian Service

In Baptism each Christian is called to discipleship and sent in service to the world. God also calls people to particular acts of service in the church and world: within the congregation, as teachers, trustees, musicians, or committee members; on behalf of the congregation, through its ministry in the local community; in the larger church, through service on denominational and ecumenical councils; and beyond the church, cooperating with others who work for compassion, justice, and reconciliation. These kinds of vocation are appropriately confirmed in the Service for the Lord’s Day, either as a response to the proclamation of the Word or as an act of sending. They may also be recognized in other services of worship.

W-4.04: Ordination, Installation, and Commissioning

W-4.0401: Called to Ministry

In Baptism each Christian is called to ministry in Christ’s name. God calls some persons to serve in congregations in particular ways. In ordination the church sets apart with prayer and the laying on of hands those who have been called by God through the voice of the church to serve as deacons, ruling elders, and teaching elders. In installation the church sets in place with prayer those who have been previously ordained as deacons, ruling elders, and teaching elders, and are now called anew to service in that ministry. In commissioning the church recognizes other forms of ministry in the church: ruling elders called to pastoral service, certified Christian educators, and other certified persons.

_W-4.0402: Setting for the Service_

Ordination, installation, and commissioning may take place during the Service for the Lord’s Day as a response to the proclamation of the Word. Ordination, installation, and commissioning may also take place in a special service that focuses on Jesus Christ, the gifts of the Holy Spirit, and the mission and ministry of the church, and which includes the proclamation of the Word and celebration of the Lord’s Supper. The ordination and/or installation of a teaching elder should take place at a time that enables substantial participation from the presbytery.

_W-4.0403: Order of Worship_

A service of ordination, installation, or commissioning should focus on Christ and the joy and responsibility of serving him through the mission and ministry of the church. Following the sermon, a teaching elder briefly states the nature of the ministry to which persons are being ordained, installed, or commissioned. Those who are being ordained, installed, or commissioned gather at the baptismal font. The moderator of the appropriate council (session for deacons, ruling elders, educators, and other certified persons; presbytery for teaching elders and ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service) asks them the constitutional questions, using the forms provided in this _Book of Order_. A ruling elder asks the corresponding questions of the congregation. When all questions have been answered in the affirmative, those to be ordained will kneel, if able, for the laying on of hands and the prayer of ordination. (The presbytery commission lays on hands at the ordination of teaching elders; its moderator may invite other teaching elders and ruling elders to participate. Members of the session lay on hands at the ordination of ruling elders and deacons; the session may invite other ruling elders and teaching elders to participate.) Those previously ordained will stand, if able, along with the congregation, for the prayer of installation. After this, the moderator makes the declaration of ordination, installation, or commissioning. Members of the session or presbytery welcome the newly ordained, installed, or commissioned person(s). In the case of the installation of a teaching elder, persons may be invited to charge the teaching elder and congregation to faithfulness in ministry and mutuality in relationship. When a teaching elder is ordained or installed, it is appropriate for that person to preside at the Lord’s Supper in the same service; she or he will also give the blessing at the conclusion of the service. When ruling elders or deacons are ordained or installed, it is appropriate for one or more of them to give the charge.

_W-4.05: Marking Transitions_

_W-4.0501: God’s Constant Grace_

In Baptism each Christian is assured of God’s constant grace and sustaining care through every transition, season, trial, and celebration of life. Services on occasions of transitions in ministry bear witness to this grace, and allow worshipers to express their thanksgiving, support, or concern.

_W-4.0502: Departing Members_

When members leave a congregation, we rejoice in gifts of their presence among us, acknowledge the sense of loss that will come with their absence, and celebrate our ongoing relationship in Christ through the baptism we share. The recognition of departing members appropriately takes place in the context of the Service for the Lord’s Day, either as a response to the proclamation of the Word or as an act of sending. The service should include prayers of thanksgiving and intercession for those members who are departing: that they may remain in the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit.

_W-4.0503: Conclusion of Ministry_

It is appropriate to recognize the conclusion of a period of ministry, giving thanks for the gifts and service of particular persons—whether through ordered ministry, as deacons, ruling elders, or teaching elders; in specific acts of discipleship; or in other forms of service to the church or in the world. This recognition may take place in the context of the Service for the Lord’s Day, either as a response to the proclamation of the Word or as an act of sending, or in other services of worship. The service should include prayers of thanksgiving and intercession for those concluding their ministries. Other significant honors or accomplishments may also be celebrated in worship, provided that this occurs in the spirit of giving glory to God.

_W-4.0504: Censure and Restoration_

The church administers discipline as an expression of the authority of Christ, for the sake of the welfare of the church, and toward the goal of redemption and reconciliation, by God’s grace. Forms for censure and restoration are provided in the Rules of Discipline of this _Book of Order_. (D-12.0100, D-12.0200) These occasions should be observed in the spirit of deep prayer and pastoral concern, and in the context of worship within the appropriate community or council of the church.
W-4.06: The Covenant of Marriage

W-4.0601: Christian Marriage

In Baptism each Christian is claimed in the covenant of God’s faithful love. …

Because of current debates about this section of the Constitution, we have been advised to let it receive separate consideration, apart from the project to revise the Directory for Worship. A similar approach was taken with the section on ordination in the new Form of Government.

W-4.0602: Preparing for Marriage

W-4.0603: Setting for the Service

W-4.0604: Order of Worship

W-4.0605: Recognizing Civil Marriage

W-4.07: Death and Resurrection

W-4.0701: Witness to the Resurrection

In Baptism each Christian shares in Christ’s dying and rising, and receives the promise of eternal and abundant life in him. In the face of death, Christians affirm with tears and joy the good news of the gospel and the hope of the resurrection. We do not grieve in isolation, but are sustained by the power of the Holy Spirit and the community of faith.

W-4.0702: Preparing for Death

The session should encourage members to discuss and make necessary arrangements for the time of death. Such arrangements should include plans for worship and decisions about burial, cremation, or medical donation. These plans should express simplicity and dignity, bear witness to resurrection hope, and convey the centrality of Christian community. The session is responsible for establishing general policies concerning services on the occasion of death.

W-4.0703: Setting for the Service

The service of witness to the resurrection is best held in the congregation’s usual place of worship, demonstrating continuity with the community’s faith, life, and hope. When there are important reasons not to hold the service in the usual place of worship, it may be held in another place, such as a home, funeral home, crematorium, or graveside. It may be observed on any day, and may, with the approval of the session, occur as a part of the Service for the Lord’s Day. The service may take place before or after the committal of the body. The service is under the direction of the teaching elder of the congregation in which it is held. Others may be invited to share in leadership at the discretion of the teaching elder.

W-4.0704: Order of Worship

The service begins with sentences of Scripture, bearing witness to the resurrection and the living hope we have in Christ. Worshipers may sing hymns, psalms, and spiritual songs that affirm our faith in the resurrection, everlasting life, and the communion of saints. The act of confession and pardon should be included as an opportunity for healing and reconciliation. Scripture is read and the Word is proclaimed, expressing our trust in the risen Lord; an affirmation of faith may follow. Prayer is offered: giving thanks to God for life in Christ, the promise of the gospel, the life and witness of the one who has died, the comfort of the Holy Spirit, and the presence of the community of faith; making intercessions for those who grieve, those who minister to the bereaved, and all who suffer loss; and asking for faith and grace in this time of loss. The Lord’s Supper may be celebrated, with the approval of the session. The service ends by commending the one who has died to the care of the eternal God, and sending the people forth with God’s blessing.

In order that God will be the focus of the service, ordinarily the casket (if present) is closed; if open, it should be closed at the conclusion of the service, and remain closed. The casket may be covered with a pall, suggesting the image of being clothed with Christ in Baptism. If using a paschal candle is part of the practice of the congregation, it may be placed near the casket. Music should direct attention to God and express the faith of the church. Flowers and other decorations should reflect the integrity and simplicity of Christian life. The service may include other actions common to the community of faith and its cultural context, provided that these actions do not distract from the Christian understanding of death and resurrection. Fraternal, civic, or military rites should be conducted separately.

W-4.0705: Committal

The committal is to be conducted with simplicity, dignity, and brevity. The family and friends of the one who has died, along with members of the congregation, gather at the graveside or crematorium. The service includes readings from Scripture, prayers, words of committal, and a blessing. It should reflect the reality of death, express our trust in God to receive the one who has died, and bear witness to our resurrection hope.

Chapter Five: Worship and Christian Life

W-5.01: Worship and Personal Life

W-5.0101: Personal Life

We respond to God’s grace both in public worship and service and in personal acts of devotion and discipleship. Personal life and public worship are deeply connected. Christian life springs from Christian worship, where we find our identity as believers and discover our calling as disciples. Christian life flows back into worship as we present to God the prayers of our hearts and the offering of our lives.

In personal life we seek to live out our faith through daily disciplines of prayer, other practices of faith, household worship, and Christian vocation. Our lives as Christians are shaped by the Word and empowered by the Spirit as we grow more and more each day into the image of the Lord Jesus Christ.

W-5.0102: Daily Prayer

We respond to God’s grace through the gift of prayer. The Christian life is one of constant prayer. Prayer is a way of opening of ourselves to God, who desires communication and communion with us. Prayer may take a variety of forms, including: conscious conversation with God; attentive and expectant silence; meditation on Scripture; the use of service books, devotional aids, and visual arts; and singing, dancing, labor, or physical exercise. Prayer may also be expressed in action, through public witness and protest, deeds of compassion, and other forms of disciplined service.

The daily challenges of discipleship require daily disciplines of prayer. Daily prayer is meant to be a gracious gift from God, not a task or obligation. It is an opportunity to draw inspiration and strength from one’s relationship with God in Jesus Christ. It is a way of continually seeking the gifts and guidance of the Holy Spirit for daily living. Daily prayer is a practice to cultivate throughout one’s life, and one that will bear much fruit.

Structured services of daily prayer may occur in councils of the church, in the congregation, in small groups of believers, in households, or in private. They offer us a way of joining Christ’s ceaseless prayer with the church throughout the world. Such services typically include: the singing or praying of psalms; the reading of Scripture; and prayers of thanksgiving and intercession, concluding with the Lord’s Prayer. Services of daily prayer may take place at appointed times throughout the day (such as morning, midday, evening, and close of day) or may follow other patterns according to the demands of daily life and the needs of the individual or community. In the congregational setting these services are to be authorized by the session, but they may be led by any member of the church.

W-5.0103: Other Practices of Discipleship

We respond to God’s grace through other practices of discipleship. God has given us a variety of ways to pray: keeping Sabbath, studying Scripture, contemplation and action, fasting and feasting, stewardship and self-offering. All of these practices are meant to help us attend to the presence and action of God in our lives.

God calls us to keep one day in seven holy. Since the earliest days of the church, Christians have observed this commandment by gathering for public worship on the Lord’s Day (or Sunday). As the first day of the week, this day shapes our lives of discipleship. Therefore the Lord’s Day is a time for participation in public worship; engagement in ministries of service, witness, and compassion; and activities of rest and recreation. Those who must work on Sunday should find other ways to keep Sabbath in the course of the week.

Through the Scriptures we hear the voice of God and find meaning, direction, comfort, and challenge for our lives. Regular, disciplined engagement with the Bible may include: simply reading the Word, praying with Scripture, studying commentaries, memorizing key passages, and putting the Word into action in our lives. One should seek to read a wide range of Scripture, always relying on the illumination of the Spirit.

The practices of fasting and feasting are ancient expressions of lament and celebration. The festivals and seasons of the Christian year provide rhythms of fasting and feasting centered on the life of Christ and the events of salvation history. Events in the life of the world, nation, community, or individuals may also call for acts of thanksgiving, sorrow, penitence, or protest.

The disciplines of stewardship and self-offering are a grateful response to God’s love for the world and self-giving in Jesus Christ. As Christians, we are called to lives of simplicity, generosity, hospitality, compassion, and care for creation. Tithing is a primary example of Christian stewardship and self-offering. We should be able to account for how we use our material goods, spiritual gifts, and time in the service of God.

W-5.0104: Household Worship

We respond to God’s grace in the context of personal relationships. Christians who live together should worship together. Opportunities for household or family worship include: Sabbath-keeping and rhythms of daily prayer; Bible reading, study, or memorization; prayers before meals; singing hymns, psalms, and spiritual songs; and expressions of giving, sharing, and service to others. Given the complexities of contemporary life, it is especially important to cultivate these disciplines.

Household worship offers a valuable opportunity to remember and anticipate the Lord’s Day, studying appointed Scriptures and reflecting on and preparing for the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord’s Supper. The seasons of the Christian year, such as Advent, Christmas, Lent, and Easter, provide further shape and meaning for household worship. Worship in the household setting should include recognitions of birthdays, baptismal days, and other significant anniversaries, and may also reflect the cycles of nature, civic observances, and events in the local, national, and global spheres.

Children come to know, trust, and worship God by worshiping and praying with their parents or guardians. Children may lead and participate in household worship by singing and praying, listening to and telling Bible stories, learning catechisms, and serving and sharing with others. Parents and guardians should use these opportunities to teach children the shape and elements of the Service for the Lord’s Day, so that they may be full and active participants in the church’s worship.

W-5.0105: Christian Vocation

We respond to God’s grace through our Christian vocation. In Baptism we offer our whole lives in service to God, and are empowered by the Holy Spirit with gifts for ministry in Jesus’ name. Therefore we are called to honor and serve God in every aspect of our lives: in our work and play, in our thought and action, and in our private and public relationships. Such service and love is an act of gratitude for God’s grace. This has been a particularly important theme of the Reformed tradition: the life and work of every Christian can and should give glory to God. As we honor and serve God in our daily life and labor, we worship God. Whatever our situation, we have opportunities each day to bear witness to the power of God at work within us. Therefore, for Christians, worship, work, and witness cannot be separated.

W-5.02: Worship and the Church’s Ministry within the Community of Faith

W-5.0201: The Church’s Ministry within the Community of Faith

God calls the church in the name of Jesus Christ to mutual love and service. The church’s ministry and worship are deeply connected. The church’s ministry springs from its worship, where God builds up the body of Christ through the gifts of the Holy Spirit. The church’s ministry flows back into worship as we bring to God the celebrations and concerns of the community of faith.

Within the church, we seek to love and serve one another through the ministries of Christian education and pastoral care, special gatherings for fellowship and prayer, and the activities of councils of the church. The church’s ministries are shaped and nourished by the Word and Sacraments, and are to be carried out in the spirit of constant prayer.

W-5.0202: Christian Education

God calls the church to continue the teaching ministry of Jesus Christ, guiding and nurturing one another through all the seasons and transitions of life. In particular, the church offers opportunities for education and formation as members enter the community of faith, discover Christian vocation, and assume responsibility in the world. The church’s primary standard and resource for Christian nurture is the Word of God in Scripture, bearing witness to Christ’s way of truth and life.

The central occasion for Christian nurture is the Service for the Lord’s Day, where the Word is proclaimed and the Sacraments are celebrated. Beyond the process of Christian formation that takes place in public worship, the words and actions of the service can be a particularly fruitful source of study and reflection. Therefore all members should be encouraged to be present and participate in this assembly.

Educational activities should not be scheduled so as to prevent or discourage participation in this service. The educational ministries of the church are rooted in the promises of Baptism, in which the congregation pledges responsibility for Christian nurture. The session is responsible for the development and supervision of the church’s educational programs, the instruction of ruling elders and deacons, and the discipleship of all members. The teaching elder contributes to the nurture of the community through the ministries of Word and Sacrament, church school classes, the gift of prayer, and by example. Trained Christian educators bring special skills and expertise in teaching to the church’s ministries of nurture and formation. The session should identify, encourage, and equip others who have gifts for Christian education. The session should also support parents and guardians in the nurture of their children. (G-2.02, G-2.03, G-2.05, G-3.02, G-2.11)

Church school gatherings offer opportunities for worship, including singing, praying, and hearing the Word. These gatherings may also include occasions for self-offering and service. However, worship in the church school is not a substitute for participation with the whole congregation in the Service for the Lord’s Day.

The church provides other opportunities for Christian nurture, including: seminary instruction and continuing education; workshops on particular themes or topics; music programs and rehearsals; mission and program interpretation; meetings of committees, boards, and councils; and retreats, camps, and conferences.
W-5.0203: Pastoral Care

God calls the church to continue the healing ministry of Jesus Christ, caring for one another, sharing joys and sorrows, providing support in times of stress and need, and offering admonition, forgiveness, and reconciliation. Relying on Christ’s grace and the Spirit’s gifts, the church seeks to shepherd its members through times of danger and death, illness and loss, crisis and celebration, struggle and sin. In particular, these ministries flow from and are nourished by the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord’s Supper, signs and seals of our relationship in the body of Christ.

The worship of God in Christian community is the foundation and context for the ministry of pastoral care. Members draw on the resources of worship in their care for one another, sharing the grace and challenge of the Word, the gift and calling of the Sacraments, the presence and power of God’s Spirit in prayer, and the fellowship and comfort of the community of faith. They take these resources with them, extending Christ’s grace and peace in homes, hospitals, hospices, neighborhoods, schools, and workplaces.

All members are called to take part in the ministry of pastoral care, visiting the sick, supporting the weak, and comforting those who mourn. Ruling elders, deacons, and teaching elders have particular responsibility for the exercise of pastoral care within the community of faith. Those with special gifts and appropriate training may be called to the ministries of pastoral counseling or chaplaincy. In certain circumstances, persons may need to be referred to other qualified and credentialed professionals to receive appropriate counseling and care. (G-2.02, G-2.03, G-2.05)

Services of wholeness and healing are one way of enacting the church’s ministry of pastoral care. The central element in these services is prayer, calling upon God’s saving grace or giving thanks for healing received. A service of wholeness should include the proclamation of the Word, focusing on the promise of abundant life in Christ. Prayer may be enacted through the laying on of hands and anointing with oil, provided that these actions are carefully introduced and interpreted: healing always comes as a gift from God, not as a product of human prayer. The Lord’s Supper is a fitting way to seal the promise of wholeness proclaimed in the Word. Services of wholeness are to be authorized by the session and are under the direction of the teaching elder, but should involve leadership from ruling elders, deacons, and others with gifts for prayer. They may take on a regular basis, as an occasional event, or as a part of the Service for the Lord’s Day.

Services of acceptance and reconciliation acknowledge the reality of sin and suffering and seek the redeeming grace of God. They provide an appropriate way to acknowledge our involvement and responsibility in broken relationships and sinful social structures. The central element in these services is confession and pardon, along with appropriate signs of peace and reconciliation. They should include readings from Scripture that reveal the grace of God, and may involve elements of prayer, expressions of thanksgiving, and enactments of commitment.

W-5.0204: Other Gatherings

God calls the church to gather as the body of Christ at other times and places to learn, pray, serve together, and enjoy Christian fellowship. Bible studies, prayer circles, covenant groups, and other meetings may take place throughout the week and various times of day, whether on the church grounds, at members’ homes, or elsewhere. These gatherings present valuable opportunities for: reading, studying, and discussing the Scriptures; Christian formation and nurture; praying for one another, the church, and the world; sharing personal stories, celebrations, and concerns; common work, meals, fellowship, and recreation; and living out the gospel through acts of witness and service.

Christians also gather at retreats, camps, and conferences for learning, worship, service, and recreation. Services of worship in these places are to be authorized by an appropriate council, and should be guided by the principles of Scripture, the confessions, and this directory. Depending on the nature of the event, orders of worship may be adapted from the services for daily prayer, the Service for the Lord’s Day, or other services described in this directory. Celebrations of the Lord’s Supper are to be approved by the council overseeing the event.

We bear witness to the unity of the body of Christ when we gather in ecumenical groups for the worship of the triune God. Such services are rooted, despite denominational differences, in the Baptism we share. Teaching elders invited to participate in the celebration of the Lord’s Supper in such gatherings may do so, provided that their participation does not contradict the Reformed understanding of the Sacrament. (G-5.01)

We bear witness to the good news of Jesus Christ when we pray in the presence of others, particularly at interfaith gatherings. Such gatherings are opportunities to live and share our faith, even as we listen to and learn from our neighbors. Those who participate in interfaith events should be careful that their words and actions reflect the Christian faith, while respecting the autonomy, integrity, and diversity of others’ beliefs and practices. (G-5.01)

W-5.0205: Councils of the Church

God calls the church to seek the mind of Christ together in councils, through meetings of the session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly. These councils should worship regularly, in keeping with the teaching of Scripture, the witness of the confessions, and the principles of this directory. In councils beyond the session, provision should be made for the regular proclamation of the Word and celebration of the Lord’s Supper. Every meeting of a council should open and close with earnest prayer. Councils should also provide other opportunities for praise, thanksgiving, confession, intercession, and supplication in the course of their discernment and deliberation. (G-3.01)

W-5.03: Worship and the Church’s Mission in the World

W-5.0301: The Church’s Mission in the World

God sends the church in the power of the Holy Spirit to join the mission of Jesus Christ in service to the world. The church’s mission and worship are deeply connected. The church’s mission springs from its worship, where we glimpse the reality and the promise of God’s eternal realm. The church’s mission flows back into worship as we bring to God the joy and suffering of the world.

In its mission to the world, the church seeks to bear witness to God’s reign through the proclamation of the gospel, acts of compassion, work for justice and peace, and the care of creation. The church’s mission is shaped and nourished by the Word and Sacraments, and represents the living out of our prayer for the world.

W-5.0302: Evangelism

God sends the church to proclaim the gospel in the world: announcing the good news of God’s liberating love; calling all people to repent and trust in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior; baptizing, teaching, and making disciples in Jesus’ name; and offering the promise of eternal and abundant life in Christ.

The Service for the Lord’s Day is the primary context in which we regularly hear the proclamation of the gospel and have the opportunity to respond in faith, committing and recommitting their lives to Jesus Christ. Accordingly, an invitation to prepare for Baptism and live out baptismal discipleship should be a regular part of Sunday worship. Christian worship also prepares believers to go forth, in the power of the Spirit, to share with others the good news they have received, inviting them to join in following Christ’s way.

Special services for evangelism may be authorized by the session. The central element in these services is the proclamation of the Word, with emphasis on the saving grace of God in Christ, Jesus’ claim upon our lives, and his invitation to discipleship. This act of proclamation should be surrounded by prayer. Those who respond to Christ’s invitation should receive nurture and support from the community of faith, equipping them for Christian discipleship. If they have not been baptized, they should make a public profession of faith and receive the Sacrament of Baptism in the Service for the Lord’s Day. Those who were previously baptized should be given the opportunity to express their renewed commitment to Christ through the reaffirmation of Baptism.

W-5.0303: Compassion

God sends the church to show compassion in the world: feeding the hungry, caring for the sick, visiting prisoners, freeing captives, sheltering the homeless, welcoming strangers, comforting those who mourn, and being present with all who are in need. These acts of compassion, done corporately or individually, are the work of the church as the body of Christ. The church is called to minister directly to people’s immediate hurts and needs. The church is also called to confront and challenge systems that perpetuate human misery. We participate in Christ’s compassionate ministry through local acts of witness and advocacy, through the programs of the larger church, and in cooperation with other agencies and organizations committed to human welfare.

In the Service for the Lord’s Day, God’s call to compassion is proclaimed in the Word and enacted through the Sacraments. We confess our complicity in oppressive structures, pray for those who are hurting, offer our resources to alleviate suffering, and commit our time and energy to care for those in need. Following the example of Jesus Christ, we pledge that we will respect the dignity of all, reach out to those judged undeserving, receive as well as give, and even risk our lives to show Christ’s love.

W-5.0304: Justice and Peace

God sends the church to work for justice in the world: exercising power for the common good; dealing honestly in personal and public business; seeking dignity and freedom for all people; promoting justice and fairness in the law; overcoming disparities between rich and poor; bearing witness against political oppression; and redressing wrongs against individuals, groups, and peoples. God also sends the church to seek peace: in the church universal, within denominations, and at the congregational level; in the world, where nations and religious or ethnic groups make war against one another; and in local communities, schools, workplaces, neighborhoods, and homes. These acts of peacemaking and justice are established upon God’s gracious act of reconciliation with us in Jesus Christ, and are a way of participating in Christ’s priestly intercession or advocacy for the world.
In the Service for the Lord’s Day we proclaim, receive, and enact reconciliation with God in Christ. Through the proclamation of the Word we are given the assurance of freedom and peace in Christ and are inspired to share these gifts with others. Through Baptism and the Lord’s Supper we are united with Christ, made one in the Spirit, and empowered to break down the dividing walls of hostility that still separate us from one another. We confess our participation in unjust systems, pray for an end to violence and injustice, offer our gifts to support Christ’s liberating work, and commit ourselves to pursue peace and justice in Jesus’ name.

W-5.0305: Care of Creation

God sends the church to share in the stewardship of creation, preserving the goodness and glory of the earth God has made. God cares for us through the gifts of creation, providing all that we need in abundance. As caretakers of God’s creation, we are called to: tend the land, water, and air with awe and wonder at God’s gifts; use the earth’s resources wisely, without plundering, polluting, or destroying; use technology in ways that preserve and enhance life; measure our production and consumption in order to provide for the needs of all; foster responsible practices of procreation and reproduction; and seek beauty, order, health, harmony, and peace for all God’s creatures.

In the Service for the Lord’s Day we express our care for creation by: giving thanks for God’s creative power and sustaining care; acknowledging God’s call to stewardship of the earth and confessing our failure to care for creation; rejoicing in the promise of redemption and renewal in Jesus Christ, proclaimed in the Word and Sacraments; offering our lives and resources in service to the creator of all; and committing ourselves to live as good stewards of creation until the day when God will make all things new. One way in which the church demonstrates integrity in caring for God’s creation is through responsible choices about materials for worship, including the use of paper, sacramental elements, the construction of worship space, and other resources.

W-5.04: Worship and the Reign of God

W-5.0401: The Reign of God

The church in its worship and service is a living sign of the reign of God, which is both a present reality and a future promise. The church’s activities do not bring about God’s realm; they are our grateful response to the grace of God at work in the world. We seek to worship and serve God faithfully, with the confidence that God’s reign has already been established and the hope that it will soon be revealed in fullness and glory. (F-1.01)

We do all of this in the name of Jesus, looking for the day when “every knee should bend, in heaven and on earth and under the earth, and every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father” (Phil. 2:10–11).

Amen!

Blessing and glory and wisdom and thanksgiving and honor and power and might be to our God forever and ever!

Amen. (Rev. 7:12)

[The assembly approved Item 13-03. See pp. 16, 24, 25.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Approve M. Craig Barnes as president of Princeton Theological Seminary.
2. Approve docket time in the plenary session for Barnes to make brief remarks.

Rationale

General Assembly approval of the Rev. Dr. Barnes’s appointment as president of Princeton Theological Seminary is required by “A Plan for the Governance and Funding of the Theological Institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986) and by the seminary’s current bylaws.

M. Craig Barnes began as the seventh president of Princeton Theological Seminary in January 2013, and also serves as professor of pastoral ministry. Barnes earned his Master of Divinity degree from Princeton Seminary in 1981 and his Ph.D. in church history from the University of Chicago in 1992.

Before becoming president of Princeton, Barnes was a chaired professor at Pittsburgh Theological Seminary while also serving as the pastor and head of staff of Shadyside Presbyterian Church. He previously served pastorates in Madison, Wis-
His writing and academic work reflect his deep commitment to the theological formation of pastors to lead the church in changing times. Craig was raised on Long Island, New York. After graduating from The King’s College and Princeton Seminary, he received a Ph.D. in The History of Christianity from The University of Chicago under the supervision of Martin E. Marty.

Item 13-04

[The assembly approved Item 13-04 with amendment. See pp. 16, 25.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) grant permission to the following theological institutions to celebrate the Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper in 2015–2016: Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Columbia Theological Seminary, University of Dubuque Theological Seminary, Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary, McCormick Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, Princeton Theological Seminary, San Francisco Theological Seminary, Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary, Union Presbyterian Seminary, Seminario Evangelio de Puerto Rico, and Auburn Theological Seminary.

Rationale

Beginning in 1989, the General Assembly became the governing body that grants permission to celebrate the Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper at Presbyterian theological institutions. Each seminary is entrusted with identifying a governing group on campus to discern appropriate occasions and leaders to celebrate on each campus. The 220th General Assembly (2012) granted permission for celebrations in 2013–2014.

Item 13-05

[The assembly approved Item 13-05. See pp. 16, 25.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve the new trustees elected by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) theological institutions in 2012–2013:

1. Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary: Katherine B. Cummings, Rhashell Hunter, Lana E. Russell.

2. Columbia Theological Seminary: Jeffrey D. McEwen, Travis V. Olmert, Millie Snyder.

10. Union Presbyterian Seminary: Jennifer Britton, Carol Anne Love Jennison, Tonya Johnson, Gay Muthershed, Agnes Norfleet, One Ho Park, Peter Ro.

Rationale

“A Plan for the Governance and Funding of the Theological Institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986) requires the COTE to present presidents and trustees of PC(USA)-related seminaries to the General Assembly for approval. A list of the entire board of trustees of each of the PC(USA)-related seminaries as well as biographical information about trustees to be approved will be made available by the COTE for review by the appropriate committee during the 221st General Assembly (2014). Similar information will also be made available about those currently serving on the boards of Auburn Theological Seminary and the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico, which are related to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through covenant agreements.

In addition, and as required by vote of the 209th General Assembly (1997), the following information is offered in regard to racial ethnic, gender, and clergy/lay representation on the various seminary boards.

Approval of List of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Related Schools, Colleges and Universities

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Approve the following list of colleges and universities as those related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

   Agnes Scott College, Decatur, Ga.; Alma College, Alma, Mich.; Arcadia University, Glenside, Pa.; Austin College, Sherman, Tex.; Barber-Scotia College, Concord, N.C.; Belhaven University, Jackson, Miss.; Blackburn College, Carlinville, Ill.; Bloomfield College, Bloomfield, N.J.; Buena Vista University, Storm Lake, Iowa; Carroll University, Waukesha, Wisc.; Centre College, Danville, Ky.; Coe College, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; The College of Idaho, Caldwell, Idaho; College of the Ozarks, Point Lookout, Mo.; The College of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio; Cook Native American Ministries, Tempe, Ariz.; Davidson College, Davidson, N.C.; Davis & Elkins College, Elkins, W.V.; Eckerd College, St. Petersburg, Fla.; Grove City College, Grove City, Pa.; Hampden-Sydney College, Hampden-Sydney, Va.; Hanover College, Hanover, Ind.; Hastings College, Hastings, Nebr.; Illinois College, Jacksonville, Ill.; Johnson C. Smith University, Charlotte, N.C.; King University, Bristol, Tenn.; Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tenn.; Lafayette College, Easton, Pa.; Lake Forest College, Lake Forest College, Ill.; Lees-McRae College, Banner Elk, N.C.; Lindenwood University, St. Charles, Mo.; Lyon College, Batesville, Ark.; Macalester College, St. Paul, Minn.; Mary Baldwin College, Staunton, Va.; Maryville College, Maryville, Tenn.; Millikin University, Decatur, Ill.; Missouri Valley College, Marshall, Mo.; Monmouth College, Monmouth, Ill.; Montreat College, Montreat, N.C.; Muskingum University, New Concord, Ohio; Presbyterian College, Clinton, S.C.; Queens University of Charlotte, Charlotte, N.C.; Rhodes College, Memphis, Tenn.; Rocky Mountain College, Billings, Mont.; St. Andrews University, Laurinburg, N.C.; Schreiner University, Kerrville, Tex.; Sterling College, Sterling, Kans.; Stillman College, Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Trinity University, San Antonio, Tex.; Tusculum College, Greenville, Tenn.; Universidad InterAmericana de Puerto Rico, San Juan P.R.; University of Dubuque, Dubuque, Iowa; University of Jamestown, Jamestown, N.D.; University of the Ozarks, Clarksville, Ark.; University of Pikeville, Pikeville, Ky.; University of Tulsa, Tulsa, Okla.; Warren Wilson College, Asheville, N.C.; Waynesburg University, Waynesburg, Pa.; Westminster College, Fulton, Mo.; Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pa.; Westminster College, Salt Lake City, Utah; Whitworth University, Spokane, Wash.; William Peace University, Raleigh, N.C.; Wilson College, Chambersburg, Pa.

2. Approve the following list of secondary schools as those related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

Bachman Academy, McDonald, Tenn.; Blair Academy, Blairstown, N.J.; Chamberlain-Hunt Academy, Port Gibson, Miss.; French Camp Academy, French Camp, Miss.; Goodland Academy, Hugo, Okla.; Menaul School, Albuquerque, N.M.; Presbyterian Pan-American School, Kingsville, Tex.; Rabun Gap-Nacoochee School, Rabun Gap, Ga.; Wasatch Academy, Mt Pleasant, Utah.

Rationale

It has been customary for the General Assembly to approve a list of educational institutions related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The criteria for being included on this list is that the institutions can identify a historic connection to the PC(USA) and demonstrate a commitment to Reformed values through the education they provide. Among these values are a commitment to faith, truth, learning, service, community, character, and the dignity and worth of each person.

Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions

The Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Direct the transfer of the Theological Education Fund (the “Fund”) from the Presbyterian Mission Agency (“PMA”) to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (“Foundation”), to be managed, administered, and distributed by the Foundation for the benefit of seminaries related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) pursuant to a fund advisory agreement between the Foundation and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, on behalf of the PMA and on behalf of the Committee on Theological Education (“COTE”), the fund agreement to provide that future contributions to the Fund will be irrevocable contributions to the Foundation and distributed only as directed by COTE, effective January 1, 2015.

2. Direct that responsibility for marketing and administering the Fund be transferred from the PMA to the Foundation, effective January 1, 2015, and that the Foundation and COTE engage in a process, as spelled out in a fund advisory agreement, to hire an experienced, full-time fundraiser, whose work shall be under the direction and ultimate performance management of COTE and dedicated solely to generating financial support for theological education.

3. Direct that the existing Seminary Support Network be maintained by COTE and the Foundation until such time as the Foundation, in consultation with COTE, shall determine the future role of this network. The Foundation, in consultation with COTE, shall establish a full-time staff position that is under the direction of COTE and dedicated to supporting this network until a decision about the network’s future has been determined.

4. Direct that the marketing information and databases for the Fund be transferred from the PMA to the Foundation, as permitted by applicable law and consistent with written representations or other appropriate communications to donors, to be used only for marketing of the Fund, effective January 1, 2015.

5. Direct that the responsibility for the denomination’s relationships with PC(USA)-related seminaries will continue to be lodged under COTE, and that any mission program support for COTE will continue to be provided by the PMA in consultation with COTE.
Rationale

The 220th General Assembly (2012) directed that a Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions be appointed by the General Assembly Moderator “with a charge to review the funding relationship of theological institutions to the General Assembly and the church, and to propose any needed changes, including a strengthened funding mechanism for the support of theological institutions by the church” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 75, 870). The special committee was instructed to make its report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

A. Background on the Theological Education Fund

The 198th General Assembly (1986) established COTE and proposed the creation of the Fund with the hope that an amount equal to “1 percent [1.0%] of the dollar figure reported by each congregation [of the church] for local program” would be contributed as an additional benevolence by each congregation for the education of present and future ministers and educators of the church (Minutes, 1986, Part I, p. 271). The Fund was subsequently created and COTE was charged with administering the Fund and preparing an appropriate formula for disbursements of monies from the Fund to the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The COTE was also charged with advocating for their financial support. Since its establishment, the Fund has been managed, administered, and distributed by staff persons employed by the PMA or its predecessors on behalf of COTE.

In 1986, the church had hoped to replace the funding for theological education that came directly from the denomination with funds that would be received from congregations, not simply as benevolence gifts but as direct investments in the future leadership of the church. This has not been the result. From 2002 through 2012, amounts contributed to the Fund have fallen by 54 percent, from $2,665,466 to $1,225,380. In 2010, less than 2 percent of the total budgets of seminaries were funded by the Fund instead of the hoped-for 20 percent when the Fund was established. Since its inception, no more than 20 percent of the church’s congregations have contributed to the Fund in any given year. The continued pattern of decline in receipts has been of great concern to the seminaries and the denomination.

In 2008, the General Assembly directed the PMA (then known as the General Assembly Mission Council) to develop a system of giving that would “fairly and accurately allocate all costs associated with individual projects in the General Assembly mission budget, including the costs associated with the systems necessary for the support, promotion, and accountability of each item” (Minutes, 1986, Part I, p. 668). Implementing this system would have led to increased support, promotion, and accountability costs being charged to the Fund, reducing receipts available for the seminaries.

The COTE sought to involve the 220th General Assembly (2012) in taking a new look at the relationship between seminaries, the denomination, and its congregations, and considering a different mechanism by which the church provides opportunities for congregations and others to contribute to the funding of theological institutions.

As a result of the efforts of COTE, the 220th General Assembly (2012) directed the PMA not to recover its full costs from the Fund in 2013–2014, and formed the aforementioned special committee.

B. The Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions

The Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions consisted of fourteen members, all of whom were persons who were especially knowledgeable about theological institutions. One member was the director of COTE, and a second the director of the PMA’s Theology, Worship and Education Ministry Area. The remaining twelve included not only elected members of COTE, but also five PC(USA) seminary presidents and a PMA Board member. The remaining members were also persons with knowledge and experience in the field of theological education, one of whom had expertise in fundraising. Because of the resignation of one member, the special committee ultimately finished its work with thirteen members.

The special committee met at in-person meetings held on January 23–24, June 25, and October 28, 2013, and had additional conference telephone meetings on March 25, April 30, and June 6, 2013. The final meeting was a conference telephone meeting on January 21, 2014.

The special committee considered whether continuing to have the Fund staffed, managed, administered, and distributed by the PMA would be the most efficient and productive way to proceed in the future. The committee evaluated several alternatives but ultimately concluded that the question at its essence was whether the Fund should continue to be managed by the PMA or whether it should be staffed, managed, administered, and distributed by and physically located at the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation.

The direct staffing costs of the Fund will be the same whether lodged at the PMA or the Foundation. The Foundation, however, has agreed to manage, administer, and distribute the Fund for a fee of up to 1.25 percent of receipts, rather than the 19 percent required by the cost allocation and recovery process of the PMA. In addition, the Foundation has agreed to share its expertise in funds development with the staff of the Fund. The Foundation can generate numerous reports to help track giving patterns, and the Foundation’s staff and technical resources would enlarge giving opportunities for the Fund. The Foundation does not have dedicated funds development personnel for any other specific cause or beneficiary. Nonetheless, the Foundation in this case will employ dedicated personnel for funds development of the Fund pursuant to a fund advisory agreement between the Foundation, the PMA, and COTE. The COTE will be responsible for setting performance metrics, monitoring performance against those metrics, and recommending personnel actions to the Foundation. The Foundation will be responsible for providing personnel with tools, systems, and resources and for implementing personnel actions as recommended by COTE.

According to the COTE Manual of Operations, selection of personnel for coordinating COTE’s work is done by the PMA in consultation with COTE. In a similar manner the special committee has recommended above that the selection of funds development staff be the responsibility of the Foundation and COTE by a process spelled out in the funding agreement between the Foundation, the PMA, and COTE. The committee noted that the fundraising atmosphere has shifted significantly over the last two decades and, therefore, a dedicated professional in this area is needed if efforts to increase funding for theological education are to be successful. The PMA has affirmed to the special committee that a full-time funds development position focused exclusively on raising financial support for PC(USA) seminaries will be helpful for funds development efforts.

The committee researched and interviewed members of the Seminary Support Network and found this mostly volunteer network to be effective in raising awareness and support for the schools through the Fund model. Presbytery- and synod-level representatives staff the network, which meets annually and usually on a PC(USA) seminary campus. The committee agreed that it would be wise to continue the network with a central staff support person selected by the Foundation for resourcing this group. Similar to above, COTE will be responsible for setting performance metrics, monitoring performance against those metrics, and recommending personnel actions to the Foundation while the Foundation will be responsible for providing the central staff person with tools, systems, and resources and for implementing personnel actions as recommended by COTE. The committee further recommended that any changes to this network or staffing pattern should be done in consultation with and with the approval of COTE.

While recommending the transfer of the Fund to the Foundation, the special committee also affirmed the importance of maintaining through COTE the denomination’s ministries and relationships with the seminaries. Therefore, the special committee also concluded that the responsibility for the denomination’s relationships with PC(USA)-related seminaries should continue to be lodged with COTE, and that program support for COTE should continue to be provided by the PMA’s Theology, Worship and Education Ministry Area in consultation with COTE.

The primary change created by the recommendations of the special committee would be that the PMA’s Theology, Worship and Education Ministry Area would have no further responsibility for the Fund, although COTE will continue to be the advisor to the Fund under a fund advisory agreement and will also continue to be the denomination’s primary instrument for interpreting to congregations the importance of the church’s seminaries and the necessity for the Fund.

COTE COMMENT ON ITEM 13-07

Comment on Item 13-07—From the Committee on Theological Education.

The Committee on Theological Education recognizes the importance of theological education to the development of leaders in the PC(USA); believes this recommendation represents a significant improvement in the stewardship of the contributions of congregations and individual donors to the Theological Education Fund, both in their management and generation; and this recommendation represents the combined effort of four PC(USA) entities (Presbyterian Mission Agency, Committee on Theological Education, the Presbyterian Foundation, and the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions).

In summary, the Committee on Theological Education unanimously recommends the approval of the report and all recommendations of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Item 13-08

On Celebrating the 500th Birthday of John Knox—From the Eastern Korean Presbytery.

In celebration of the 500th birthday of John Knox, who laid the foundation of Presbyterianism through fervent prayer and spiritual renewal, Eastern Korean Presbytery overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to do the following:

1. Designate the month of October 2014 as the John Knox memorial month, aiming to position the church’s ministry and mission for another half millennium through rediscovering Presbyterian roots and future-driven revitalization.

[2. Direct the whole church to plan root-searching events through fasting, prayer, Bible study, and spiritual gathering to realign the church to God's purpose for the broken world.]
[3.] Encourage all councils and congregations to create special activities in reaffirmation of Presbyterian faith as expressed in the confessions, to inspire each other to cultivate a deeper prayer life, spiritual disciplines such as fasting, prayer, Bible study, spiritual gatherings, and acts of service and to encourage all to witness to the Presbyterian heritage through community-oriented events.

[3. Encourage congregations to celebrate intentionally the faithful witness of John Knox on Sunday, October 26, 2014 (Reformation Sunday).]

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) to develop and disseminate worship aids, including public prayers and resource materials for the month.

Rationale

John Knox, along with such reformers as John Welch, Robert Bruce, and John Livingstone, was saturated not only with the Scriptures but also with prayers, which fueled passionate preaching and compassionate ministry that sustained the revival movement in Scotland.

The church, as well as our nation, is facing moral and spiritual breakdown. Throughout church history, Presbyterians have met challenges through prayer: when our nation was born in a “hazardous and afflictive situation,” the Presbyterian General Assembly called for a national day of prayer, which led John Adams to declare May 9, 1798, a national day of “Solemn Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer” to “[implore] the mercy and benediction of Heaven on our country” (http://www.40daysofprayerandfasting.org/john_adams.asp).

Starting from the “frontier revival movement” of John Tennant and Jonathan Edwards and the “burned-over district” revivals of Charles Finney, Presbyterians have been at the forefront of the Great Awakening and other revival movements: the spiritual fire of a handful people with deep faith in the power of God who works mightily through prayer has helped to transform the very fabric of American life.

We live in a rapidly changing world. This demands that each congregation and member rediscover the power of prayer in order to enable us to prophetically declare the gospel to our community, as we stand firm on true faith preached to us by the founding reformers. No better preparation can equip us to meet the challenge than private and collective prayers. Borrowing John Knox’s own words, “if the fire be without heat, or the burning lamp without light, then true faith may be without fervent prayer” (http://www.ccel.org/ccel/knox/prayer.iii.html).

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this overture be approved with amendment by adding a new Recommendation 5. to read as follows:

“[5. Recognizing the significance of John Knox to the reform of the Scottish church and society (including education), to the Reformed understanding of the moral duties of governments and of citizens to correct abuses, and to the public impact of Protestantism in Great Britain itself, as well as other countries influenced by Scottish Presbyterianism, the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directs the Stated Clerk to communicate to the Church of Scotland commendation for its contribution to the public debate over the potential separation of Scotland from Great Britain (to be voted on September 18, 2014) and appreciation for the vibrant spirit and transnational influence of John Knox as a strong and very human Christian leader.]”

The presbyteries bringing this overture rightly note John Knox’s deep piety and very appropriately share with the whole church their international awareness of his influence. The actual birthdate of John Knox is unknown but generally considered to be in 1514. The contribution of Montreat Conference Center and several organizations and scholars to remembering the 500th anniversary of Knox’s birth in the United States should be noted (http://www.johnknox500.com/).

As a Scottish patriot deeply involved in the international struggle of Protestantism in his time, it is impossible to imagine Knox not being interested in the debate among our Scottish sisters and brothers over independence or further devolution of the bond of union brought about first through the union of Scottish and English crowns in 1603 and then the Acts of Union in 1707. The amendment proposed is not to stipulate any particular elements in the worship and education material that may be developed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency if the commissioners approve this overture, but to note the timeliness of a remembrance of John Knox in this year of decision for the country he deeply loved.
The Church of Scotland determined in 2012 that it would not take a side in the debate over independence from Great Britain. Their love of God and of their nation is seen, however, in the report, “Our Vision: Imagining Scotland’s Future” (http://www.churchofscotland.org.uk/__data/assets/pdf_file/0019/19243/our_vision.pdf), which came out of thirty-two events across Scotland, including one at their National Youth Assembly. This report continues the Reformed Christian integration of theological and practical reflection on the witness of the Church within the life of society as it looks directly at the values and needs of human beings in Scotland today.

Ernest Campbell, one of the many preachers of Scottish background influential in our church’s life, in preaching on Knox’s life, recalled two key phrases of Knox: “The man who is famous for having said, “Give me Scotland or I die,” had earlier said, “Give me Christ or I cannot live!” (https://archive.org/details/sermonlegacyofjo00camp).

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 13-08

Comment on Item 13-08—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

American Presbyterianism has been shaped decisively by the Scottish Presbyterian tradition, brought to North America by Scottish immigrants. John Knox decisively shaped the Scottish Presbyterian tradition through his theological and ecclesiastical work. The 500th anniversary of John Knox’s birth is a good occasion for the PC(USA), its presbyteries, congregations, and members to remember and explore the work of John Knox, considering the ways in which Knox’s work and the Scottish Presbyterian tradition continue to shape us. Central to that tradition is fervent prayer and a powerful urgency to invite all to join in living lives that embody a gracious response to and sharing in the love of God incarnate in Jesus Christ.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Office of Theology & Worship, is ready to prepare worship aids and accompanying resource materials to mark this occasion.

Item 13-09

[The assembly disapproved Item 13-09. See pp. 16, 25.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Endorsing a Clergy Letter Project and Evolution Sunday.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does the following:

1. Joins with the General Conference of the United Methodist Church, the Southeast Florida Diocese of the Episcopal Church, the Southwestern Washington Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and with 12,794 members of Christian clergy, 482 rabbis of Judaism, and 251 clergy of Unitarian Universalists in endorsing the Clergy Letter Project and the Christian Clergy Letter printed below:

“Within the community of Christian believers there are areas of dispute and disagreement, including the proper way to interpret Holy Scripture. While virtually all Christians take the Bible seriously and hold it to be authoritative in matters of faith and practice, the overwhelming majority do not read the Bible literally, as they would a science textbook. Many of the beloved stories found in the Bible—the Creation, Adam and Eve, Noah and the ark—convey timeless truths about God, human beings, and the proper relationship between Creator and creation expressed in the only form capable of transmitting these truths from generation to generation. Religious truth is of a different order from scientific truth. Its purpose is not to convey scientific information but to transform hearts.

“We the undersigned, Christian clergy from many different traditions, believe that the timeless truths of the Bible and the discoveries of modern science may comfortably coexist. We believe that the theory of evolution is a foundational scientific truth, one that has stood up to rigorous scrutiny and upon which much of human knowledge and achievement rests. To reject this truth or to treat it as ‘one theory among others’ is to deliberately embrace scientific ignorance and transmit such ignorance to our children. We believe that among God’s good gifts are human minds capable of critical thought and that the failure to fully employ this gift is a rejection of the will of our Creator. To argue that God’s loving plan of salvation for humanity precludes the full employment of the God-given faculty of reason is to attempt to limit God, an act of hubris. We urge school board members to preserve the integrity of the science curriculum by affirming the teaching of the theory of evolution as a core component of human knowledge. We ask that science remain science and that religion remain religion, two very different, but complementary, forms of truth.”

2. Designates the 2nd Sunday in February as Evolution Sunday to recognize the influence that the theory of evolution has had in changing the world view of our natural environment.

Rationale

This overture is brought in the spirit of faith that joyfully acknowledges • that “God brings all things into being by the Word” (Book of Order, W-1.2001);
• that “God transcends creation and cannot be reduced to anything within it” (Book of Order, W-1.2002);
• that God created the material universe and pronounced it good;
• “that the material world reflects the glory of God” (Book of Order, W-1.3031); and
• with the understanding that in prayer we earnestly thank “God for creation and providence” (Book of Order, W-3.3613).

Evolution has been wrongly viewed in some Christian communities as contrary to Christian beliefs. As a scientific theory based solidly on extensive scientific evidence, it has shaped our thinking in the natural sciences and has become the underlying theory for numerous medical advances. As a scientific theory it does not contradict the existence of God, but can be seen as a natural, creative process in God’s creation.

In a recent study of why young people are leaving the church, 29 percent of the youth reported being discouraged by the church’s antagonistic view of science, and that many young people are “turned off by the creation-versus-evolution debate.” The research also “shows that many science-minded young Christians are struggling to find ways of staying faithful to their beliefs and to their professional calling in science-related industries” (Ref. You Lost Me: Why Young Christians Are Leaving the Church ... and Rethinking Faith, David Kinnaman, 2011, The Barna Group.)

The 214th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has stated that it:
1. Reaffirms that God is Creator, in accord with the witness of Scripture and The Reformed Confessions.
2. Reaffirms that there is no contradiction between an evolutionary theory of human origins and the doctrine of God as Creator.
3. Encourages State Boards of Education across the nation to establish standards for science education in public schools based on the most reliable content of scientific knowledge as determined by the scientific community.

Other denominations have also recognized the compatibility of modern science and theology. For example, The Book of Discipline of The United Methodist Church - 2008 states, in part, “We recognize science as a legitimate interpretation of God’s natural world. We affirm the validity of the claims of science in describing the natural world and in determining what is scientific. We preclude science from making authoritative claims about theological issues and theology from making authoritative claims about scientific issues. We find that science’s descriptions of cosmological, geological, and biological evolution are not in conflict with theology.”

The Clergy Letter Project, www.theclergyletterproject.org, founded by Dr. Michael Zimmerman, and signed by nearly 13,000 Christian clergy has helped clergy and congregations present the scientific theory of evolution in a manner that respects and engages a thinking faith.

Thus, it is fitting to endorse The Clergy Letter Project and to set aside the 2nd Sunday in February as Evolution Sunday to celebrate the importance of evolution by honoring the birthday (12 February 1809) of the founder of evolutionary theory, Charles Darwin.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 13-09 be disapproved.

We affirm the comment of Theology & Worship as an accurate citation and summary of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s approach, which honors the scientific method and scientific discoveries but does not require affirmations of same. The commissioners’ resolution does not contradict the assembly’s previously approved positions on science, evolution, and faith, but it is too narrowly construed and invites multiplication of special recognition days on a range of scientific topics, and other topics. Many churches may currently observe Earth Day informally; this is not to proscribe the observance of particular Sundays by congregations, such as an umbrella Science and Faith Sunday, or a Water Resources Sunday.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 13-09

Comment on Item 13-09—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Presbyterians have a history of strong support of scientific endeavors throughout its history. The assembly has spoken on issues such as “Christianity and Health” and “The Dialogue Between Theology and Science.” In addition, the assembly has delved deeply into numerous scientific issues in social witness statements on healthcare, technology, and many other areas.

The assembly has spoken most clearly in the 1969 statement, “Evolution and the Bible,” from the former PCUS, reaffirmed by the 214th General Assembly (2002). The statement affirms that there is no necessary contradiction between Christian faith as expressed in our church’s confessions and an affirmation of evolution as the means of creation. It does not go so far as to suggest Christians must affirm the scientific consensus on evolution: “Neither Scripture, our Confession of Faith, nor our Catechisms, teach the Creation of man by the direct and immediate acts of God so as to exclude the possibility of evolution as a scientific theory,” and that “it is not necessary to understand the Genesis account as a scientific description of Creation” (Minutes, PCUS, 1969, Part I, p. 59, http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/theologyandworship/evolution/).

In addition, the Study Catechism, approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998), takes up this question in Question 27 on creation (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/study-catechism-full-version-biblical-references/):

Question 27. Does your confession of God as Creator contradict the findings of modern science?

No. My confession of God as Creator answers three questions: Who?, How? and Why? It affirms that (a) the triune God, who is self-sufficient, (b) called the world into being out of nothing by the creative power of God’s Word (c) for the sake of sharing love and freedom. Natural science has much to teach us about the particular mechanisms and processes of nature, but it is not in a position to answer these questions about ultimate reality, which point to mysteries that science as such is not equipped to explore. Nothing basic to the Christian faith contradicts the findings of modern science, nor does anything essential to modern science contradict the Christian faith. ...

Item 13-A

[The assembly approved Item 13-A. See p. 26.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) docket up to eight minutes in a plenary session to celebrate the centennial anniversary of the Assembly Training School, which later became the Presbyterian School of Christian Education by its successor institution, Union Presbyterian Seminary.

Rationale

November 4, 2014, will mark the 100th anniversary of the founding of the General Assembly’s Training School for Lay Workers (ATS) by the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. (PCUS). In 1959, the PCUS General Assembly approved that the name be changed to the Presbyterian School of Christian Education (PSCE). On May 3, 1997, by simultaneous action by its two boards, PSCE and Union Theological Seminary became Federated partners (UTS-PSCE). This rich heritage and productive relationship continues and is known as Union Presbyterian Seminary (UPSem). The celebration would likely include a brief statement by UPSem’s president, Brian Blount, followed by a five minute video created for the upcoming centennial celebration.

The influence of one of the few institutions in the U.S. ever chartered for the teaching of Christian education for the preparation of persons called to serve as church educators, missionaries, pastors, and leaders in the Protestant and global church cannot be understated. The ATS/PSCE equipped internationally and nationally recognized leaders who have served as General Assembly Moderators, as APCE Educators of the Year, and mission co-workers around the world. Generations of leaders serve in the varied ministries of recreation, camps and conference centers, childhood education, youth, family, social justice, higher education, and on the campus of many colleges and universities.

At the forefront of equipping women for professional ministry, ATS/PSCE led the way for hundreds of women to live out a vocation as educators and leaders when women were not able to be ordained in the Presbyterian church. The ATS/PSCE was a driving force for the certification of Christian educators and was a place where professors modeled both teaching and learning in a creative environment where team teaching, liturgical exploration, and community involvement were the norm.

Union Presbyterian Seminary’s current commitment to and instruction in Christian education is built on the unique legacy of a school that has been unparalleled in its influence on creative educational models for ministry.

It is appropriate that the 221st General Assembly (2014) in plenary session be given the privilege to honor and celebrate the unique contributions of ATS/PSCE and its more than eighteen hundred living graduates who have served the church so creatively and faithfully.

Item 13-B

[The assembly approved Item 13-B. See p. 26]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Recognize the Reverend Dr. Cynthia M. Campbell (president emeritus of McCormick Theological Seminary and pastor of Highland Presbyterian Church) and the Reverend Dr. Jack Bartlett Rogers (Moderator of the 213th General Assembly (2001) and professor emeritus at San Francisco Theological Seminary) for outstanding lifetime...
2. Docket time in plenary session to celebrate with each awardee.

Rationale

The Award for Excellence in Theological Education was established by the Committee on Theological Education in 1996 to “honor a person biennially who has made an outstanding lifetime contribution to theological education in and for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” The award is normally presented during a plenary meeting of the General Assembly. The COTE selected two nominees in October 2013 for this biennium: The Reverend Dr. Jack B. Rogers and the Reverend Dr. Cynthia M. Campbell.

The Reverend Dr. Jack Bartlett Rogers

The Reverend Dr. Jack Bartlett Rogers is a consummate person of the church. Whatever else may be said, this statement is incontrovertible. His biographical information provides the skeleton, but his impact escapes the factual telling of his life history.

Dr. Rogers was eighteen years old when he discerned a call to enter the ministry. He was born in Lincoln, Neb., in 1934. Ordained in 1959, Rogers earned B.D. (’59) and Th.M. (’64) degrees from Pittsburgh Theological Seminary and a Th.D. (’63) from the Free University in Amsterdam, The Netherlands. During his doctoral studies abroad, and by the joint action of Nebraska City Presbytery and the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church of the Netherlands, Rogers was installed as the organizing pastor of Pilgrim Fellowship of the Hervormde Kerk in Dordercht.

Upon returning to the United States in 1963, he was hired as the associate professor of religion and philosophy at Westminster College in New Wilmington, Pa. He became the college’s assistant academic dean in 1969. In 1971, Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, Calif., called Rogers as professor of philosophical theology, associate provost and director of the Office of Presbyterian Ministries. From 1988–90, Rogers served briefly as the associate for theological studies in the Theology and Worship ministry unit of the General Assembly in Louisville, Kentucky.

In 1990, Rogers accepted a call to San Francisco Theological Seminary, to the newly created position of vice president/director for Southern California and professor of theology. He retired from SFTS as professor emeritus in 2000.

Throughout his career, Rogers has attended, to date, thirty-seven General Assemblies, serving in committees, teaching Presbyterian Polity and observing. One committee that was particularly important to him was the committee that drafted A Brief Statement of Faith, begun in 1983 and finally issued in 1991. He founded and taught the course Presbyterian Principles and Practice, bringing numerous students from all the Presbyterian seminaries together to study and learn polity in the laboratory of the General Assembly.

He was endorsed for Moderator by San Gabriel Presbytery shortly after his retirement from SFTS, and elected by the 213th General Assembly (2001). The prominent issues facing the 213th General Assembly (2001) included a 60-40 percent vote to send the proposed “fidelity & chastity” amendment to the presbyteries that would delete G-6.0106b to remove the ordination prohibition for people who are gay/lesbian from the Book of Order (the amendment was subsequently defeated). In addition, a statement was issued about Christology. “The assembly was wonderfully strong and united on the basics,” Rogers recalled. “They were not so clear on the rest. Along with past Moderators Freda Gardner and Syngman Rhee, the assembly created a task force of twenty people—who represented the broad spectrum of the church—to study the question of what the Confessions say about Christology.” This group became the Theological Task Force on the Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Church, referred to as “PUP.” It was specifically asked to address issues of Christology, biblical authority and interpretation, ordination standards, and power.

“And then, September 11 happened,” said Rogers, who added this tragedy to the list of denominational items for which he served as spokesperson. “My greatest contribution to the PC(USA) during my term as Moderator was saying to the church that 90 percent of Presbyterians find our denomination a viable way to worship and serve their neighbors,” Rogers reflected. “Only 10 percent are dissident and distort our version of what is going on. I worked hard to be a moderating influence and project a message of hope.” Of his affiliation with the SFTS/Southern California program from 1990–2000, Rogers said, “It was a great privilege to work with a very diverse group of people from ethnic and language backgrounds; we taught classes in five languages! I became more sensitive to [our church’s] membership all over the country as I traveled as Moderator.”

Rogers was active in advocating for the recently adopted “modern language translation” of the Heidelberg Catechism. He is currently lending his hand to creating a new structure for ecumenical theological education in the Los Angeles area, and also currently under contract editing and updating his book on the Confessions.

A prolific writer, Rogers’ books include: Claiming the Center: Churches and Conflicting Worldview, Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1995; Confessions of a Conservative Evangelical, Philadelphia: Westminster, 1974; Jesus, the Bible and...
Rogers’ books have appeared a number of times on the list of “Ten books for Presbyterians to Read” and on the required books list of countless syllabi in Presbyterian seminaries, colleges, and churches across North America. Always attentive to the issues facing the church, he intended his writings to help create and disseminate the knowledge necessary for the peace and unity of the church. His latest book, Jesus the Bible and Homosexuality, is no exception. Rogers began the journey to this book with an enormous personal conversion from believing homosexuality is a sin and opposing the ordination of gay and lesbian persons to coming to believe that Scripture did not support this position. The context for his conversion was a committee of the General Assembly, upon which he reluctantly agreed to serve. As he began to examine the latest scholarship on the biblical texts undergirding the church’s official stance on homosexuality, he eventually came to the conclusion that a significant body of contemporary scholarship “[understands] these texts in their ancient context and shows that they have no relevance to 21st century Christian people of same-gender orientation,” (2009 response to the draft report of The Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage). “The process was both very serious and painful,” he wrote in the book. “I wasn’t swayed by the culture or pressured by academic colleagues. I changed my mind initially by going back to the Bible and taking seriously its central message in our lives.” Whether one agrees with where Rogers eventually landed, the integrity of his person and the process he engaged in is never in question.

A self-confessed Evangelical, Rogers nonetheless sought to be a reconciler in the church. In his statement to San Gabriel Presbytery on the occasion of his nomination as Moderatorial candidate, Rogers stated: “this assembly will confront very divisive issues. By God’s grace, I have worked and learned from people on many sides of our present divides while at Fuller and San Francisco Theological seminaries and on the General Assembly staff. I would hope to be a reconciling presence in our often tension-filled discussions. After the assembly, the Moderator will need to minister to people of many different perspectives, some triumphant and others feeling wounded. … I am committed to helping us find our common center in Jesus Christ so that we may go forward healthy in mission and ministry” (quoted in Alexa Smith, “Longtime seminary teacher wants to be an agent of healing,” Presbyterian News Service, January 11, 2001).

The Reverend Dr. Cynthia M. Campbell

The Reverend Dr. Cynthia M. Campbell, pastor and head of staff at Highland Presbyterian Church in Louisville, Kentucky, was the ninth president of McCormick Theological Seminary. Campbell was born in Pasadena, California, in 1948. She received a Bachelor of Arts magna cum laude from Occidental College in 1970, where she majored in philosophy and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. She earned a Master of Divinity magna cum laude from Harvard Divinity School in 1974 and a Doctor of Philosophy in systematic theology from Southern Methodist University in 1981. In 1991, Hastings College awarded her the honorary Doctor of Divinity.

Campbell was ordained by the Presbytery of San Gabriel on June 30, 1974, and began service in Dallas, Texas, as an associate pastor at Northminster United Presbyterian Church. While pursuing her doctoral studies, she served as interim pastor at St. Paul Presbyterian Church in Fort Worth, Texas, and Madison Square United Presbyterian Church in San Antonio, Texas. In 1981, she became associate professor of theology and ministry and director of the doctor of ministry program at Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary. In 1988, she became pastor of First Presbyterian Church in Salina, Kansas, one of the first large congregations in the denomination to call a woman as head of staff.

Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Campbell has served on numerous task forces and committees. For the General Assembly, she chaired the Special Committee on Examination of Candidates, co-moderated the Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee, and served on the Board of the Vocation Agency. She was a member of the Task Force on Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age as well as the Special Committee of fifteen, which prepared the final text of A Brief Statement of Faith approved by the denomination in 1990. She was a member of the Committee on Theological Education, served on the General Assembly Council, and was the moderator of the Congregational Ministries Division. Campbell has made significant contributions to the ecumenical church as well. She represented the Presbyterian Church in the United States on the theology commission of the Consultation on Church Union (COCU) in the preparation of the final draft of the COCU consensus and chaired the General Assembly special committee on COCU.

She is author of a monograph, Theologies Written from Feminist Perspectives, published by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). She has written articles on theology, ministry, ethics, and worship for Presbyterian Outlook, Reformed World, Insights, Interpretation, and Reformed Liturgy and Music. She contributed the “Trinity” entry in the Encyclopedia of the Reformed Faith and wrote the forward to Presbyterian Polity for Church Officers.

Committee on Theological Education Agency Summary

Overview

A. Assigned Responsibilities

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) has the responsibility for developing and maintaining a comprehensive plan for theological education from the perspective of the whole church. The committee seeks to identify, develop, and propose strategies for a denomination-wide approach to theological education. The committee serves as an advocate for theological education, seeking to support the seminaries and to strengthen them for their mission in the world. The Committee on Theological Education can be seen as a two-way communication link between the denomination and its graduate theological institutions. Voting members of the committee include thirteen people elected to represent the church at-large and a representative from each of the ten seminaries related directly to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Corresponding members of the COTE include: representatives from Auburn Theological Seminary and from the Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico (both institutions related to the General Assembly through covenant agreements negotiated every six years), a representative of the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation, and representatives of two non-Presbyterian seminaries invited by the committee, Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary and Fuller Theological Seminary.

B. Accomplishments

Under the leadership over the last two years of Kathy Wolf Reed, the youngest chair ever of the COTE and associate pastor for youth and campus at First Presbyterian Church in Tuscaloosa, Ala., and Jeffrey F. Bullock, vice chair of the COTE and longest serving PC(USA) seminary president serving the University of Dubuque, Dubuque, Iowa, the COTE fulfilled its General Assembly assigned functions by working collaboratively on initiatives and projects facilitated by generative conversation time in the 220th General Assembly (2012) affirmed directions encouraged by the 219th General Assembly (2010) that "commend[ed] the recent reorientation of the agenda of [the] COTE toward various emerging themes" (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 11); urged it to “continue the important conversation begun in the Raising Leaders document, particularly in the areas of exploring the changing leadership needs of the Presbyterian churches” (Ibid, p. 10); and encouraged “COTE to continue to explore opportunities to develop additional funding, particularly in support of students and reducing the indebtedness of beginning clergy” (Ibid). The referrals from the 220th General Assembly (2012) also asked the COTE to begin tracking and sharing new data on persons and programs related to our PC(USA) seminaries. Therefore, in 2013 the COTE took action to seek, find, monitor, track, share, and incorporate into the committee’s structure reliable research for equipping PC(USA) seminaries. Data collected on boards of trustees, seminary charter changes, and institutional reports are included in this report. In addition, the COTE collected data on annual enrollees and graduates of PC(USA) seminaries. The committee processed this business by centering plenary and subcommittee meets on key questions to foster generative thinking and action. The COTE prioritized most agendas, meetings, and work to track, resource, and consult with the 220th General Assembly (2012)’s Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions. Committee meetings were held on the campuses of the University of Dubuque Theological Seminary in Dubuque, Iowa (October 2012); Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Louisville, Ky. (March 2013); Union Presbyterian Seminary’s Charlotte, N.C. campus (September 2013); and for the first time ever at the Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico in San Juan, P.R., where the COTE learned firsthand about the ministry, mission, and worship life of each institution. During this biennium, academic deans from four COTE-related schools were sent as alternate members and welcomed as strong contributors to the conversations and business discussions. Likewise, COTE sent as corresponding members to each meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and was further represented at national meetings of Presbyterian Women, Association of Presbyterian Christian Educators, and the Presbyterian Youth Triennium.

1. Cooperative and Collaborative Initiatives

a. Research for Equipping the Church and Theological Schools

Four major and other smaller research project presentations fostered generative committee thinking. Based on solid research and data that the committee found to be critical when consulting and resourcing church entities and theological schools these presentations included:

(1) In October 2012, Anthony Ruger, senior researcher and co-director of the Center for the Study of Theological Education, presented “Past and Present of Funding Presbyterian Seminaries.”

(2) In September 2013, Sharon Miller, senior researcher and co-director of the Center for the Study of Theological Education, presented “Theological School Enrollment and Pathways to Seminary.” David Esterline, director of the Institute for Cross-Cultural Theological Education; associate professor of Cross-Cultural Education and Ministry, McCormick Theological Seminary, presented the 2013 Global Survey on Theological Education which he co-directed and presented to the World Council of Churches.
Theological Education Matters Video Project

In an effort to continue to increase support for and interpret theological education broadly in the PC(USA), the committee initiated a series of videos on Why PC(USA) Seminaries Matter. The COTE members and Presbyterian faculty and seminarians are featured in these video shorts available online on the Office of Theological Education website, a newly created PC(USA) Seminaries YouTube Channel, and on social networking websites and groups on Facebook and Twitter. Titles include “Presbyterian Seminaries Prepare Transformational Leaders,” “The Transformational Effect of a Seminary Education,” “Why Support PC(USA) Seminaries,” “Seminaries Think Outside the Box,” “A Diversity of Seminaries Is a Gift,” “Seminaries Have an Impact in the World,” and “We’ve All Been Touched by Seminaries.”

Other Representative Cooperative Projects

Through Theological Education Fund cooperative project funds, the COTE sponsored two grant requests for the work to foster collaboration among the academic deans as well as the director of doctor of ministry programs of PC(USA) related seminaries. Jointly offered programs were planned and launched and mutually beneficial consultations were held. The COTE consulted with and encouraged seminaries to welcome and host General Assembly Moderator Neal Presa’s Unity with Difference Summits and Liturgical-Missional Colloquia. Representatives of the Mountain Retreat Association (also known as Montreat Conference Center), Stony Point Conference Center, Presbyterian Foundation, Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, the Office of the General Assembly, and multiple Presbyterian Mission Agency ministries consulted with the committee on common concerns, initiatives, and projects. Special Committees on the Belhar Confession, Funding Theological Institutions, Preparation for Ministry and Standard Ordination Exams also consulted with the COTE on business before their respective committees.

Funding for Seminaries Related to the PC(USA)

Raising money for the Theological Education Fund (1% Plan), which is the sole source of denomination-wide support for the ten PC(USA) seminaries and the Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico, was a priority for the COTE and the Office of Theological Education. The Theological Education Fund (TEF) was established by the 198th General Assembly (1986). Throughout the twenty-five years of the TEF’s operational life, more than $52 million has been contributed by more than half of the PC(USA) congregations contributing at some time during this history. In 2012, more than 1,300 PC(USA) congregations and middle governing bodies made voluntary contributions to the Theological Education Fund. As a result, $1,141,669 in TEF monies were distributed to eligible schools in 2013, according to a formula developed and monitored by the COTE Institutional Review Subcommittee on which only elected members not representing seminaries sit. In 2013, approximately 1,200 PC(USA) congregations and middle governing bodies contributed, and approximately $1,000,000 will be sent to support PC(USA) schools in 2014. While the number of contributing churches declined, the COTE celebrates that more than seventy congregations have given consecutively for all twenty-five years of this project, totaling more than $3.7 million and in 2013 over fifty congregations contributed for the first time. The TEF helps underwrite quality theological education at PC(USA) seminaries to provide for the leadership of the wider church.

A Seminary Support Network includes more than 130 enthusiastic volunteers and representatives from presbyteries and synods who advocate on behalf of the seminaries with passion for the message “Seminaries and Churches Together—For Generations to Come.” A network conference serves as a training event for representatives with the 2013 event being held in conjunction with the August 2013 PC(USA) Big Tent Event in Louisville, Kentucky, and at Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary. Fifteen network synod-level representatives continue to work on a contract basis to make possible improved regional coordination for the Seminary Support Network. Pastors, clerks of sessions, presbytery resource centers, and designated contact persons in PC(USA) congregations receive interpretive materials about our seminaries and requests for support of the Theological Education Fund. Resources include a monthly emailed newsletter focusing on the mission and impact our seminaries are engaging to transform lives, newly revised view book that presents an overview of all PC(USA) seminaries, and videos posted online and distributed on DVD.

In cooperation with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, promotion of the Theological Schools Endowment Fund continues to grow at a modest pace. The Theological Schools Endowment Fund provides an opportunity for individuals to contribute monies to benefit PC(USA) seminaries through gifts and bequests. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) Foundation manages this fund.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Theological Institutions

Charter Changes

One of the governance functions assigned to the COTE by the Report of the Special Committee on Theological Institutions approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986) is the reporting of charter changes by the individual schools to the General Assembly. Three seminaries reported changes in their charters or other constitutional documents since the 220th General Assembly (2012).

a. Columbia Theological Seminary (CTS)

Denominational seminaries exist to serve church congregations and the ministries of churches throughout the world. As such our responsibility is to respond to the changing contexts of our denominational, congregational, alumni/ae, donor, and accreditation constituencies through good stewardship of our spiritual, intellectual, informational, and material resources.

Governance within seminaries is complex. Traditionally the system has been characterized as a “shared” or “distributive” governance model, meaning that various aspects of governance are assigned to various constituencies. For example, the “curriculum” of a seminary is primarily determined by the faculty. It is influenced by such factors as the ordination requirements of our students’ denominations and certainly by the characteristics of the faculty who are chosen by the board of trustees, but it is still the domain of the faculty. Similarly, the board of trustees has particular vision and fiduciary oversight and responsibilities (which includes such concerns as the hiring, promotion, and tenuring of faculty), and administration has managerial authority with boundaries determined by the governance structure.

The governance documents that define the vision, values, vocation, and administration of a seminary are various. Primarily among these documents for Columbia as a PC(USA) seminary are the Bible; the Book of Confessions; the Book of Order; Columbia’s articles of incorporation, bylaws, board policy manual; faculty, staff, and student handbooks; and the school catalog. Each of these builds on those that undergird it. When one document higher in the priority list changes, the other documents must maintain alignment.

While Columbia makes many changes in our policies and practices every year to better respond to our mission and to stay in alignment, we do not change our more primary documents often. For example, our bylaws and plan of governance have not changed since 1994 and our articles of incorporation have not been revised since 1995. The denomination and our church partners continue to change, however, and this requires us to keep pace.

In 1998 the Board of Columbia Theological Seminary adopted Vision2020: Long-range Plan 1998–2020. This plan guided the seminary for the next decade of its life. The original writers of Vision 2020 foresaw that their work would need to be evaluated and updated given the ever-changing context of God’s world and the seminary’s work in that world. In 2009 the board assigned a Vision 2020 review team to reexamine the vision and rework it in light of changes in the world and the evolution of Columbia under the auspices of the previous vision work. The work of the new review team was heavily dependent on the original work, because that plan still powerfully expresses many of Columbia’s aspirations. But whereas the original plan laid out a rather specific timeline of goals, the “update” (completed in 2012 and entitled Moving Toward Our Third Century: A Vision Frame) focuses on a vision “frame” rather than a plan. This “frame” is designed to provide a context for planning—both shorter- and longer-term—which the board anticipates will shape the future of the seminary throughout the next decade and beyond.

The Statement of Mission of Columbia Theological Seminary was adopted in 1992, reaffirmed in 1997, and utilized in the Vision2020 Plan. It included a first paragraph that articulated the identity of CTS as follows: “Columbia Theological Seminary is an educational institution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and a community of theological inquiry and formation for ministry in the service of the Church of Jesus Christ.” This definition of Columbia’s identity and the remainder of the rather lengthy statement of mission was revised and reordered as a part of the vision process. The new statement of Columbia’s mission identity, as approved by the faculty on August 29, 2012, and by the Board of Trustees on October 2, 2012, reads: “Columbia Theological Seminary exists to educate and nurture faithful, imaginative, and effective leaders for the sake of the Church and the world.”

In 2012, Columbia’s Board of Trustees authorized a complete revision of the bylaws and plan of governance (along with whatever corresponding changes would then need to be made in our articles of incorporation with the State of Georgia). What resulted was an almost complete rewriting of the bylaws to bring them into conformity with the current ecclesial environment, our changing context, and our visionary practice. The new bylaws were adopted by the board of trustees on September 30, 2013, and ratified by the Synod of South Atlantic in October 2013 and the Synod of Living Waters in January 2014. Once ratified, the articles of incorporation were revised to assure legal alignment.

The new Bylaws (2013) make no changes in the definition of Columbia’s relationship to the PC(USA). Article I.1 states the purpose of the seminary: “Columbia Theological Seminary, Inc. (the ‘Seminary’) is an educational institution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [the ‘PC(USA)’], and a community of theological inquiry, leadership development and formation for ministry in the service of the Church of Jesus Christ. The Seminary shall have all authority and power to engage in and all activities which are necessary or incidental to such purpose, in addition to the powers conferred upon nonprofit corporations by law.”

The principle changes in the bylaws include:
• Changing the membership of the board from a requirement of 41 trustees (30 of whom would come from and be elected by the Synods of South Atlantic and Living Waters), to a range of 36–41 trustees, three fourths of whom shall be from ordered ministries in the PC(USA). The principles of diversity and inclusiveness shall be observed in the election of trustees.

• Changing the pattern of having one student representative on the board, to having both faculty and student representatives given the opportunity to attend all meetings of the board and the executive committee as observers with voice but without vote.

• Changing the stipulation that two thirds of the faculty needed to be ordained officers of the PC(USA), to the stipulation that a majority of the faculty must be members of the PC(USA) and that a majority of the faculty must also serve or have served as pastors or have other significant church leadership experience.

• Providing for electronic meetings of the board and its committees provided that the technology employed permits simultaneous aural communication among all participating members. Electronic voting is also made permissible when it has followed the opportunity for discussion in a meeting.

• Changing the amendment process from being proposed by the board to the Synods of Atlantic South and Living Waters and thereafter being adopted or amended by a majority vote of each, to being adopted by two-thirds vote of the board of trustees.

• Providing for parliamentary authority as contained in Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised, except where these rules are inconsistent with the bylaws and any special rules that the board may adopt.

• Changing the property trust article from a statement that all property is held in trust for the use and benefit of the synods, to a statement that upon dissolution of the seminary and after the payment of any debts of the seminary, the remainder of property will be assigned as determined by the board to “such 501(c)(3) corporations or organizations related to or affiliated with the PC(USA).”

These changes will provide Columbia with greater governance flexibility and empower the seminary to serve current and future students and our constituent churches more faithfully. They do not in any way diminish our relationship with the PC(USA), but rather strengthen our overall effectiveness as we respond to the diversification of our constituencies.

Numerous other changes to the bylaws were made for the purpose of simplification or clarification. In some cases, where there was an overabundance of administrative detail, these administrative and/or managerial matters have been transferred to the board policy manual (BPM) rather than being included in the bylaws.

The revised bylaws and plan of governance (2013) are available upon request as well as Moving Toward Our Third Century: A Vision Frame (revised mission statement included) and the bylaws and plan of governance (1994).

b. Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary

The Board of the Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary amended the bylaws April 26, 2013, to remove the temporary provisions in the addenda that were in the bylaws adopted October, 2011 and reviewed until May 31, 2012, to allow time for some of the parts of the old bylaws to be put in policies. The 220th General Assembly (2012) reviewed the more substantive changed made by the 2011 revised and restated bylaws.

c. Pittsburgh Theological Seminary

In 2013, the Board of Pittsburgh Theological Seminary approved changes to articles, constitution, and bylaws.

(1) Articles of Incorporation and Constitution

(a) Provisions that require oversight by or reporting to PC(USA) have been altered to be consistent with the practices and the ecumenical nature of other PC(USA) seminaries. Other references to Presbyterian church or theology remain, given the heritage at Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, although not in an exclusive manner. In some instances, use of “Christian” Church, or those denominations that accept Pittsburgh Theological Seminary graduates for ordination, is substituted. Overall, the intent is to reflect the much more ecumenical faculty and student body, making Pittsburgh Theological Seminary more welcoming to other denominations.

(b) The board of directors section has been modified to eliminate the classes of qualifications for directors. Also, the seminary’s prior articles of incorporation with Pennsylvania stated that the board will consist of 30–37 members. It was decided that the articles and constitution simply state a minimum number of directors to avoid any limitations. The amended articles require 12 as the minimum number. The constitution increases this a bit to 15. (The articles are more difficult to change so it has as low a number as the Department of Education has indicated they can accept.) Board committees by name have been reduced to those that have actual authority to act on behalf of Pittsburgh Theological Seminary. The goal was to eliminate, as much as possible, the names of committees in the constitution.
(c) References to officers of the corporation, as opposed to the officers of the board, were eliminated as they are set forth in the bylaws. Officers of the board are limited to the chair and vice chair. All other officers are officers of the corporation.

(d) The article on faculty was left largely intact, except for the denominational qualifications that have been expanded, although some clarifications were inserted.

(e) Other changes reflect a desire to reduce the detail in the constitution, update titles, and provide flexibility.

(2) Bylaws

(a) As with the constitution, provisions that require oversight by or reports to PC(USA) have been altered to be consistent with the practices and the ecumenical nature of other PC(USA) seminaries.

(b) The president and dean may be PC(USA) or a member of a Christian denomination that recognizes Pittsburgh Theological Seminary graduates for ordination, but at least one of them needs to be PC(USA).

(c) Vice president descriptions were revised to remove the reference to “other responsibilities assigned by the President” as Article V Section 4.B. covers that matter.

(d) The tenure review section has been modified to clarify and ensure that Pittsburgh Theological Seminary has the flexibility to appoint full-time faculty on a non-tenure track.

(e) Other changes add flexibility (such as electronic voting), remove inconsistencies, update titles, and eliminate obsolete references.

The Pittsburgh Theological Seminary Board believes these revisions to the governing documents provide Pittsburgh Theological Seminary with sufficient authority to fulfill its mission and adapt to the challenges and changes it faces while maintaining its academic integrity. The 2013 revised articles of incorporation, constitution, and bylaws are available upon request as well as previous versions of each of these documents.

2. Reports from Individual Institutions

The Committee on Theological Education brings to the assembly a narrative report from each of the ten seminaries related to the PC(USA), Auburn Theological Seminary, the Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico, and the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation.

a. Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary

Since 2012, Austin Seminary has inaugurated a new degree program, the Master of Arts in Ministry Practice; has begun a new online Certificate in Ministry program; and has funded two new initiatives to help ministers and seminary students address economic challenges. We have raised more than $26 million toward our comprehensive fundraising campaign goal, including fully endowing the College of Pastoral Leaders—our cohort-based model for sustaining pastoral leadership—and securing three distinguished faculty chairs and five student fellowships. Austin Seminary called Asante Todd to teach in the area of Christian ethics and the Reverend Blair Monie to become the third Louis H. and Katherine S. Zbinden Distinguished Professor of Pastoral Ministry and Leadership. Finally, we welcomed the publication of new books by four faculty members.

b. Columbia Theological Seminary

Great changes have emerged since the Vernon S. Broyles Jr. Leadership Center began full use during 2012–2013, equipped with new tools for instructional technology and certified LEED gold by USGBC. Some students received the first diplomas for our dual degree program (MDiv/MAPT). Columbia hired three associate deans: Dr. Kevin Park (Advanced Professional Studies), Ms. Kelly Campbell (John Bulow Campbell Library), and Dr. Israel Galindo (Center for Lifelong Learning). Dr. Pamela Cooper-White became the first theologian to receive the Fulbright Award. Communications were upgraded culminating in a new website (www.CTSnet.edu). Accreditation with the Association of Theological Schools and the Southern Association of Colleges received a ten-year reaffirmation, including a new Quality Enhancement Plan adopted around the key statement: Educating imaginative, resilient leaders for God’s changing world.

c. University of Dubuque Theological Seminary

The University of Dubuque Theological Seminary (UDTS) energetically pursues its mission to “Follow Jesus, Walk in the Spirit, and Join God’s Mission.” UDTS is the only seminary of the PC(USA) that offers two fully accredited master’s degrees online. Since the last General Assembly, UDTS has shortened the time required to earn the online Master of Missional Christianity to two years, launched online continuing education for clergy, and hosted two annual conferences for commissioned ruling elders. The faculty has published numerous books in service to the church such as *Presbyterians and American Culture: A His-
d. Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary

The most significant change that has occurred at Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary since the last General Assembly has been the transition the seminary has made into the quiet phase of its Covenant for the Future campaign. The campaign, which will raise $35.1 million over ten years, seeks to, among other things, eliminate student indebtedness by offering a full-tuition scholarship for every student by fall 2015. Our goal is to liberate graduates from seminary debt so they are free to go wherever God calls them when they graduate, whether that be to a congregational ministry, service as a marriage and family therapist, or some other vocation as a servant and leader for the world.

e. McCormick Theological Seminary

McCormick Theological Seminary has launched a two-year Master of Arts in Ministry degree, centers for young adults and service and innovative ministry, and will vote on a new curriculum in 2014. The Reverend Dr. Melody Knowles became the vice president of academic affairs at Virginia Seminary. Dr. Luis Rivera became the vice president of academic affairs and dean of the faculty at Garrett-Evangelical. McCormick welcomed Dr. Reggie Williams as assistant professor of ethics and will complete faculty searches this spring in Hebrew Bible and homiletics. Dr. Ted Hiebert was elected vice president of academic affairs and service and innovative ministry, and will vote on a new curriculum in 2014. The Reverend Dr. Melody Knowles became family therapist, or some other vocation as a servant and leader for the world.

f. Pittsburgh Theological Seminary

Pittsburgh Theological Seminary is committed to educating well-prepared leaders for the global church. To that end, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary has received a grant from the Arthur Vining Davis Foundations to establish the Church Planting Initiative—an expansion of the Church Planting Emphasis within the M.Div. program. Today’s seminary graduates face a world that also, and increasingly, needs entrepreneurial, mission-minded pastors who are equipped to take the gospel to people in a wide variety of nontraditional settings. Supporting church planters with resources and the permission to try “new things” brings life and energy to the broader Church. To ensure this revitalization, Pittsburgh Seminary is providing the educational preparation relevant to such ministry.

g. Princeton Theological Seminary

The academic years 2012–2013 and 2013–2014 were celebratory years at Princeton Seminary. The first seminary founded by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (in 1812) marked its bicentennial with joyful worship, theologically stimulating academic conferences and lectures, and festive celebrations. In January 2013, Dr. M. Craig Barnes became the seminary’s seventh president; a pastor and leader who brings a deep commitment to the church and the formation of pastors. The seminary community again celebrated at his October 2013 inauguration. In gratitude to God, the seminary opened its new library in 2013, a beautiful, light-filled building that provides both the hospitality of public and private study spaces for students, faculty, and visitors, and accessibility worldwide to its digital resources.

h. San Francisco Theological Seminary

San Francisco Theological Seminary (SFTS) is seeking to become part of God’s new life in Christ and serve the PC(USA) and Church of Jesus Christ in the 21st century hopefully, attentively, critically, and constructively with the world. In 2013, the board of trustees approved a strategic plan emphasizing innovation, flexibility, increased access to programs, and a vital connection with the church. Therefore, SFTS is diligently working, as a faculty, to revamp the M.Div. curriculum; design new certificates; move into the world of online education, in addition to teaching; designing extracurricular events that encourage the participation of the community beyond the seminary including the Iona Community, South Africa, and Egypt; introducing certificate programs in trauma and spiritual care, worship leadership and, jointly with McCormick Theological Seminary, executive leadership; making plans to sell some properties and build new housing; launching a $6 million funding initiative—“Chapter 1: Designing a Mosaic for Ministry”; and introducing the Center for Innovation in Ministry, which will bring together scholars and practitioners to assess, share, and spread new models and methods of forward-looking, effective, relevant ministry essential to building a vibrant church.

i. Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary

Reformed, always being reformed. Today, Johnson C. Smith Seminary (JCSTS) perhaps is more keenly aware of the reforming work of the Holy Spirit than in recent memory. The theological consortium to which JCSTS belongs is facing tough challenges. Consequently, JCSTS is reexamining its mission, structure, and direction. Building on the legacy of the Black Church and the Reformed Tradition, JCSTS is becoming an innovative theological institution committed to serving the current and emerging leadership needs of the Church. We believe God is at work in this time of great change and that JCSTS is uniquely positioned to contribute to God’s reformation of the Church and the world. Moving forward, we expect to prepare seminary graduates to be bi-vocational. We expect to become a greater resource for lay leaders who carry ministry responsibilities in smaller congregations, and we expect to make seminary education more accessible and affordable.

j. Union Presbyterian Seminary

Union Presbyterian Seminary (UPSem) completed its new Charlotte campus facility and has now been holding classes there for a year. The seminary has turned its focus to infrastructure needs on the Richmond campus, intending to renovate refectory and dormitory facility, Richmond Hall, while also building new family/married student housing. The school is currently completing its 2014–2019 strategic plan, to initiate on July 1, 2014, and has accomplished a unified calendar that brings programming on the Richmond, Charlotte, and Extended Campuses on the same academic schedule. The seminary has also raised significant funds toward endowing its church serve scholarship that is designed to assist seminary alumni/ae receive calls from small churches. UPSem also celebrates the call of two new members of the faculty: Joshua Ralston, instructor of theology; Christine Luckritz Marquis, assistant professor of church history.

k. Auburn Theological Seminary

Auburn Theological Seminary completed a strategic planning process that focuses Auburn on equipping leaders to work for justice through education, platforms for public leadership, and research. Auburn’s Center for the Study of Theological Education published “Theological Student Enrollment,” examining trends to help schools plan for the future, and released findings from “On Our Way,” studying students’ paths to seminary. Auburn’s Coach Training Program prepared students to coach church leaders in developing resilience, leading change, and thriving on the challenges of ministry. Through training and other resources, Auburn Media and Groundswell, our digital media platform, advanced faith leaders in uniting people of faith and moral courage in a multifaith movement for justice and in speaking on issues of social and moral concern that transcend partisan politics.

l. Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico/Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico

The Seminario Evangélico de Puerto Rico has continue working toward its academic and financial goals, which are to respond faithfully and efficaciously to the challenges that society and church impinges in the theological education of our students and to establish economical stability and balance to our institution. To pursue these goals we initiated three academic efforts: (1) a leveling program that prepares students without a bachelor degree to register and pursue a graduate degree, (2) a post-baccalaureate program for lay persons to explore their vocations and equip themselves to serve the church, and (3) specific areas of interest in Bible, spirituality, and pastoral care in our M. Div. program. We will continue working with the Apostolic Church in Los Angeles in providing theological education to their candidates. These efforts, along with other financial adjustments, helped us to end the 2012 to 2013 fiscal year with a modest surplus.

m. Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation

Since the 220th General Assembly (2012), the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation (OPSF), under the leadership of the Reverend Dr. Gary S. Eller, president, continued to provide scholarships for inquirers and candidates attending any of our ten PC(USA) seminaries. Financial assistance now exceeds $9 million with 762 merit scholarships, based on potential for ministry, awarded. Assistance to commissioned ruling elders increased including a distance education initiative with the University of Nebraska-Omaha, providing training in church administration. OPSF contributes to a number of lifelong learning events for clergy and lay leaders across our thirteen state primary service region and holds annual lifelong learning events in Hastings and Omaha, Nebraska, and Kansas City, Kansas, with an increased number of states being engaged through educational events and internship programs.
Item 14-01

[The assembly approved Item 14-01 with comment. See p. 44.]

[Comment: The comment is taken from the Rationale of Item 14-01 as shown below.]

1001 New Worshiping Communities

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) do the following:

1. Encourage each mid council to sponsor a training or awareness event on 1001 New Worshiping Communities in cooperation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

2. Encourage each session to pray for the fulfillment of the 1001 movement by daily praying at 10:02 AM the scripture passage Luke 10:2 that asks God to send more workers into the harvest field. (“The harvest is plentiful, but the laborers are few; therefore ask the Lord of the harvest to send out laborers into his harvest.”)

3. Recommend each presbytery to view a new 1001 video at presbytery meetings and discuss, "How can we engage in ministry outside the walls of the church in our own context?"

4. Encourage each presbytery to start at least one new worshiping community within the next two years.

Rationale:

These recommendations are in response to the following referrals:

The 1001 New Worshiping Communities movement has the potential to make new disciples and revitalize the whole of the church; this has become one of the key directional goals of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The strategies for accomplishing the goal are outlined below and the progress to date is summarized. The recommendations summarized above will enhance the denomination’s commitment to the initiative and widen the base of participation. The 1001 New Worshiping Communities movement is a grassroots movement that is best implemented on a regional basis. Therefore, widespread understanding of and commitment to the movement is desirable. Local commitment can be cultivated if each presbytery and synod participates in planning an event tailored to its specific regional culture.

New worshiping communities are local and contextual. They will differ in style and strategy depending on the location. They are best planned, nurtured, and sustained at a local level. Starting something brand new has the potential to transform the entire body of Christ, including traditional congregations and councils. The possibility for transformation multiplies to the extent that it reaches each corner of the denomination. The goal is for every presbytery to experience firsthand the impact of new growth and missional ministry.

Strategies:

• Communicate the vision through producing videos and writing stories about innovative, creative communities.

• Employ a variety of communication tools such as Facebook, website, Twitter, newsletters, and YouTube to cast the vision.

• Recruit potential leaders for New Worshiping Communities (NWC) through visits to seminaries, presbyteries, conferences, colleges, and gatherings, meeting with potential leaders, helping them to discern a call to NWC leadership.

• Support NWC leaders with training, coaching, internships, and assessments through Presbyterian Centers for New Church Innovation.

• Continue to add regional Centers for New Church Innovation until there are six regional centers with national impact (currently two are fully functional and another two are in formative stages).
• Resource mid councils by visiting presbytery and synod meetings and presenting workshops at national conferences such as Big Tent, Triennium, New Wilmington Mission Conference, Wee Kirk, and Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant conferences.

• Present “Get in the Game” (vision casting) events at presbyteries, seminaries, conferences, and other gatherings.

• Provide resources such as Starting New Worshiping Communities to help leadership teams get started with solid theological and strategic foundations.

• Provide training and assessment for leaders.

• Provide some financial support for NWCs through Mission Development Resource Committee grants.

• Train prospective NWC leaders through offering internships for college and seminary students.

The initiative was launched during the 220th General Assembly (2012), and as of December 2013 the following milestones have been reached:

• Number of New Worshiping Communities launched to date: 173.

• Presbyteries with at least one new worshiping community: 89.

• Seed Grants given by the Presbyterian Mission Agency to encourage innovation: 73.

• Investment Grants awarded to sustain significant progress: 7.

• Health Insurance grants provided: 8.

• Seminary students who have completed NWC internships: 11.

• Potential NWC leaders who have completed Discerning Missional Leadership assessments: 60.

• Percentage of new worshiping communities that are racial ethnic or new immigrant predominantly: more than 50.

• Percentage of new worshiping communities that serve primarily young adults (age 18–30): 25.

• People who “like” 1001 new worshiping communities on Facebook: 1,341.

• Professionally produced videos that provide excellent examples of new worshiping communities: 18.

• Video contest launched to encourage new worshiping communities to tell their own stories.

• Centers for New Church Innovation support and resource new worshiping communities: two centers are active, and three more expected to launch in 2014.

• People who have participated in Starting New Worshiping Communities workshops: 100.

• Presbyteries that have sponsored a Get in the Game event to communicate the vision for starting new worshiping communities: 58.

Item 14-02

[The assembly approved Item 14-02 with amendment. See pp. 44, 45.]

Educate a Child, Transform the World.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Acknowledge and celebrate the deep and rich history of Presbyterian church’s role in transforming society by providing access to quality education for children in this country and around the world.

2. Recommit itself to education as a core focus of mission in this nation and with our global partners.

3. Launch a churchwide initiative that will inspire, equip, and connect our congregations, mid councils, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency to improve the quality of education for 1,000,000 children in the U.S. and globally over the next four years.
4. Encourage and support global partners and leaders here in the United States who have made a vocational commitment to provide a quality education to children in their communities.

5. In all of these efforts, place particular emphasis on children in poverty or otherwise at risk.

6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to shape and guide this initiative, developing tangible metrics to determine success and impact, and to report back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016), sharing progress made and identifying strategies for deeper engagement in 2016-18.

[7. Urge those developing this initiative and its metrics to build upon values, traditions, and analysis embodied in previous General Assembly policy on public education and the impacts of poverty, and to consider ways that this initiative continues the work of child advocacy approved by previous assemblies.]

Rationale

For 176 years, the Presbyterian church has served as one of the greatest forces for education in the world, helping hundreds of thousands of children to learn to read and write, to think critically, and to understand their work as their Christian vocation. Our church’s core belief that every child is created in the image of God motivated our early mission workers to reach out to new communities with the offer of a quality education. In hundreds of communities, Presbyterians were the first to open up opportunities for formal education for girls.

The Presbyterian church has a deep and rich commitment to providing access to education as a part of its core Missional identity. Our church is a church of educators, school administrators, PTA members, school board members, and school volunteers, and we believe God is calling our church to collectively impact the quality of education for children in this country and around the world.

The World Bank and other international organizations have shown that primary education for young children reduces poverty, improves health, and improves the distribution of income. Globally, the recent U.N. Development Goals have helped many communities in the Global South to bring previously uneducated children into the classroom. However, the sad reality is that in South Sudan, Guatemala, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Indonesia, and many other countries, the combination of overcrowded classrooms, poorly trained teachers, and inadequate infrastructure prevent students from receiving the quality education they need.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Mission Work Plan identifies “addressing the root causes of poverty, particularly as they impact women and children” as a priority focus of its work. The intersection of this critical need for children around the world today and our church’s commitment to education constitutes a clear calling to challenge the church to engage in mission together.

This initiative will support PC(USA) global partners and education leaders in the United States as they address persistent poverty through critical investments in quality education of young children. The goal is to reach 1 million children in the next four years, inspiring, equipping, and connecting hundreds of congregations and mid councils to focus a portion of their mission efforts in support of the following activities:

- Train teachers, develop curricula, and help partners adopt “best practices” in education;
- Help global partners build or refurbish school buildings;
- Financially support mission workers in education and specific education projects;
- Advocate for better funding in public education in the U.S., particularly for children at risk;
- Pray for educators, students and administrators, as well as this education initiative;
- Get involved in “Adopt a School” programs, offering tutoring and other forms of support for local schools, focusing on children at risk; and,
- Open the doors of the church during the week to offer afterschool programs that include tutoring, mentoring, and other enrichment opportunities.

Following the movement of the Holy Spirit and working together with our global partners, mid councils, congregations, and other leaders in education, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will transform the world, one child, one educator, one school at a time, collectively impacting more than one million children over the next four years.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 14-02 with amendment by adding two new recommendations as follows: [Text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]
7. Urge those developing this initiative and its metrics to build upon values, traditions, and analysis embodied in previous General Assembly policy on public education and the impacts of poverty, and to consider ways that this initiative continues the work of child advocacy approved by previous assemblies.

8. Commend the initiative for including domestic as well as international dimensions as the pattern of public education funding and effects of economically and racially segregated housing continue to restrict the aspirations of many children in the United States.

The ACSWP believes that this recommendation may provide an opportune time to encourage the church to recover and lift up the high calling of the teacher and the public school. Children are born unfinished. Teachers and the educational institutions in which they serve (along with parents and the broader community) participate with God in forming and equipping mature adults who are able to participate faithfully in the world. Certainly the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the larger Reformed tradition have benefitted from and helped create an educated laity.

Among other dynamics, this study looked at trends toward re-segregation and privatization in the United States, trends reinforced by inequities in funding and in some measures by testing-based curricula. Arguments over charter schools and national standards were also examined, and a holistic learning model, including learning about religion in older grades, was affirmed. A basic approach: “this report is founded on the assumption that every child has the right to equity and quality in education and that it is the responsibility of the whole church to protect and preserve this right for all children, in accordance with Jesus’ call to us to understand all in need as our neighbors, and in support of Article 28 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.” This report also refers to prior work of the church and ecumenical cooperation in this area, all of which might benefit those developing a new program.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 14-02.

As articulated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency in Item 14-02, “the Presbyterian church has served as one of the greatest forces for education in the world for 176 years, helping hundreds of thousands of children to learn to read and write, to think critically, and to understand their work as their Christian vocation.”

Endorsing in totality Item 14-02, the ACWC adds the acknowledgment of the need to educate girls in this country and around the world. Organizations like “Girl Rising” (www.girlrising.org) provide excellent educational, as well as informational insight into the necessity to continue to lift up and support the education of girls, articulating, “We know that educating girls is the smartest investment of our time. When girls are educated, communities thrive and economies grow. Yet 66 million girls are missing from classrooms worldwide, and tremendous opportunities are lost” (www.girlrising.org).

Hence, as the PMAB “directs the PMA to shape and guide this initiative … and to report back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) strategies identified,” partnering with organizations like “Girl Rising” that are presently doing the hard work of furthering the education of girls may prove beneficial. On that note, “Girl Rising” says, “We use the power of storytelling, leveraged through partnerships, to share the simple truth that educating girls can transform societies;” and notes that “educating girls is the smartest investment opportunity in the world today,” and yet, “65 million girls are missing from classrooms worldwide.” Much work is yet to be done, and time’s a-wasting! Now is the time. Educate Girls, Change the World!

Item 14-03

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Acknowledge the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s historic commitment to joining Christ’s mission in local and global communities.
2. Encourage congregations, mid councils, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency to join intentionally in God’s mission to transform our world and address root causes of societal injustices by following Christ’s example of service through faith, hope, love, and witness.

3. Launch a churchwide initiative that will inspire, equip, and connect Presbyterians to continue to go beyond the walls of their congregations and increase their engagement in service to their communities and the world.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a historical commitment to joining Christ’s mission in local and global communities and many have discussed and written about the concept of the missional church in recent years. The Presbyterian Mission Agency, in its 2013–2016 Mission Work Plan, has made engaging young adults through mission and volunteer service a priority and believes shaping multigenerational, faith-based relationships dedicated to service in local communities and the world will help the church better follow Christ’s mission.

For nearly 200 years, the Presbyterian church has served as one of the greatest forces for mission in the world. The church is called to minister to the immediate needs and hurts of people. The Book of Order states: “In the life of the congregation, individual believers are equipped for the ministry of witness to the love and grace of God in and for the world. The congregation reaches out to people, communities, and the world to share the good news of Jesus Christ, to gather for worship to offer care and nurture to God’s children, to speak for social justice and righteousness, and to bear witness to the truth and to the reign of God that is coming into the world” (G-1.0101).

Presbyterians have sought to be a mission-centered church from their inception and have a strong, unwavering belief that there is no other way truly to be the church. Many have discussed and written about the concept of the missional church in recent years. One Presbyterian scholar, Darrell Guder, has written on this vital topic for the church today. In his book, Missional Church: A Vision for the Sending of the Church in North America, Guder and his colleagues provide key insights into the recent missional church movement.

Guder and his colleagues discuss three themes that are important to this proposal: the shift the church must make, the purpose of the church, and the role of denominational structures. Guder argues that to be missional the church must “move from church with mission to missional church.” Most churches articulate a commitment to mission and have a mission program. If they are large enough, they likely will have a specific pastor devoted to mission. Many churches support several overseas missionaries and are probably contributing money and service to a local mission, homeless shelter, or food bank. In this construct, mission is seen as one of the many activities and programs of the church. The purpose of the local church is not to be what Guder calls “vendors of religious services and goods,” with mission merely being one of a myriad of programs. Rather, doing mission is central to what it means to be the church. This is the shift that the church must make.

The second major theme in Guder’s work challenges the very definition of what it means to be the church. Guder argues that it is “a new understanding of the church as a body of people sent on a mission.” The church is thus not only a body that gathers for a worship service. The church is also a group of people organizing together so they can serve the community around them most effectively. The purpose of gathering is to be sent. Guder states, “The public worship of the mission community always leads to the pivotal act of sending. The community that is called together is the community that is sent. Every occasion of public worship is a sending event.” To be a missional church, worship is driven more by what must happen after the service.

What it truly means to be the church, according to Guder, is “the people of God who are called and sent to re-present the reign of God. This vocation is rooted in the good news, the gospel: in Jesus Christ the reign of God is at hand and is now breaking in.” For Guder, the focus of the staff and the commitment of the resources are directed toward helping people to re-present Christ to their neighbors in their everyday lives. They do this through normal, day-to-day interactions with friends, family members, and colleagues. The activities of the church should model these forms of everyday interactions. Guder writes: “The ecclesial practices are never esoteric or supernatural but involve ordinary human behavior: joining and sharing, eating and drinking, listening and caring, testing and deciding, welcoming and befriending. To do this effectively, the church must know its neighbors and understand what things they care about, so as to cultivate authentic, genuine friendships.

This initiative seeks to inspire Presbyterian congregations to reach out to their communities through acts of service that lead to connectivity with local communities and demonstrates the love of Christ to their neighbors such as:

- Every congregation would determine a number of volunteers and volunteer hours they would commit to their community and fulfill that commitment for the year.
- Adopt a community in need of refurbishing in the U.S.
- Actively engage youth and young adults in volunteer opportunities.
- Support young adults and others called to serve in God’s mission in the U.S. and abroad.
- “Re-presenting” Christ in their everyday lives through normal, day-to-day interactions with friends, family members, and colleagues.
- Support the Living Missionally initiative in prayer.
- Actively engaging at least 1,000 PC(USA) congregations each year (2014–2016) to focus on becoming “Missional Churches” through acts of service in communities around the world.

Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Church Growth Consultation Committee Report

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, on behalf of the Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Church Growth Consultation Committee, recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014):

1. Encourage local congregations to engage in relational ministries with people of all races and ethnicities in their neighborhoods.

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Committee on Theological Education to consult with theological seminaries to develop culturally sensitive curriculum, theologies, language, teaching and learning styles for teaching elders and church leaders of all ethnicities.

3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly to collaborate with mid councils to establish regional certified ministry training programs to prepare racial ethnic and immigrant church members to serve worshiping communities.

5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and mid councils to create a network of racial ethnic and new immigrant coaches trained to address the culturally specific needs of racial ethnic and new immigrant congregations.

6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Office of the General Assembly, and the mid councils to consult with each other to consider expanding the criteria for accepting the ordination credentials of new immigrant leaders.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2012 Referral: Item 16-06. Growing a Diverse Church: A Call for Unity and Reconciliation. Recommendation. Direct the GAMC (Office of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW, the Office of Evangelism and Church Growth) and the Office of the General Assembly to Hold a National Consultation to Develop Strategies and Policies to Support Racial Ethnic, Multicultural, and New Immigrant Church Growth
This report and its recommendations address the four areas to which the 220th General Assembly (2012) requested response: (1) Assess the effectiveness of church growth and evangelism programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) at national, regional, and local levels in integrating racial, ethnic, and new immigrants into the church; (2) Create measurable goals for racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth; (3) Develop a cohesive coordinated strategy for realizing the goals and mechanisms for deploying resources at the presbytery and local congregational levels; and, (4) include a strategy to encourage presbyteries to recognize and receive ministers of new immigrant fellowships and congregations as authorized in the Book of Order, G-2.0505a(1).

The consultation upon which these recommendations are based concluded that our efforts have borne fruit when we have recognized the racial and cultural shifts in society and have sought to embrace them. We have also seen fruitful efforts when we have gone directly to the people affected by our efforts and sought to work alongside them. Thus, our recommendations are premised upon the belief that we can become an even more fruitful denomination if we learn to live more fully into these cultural shifts, as in that way our life together becomes more relevant and faithful. Rather than seeking ways to assimilate our racial ethnic and new immigrant sisters and brothers into the PC(USA) we must learn to embrace and embody, the diversity of which we are a part.

REPORT

Biblical and Theological Foundations

*All Scripture references are New Revised Standard Version

God is diverse and communal by nature. The triune God is Creator, Son, and Holy Spirit, one God, three persons, distinct, yet equal in substance (Book of Confessions, The Scots Confession, 3.01). Consistent with God’s nature, God creates a world of diversity and calls it good (Genesis 1). Our Brief Statement of Faith states, “In sovereign love, God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community” (Book of Confessions, 10.3, lines 29–32). Presbyterians make a commitment to racial ethnic diversity as a good and faithful response to God’s affirmation of diversity revealed in the triune God and mirrored in creation.

The call to diversity is not only underlined in God’s very being and inherent in creation, but affirmed in the ministry of the Old Testament prophets. The prophets taught Israel to “love the alien as yourself” (Lev. 19:34, Deut. 10:19, Exodus 22:21; 23:9), and to consider “foreigners” as “citizen[s] among you” (Lev. 19: 34). Our Lord Jesus Christ fulfilled the law of the prophets, preaching the kingdom of God and calling us to observe the kingdom in our brothers and sisters. Boldly practicing a ministry of inclusion, Jesus broke down the barriers of exclusivity, as he shared life with diverse persons and challenged systems of economic, racial, and gender segregation. In the inauguration of his public ministry, Jesus quotes the prophet Isaiah to announce his mission to proclaim good news to those who are poor, imprisoned, and suffering oppression (Isa. 61:1–2, Lk. 4:18–19). A first century Palestinian Jew, Jesus ministered to a Roman officer (Mt. 8:5–13), a Canaanite woman (Mt. 15:21–28), and a Samaritan woman (Jn. 4:7–30), in addition to the “lost sheep of the house of Israel” (Mt. 10:6). In the parable of the Good Samaritan, Jesus challenged the long-standing enmity between Jews and Samaritans when he calls the Samaritan “good,” in appreciation for the Samaritan's benevolence towards a Jewish neighbor (Lk. 10:25–37). Before Jesus ascended to heaven, he commissioned his followers to go and “make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit” (Mt. 28:19, emphasis added). Baptism is the invitation to all who would become part of the body of Christ. Likewise, in the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper, Christ offers the invitation to commune to all who trust in him.

“By the indwelling of the Holy Spirit all believers … [are] united to Christ … [and] united one to another in the Church (Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.054). On the day of Pentecost, the disciples were gathered in one place when suddenly, they were filled with the Holy Spirit who enabled them to speak in various languages (Acts 2:4). When people from diverse multinational and multilingual backgrounds heard the preaching of the gospel in their own languages, they responded and three thousand people were baptized.

Presbyterians seek to be faithful to what God affirms, what Jesus’ ministry exemplifies, and what the Holy Spirit empowers—that is, unity in diversity. Yet, we struggle to be a community that reflects the diversity God desires. Sunday morning still remains a largely segregated hour. Our denomination has opportunity to be a more faithful witness of the body of Christ with its diverse parts (1 Corinthians 12). Informed by the witness of Scripture and our confessions, we seek to be obedient to the will of God when we embrace difference, intentionally build diverse communities of faith, and humbly and faithfully pray for the Holy Spirit to empower us. To this end, we make a commitment to develop strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA).

The Process

In response to the directive from the 220th General Assembly (2012) that a consultation be held for the purpose of developing strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA), the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through the office of Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women convened a small group for the purpose of devising such a consultation.

The group charged with designing the consultation had two purposes: (1) to convene a consultation that would respond to the issues that the General Assembly wanted addressed; and, (2) to identify the persons who should attend such a consultation, keeping in mind that such a gathering should include representatives of specific offices within the General Assembly, experienced leaders in racial ethnic and new immigrant churches, and mid council executives. To that end, thirty persons were invited (see Appendix 1, List of Attendees to the Consultation). In addition, the agenda of the consultation was fashioned in such a way as to produce responses to Recommendations 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6 of the action of the General Assembly in response to the report from the 219th General Assembly’s (2010) Special Task Force to Study Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth: Appendix 2, Item 16-06, Minutes, 220th General Assembly (2012).

The agenda of the consultation began with worship at the Presbyterian Center Chapel in celebration of Pentecost, followed by opening remarks, a panel discussion on “Fulfilling the Promise and Hope of Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Ministries,” and a description of what our ecumenical partners are doing in this area. The core of the consultation was fashioned around the attendees entering into conversations related to: (1) Signs of Hope; (2) Measures of Success; (3) Resources; (4) Challenges; and (5) Strategies. (See Appendix 3, Learning/Sharing Process, Leaders’ Guide). These conversations began with generating ideas around those five topics, and then moved to sorting and summarizing those topics.

The final step led the group in discerning the most important insights from those conversations. The attendees self-selected into smaller groups that could address, more deeply, one of the five topic areas. Each group was charged with discussing the key ideas presented, summarizing the wisdom of the group, filling in any gaps, adding new ideas, and preparing a statement for consideration by the entire body in plenary. Each group then reported their work results and responded to comments and questions.

The group then discussed the best way to fashion a final report of the consultation, and determined that a writing team would be given the task of putting all these pieces together in a cohesive and cogent report; a draft would then be circulated to the consultation attendees for additional comment, before finalizing the report for submission to the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Following the consultation, four individuals and one staff were identified to draft the initial report. This “writing team” subsequently met over a two-day period to discuss what had been written, heard, and said during the consultation and to begin the process of actually drafting the report. The report addresses these four particular areas raised by the 220th General Assembly (2012): (1) Assess the effectiveness of church growth and evangelism programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) at national, regional, and local levels in integrating racial, ethnic, and new immigrants into the church; (2) Create measurable goals for racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth; (3) Develop a cohesive coordinated strategy for realizing the goals and mechanisms for deploying resources at the presbytery and local congregational levels; (4) Include a strategy to encourage presbyteries to recognize and receive ministers of new immigrant fellowships and congregations as authorized in G-2.0505a(1).

Assess the effectiveness of church growth and evangelism programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) at national, regional, and local levels in integrating racial, ethnic, and new immigrants into the church.

It is clear that there have been many instances of effective programs and initiatives that bear celebration—1001 New Worshiping Communities; New Beginnings, Engage, and Triennium to name a few. Thus, assessing the effectiveness of these church programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) is a relatively simple task. We identify those programs and initiatives, review their stated goals, and determine their effectiveness. In pursuing that task, however, it becomes abundantly clear that nothing we do as a church can be particularly effective unless and until we change the language we use to measure the efficacy and effectiveness of our programs and initiatives. Changing the language certainly means changing ourselves, as well.

In making such an assessment, however—and given that our efforts have borne fruit in numerous instances—the larger question is this: Why have we been unable to meet our goals for increasing the percentage of racial ethnic persons within our denomination? That question looms even larger at a time when the society around us has itself changed so dramatically over the past decade or more. Stated differently, the question is and should be: What in those initiatives and programs has spurred fruitfulness? The consultation concluded that our efforts have borne fruit when we have recognized the racial and cultural shifts in society and have sought to embrace them. Thus, an initiative such as the 1001 New Worshiping Communities bears fruit because it recognizes the need to use new language and new approaches as it exhibits the Kingdom of God to people outside our church walls. Likewise, new immigrant fellowships are fruitful when they recognize and address the actual needs of those whom they seek to reach. Rather than deciding from “on high” how to approach future congregants, they have, instead, gone directly to the people, asking, “How can we work alongside you?”

The instances of bearing fruit in our efforts to exhibit the Kingdom are, for the most part, the result of local initiatives; those realities deserve to be acknowledged and celebrated! Yet we believe that we would become even more fruitful as a denomination if we learn to live more fully into these cultural shifts; in that way, our life together becomes more relevant and faithful as... well. We need to relinquish our customary habit of asking, “How do we assimilate our racial ethnic and new immigrant sisters and brothers into the PC(USA)?” Rather, the PC(USA) must ask, “How do we become a community that embodies the diversity God desires?” Implicit in that question are other questions such as “What do we need to learn about being faithful from our sisters and brothers outside the PC(USA)?” and “How do we enter more fully into their lives and circumstances?” and “How do we need to change the dominant culture so that there are places in the community of faith for everyone?”

In Tucson, Arizona, a Middle East Presbyterian Fellowship is composed of persons who share a common language, Arabic; though the group includes Muslims as well as Christians, they come together each week to worship the living God. So, too, a new worshipping community in a southern California trailer park has begun to witness to the love of Jesus Christ among transient, broken, lonely people. A newly ordained pastor in Colorado Springs serves as an evangelist to unchurched young people there. Even though we have built much of our denominational identity on chartered congregations, these fellowships may well never fit that mold; even so, if we fail to embrace them as part of our fold, we fail to exhibit the Kingdom of God to the world—a fundamental and essential part of our calling as a church.

We have 1001 New Worshipping Communities. We have the Middle East Presbyterian Fellowship. We have myriad other stories of sowing seeds for the Kingdom, and seeing them begin to grow up around us. Now we must find the language and the will to embrace them and to build on their fruitfulness. We must find a way for our dominant racial and cultural membership—the 91 percent—to learn how to embrace our changing context. We need to do this not as a way merely to increase our numbers. More importantly, we need to do it in response to Christ’s great commission. We are called to “go and make disciples”—not to go and make clones.

As we reach out to our brothers and sisters in the racial ethnic and new immigrant communities—and indeed to all our sisters and brothers in this world—we may well risk our corporate life. As we engage those instances of fruitfulness, we need to know that doing so will surely be at the cost of our comfortable identity and familiar life as the PC(USA). For many of us that will feel like a death; so we can expect resistance—sometimes very powerful resistance.

As a resurrection people, however, we have the powerful promise that God’s love has conquered death. That is why our Book of Order can acknowledge that we are called “to be a community of faith, entrusting itself to God alone, even at the risk of losing its life” (F-1.0301). That promise frees us and empowers us to engage the risks and to embrace the new life that will surely come to us as we welcome, encourage, and join in the lives and the faith of our racial ethnic and new immigrant sisters and brothers in Christ.

Create measurable goals for racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth. If our church is to be faithful to the calling to participate in God’s work of transforming the world around us, then we must first be open to the Spirit transforming us. The church has said repeatedly that it wants genuine and sustainable growth in ministries with racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant groups; likewise it has stated a desire for full inclusion of such other underrepresented populations as young adults and persons with disabilities. The first key to full inclusion of each of these constituencies is transformation of the church’s own corporate culture.

Such transformative changes will in turn necessitate changes in our customary, habitual means of numerical measurement, e.g., membership rolls, monetary contributions, operational and benevolence budgets, Sunday school enrollment, average attendance at Sunday morning worship. Instead, we will need to learn how to recognize and measure indicators of faithfulness and fruitfulness, rather than signs of success.

In that regard, the consultation offers the following four goals for consideration, along with strategies and key questions, as indicators of our faithfulness to God’s call that we be transformed:

GOAL ONE: MAKING DISCIPLES

Is the focus more on discipleship and less on formal membership? Are we sustaining the current emphasis on creating new worshipping communities, as distinct from establishing chartered congregations? Are we raising up—and equally importantly supporting—leaders who embody new understandings of leadership, e.g., the capacity to live and work among the poor, the capability of distinguishing between leadership and management, a willingness to surrender the privileges and habits of being part of the dominant culture?

Since poverty is a reality of life, either present or imminent, for a great many racial ethnic and new immigrant communities, as it is for a majority of persons with disabilities, how is our educational tradition preparing, and expecting, ordained church leaders to live and work among the realities of poverty? What new things do the church need to do to prepare leaders for standing among persons and communities in poverty?

GOAL TWO: TRANSFORMING CHURCH CULTURE

Are we transforming the church’s culture from regulatory to relational, from directional to collaborative? Are we able to allow the still new Form of Government to create possibilities rather than restrictions?
Are we able to avoid returning to the comfortable habit of endlessly amending the Book of Order?

Are we moving from institutional maintenance towards community relevance? Are we being faithful stewards of God’s resources within God’s world?

GOAL THREE: REFORMING STANDARD OPERATING PROCEDURES

How have we reformed our understanding of what ordination does and should mean? How have we aligned our preparation-for-ministry process with that reformed understanding?

Are we able to reform theological education to include a focus on missional, racial ethnic, and multicultural contexts? Have we struck a healthy balance in theological education between technical proficiency and creative imagination?

Have we created programs for developing lay ministry that bridge the leadership gap for racial ethnic and new immigrant communities?

GOAL FOUR: BEARING EVANGELICAL WITNESS

Are we bearing witness to the power of the Gospel, as distinct from bearing witness to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)? Are we establishing ministries of reconciliation, such as interfaith dialogue, doing racial justice, advocating for the excluded, the oppressed, the marginalized, and the vulnerable? How open are we to the Spirit doing really new things among us?

Develop a cohesive coordinated strategy for realizing the goals and mechanisms for deploying resources at the presbytery and local congregational levels.

The consultation’s vision for the church is colorful and friendly. Led by authentic leaders reflecting the changing demographic of America, worship participants also reflect a diverse America. Everyone is welcome. The church embodies radical hospitality to everyone: racial and ethnic minorities, new worshipping communities, people with disabilities. New forms of worship and mission are valued. To morph from the culture of the current church with its strong history of technically proficient leaders, to the radically imaginative, open, and accepting nature of the envisioned church will require comprehensive changes to the church body at all levels: from local congregational levels though the presbyteries, and at the General Assembly and our seminaries.

The consultation had wide-ranging discussions around the roles of local congregations, presbyteries, synods, the General Assembly, and those involved in theological education regarding how they might best support enhanced racial ethnic and new immigrant outreach:

* Local congregations
  - Form full partnerships with racial and ethnic ministries and new worshipping communities where the gifts and talents of each group have equal weight. Rethink the use of church buildings so that they are open, attractive beacons in the community used daily and fully for ministry by diverse groups.
  - Expand the role and empower formalized lay ministries.

* Presbyteries and Synods
  - Clarify their own vision of faithful mission, particularly as it relates to inclusive ministries.
  - Create a network of coaches and peer mentors to clarify and implement the vision for inclusive ministries.
  - Create lay leadership programs, including internships, coaches and peer mentors, to prepare culturally sensitive and theologically grounded leaders for new inclusive ministries.

* The General Assembly
  - Identify funds that can be utilized to support a variety of inclusive ministries.
  - Commit as a corporate body to the distribution of all official documents in culturally sensitive language.
  - Lead the church in the important work of engaging in conversations and in making opportunities available for discussing white privilege and racial prejudice in the church.
  - Investigate new methods of developing and nurturing leadership for more inclusive ministries.

* Those Involved in Theological Education
• Establish a perpetual dialogue with the entire theological education community, focusing on ministry in diverse contexts.

• Identify those functions, historically carried out by synods, e.g., first call programs and early ministry initiatives that might need to be included within initial and continuing theological education settings.

• Cultivate the innovative ministry skills demanded by a changing context within teaching communities that focus on continuing education and lifelong learning.

• Investigate new methods of developing and nurturing leadership for more inclusive ministries.

• Develop specific skill sets for working with persons living in poverty and integrate those skills into theological education.

• Develop alternative, practical forms of education such as internships, coaching teams, and peer mentors to provide emerging leaders with hands-on training and support, so that they can relate effectively to their particular church family and context, as well as to the broader denomination.

The time is now to commit to developing strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA), to embody unity in diversity and to be a church for all people.

Include a strategy to encourage presbyteries to recognize and receive ministers of new immigrant fellowships and congregations as authorized in G-2.0505a(1). Along with the approval of the 1001 New Worshiping Communities initiative, the language of G-2.0505a(1) presents a new opportunity for expanding the reach of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and celebrating our diversity. Section G-2.0505a(1) is a tool for presbyteries hoping to encourage and nurture new worshiping communities under their jurisdiction, permitting presbyteries to receive teaching elders who have been ordained by other denominations into membership of the presbytery. The most qualified leader for a new immigrant community possesses cultural and language fluency as well as theological training. Finding a qualified teaching elder of the PC(USA) able to communicate in the language of a new immigrant congregation may be difficult or impractical. Each partner denomination throughout the world determines its requirements for ordination. Many of our new immigrant leaders have been educated and have served faithfully in the denomination of their ordination and have been called by God and by the congregation to be the pastor for the community.

Section G-2.0505a(1) gives authority to a presbytery to accept qualified leaders to be received as teaching elders when the mission of the presbytery requires it. The language of “may” is meant to provide options, not to make requirements that would overstep a presbytery’s authority to make mission decisions. The following questions are designed to provide a presbytery with some guidance in applying the authority granted to it. Each situation needs to be considered on its own merits. There is no formula for inclusion.

The questions below are provided to stimulate appropriate conversations.

Some considerations:

Does the new immigrant ministry fit into the mission plan for evangelism and ministry of the presbytery? Who provides oversight and guidance to this new ministry? Is there a relationship of nurture and accountability with the presbytery or with a congregation of the presbytery?

Is the leader ordained as a teaching elder (or equivalent)? What is the denomination of membership? Does this denomination have any historic relationship to the PC(USA)? Denominations in correspondence with the PC(USA) can be found at http://oga.pcusa.org/section/departments/ecumenical-relations/list-churches-correspondence/. The presbytery may ask the candidate to provide proof of ordination such as an ordination certificate or a letter from the denomination of membership.

What kind of education or training for ministry has the candidate received? The presbytery may ask the candidate to provide transcripts, diploma, or other confirmation of the training.

What ministry experience has the candidate had? The presbytery may ask the candidate to provide a resume or personal information form and letters of reference.

Does the candidate demonstrate satisfactory knowledge and competence in areas of study that the presbytery deems relevant to faithful ministry? Areas may include: theology, church history, worship and sacraments, polity, Bible content, exegesis, or others.

Has the presbytery had opportunity to get to know and to examine the candidate? The presbytery may require further training or mentoring as a condition for reception into the presbytery.
Note on immigration status: A religious worker visa allows mid councils and churches to call religious workers who are not residents of the U.S. to serve the church. The Office of Immigration in the PC(USA) can help explore eligibility and guide petitioners through the process of application.

In all cases the attitude toward the leaders of new worshiping communities ought to be one of warm hospitality and collegiality.

Study the successes of other denominations.

The desire of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to be intentional about developing racial ethnic and new immigrant church growth resonates with several of the denominations in the United States. The United Church of Christ and the Disciples of Christ, for example, both have longstanding Hispanic/Latino-a, African American, and Asian ministries that, like PC(USA), are in the discernment and goal setting stage of racial ethnic and immigrant church growth.

The United Methodist embraced the important role the racial ethnic and immigrant community will play in the future of the church, and the more cross-cultural ministries are emerging. In response, the Unified National Plans for Strengthening Ethnic/Racial Ministries was initiated within the United Methodist structure. The five racial ethnic/immigrant national plans include: Hispanic and Latino, African American, Asian, Native American, and Pacific Islanders. The primary goals are: (1) leadership development that will cultivate disciple who can reach a racially diverse mission field, (2) foster growth in membership and worship attendance, and (3) ensure the presence of a younger generation.

Item 16-06 from the 220th General Assembly (2012)

Item 16-06

[The assembly approved Item 16-06 with amendment. See pp. 48, 49.]

Growing a Diverse Church: A Call for Unity and Reconciliation—From the General Assembly Special Task Force to Study Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth

The General Assembly Special Task Force to Study Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) direct the General Assembly Mission Council (specifically, the Office of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women and the Office of Evangelism and Church Growth) and the Office of the General Assembly (specifically, the Mid Council Commission in the Office of the Stated Clerk) to hold a national consultation to develop strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA). This consultation shall bring together representatives of these offices, experienced leaders in racial ethnic and new immigrant churches, and mid council executives. [The consultation shall be held in coordination with the African American Church Growth Strategy consultation.] The consultation shall:

1. Assess the effectiveness of church growth and evangelism programs and initiatives of the PC(USA) at national, regional, and local levels in integrating racial ethnic and new immigrants into the church.
2. Create measurable goals for racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth.
3. Develop a cohesive coordinated strategy for realizing the goals and mechanisms for deploying resources at the presbytery and local congregation levels.
4. [Designate a monitoring group to assess progress toward these goals that shall report at each General Assembly.] [Designate the GAMC to monitor and report on the progress toward these goals at each General Assembly.]
5. Include in its strategies a plan to encourage presbyteries to recognize and receive ministers of new immigrant fellowships and congregations as authorized in G-2.0505a(1).
[7. Study the successes of other denominations.]

Appendix 3: Learning/Sharing Process, Leaders’ Guide

Racial Ethnic/New Immigrant Convocation (RE/NI)
Learning/Sharing Process Leaders’ Guide

Conversation Questions:

• Signs of Hope: Where do you see signs of life/hope in RE/NI ministry? Where is RE/NI ministry happening effectively? What specific success stories can you identify? What programs are working effectively?
Measures of Success: What do we mean by “success” in RE/NI ministry? How will we know if we are effectively growing and making disciples? What measurements/benchmarks would indicate success?

Resources: What resources do we currently have to support RE/NI ministries? How helpful are they? What do we need?

Challenges: What are the challenges ahead? What are the obstacles to growth and sustainability?

Strategy: What is your vision for the future? What does the denomination need to do to nurture growth and health in RE/NI ministry? What do presbyteries and synods need to do? What do congregations need to do?

Process

Part I—Generating Ideas

Ideas and Inspiration: Each person will spend ten minutes at each of five tables participating in brainstorming sessions around the five topics. Ideas will be written on sticky notes and added to a piece of newsprint. A leader will time the event and move people from table to table. A process will be devised to make sure the groups are mixed up at each table.

Leader’s Task: Table leaders will stay at the same table throughout this part of the exercise instead of moving around to other tables. Encourage participants to stay on task. Ask follow-up questions using the suggestions above. Ask for input from quiet or reserved participants.

Sorting and Summarizing: At the final table the group will sort and summarize the comments at that table by combining the comments that are similar, removing repeats, and eliminating responses that are not relevant. At the end of this time the newsprint sheets will be hung on the walls.

Leader’s Task: Try to consolidate the suggestions without losing valuable input. Perhaps 2 or 3 responses can be combined into one.

Discerning and Voting: After a time of silence and listening to the Spirit, each person will be given 10 dots or stars which they can place on any ideas or comments that they think are particularly important to the conversation.

Part II—Going Deeper

Small Group Work: Each person will elect to be part of one of the five groups, each addressing one of the Conversation Questions. The group will be given the newsprint sheets generated during Part I. During Part II, the group will attempt to come up with a statement in which they summarize what the whole team has brainstormed and use that information as the basis for going deeper. Each small group will come up with a statement that can be presented to the whole group for review and comments. The goal of each team will be to contribute to a denomination-wide strategy for the long-term health and growth and sustainability of RE/NI ministry. The process followed by each small group will be:

- Discuss the key issues presented
- Summarize the wisdom of the group
- Fill in the gaps
- Add new ideas
- Prepare a statement

Leader’s Task: Help the group go beyond just summarizing the input from the brainstorming process. This is an opportunity to think deeply about significant issues. Encourage one participant to take notes. Lead the group to make a decision about how they will report to the whole gathering.

Reporting: Each group will have 15–20 minutes to report to the whole group and respond to questions and comments.

Part III—Recommending

Summarizing: The whole body will do this section. Leader will ask: What message do we have for the denomination? What strategies, resources, and benchmarks will result in health and sustainability? What do we expect the denomination and its constituent organizations to do as a result of our work? There should be a focus on new behaviors.

Leader’s Task: Review the purpose of the consultation. Are all the assigned tasks being addressed? Will the suggestions make a real difference in the life of the PC(USA)?

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 14-04.
It is necessary for our local churches to open their ministries to people of all races and ethnicities in their neighborhoods. This openness will not only help us grow quantitatively but also qualitatively since we will be able to embrace the real diversity that exists in our country.

We cannot pretend that our local congregations, mid councils, and national ministries will be leading our denomination toward diversity and openness if our leaders are not receiving education accordingly. Our teaching elders and church leaders have to be trained by seminaries that provide knowledge and experiences that are culturally sensitive to the diversity that we are confronting on a daily basis.

For this purpose, we have to promote training programs that will prepare sensitive and competent racial ethnic leaders to work effectively with racial ethnicities and new immigrant worshiping communities. They should tend to each community according to their needs while valuing their cultural richness and unique blend.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 14-04.

Many of the recommendations in this report also appeared in the report of the Special Committee on the Nature of the Church for the 21st Century (Item 16-07 of the 220th General Assembly (2012) as well as the other citations contained in the rationale; Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 48, 49–50, 1462).

The ACWC recognizes PC(USA) goals for the development of new congregations in the 21st century. Racial ethnic, new immigrant, and multicultural new churches depend on the ability of presbyteries to embrace these congregations, supporting them with new definitions of “church” and flexibility in ordination requirements. The denomination can be supportive by designing resources in languages other than English that are culturally appropriate. Seminaries can provide courses in languages other than English so new immigrant pastors can receive training in polity and reformed theology.

The ACWC also recognizes that many of these new churches retain the patriarchy of the cultures from which they have come. It is the ACWC’s hope that gender justice will be at the forefront as various structural areas of the PC(USA) pursue the work assigned to them with General Assembly approval. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns offers to consult and to review new material with an eye toward removing gender biases from new resources.

Women of Faith Award Nominees to the 221st General Assembly (2014)

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) recognize the following Women of Faith award recipients at the 221th General Assembly (2014):

- Ruling Elder Joanie Lukins,
- Ruling Elder Helen Morrison,
- The Reverend Joyce Shin.

Rationale

Women of Faith Awards

The Women of Faith Awards were established in 1986 to honor women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) whose lives exemplify their Christian commitment through witness, service, and leadership.

Each year a theme is chosen. Nominations are received from throughout the church and honorees are selected by a committee of representatives from various groups.

Awards are presented at the Women of Faith Breakfast during the General Assembly. This breakfast is a biennial celebration of God’s activity in the lives of women and their response to God’s presence.

The theme for this year’s awards is “Prophetic Women of Faith” and it honors women who are part of the prophetic tradition in the church who are following the examples of prophets and apostles who came before them.
The 2014 selection committee included Carol Hylkema, moderator; Mary “Molly” Baskin, Presbyterian Mission Agency Board; Louise Davidson, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns; Janice Dorbu, Racial Ethnic Young Women Together; Hannah Schorr, National Network of Presbyterian College Women; and Susan Skoglund, Presbyterian Women Churchwide Coordinating Team.

The selection committee members were instructed to consider the following criteria in reviewing nomination forms and in making their selection of the four women who receive this award:

- Selection of the Women of Faith awardees are based on the theme.
- How is she prophetic?
- How has she demonstrated her gift of prophesy?
- Three nominees will be selected.
- Strive for racial ethnic diversity.
- Strive for geographic diversity.
- Awardees will be women.
- Awardees will be Presbyterian.
- Current staff serving the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are ineligible for nomination.
- Previous award recipients are ineligible to be nominated again for the Women of Faith Award (one-time recipients; no duplications).

The election of the three honorees was approved by the Leadership Committee and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

Biographical sketches of these three women are as follows:

1. Ruling Elder Joanie Lukins—Danville, Ky., in the Presbytery of Transylvania and the Synod of Living Waters.

   Ruling Elder Joanie Lukins has served Living Waters for the World in almost every capacity of the organization. She is a lead instructor for the training school, Clean Water U, and created the Health, Hygiene, and Spiritual teachings curriculum used in one of the workshops. She has served as the moderator of the Living Waters for the World Committee and is now serving as a board member. She is moderator of the Yucatan Network Coordinating Team and helps oversee the water systems in that area of the world. Lukins also leads the water team at her church and takes presbytery-wide teams to the Yucatan to work on water partnerships there.

2. Ruling Elder Helen Morrison—Grosse Ile, Mich., in the Presbytery of Detroit and the Synod of the Covenant.

   Ruling Elder Helen Morrison has contributed to the Presbyterian church’s ministries on aging almost since its beginnings. She has served as a ruling elder for multiple terms; as a presbytery vice moderator, moderator, and staff person and as a two-term member of the General Assembly Council (now the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board). In addition, she chaired one of the General Assembly Council Divisions and served on several of its committees and task forces. Morrison also has served as a member of countless boards and agencies, including the Presbyterian Association of Homes and Services to the Aging, and as a delegate to the 1981 White House Conference on Aging.

3. The Reverend Joyce Shin—Chicago, in the Presbytery of Chicago and the Synod of Lincoln Trails.

   The Reverend Joyce Shin is the associate pastor for Congregational Life at Fourth Presbyterian Church in Chicago, a congregation with a long history of prophetic ministry, where she serves as the staff liaison to the Congregational Life Committee of the Session. Under her leadership, the Interfaith Resource Committee at Fourth Presbyterian developed a close relationship with the local Muslim community, including the Council of Islamic Organizations of Greater Chicago, as well as maintaining a strong relationship with the Chicago Sinai Congregation. She is an elected member of the Presbytery of Chicago’s Ecumenical and Interreligious Work Group, which cares for the presbytery’s relationships with other Christian denominations, other spiritual and religious communities, and ecumenical and interreligious organizations and bodies.

Item 14B

[The assembly approved Item 14-B. See p. 52.]

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board reports the recipients of the Sam and Helen R. Walton Awards for 2013 and 2014 and recommends that the 221st General Assembly (2014) recognize the recipients as outstanding new church developments:
1. 2013:
   a. New Vision New Church Development (NCD), Synod of the Mid-Atlantic, Presbytery of Western North Carolina—$35,000;
   b. Iglesia Presbiteriana Nuevas Fronteras (NCD), Synod of the Northeast, Presbytery of Elizabeth—$35,000;
   c. Bare Bulb Coffee (NCD), Synod of South Atlantic, Presbytery of Flint River—$35,000.
2. 2014:
   a. New Faith Presbyterian Church NCD, Trinity Presbytery, Synod of South Atlantic—$50,000
   b. Community Fellowship Presbyterian Church NCD, Mission Presbytery, Synod of the Sun—$50,000

Rationale

In late December 1991, Sam and Helen Walton made a generous gift through the Presbyterian Foundation of $6 million that included $3 million to be used for new church developments that have placed an emphasis on site acquisitions. All nominees must meet the qualifications as set forth in the application. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, acting on behalf of the General Assembly between meetings, approved the above recipients during its March 2013 and April 2014 meetings.
Item 15-01

[The assembly referred Item 15-01 to the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) with comment. See p. 56.]

[Comment: Request the 221st General Assembly (2014) to refer the subject matter of this overture to the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) for action and discernment in accordance with its long-standing and detailed procedures to engage with individual corporations to advance their actions in support of important social policy issues. MRTI is asked to make a report to 222nd General Assembly (2016). The Assembly Committee on Immigration and Environmental Issues (15), is deeply concerned about both the need for action and the need to remain in dialogue with companies that are in the fossil fuel industry.]

On Divestment from Fossil Fuel Companies—From the Presbytery of Boston.

The Presbytery of Boston overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to do the following:

1. Express its profound concern about the destructive effects of climate change on all God’s creation. Climate change has had a disproportionate impact on those living in poverty and in the least developed countries, the elderly and children, and those least responsible for the emissions of greenhouse gases. The 221st General Assembly (2014) thus recognizes the moral mandate for humanity to shift to a sustainable energy plan in a way that is both just and compassionate. This mandate propels us to action as a denomination: to divest from the fossil fuel industry even as we reduce our use of fossil fuels and shrink our carbon footprint.

2. Call upon the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to
   a. immediately stop any new investment in fossil fuel companies and instruct asset managers in their work for the denomination to do the same;
   b. ensure that within five years none of its directly held or commingled assets includes holdings of either equities or corporate bonds in fossil fuel companies as determined by the Carbon Tracker list1; and
   c. incorporate, into already existing financial reports, regular updates detailing progress made towards full divestment. These reports will be made available to the public.

3. Call upon the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to inform those fossil fuel companies of the passage and implementation of this resolution.

Rationale

Purpose

The realities of climate change require prophetic and strategic action by people of faith seeking to be faithful to the everlasting covenant God has made with us, with every living creature, and with all future generations. If fossil fuel companies simply fulfill their business model, the earth will become irreversibly inhospitable to life as we know it. This overture urges the PC(USA) to divest from fossil fuel companies as part of a worldwide movement. Over the past three or more decades, many bodies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including the General Assembly on numerous occasions, have recognized our moral obligation to be faithful stewards of God’s creation as well as acknowledging, in one way or another, that harming creation is a sin. This overture seeks to inspire and accelerate an unswerving commitment—as the 202nd General Assembly (1990) affirmed in the Statement on Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice—to “insisting on sustainability—the ongoing capacity of natural and social systems to thrive together—which requires human beings to practice wise, humble, responsible stewardship, after the model of servanthood that we have in Jesus” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 647). The 217th General Assembly (2006) resolved that “the urgency, injustice and seriousness of this issue calls us as Christians to act NOW and act boldly to lead the way in reducing our energy usage” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 896) and that we should “make a bold witness by aspiring to live carbon neutral lives” (Ibid). Eight years later, the urgency has increased dramatically and the PC(USA) must act boldly by divesting from fossil fuels.

Biblical and Theological Rationale

The actions this resolution recommends are rooted in an expression of several of the most foundational theological and biblical principles of our Presbyterian identity. In Genesis 9, God makes a covenant not only with Noah, but with all of humanity; a covenant not only with all of humanity, but with every living creature; a covenant not only with all creatures alive today, but with all future generations. It is now clear that the past few generations of humans have burned so much of the earth’s energy reserves that we are on the verge of irreversibly rendering the entire earth inhospitable for life as it has existed for all of recorded history. By any measure, this is a violation of covenant with future generations and the rest of creation—an action that works against God’s covenant to never again destroy creation.
In Matthew 25: 31–46 Jesus calls us to care for the “least of these.” Climate change is creating a reality where there are more people than ever who are hungry, thirsty, and homeless. It is thus poised to create the most massive human rights violation the world has ever seen. Furthermore it creates more suffering, directly at odds with caring for the least of these and loving our neighbor in response to Jesus’ commandments to us in Scripture. If we are called to love one another, then it is morally and theologically wrong to profit from the destruction of creation.

Because we are a covenant people and affirm Jesus’ call in Scripture to love our neighbors as ourselves, we recognize our obligation as people of faith to take into account how our decisions and activities affect all of creation now and into the future.

Background Information

The leaders of 167 countries, including the United States, have agreed that any warming of the planet above a 2°C (3.6°F) rise would be unsafe, and we have already (as of 2012) raised the temperature 0.8°C, causing far more damage, in the forms of extreme weather events, drought, flood, and sea level rise, than most scientists had expected. Computer models show that even if we stopped increasing CO₂ levels now, the temperature would continue to rise another 0.8°C, bringing the planet over three-quarters of the way to the 2°C limit. Scientists estimate that humans can pour roughly 565 more gigatons of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere and still have some reasonable hope of staying below 2°C.

The proven coal, oil, and gas reserves of the fossil-fuel companies—and the countries (e.g. Venezuela or Kuwait) which act like fossil-fuel companies—equals about 2,795 gigatons of CO₂, or five times the amount we can release and still maintain a 2°C limit to planetary warming. The sole objective of fossil fuel companies is to make money for their shareholders by providing energy to the nations of the world using the resources the companies currently own or have rights to tap—and if they simply continue to carry out their business plan to fulfill this objective, they will raise the temperature of the earth far beyond what scientists have estimated can safely sustain plant, animal, and human life as they have been for thousands of years.

As a result of fossil fuel use, the concentration of CO₂ in the atmosphere has now been measured at over 400 parts per million (ppm), 50 ppm over what many scientists say is the safe upper limit, and a 43 percent increase in the last 250 years. Almost half (44 percent) of this 43 percent increase has occurred in the past 25 years alone, and the amount of CO₂ added to the atmosphere in the past decade is over three times the average addition per decade in the period 1950–80. These numbers are the most concrete evidence we have that climate change is happening at an accelerating rate.

Why Divestment?

This overture is part of a worldwide movement focused on keeping as much of the earth’s carbon reserves as possible in the ground. As part of that campaign, this resolution proposes the PC(USA) divest from fossil fuel companies. The Carbon Tracker Initiative, a team of London financial analysts and environmentalists, estimates that proven coal, oil, and gas reserves of the fossil fuel companies, and the countries that act like fossil fuel companies, equals about 2,795 gigatons of CO₂, or five times the amount we can release to maintain 2 degrees of warming.

From 1983–1989, the General Assembly passed many resolutions committing the corporate expressions of the PC(USA) to divest from companies doing business with South Africa as an expression of protest against apartheid in South Africa. Their action began as a prophetic witness, but once thousands of institutions and individuals joined together to divest from companies doing business in South Africa, apartheid came to an end, in part, because of pressure from divestment.

Following that path, what begins as a prophetic act of divestment from fossil fuel companies will:

1. Drive public awareness of the massive damage being done by the fossil fuel industry as it generates huge short-term profits by moving carbon from the rocks of the earth into Earth’s atmosphere;
2. Build public recognition of the urgent need to drastically and rapidly reduce humanity’s dependence on fossil fuels, ending the “business as usual” approach that continues and even accelerates extracting, marketing, and burning fossil fuel;
3. Lead to inspiring an urgent, accelerated, and popular commitment to leave untapped 80 percent of the known carbon reserves, while developing renewable energy resources capable of meeting humanity’s needs—thus making possible that all life as we have known it might continue for future generations on God’s good earth;
4. Call the denomination to reinvest a portion of the divested funds in initiatives to reduce the energy use and carbon footprint of PC(USA) churches and in investments in companies primarily focused on energy efficiency and renewable energy;
5. No longer allow the PC(USA) to profit from the destruction of creation and the suffering of humanity caused by climate change from burning fossil fuels.

Endnotes

Our Presbyterian faith calls us to be good stewards of the Earth (Gen. 2:15; Lev. 25:24) and to work for the well-being of people who are poor and vulnerable (Lev. 25:39–41; Deut. 15:7–11; Isa. 58:6–10; Mt. 25:34–36). Today, climate change is perhaps the most widespread threat to these core commitments of our faith. Scientists agree that human-caused climate change has already increased the frequency and intensity of heat waves, heavy precipitation in coastal areas, and drought in some inland regions since 1950. Future climate change will negatively impact agriculture and food security, water stress, public health, and vulnerability to disasters around the world. Carbon dioxide (CO₂) emissions from the burning of fossil fuels are responsible for approximately 60 percent of global greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions, making fossil fuel use the single largest contributor to climate change.

These realities of climate change require prophetic, strategic, and swift action by people of faith seeking to be faithful to the everlasting covenant God has made with us, with every living creature, and with all future generations (Genesis 9). If fossil fuel companies simply fulfill their business model, the earth will become irreversibly inhospitable to life as we know it. However, there is hope of limiting climate change if humanity can rapidly limit GHG emissions.

The purpose of this overture is to urge the PC(USA) divest from fossil fuel companies as part of a worldwide movement to mitigate climate change to the extent possible. It furthermore urges the PC(USA) to invest in energy efficiency and renewable energy, thus helping to build a clean energy economy that provides environmental benefits while creating good-paying, safe jobs. In so doing, the PC(USA) would lessen the burdens on poor communities that are already suffering the negative effects of climate change and fossil fuel extraction on their health and livelihoods, on young people and future generations that will need to adapt to climate change, and on the ecosystems that sustain all of life, which God calls “very good” (Genesis 1:31) and has entrusted to our care.

Many bodies of the PC(USA), including the General Assembly, have recognized our moral obligation to be faithful stewards of God’s creation. This overture seeks to inspire and accelerate the commitment to “insisting on sustainability” affirmed by the 202nd General Assembly (1991) in the Statement on Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice. It furthermore supports the 217th General Assembly (2006)’s resolutions that “the urgency, injustice and seriousness of this issue [climate change] calls us as Christians to act NOW and act boldly to lead the way in reducing our energy usage” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 896) and that we should “make a bold witness by aspiring to live carbon neutral lives” (Ibid).

Eight years later, the urgency has increased and the PC(USA) must act boldly by divesting from fossil fuels. Such courageous action will build public awareness and political will to regulate GHG emissions and fossil fuel use, while supporting development of energy efficiency initiatives and renewable energy industries and infrastructure. This, in turn, will make it more feasible for our congregations, and society as a whole, to reduce our energy use and transition to reliance on renewable energy.

Biblical and Theological Rationale

The actions this resolution recommends are rooted in an expression of several of the most foundational theological and biblical principles of our Presbyterian identity. Our stories of beginnings affirm that humanity is called to serve and keep (Gen. 2:15) the garden of Earth that God has given us, acting in ways that respect its holiness and ensure its continued capacity to support life. In Genesis 9, God makes a covenant not only with Noah, but with all of humanity, with every living creature, and with all future generations. This covenant finds expression in God’s ongoing activity to provide abundantly for the needs of all people and all creation (Ps. 65:9–13, 104:10–17; Mk. 6:30–44, 8:1–9). By burning fossil fuels, humans have increased atmospheric CO₂ to levels that threaten to make the climate inhospitable to life. By any measure, this is a violation of covenant with future generations and the rest of creation, and an action that works against God’s will that all people and all creatures may flourish.

In addition to calling us to responsible stewardship of the Earth, our faith also calls us to work for the well-being of people who are vulnerable (Lev. 25:39–41; Deut. 15:7–11; Isa. 58:6–10; Mt. 25:31–36). In Matthew 25:31–46, Jesus calls us to care for the “least of these.” Climate change is creating a reality where there are more people than ever who are hungry, thirsty, and homeless—for example, by negatively impacting smallholder farming systems and increasing coastal flooding. In this context, loving our neighbor compels us to work to mitigate climate change by rapidly reducing GHG emissions, thus minimizing the impact of climate change on agriculture, water supplies, public health, and displacement due to flooding. Because we are a covenant people and affirm Jesus’ call to love our neighbors as ourselves, we recognize our obligation as people of faith to take into account how our decisions and activities affect all of creation now and into the future.

Background Information

The leaders of 167 countries, including the United States, have agreed that any warming of the planet above a 2°C (3.6°F) rise would be unsafe. As of 2012, we have already raised the temperature 0.85°C since 1880, causing far more damage, in the forms of extreme weather events, drought, flood, and sea level rise, than most scientists had expected. Largely as a result of fossil fuel use, the concentration of CO₂ in the atmosphere has now been measured at over 400 parts per million (ppm), the highest concentrations recorded in ice cores during the past 800,000 years, and 50 ppm over what many scientists say is the safe upper limit. Scientists agree that the increased atmospheric concentration of CO₂ (along with increases in methane and nitrous oxide), as a result of human activities, is the dominant cause of the observed warming of the climate system.

Computer models show that even if we stopped increasing CO₂ levels now, the temperature would continue to rise another 0.8°C, bringing the planet over three-quarters of the way to the 2°C limit. Scientists estimate that humans can pour roughly 565 more gigatons of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere and still have some reasonable hope of staying below a 2°C global average temperature rise. The Carbon Tracker Initiative, a team of London financial analysts and environmentalists, estimates that proven coal, oil, and gas reserves of fossil fuel companies and fossil fuel-rich nations equals about 2,795 gigatons of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere and still have some reasonable hope of staying below a 2°C rise would be unsafe. In this context, responding to God’s call “to serve and keep” (Genesis 2:15) the Earth requires that we join with other people of faith and conscience in the growing movement to prevent the extraction and burning of these fossil fuel reserves.

Why Divestment?

This overture is part of a worldwide movement focused on keeping as much of the earth’s carbon reserves as possible in the ground. From 1983–1992, the General Assembly took multiple actions to condemn apartheid and to selectively divest from companies doing business with South Africa as an expression of protest against apartheid in South Africa. This action began as a prophetic witness, but once thousands of institutions and individuals joined together to divest from companies doing business in South Africa, apartheid came to an end, in part, because of pressure from divestment.

Following that path, what begins as a prophetic act of divestment from fossil fuel companies will:

a. Drive public awareness of the massive damage being done by the fossil fuel industry as CO₂ emissions change the climate, and the urgent need to drastically reduce humanity’s dependence on fossil fuels;

b. Inspire a popular commitment to leave untapped 80 percent of the known carbon reserves, while developing renewable energy resources capable of meeting humanity’s needs—thus making possible that all life as we have known it might continue for future generations on God’s good earth;

c. Build political will to realize these goals through policy action to regulate GHG emissions; reduce the extraction, marketing, and burning of fossil fuel; and support the development of energy efficiency and renewable energy industries;

d. Call the denomination to reinvest a portion of the divested funds in initiatives to reduce the energy use and carbon footprint of PCUSA churches and in investments in companies primarily focused on energy efficiency and renewable energy;

e. No longer allow the PC(USA) to profit from the destruction of creation and the suffering of humanity caused by climate change from burning fossil fuels.

Financial Implications of Divestment

The moral imperatives—to be good stewards of the Earth and prevent climate change that threatens the well-being of the most vulnerable people—are the most important reasons for divestment. However, studies show that for most institutions, divesting from fossil fuel companies is likely to have a negligible impact on investment returns, and may reduce overall risk by protecting against losses from “stranded assets”—fossil fuel reserves that currently contribute to the value of fossil fuel companies, but cannot be extracted, sold, and burned if we are to stay beneath the internationally recognized limit of a 2°C rise in global average temperature over pre-industrial levels. A study by HSBC estimated that fossil-fuel companies may lose 40–60 percent of their value due to decreases in demand for energy and policy action to curtail GHG emissions. In Germany, a large energy company recently experienced massive losses due to competition from renewable solar and wind power.

Therefore, while the moral imperative to protect our global climate would justify some financial sacrifice, divestment from fossil fuels is not likely to endanger the PC(USA)’s financial well-being, and may even bring financial benefits by anticipating the necessary changes in energy policy and the energy industry to realize a sustainable future for life on Earth.

The IPCC estimates that future rise in the global average temperature could be limited to ~1° C above 1986–2005 temperatures, based on a “peak-and-decline” scenario in which global GHG emissions peak in 2020 and decline sharply thereafter. However, this would require bold policy action to limit GHG emissions in general and fossil fuel use in particular. See: IPCC, 2013, p. 21.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

In concurrence with the spirit and ultimate aim of this overture and sharing its grave concern for accelerated climate change, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Boston overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to do the following:

1. Express its profound concern about the destructive effects of climate change on all God’s creation. Climate change has had a disproportionate impact on those living in poverty and in the least developed countries, the elderly and children, and those least responsible for the emissions of greenhouse gases. The 221st General Assembly (2014) thus recognizes the moral mandate for humanity to shift to a sustainable energy plan in a way that is both just and compassionate. [To this end, the church shall work to shift its energy investments increasingly into renewable sources as it undertakes parallel actions to reduce its nonrenewable energy consumption and that of its members.] [This mandate propels us to action as a denomination: to divest from the fossil fuel industry even as we reduce our use of fossil fuels and shrink our carbon footprint.]

2. Direct the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to develop a plan to address the call to fossil fuel-related divestment in a manner consistent with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s environmental and investment responsibility policies and practices, including The Divestment Strategy: Principles and Criteria (1984), and to bring recommendations to the 222nd General Assembly (2016), recognizing the need for integrity by the church as we participate in all aspects of an urgent and massive economic and social transformation for the sake of the whole of creation.]

3. Call upon the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to

4. [a. immediately stop any new investment in fossil fuel companies and instruct asset managers in their work for the denomination to do the same;]

“[b] [a] [ensure that within five years none of its directly held or commingled assets includes holdings of either] [initiate and assess the performance of virtual and actual investment vehicles with significant funds that would exclude both] equities or corporate bonds in [the 200 leading] fossil fuel companies [energy reserves] as determined by the Carbon Tracker list [in conjunction with the MRTI processes of corporate engagement and their own theologically-informed standards of trustee responsibility]; [and]

“[c.] [b.] incorporate, into [already existing] [MRTI and appropriate] financial reports, regular [public] updates [detailing progress made towards full divestment. These reports will be made available to the public] on the progress of national and international investment in and production of solar, hydro, geothermal, and other renewable and non-fossil fuel energy and gains made in conservation, as well as reports on the performance of the investment vehicles proposed in 3.a. [-] ; and

“[c. work with the Presbyterian Mission Agency in developing a strategic plan to invest more consistently with the values of the General Assembly, including sustainability, peacemaking, and greater sharing of profits and productivity gains within the economy.]

“[3. Call upon the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to inform those fossil fuel companies of the passage and implementation of this resolution.]

“[4. Urge Presbyterian individuals, mid councils, and congregations holding financial investment portfolios to consider immediate fossil fuel divestment as well as corporate engagement to the extent of their capacities, and to work with MRTI and the investment agencies as feasible in considering the range of alternative investment vehicles.]

“[5. Direct the Office of Public Witness to promote a federal carbon tax as an important national policy accompaniment to the strategy of corporate engagement and the best way to internalize the true social and environmental costs of fossil fuel exploitation into the price of energy. This policy advocacy should also include concern for those who are already living in poverty and should urge that any national carbon reduction policy include provisions to mitigate the worst impacts of rising fuel, transportation, and fuel prices on the poorest people.]

The energy and movement behind this overture is significant and important. Likewise, the concerns expressed in this overture are essential to the life of the Christian community. As the Rationale rightly points out, environmental concerns and resistance to climate change/disruption, in particular, have been an integral part of the church’s witness on the goodness of Creation for more than thirty years. Climate disruption is already showing true and devastating impacts on communities all over the globe, including in the U.S, as we note below. Thus, action is essential on U.S. carbon emissions and on the economic models by which we exploit fossil fuel.

A true vision of environmental stewardship for the church must include the proposed shift to renewable energy, so that no entity affiliated with the PC(USA) should profit from the desecration and exploitation of God’s Creation. The simplicity and immediacy of the overture, however, emphasizes the value of integrity (or even purity) over effectiveness to a high degree. The amendments above would require some immediate divestment and tracking of its portfolio impacts, and recognize that a five-year time period would allow for some re-balancing of short- and long-term holdings. Yet the responses by all major university endowments so far is instructive: without a plan to shift out of a major sector in the investment universe, portfolio managers see a popular gesture that does not address the ways that energy policy reflects competition among nation states and their parastatal enterprises, and not simply the great power of private energy companies and the virtually infinite regress of other firms based on fossil fuels.

The proposal above directs the urgency of the proponents to a necessary conversation between social ethics and investment planners. It may even prompt the investing agencies, the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Foundation, to contribute financial as well as technical resources to MRTI as they face the moral force of the call for fossil fuel reserves not to be exploited. At the same time, the call for the carbon tax above recognizes the power of the market that, in Germany for example, is helping drive the shift to a country 44 percent reliant on renewables. Divestment does address a dysfunction in public policy in the United States, but it needs a public policy partner to affect the everyday choices we make, lest we continue to buy from the companies we have divested from.

Divestment is an important and powerful social witness tool whose integrity and effectiveness is tied to a well-developed and respectful process of corporate engagement. In order to preserve the effectiveness of this tool (as we have seen in the context of other divestment conversations that have attracted significant outside attention), it is essential that we engage in the normal and established process, even if on an accelerated basis. The MRTI process has been affirmed and developed by General Assemblies since the churches’ first public interest proxy voting 1971. The most extensive treatment of divestment is the 1984 study and policy. While the proponents know the church’s environmental and energy policies, they do not mention “The Divestment Strategy: Principles and Criteria,” and its supporting study, “The Divestment Strategy: Ethical and Institutional Context” (both 1984). Without understanding the way this policy grew out of the years of corporate engagement with energy, banking, and military corporations supporting apartheid, it is hard to understand the church’s move to “selective, phased divestment” of securities in key companies. True, many activists did push for total divestment, but the pressure was focused by a prolonged campaign against particular targets. The language initially adopted by the General Assembly in dealing with investments profiting from the occupation of Palestine was also that of “selective, phased” divestment.

Corporate engagement is also an important tool at all levels of the church, not just at the national Board of Pensions level. Mid councils and local churches also hold significant investments and endowments. Therefore, this movement to ethical corporate engagement should also extend to these entities. To the extent that their holdings are far less complex than those of the Foundation and Board of Pensions, however, congregations may want to make the full shift to divest of securities in the 200 leading fossil fuel reserve-holding companies.

The advantage of a corporate engagement strategy is that it does not require an act of the U.S. Congress, which is currently bogged down in partisan gridlock. Nevertheless, the best strategy for comprehensively addressing U.S. carbon pollution is a national, economy-wide strategy. The 220th General Assembly (2012) urged a strong and proactive Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to exercise its authority under the Clean Air Act to regulate carbon pollution. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved “The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming,” which urged an economy-wide strategy to “internalize the social and environmental costs related to greenhouse gas emissions in the prices of fossil fuels.” A carbon tax is considered to be one of the most effective ways to achieve this goal and to change behavior and energy consumption in the U.S. In addition, a carbon tax system is not vulnerable to market speculation in the way that other economy-wide market-based solutions.

Nevertheless, the move to reduce carbon pollution and the U.S. contribution to global climate change will increase the cost of important necessities, not only fuel, but also transportation, fuel, and other goods. Any national solution to climate pollution must dedicate a significant portion of revenue generated to alleviating hardship for low-income people, as well as to other priorities like mass transit infrastructure, renewable energy development, and climate change mitigation and international adaptation for the poorest countries in the world. Market measures alone, in other words, will not ensure provision for the poor. Nor will corporate social responsibility, although some advance in corporate standards are due to both voluntary initiatives among companies and their responses to shareholder pressure.

The proponents are correct, finally, in suggesting that slow and incremental will not win the race against climate catastrophe. Intensification of the church’s response is needed, and in the direction they recommend. Yet abruptness is not a virtue, and the partnership MRTI embodies has been a very important forum where action can be planned and agreed upon. At the largest scale, the economy needs to be reordered for less throughput of all kinds; it needs to be changed for the greener, root and branch. Let MRTI plant the investment seeds on fertile ground if possible, working with the Restoring Creation network and all God-loving and carbon-fearing Presbyterians.

Two major scientific confirmations of climate change:

From Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) 2013 Report:

http://www.ipcc.ch/report/ar5/wg1/#.UnewMXYo4cA

Previous assessments have already shown through multiple lines of evidence that the climate is changing across our planet, largely as a result of human activities. The most compelling evidence of climate change derives from observations of the atmosphere, land, oceans, and cryosphere. Unequivocal evidence from in situ observations and ice core records shows that the atmospheric concentrations of important greenhouse gases such as carbon dioxide, methane, and nitrous oxides have increased over the last few centuries. (1–2)

Without global action, the UNDP estimates that the number of people living in extreme poverty could increase by up to 3 billion by 2050 with untold numbers of children dying due to climate change, deforestation, air and water pollution, natural disasters, droughts and floods, rising sea levels, extreme weather, melting ice caps creating “feedback loops,” etc.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 15-01.

In the past, the General Assembly has approved divestments from companies whose practice and impacts are against God’s will and word. Unfortunately, those who live in poverty in the U.S.A. and around the globe are the most impacted by climate change effects, burning of fossil fuels, coal pollution, nonsustainable energy plans, air pollution, shrinking water supplies, damaged watersheds, ocean acidification, and careless human actions. It is time for us to understand that our policies and practices in the U.S. affect the rest of the planet.

The disproportionate impact on those living in poverty in the least-developed countries directly increase immigration rates in developed countries because the quality of their living conditions decrease in their home country. The racial ethnic population in the U.S. is affected by these harmful practices because many of these individuals are poor and vulnerable and are people who live and work in places that are impacted by chemical harms. This section of the population does not have the financial resources or equal access to the system to change their current deplorable conditions. Environmental racism is a real issue.
This situation requires a just and compassionate response from the PC(USA). It is necessary to take actions that are consistent with what we preach and believe, loving each other as ourselves.

As Christians following Jesus’ example, it is our duty to educate our members on responsible stewardship of the earth that God has entrusted us to do. Our church is called to advocate and to protect vulnerable populations.

Our denomination should invest in companies that promote energy efficiency and renewable energy, that provide environmental benefits to the planet that offer good-paying, safe job conditions for its workers, safer chemicals, and industrial processes.

Non-ethical behavior is to profit from the destruction of creation and the suffering of the most vulnerable people.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 15-01.

Please see ACWC’s rationale for Item 15-05:

The ACWC is painfully aware of the ways in which the exploitation of nature has been supported by philosophies and ideologies that have also informed discrimination against and the abuse of women. Therefore we support overtures that advocate for public policies intended to change the course of climate change and the recommendation to divest from fossil fuels.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 15-01

Comment on Item 15-01—From the Board of Pensions.

The Board of Pensions respectfully requests that the General Assembly refer the overtures concerning divestment of certain fossil fuel companies (Item 15-01 from the Presbytery of Boston and Item 15-05 from the Presbytery of Palisades) to the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (“MRTI”) for action and discernment in accordance with its longstanding and detailed procedures to engage with individual corporations to advance their actions in support of important social policy issues.

General Assemblies have expressed the importance to all life on earth of a healthy and clean environment since at least the 116th General Assembly (1971)\(^1\). This General Assembly also cautioned “against confusing symptoms of the environmental crisis with its causes, and against dependence on slogans, over-simplified solutions, or merely cosmetic approaches” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1971, Part I, p. 584).

The 202nd General Assembly (1990)\(^2\) reaffirmed this focus and adopted Guidelines for Corporate Social Responsibility and the Environment that specifically includes attention to climate change. This paper includes a call for engagement with corporations, noting that, “by encouraging corporations to adopt environmentally responsible practices through dialogues, shareholder resolutions, and, in extreme cases, divestment, the church can assist governmental units as they seek to clean up the environment and press for social justice” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 672).

Both elected and staff members of the Board of Pensions are members of and participate in the meetings and deliberations of MRTI.

Both elected and staff members of the Board of Pensions strongly agree that climate change threatens all living things and reduction and elimination of factors contributing to climate change are of critical importance to us all.

We strongly support the processes adopted and used by MRTI over the past four decades and believe that using our investment holdings for direct engagement with individual corporations and other entities is a positive, active, and better way to express our views and to take affirmative actions in support of our views. Short-circuiting our well-established deliberative process and jumping ahead to immediate divestment may be seductive, but as a first step it would be an over-simplified solution. Divestment of securities should remain a remedial tool for MRTI as a part of its very responsible and historic processes.

FOUNDATION COMMENT ON ITEM 15-01

Comment on Item 15-01—From the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation.

The Presbyterian Foundation agrees that climate change poses a profound threat to all of God’s creation, and that efforts to mitigate climate change are of great importance. To that end, the Foundation staff and elected leadership have worked with the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) for more than forty years to leverage our investments for corporate engagement with companies in the fuel and energy sector. MRTI’s processes have employed active engagement with companies that have invited many of them into meaningful and ultimately fruitful conversations leading to incremental

\(^1\) Minutes, UPCUSA, 1971, Part I, pp. 574–83
\(^2\) Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 646–90
or in some cases immediate change. Where such conversations have not succeeded, MRTI has recommended phased-selective divestment to the General Assembly, acknowledging the Foundation’s fiduciary duty to ensure that its constituents are not financially harmed in that process.

To this end, the Foundation joins the Board of Pensions in voicing our strong support for the MRTI process regarding this issue. We further advise that the assembly urge MRTI to make this a priority initiative, and to bring a comprehensive report of its actions and results to the next General Assembly.

On Affirming the Importance of Sustainable Development and the Precautionary Principle—From the Presbytery of Southern New England.

The Presbytery of Southern New England overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to affirm the vital importance of sustainable development [through faithful stewardship of natural resources] and the Precautionary Principle. [It is] [Such methods of preventing irreversible ecological impacts are part of] the basis for [a] responsible, moral, and [scientifically-informed human flourishing] [ethical means of working and being. It affirms] [affirming] the sacred in societal and creation care, [and] protecting the earth for future generations. Additionally, [we ask that the PC(USA)] [the General Assembly directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to] commission a study group [of three to five persons] to

1. review [this] [the precautionary or prevention] principle [in relation to emerging biotechnical developments and existing Presbyterian social witness policy on environmental ethics,] and

2. prepare a study paper [and resources for social media, with appropriate recommendations to the 222nd General Assembly (2016),] for use by congregations throughout the denomination, enabling congregations to advocate for reform.

Endnote

1. The Precautionary Principle is defined as “the precept that an action should not be taken if the consequences are uncertain and potentially dangerous” (World English Dictionary. It is the theory that an action should be taken when a problem or threat occurs, not after harm has been inflicted” (UN Conference on the Environment, 1988). It is derived from a German word meaning “forecaring.”

Rationale

The Word of the Lord:

Psalm 96:10–13: “Say among the nations, ‘The Lord is king! The world is firmly established; it shall never be moved. He will judge the peoples with equity.’ Let the heavens be glad, and let the earth rejoice; let the sea roar, and all that fills it; let the field exult, and everything in it. Then shall all the trees of the forest sing for joy before the Lord; for he is coming, for he is coming to judge the earth. He will judge the world with righteousness, and the peoples with his truth.”

Matthew 22:37b: “‘You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind.’ This is the greatest and first commandment. And a second is like it: ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself.’”

The Precautionary Principle:

The United National Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization’s (UNESCO) World Commission on the Ethics of Scientific Knowledge and Technology (COMEST) report defines the Precautionary Principle as follows:

When human activities may lead to morally unacceptable harm that is scientifically plausible but uncertain, actions shall be taken to avoid or diminish that harm. Morally unacceptable harm refers to harm to humans or the environment that is

- threatening to human life or health, or
- serious and effectively irreversible, or
- inequitable to present or future generations, or

COMEST states that the “Precautionary Principle is often seen as an integral principle of sustainable development, that is development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the abilities of future generations to meet their needs. By safeguarding against serious and, particularly, irreversible harm to the natural resource base that might jeopardize the capacity of future generations to provide for their own needs, it builds on ethical notions of intra- and inter-generational equity” (http://unesdoc.unesco.org/images/0013/001395/139578e.pdf, p. 8).

“When an activity raises threats of harm to human health or the environment, precautionary measures should be taken even if some cause and effect relationships are not fully established scientifically. In this context the proponent of an activity, rather than the public, should bear the burden of proof. The process of applying the precautionary principle must be open, informed and democratic and must include potentially affected parties. It must also involve an examination of the full range of alternatives, including no action” (Wingspread Statement on the Precautionary Principle, Jan. 26, 1998, http://www.sehn.org/wing.html).

If introduced into American law, the precautionary principle would fundamentally shift the burden of proof of the safety of products and processes for the public. The presumptions that flow from the scientific uncertainty surrounding so many new technologies would no longer automatically operate in industry’s favor. Scientific uncertainty would no longer argue for freedom of action but for precaution and alternatives.

In response to our being entrusted with the care of God’s creation, we are called to be stewards. Let us:

- Pray for wisdom, strength, and discernment for all people.
- Become informed about disruptors and threats to human and environmental health and well-being.
- Become proactive in our homes, and in the world, crying out against organizations who pollute and disrupt the balance in our beautiful Creation.
- Urge, individually and collectively, the acceptance of the Precautionary Principle in our nation’s legislation as it is already accepted in the European Union. Issues regarding health and safety of products must be dealt with BEFORE the product comes to the marketplace. Let us embrace the “forecaring” principle and advocate care for our health, the health of the Earth, and the health of future generations.
- Network to let corporations and governments know that they must take a lead to affirm the vital importance of sustainable development and precautionary principle as the basis for a responsible, moral, and ethical means of working and being that affirms the sacred in societal and creation care and to protect earth for future generations.

Threats to Human and Environmental Health and Well-Being: Genetically Engineered Crops, Environmental Toxins, and Nanotechnology

Genetically engineered (GE) crops are crops that are altered with inserted genetic material to produce a desired trait. Food and Water Watch, a well-respected, nonprofit public interest organization, has researched GE foods extensively.

A booklet entitled “Genetically Engineered Food: An Overview” by Food and Water Watch, 2012, states, “The U.S. experiment with GE food has been a failure. Impacts on the environment, food system and public health are not fully documented but are clearly not worth it. It is time for a new approach to biotechnology in the food system.”

“GE crops can take a toll on agriculture and surrounding wildlife. … The environmental effects of GE crops include intensified agrochemical use and pollution, increased weed and insect resistance to herbicides crops, and gene flow between GE and non-GE crops.”

Once GE products are on the market, no labeling is required. This means that U.S. consumers blindly eat and drink GE ingredients every day and are not given the knowledge or choice to do otherwise. Several studies point to the health risks of GE crops and their associated agrochemicals, but proponents of the technology promote it as an environmentally responsible, profitable way for farmers to feed a growing global population. Yet the only ones experiencing any benefits from CE crops are the few, massive corporations that are controlling the food system at every step and seeing large profit margins.

New technologies—like genetic engineering—create uncertainties and risk that should be carefully evaluated rather than being rapidly pushed onto the market. The existing regulatory framework for GE foods simply does not measure up. The U.S. Department of Agriculture, Environmental Protection Agency, and Food & Drug Administration have failed to protect the environment, the food system, or public health from GE foods.”

Food and Water Watch recommends that there be a moratorium on new U.S. approvals of genetically engineered plants and animals and that the U.S. should institute the precautionary principle for GE foods.
“Currently in the United States, most GE foods, donor organisms and host organisms are generally considered safe for consumption and the environment until proven otherwise. The United States should enact policy that would more rigorously evaluate the potentially harmful effects of GE crops before their commercialization to ensure the safety of the public” (Food and Water Watch, ibid).

Toxic Chemicals threaten Human and Environmental Health. Presbyterians for Earth Care, in a letter to membership on May 16, 2013, stated, “tens of thousands of chemicals remain in everyday products, such as cleaners, food containers, furniture and even children’s products without being tested for safety. Under current law, the EPA can call for safety testing only after evidence surfaces demonstrating a chemical is dangerous. As a result, the EPA has only been able to require testing for roughly 200 of more than 84,000 chemicals currently registered in the United States.”

As people of faith, we are called to care about God’s creation. These chemicals may be harmful to the earth, and to humans, we do not know. What we do know is that the CDC has found more than 212 industrial chemicals in American’s bodies, and that babies are born with chemicals already present in their bodies. Paul says the body is a temple of the holy spirit. American’s bodies are temples of chemicals” (PEC, May 16, 2013).

Greenfaith, an interfaith coalition for the environment, with whom PC(USA) Environmental Ministries has an affiliation, has written an “Interfaith Statement for Chemical Policy Reform,” which was formulated with two other faith-based organizations—the National Council of Churches in the U.S.A. and the Union for Reform Judaism.

This statement notes, “While all people are at risk, some are more vulnerable. Communities of color and low-income communities suffer disproportionately from pollution caused by current and past industrial activity, waste disposal, heavily-traveled transportation routes, and consumer products containing toxic chemicals. Researchers also warn that toxic chemicals negatively impact children, expectant mothers, and workers.”

“Chemical workers suffer from exposures because of the lack of public data on chemicals they use, unsafe workplaces, and lax enforcement of regulations. As religious leaders and people of faith and conscience from diverse traditions, we affirm that reforming current chemical policies is vital to protecting people and life on God’s Earth.”

Government policy on chemicals can and should protect people and all life on earth. Chemical legislation should:

1. Protect people and all life on earth.
   - Remove the most dangerous chemicals, such as chemicals that persist, bioaccumulate, or are acutely toxic (PBTs), from use except when no safe alternative is available.
   - Hold companies accountable for demonstrating that chemicals are safe.

2. Protect vulnerable populations.
   - Reduce the disproportionate burden of chemical exposure placed on workers, low-income people, people of color, indigenous communities, pregnant women, and children, and other vulnerable groups.
   - Expand government biomonitoring, particularly in at-risk communities, to measure people’s toxic exposure.
   - Invest in research to understand and protect children’s health from chemical harm.
   - Provide chemical health and safety information to workers and the public.

3. Promote a sustainable, healthy economy.
   - Fund “green” chemistry and engineering research to create safer chemicals and industrial processes.
   - Promote a “green” economy that will allow all life to flourish and bring green jobs to low-income communities and communities of color.

Nanotechnology is the science of manipulating matter on an atomic and molecular scale. In the rush to incorporate nanoparticles into products already being marketed to the public, comparatively little money has been devoted to researching the health and environmental consequences of nanotechnology, according to the National Alliance for Public Health, April 24, 2013 (ANH-USA.org).

We don’t know enough yet about nanotechnology. Chemicals like PCBs and pesticides like DDT were once assumed to be safe—their danger was not fully understood until long after human health and environmental damage already occurred. To avoid similar disasters in the future, the health and environmental effects of nanotechnology should be thoroughly studied before more products are allowed onto the market, especially into food and food packaging. And a lot depends on the definition of nanoparticles’ size, and whether they can be considered new to nature. Canada amended its national organic rules to ban nanotechnology in food production as a “Prohibited Substance or Method.”

Recommendations from Food and Water Watch are the following:

- The scientific community has clearly established that the safety of nanomaterials cannot be assumed by studying their larger counterparts. The FDA should regulate nanotech products as the new chemical substances that they are, and require at least the same level of testing required for new food additives.

- If they are approved, nanoparticles should be clearly labeled so consumers are aware that the products they are using contain these controversial ingredients.

- Federal agencies such as the Food and Drug Administration should also be required to track any incidents, including adverse or allergic reactions, once nanotech products are on the market.

The Word of the Lord

Genesis 2:15; Genesis 3:23: “The Lord God took the [human] and put him in the Garden of Eden to till it and keep it. … The LORD God sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from which he was taken.”

God intends for human beings to care for the land where God has placed us. The Hebrew term, “le’abdah,” which the Common English Bible translates as “to farm,” goes deeper in its Hebrew meaning. Specifically, “le’abdah” bears the connotation of service rather than exploitation or any definition of dominion that does not mean “caring for (something) in the service of God.” According to this passage, Adam is to be a “servant” of the fertile land, helping it to be productive.

The Precautionary Principle and Sustainable Development

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a long history in being proactive in ecological concerns. Although many more examples could be cited, two particularly relevant examples include [let us indeed reaffirm] the 202nd General Assembly (1990) policy statement on “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” and the 1996 “Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Development” from the 208th General Assembly (1996) as we uphold our long denominational history of seeking environmental justice.

Threats to Human and Environmental Health and Well-Being: Genetically Engineered Crops, Environmental Toxins, and Nanotechnology.

Toxic chemicals threaten human and environmental health. The Presbytery of Yukon notes that toxic chemicals, both deposited by specific human agents and accumulated from general pollution through wind and sea currents, have put many Alaskans at risk. Further, Presbyterians for Earth Care, in a letter to membership on May 16, 2013, stated, “tens of thousands of chemicals remain in everyday products, such as cleaners, food containers, furniture and even children’s products without being tested for safety. Under current law, the EPA can call for safety testing only after evidence surfaces demonstrating a chemical is dangerous. As a result, the EPA has only been able to require testing for roughly 200 of more than 84,000 chemicals currently registered in the United States.”

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee advises that this overture be approved as amended below. [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Southern New England overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to affirm the vital importance of sustainable development and the Precautionary Principle. [It is] [Such methods of preventing irreversible ecological impacts are part of] the basis for a responsible, moral, and [scientifically-informed human flourishing.] [ethically-informed means of working and being.] [It affirms] [affirming] the sacred in societal and creation care, [and] protecting the earth for future generations. Additionally, [we ask that the PC(USA)] [the General Assembly directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to] commission a study group [of three to five persons] to
This overture provides the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with an invitation to examine the practical impacts of several new areas of technological development, and to do so with a scientific community that is increasingly attuned to the accelerating systemic dynamics of climate change. In light of financial constraints, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy suggests a smaller than customary study team, which would include dedicated volunteer members with expertise in the public health aspects of genetically modified organisms, nanotechnology, and chemical toxicology, the concerns named in the overture’s rationale. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy would also name one or more Christian social ethicists to work with the technical experts on the important matters identified in the overture.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy consists of members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) elected by the General Assembly to help the church address matters of Christian conscience in an informed and Reformed way. The bases of Presbyterian social witness policy (or ethical teaching) are found in Scripture and the confessions. The Brief Statement of Faith includes the clear environmental concern: “Ignoring God’s commandments, we violate the image of God in others and ourselves, accept lies as truth, exploit neighbor and nature, and threaten death to the planet entrusted to our care” (Book of Confessions, section 10.3).

The usual practice of General Assemblies has been to authorize limited expenditures of “per capita” funds to study and bring back reports and other resources to enrich the ongoing conversation and internal culture of the denomination, as well as its public witness on matters of social concern. The connection between studies and recommendations for action goes back to the earliest Presbyterian principles, which include the affirmation that “truth is in order to goodness” (Book of Order, F-3.0104), so that we seek not only to understand God’s truth but to fulfill God’s will in each new context. In this case, commissioners may consider the value of delegating one part of the church to examine this particular area of concern with an eye to helping the church use its corporate voice in a timely way.

Although the proponents quote primarily from advocacy organizations, the concerns they identify are shared widely in the environmental science community. A recent article in environmental science identifies four key elements of the “precautionary principle”: “taking preventive action in the face of uncertainty; shifting the burden of proof to the proponents of an activity; exploring a wide range of alternatives to possibly harmful actions; and increasing public participation in decision making” (http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC1240435/pdf/ehp0109-000871.pdf). These are in fact not new concepts for Presbyterian General Assemblies, and the overture proponents rightly name significant ecological reports that guide our church’s environmental ministries that include these elements within the categories of eco-justice and sustainability.

The “precautionary principle,” called the “prevention principle” in the Earth Charter and other places, has perhaps been given most emphasis in the Protestant community by Scandinavian and German Lutheran ethicists, as may be appropriate given its larger role in European governmental policy-making. The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA), a full communion partner of the PCUSA, has used the precautionary principle most in its statement on genetics (http://www.elca.org/en/Faith/Faith-and-Society/Social-Statements/Genetics).

Some parts of the scientific and technological communities are also using either “strong” or “weak” versions of the precautionary principle. The Center for Responsible Nanotechnology website notes that it “has identified several sources of risk from molecular manufacturing, including arms races, grey goo, societal upheaval, independent development, and programs of nanotechnology prohibition that would require violation of human rights” (http://www.crnano.org/precautionary.htm).

If the assembly were to approve the study recommended, it would not necessarily be endorsing the organizations and conclusions indicated in the overture rationale. Those quotations indicate the seriousness of the issues involved. The precautionary principle is in fact one means for affirming the priority of “the integrity of creation.” It shifts the burden of proof more onto those who could de-stabilize or irreversibly disrupt natural patterns, but it does not in itself tell us when reasonable people would agree that the burden of proof has been met, and this may vary based on the biological systems involved. Any study for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would need to listen as well to strong opponents of the precautionary principle, such as the sometime presidential advisor, Cass R. Sunstein, who sometimes term it, “the paralyzing principle” (http://object.cato.org/sites/cato.org/files/serials/files/regulation/2002/12/v25n4-9.pdf).

Yet the magnitude of climate change and the significance of new technologies, in the view of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, would give the study considerable value. In the words of the scientific article cited above:

Frustration with policy concerning toxic chemicals has also stimulated interest in the precautionary principle. The risk assessment process is perceived by a growing segment of the population as antagonistic to strong environmental protection and as excessively complex and full of hidden assumptions that have the effect of disenfranchising all but the experts from the decision-making process. Current U.S. environmental policy often seems to be more reactionary than precautionary, requiring a high degree of certainty of harm before preventive action is taken, and emphasizing the management of risks rather than their prevention. The precautionary principle, by calling for preventive action even when there is uncertainty, by placing

Ethicist Celia Deane-Drummond suggests “that the precautionary principle is a secularised version of the tradition of practical wisdom or prudence” (http://chesterrep.openrepository.com/cdr/bitstream/10034/14688/6/deane-drummond-dialog05.pdf.txt). It is this kind of Christian grounding that the church would seek to bring to the study in the hope that we can contribute to the healing of this “planet entrusted to our care.”

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 15-02.

It is vital for our congregations to be instructed and educated in relation to sustainable development. In this way our members will be able to advocate for reforms according to God’s call to care for his/her creation.

In the past, the General Assembly has approved divestments from companies whose practice and impacts are against God’s will and word. Unfortunately, those who live in poverty in the U.S.A. and around the globe are the most impacted by climate change effects, burning of fossil fuels, coal pollution, nonsustainable energy plans, air pollution, shrinking water supplies, damaged watersheds, ocean acidification, and careless human actions. It is time for us to understand that our policies and practices in the U.S. affect the rest of the planet.

The disproportionate impact on those living in poverty in the least-developed countries directly increase immigration rates in developed countries because the quality of their living conditions decrease in their home country. The racial ethnic population in the U.S. is affected by these harmful practices because many of these individuals are poor and vulnerable and are people who live and work in places that are impacted by chemical harms. This section of the population does not have the financial resources or equal access to the system to change their current deplorable conditions. Environmental racism is a real issue.

This situation requires a just and compassionate response from the PC(USA). It is necessary to take actions that are consistent with what we preach and believe, loving each other as ourselves.

As Christians following Jesus’ example, it is our duty to educate our members on responsible stewardship of the earth that God has entrusted us to do. Our church is called to advocate and to protect vulnerable populations.

Our denomination should invest in companies that promote energy efficiency and renewable energy, that provide environmental benefits to the planet that offer good-paying, safe job conditions for its workers, safer chemicals, and industrial processes.

Non-ethical behavior is to profit from the destruction of creation and the suffering of the most vulnerable people.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) approve Item 15-02.

Please see ACWC’s rationale for Item 15-05:

The ACWC is painfully aware of the ways in which the exploitation of nature has been supported by philosophies and ideologies that have also informed discrimination against and the abuse of women. Therefore we support overtures that advocate for public policies intended to change the course of climate change and the recommendation to divest from fossil fuels.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 15-02

Comment on Item 15-02—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly requests that commissioners and advisory delegates carefully consider any items of business that would raise the per capita rate. The COGA made a commitment to bring no increase to the per capita rate to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by making significant reductions in the per capita budgets, which included reductions in staff. We would ask that other means be found within existing committee structures to accomplish the same task.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 15-02

Comment on Item 15-02—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

This overture also asks that the General Assembly commission a study to review this principle and prepare a paper for use by congregations. If the assembly affirms this recommendation, it should be referred to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy for implementation.

There would be financial implications for the commissioning of a study group and paper.

Item 15-03

[The assembly approved Item 15-03 with amendment. See pp. 16, 57–58.]

The Presbytery of Seattle overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to [affirm the decision of] [state concerns related to the ongoing and expanding extraction and export of fossil fuels, particularly coal, from the U.S. for use in Asia, and approve the following measures for public health and climate stewardship:]

1. Urges civil authorities to conduct [promptly] a full, programmatic review and assessment of the impact of expanded coal export projects in Washington and Oregon on human health and the well-being of communities along the Northwest rail lines. [This should include full Environmental Impact Statements (EIS) produced by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), and the studies should be conducted at multiple locations along the proposed expansion route so as to assess the impact on vulnerable communities.]

2. Commends the Washington State Department of Environmental Quality (WA DEQ) for its decision to conduct a full EIS along the route within its jurisdiction and directs the Stated Clerk to communicate this approval to WA DEQ.

3. Recognizes that regional issues of extraction, pollution, transportation, and export have interstate, national, and global implications, both for environmental justice concerns and for global climate disruption/change. Such impacts range from coal dust pollution, diesel particulates, potential for derailments, negative impacts on real estate, and public health and safety concerns, to global climate change, sea level rise, acidification of oceans, severe weather events, and the ethical dilemma of profiting from the export of coal and other fossil fuels for use in countries whose environmental and pollution restrictions are less stringent.

4. Affirms that civil authorities are called upon to require full disclosure and consideration of the combined effect of all coal export projects taken together on the poorest and most vulnerable communities, locally and globally. The General Assembly further affirms that the evaluation of coal export involves moral choices, in which key considerations are caring for the creation that God has made and with careful stewardship and justice for those who depend on a stable climate and water supply for survival.

5. Directs the Stated Clerk to write to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the EPA, and the governors and congressional delegation of Washington, Oregon, Montana, and Idaho, urging comprehensive Environmental Impact Statements (EIS) along proposed routes for expanded export of fossil fuels, including analysis from the National Transportation Safety Board and other bodies as necessary.

6. Commends the presbyteries of Seattle, Cascades, and North Puget Sound for their environmental awareness and advocacy, and encourages other Presbyterians and councils of the church to consider the impact of resource extraction, transportation, and use in their regions and to work with state and national ecumenical bodies and the Office of Public Witness of the Presbyterian Mission Agency in addressing concerns.

Rationale

Civil authorities are called upon to require full disclosure and consideration of the combined effect of all coal export projects taken together on the poorest and most vulnerable communities, locally and globally. The Presbytery of Seattle further affirms that the evaluation of coal export involves moral choices, in which key considerations are caring for the creation which God has made and with careful stewardship and justice for those who depend on a stable climate and water supply for survival.

Congregations throughout the Presbytery of Seattle share a deep commitment to values of justice and stewardship toward the most vulnerable including children, the unborn, the elderly, and those suffering from poor health because of environmental hazards, including air pollution, shrinking water supplies, and climate disruption.

The burning of coal is harmful to public health and is the leading cause of emissions of mercury, which is a neurotoxin, and greenhouse gasses, which disrupt climate, damage watersheds, and cause ocean acidification.
The transport of more than 105 million tons of coal a year from the Powder River Basin in Montana and Wyoming through Montana, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington to be burned in Asia would entail a significant number of trains on a 1,500-mile route and would affect many communities in the Synod of the Rocky Mountains and the Synod of Alaska-Northwest, including our own Presbytery of Seattle. Because these trains and barges must be uncovered, up to 500 pounds of coal dust per car, per trip, escape along the train track. Dramatically increased numbers of coal cars on these lines present health risks from additional coal dust and diesel exhaust, will clog traffic in local communities, stress the shipment of domestic products by rail, delay emergency vehicles, and require taxpayer support of all at-grade crossings and bridges.

Many communities along the proposed routes have opposed the significantly expanded shipment of coal, or asked the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to undertake a comprehensive review of the projects to include the impact on human health and on the global climate. Faith leaders have asked authorities to review the harmful effects on God’s creation of the whole lifecycle of coal for export, from mining to transport to burning.

As people of faith, we are called to love our neighbor as ourselves. In the United States, coal-fired power has steadily declined in the last decade because of a shift to natural gas, increased conservation and renewable energy, as well as stronger anti-pollution rules. Local communities, including many faith voices, have prevented new coal-fired power plants from being built and set strict limits on air pollution from existing plants. Knowingly enabling pollution of the air that our global neighbors breathe is morally unacceptable. Additionally, air pollution in China contributes to pollution in our presbytery and across our synod, including mercury in local waters, melting glaciers, and disruptive weather patterns.

Further reliance on coal slows the transition to better stewardship of God’s creation through clean and renewable energy, conservation, and energy efficiency. Climate change is a serious threat to generational justice. Faith community leaders have the moral responsibility to ask civil authorities to consider all effect of the mining, transport, and burning of coal on all of God’s children.

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 15-03 be approved with the following amendments:

“The Presbytery of Seattle overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to [state concerns related to the ongoing and expanding extraction and export of fossil fuels, particularly coal, from the U.S. for use in Asia, and approve the following measures for public health and climate stewardship:]

The original overture explains the dangers of expanding coal train routes in the Pacific Northwest. Indeed, some language (noted with *) from the original overture’s Rationale is included in these proposed amendments. This is a serious concern with regional, interstate, and global implications, and the Pacific Northwest is not the only region affected by these issues. The Gulf Coast and the East Coast are also sites of proposed expanded coal export routes. Current studies proposed by the Army Corps of Engineers are inadequate to assess the true environmental impact of these expanded routes, especially in communities along the way that will see none of the benefits of increased economic activity, but will bear significant risk of pollution, contamination, and threat to public safety. Oil trains carry a somewhat different set of dangers, underlined by the massive fires that followed derailments in Lac-Megantic, Quebec (July 6, 2013) and Casselton, North Dakota (December 30, 2013). (see: http://www.theguardian.com/world/2013/jul/07/fires-burning-quebec-runaway-train-crash and http://www.denverpost.com/breakingnews/ci_24821236/weather-shift-near-nd-derailment-worries-officials)

Washington State has announced a full Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) of the expansion the coal export routes within its jurisdiction, but this route has interstate implications. The interstate nature of the proposed expansion requires the Army Corps of Engineers and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to conduct complete EIS reports along the proposed route, not just at the points of origin and terminus. Such a study will need the support of the governors and congressional delegations from the affected states. The original overture, in listing the synods affected by the proposed expanded coal train routes in the Pacific Northwest, accidentally left out the Synod of the Pacific.

The proposed resolution is in accord with prior General Assembly social witness policy, particularly the 2008 report (study and recommendations), “The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming,” which uses eco-justice norms of sustainability, participation, sufficiency, and solidarity to develop guidelines for evaluating the major energy options (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/power-change-us-energy-policy-global-warming/). While General Assemblies have addressed environmental concerns since the 1960s, comprehensive policies were adopted in 1972 (Christian Responsibility for Environmental Renewal) and 1990 (Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice). Copies of Energy in God’s World: Our Future, Our Choice (Church & Society, March/April 2004) are also available, presenting a range of action strategies.

And while proposed expansions of coal trains and other fossil fuel exports may seem to be regional issues, they have very serious implications for the global community through the resulting combustion of fossil fuels in jurisdictions that have much less stringent pollution and emissions standards. If the assembly wished to expand the concerns of this overture, it could address the major issues raised by the proposed transportation of oil from shale and tar sands through a recommendation such as the following:

“[7. Consistent with the above concerns, supports the disapproval of major pipelines and transshipment facilities that jeopardize regional ecologies and facilitate the exploitation of highly polluting fossil fuel sources while delaying the transition to more renewable resources.]”

On Recognizing the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative to Affirm and Promote the Civil and Human Rights of Immigrants in Our Communities—From the Presbytery of Central Florida.

The Presbytery of Central Florida overtures the 221st General Assembly (2014) to recognize the formation of the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative as a campaign to mobilize congregations, mid councils, and Presbyterian-related organizations to affirm and promote the civil and human rights of immigrants in our communities. The Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative reaffirms that the body of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is formed by indigenous peoples and immigrants in various stages of our immigrant journeys and, as a body, is called to the struggle of new immigrants seeking justice under a broken immigration system.

The action of the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative is to:

• Connect a community of Presbyterians engaged in direct action for just immigration reform.

• Deepen awareness of the injustice of current immigration policy by sharing with one another and the broader church the lived experience of Presbyterians and community partners organizing for just immigration reform at the grassroots level.

• Empower Presbyterians to work to change policies and practices that infringe on the human and civil rights of immigrants in our communities, including immigrant detention, streamlined deportation, and the executing of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) by local law enforcement.

• We ask the 221st General Assembly (2014) of PC(USA) to instruct the Office of the General Assembly to immediately fill the vacancy of the position of coordinator of immigration issues in the Office of Immigration Issues. This position will help facilitate the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative. This staff person should be multilingual, have theological and legal training, community organizing experience, and a passion for justice for all the people of God but especially those who find themselves marginalized and discriminated against by unjust immigration policies.

Rationale

Strangers No More

Leviticus 19:33–34: “When an alien resides with you in your land, you shall not oppress the alien. The alien who resides with you shall be to you as the citizen among you; you shall love the alien as yourself, for you were aliens in the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.”

Matthew 25:35–36; 40b: “For I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me something to drink, I was a stranger and you welcomed me, I was naked and you gave me clothing, I was sick and you took care of me, I was in prison and you visited me.’ … ‘Truly I tell you, just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me.’”

Ephesians 2:19: “So then you are no longer strangers and aliens, but you are citizens with the saints and also members of the household of God.”

Embracing the movement of the Holy Spirit in our midst, this action is based in the power and possibilities inherent in bringing together witness and action for a just immigration policy.

This overture represents a call to action to the entire church that is grounded in decades of commitment to create safe and nurturing communities that reflect our deepest values as a people of faith. It is a call to action catalyzed by prophetic voices within the Presbyterian church: young adult leaders, new immigrant worshipping communities, and leaders whose legacies span many years of bold witness.

Concurrence to Item 15-04 from the Presbytery of Palisades (with Additional Rationale).

According to international law, governments may not enforce laws that deny any person (including undocumented immigrants) their fundamental human rights. Some state and local governments have created their own laws relating to immigrants, that deny the right to housing, and that criminalize the harboring, hiring or renting to non-citizens.1

Among the violations of human rights that have been experienced by immigrants, and children of immigrants who are United States citizens, include, but are not limited to, the following: racial profiling, denial of access to education and essential health care services, discrimination, and the creating of barriers to justice when persons are victims of crimes such as human trafficking, domestic violence or bias.2

Other examples of human rights that are violated at detention centers include, but are not limited to, the following: over-reliance upon incarceration, mistreatment by guards, denial of access to legal services providers, inadequate medical care, misuse of solitary confinement, discrimination against sexual minorities, unnecessary and arbitrary detention of individuals, inhumane and inappropriate facilities (where, in some cases, detainees are held in cells without any access to the outdoors), sexual harassment and assault against transgender individuals detained, denial of adequate visitation practices, and detention of families in an inappropriate setting for children.3

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises approval of this overture.

The rationale provided by the sponsors of this overture makes the biblical case for “hospitality to the stranger” by citing several scriptural passages. It also appropriately summons the support of international law for condemnation of profiling, denial of access to education and health care, human trafficking, conditions of incarceration, and other evils of the current system. The 196th General Assembly (1984) voted “firm support and encouragement for individuals and churches who, from the base of their Christian convictions or for humanitarian reasons, have risked imprisonment in order to save the lives of refugees from Central America by helping them to avoid being sent back to the countries they have fled.” Another source of support is “Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounters with New Neighbors,” a study and reflection guide approved by the 211th General Assembly (1999). It presents sections entitled “Historical Perspective: Immigrants,” “Theological and Ethical Principles for Policy,” and “Policy Principles.” Among the ethical principles is: “Love of neighbor requires Christians to seek justice for refugees, asylum seekers, and immigrants.” The guide further states concerning one form of nonviolent direct action: “The provision of sanctuary for asylum seekers may be an appropriate moral response for churches even though the United States government regards the witness as illegal.”

The last General Assembly [Pittsburgh, 220th general Assembly (2012)] zeroed in on current injustices and the need for comprehensive immigration reform. Immigration overtures (eleven in all) constituted the entire agenda of one of the commit-
Our Communities. This overture represents a call to action to the entire church from a grassroots level. For many years, the PC(USA) has been committed to creating safe and nurturing communities that reflect our deepest values as a people of faith.

Recognizing the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative to Affirm and Promote the Civil and Human Rights of Immigrants in against by unjust immigration laws

A passion for justice for all the people of God, but especially those who find themselves marginalized and discriminated

A Resolution to Recognize the Commitment of the Presbyterian Church to Making Just Immigration a Reality; 12-10—Regarding Safe Communities for Everyone; and 12-11—On the Plight of Immigrant People in Our Neighborhoods and Communities of Faith.) Recognition of the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative and support of nonviolent direct action as advocated by Item 15-04 is an appropriate extension of the commitment to social justice for immigrants that is evident in these actions of the last General Assembly.

The General Assembly has encouraged Presbyterian engagement in the democratic process to create laws that order society justly. In cases where unjust application or bad law causes injustice, however, Presbyterians may feel called to protest and seek redress for victims of injustice as guided by God, who alone is “Lord of the conscience.” In supporting this overture, the General Assembly would not be endorsing particular actions of protest or civil disobedience, nor would it taking financial responsibility for litigation and fees of individuals or groups apart from specific authorizations. The General Assembly would, however, be endorsing the humanitarian and civic imperative to improve the path to citizenship and to prevent further injustices in the application of current law. Certainly, on the matter of immigration reform affecting more than 11 million persons, it cannot be argued that conventional politics are operating effectively.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 15-04.

Presbyterians have engaged in advocacy regarding U.S. immigration policy and reform since at least 1953. In that year, the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (PCUSA) General Assembly (GA) called for a comprehensive review of the nation’s immigration policies, and the next year, the GA called for legislation to provide for the needs of migrant workers. Presbyterians have continued to call for immigration justice, most recently in 2006 (Call to Presbyterians to Work and Pray for a Just and Compassionate U.S. Immigration Policy), in 2008 (A Resolution to Study Immigration Detention in the United States; A Resolution to Expand the Church’s Ministry with and Advocacy Against Human Trafficking; a Resolution on Preventing the Trafficking of Women, Internationally and Nationally; A Resolution on Local Enforcement of National Immigration Laws
That Adversely Affect Local Congregations), and in 2010 (A Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians in Their Hour of Need). (See 12-09, A Resolution to Recognize the Commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Making Just Immigration a Reality—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns; Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 55, 50, 1155.)

We have to move from just preaching about justice for immigrants to concrete actions that endorse a just immigration reform in a broken immigration system where civil and human rights of immigrants are violated daily in the U.S.A. With this campaign our denomination will be able to offer safe sanctuary for immigrant communities around us. At the same time, we will be able to empower our members to be witnesses of Christ’s message: the good news of the redemption of the oppressed.

It is necessary to create awareness of the broken immigration system beyond immigrant worshiping communities. We have to extend it to all of our local churches and at all levels. Raising consciousness among U.S. citizens about problems and discrimination that immigrants are facing will help sensitize other brothers and sisters who have not been involved and remain indifferent in the face of unfair and discriminatory treatment against immigrants in this country.

In order to accomplish what this overture asks for, ACREC would respectfully ask the General Assembly of the PC(USA) to instruct the Office of the General Assembly to fill the vacancy of the position of coordinator of immigration is-
This position will staff the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative. This staff person should be bilingual (Spanish and English), have theological and legal training, community organizing experience, and a passion for justice for all the people of God, but especially those who find themselves marginalized and discriminated against by unjust immigration laws.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 221st General Assembly (2014) to approve Item 15-04.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the Presbytery of Central Florida’s overture, “On Recognizing the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative to Affirm and Promote the Civil and Human Rights of Immigrants in
Our Communities.” This overture represents a call to action to the entire church from a grassroots level. For many years, the PC(USA) has been committed to creating safe and nurturing communities that reflect our deepest values as a people of faith.
These communities include our immigrant communities who are often times adversely affected by corrupt and defective immigration policies, laws, and attitudes that violate basic human and civil rights. Immigrant women, in particular, also face unique human rights issues including denial of access to education and women’s health-care services, and barriers to justice for victims of crimes like human trafficking and domestic violence. Although ACWC supports this overture, we also were left asking how this initiative will take form and what financial implications will be involved.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 15-04

Comment on Item 15-04—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Office of Immigration Issues within the Office of the General Assembly serves the church by providing reliable advice and counsel to presbyteries and pastors with immigration problems and resources to educate and connect Presbyterians advocating for immigration reform.

Commissioners of the 221st General Assembly (2014) are invited to consider Item 15-04 as consistent with previous General Assembly policy.

Item 15-04 calls for the recognition of a movement that connects Presbyterians engaged in immigration reform. This is in agreement with the 220th General Assembly (2012) resolution, On the Plight of Immigrant People in Our Neighborhoods and Communities of Faith (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 55, 60, 1159), which directs Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) agencies to coordinate with “interested presbyteries to create political will towards immigration reform.”

Further, Item 15-04 calls for recognition of a movement thereby empowering Presbyterians to change policies including “detention, streamlined deportation” and the execution of “ICE [policy] by local law enforcement.” This is consistent with 220th General Assembly (2014) resolutions, On Advocating for Comprehensive Immigration Reform (Ibid, pp. 55, 57–58, 1142) and On the Plight of Immigrant People in Our Neighborhoods and Communities of Faith (Ibid, pp. 55, 60, 1159). Both call for more humane immigration enforcement and an end to Operation Streamline, 287(g) agreements, Secured Communities and the Criminal Alien Program.

The Roll of the General Assembly

1046 221ST GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2014)
Standing Rules of the General Assembly
[AS AMENDED BY THE 221ST GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2014).]

Introduction

Values Present at General Assembly

Now there are varieties of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are varieties of services, but the same Lord; and there are varieties of activities, but it is the same God who activates all of them in everyone. To each is given the manifestation of the Spirit for the common good. … If one member suffers, all suffer together with it; if one member is honored, all rejoice together with it. Now you are the body of Christ and individually members of it. (1 Cor. 12:4–7 and 26–27)

The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love and witness. (G-3.0501)

With glad and grateful hearts, we affirm these core values in our worship, work, and witness together in gatherings of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

• That the common life of the whole church, as evidenced in our meetings, will reflect the mind of Christ, demonstrating consolation, spiritual sharing, compassion and sympathy, and doing nothing from selfish ambition or conceit, but in humility regarding others as better than ourselves. We will be in full accord and strive to model the faithful, obedient, humble, and self-emptying witness of Jesus Christ.

• That our engagement with one another in the ministry of the gathered church will reflect the transforming love of God, enabling us to discern God’s will together. We will use our gifts on behalf of one another and the world, giving glory to God. We will love genuinely and hold fast to all that is good. We will rejoice in hope, be patient in suffering, and persevere in prayer. We will live in harmony with one another and overcome evil with good.

• These values will enable us
  ◦ to engage with one another in love, humility, grace, and servant discipleship, as the council of the whole church;
  ◦ to encourage and increase collaboration within and among all councils of the church;
  ◦ to participate in discussion, deliberation, and discernment in ways that are fair and honest and open;
  ◦ to focus each meeting of the General Assembly to encourage the full and prayerful participation of those seeking the mind of Christ for the whole church.

We acknowledge these core characteristics of gatherings of the General Assembly:

• Affirming the Presbyterian distinctives that God is sovereign and God alone is Lord of the conscience;
• Encountering and learning from Presbyterians and many others from across the United States and around the world;
• Gathering again with old friends in the family reunion that is General Assembly;
• Creating and expanding generative relationships with fellow Christians;
• Learning from individuals who are quite different from one another;
• Witnessing with joy and thanksgiving the emergence of new leaders for the church;
Introduction

- Experiencing an intentional, faithful process for discernment and decision making;
- Experiencing God’s presence through worship, devotions, hallway prayers, and Christ-centered conversations;
- Hoping and yearning together that our mutual witness will point to the reign of God;
- Demonstrating the church is not focused on any one cause or individual;
- Growing in our understanding of Christ and the church;
- Meeting sisters and brothers in Christ who represent a particular perspective and who listen and share with care and respect;
- Making decisions through contemplation, prayer, and heartfelt sharing;
- Continuing a history and heritage together since 1789.

We demonstrate and sustain our core values through these central commitments.

- Reflect the Body and Seek the Mind of Christ
  In all things, the General Assembly reflects the body of Christ and seeks the mind of Christ through worship, prayer, discernment, and action.

- A Broad Context for Christ’s Broad World
  The General Assembly provides a helpful, faithful context for understanding the beauty and diversity of the body of Christ in the world.

- Expansive and Spiritual Deliberation
  The General Assembly embraces an easily understood and accessible process that creates opportunities for questions, prayer, and God’s unexpected movement, rather than hurrying to yes/no votes.

- Order and Flexibility
  The General Assembly deliberates with fairness, attention to process, order, and the encouragement of minority voices, while creating space for decision making grounded in discernment and dialogue and for the emergence of new leadership.

- Reunion and Affirmation
  The General Assembly encourages the best of our Presbyterian tradition and friendships new and old.

- Faithful Stewardship
  The General Assembly demonstrates faithful stewardship of human and financial resources.

1. Papers in General
   a. The General Assembly shall consider only those papers delivered to the Stated Clerk in compliance with Standing Rule A. Ordinarily, such papers shall have been forwarded to the Stated Clerk postmarked, or electronically delivered, no later than sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly.

   b. All papers intended for consideration by the General Assembly that are forwarded to the Stated Clerk and postmarked less than sixty days, but no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be reviewed by the Stated Clerk, who shall determine whether or not to refer them to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. The Stated Clerk shall report to the committee regarding those papers not referred.

2. Reports of Entities, Commissions, and Committees
   a. All reports from entities, commissions, and committees of the General Assembly shall be delivered to the Stated Clerk on or before 120 days prior to the convening of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall publish these reports (print or electronic) and distribute them so that they shall reach the commissioners thirty days before the convening of the General Assembly.
A.2.a.–A.3.b.(4)

Budget Consultation

b. An entity, commission, or committee submitting a report with a recommendation that affects the work or budget of another entity(ies) shall submit evidence that a consultation has been held with the affected entity(ies).

Appropriate Background Information

c. Committees, agencies, or corporations presenting reports shall provide the appropriate background information necessary to interpret or understand the recommendations or responses to referrals to the members of the General Assembly committees to which the business is referred. Any and all documents or publications referred to in these reports that require approval by the assembly for publication and distribution to the church, including but not limited to curriculum, study papers/guides, position papers, and program resources, shall be made available to commissioners at the time the reports are published.

Report Length

d. All reports shall be limited to ten thousand words except the report of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the length of which shall be determined by the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. A request for an exception to the length of a report shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk no later than forty-five days prior to the deadline for the submission of the report and shall include the anticipated length of the report. The Stated Clerk may assess a fee of the entity or committee whose report exceeds ten thousand words for the costs incurred in printing and distributing the excess pages. Payment of the fee shall be submitted to the treasurer of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation. If the Stated Clerk and the representatives of any body are unable to agree, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall determine the length of the report.

Reports with Recommendations

e. All reports that bring recommendations shall use the following form:

The [name of agency, commission, or committee] requests the [# of the assembly] General Assembly [year] of the PC(USA) to [state the specific action or actions the General Assembly is being asked to take].

To this shall be appended a rationale, stating the reasons for submitting the requests and/or the report of the entity, commission, or committee.

3. Overtures

Definition

a. Overtures are items of business that have been approved by a presbytery (with concurrence of another presbytery) or a synod and shall request the General Assembly to take a particular action, or approve or endorse a particular statement or resolution. (See Book of Order, G-3.0302d.)

Writing Overtures

b. The stated clerk of a presbytery or synod considering an overture to the General Assembly shall:

1. Examine the most recently published Minutes of the General Assembly to determine if a similar overture has already been passed.

2. Consult with the Office of the General Assembly to determine whether the desired action has been voted by any previous General Assembly.

3. Consult with the Office of the General Assembly to determine whether a similar overture has already been proposed in order that the presbytery or synod may concur with the existing overture.

4. Draft the overture in the following form:
“The Presbytery of ________________ overtures the [# of the assembly] General Assembly [(year)] of the PC(USA) to [state the specific action the General Assembly is asked to take].”

To this shall be appended a rationale, stating the reasons for submitting the overture.

c. Submitting Overtures

(1) Overtures proposing an amendment to the Constitution or requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order (see Book of Order, G-6.04a and G-6.02) must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, and shall be promptly referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (see Book of Order, G-6.02 and G-6.04).

(2) All overtures that have financial implications for current or future years’ budgets must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly. Overtures with financial implications not received within the designated time limit shall not be considered, but shall be returned to the originating council.

(3) All other overtures intended for consideration by the General Assembly shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly.

(4) Overtures not received within the designated time limits shall not be considered, but shall be returned to the originating council for reconsideration.

(5) Presbyteries or synods submitting overtures with a recommendation(s) that affects the work or budget of a General Assembly entity(ies) shall submit evidence that the affected entity(ies) has (have) been consulted. If such evidence is not submitted, the Stated Clerk shall recommend that the overture be received and referred to a future session of the General Assembly so that consultation may take place.

(6) In the event that the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly receives an overture similar to one already proposed (excluding the rationale), she or he shall inquire of the presbytery or synod in question whether it would be willing to concur with that existing overture or desires to withdraw the overture. A presbytery or synod concurring with an overture may submit additional rationale for its action, provided that it does not duplicate the rationale provided by the overtures. The concurrence and any additional rationale will be printed with the original overture in the Reports to the General Assembly. Concurrences to any overture shall be received up to 45 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly. Concurrences to any overture with constitutional implications shall be received up to 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly.

d. Overtures that do not propose constitutional amendment or interpretation, and that are postmarked at least sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be published (print or electronic) in the reports distributed by the Stated Clerk. Overtures received in the same manner, postmarked no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be distributed to the commissioners before the convening of the General Assembly.

e. Overture Advocate

Each presbytery or synod that submits an overture shall notify the Stated Clerk of the name of an overture advocate who shall be available to provide information on the background and intent of the overture to any assembly committee to which the overture may be referred. Each council who submits an overture or concurrence may appoint only one overture advocate. (See Standing Rules A.3.c.(6) and E.2.)

4. Entity and Synod Minutes

a. Entities and synods required to submit minutes for review by the General Assembly shall submit such minutes on a calendar year basis so as to present minutes of all meetings for the calendar year (from January 1 through December 31) preceding the year in which is held the session of the General Assembly to which such minutes are submitted. The minutes shall contain the attestation that they have been approved by the entity or synod submitting them in the manner regularly in use within that body.

Review Process

b. Minutes of General Assembly entities will be reviewed in accordance with the “Guidelines for Preparation of Minutes of Agencies” as printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Minutes of the synods will be reviewed in accordance with “Guidelines for Reviewing Synod Records” as printed in the Manual of the General Assembly.

5. Presbytery Reports

Each presbytery shall act upon all papers sent to the presbytery to be voted upon in ample time to permit the stated clerk of the presbytery to mail the results to the Stated Clerk so that they are received no later than two weeks before the convening of the General Assembly. The response of the presbytery shall be mailed to the Stated Clerk by certified mail.

6. Commissioners’ Resolutions

Who May Propose

a. An item of new business, in the form of a commissioners’ resolution, must be signed by commissioners representing at least one other presbytery. Such resolutions must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk or the Stated Clerk’s designee. No commissioner may sign more than two such resolutions.

Deadline

b. The Stated Clerk shall determine and announce at the first meeting at which business is conducted the deadline for receipt of commissioners’ resolutions. The deadline shall not be earlier than twenty-four hours after the assembly has convened.

Existing GA Policies

c. In the preparation of a resolution, commissioners are urged to be aware of existing General Assembly policies relevant to their proposal and, where appropriate, to make reference to these policies.

May Not Amend Book of Order

May Not Amend Book of Order

d. Commissioners’ resolutions shall not contain business that requires an amendment to or interpretation of the Constitution (see Book of Order, G-6.04a).

Already Before Assembly

e. The Stated Clerk shall not transmit as new business any resolution that deals with matters of business already before the General Assembly, nor transmit any resolution whose purpose can be achieved by the regular process of amendment and debate.

Same Issues as Previous Assembly

f. Should the commissioners’ resolution deal with substantially the same issue considered by one of the two previous sessions of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall recommend that the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures take one of the following actions on the commissioners’ resolution: “refer to a subsequent assembly,” “decline for consideration,” or “take no action.”

Referral

g. If the proposed resolution does deal with new business, the Stated Clerk shall transmit it to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures with a recommendation for its referral.

Referral Declined

h. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures may decline to refer proposed items of new business if it decides that the matters proposed are already before the assembly or that the purpose of the proposals can be reached by the process of amendment and debate. Proposed items of business not referred, whether declined by the Stated Clerk or the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, shall be identified in the first report of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures distributed to commissioners after the period docketed for committee meetings, with a brief description of the content and a statement of the reasons for declining the proposed business. Twenty-five percent of commissioners present and voting is required to overturn action of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures to decline, take no action, or refer a commissioners’ resolution to a subsequent assembly. If a commissioners’ resolution affects a substantial change in an existing social witness policy, the Stated Clerk should recommend to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures that it be referred to the next General Assembly.
7. Communications and Resource Material

a. Communications and resource material provide comment or advice on business already under consideration by the assembly and shall neither contain nor constitute business to be considered by the assembly. Communications may be directed to the General Assembly

(1) by entities of the General Assembly that desire to comment on a single item of business coming before the General Assembly from any source other than their own entity, but which do not introduce new business,

(2) by organizations in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds membership, and

(3) by other denominations in correspondence with the General Assembly.

b. All communications intended for consideration by the General Assembly shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly.

c. Resource material (except for previously published books), including advice and counsel memoranda from advocacy and advisory committees, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred. This material shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the assembly meeting, who shall then publish (print or electronic) and distribute the material to all commissioners prior to the assembly.

d. Advice and counsel memoranda are resources prepared by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns for the purpose of providing information about existing policy, current work on specific topics, recent developments, and other factors useful to commissioners as they consider issues before the assembly.

8. Advisory Committee on the Constitution Report

a. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall report to the General Assembly its findings along with its recommendations on all questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order, including proposals for constitutional change. The General Assembly shall vote on the recommendations, and may amend or decline to approve them (Book of Order, G-6.02). The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall report any editorial changes made to the Book of Order since its last report to the General Assembly.

b. The report of the committee shall be presented directly to the General Assembly. The General Assembly may take action on the recommendations immediately, or it may refer them to an assembly committee for consideration by that committee and report to the General Assembly for action later during the same session of the General Assembly.

6. List of Participants

   1. Commissioners
      a. Each presbytery shall elect commissioners to the General Assembly in accordance with Book of Order, G-3.0501. The number of commissioners attending General Assembly will be based on the number of active members, including resident clergy members of presbytery. The figures for active members will be taken from the information recorded in Minutes of the General Assembly, Part II, Statistics of the year in which per capita apportionment is assessed for the year in which General Assembly meets.

      b. Presbyteries shall elect commissioners in sufficient time to permit the list of commissioners to be delivered to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 180 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are commissioned.

      c. Teaching elders and ruling elders considered for election as commissioners must be able to be in attendance for the duration of the General Assembly.

      d. Commissioners shall be entitled to speak under the rules, and to vote and present motions in meetings of the General Assembly and of assembly committees to which they are assigned. Commissioners shall be reimbursed for approved expenses.

      e. In the case of a newly created presbytery, the presbytery shall be entitled to elect commissioners to the General Assembly if the qualifying enrollment of teaching elders and congregations in that presbytery shall have been completed by December 31 of the year preceding the assembly meeting (see Book of Order, G-3.0501).
Alternates

f. Presbyteries may elect alternates in number up to, but not exceeding, the number of commissioners to which the presbytery may be entitled. Such alternates shall be seated with other visitors to the assembly.

2. Advisory Delegates

Definition

a. Advisory delegates are persons who are active members in one of the constituent churches or councils of the General Assembly (or, in the case of ecumenical advisory delegates, of a denomination of Christians designated by the General Assembly) who are selected to attend the meeting of the General Assembly in an advisory role so that the assembly may be assured of hearing and taking cognizance of their special viewpoints.

Categories

b. There shall be four categories of advisory delegates: youth, theological student; missionary, and ecumenical. When the ratio of advisory delegates to commissioners exceeds one to three, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall be authorized to make changes to the Standing Rules to create a ratio of less than one to three. The expenses of each advisory delegate shall be paid by the General Assembly (see Standing Rule I.3.) on the same basis as the expenses of commissioners (see Standing Rule B.2.f.(2) below for exception).

Voting Privileges

c. Advisory delegates shall be assigned to assembly committees as voting members and shall have the privilege of the floor of the General Assembly without vote. Only voting members shall have the privilege of proposing or seconding a motion. When certain issues come before a plenary session of the General Assembly, the advisory delegates may be polled prior to the vote of commissioners to determine their advice.

Young Adult Advisory Delegates

d. Young Adult Advisory Delegates

(1) Each presbytery shall appoint an active member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), who shall be between the ages of seventeen and twenty-three years on the date the General Assembly convenes, to be a young adult advisory delegate.

(2) Presbyteries shall elect young adult advisory delegates in sufficient time to permit the list of advisory delegates to be delivered to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 180 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected.

e. Theological Student Advisory Delegate

There shall be a delegation of theological student advisory delegates each year: two from each of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); one from each of the theological institutions in a covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and one each from three selected other theological seminaries. The selection process for these delegates is as follows:

(1) Each theological institution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall nominate three students who, at the time of the General Assembly, will have at least one year of study remaining in their degree program. Two of these students shall be designated by the institution as delegates and the other student shall be designated as the alternate. Such a student must be either an inquirer or a candidate in preparation for ministry under care of a presbytery, or a student nominated by the Presbyterian School of Christian Education. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 180 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected, who shall transmit the names of the two students to be delegates to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed.

(2) Each theological institution in covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall nominate two students who, at the time of the General Assembly, will have at least one year of study remaining in their degree program. One of these students shall be designated by the institution as the delegate and the other student as the alternate. Such a student must be either an inquirer or a candidate in preparation for ministry under care of a presbytery. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 180 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected, who shall transmit the name of the delegate to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed.

(3) All non-Presbyterian theological schools represented by corresponding members on the Committee on Theological Education and one additional non-Presbyterian theological seminary shall be asked to nominate one theological student advisory delegate and one alternate. The additional non-Presbyterian seminary shall be chosen on a rotating basis, descending alphabetically, from those that have at least twelve Presbyterian enrollees (either inquirers or candidates under the care of a presbytery) as of October 1 in the year preceding the assembly. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 180 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are elected, who shall transmit the name of the delegate to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed.

(4) Nominated students shall have at least one more year of study following the assembly remaining in their degree program. The Stated Clerk shall forward the name of the nominated students to the presbyteries of jurisdiction for election and confirmation.

Missionary Advisory Delegates

a. There shall be eight missionary advisory delegates who shall be chosen by the Worldwide Ministries Division from persons who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and mission personnel assigned by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in another country in which this church is engaged in mission. To the degree possible, the selection shall provide a global geographical representation with no two delegates representing the same country or geographical area and rotating the geographical representation. The Worldwide Ministries Division shall notify the Stated Clerk at the time these persons are named.

b. The expenses to the General Assembly of each missionary advisory delegate shall include transportation only from the point of entry or domicile of the delegate in the United States and return.

Ecumenical Advisory Delegates

d. There shall be up to fifteen ecumenical advisory delegates. Ten of these delegates shall be from churches outside of the United States. No more than five shall be from member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. Ecumenical advisory delegates shall be selected by the highest ecclesiastical authorities of their churches, in response to the invitation of a previous General Assembly. The assembly shall extend such invitations at the recommendation of the Presbyterian Mission Agency upon nomination by the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations.

3. Corresponding Members

a. The following persons shall be corresponding members: Moderators of earlier General Assemblies; the Stated Clerk, Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks, and other members of the staff of the Office of the General Assembly as designated by the Stated Clerk; the members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly; the members of the PMA Executive Committee and staff of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and of the divisions and related entities designated by the council; all members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution; the executives of synods; one person designated by each entity reporting directly to the General Assembly, including permanent, special, and advisory committees (additional persons may be designated by such bodies if authorized by the Moderator of the preceding General Assembly in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly); and the presidents (or their designee) of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and seminaries related by covenant agreement.

b. Corresponding members shall be entitled to speak, under the rules, in meetings of the General Assembly and of assembly committees on matters related to the work of the body represented, but they may neither vote nor present motions.
4. Advisory Committee on the Constitution

During the General Assembly, three or more members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution [this committee] shall be present at the session of the General Assembly to advise the General Assembly and its Moderator on constitutional matters.

5. Other Participants

a. The assembly, out of honor, courtesy, recognition, and the need for information and resource material, may recognize other persons as guests or observers. As such, they may be invited by the General Assembly to speak to the assembly for the purpose of conveying greetings or messages, or bringing enlightenment or information germane to the decision-making process. An assembly committee may extend a similar invitation at its own meeting.

Ecumenical Representatives

b. Ecumenical representatives are individuals sent at the initiative of another church to be the official representative of that church. The Stated Clerk may announce to member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches the date and place of the next meeting of the General Assembly. When officially certified through appropriate ecclesiastical channels at least forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, these persons shall be welcomed as guests of the General Assembly and introduced to the council through the report of the assembly committee addressing ecumenism. The assembly may assume the expense and housing of such guests on the same basis as the expense of commissioners, but shall not reimburse any travel expenses to the assembly site.

Resource Persons

c. The assembly may welcome persons invited by the Presbyterian Mission Agency or another entity of the General Assembly for the purpose of establishing or affirming particular ecumenical, mission, or program relationships, or assisting the entity in the presentation of particular items of business. Any expense reimbursement shall be the responsibility of the inviting entity.

Presbytery Staff

d. The presbytery’s executive staff person (or designee) and the presbytery’s stated clerk shall be supplied with all reports and materials related to the General Assembly, but shall not be entitled to speak in plenary meetings or in meetings of assembly committees unless called upon by a moderator to provide information.

Ecumenical Visitors

e. Ecumenical visitors are individuals attending a session of the General Assembly at their own initiative. These persons are welcomed to the assembly as unofficial visitors. The assembly shall assume no expenses for these ecumenical visitors.

Interfaith Representatives

f. Interfaith Representatives—Three observers of other faiths or religious traditions, who shall be representatives chosen by recognized religious bodies of non-Christian religious traditions and/or faith communities shall be present at the assembly at the invitation of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations. The interfaith representatives shall be present with the church in its deliberations, and to speak to the assembly for the purpose of conveying greetings or messages, or bringing information germane to the decision-making process. The assembly may assume the expense of housing and on the same basis as the expense of commissioners, but shall not reimburse any travel expenses to the assembly site.

6. List of Participants

Upon request, the Stated Clerk shall make available the list of participants registered for a session of the General Assembly to entities of the General Assembly, councils of the denomination, educational institutions, teaching elders, ruling elders, and independent organizations composed primarily of members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). A fee will be charged for lists or mailing labels to cover the costs incurred for printing, postage, and handling.

   e. Referring Overtures to Committees

4. Tentative Docket

1. Assembly Committee Structure
   a. The Stated Clerk shall propose the number and designation of assembly committees to the General Assembly, which shall include a Committee on Mid Councils. The Stated Clerk shall present the proposed committee structure to the General Assembly for consideration and ratification at the first assembly meeting at which business is transacted. In making these proposals, the Stated Clerk shall consult with the appropriate General Assembly entity or entities, and may consult with other persons.

   b. The Stated Clerk shall propose to the General Assembly for appointment the names of persons to serve as committee assistants for the duration of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall consult with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly before recommending persons to serve as committee assistants. Persons proposed shall not be commissioners to the General Assembly or staff members of entities of the General Assembly or any person who is a member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency or any person who is a member of any other entity of the General Assembly. A committee assistant shall be appointed to provide staff services to each assembly committee. The appointments shall be made in accordance with Book of Order, F-1.0401.

   c. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall appoint a moderator and a vice moderator to each committee. The moderator positions are filled by commissioners to the upcoming General Assembly or may be from an assembly within the last six years. All vice moderator positions shall be filled by commissioners to the upcoming General Assembly. Final appointment shall be made only after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and then also with representatives of the General Assembly Committee on Representation regarding the inclusivity mandated in the Book of Order, F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees, including any committees dealing with finance and budgets, shall be ruling elders. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees should be women. The moderators of at least two-thirds of the assembly committees shall be current commissioners. No more than one person from any one presbytery may be appointed to serve as a moderator. All synods shall be equitably represented.
d. The moderators and vice moderators of the assembly committees, as a group, shall function as the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. The moderator and vice moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall function as the moderator and vice moderator of this committee as well. This committee shall report to the assembly for its action at the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business.

e. The Stated Clerk shall conduct an orientation for moderators, vice moderators, and committee assistants of assembly committees no less than three weeks prior to the convening of the General Assembly. The orientation shall include information regarding business likely to be referred to each committee; suggested procedures for dealing with business referred to committees, especially the use of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised; utilization of available resources, both persons and materials; and preparation and presentation of assembly committee reports. The Stated Clerk, following consultation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency, may invite persons designated by the council as General Assembly resource coordinators to participate in the orientation. During this orientation, the Assembly Committee on Business Referral shall meet and carry out the duties given it by these rules. The Assembly Committee on Business Referral shall also meet, if necessary, just prior to the convening of the assembly and its function shall end at the convening of the assembly.

2. Assigning Commissioners to Assembly Committees

a. Forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall assign each commissioner and advisory delegate to one of the assembly committees by the random selection process described in this standing rule.

b. No later than thirty days before the convening of the assembly, commissioners shall receive the number and designation of committees. At the same time that the number and designation of committees is communicated, the Stated Clerk shall notify each person of the assignment, the time of their first meeting, and the necessity to confirm appropriate housing and travel arrangements.

c. The Stated Clerk shall provide a list of the assignments to those who need it to facilitate the work of the General Assembly.

d. Commissioners and advisory delegates shall be assigned to assembly committees by random selection as follows:

1. The Stated Clerk shall divide the presbyteries into six regional districts. Each district shall be composed of one or more presbyteries so arranged that, insofar as possible, the presbyteries in the district have contiguous boundaries and the numbers of commissioners in the several districts are approximately equal. Within each district the presbyteries shall be arranged alphabetically. The commissioners from each presbytery shall be listed alphabetically in two parallel lists: the first containing the names of the teaching elders; the second, the ruling elders. In those cases where the presbytery has not designated commissioners, the position shall be listed as vacant so that the name may be inserted later when the Stated Clerk is notified. The names of moderators and vice moderators of assembly committees shall be removed from the list and the names below them shall be moved up to fill the vacated positions. The teaching elder commissioners and vacant positions for teaching elder commissioners shall be numbered in sequence. The list of ruling elder commissioners in each district shall be rotated downward so that no ruling elder commissioner is opposite a teaching elder commissioner from the same presbytery. Separate lists of groups identified in Book of Order, F-1.0403, shall be prepared, insofar as it may be practical, to assure the most equitable distribution of such commissioners to the various committees in accordance with Book of Order, F-1.0403.

2. The Stated Clerk shall list the young adult advisory delegates in one list arranged in the alphabetical order of the presbyteries that designated the delegates. In any case where the presbytery has not designated a young adult advisory delegate, the position shall be listed as vacant so that the name may be inserted later when the Stated Clerk is notified.
(3) The Moderator shall pick by lot a number from one to ten. This number shall identify the number of the name in the first column of names in each district in which the assignment will begin. It will also identify the number of the young adult advisory delegates in which assignment will begin.

(4) The Moderator shall then pick by lot a second number equal from one to the number equaling the total number of committees. This number shall identify the assembly committee in the order in which the committees are arranged in the standing rules to which the first assignment of members shall be made.

(5) The assignment of members of the assembly committees shall then proceed in sequence. When initial assignments have been made to all committees in sequence so that the committees with the fewest number of commissioners are full, additional assignment shall be made to the other committees in the same manner, until all commissioners and young adult advisory delegates have been assigned to committees.

(6) The Stated Clerk shall assign missionary advisory delegates and ecumenical advisory delegates to assembly committees in consultation with those delegates. Ordinarily not more than two persons in each of these categories shall be assigned to any one assembly committee.

(7) Theological student advisory delegates will be assigned to committees at the same time and in the same way as are commissioners to ensure their full participation and attendance.

(8) Names of commissioners and advisory delegates received after these assignments have been made shall be inserted in the appropriate position in the original list and assigned to the committee to which that position was assigned.

3. Referring Business

   a. The Stated Clerk shall submit to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly a recommendation for the referral of all items of business coming before the General Assembly.

   b. After making any necessary changes, this committee shall present the prepared referrals to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral so that it may recommend referrals to the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business. Ordinarily, this committee shall recommend referrals to the General Assembly for its action. When the General Assembly is not scheduled to meet in time to act on its recommendation, the committee may refer business. Such referrals shall be reported to the General Assembly at its next business meeting.

   c. Items of business to be considered by the General Assembly shall be referred in one of the following ways:

      (1) for consideration by an assembly committee and recommendation for action by the General Assembly;

      (2) for consideration and action by an assembly committee with a report of the action to the General Assembly;

      (3) for consideration by the General Assembly through its inclusion in a consent agenda when the committee has approved a motion by 75 percent or more;

      (4) for consideration by the General Assembly in a plenary business session.

   d. Each item of business referred to a committee shall ordinarily be considered by only one assembly committee, but in no case should there be more than one committee making a recommendation on an item of business. Business of a related nature shall be assigned to a single committee insofar as possible.
e. The Stated Clerk shall present such items of business to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, along with a recommendation for their referral. In the event that the presbytery or synod disagrees with the referral recommendation, this procedure shall be followed: The presbytery or synod shall be entitled to submit a written statement regarding the background and intent of the overture at the time the overture is initially being considered for referral by the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. If, after that committee makes its recommendation, the presbytery or synod still disagrees with the referral recommendation, the presbytery or synod shall notify the Stated Clerk, in writing, of its disagreement. The overture advocate will then be entitled to speak to the background and intent of the overture at a special meeting of the Assembly Committee on Business Referral that shall be held no more than twenty-four (24) hours prior to the convening of the assembly.

4. Tentative Docket

a. The Stated Clerk shall submit to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly a tentative docket. After making any necessary adjustments, this committee shall present a proposed docket to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral so that it may recommend the docket to the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business.

b. The reports and recommendations of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly regarding the initial docket of the General Assembly and referrals of business shall be referred to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, along with any items of business not included in them (see Standing Rules I.4.b.(3) and I.4.b.(4)). Review of the minutes of the synods pursuant to G-3.0502c and of statement(s) of compliance with decisions of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission by councils, reported by the Stated Clerk pursuant to IV.B.2.d. of the Organization for Mission, shall be assigned to the same assembly committee. Following the convening of the assembly, such matters shall be directed to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.
Beginning of the General Assembly Meeting

1. Registration and Seating

a. Registration of Commissioners and Delegates

The Stated Clerk shall enroll commissioners and delegates on the opening day of the General Assembly and at such other times as may be necessary. The Stated Clerk shall determine any question that may arise regarding registration of commissioners and delegates. Any complaints regarding such decision shall be received by the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures.

b. Commissioners with Disabilities

A commissioner certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance shall be entitled to designate a person to function as an assistant without vote during all proceedings of the General Assembly, including executive sessions and committee meetings, in order that the commissioner may fully participate in those proceedings. The expenses of the assistant shall be paid for by the General Assembly on the same basis as expenses of commissioners. The Stated Clerk shall also enroll assistants to commissioners who have been certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance.

c. Assigned Seats

The Stated Clerk shall assign each commissioner, advisory delegate, and corresponding member to a seat in advance of the meeting. They shall occupy the assigned seats during each meeting of the General Assembly at which business may be transacted. An assistant to commissioner who has been certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance shall be assigned a seat adjacent to the commissioner.

d. Alternates

When a principal commissioner is replaced by an alternate prior to or during the course of an assembly session, whether for the remainder of the session or for a period of time during the session, the alternate shall assume that assembly committee position and seat assignment.

e. Ecumenical Representatives

Ecumenical representatives shall be seated on the floor of the assembly in a section clearly designated for such guests.

f. Presbytery Staff Seating

The presbytery’s executive staff person (or designee) and the presbytery’s stated clerk shall be provided assigned seating in proximity to the area that corresponding members are seated.

Registration of Commissioners and Delegates

- a. The Stated Clerk shall enroll commissioners and delegates on the opening day of the General Assembly and at such other times as may be necessary. The Stated Clerk shall determine any question that may arise regarding registration of commissioners and delegates. Any complaints regarding such decision shall be received by the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures.

Commissioners with Disabilities

- b. A commissioner certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance shall be entitled to designate a person to function as an assistant without vote during all proceedings of the General Assembly, including executive sessions and committee meetings, in order that the commissioner may fully participate in those proceedings. The expenses of the assistant shall be paid for by the General Assembly on the same basis as expenses of commissioners. The Stated Clerk shall also enroll assistants to commissioners who have been certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance.

Assigned Seats

- c. The Stated Clerk shall assign each commissioner, advisory delegate, and corresponding member to a seat in advance of the meeting. They shall occupy the assigned seats during each meeting of the General Assembly at which business may be transacted. An assistant to commissioner who has been certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance shall be assigned a seat adjacent to the commissioner.

Alternates

- d. When a principal commissioner is replaced by an alternate prior to or during the course of an assembly session, whether for the remainder of the session or for a period of time during the session, the alternate shall assume that assembly committee position and seat assignment.

Ecumenical Representatives

- e. Ecumenical representatives shall be seated on the floor of the assembly in a section clearly designated for such guests.

Presbytery Staff Seating

- f. The presbytery’s executive staff person (or designee) and the presbytery’s stated clerk shall be provided assigned seating in proximity to the area that corresponding members are seated.
g. The only persons who shall be permitted access to the commissioner and advisory delegate seating area during plenary sessions are commissioners, advisory delegates, assistants enrolled by the Stated Clerk to assist commissioners having a disability warranting assistance, the Stated Clerk, Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks, and other staff and assembly assistants who are assigned responsibilities that require access to this area, including assisting at the floor microphones, delivery of official messages to commissioner and advisory delegates, and locating commissioners who are needed on the platform. The Stated Clerk will provide special credentials for the particular staff and assembly assistants who are authorized to enter the commissioner/advisory delegate seating area. Registered presbytery staff may have access to the seating area to contact their commissioners and advisory delegates during breaks in business.

2. Quorum

At the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business, the Stated Clerk shall recommend to the General Assembly that the roll call of commissioners be established by registration. Alternately, the Stated Clerk may call the roll of commissioners and advisory delegates by calling the names of absentees as they appear on the roll. After any needed corrections have been made, the Stated Clerk shall announce whether or not a quorum is present (see Book of Order, G-3.0503). When commissioners and advisory delegates subsequently register, they shall be seated by the General Assembly. A commissioner who has not registered may not be seated and may not vote.

3. Committee Moderators and Overture Advocates Meeting

The Office of the General Assembly shall, on the first business day of the assembly, before committees meet to consider business, organize a forum where assembly committee moderators shall meet with overture advocates to discuss procedures for participation in committee discussion of business related to the overture that they are advocating.

   h. Minority Report

1. Committee Leadership and Support
   a. The moderator presides over the committee’s deliberations. The moderator may request the vice moderator or others to preside and to assist in the work of the committee.

   b. Each committee shall have available to assist in its work a recorder appointed by the Stated Clerk. The recorder shall be appointed from a pool of individuals who will already be attending the General Assembly, including staff members, local volunteers, and others. The recorder shall keep an accurate record of the actions of the committee with the votes on each indicating the number of committee members voting in the affirmative, or negative, or those abstaining; and shall assist in drafting the committee report.

   c. Each committee shall have available to assist in its work a committee assistant. The committee assistant may address the committee offering suggestions regarding procedure, but shall not participate in its deliberations on any issue before the committee as an advocate of one position or view regarding its action. The committee assistant shall assist the committee in securing desired resources.
2. Procedures for Assembly Committee Meetings

Open Meetings

a. Meetings of assembly committees shall be open to the public (as space permits) provided, however, that the committee may go into executive session at any time in accordance with the Open Meeting Policy printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Ordinarily, the committee assistant will be expected to remain with the committee in executive session.

Time of Worship and Prayer

b. Each meeting of the committee shall include a time of worship and opportunity for prayer.

Parliamentary Procedure
c. Committee meetings shall be conducted in accordance with Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised except when in contradiction to the Constitution of the PC(USA). Prior to a vote, methods of deliberation shall be consistent with the principles of Presbyterian government. (F-3.02 and G-3.0305)

d. Use and Preparation of Resource Material:
   (1) Each committee determines the use to be made of the resource material or resource persons available to assembly committees. Each assembly committee determines whether or not to permit the distribution of particular materials to the committee members.
   (2) Resource material (except for previously published books or interpretive brochures), including advice and counsel memoranda, that provides background or advice on items of new business, including commissioners’ resolutions, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred. This material shall be submitted to the assembly committee leadership team prior to presentation to the assembly committee to which the business has been referred. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall consider any request that is made to distribute this resource material to the full assembly.

e. When business has been referred by a previous assembly to a special task force, committee, or commission created for that purpose, the assembly committee receiving that report shall set aside no less than ½ hour (30 minutes) to hear a presentation by the special task force (or committee or commission) giving background on their report. Each committee shall determine if additional time is required for presentation.

Privilege to Speak

f. During the deliberations of the committee, in contrast to public hearings, only the following persons, having been recognized by the moderator, may speak:
   (1) Members of the committee;
   (2) Committee assistant;
   (3) Persons with special expertise, including elected members or staff members of General Assembly entities;
   (4) Members of special committees, task forces, commissions created by previous assemblies (see E.2.d and K.1.f), overture advocates, and signers of commissioners’ resolutions;
   (5) Persons invited by the committee through a majority vote of the committee; and
   (6) Representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, who may speak to overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, or other business on which the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has presented advice or recommendations, or matters that propose amendments to the Constitution, or that affect compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution.
   (7) In the event that business being considered by an assembly committee has been referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution for advice, representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall be entitled to speak.
(8) The committee moderator provides that the total time allotted to persons, other than members of the committee, who speak for or against a recommendation be equal so far as possible except as outlined in E.2.d.

g. Overture advocates and one signer of each commissioners’ resolution shall be responsible for being available at the time selected by any assembly committee considering the matter. The overture advocate or one of the signers of a commissioners’ resolution shall be entitled to speak, as an individual (or in cooperation with other overture advocates in a pre-arranged presentation), to the background and intent of the overture or resolution immediately after the motion is made and seconded, placing the overture or resolution on the floor of the committee or subcommittee.

3. New Business

a. Each assembly committee shall consider only matters referred to it by the General Assembly. No assembly committee may initiate new business except as it relates to the business of the particular assembly committee.

b. New business initiated in an assembly committee proposing an amendment to the Constitution or requiring an interpretation of the Constitution by the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-6.04b and G-6.02) shall be referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall report its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly.

c. Any other new business initiated in an assembly committee that touches upon constitutional matters shall be communicated in writing to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and the Stated Clerk. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall consider each matter so referred and report its findings and recommendations, which may include proposals for constitutional change, to the assembly committee and the Stated Clerk. The assembly committee shall vote on the recommendations and may amend or decline to approve them. The advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on these matters shall be transmitted to the General Assembly with the report of the assembly committee.

d. Recommendations and reports to the assembly regarding such new business must be approved in assembly committees by three-fourths of the committee members voting on the matter.

e. New business, other than that described in this standing rule, must be presented in accordance with Standing Rule A.8.

f. New business initiated in an assembly committee proposing an amendment to the Constitution (Book of Order, G-6.04) or requiring an interpretation of the Constitution by the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-6.02) shall be referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall report its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly. Any other new business initiated in an assembly committee that touches upon constitutional matters shall be communicated in writing to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and the Stated Clerk. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall consider each matter referred and report its findings and recommendations (which may include proposals for constitutional change) to the assembly committee and the Stated Clerk. The advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on these matters shall be transmitted to the General Assembly with the report of the assembly committee.
4. Organizational Meeting

a. Ordinarily, the initial meeting of each assembly committee is an organizational meeting in private session for up to one hour for the purpose of developing intragroup dynamics and determining procedural matters, such as approval of the committee’s agenda and consideration of the style in which the committee plans to operate.

b. During this executive session, business items before the committee shall not be discussed or acted upon.

5. Public Hearings

Schedule

a. Each committee, with the exception of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, shall schedule at its convenience one or more public hearings on matters before it.

Time Limits for Presentations

b. The committee may limit the time for the presentation by any person during a public hearing, including an elected member or staff member of an entity of the General Assembly. If the time allotted for the public hearing is not sufficient to accommodate all the persons wishing to speak, a method shall be approved by the assembly committee that ensures that an equal number of persons on each side of an issue have an opportunity to speak. Any person denied the right to speak at the hearing may appeal to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures on the basis that the method employed in selecting speakers was not fair.

Hearing Form

c. Any person who wishes to be heard in a public hearing shall sign up on a hearing form, posted in a public place in the building in which the assembly is being held, no later than the close of business on the second day of the General Assembly or one hour after the subsequent referral of business to the committee by the General Assembly. The location of hearing forms shall be announced during the first session of the assembly. In the event that an issue is expected to be controversial, those wishing to speak shall be asked to indicate whether they wish to speak for or against the recommendation.

6. Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures

Responsible for Referral of Business

a. This committee shall neither retain any items of business for its own consideration, nor suppress any matter that comes before it. However, business that substantially duplicates matters already before the assembly may be declined by this committee and reported to the assembly with a statement of the committee’s action.

Coordination Between Committees

b. This committee shall keep itself informed of the subjects being considered by the other assembly committees, and, when any subject is taken up by more than one committee, this committee shall advise the moderators of those committees regarding ways to avoid redundant or inconsistent recommendations.

Distribution of Materials

c. This committee shall determine whether or not particular materials may be distributed to the commissioners and delegates to the General Assembly, and specify the time and manner of distribution of any authorized by it. Particular materials distributed in assembly committees shall not be distributed to the full assembly without the approval of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, including the time and manner of distribution.

Requests to Schedule Event

d. The committee shall review requests from entities of the General Assembly, councils, other entities related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in any way, or coalitions in which this denomination or any of its entities participate, to schedule meetings, briefings, hearings, or other events of any kind during those hours when the General Assembly or its committees are in session.
7. Reports of Assembly Committees

Writing the Report

a. The moderator, vice moderator, committee assistant, and recorder, together with such other persons as the moderator may designate, shall draft the report of the committee following the sample form provided by the Stated Clerk.

Content

b. The reports of assembly committees shall contain only (1) the recommendations to be submitted to the General Assembly, and, where necessary, a brief statement of the committee’s reasons for such recommendations, and (2) the actions taken by the committee on items referred to the committee for action. Material necessary to identify the item of business and brief explanations may be included in the report. Extensive background information and detail contained in other documents in the hands of the commissioners shall not be included.

Fiscal Implications
c. Each assembly committee shall include with each recommendation or action in its report statements advising the General Assembly whether or not the recommendation or action has fiscal implications affecting any budget under consideration by the assembly.

Identify Entity
d. Recommendation for assembly action, or action taken by the committee, shall identify the entity that is directed to carry out and report back to the General Assembly regarding the matter dealt with by the recommendation or action.

PMA to Determine Entity
e. When the entity to which an assembly action is directed is a part of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, such as a division or related entity, the Stated Clerk shall automatically amend the language so that the action is directed to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The Presbyterian Mission Agency shall determine which entity shall carry out the responsibility and report to the assembly on the matter.

Votes Recorded
f. The votes recorded in the assembly committee on each recommendation or action shall be included in the report for the information of the commissioners, but shall be omitted from the Journal of the General Assembly.

Confer with Entity Affected by Action
g. If the report of an assembly committee proposes or records an action affecting the interests of an entity of the General Assembly or of a council other than the General Assembly, it shall be the responsibility of that assembly committee to confer with the representative(s) designated by the entity or council concerned before proposing such action to the General Assembly or taking such an action.

Minority Report
h. Minority Report

(1) A minority of the members of an assembly committee, or an individual member of an assembly committee, may submit in writing views that differ from those in the committee report. If the moderator of the committee shall affirm in writing that the positions expressed as recommendations for action by the assembly in a written minority report were presented to the whole committee during its consideration of the matter, the Stated Clerk shall reproduce the minority report and distribute it with the report of the committee.

(2) A minority report must be appropriate for consideration as a substitute motion (see Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised, 2011, p. 527).

1. Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures Reports

   a. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall report at the beginning of each meeting, recommending any necessary changes in order of business and any referrals it may have considered since its last report.

   b. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures may, at any time, recommend limits on debates or changes in the docket to facilitate the handling of business. The reports of the committee shall take precedence over any other business, including orders of the day.
F.1.c. This committee shall review the minutes of the General Assembly daily, report to the General Assembly any suggested corrections, and recommend approval of the minutes. The minutes shall be posted on the church’s website and two printed copies of the minutes shall be posted in different places during the following day for examination by commissioners. The minutes of the meetings of the General Assembly during the last two days of its session shall be submitted for review and approval within ten days after the adjournment of the General Assembly to a subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

d. Requests for the privilege of communicating with the General Assembly shall be referred to this committee, which shall confer with persons making such requests about the time and the manner in which their concerns may be brought to the attention of the General Assembly. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall recommend to the General Assembly a response regarding any possible presentation to the assembly. At the time any such recommendation is acted upon, any commissioner may request that an opposing view be heard, and the assembly shall consider and act upon the matter.

e. Protests expressing disagreement with an action or failure to act on the part of the General Assembly shall be referred to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, which shall decide whether or not the protest is decorous and respectful. Should the committee decide the protest is decorous and respectful, the protest shall be entered in the Minutes. The committee may prepare an answer to be printed with any protest so entered (see Book of Order, G-3.0105b).

2. Reports of Assembly Committees

a. Electronic copies of the written reports of assembly committees shall ordinarily be distributed to commissioners no later than the close of the meeting prior to the one at which they are to be considered. When necessary the Stated Clerk shall arrange for the reproduction and distribution of reports.

b. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in consultation with the Stated Clerk, shall docket adequate time for the reports of committees, including ample time for debate and action. If a report requires more time than docketed, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall consult with the committee for additional time to complete consideration of the report.

c. Committee moderators should move the approval of recommendations with minimum comment, and material in the commissioners’ provided resources shall not be read.

d. The financial effect of each recommendation on budgets previously approved or under consideration shall be clearly presented at the time that the recommendation is considered by the assembly.

3. Minority Reports

a. In order to be considered by the assembly, a minority report shall not only set aside the majority report but also be able to stand as a full and complete substitution for the majority report recommendations. A minority report shall be moved as a substitute only after the majority report has first been moved. When this happens, the assembly shall first consider (and may amend) the majority report. When consideration of the majority report is completed, the assembly may then consider (and may amend) the minority report. Further efforts to perfect each report shall be held to a minimum in order that the assembly can concentrate instead on the issue of whether to make the proposed substitution.

b. The moderator of the committee, or another member of the committee, shall present reasons supporting the committee’s recommendation. They may be presented before any minority report is moved or presented during the narrative report of the committee, or presented during debate on the question of whether or not the substitution shall become the main motion. (See also Standing Rule E.7.h.)
4. Committee Reports on the Budget

a. At the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business following the meetings of assembly committees, the assembly shall hear a report on the per capita budget from the committee that has reviewed that budget.

b. On the final day of the assembly, an amended per capita budget that incorporates the financial implications of actions taken by the assembly shall be presented to the assembly for approval.

5. Plenary Meeting Procedures

a. In debate on any pending matter, no commissioner or delegate shall be allowed to speak more than two minutes until all other commissioners or delegates who desire to speak on the pending matter have been heard.

b. (1) The General Assembly shall ordinarily decide questions by electronic voting. The Moderator may also call for unanimous consent by voice vote or show of hands. All decisions made by assembly standing committees by a three-quarters (supermajority) vote shall be placed on the assembly plenary consent agenda to be considered as the first order of plenary business following committee meetings. Any actions requesting constitutional change must be considered in plenary.

(2) In addition to all consent items from assembly committees, the following items shall be placed on the assembly plenary consent agenda:

(a) All unchallenged nominations from the General Assembly Nominating Committee.

(b) Unanimous recommendations from assembly agencies and entities for confirmations of those offices that, according to the Manual of the General Assembly, require General Assembly confirmation.

(3) In all cases, the right of any commissioner to remove any item from the plenary consent agenda or to call for one of the other forms of voting shall be preserved.”

c. In view of the relative ease in which studies and programs may be approved, commissioners and other assembly committee members are cautioned to be mindful of the effort required of staff and elected members to carry out the General Assembly’s instructions.

d. When the General Assembly is in plenary session, questions that touch upon constitutional matters, including rulings on questions of order involving constitutional matters requested by the Moderator, shall be handled by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution. These questions shall be referred in writing by the Moderator to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall consider each matter referred and make recommendations directly to the General Assembly through the Moderator.

e. Commissioners are expected to be present when meetings are in session both physically and mentally. The use of electronic devices for purposes other than those directly related to the current topic is therefore discouraged when meetings are in session. Commissioners are also expected to adhere to the General Assembly Social Media Policy.

f. Emergency messages will be relayed to a commissioner or advisory delegate during plenary meetings by way of a written message delivered by one of the Stated Clerk’s designated staff or assembly assistants.

g. Any person permitted to remain during any executive session is expected to agree to be bound by the confidentiality required of commissioners.
6. General Assembly Nominating Committee

a. Unless the General Assembly shall have made some other provision, the nominating committee shall present to each session of the General Assembly a nominee for election to each vacancy on the entities of the General Assembly that shall exist because of a scheduled end of term, resignation, death, incapacity to act, change of residence, or any other reason.

b. The General Assembly Nominating Committee may decline to submit a nomination(s) to a particular vacancy(s) when requested to do so by the affected entity because of an expected merger of entity or a transfer of duties between entities in order to reduce the number of persons serving on a particular entity(s).

c. Nominating from the Floor

(1) Nominations by commissioners shall be in order unless the vacancy is required to be filled upon nomination from some other source.

(2) When any nomination for service on a General Assembly committee, council, or board comes from the floor of the assembly, the commissioner making the nomination will provide the General Assembly Nominating Committee, no later than 48 hours after the convening of the General Assembly, with pertinent information about the person whose name is being presented, as well as the name of the particular person nominated by the nominating committee whose nomination is being challenged. Such information shall be provided on the “Nomination by Commissioner Form” provided for use at the assembly and available from the Stated Clerk. The availability of the pertinent information provided by the person challenging the nominating committee’s nominee shall be announced to the assembly at least twenty-four hours in advance of the nomination being made from the floor.

(3) In the event that there are nominations from the floor, the election shall proceed as follows:

(a) The General Assembly will deal with one challenged position at a time.

(b) The name of the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s nominee shall be placed in nomination by its moderator. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall call upon the commissioner who is placing a nomination from the floor to put that name in nomination.

(c) Once the names are placed in nomination, the order of speaking shall be first, the commissioner or a designee speaking on behalf of the floor nominee and second, the General Assembly Nominating Committee member or a designee speaking to its nominee. Both the commissioner (or designee) and the General Assembly Nominating Committee member (or designee) shall speak from the platform. Such speech shall not exceed three minutes in length. There shall be no other speeches seconding the nomination of any nominee.

(d) Without further discussion or debate, the General Assembly will move to vote.

7. Docket Time for Special Greetings

a. When the Head of Communion of a member church of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the World Council of Churches, or the National Council of Churches is in attendance at a session of the General Assembly as an ecumenical advisory delegate or as an ecumenical representative, and proper notice is provided, the assembly shall provide up to three minutes of docket time to each such Head of Communion to present a greeting to the assembly.

b. The placing of this greeting on the docket will be assigned by the Stated Clerk.
8. Announcements and Nonofficial Printed Materials

a. Only announcements connected directly with the business of the General Assembly shall be read from the platform and all notices shall be submitted either to the Moderator or the Stated Clerk for approval. Telegrams and special letters shall be reported to the General Assembly only at times to be designated by the Moderator.

b. Ordinarily, printed materials that are not official business before the General Assembly may only be distributed at authorized booths in the General Assembly Exhibit Hall. Other distribution is permitted to be handed out twenty-five feet or more from entrances to the building in which the General Assembly meets.

9. Distributing Study Documents

a. Whenever the General Assembly itself shall require the distribution of a document for study (whether the proposal originates through the recommendation of an entity, the presentation of an overture or resolution, or arises during the conduct of the assembly’s business) with a request for a response (whether the response is sought from individuals, congregations, councils, organizations of any kind, or any combination of these), the study document shall be accompanied by resource materials, bibliography, and aids as set forth in the document “Forming Social Policy,” Section 5, printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Along with a response instrument and the resource materials, bibliography, and aids, the document shall be distributed on a schedule that provides for the study guide and all accompanying material to be in the possession of the proposed respondents for a minimum of twelve months before the due date of the response.

b. The entity to be responsible for receiving the responses and reporting to the General Assembly the summary of the responses shall be identified in the material. The report on the responses to the study may be presented no earlier than to the General Assembly that convenes in the second year after the session of the General Assembly that approves the study.

10. Forming Social Policy

The entities of the General Assembly, including its committees, commissions, and special committees, shall be governed by the document, “Forming Social Policy” printed in the Manual of the General Assembly, when that entity is considering making a social witness policy.

11. Peaceful Demonstrations

a. Peaceful demonstrations shall be allowed twenty-five or more feet outside of the entrances to the building in which General Assembly meets.

b. Spontaneous or planned demonstrations by individuals or groups are prohibited inside the building where the General Assembly meets. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall declare all demonstrations that occur in plenary session out of order and, if demonstrators fail to immediately disband and desist, may recess the General Assembly to a fixed time and place. This rule does not prohibit the spontaneous or planned celebration of an action of the General Assembly or of any event in the life of the church.
General Assembly Meeting Worship

Services of Worship

a. Moderator of Preceding General Assembly Responsible for Planning
b. Ecumenical Worship
c. In Conformity with Directory for Worship

Services of Worship

a. The Moderator of the preceding General Assembly shall plan daily worship at the General Assembly, and a worship service including the celebration of the Lord’s Supper; and shall provide, in advance, suitable leadership for these periods of worship. The Lord’s Supper shall be celebrated at the first service of worship of the General Assembly session, and the Moderator shall preside on this occasion and preach a sermon or deliver an address. The Moderator shall seek advice to ensure inclusivity in the planning of appropriate daily worship periods. The Moderator shall assure adequate transmittal of information about the planning of worship periods to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

b. The Stated Clerk shall plan an ecumenical period of worship and provide, in advance, suitable leadership for this period of worship.

c. The various acts of worship planned for the session of the General Assembly shall be in conformity with the requirements of the Directory for Worship, and shall be developed and led according to the guidance of the document, “Presbyterians at Worship in Mass Assemblies.” In the preparation and conduct of all worship services, care shall be taken that all language, sight, hearing, accessibility, and other barriers be eliminated so that there can be full participation of all attendees. [Example: That printed orders of service also be printed in braille and that signing be available.]
Persons in Ordered Ministry and Elections

1. Moderator of the General Assembly
   a. Title/Functions
   (1) The Moderator of the General Assembly is an ecclesiastical person in ordered ministry, along with the Stated Clerk, of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A). The ministry of the Moderator is grounded in the ministry of baptized persons and in the particular ordained ministry of ruling elders and teaching elders.
   (2) The office of Moderator may be shared by Co-Moderators. In this case, the office of Vice Moderator will remain vacant until the next election of a Moderator.
   (3) The title of the Moderator is “The Moderator of the [number] General Assembly [(year)] of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).”
   (4) The Moderator of the General Assembly is a commissioner of the General Assembly.
   (5) When the Moderator presides at the assembly, it is to be a sign of the bond of unity, community, and mission in the life of the church. During the period between assemblies, the Moderator serves as an ambassador of the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, telling the story of the church’s life and upholding the people of God through prayer.
   (6) The Moderator shall preside over the General Assembly that elects him or her, and over the meetings of the next General Assembly until a successor is elected. The Moderator possesses the authority necessary for preserving order and for conducting efficiently the business of the council (Book of Order, G-3.0104).
   (7) The Moderator(s) and the Vice Moderator (when filled) shall submit a written report of their work to the session of the General Assembly at which their successors are installed.

   b. At the discretion of the candidate, he or she may choose to stand for election with a Co-Moderator or with a Vice Moderator candidate. When choosing to stand with another Moderator candidate, both candidates:
      (1) must fulfill all the requirements specified in these Standing Rules,
      (2) notify the Stated Clerk of their intention to stand for election together, and
      (3) will together determine how to fulfill the duties of the office.

   c. Election of the Moderator
      (1) Each person nominated to serve as Moderator of the General Assembly must be a commissioner to the General Assembly. Action by presbyteries to endorse candidates for Moderator of the General Assembly shall not take place until after the adjournment of the immediately preceding assembly. The Office of the General Assembly shall provide resourcing and orientation for Moderatorial candidates.

(2) Ordinarily, no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the assembly, the Moderatorial candidates will announce the name of a commissioner each has selected to offer to the assembly to elect as Vice Moderator, as appropriate.

(3) The following guidelines are intended to create an equal and open opportunity for moderatorial candidates. To this end, the following procedures shall be observed:

(a) Candidates shall covenant not to spend in excess of $2,000 in making their candidacy known to the church. This $2,000 includes out of pocket expenses as well as the estimated value of in-kind contributions, but does not include travel and meeting expenses.

(b) Each candidate shall submit to the Stated Clerk an itemized statement of expenses, including travel and meeting expenses related to his/her candidacy and in-kind contributions. This statement shall be submitted to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly prior to the convening of the General Assembly. This information shall be distributed to commissioners and advisory delegates prior to the election of the Moderator. The statement of expenses of all candidates shall be kept on file in the Office of the General Assembly following the meeting of the General Assembly.

(c) The Office of the General Assembly shall not reimburse a candidate for campaign expenses, but shall assume expenses involved in printing and distributing material submitted for information packets as outlined in Standing Rule H.1.c.(3)(g).

(d) In order to encourage reliance on the leading of the Holy Spirit in the selection of the Moderator, neither candidates or their advocates are allowed to communicate with commissioners and/or advisory delegates.

(e) Distribution of written campaign materials at General Assembly shall be limited to the public distribution area.

(f) Candidates are encouraged to meet and make themselves available for conversation with commissioners and advisory delegates within the scope of these procedures.

(g) Not less than fifteen days before the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish for commissioners and advisory delegates an electronic information packet containing the following material regarding each candidate for Moderator who is known to the Stated Clerk and who wishes to be included:

(i) A photograph, a biographical sketch, a personal statement by the candidate that includes a statement regarding the candidate’s sense of call to the ordered ministry,

(ii) A written presentation by the presbytery having jurisdiction over the candidate, if that council has endorsed the candidate,

(iii) The responses of the candidate to a questionnaire developed by the Stated Clerk.

The layouts for the presentation under this standing rule (as outlined above) may be chosen by the candidates, but all material including photographs submitted for each presentation shall be provided in electronic format as well as print. The material shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk no less than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly for reproduction and distribution, and shall be accompanied by a statement indicating the willingness of the candidate to serve as Moderator, if elected.

(4) The Moderator of the General Assembly shall be elected in the following manner:

(a) When the General Assembly is ready to elect its Moderator, each candidate shall be nominated by a commissioner to the assembly in the following manner: the commissioners making nominations shall be recognized at microphones on the assembly floor. Upon recognition by the assembly Moderator, the nominator shall say one of the following statements:

(i) “Moderator, I place in nomination for the office of Moderator of the ___ General Assembly Ruling/Teaching Elder _____ from the Presbytery of _______ and Ruling/Teaching Elder _______ from the Presbytery of ______.”

(ii) “Moderator, I place in nomination for the office of Moderator of the ___ General Assembly Ruling/Teaching Elder _______ from the Presbytery of ______. And for Vice Moderator of the ___ General Assembly Ruling/Teaching Elder _____ from the Presbytery of ______.”

The nominator shall then return to his/her seat on the plenary floor. No seconds to nominations are required.

(b) After nominations are closed, each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to address the General Assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the concerns that nominee feels to be the most important for the church. The order of speaking shall be determined by lot, the drawing conducted by the most recent Moderator attending the General Assembly

(c) At the conclusion of all the presentations by the nominees, they shall respond to questions from the floor. The first question shall be addressed to the nominee who spoke first in the original presentation, and the same question shall then be put to the other nominees in the same order in which they spoke earlier. The second question shall be directed to the second nominee in this order and then to each of the other nominees in sequence. Each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to answer each question. This process shall continue for a period not to exceed the number of nominees times fifteen minutes, or for one hour, whichever is shorter, unless terminated earlier by vote of the General Assembly.

(d) Where there is only one nomination for Moderator, the election may be by acclamation. Where there is more than one, the election may be by secret ballot in a format which is determined by the Stated Clerk and announced to commissioners and advisory delegates prior to the convening of the assembly.

(5) The Stated Clerk shall provide a service of installation for the newly elected Moderator and Vice Moderator, as appropriate, as the last item of business at the session in which the Moderator is elected. The families of the newly elected officers and all present previous Moderators shall be invited to the platform. The service shall use the order of service for “Installation of Governing Body Officers and Staff” from the Book of Occasional Services. The processional banner of the Moderator shall precede the newly elected Moderator into the assembly. The Moderator’s cross and stole shall be presented by the most recent serving Moderator. The newly elected Moderator invites a person to lead the prayer of installation. The most recent serving Moderator gives the charge, a hymn is sung by the assembly, and the newly elected Moderator gives the benediction.

Vice Moderator

d. Vice Moderator

(1) The Vice Moderator represents the assembly at the request of the Moderator. When the Vice Moderator serves in this capacity, all those duties incumbent on the Moderator shall be expected of him/her.

(2) Each proposed Vice-Moderator candidate shall include biographical information and a photograph in electronic format to be included with the Moderator candidate information.

(3) The Moderator may request the Vice Moderator to preside and to assist in the performance of other functions of the Moderator during and following the General Assembly.

Vacancy

e. Vacancy in the Office of the Moderator or Vice Moderator

(1) Should the office of the Moderator of the General Assembly become vacant, the Vice Moderator shall fulfill the functions of the Moderator. In such circumstance, all constitutional obligations and functions as prescribed by the Standing Rules of the General Assembly and the Book of Order shall be incumbent upon the Vice Moderator of the General Assembly.

(2) Should the office of the Vice Moderator of the General Assembly also become vacant, the most recent living Moderator shall fulfill the functions of the Moderator as specified in the Constitution of the church.

2. Stated Clerk of the General Assembly

Title/Functions

a. Title and Functions of the Stated Clerk at the General Assembly

(1) The title of the Stated Clerk is “The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” and may be used by the incumbent until a successor is elected and takes office.

(2) The Stated Clerk is accountable, through the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, to the General Assembly for the performance of the duties of the office, and shall present to each meeting of the General Assembly a report on the state of the church.

(3) The Stated Clerk is responsible for all matters related to the sessions of the General Assembly and all other matters relative to and arising from the General Assembly for which no other assignment has been made.

(4) The Stated Clerk shall also be responsible for guidance of the procedures for candidates seeking the office of Moderator, and for supervision of the election of each Moderator.

(5) In accordance with directives from previous General Assemblies and in consultations with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and other General Assembly agencies, the Stated Clerk is authorized to decide on matters pertaining to facilities and special events that must be established before the first meeting of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

(6) The Stated Clerk shall receive all reports, communications, overtures, and any other materials appropriate for General Assembly consideration. The Stated Clerk shall recommend to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, for presentation to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, a referral of such items of business coming before the General Assembly (Standing Rule C.3.e.).

(7) The Stated Clerk shall prepare for consideration of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly a proposed docket for the General Assembly’s consideration of its business (Standing Rule C.4.a.). The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall present the proposed docket to the first meeting of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures so that it may recommend a docket to the commissioners at the first business session. The docket presented to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall provide a time early in the General Assembly for a report by the Stated Clerk on the state of the church, and for a report by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

(8) The Stated Clerk shall propose to the General Assembly the number of assembly committees and a name for each committee after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the appropriate General Assembly entity or entities (Standing Rule C.1.). The Stated Clerk shall present the committee structure to the General Assembly for ratification at the first business session. Each commissioner and advisory delegate shall be assigned by random selection to one assembly committee at least forty-five days before the opening date of the General Assembly (Standing Rule C.2.).

(9) The Stated Clerk shall provide opportunity for orienting the commissioners, advisory delegates, and others taking part in the session of the General Assembly. The use of Robert’s Rules of Order, sources of parliamentary advice, and the availability of resource persons and materials to facilitate their work should be part of the orientation.
The Stated Clerk shall be the parliamentarian for the meetings of the General Assembly, or arrange for the service of a professional parliamentarian.

The Stated Clerk shall transmit to the councils and agencies of the assembly, persons who presented business to the assembly, and others affected by the assembly’s actions, a report on actions of the General Assembly on matters pertaining to their concerns. The Stated Clerk shall transmit to the presbyteries all assembly actions on which the presbyteries are requested to take action.

As soon as practicable after the adjournment of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish the assembly’s proceedings and other documents as the assembly may direct in an appropriate format (i.e. print or electronic) to be determined by the Stated Clerk.

Election

b. Election of the Stated Clerk

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) requires the election of a Stated Clerk and the standing rules describe the procedures for the election. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall be elected for a term of four years and is eligible for reelection to additional four-year terms. The Stated Clerk is accountable to the General Assembly for the performance of the assigned functions.

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall be elected in the manner described in this standing rule. No member of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly or other persons involved in this procedure as a member of the search committee or as a person providing staff services to the committee may be considered for nomination as Stated Clerk. The incumbent Stated Clerk may not participate in any way in the election process described in this standing rule. In the year there is an election of a Stated Clerk, the Moderator shall appoint a temporary Stated Clerk during the period of the election at the General Assembly.

The General Assembly that meets prior to the end of the term of a Stated Clerk shall elect a Stated Clerk Nomination Committee.

(a) The slate of nominees for the nomination committee shall consist of the following: three members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (nominated by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, one of whom shall serve as moderator of the committee), one member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (nominated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board), and five at-large members nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee in the following categories: one mid council stated clerk and four persons (two ruling elders and two teaching elders) from among commissioners who have attended an assembly in the past six years. The General Assembly Nominating Committee shall present to the assembly for election the slate of nominees for the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee. The slate presented shall reflect the denomination’s commitment to inclusiveness.

(b) Nominations from the floor for the nomination committee shall be in order following the distribution of the printed list of proposed nominees by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and a declaration by the Moderator that the names are in nomination. Names placed in nomination from the floor shall be in opposition to a particular name of an at-large member placed in nomination by the General Assembly Nominating Committee, and must be in the same category (H.2.b.(3)(a)). More than one person may be placed in nomination from the floor in opposition to an at-large nominee.

(c) The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall be responsible for providing the nomination committee with an up-to-date position description.

(d) The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly will ensure that an adequate budget for the nomination process is provided in the Office of the General Assembly and shall designate staff services for the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee.
(e) The nomination committee shall begin its work no later than 300 days before the start of the assembly that will elect the Stated Clerk.

(f) The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall be responsible for conducting the end-of-term evaluation of the Stated Clerk.

(g) The nominating committee shall announce that persons seeking the position of Stated Clerk shall file a completed application form and a resume or personal information form (PIF) with the committee 180 days before the opening of the General Assembly.

If the incumbent wants to be considered, he or she will notify the committee in writing and submit a current resume or PIF 180 days before the opening of the General Assembly. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall provide a copy of the end-of-term evaluation to the Stated Clerk Nominating Committee.

(h) Additional written material may be requested by the committee. No one may be nominated to serve as Stated Clerk who has not provided an application to the committee.

(i) The committee shall review and evaluate all applications to determine the constitutional eligibility of the candidates. Any candidate who is determined to not be eligible will be notified in writing within forty-five days of receipt of their resume or PIF.

(j) The committee shall interview all eligible candidates using the same methodology and select one as the committee’s recommendation. All members of the committee shall ordinarily participate in the interview. The committee shall declare its nominee no later than sixty days before the opening of the General Assembly.

(k) Any of the applicants for the position of Stated Clerk, including the incumbent Stated Clerk if not the nominee of the committee, who wish to be placed in nomination against the nominee of the committee shall declare their intention to the committee no later than forty-five days before the opening of the General Assembly.

(l) At the convening of the General Assembly, the Office of the General Assembly shall distribute to commissioners and advisory delegates an information packet containing the following material regarding each candidate for Stated Clerk who wishes to be included:

(i) A photograph, a biographical sketch, a personal statement by the candidate, including a statement regarding the candidate’s sense of call to the ordered ministry,

(ii) The responses of the candidate to a questionnaire developed by the committee based upon issues that will be before the church as presented in business to be considered by the General Assembly.

(iii) The material submitted shall be typewritten on paper 8-1/2 x 11 inches in size. The layouts for the presentation under this standing rule (as outlined above) may be chosen by the candidates, but the copy submitted for each presentation shall be provided in one color on one side of one sheet. The material shall be submitted to the Office of the General Assembly no less than thirty days before the convening of the General Assembly for reproduction and distribution and shall be accompanied by a statement indicating the willingness of the candidate to serve as Stated Clerk, if elected.

(m) The candidates may not distribute any other materials, print or electronic, including flyers, buttons, tokens or other objects that would denote a campaign for the office of Stated Clerk.

(n) Other organizations supporting the candidacy of a particular candidate may not distribute materials electronically, through the mail, or at the General Assembly with the knowledge, support, or permission of that candidate. Should a candidate discover that an organization is advocating or campaigning for him or her, it is expected that the candidate will request that organization to cease its activities. The same expectation will be true of organizations that are critical of a particular candidate for Stated Clerk.
(o) Each candidate will be provided a place to meet and talk with commissioners and advisory delegates two days before the election. Only information provided by the Office of the General Assembly may be distributed in those rooms. Other materials, apart from that packet, are not permitted. Each candidate for Stated Clerk will be allowed to post the times when he/she will be available for conversation in that room.

(p) Any questions concerning interpretation of the election process outlined in H.2.b. shall be determined by the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee.

(4) The General Assembly, by majority vote, shall elect the Stated Clerk in the following manner:

(a) Within forty-eight hours of the convening of the assembly, the Stated Clerk Review/Nomination Committee shall place in nomination a single nominee.

(b) The Moderator shall then invite other nominations from those who have completed the nomination process. Only one speech, made by a commissioner or a member of the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee not to exceed five minutes in length, shall be made to nominate each nominee. There shall be no speech seconding any nomination. Each person nominated from the floor shall reaffirm a willingness to serve as Stated Clerk, if elected.

(c) In the event there are no other nominations, the election shall proceed immediately as follows:

(i) The nominee for Stated Clerk shall be given an opportunity to address the assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the nominee’s views regarding the functions and work of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

(ii) The Moderator shall inquire of commissioners whether there are questions to be asked of the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee. Time allocated shall not exceed fifteen minutes. The Moderator shall inquire of commissioners whether there are questions to be asked of the nominee for Stated Clerk. The time allocated should not exceed fifteen minutes, after which the voting shall take place.

(d) In the event there are other nominations, the election shall proceed as follows:

(i) The election of the Stated Clerk shall take place as the first order of business on the next to last day of the assembly’s session.

(ii) Each nominee shall be given an opportunity to address the assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the nominee’s views regarding the functions and work of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. The nominees shall speak in the same order as the presentation of nominating speeches.

(iii) The Moderator shall inquire of commissioners whether there are questions to be asked of the nominees for Stated Clerk. The first question shall be addressed to the nominee who was nominated first and the same question shall then be put to the other nominees in the same order in which they were nominated. The second question shall be directed to the second nominee in this order and then to each of the other nominees in sequence. Each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to answer each question. This process shall continue for a period not to exceed the number of nominees times fifteen minutes, or for one hour, whichever is shorter, unless terminated earlier by vote of the General Assembly, after which the voting shall take place.

(5) Should there be a vacancy in the office of the Stated Clerk, the General Assembly Nominating Committee shall propose to the assembly, if the assembly is in session, members for the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee, or shall propose to the Moderator for appointment, if the assembly is not in session, to a Stated Clerk Nomination Committee. This committee shall be composed of members as outlined in Standing Rule H.2.b. and begin the process of a search for a candidate for Stated Clerk. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall designate an acting Stated Clerk until such time as a Stated Clerk is elected.

(6) The Stated Clerk Nomination Committee shall be dismissed at the adjournment of the session of the General Assembly at which the committee presents a nominee for Stated Clerk.
(7) A new Stated Clerk shall normally assume office thirty days after the adjournment of the assembly. A longer period of transition between Stated Clerks may be negotiated by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, but shall not exceed ninety days.

Acting Stated Clerk

- c. Acting Stated Clerk

In case of the incapacity, resignation, or death of the Stated Clerk, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall designate an Acting Stated Clerk until such time as the Stated Clerk is able to resume the duties or the General Assembly elects a new Stated Clerk. The person so designated may be one of the Associate Stated Clerks or another person eligible for election as Stated Clerk.

Associate Stated Clerks

- d. Associate Stated Clerks

The General Assembly may elect one or more Associate Stated Clerks as the General Assembly shall determine. The Stated Clerk shall nominate persons to fill each such office after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The term of office shall be four years, subject to reelection at the pleasure of the General Assembly.

   a. Reimbursement/Per Diem
   b. Reimbursement for Alternate Commissioner

4. Assembly Meeting Work Group
   a. Membership
   b. Responsibilities

1. Date and Place of Meeting
   a. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall meet on the date and at the place fixed by the preceding General Assembly for a period, which shall be known as a session of the General Assembly, preferably between May 15 and July 31, subject to the possibility of change (see Standing Rule 1.4.b.(10) and Book of Order, G-3.0503, for exceptions). The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall recommend to the General Assembly for its action the date and place of meeting six years hence and any necessary changes in dates and places of meetings previously set. Should action regarding date or place of meeting become necessary at a time when the General Assembly is not in session, this committee is empowered to fix a new date or place of meeting.

   b. The host body for any session of the General Assembly shall be a presbytery(s) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Any presbytery that desires to invite the General Assembly to meet within its bounds shall forward an invitation to the Stated Clerk no later than May 1 of the year that is seven years prior to the earliest effective date of the invitation.

   c. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall determine the criteria that render a place an eligible site for a meeting of the General Assembly, including the requirement that all meeting arrangements shall be made to facilitate full participation by persons with disabilities. These criteria may be obtained from the Office of the General Assembly.

   d. In order to distribute the benefits experienced from hosting a General Assembly meeting throughout the church, the place of meeting shall be rotated among the following four areas (unless prevented by financial or other practical considerations):

      - Area A: Synod of Alaska/Northwest, Synod of the Pacific, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii, Synod of the Rocky Mountains, Synod of the Southwest;
      - Area B: Synod of the Sun, Synod of Lakes and Prairies, Synod of Mid-America;
      - Area C: Synod of Living Waters, Synod of Lincoln Trails, Synod of the Covenant;
      - Area D: Synod of South Atlantic, Synod of Puerto Rico, Synod of the Northeast, Synod of the Trinity, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic.
2. Meeting Arrangements

Arrangements and Housing

a. The Stated Clerk shall oversee all arrangements for the meeting and housing of the General Assembly, including: the assignment of time and place for all special events and public meetings connected with or scheduled at the time of the General Assembly; the assignment of time and place for exhibits at the General Assembly; and the assignment of commissioners, advisory delegates, and others to hotels and other accommodations.

Assembly Assistants

b. The Stated Clerk shall appoint persons to serve as assembly assistants for the duration of the General Assembly. Persons appointed shall not be commissioners to the General Assembly or staff members of entities of the General Assembly. Assembly assistants shall be assigned to particular tasks to facilitate the work of the General Assembly. The appointments shall be made in accordance with Book of Order, F-1.0403.

Simultaneous Interpretation

c. The Stated Clerk shall arrange for the simultaneous interpretation of proceedings into Spanish and Korean languages for any participant during plenary meetings of the General Assembly. This service shall also be provided during assembly committee meetings, services of worship, and other events during the assembly for commissioners, advisory delegates, ecumenical guests, and, when possible, for other participants.

Sponsorship of Event

d. An event scheduled before, during, or immediately following a session of the General Assembly and extending an invitation to any or all participants of the assembly shall clearly identify the sponsor or sponsoring organization(s) in any invitations, announcements, or other publicity about the event.

3. Reimbursing Commissioner Expenses

Reimbursement/Per Diem

a. The approved reimbursement for the travel expenses, food, lodging, and other approved expenses of commissioners at the sessions of the General Assembly shall be paid by the treasurer or the treasurer’s designee. The treasurer shall have the authority to deposit funds for such purposes in a bank or trust company where the General Assembly is to be in session. Commissioners shall be reimbursed by means of individual checks upon receipt of a voucher on a form provided by the treasurer. The Stated Clerk shall recommend to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly the amount of any per diem. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall set the per diem, and the Stated Clerk shall publish such per diem in the materials (print or electronic) provided to the commissioners. The treasurer shall determine the manner in which such checks shall be distributed and shall announce the place or places where such checks may be cashed.

Reimbursement for Alternate Commissioner

b. The Office of the General Assembly shall reimburse an alternate commissioner for cost of meals (as specified in the per diem expenses for the particular session of the assembly to which the person is commissioned) during the period in which the alternate is actually seated as a commissioner. The total of the payments to the two persons shall not be larger than payment to a single commissioner attending the full assembly. The Office of the General Assembly shall reimburse either the original commissioner or the alternate who replaced the original commissioner for the costs of transportation and other approved expenses, but not both. It shall be the responsibility of the two individuals, with the assistance of the presbytery that elected them, to determine an appropriate division of the costs, whether reimbursement was in cash or a prepaid ticket was provided. Both persons shall be listed in the Journal as commissioners, with an indication of the period during which they served.

4. Assembly Meeting Work Group

Membership

a. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall establish a work group on assembly arrangements to be composed of designated members from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The moderator of the Committee on Local Arrangements, and the moderator and vice moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures (when selected) shall be nonvoting members of the committee at all meetings in which matters will be considered that affect their particular work. This work group shall be assigned responsibilities (1) through (10) in this Standing Rule I.4.b.

Responsibilities

b. Responsibilities

1. Review the evaluation of each General Assembly session secured by the Stated Clerk.

2. Outline the programs for future General Assemblies sufficiently in advance to ensure an orderly progression of themes and emphases and to ensure the appointment of significant speakers and other program participants.

3. Review and present to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral a recommendation regarding the Stated Clerk’s proposed docket for the next session of the General Assembly.

4. Review and present to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral a recommendation regarding the Stated Clerk’s proposed referral of each item of business to an appropriate assembly committee.

5. Assist the Moderator regarding the appointment of a commissioner to be the moderator of each assembly committee and a commissioner to serve as vice moderator of each assembly committee.

6. Consult with the Moderator regarding the planning of all worship at the General Assembly.

7. Coordinate the programmatic aspects of each General Assembly session, ensuring that adequate time is provided for the business that must be transacted.

8. Review requests from entities of the General Assembly, councils, other entities related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in any way, or coalitions in which this denomination or any of its entities participate to schedule meetings, briefings, hearings, or other events of any kind during those hours when the General Assembly or its committees are in session.

9. Prepare a report, including recommendations on the docket and the referral of assembly business, to be printed and distributed with other materials provided to commissioners.

10. Review and present to the General Assembly for its action the date and place of meeting six years hence and any changes in dates and places of meetings previously set.

2. Signatures

The Book of Order establishes the minimum number of signatures to require a called meeting. The Moderator, upon receipt of the petition, shall ask the Stated Clerk to complete the following within thirty days:

- Verification of PC(USA) Membership
  - a. Send each presbytery stated clerk or clerk of session a letter verifying the current Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) membership of the individual signatory to the petition.

- Verification of Signature
  - b. Send each signatory to the petition a letter of verification asking the commissioner to verify the signature on the petition and if the commissioner concurs with the purpose of the request as stated in the resolution.

- Removal Request
  - c. During the verification process, a commissioner may request removal of his or her name from the petition by notifying the Stated Clerk.

- Failure to Reply
  - d. After all reasonable efforts to establish contact have been made, the name of a commissioner failing to reply to the letter of verification shall be removed from the petition.

- Verification Process Report
  - e. The Stated Clerk shall report to the Moderator the results of the verification process.

3. Date and Location

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly has the responsibility to fix the date and place of a meeting of the General Assembly when the General Assembly is not in session.

- Report of Decision to Call Meeting
  - a. Upon receiving certification from the Stated Clerk that the petition has met the requirements of the Book of Order and the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, the Moderator shall report to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) the decision to call the meeting.

- COGA Sets Date and Place Expense Plan
  - b. The COGA shall set the date and place of a called meeting.
  - c. The COGA shall submit to the called meeting a plan to pay for its expenses. This plan shall be considered to be part of the business of the special meeting.

- Letter of Notification
  - d. The letter of notification of the called meeting will be mailed to the commissioners no later than sixty days before the start of the meeting.

   a. Three Ways to Review
   b. Written Request for Review

1. Commissions and Special Committees

Purpose

a. The General Assembly may establish special committees and commissions to carry out decisions of the assembly or make recommendations to the assembly on matters that cannot be undertaken or accomplished by an existing entity. (Book of Order, G-3.0109)

Considerations for Creating

b. In considering the creation of a special committee or commission the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall hear from relevant agencies as well as from the assembly committee considering the proposal. Financial implications of special committees or commissions shall accompany any recommendation to the assembly.

Appointed by Moderator

c. The Moderator of the General Assembly appoints members of special committees or commissions, unless otherwise designated, in collaboration with the General Assembly Nominating Committee and the General Assembly Committee on Representation. The Moderator is authorized to fill any vacancies that may occur. No person appointed may serve on more than one committee or commission unless otherwise designated by the assembly.

Length of Existence and Reports

d. Special committees or commissions shall normally complete their work within two years. Requests for an extension of work shall be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. An extension shall require a two-thirds vote of the assembly.

Review

e. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall review the work of each special committee or commission.

Representation at General Assembly and Funding

f. When the report of the special committee or commission is presented, its moderator shall serve as a corresponding member of the assembly and may be accompanied by one other member of the committee or commission. The expenses of these authorized representatives shall be reimbursed through the committee or commission’s budget.

In the event of a minority report, a designated member of the minority shall also be invited to attend the assembly. The expenses of this member shall be reimbursed through the committee or commission’s budget.

Other members of special committees or commissions may be reimbursed for attendance at the assembly only if they are required to be involved in hearings or for other official purposes.
g. The Stated Clerk shall provide staff services and other assistance to special committees and commissions. The work of the special committees and commissions shall be funded through the per capita budget of the Office of the General Assembly.

2. Special Administrative Review of Synods

a. The General Assembly has authority to undertake special administrative review of synods (Book of Order, G-3.0502c). There are three ways the General Assembly could be requested to consider such review:

1. by an overture from a presbytery or synod (G-3.0302d; G-3.0402; Standing Rule A.3.);
2. by request from one of the General Assembly entities (Standing Rule A.2.); or
3. by a commissioners’ resolution (Standing Rule A.6.). If such overture, request, or resolution is acted on favorably by the General Assembly, the General Assembly could undertake Special Administrative Review (G-3.0108b) through commission or special committee as provided for in Standing Rule K.1. and G-3.0109.

b. Special administrative review of an alleged synod irregularity or delinquency may occur when a written request for such review is received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly from another synod or a presbytery within the synod of the alleged irregularity or delinquency. If the request relates to an alleged delinquency, the request can only be filed with the Stated Clerk after the failure or refusal of the synod to cure the alleged delinquency at its next meeting, having been requested to do so in writing prior to the meeting. When the request for special administrative review is received, the Stated Clerk shall convene a meeting of the Moderator of the General Assembly, the moderator of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. If the request is in order and all the moderators agree that for the good of the church the special administrative review needs to be undertaken before the next meeting of the General Assembly (when the request could be considered by the whole General Assembly), the Moderator of the General Assembly shall appoint a special committee (Standing Rule K.1.) to conduct a special administrative review in accordance with G-3.0108b and report its findings and recommendations to the next General Assembly.
Amendment or Suspension of the Standing Rules

1. Recommending Amendments to the Standing Rules

2. Amending the Standing Rules

3. Suspending the Standing Rules

Recommending Amendments to the Standing Rules

1. In consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall recommend to the next session of the General Assembly any changes in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly deemed necessary. The Stated Clerk shall consult with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly before proposing to the General Assembly any amendment to the standing rules.

Amending the Standing Rules

2. The Standing Rules of the General Assembly may be amended by a majority vote of the commissioners present and voting. A motion to amend the rules is debatable.

Suspending the Standing Rules

3. A motion to suspend the standing rules is not debatable and shall require a two-thirds vote of the total enrollment of the commissioners.
