General Assembly and GA agencies. Like they did about synods, presbytery leaders conveyed diverse views about the General Assembly and working with General Assembly agencies. On the one hand, some focus group participants said that some church members become upset when General Assembly and GA agency leaders wade into areas that the church members would just as soon not have to hear about, or have to explain to their neighbors, year after year. On the other hand, many Presbyterians know hardly anything about General Assembly and the GA national agencies, and this can provide a different challenge for leaders trying to interpret GA mission. Finally, presbytery leaders lauded some national agency staff and ministries as particularly helpful. These included Laurie Griffith, Doska Ross (who recently left her position), and Mark Tammen (who will leave his position in May) in the Office of the General Assembly’s Constitutional Services office (particularly with judicial process issues); Julia Thorne in the Office of the General Assembly’s Immigration office (particularly with immigration status issues); and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (for disaster relief and recovery assistance in individual presbyteries).

Issues for Racial-Ethnic Constituents

Ignorance and resistance? Participants in the racial-ethnic constituency focus groups, like their counterparts in the other focus groups, expressed mixed feelings about the denomination and its governing body structure. On the one hand, except for some African American Presbyterian leaders and leaders in African American ministries, most participants in these groups believe that the rest of the denomination marginalizes, ignores, and in some cases discriminates against them and against ministries among their racial-ethnic constituents. A participant recalled that other Presbyterians often ask him/her where s/he is from, incorrectly assuming that sh/e is a recent immigrant. Some racial-ethnic Presbyterian leaders said they are asked to serve on too many committees, while others said they are never asked to serve on committees, even when they try to volunteer. Asian American and Hispanic leaders said that others in the denomination generally do not appreciate the diversity within their racial-ethnic communities. These communities include not only first-generation immigrants, some of whom do not speak English, but also second-, third-, fourth-, and fifth-generation immigrants, many of whom speak English only. The families of a portion of these latter individuals have been in the United States for many generations. Some Presbyterians from racial-ethnic communities worship in Anglo majority congregations. Several racial-ethnic constituents said that there is no clear, coherent strategy for Presbyterian involvement in mission and ministry with racial-ethnic groups and that efforts to develop such strategies have sometimes failed to involve these constituencies in their development. The absence of such a strategy with the fast-growing Hispanic and Asian American populations is particularly glaring, participants said.4

Support from the governing body structure. Participants in focus groups with leaders in racial-ethnic ministries expressed satisfaction with the support they have received from some parts of the governing body structure. Several Middle Eastern American constituents, whose fellowships or congregations are often linked with or embedded in non-Middle Eastern PC(USA) congregations, were pleased with the support many of them receive from these partner congregations. Several Asian American constituents praised the support they receive from their presbyteries. Many racial-ethnic constituents who find very few people of their own race-

4 Racial-ethnic constituents also pointed to PC(USA)-related seminaries as a place where some leadership training of both ministers of the Word and Sacrament and other congregational leaders should take place, but at times has not taken place. Often, neither seminaries nor presbyteries are able to help train non-English speakers, and seminaries don’t always do a good job of preparing students for the real world of pastoral ministry, which can include part-time pastoral positions and challenging urban or rural environments.
ethnicity within their presbytery find a much larger number of such individuals in their synod. Many synods have at one time financed networking and ministries with different racial-ethnic constituencies within the synod (although this financial support is apparently waning). African American constituents, who were the most consistently positive among racial-ethnic constituents about the support their ministries have received from the PC(USA) governing body structure, conceded that some of that support has likely derived from long-term personal relationships with presbytery leaders. Focus group participants from several racial-ethnic constituencies expressed gratitude for the support they have received from the staff of the Racial Ethnic/Women’s Ministries’ congregational support program.

Financial support also raised complex issues for the racial-ethnic focus group participants. On the one hand, racial-ethnic constituents appreciate receiving financial support from presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly agencies, although some complained that they have not received any or not enough. On the other hand, some constituents said that Anglo Presbyterians who offer money can be condescending in return, and that racial-ethnic Presbyterians have not always learned how to be more self-reliant and to resource their ministries from within their own communities.

Communication breakdown. Finally, racial-ethnic constituents conceded that racial-ethnic Presbyterians have not always been very interested in what goes on in the rest of the church. For immigrant Presbyterians, language can be a barrier, in that many events and resources are English-only. Many racial-ethnic Presbyterians also have day jobs with inflexible schedules (witiness, for example, the inability of the moderator of the National Asian Presbyterian Caucus to participate in the focus group). Typical Anglo Presbyterian decision-making processes can seem alien to some racial-ethnic Presbyterians, and the kinds of issues discussed at PC(USA) events can seem irrelevant or inappropriate to racial-ethnic Presbyterians (as they do to some other Presbyterians, presbytery leaders said).

Shared Issues

Developing leaders and congregations. Issues on which both presbytery leaders and racial-ethnic constituents focused were: leadership development and congregational development. The denomination’s ministerial ordination and pastoral search processes (which some participants described as rigid) ensure that many Anglo majority congregations and racial-ethnic congregations and fellowships go without installed pastors.

Changing responsibilities. Participants from all groups (including the younger pastors) painted a picture of a changing denomination and a changing world. Many Americans are abandoning church; congregations are shrinking; and congregations, presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly agencies are all facing financial challenges. Loyalty to organizations, including denominations, has subsided, and impatience with bureaucratic regulation is at an all-time high, participants suggested. Interest in spiritual development has eclipsed interest in policy-making and administration. The number-one responsibility of presbyteries, synods, the General Assembly, and GA agencies, many participants said, should be supporting and resourcing congregations and pastors. Challenging congregations and holding pastors accountable (perhaps a different kind of support) are also important. It is crucial to give people from 5 Asian American constituents praised the denomination for translating the Book of Order into Mandarin.

6 PC(USA) policies also separate chartered congregations from fellowships, and many local racial-ethnic Presbyterian communities are fellowships rather than congregations. With few installed pastors and few chartered congregations, many racial-ethnic Presbyterian groups (except for African Americans) have little voice in the denomination, a number of racial-ethnic constituents said.
different congregations and presbyteries, from different parts of the country, and from different ethnicities, cultures, and theological orientations a chance to interact, something that presbyteries, synods, and GA can help bring about. Among the presbytery responsibilities that some focus group participants identified as least important were mounting presbytery-wide mission projects, sustaining committees, and holding meetings.

Alternative communities. Many affinity groups of pastors and congregations—across both presbytery and denominational lines—have already developed, based on theological orientation and racial-ethnic constituency, among others. A few younger pastors wondered about going the next step and developing non-geographic presbyteries along some of these lines. Younger pastors, however, laughed at the idea that the success of their careers as PC(USA) pastors and ministry leaders would depend on the way PC(USA) middle governing bodies are structured.

Some participants anticipated a possible change in the denomination’s ordination standards (based on presbytery voting), making it easier for congregations and presbyteries to ordain non-celibate homosexual Presbyterians as deacons, elders, and ministers. Others anticipated possible changes to the governing body structure that the Form of Government proposal, if it passes, would effect.

Conclusions

Many focus group participants suggested that PC(USA) governing bodies should support congregations and pastors, stress intimacy and accountability among congregations and pastors, and cooperate across congregations and presbyteries when that makes sense. Participants also suggested improved communication across different parts of the denomination. Racial-ethnic group participants encouraged the denomination as a whole to emphasize racial-ethnic ministries and respect racial-ethnic constituencies.

Focus group participants did not agree on whether or not synods should be eliminated or on what role, if any, synods should play in cross-presbytery cooperation. Participants from most racial-ethnic communities were critical of parts of the PC(USA) governing body structure for their lack of support for racial-ethnic and immigrant ministries.

Executives of Large Presbyteries

Participants: Rev. Dr. Nancy Dawson, general presbyter, Presbytery of the Peaks; Rev. Wilson Gunn, general presbyter, National Capital Presbytery; Jeannie Harsh, acting executive presbyter, Presbytery of Scioto Valley; Rev. Jeff Hutcheson, transitional executive presbyter, Presbytery of Southeastern Illinois; Rev. Chaz Ruark, executive presbyter, Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area; Rev. Dr. David Walker, general presbyter and stated clerk, Presbytery of Coastal Carolina

From the Commission: Roger Lee, elder, Woodland Park Presbyterian Church in Seattle, WA, and immediate past moderator of the Synod of Alaska-Northwest; William (Bill) Stafford, elder, Immanuel Presbyterian Church in Milwaukee, WI

Q1. Let's begin by discussing what presbyteries do. In your opinion, of the various functions that presbyteries are responsible for: Which ones are the most important? And which ones are the least important?

Participants agreed that presbyteries should work to support congregations. For one participant, this meant resourcing and supporting congregations connectionally (facilitating connections among congregations, as well as between congregations and the larger church). Another participant listed a three-pronged approach presbyteries can use to support congregations: acknowledge, respect, and take seriously the work of each congregation; practically and effectively help congregations with problems; and ensure that congregations have a vision for their futures. Still another participant noted that it’s important to support congregations during transitions in pastoral leadership, which can often be disorienting and traumatizing. One participant also noted that presbyteries should challenge congregations to update their ministry strategies for the 21st century.

One participant said that it is important for the presbytery to create a safe, kind, and collegial atmosphere among its minister members, considering this fellowship with one another to be the minister members’ church and the body of Christ. This participant noted that the atmosphere can be less than collegial when disagreements exist.

Participants noted that the least important functions of presbyteries include property management and keeping up-to-date on CPM forms for ministry candidates (which, one participant noted, requires significant time and seems like a largely ineffective process).

Q2. Of the various functions that presbyteries are expected to carry out, which ones, if any: Could be effectively carried out in a shared way by two or three presbyteries working together? Could only be carried out effectively by each presbytery working on its own?

Participants thought that a few presbyteries could share one Committee on Preparation for Ministry (CPM). This would be especially beneficial if a presbytery with an exceedingly large number of candidates could share their CPM work with presbyteries with fewer candidates.

Participants also thought that presbyteries could share in leadership development (for example, training and best practices). One participant thought it would be important to share this leadership development across presbyteries because some leaders are at the far ends of their presbytery, closer in distance to people from other presbyteries. Enabling these leaders to meet with leaders in nearby presbyteries could foster deep, enriching, and supportive relationships that these leaders wouldn’t be able to experience in their own presbyteries. One participant mentioned the possibility of sharing regional leadership development opportunities with other denominations as well (for example, Lutherans and Episcopalians).

A participant noted the importance of sharing immigrant ministries across presbyteries. In the participant’s personal experience, immigrants living near presbytery borders do not care about presbytery boundaries and may choose to be involved in more than one presbytery.

One participant noted that presbyteries could share resource centers (especially instead of trying to recreate ones that had become outdated). There is the ability to share resources with other denominations as well. Also, presbyteries could share conference centers, specialized staff (for example, treasurer or stated clerk), educator resources, or a congregational consultant for strategic planning.

Participants said that presbyteries could not share Committees on Ministry, disciplinary activities, or issues pertaining to the Book of Order, Chapter VIII (likely referring to the Form of Government chapter on “The Church and Its Property”). There was a disagreement over whether Company of Pastors fellowship should be shared across presbyteries. One participant said it would be important to share this fellowship across presbyteries because some pastors would have to travel less to meet with pastors in another presbytery than they would to meet with pastors in their own presbytery, and being closer in distance could facilitate better connections. Another participant said that this fellowship should be kept within presbytery boundaries. A third participant said that the decision about whether or not to share Company of Pastors fellowships across presbytery boundaries could be made on a case-by-case basis, depending on the population density of the presbyteries in question.

One participant noted that, as presbyteries are each restructuring/reimagining themselves, there are fewer similarities between presbyteries. This would seem to make it more difficult for presbyteries to share functions.

Q3. How do you think the size of your presbytery affects its ability to do mission? What are some advantages of being a large presbytery when it comes to doing mission? What are some disadvantages of being a large presbytery when it comes to doing mission?

Q4. What other advantages or disadvantages are there to being a large presbytery? Is there anything else you’d like the MGB Commission to know about what it’s like to be a large presbytery? [Questions 3 and 4 both answered below]

Participants indicated that advantages to being a large presbytery include having excellent committees (for example, CPM and COM), especially because there is such a large group of people in these presbyteries—and thus a larger group of qualified and talented people—to choose from and work with. Also, in this same way larger presbyteries can have excellent staff resources as well. The ability to guarantee loans to congregations is another benefit to being a large presbytery.

One disadvantage to being a large presbytery is that the presbytery can be very spread out and/or have a large number of congregations, making it difficult for presbytery leaders to take an active and personal role in each congregation. One participant reports that his/her presbytery is working on creating smaller groupings of congregations within the presbytery to help combat this difficulty. Also, there can be a lot of cultural and theological diversity within large presbyteries, which can make it hard to unify people around a common sense of mission. Yet there is also a vibrancy and strength in this diversity.
A couple of participants commented on the way that Presbyterians can currently associate with other believers along non-geographic lines. For example, people can be closer to the Presbyterians for Renewal group than to their own presbyteries. Presbyterian evangelicals, Presbyterian progressives, African American Presbyterians, and Hispanic Presbyterians can connect with similar believers across presbytery and denominational boundaries.

Q5. In what ways does your synod assist your presbytery with its ministries? How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything your synod could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing?

Participants report that synods assist presbyteries practically by providing low-cost bookkeepers for presbyteries to use, organizing synod collegiums (where presbytery executives meet, network, and obtain resources), providing leadership development (for example, interim ministry training and CLP training), and promoting personal development among the leaders within their care.

Many participants seemed to desire synods that are formed/informed by presbytery collaboration. One participant felt that her/his synod was unnecessary, while another spoke of how synods become inflexible structures. Both preferred a more natural formation of synod-like structures through genuine relationships among presbyteries. Another participant said that his/her synod has been shaped by presbytery-level connections (instead of by top-down decisions). One participant noted that the synod staff determine whether the synod operates through presbytery-level initiatives (when staff come from the presbyteries) or through the synod itself (when staff come from synod leadership).

One participant thought that the presbyteries within her/his synod would not work together as effectively without the synod, and said that a synod executive can coordinate executive presbyter forums better than an executive presbyter can. Another participant noted that in his/her synod, the executive presbyters themselves coordinate their forums, and said s/he likes the flexibility involved in this presbytery-centered approach.

Q6. In what ways have General Assembly agencies been assisting your presbytery with its ministries? How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything the General Assembly could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing?

Participants noted that GA staff have been great to work with (specifically Julia Thorne, manager of immigration issues; Mark Tammen, Laurie Griffith, and Doska Ross, Department of Constitutional Services; other staff). One participant said that GA also does a great job with disaster response.

One participant said s/he really liked the per capita brochure that GA just produced and distributed to the churches, and would like to see the GAMC produce a resource like that to inform others about the great work that the church is doing.

A couple of participants noted that the Big Tent event is a great benefit, as it shares speakers and resources in ways that may only be possible on a national scale. One of these participants also voiced disappointment that the upcoming Big Tent, scheduled for summer 2011, has faced some problems and confusion. S/he noted that some of the groups that were going to participate in Big Tent are now planning conferences independent of Big Tent.

Miscellaneous Comments

One participant voiced unhappiness over the current three-tiered judicial system within the PC(USA). This participant talked of wanting to simplify the judicial process by taking out the synod-level tier.

Executives of Small Presbyteries

Participants: Rev. Ed Albright, consulting general presbyter of Glacier Presbytery; Rev. Edward Dunn, presbytery executive of the Presbytery of Boise; Fred Feth, stated clerk of the Presbytery of Wyoming; James Kennedy, Sr., stated clerk and presbytery administrator of Kendall Presbytery; Rev. Wayne Parrish, general presbyter of Boston Presbytery; Rev. Marianne Rhebergen, transitional presbyter of Cayuga-Syracuse Presbytery

From the Commission: Rev. Lemuel Garcia-Arroyo, associate presbyter of Salem Presbytery; Jane Smith, elder, First Presbyterian Church in San Bernardino, CA, and moderator of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii

Introductory question: Could you tell us a sentence or two about a conversation you recently had with someone in your presbytery who doesn’t work on the presbytery staff?

In these conversations, participants and others in their presbyteries discussed merging presbyteries, dividing presbyteries, and the desire to move a presbytery in a new direction in the midst of obstacles. Two participants said that their conversations centered on what the passage/expected passage of the Form of Government proposal and/or Amendment 10A (which would change PC(USA) ordination standards) might do to ministers, elders, and/or church ministry. One participant had a conversation with an elder who would like to see his church close.

Q1. Let’s begin by discussing what presbyteries do. In your opinion, of the various functions that presbyteries are responsible for: Which ones are the most important? And which ones are the least important?

Presbyteries’ most important functions, according to respondents, are to support congregations (including ones that are struggling), support pastors (including with pastoral care), keep clergy accountable (in terms of professional behavior and productivity), foster relationships, and deal with problems. The presbyteries’ least important functions include developing stand-alone mission programs, facilitating new church development, holding meetings, and sustaining committees. Also, someone noted that presbyteries could be assisted with the judicial process, which can be costly, especially to smaller presbyteries, and can cause divisions within the presbytery.

Q2. Of the various functions that presbyteries are expected to carry out, which ones, if any: Could be effectively carried out in a shared way by two or three presbyteries working together? Could only be carried out effectively by each presbytery working on its own?

Participants thought that presbyteries could share camps, resource centers, judicial commissions, Committees on Representation, sexual misconduct response teams, training, fellowship, relationship building, and a part-time paid Committee on Ministry support person. One participant thought that presbyteries would be able to share staff, but not functions; “a presbytery that shares its functions with others is less than fully a presbytery.” Important issues participants said must be considered are what constitutes a presbytery and how things can be shared between presbyteries without forcing a presbytery to lose its identity as such.

The moderator asked if it seems better to collaborate with other presbyteries on specific functions, rather than to be yoked with one or two other presbyteries. Some agreed with this idea, and one noted the importance of distinguishing between sharing programs with other presbyteries and sharing functions (which s/he believed essentially can’t be shared between presbyteries). Another didn’t see an important distinction between sharing staff and sharing functions between presbyteries. Instead, this participant advocated for determining what presbyteries share on a case-by-case basis.

A question was asked of participants: Could the synod take some of the responsibilities where you’re imagining presbyteries might cooperate? One participant thought that presbytery-to-presbytery cooperation was more appropriate, instead of having to rely on the synod to schedule meetings and give approval, which would take more time. Others argued for presbytery cooperation, as opposed to synod responsibility, if the synod geography/location doesn’t easily support synod responsibility in this way.

Q3. How do you think the size of your presbytery affects its ability to do mission? What are some advantages of being a small presbytery when it comes to doing mission? What are some disadvantages of being a small presbytery when it comes to doing mission?

Most participants were quick to share the merits of small presbyteries. They found these presbyteries to be familial and collegial, and felt that they promoted accountability among those involved in presbytery business.

Drawbacks to small presbyteries include relational dysfunction (similar to a family’s dysfunction) and fewer resources, in terms of both money and people (for example, fewer people available to serve on committees). Also, some smaller presbyteries are spread out across large geographical areas, which can make travel around the presbytery difficult and expensive.

Q4. What other advantages or disadvantages are there to being a small presbytery? Is there anything else you’d like the MGB Commission to know about what it’s like to be a small presbytery?

A couple of respondents discussed how smaller presbyteries shouldn’t need to have much executive staff, if any. The idea of executive staff is a product of corporate culture, not of the Bible or theology, and has been a recent development in the PC(USA).

Also, one participant called others to remember that the original intent of presbyteries was to foster relationships among small clusters of congregations. If, in creating smaller presbyteries, there are fewer resources to devote to presbytery programs and committees, so be it.

Q5. In what ways does your synod assist your presbytery with its ministries? How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything your synod could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing?

Some felt that their synods were very helpful. In particular, the Synod of the Pacific provides a personnel service, custodial fund, and loan fund (essentially a bank). Also, this synod serves as a conduit, providing GA mission funds to presbyteries.

Other participants did not see the support of their synods to be as far-reaching or essential. One participant noted that his/her synod didn’t do much except provide funds. Another said that the synod facilitates executive collegiums and stated clerk meetings, which are things the presbyteries could plan on their own. The synod has a program to support new ministers, but this support could be found through other organizations (for example, the Alban Institute). One synod is decreasing its scope, no longer providing the same levels of support, assistance, or guidance. While it once served as a clearinghouse for different funds, this role is being transferred to presbyteries. One participant thought that the PC(USA) needs to get rid of synods and assumed that a specific GA agency, or some other agency, could handle the Synod of the Pacific’s loan program. However, another participant responded by saying that synods can generate more resources than they use, serving a beneficial purpose, and argued that neither the GA nor another agency could handle the Synod of the Pacific’s loan program.

Q6. In what ways have General Assembly agencies been assisting your presbytery with its ministries? How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything the General Assembly could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing?

Participants noted that the GA agencies are very responsive and provide information and resources to the presbyteries. One participant said that it would not occur to half of the congregations in the presbytery to ask a GA office for resources—instead, they may seek resources from other presbyteries or other congregations within the presbytery. However, the participant said that some congregations in the presbytery are federated and united ecumenical congregations.

Participants voiced interest in GA support for older pastors (around ages 50 to 55) who are preparing to transition out of ministry. This support could be offered by the Board of Pensions and could take the form of outplacement services and opportunities to get counseling. Also, one participant suggested that the Board of Pension’s CREDO conference, which encourages pastors to “embrace wellness and to prayerfully discern the direction of their personal and professional lives,” could invite participation from pastors who are transitioning out of ministry. The CREDO program could support these pastors in their transition out of ministry and encourage them to identify their skill sets (or ones that they could develop) to use in this transition.

Moderators of Large Presbyteries

Participants: Rev. Jerry Cannon, moderator of the Presbytery of Charlotte and pastor of C.N. Jenkins Memorial Presbyterian Church in Charlotte, NC; Kris Girling, elder and moderator of Donegal Presbytery; Rev. Chris Keating, moderator of the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy and pastor of Woodlawn Chapel Presbyterian Church in Baldwin, MO; Rev. Jermaine McKinley, moderator of the Presbytery of Pittsburgh; Rev. Robert Millspaugh, moderator of Muskingum Valley Presbytery; Rev. Rick Neese, moderator of Presbytery of the Cascades and pastor of Chapel by the Sea Presbyterian Church in Lincoln City, OR; Rev. J. Perry Wootten, moderator of the Presbytery of New York City and pastor of Eastchester Presbyterian Church in Bronx, NY

From the Commission: Barbara Ranta, elder, First Presbyterian Church in Seattle, WA, and associated stated clerk of Seattle Presbytery; William (Bill) L. Stafford, elder, Immanuel Presbyterian Church in Milwaukee, WI

Q1. Let’s begin by discussing what presbyteries do. In your opinion, of the various functions that presbyteries are responsible for: Which ones are the most important? And which ones are the least important?

Participants said that presbyteries are most helpful when they provide congregational and leadership support (including the Committee on Ministry (COM) and the Committee on the Preparation for Ministry (CPM)), assist with the fulfillment of the Book of Order requirements, connect congregations with one another (promoting fellowship, sharing, and ministry collaboration through presbytery meetings/gatherings), and provide resources. One participant’s presbytery is very involved in college ministry.

Participants were least concerned with presbytery functions that do not support congregational ministry. One participant agrees that congregational support is most important, but in reality the presbytery is most focused on maintaining peace and order in the midst of judicial cases and congregations wanting to be dismissed from the denomination. This participant would rather have the presbytery focus on mission and training, instead of conflict. Another participant said that presbyteries may soon shift from an emphasis on programming to a focus on coordinating missions among congregations. One participant said that s/he does not feel particularly confident in how the presbytery as a whole functions as an organization.

Q2. Of the various functions that presbyteries are expected to carry out, which ones, if any: Could be effectively carried out in a shared way by two or three presbyteries working together? Could only be carried out effectively by each presbytery working on its own?

Participants thought that presbyteries could share commissioned lay pastor (CLP) training; administrative duties; and training in coaching, stewardship, and education.

Participants did not think that presbyteries could share functions that require contact with congregations, like the COM or CPM. One participant noted that it would be especially difficult to share these committees if the new Form of Government proposal passes. It would enable each presbytery to set its own standards and guidelines for these committees (although presbyteries could potentially agree on synod-wide standards). This participant noted that, in general, it is hard to talk about which functions presbyteries can share, since the denomination is currently voting on the new Form of Government proposal. Another participant noted that the congregations will exhibit less trust in governing bodies with larger spheres of influence. Participants said that some neighboring presbyteries are geographically so spread out already that sharing functions would be difficult. Another participant said that it would be important to see whether presbyteries have a similar focus (business-oriented or more spiritually-focused) before trying to share functions. Slightly in contrast, a participant thought that a benefit to connecting a few presbyteries would be the presence of theological diversity in the midst of corporate worship and spiritual formation.

A couple of participants stressed that differences between presbyteries (size, location) make a one-size-fits-all approach to presbytery ministry unreasonable.

Q3. How do you think the size of your presbytery affects its ability to do mission? What are some advantages of being a large presbytery when it comes to doing mission? What are some disadvantages of being a large presbytery when it comes to doing mission?

Q4. What other advantages or disadvantages are there to being a large presbytery? Is there anything else you’d like the MGB Commission to know about what it’s like to be a large presbytery? [Questions 3 and 4
both answered below]

Participants said that large presbyteries are able to provide more resources (funds and people) to use in supporting congregations. However, it was noted that, when presbyteries have been used to having sufficient funds, they may have a more difficult time than other presbyteries when financial hardships come and their funds are depleted. Also, according to participants, large presbyteries can offer more programs, more diversity (urban/suburban/rural settings, race, theology, gender), and more opportunities for connections and networking.

However, participants said that large presbyteries have less ability to engage in presbytery-wide fellowship or spiritual development, offer less intimate relationships, and allow for proportionally fewer leadership roles. One participant’s presbytery is actually made up of a few presbyteries that merged into one presbytery. The sense of community that had developed in each of the former presbyteries has led to cliquishness within these groupings even after the merge into one presbytery. Another participant said that if membership decreases in the presbytery but staffing levels stay the same, large presbyteries can end up spending too much money on staffing. Also, one participant from a large presbytery in a small geographic location has noticed that people do not stay for entire presbytery meetings, since their homes are not far away.

Q5. In what ways does your synod assist your presbytery with its ministries? How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything your synod could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing?

Q6. In what ways have General Assembly (GA) agencies been assisting your presbytery with its ministries?
How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything the General Assembly could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing? [Questions 5 and 6 both answered below]

Participants said that synods provide banking services; work with presbyteries to provide educational resources for training (including Board of Pensions); offer training, coaching, and/or support (for new ministers and conflict mediators, for example); and act as a higher authority to assist people who are discontented with the way a presbytery may be functioning.

Participants noted that GA staff/leaders have visited presbyteries (for example, for COM retreats) and that the GA assists presbyteries with new church developments. One participant said that, with the lower availability of GA resources in the past few years, the GA may not be as good a source of resources in the future.
Participants reported that both synods and the GA host conferences to help Presbyterians network, connect, and share ideas with one another, and that both also provide assistance with strategic planning and visioning. One participant noted that both are also able to speak about congregational ministry with more weight than a pastor or elder might be able to; another participant said that the synod and the GA are a source of wisdom.

One participant said that his/her synod is in a process of re-evaluating its role.

Moderators of Small Presbyteries

Participants: Rev. Paul Fandl, moderator of Stockton Presbytery and pastor of Community Presbyterian Church in Delhi, CA; Rev. Deborah Hollifield, moderator of Cimarron Presbytery and pastor of First Presbyterian Church in Guymon, OK; Rev. Douglas Horne, moderator of the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley and pastor of Otego Presbyterian Church in Bainbridge, NY; Rev. Jean Hurst, moderator of the Presbytery of Eastern Oregon and pastor of Pioneer Presbyterian Church in Burns, OR; Editha McKay, elder, moderator of Yellowstone Presbytery and commissioned lay pastor for two congregations; Tom Taylor, elder, moderator of the Presbytery of Southern New England

From the Commission: Viola Hickson-Lee, elder, commissioned lay pastor at Faith/Fe Presbyterian Church in Lockhart, TX, and former moderator of New Hope Presbytery; Rev. John Vest, associate pastor for youth ministry at Fourth Presbyterian Church in Chicago, IL

Q1. Let’s begin by discussing what presbyteries do. In your opinion, of the various functions that presbyteries are responsible for: Which ones are the most important? And which ones are the least important?

Most participants said that the most important functions of the presbytery are the Committee on Ministry (COM) and the financial administration of the presbytery. One participant said that, with ordained ministers, commissioned lay pastors (CLPs), and lay leaders serving in her/his presbytery’s small- to medium-sized congregations, in some way the entire presbytery (including the general presbyter) participates in the work of the COM. Another participant said that the presbytery’s Committee on Vocations has taken an active role in training elders to be CLPs. One participant noted that, although the COM plays an important part in his/her presbytery, at times the COM has been too heavy-handed.

Other important presbytery functions that were mentioned were: nurturing pastors within the presbytery, especially since in small presbyteries pastors take on a lot of responsibilities within the presbytery; the Committee on Preparation for Ministry (CPM); general presbyters having a personal connection to each congregation in the presbytery; and supporting congregations.

One participant talked about a former mission support staff position for a now-defunct three-presbytery partnership. The person in this staff position was paid $80,000 per year to do a job that the participant thought the chair of a presbytery committee (perhaps the mission committee) could have done; this position was considered unnecessary and frivolous. One participant said that his/her presbytery is in such bad financial shape, the management of presbytery finances is least important; similarly, this presbytery doesn’t receive a lot of mission funding from congregations, so the mission work is seen as less important (because the presbytery doesn’t have many resources to pursue mission).

A participant said that the Book of Order lists some committee requirements (for example, a certain number of people on committees) that are unreasonable for small presbyteries, and that meeting these requirements can waste presbytery resources. For example, small presbyteries may not need as many members on committees as the Book of Order specifies. Another participant’s presbytery has just moved from forming committees to forming task forces, which are given a lot more independence and less oversight than committees. This has solved the problem of needing a specific number of people on each committee, but it has caused more work for the pastors who serve as “go-to people.”
Q2. Of the various functions that presbyteries are expected to carry out, which ones, if any: Could be effectively carried out in a shared way by two or three presbyteries working together? Could only be carried out effectively by each presbytery working on its own?

Participants said that presbyteries could share administrative functions (for example, bookkeeping, presbyter), programs (CLP training), and events/gatherings such as youth events and pastoral support/continuing education events (since these can require musicians and speakers—resources that are in short supply). One participant said that the three presbyteries in her/his area are far enough away to make it difficult to collaborate, although the presbyteries still try to cooperate—especially in sharing resources.

One participant said that people are afraid of merging presbyteries because the resulting larger geographical areas would make it more difficult to foster congregational connections. Also, presbytery duties requiring personal connection (for example, COM, nurturing small congregations, assisting pastors in transition) would be difficult to share among presbyteries.

Q3. How do you think the size of your presbytery affects its ability to do mission? What are some advantages of being a small presbytery when it comes to doing mission? What are some disadvantages of being a small presbytery when it comes to doing mission?

Q4. What other advantages or disadvantages are there to being a small presbytery? Is there anything else you’d like the MGB Commission to know about what it’s like to be a small presbytery? [Questions 3 and 4 both answered below]

Advantages to small presbyteries mentioned by participants include their “focus on small local missions,” the intimate care they give to each presbytery’s pastors and congregations, and the close relationships within the presbytery.

One disadvantage to being a small presbytery that was mentioned is that the presbytery has fewer funds for mission. Larger churches within the presbytery, with more funds to give to presbytery mission, will use most of these funds for their own mission interests instead. Also, there are fewer people to assist with presbytery mission or serve on committees—and the small group of people who do help with these things take on too many responsibilities, become overwhelmed, and may stop helping as a result.

Q5. In what ways does your synod assist your presbytery with its ministries? How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything your synod could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing?

Synods provide helpful resources (first-call pastor support retreats, officer training, youth workshops, continuing education) and financial support (including banking services and loans).

However, participants accused synods of failing to keep them informed. For one participant, this is a new development, due to budget cuts and subsequent staff cuts in the synod; another attributed it to the large number of presbyteries in his/her synod. One participant was also somewhat disappointed in her/his synod’s loans.

Participants believe the future of synods is unsure. One participant recently attended a synod meeting where the synod was seeking to define its importance in years to come, and the synod decided it would basically be a clearinghouse and resource for mission. Another participant serving on his/her synod’s Permanent Judicial Commission (PJC) described the synod as a clearinghouse in its relationship with presbyteries and the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission. One participant’s synod has broken into clusters of presbyteries that foster connections between presbyteries better than an entire synod can.

Q6. In what ways have General Assembly agencies been assisting your presbytery with its ministries? How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything the General Assembly (GA) could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing?

Participants spoke highly of the Board of Pensions (educational conferences, annual presentations at presbytery meetings, good contact/outreach, strong mission, skilled implementation, supportive, helpful). Also, one participant has been pleased to have GA staff like Hector Rodriguez (associate for Hispanic congregational enhancement) and Philip Lotspeich (coordinator for Church Growth and Transformation) speak at his/her presbytery. Another participant has seen speakers from the GA share information with committees on various topics.

Participants would like to see the GA offer reasonably-priced or free online Christian education materials for congregations (one participant said that other denominations offer these types of materials), create high-quality national commercials/ad campaigns to promote the PC(USA), and provide more communication about GA news (but not too much information—summaries with links to further information would be ideal). One participant did not feel that her/his presbytery was connected to the GA in any significant way, and also noted a feeling of distrust within the presbytery toward the GA.

Miscellaneous Comments

A participant talked about how CPIP (Covenant Presbyterian Insurance Company) disbanded last year, leaving the presbyteries to find a new way to insure their churches. The participant initially thought the synod was to blame for this, but later wondered if the problem was beyond the synod level.

Presbytery Stated Clerks

Participants: Rev. Philip Barrett, stated clerk of the Presbytery of Des Moines; Anne Bond, elder and stated clerk of the Presbytery of Denver; Rev. Susan Krummel, stated clerk of the Presbytery of Great Rivers; Rev. George Pasley, stated clerk of the Presbytery of Alaska and pastor of Ketchikan Presbyterian Church in Ketchikan, AK; H. Daniel Rogers, elder and stated clerk of the Presbytery of Albany; Rev. Melana Scruggs, stated clerk of the Presbytery of John Calvin and pastor of Crane Presbyterian Church in Crane, MO; Rev. Cathy Ulrich, stated clerk of the Presbytery of Arkansas and pastor of Central Presbyterian Church in Fort Smith, AR

From the Commission: Barbara Ranta, elder at First Presbyterian Church in Seattle, WA, and associated stated clerk of Seattle Presbytery; Warren B. Cooper, elder, Philadelphia Presbytery

Q1. Let’s begin by discussing what presbyteries do. In your opinion, of the various functions that presbyteries are responsible for: Which ones are the most important? And which ones are the least important?

Participants said that it is important for presbyteries to oversee and support churches (through the work of the Committee on Ministry, for example), provide pastoral care (including creating a community of pastors that feels like a supportive church for these pastors), keep records, settle differences, train elders to lead congregations in the absence of pastors, and engage in and support mission.

One participant said that it was not too important for presbyteries to elect examination readers from among its ministers and elders (G11.0103m). Another participant noted that his/her presbytery cut its programmatic activities (especially those that were also carried out by session committees). One participant said that, in the midst of a presbytery restructuring, the presbytery’s resource center was cut, and the presbytery is less likely to maintain programming staff.

Q2. Of the various functions that presbyteries are expected to carry out, which ones, if any: Could be effectively carried out in a shared way by two or three presbyteries working together? Could only be carried out effectively by each presbytery working on its own?

Participants said that presbyteries could share programs (camps, Hispanic ministry), the Committee on Preparation for Ministry (CPM), leadership/staff positions (for example, stated clerk, Committee on Ministry staff), training/educational events and programs, and the judicial process. Due to the large geographic area covered in one participant’s presbytery, s/he said that it can be easier to foster community between people of two different presbyteries who are closer in distance to one another than they are to their respective other presbytery members.

A couple of participants talked about sharing resource centers (among presbyteries or ecumenically). Another participant said that his/her presbytery’s resource center was so underutilized that it was cut. This participant also stated that, with the advent of technology, resource centers are no longer necessary.

Q3. What challenges does your presbytery face? Do any of these challenges threaten the presbytery’s ability to carry out key functions? How has the presbytery tried to confront or manage challenges?
Many participants spoke of a lack of finances within their presbytery. One participant said that her/his presbytery is facing declining finances and membership and, as a way to mediate the effects of these negative changes, the presbytery has put its camp up for sale. Two participants talked about their presbyteries cutting lots of staff positions, with one of the presbyteries planning to put more of the workload on committees, and another already doing so. This latter presbytery has also cut unnecessary committees. In the midst of funding cuts within the presbytery over the next few years, one participant’s presbytery is seeking to figure out how to continue promoting ministry (particularly urban and immigrant ministries). One participant linked the lack of finances in the presbytery to people’s unwillingness to give financially to the presbytery and, more broadly, to their lack of faith in God’s future for the church and God’s ability to provide for the church as it carries out God’s ministry.

One participant spoke about the absence of ministers of the Word and Sacrament at half of the presbytery’s churches. The people who lead these congregations are not always active in the presbytery, which hinders the presbytery-congregation connection in a way that should be remedied. Half of the congregations at another participant’s presbytery do not have pastors. This presbytery has congregations that are quite distant from one another, and the presbytery has created groupings of congregations that support and resource one another, a system that has worked fairly well overall.

Q4. The General Assembly (GA) and most presbyteries and synods support their church government functions by assessing congregations and presbyteries a charge based on their number of members, an amount usually referred to as “per capita apportionment.” What is your opinion about the per capita funding system? Are there alternative ways of supporting the carrying out of these functions?

One participant asked if the others would mind sharing their presbytery’s per capita figures (both the total per capita amount and the per capita amount for presbyteries). Most participants reported these figures, which ranged from $21 to $50 for total per capita, and from $12 to $40-something for presbytery per capita.

One participant described the per capita system as “theologically and philosophically a marvelous idea . . . inclusive and fair . . . .” This participant said that the per capita system allows for equal participation in the life of the denomination by those interested. Other participants agreed that the per capita system is fair and also said it is relatively inexpensive.

One participant noted that it can be difficult for presbyteries to collect the per capita apportionment from their congregations. A few participants talked about how congregations can have a difficult time giving money over to the General Assembly. One of these participants talked about a specific congregation within her/his presbytery that has recently been withholding its total per capita as a way to state its disagreement with the denomination. The presbytery has been paying this church’s total per capita to the denomination out of other funds within the presbytery, but the church is sending the council an overture to ask that the presbytery refrain from paying its per capita. Another participant found that some people have a hard time giving control over their money to groups outside of their families or the session. One participant said that it could help Presbyterians if the per capita system was more skillfully interpreted—couching it in the larger story of the PC(USA)’s form of government, mission, and connectional system.

Q5. In what ways does your synod assist your presbytery with its ministries? How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything your synod could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing?
Q6. In what ways have General Assembly agencies been assisting your presbytery with its ministries? How has that changed in the past five years? Is there anything the General Assembly could do to help your presbytery that it is not currently doing? [Questions 5 and 6 both answered below]

One participant spoke highly of her/his presbytery’s interim synod executive, who has made the synod much more hands-on; the synod has also facilitated the coaching/training of pastors in ways that have increased collaboration among presbyteries within the synod. One participant’s synod hosts an annual Committee on Ministry/Committee on Preparation for Ministry training event, which provides networking opportunities and resources; assists with personnel staffing issues; and provides bookkeeping services for the presbyteries. Another participant’s synod has clustered smaller groups of presbyteries together to work on ministry. One participant’s synod has taken steps to give itself less power, and will perhaps transition to a virtual office and stop its annual leadership development program due to lack of staff and support. This synod has found itself being simply an intermediary in the transfer of funds among other governing bodies (presbytery, GA).

Participants noted that the GA provides stated clerk training, constitutional advice (although one participant sounded concerned about the merits of the staff transition—presumably with Doska Ross leaving), excellent staff (Julia Thorne, manager of immigration issues; Marcia Myers, director of the Office of Vocation; other Office of Vocation staff, as well as this office’s Church Leadership Connection program), emergency support from the Board of Pensions, and help from Presbyterian Disaster Assistance after a church fire. One participant talked about very strong connections between his/her presbytery and General Assembly entities (Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, the Board of Pensions, and the Presbyterian Foundation), and a potential future connection with the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. This participant thought that this presbytery’s stronger connection with GA than with the synod could be due to the fact that a recent GA took place in the region. One participant reported that the Immigrant Group Ministries office has supported the presbytery’s Sudanese ministry both with personal and monetary assistance.

One participant reported that the GA doesn’t have much of a presence within the presbytery, unless it is to complicate things for pastors (investment policies; ordination standards). Another participant opined that pastors could transfer to the United Church of Christ—with a more congregational governance structure—if they don’t like the Presbyterian system of government.

Middle Governing Body Commission
Pastors Younger Than 45 Years of Age

Participants:  Rev. Robert Bohnsack, pastor, First Presbyterian Church in Fort Walton Beach, FL; Rev. Eric Owens Ledermann, associate pastor, First Presbyterian Church in San Bernandino, CA; Rev. James Hickson Lee, pastor, New Covenant Fellowship of Austin in Austin, TX; Rev. Hanna Peterson, pastor, First Presbyterian Church in Kelso, WA; Rev. Matthew Schramm, pastor, Westminster Presbyterian Church in Bay City, MI; Rev. Pete Ullmann, pastor, Calhoun First Presbyterian Church in Calhoun, GA; Rev. Shannon McBride Weisenfels, pastor of Christian nurture and family ministry, First Presbyterian Church in Midland, TX

From the Commission:  Miriam Dolin, elder, Mission Bay Community Church in San Francisco, CA; Rev. John Vest, associate pastor for youth ministry, Fourth Presbyterian Church in Chicago, IL

Q1.  Let’s talk about the effect that being part of the governing body structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has on the ministry you do in and through your congregation, beginning with presbyteries:  In your experience, how has being part of a presbytery helped your ministry?  And how has being part of a presbytery hindered your ministry?

Participants have found that presbyteries can foster connectionalism and collegiality with other ministers and elders, bring chances to partner with other churches in ministry, offer training events that benefit personal ministry, and provide opportunities to serve on committees that serve good purposes and can enrich the committee members’ lives.

Presbyteries have also frustrated participants.  Comparing the presbytery to a family, one participant noted that not everyone associated with the presbytery is nice, and it can be challenging to work with some of these people.  By participating in presbytery meetings, pastors spend less time fulfilling their pastoral duties.  When presbyteries cover a large geographical area, it can take a long time to travel to presbytery meetings.  Also, presbyteries can demand a lot of time from these young pastors, who have other demands on their time (for example, job and family).  One participant found the presbytery to be distant unless a problem arises, in which case it comes in with a prescriptive solution.  This participant wished that the presbytery would be more loving and caring at all times.  However, another participant thought the presbytery staff served as a great listening ear and source of counsel.  Although presbyteries are expected to support churches, one participant thought that presbyteries actually ask the churches to support the presbyteries’ goals and objectives.  Another participant commented that presbyteries don’t show their value through their actions, but instead talk about how valuable they are.  One pastor found it hard to gather elders to participate in the presbytery, since lots of the issues that the denomination is arguing over are unimportant to them.

Q2.  Next, let’s talk about synods:  In your experience, how has being part of a synod helped your ministry?  And how has being part of a synod hindered your ministry?

Participants’ opinions of synods varied.  Some were neutral toward synods.  Others had good experiences with synods.  In particular, they noted the Living Waters for the World and Solar Under the Sun mission projects that have unified presbyteries in the Synod of Living Waters and the Synod of the Sun, respectively, in common mission.  Also, the Synod of the Sun has developed a dynamic relationship with the Synod of Puerto Rico.  Synods have been a champion for racial-ethnic congregations.  One participant wanted to make sure that minority or immigrant congregations would continue to receive the oversight that synods currently provide. them, since at this point presbyteries aren’t offering support and it could be difficult for GA to provide this support.

Some participants questioned whether synods currently play an important role in the PC(USA). As commissioner to the synod, one participant thought that his/her presence at the first synod meeting accomplished little or nothing. Another said that her/his synod was very active a few years ago, but shrank the scope of its functions and now simply disperses money. The synod may be currently having an identity crisis, searching for its function within the PC(USA), the participant suggested. This doesn’t mean that synods need to disappear, but it does indicate that they if they continue to survive they should find a significant role within the denomination. One participant argued that synods were created for a time when travel was difficult and a lack of technology impeded quick communication across the country. According to this participant, synods are no longer necessary. They disperse money, but the GA could do this, and eliminating synods would free up money for presbyteries to use.

Q3. Next, let’s talk about the General Assembly: In your experience, how has being part of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) helped your ministry? And how has being part of the General Assembly hindered your ministry?

When people discussed the General Assembly, they talked about both the GA meetings every two years and the GA agencies. Participants found that GA facilitates connectionalism and cooperation in mission, and provides oversight. Also, people mentioned that GA agencies are helpful and offer resources (with specific praise for Presbyterian Publishing Corporation publications and Board of Pension resources). Participants wanted to make sure that these resources were—and would continue to be—available to all who wanted to use them. One participant thought that people often didn’t realize all the resources that GA agencies offer and thought this could be attributed to the many intermediaries currently delivering these resources from GA to congregations (for example, presbyteries).

Participants also noted that GA discusses issues, like sexuality, which often capture media attention and define the PC(USA) to those outside the denomination. They find that members do not want their friends and neighbors defining their faith in terms of these issues, or members do not want to keep talking about these issues within their own congregations, and would like the GA to stop focusing on them. One participant suggested creating a non-geographic presbytery for More Light congregations, which could then develop their own ordination standards, so that these debates in the denomination could come to an end.

Q4. What sort of ministries do you see emerging now and in the next few years? What kind of presbytery is needed to support these ministries? What kind of synod is needed to support these ministries? What kind of General Assembly is needed to support these ministries?

Participants encouraged creativity in ministry (including taking risks in ministry) and contextual ministry. One participant suggested that the development of smaller presbyteries, in terms of both staff and geographic size, would curtail bureaucracy and allow people to develop relationships and share resources. Another thought that presbyteries or synods could hire an IT consultant to help small congregations create an internet presence.

Participants advocated for a less institutional focus within the PC(USA) and would like to see presbyteries, synods, and GA support the ministry of local congregations. Participants also advocated for less conflict over the Book of Order. Another participant thought that people should see the Book of Order as a book that gives permission to do great ministry, instead of a book that limits ministry. To unite Presbyterians, one participant encouraged the denomination to keep holding events that bring members together (GA meetings, Youth Triennium, Big Tent) and to talk less about issues that will never reach a consensus among a diverse body of believers like Presbyterians.

Q5. Beyond what you've already said, what needs to change in the governing body structure, if anything, for you to have a long and fulfilling career as a pastor and leader in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)?

One participant felt positively about GA, but wasn't sure that synods need to exist. This participant said that presbyteries are important to hang on to, less because of their meetings and more because people cooperate and discern together—something that sets Presbyterians apart from many other religious traditions. Another participant found this question to be misguided, because the fulfillment of this pastor’s personal ministry will not hinge on the structure of the PC(USA). Lastly, a participant requested the development of a church leadership dating connection.

African American Leaders

Participants: Rev. Gregory Bentley, president of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus and pastor of Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church in Tuscaloosa, AL; Rev. Alvin Bridges, pastor of Cornerstone Presbyterian Church in Chicago, IL; Rev. Dr. Karen Brown, vice president of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus; Rev. Arthur Canada, Sr., treasurer of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus and pastor of McClintock Presbyterian Church in Charlotte, NC; Rev. Patrick Daymond, pastor of Sixth-Grace Presbyterian Church in Chicago, IL; Rev. Leon Fanniel, director of chapter and region development of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus; Rev. Betty Griffith, pastor of Immanuel Presbyterian Church in Indianapolis, IN; Mark Jones, Sr., West representative of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus; Rev. Michael Wilson, Northeast representative of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus and pastor of Capital Presbyterian Church in Harrisburg, PA

From the Commission: Viola Hickson-Lee, elder, commissioned lay pastor at Faith/Fe Presbyterian Church in Lockhart, TX, and former moderator of New Hope Presbytery; Rev. Sam Roberson, general presbyter and stated clerk, Presbytery of Charlotte

Q1. Let’s talk about the effect that being part of the governing body structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has on the ministry you do among African Americans beginning with presbyteries: In your experience, how has being part of a presbytery helped ministry among African Americans? And how has being part of a presbytery hindered ministry among African Americans?

Overall, most participants had a generally positive view of presbyteries’ effects on African American ministry. Participants reported that presbyteries have helped ministry among African Americans by providing presbytery staff support to a congregation dealing with an outside conflict; offering financial resources that enabled African American congregations to meet for fellowship and worship; providing human resources (e.g., workshop facilitators); and showing respect, acceptance, and tangible support for African American congregations (their needs/concerns/ministry style) and local chapters of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus. One participant noted that when funding for some congregations was cut, lots of the African American churches became self-supporting, with half-time pastors. This was a positive change, as these congregations felt more independent and yet still connected to the presbytery.

Some participants thought that, to an extent, garnering presbytery support for African American congregations depended on knowing how to reach presbytery leaders, being represented within the presbytery administration, and/or having an executive leader who is a racial-ethnic or African American ministry advocate. One participant found it important to promote a broader sense of concern in presbyteries for African American church vitality (e.g., new church developments and redevelopments).

One participant reported that presbyteries hinder African American ministry when they act condescendingly toward African American congregations because they are financially supporting these congregations. Also, when the presbytery does not address these congregations’ concerns because they say the congregations are not active in the presbytery, this frustrates these congregations’ efforts and squelches their interest in participating in the life of the presbytery. Another participant noted that some presbyteries do not promote African American ministry. With one presbytery significantly cutting back its expenditures, its African American congregations with old buildings are not given adequate resources.
Q2. What kind of presbytery would you need in order to grow the Presbyterian witness among African Americans in your area? What would you change? What would you keep the same? [Not asked during the focus group]

Q3. Next, let’s talk about synods: In your experience, how has being part of a synod helped ministry among African Americans? And how has being part of a synod hindered ministry among African Americans?

Participants noted that synods have a positive effect upon African American ministry. One participant thought that synods are better advocates for African American ministry than presbyteries are, since they are more knowledgeable about the needs of African American congregations and more helpful in meeting these needs. Also, synods bring many Presbyterians together, and within this setting Presbyterians who are passionate about African American ministry can alert presbyteries with growing African American populations about opportunities for evangelism with this group. One participant mentioned that her/his synod provides funds for the National Black Presbyterian Caucus (NBPC).

One participant said that with the reorganization of synods two years ago (and the subsequent shift in the relationship between synods and caucuses), her/his synod no longer serves as the main supporter of racial-ethnic ministries. This has hindered racial-ethnic ministry in the synod, especially among presbyteries that are uncommitted or apathetic toward African American ministry. In this synod and its related presbyteries, the NBPC is now the primary means of engaging support for African American congregations, but this support is weaker than when the synod was the main champion for African American ministry.

One participant thought that the support African American ministry receives from the synod can depend on how well one knows how to get needs met within the system, as well as the level of support offered by synod leadership.

Q4. Next, let’s talk about the General Assembly: In your experience, how has being part of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) helped ministry among African Americans? And how has being part of the General Assembly hindered ministry among African Americans?

One participant was a minister-commissioner to last year’s General Assembly meeting, and thought that this position fostered a sense of connection with his/her congregation and the GA. Another participant thought that the offices of the GA are willing to address issues and concerns among African Americans within the church, but warns that this can take a while, requires one to speak to the right leaders within the GA, and might not produce an encouraging response. However, this participant had hope that GA’s willingness to support African American ministry would grow stronger, as was indicated by the decision to hold this focus group. One participant noted that the GAMC supported his/her synod’s request for funding for a new church development and for African American clergy leadership development. This participant noted that success with the GA depends on knowing the right process to use and the right people to speak with to get your needs met.

A couple of participants discussed the PC(USA)’s hierarchical governing structure. One participant thought that the denomination needs to begin considering the congregation as the primary means of engaging in mission. The governing structure doesn’t need to be overhauled, but the focus across all levels of PC(USA) governance needs to shift toward supporting and resourcing congregations. Another participant thought that this shift toward a congregational focus has already begun, but that its operationalization hasn’t been successful yet. Instead of resources moving from GA to middle governing bodies to congregations, resources aren’t moving from any one governing body to another—and this has caused trouble for congregations that need resources but don’t know how to get them.
Q5. Where in the governing body structure would you say you receive the most support for your ministry among African Americans? [Not asked during the focus group]

Q6. What opportunities are we missing among African Americans that governing bodies might help you address?

A few participants mentioned issues regarding seminary training. One participant wanted to know what the denomination is doing to encourage African American people (and people of other racial-ethnic minorities) to attend seminary and become PC(USA) leaders. Another participant wanted to see a reimaging of theological education within PC(USA) seminaries, which would train people more fully for urban ministry (for example, community organizing training) and church planting. This participant believes that seminaries give incoming students a sense that they will have no problem getting a position as a full-time pastor after seminary, while in reality that is probably not going to happen. If students are trained to create jobs for themselves after seminary (by planting churches and creating ministries), the PC(USA) would lose fewer potential leaders after seminary due to a lack of pastoral positions. Another participant added that seminaries should also promote and prepare students for a bivocational lifestyle, as the ministry situation today could require pastors to live bivocationally.

Other participants mentioned leadership issues within African American ministry. One participant suggested that the presbytery could help develop alternative means of pastoral support other than full-time pastors (for example, sharing pastoral leadership among congregations). Two other participants wanted to see African American leadership development (in general, and particularly for urban congregations that will fail without effective leadership). This general African American leadership development could also address bivocationalism.

One participant noted that, according to the 2010 census, over half of African Americans live in the South, and this percentage is expected to increase in the next years. This means that the South holds great promise for mission and evangelism—something that the PC(USA) should engage in.

Additional Comments

One participant talked about how essential it is for the Office of African American Congregational Support to be able to meet the needs of African American ministry in the PC(USA). S/he said that this office (along with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns) is the essential link between African American ministry and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and advocates for African American ministry. If this office lost some of its power and resources, support for African American ministry would be jeopardized.

A participant in an urban presbytery discussed how changes in housing stock, etc., were opening up opportunities for multi-racial congregations. This participant noted that presbytery, synod, and GA support and resources are needed to provide leadership for multi-racial congregations, which s/he believes would grow the church.
Appendix H: Focus Group Summary
Middle Governing Body Commission
Asian American, Non-Korean Leaders

Participants: Koonkeo Chanthorn, lay pastor of Lao Presbyterian Fellowship in Fort Smith, AR; Pastor Philip E. Chiang, Grace Taiwan Presbyterian Church in Houston, TX; Rev. Sam Fabila, pastor of Biyaya Community Church [Filipino] in Missouri City, TX; Rev. Kerry Kaino, pastor of Japanese Presbyterian Church in Seattle, WA; Patricia Hew Lee, elder and former moderator of the National Asian Presbyterian Council and the National Chinese Presbyterian Council; Alice Okazaki, member of the National Asian Presbyterian Council; Samson Tso, elder and vice moderator of the National Asian Presbyterian Council

From the Commission: Rev. Terry Newland, synod executive of the Synod of Living Waters

Q1. Let’s talk about the effect that being part of the governing body structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has on the ministry you do among Asian Americans, beginning with presbyteries: In your experience, how has being part of a presbytery helped ministry among Asian Americans? And how has being part of a presbytery hindered ministry among Asian Americans?

Overall, participants said that their presbytery is very supportive of Asian ministry, especially when presbyteries have Asian American staff. One participant said that the presbytery communicates excellent Presbyterian theology in a way that her/his Asian American congregation can understand. Another participant said that the presbytery taught the congregation about Presbyterian polity and the congregation’s place in the denomination. This presbytery is helping the congregation start a new ministry (which includes a building project). One participant’s presbytery has awarded ministry and leadership development grants to Asian American ministry.

Participants would also like to see Asian Americans become more involved in the life of the presbytery (and the synod and the denomination), and the presbytery to be more involved in Asian American ministry (as well as the ministries of other ethnic groups) as a way to better understand the problems these ministries are facing and to support these ministries (including financially). Yet they said that there is a definite language barrier hindering ministry cooperation between Asian Americans and presbyteries, and it can be hard to find an answer to this problem (translation during meetings may not work well in large meetings). One participant noted that Asian American immigrant ministry can take up time that leaders could otherwise devote to PC(USA) committee involvement, while another said s/he wants to see demographic representation on presbytery committees. One participant reported that Asian American ministry has a decidedly different focus and vision; participants talked about how Asian Americans feel that the issues the larger church deals with are not particularly relevant to them, and as a result they may not choose to engage with the larger church or may simply feel less connected to others within the presbytery. One participant expressed frustration that Anglos within the denomination can tend to focus on international issues, instead of caring about the issues facing Asians within the United States. One participant said that the presbytery can place “too many rules, regulations, and structures” on ministry.

Q2. What kind of presbytery would you need in order to grow the Presbyterian witness in your area among Asian Americans? What would you change? What would you keep the same?

One participant said that there are a few things s/he would change to make presbyteries more effective in ministry to Asian Americans: focus on supporting ministry and community, instead of power and politics; take the needs and opinions of Asian American ministry leaders seriously (instead of considering them “token” participants); increase ministry among Asian Americans, since the Asian American population will continue to grow; create an Asian American ministry council for support and visioning for Asian American ministry; and increase the number of Asian American leaders (create different ordination standards for first generation Asian Americans, and encourage later-generation, younger Asian Americans to pursue ministry careers).

This participant said that s/he would like to see presbyteries continue to draw people together as the larger church (through committees and councils, for example) and support ministry through the Committee on Ministry (COM) and the Committee on Preparation for Ministry (CPM).

Q3. Next, let’s talk about synods: In your experience, how has being part of a synod helped ministry among Asian Americans? And how has being part of a synod hindered ministry among Asian Americans?

Participants said that synods give loans and grants that support Asian American ministry and also that they help develop Asian American immigrant ministries. Other participants said that they are not too involved with the synod or don’t see the synod providing much support to Asian American ministry.

Some participants said that they find the structure of the synod to be more conducive to racial-ethnic ministry support (including Asian American ministry) than the presbytery, since it has a larger influence. However, with presbyteries seeking more control, and the synods receiving less funding, participants said that synods are less able to provide support. Participants also noted that strong support for Asian American ministry within one governing body can also strengthen support in other governing bodies (strong presbytery support can facilitate better relationships between Asian American ministries and synods; synod support can open doors for national ministry support). One participant said s/he would like to see more Asian Americans serving in synod leadership positions, as well as in other leadership positions within the various governing bodies.

Q4. Next, let’s talk about the General Assembly (GA): In your experience, how has being part of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) helped ministry among Asian Americans? And how has being part of the General Assembly hindered ministry among Asian Americans?

One participant mentioned receiving assistance from the office of immigration services (staffed by Julia Thorne). Another participant noted that the GA helps link Asian American ministries to the larger church; provides Asian American networking opportunities through the National Asian Presbyterian Council (NAPC); provides new church development grants for Asian American ministries; and supports efforts to recruit Asian American seminary students and ministry leaders. One of the participants recently served as a GA commissioner and was happy with the experience; however, this participant expressed regret that s/he hadn’t been more familiar with the presbytery goings-on at the time, as this hindered his/her participation on the commission. This participant also called for a deeper connection between Asian churches and other Presbyterian churches.

Some participants said they feel that the GA doesn’t show true concern for Asian American ministry—treating Asian Americans as a “token” presence in the GA, laying off many Asian American staff during the GA downsizing, providing insufficient funding for Asian American ministry, and assuming that all Asian Americans are immigrants (while some Asian American families have been in the United States for generations). Participants noted that the Asian presence in the PC(USA) is thriving in spite of overall declines in the PC(USA), and wondered why the church doesn’t invest more resources in these successful ministries. Also, one participant said that Asian American churches are forced to deal with some GA issues that are of no real concern to them and that the official PC(USA) positions on some issues have caused Asian American worshipers to leave the PC(USA) for non-denominational congregations. One participant had not communicated with the GA.
Q5. Where in the governing body structure would you say you receive the most support for your ministry among Asian Americans?

Participants often found the presbytery (including the staff, COM, and CPM) and/or the GA (including the Asian Congregational Support program and Angel Suarez-Valera, associate for Immigrant Group Ministries) to be the most supportive of Asian American ministry. One participant said that the local church is the most supportive, with little/no support received from the presbytery or synod. Also, this participant said that the NAPC does not receive adequate support from the denomination, even as Asian American ministry is more successful than other ministries within the PC(USA).

Q6. What opportunities are we missing among Asian Americans that governing bodies might help you address?

One participant said that the major powers within the denomination need to make sure that minority groups’ views are heard and respected within the denomination (including Asian Americans’ views), especially in light of current debates over a new Form of Government. Also, due to the ever-growing Asian immigrant population in the United States (including many non-Christian Asians), this participant argued that it’s key for the PC(USA) to reach out to Asian Americans at all levels (local congregations, presbytery, synod, and GA).

Additional Comments

Some participants talked about how helpful and important it was for the GA to fund the NAPC’s translation of the Book of Order into Mandarin. One participant also thought it would be helpful to provide mentors for new immigrant churches, as these churches learn how to be Presbyterian congregations.

Hispanic Leaders

Participants: Rev. César Carhuachin, the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic representative of the National Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian Caucus and a Presbytery of Charlotte staff person; Rev. Mauricio Chacon, moderator of the National Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian Caucus; Rev. Daniel Damiani, the Synod of the Northeast representative of the National Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian Caucus; Rev. José G. Gonzalez-Colon, pastor of First Spanish Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, NY; Rev. Amy Mendez, the Synod of the Rocky Mountains representative of the National Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian Caucus; Rev. Jonier Orozco, vice moderator of the National Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian Caucus and pastor of College Park Presbyterian Church in College Park, GA; Rev. José Luis Torres-Milan, pastor of Tercera Iglesia Presbiteriana in Aguadilla, PR

From the Commission: Rev. José Olagues, associate executive for congregational resourcing for Grand Canyon Presbytery

Q1. Let’s talk about the effect that being part of the governing body structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has on the ministry you do among Hispanics beginning with presbyteries: In your experience, how has being part of a presbytery helped ministry among Hispanics? And how has being part of a presbytery hindered ministry among Hispanics?

One participant said that presbyteries can assist with Hispanic ministry by fostering connectionalism among congregations, promoting the sharing of resources and ideas for ministry, providing opportunities to connect with other religious leaders and agencies beyond the presbytery, and offering benefits of association with the presbytery (for example, renting space, obtaining liability insurance). Also, one participant noted that being a Hispanic person in a presbytery leadership position gives voice to Hispanic interests, which in turn can create change.

However, participants said that Hispanics are under-represented in presbytery leadership positions and other leadership positions within the PC(USA). Related to this, participants also said that presbyteries do not minister to Hispanics nearly enough. For instance, there are 15 Hispanic PC(USA) congregations and 2.5 million Hispanic people in New York City.

Participants also expressed concern that the approach to Hispanic ministry should be multi-dimensional but that this hasn’t always been the reality. Participants noted that first- and second-generation Hispanic worshipers will respond best to ministries of presence; younger, English-dominant Latinos will respond better to a different form of ministry; and the interests of Hispanic worshipers who do not identify themselves as Hispanic, and instead worship at Anglo churches, need to be considered as well.

Participants talked about how they do not appreciate the condescension in PC(USA) ministry toward the Hispanic population. One participant noted that PC(USA) leaders have been known to direct Hispanic ministries without consulting the Hispanic worshipers themselves; instead of working with Hispanic communities, these leaders are working for Hispanic communities. Also, Hispanic worshipers aren’t consulted when Hispanic ministry leaders are being chosen. One participant reported that PC(USA) white and African American congregations are called “churches,” but PC(USA) Hispanic congregations are called “missions.” Hispanic ministry is not highly valued within presbyteries or the PC(USA), participants believed. One participant noted that some people within her/his presbytery are not particularly supportive of Latino ministry, which has limited this ministry (especially in terms of its budget). Another concern is that, when Hispanic ministry is funded entirely by a presbytery, the presbytery’s poor financial situation will negatively affect the Hispanic ministry. One participant would like to see a Latino hired by his/her presbytery, but notes that the presbytery’s financial situation makes it unable to do so.

Also, one participant noted that presbytery standards about hiring ordained ministers (for example, pastor salary minimums) can make it difficult for Hispanic ministries in their hiring procedures.

Q2. What kind of presbytery would you need in order to grow the Presbyterian witness among Hispanics in your area? What would you change? What would you keep the same?

One participant said that s/he would like to see presbyteries budget for a Latino ministries coordinator, Latino ministry programs, and pastors for new ministries, as well as amass more clergy and laity who advocate for Latino ministries.

Q3. Next, let’s talk about synods: In your experience, how has being part of a synod helped ministry among Hispanics? And how has being part of a synod hindered ministry among Hispanics?

Participants report that synods are not supportive of Hispanic ministry, or not functional at all (including in terms of Hispanic ministry), or that they used to be supportive of Hispanic ministry, but that downsizing and staffing changes have significantly decreased support for this ministry. One participant noted that the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii used to be very supportive of Hispanic ministry, but in that environment the Hispanic ministry didn’t learn how to drum up support for itself. A participant noted that the synod has the potential to be very supportive of Hispanic ministry (in terms of funding, events, the National Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian Caucus), while another said her/his synod already is supportive in these ways. One participant mentioned the way his/her synod facilitated the development of the National Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian Caucus, and developed and supports the Eastern Tri-Synod Latino Leadership Initiative.

One participant said that in Puerto Rico the transition from having only one presbytery to having three presbyteries within one synod has hindered the connection among the congregations there. This participant also stressed the importance of gathering together with other pastors/members of the Presbyterian Hispanic community within the presbytery or synod.

A couple of participants engaged in a conversation about the value of the support offered by synods. One synod provides money, but no hands-on support, to Hispanic ministry; yet the Hispanic ministry starts programs and trains leaders with these funds, as a way to multiply the funds’ effects. The participant from this synod expressed her/his gratefulness for the support the Hispanic ministry receives. However, another participant argued that the ministry receives a very small amount of money, much less than the level of actual support that the synod could be giving (in terms of both monetary and hands-on support).

Q4. Next, let’s talk about the General Assembly (GA): In your experience, how has being part of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) helped ministry among Hispanics? And how has being part of the General Assembly hindered ministry among Hispanics?

Participants said that GA has assisted Hispanic ministries by providing funding for new church developments; offering funding, resources, and/or support through Hector Rodriguez’s office (Hispanic Congregational Enhancement), Marissa Galvan’s office (Theology Worship and Education), and the work of Julia Thorne in the immigration office; respectfully interacting with Hispanics who are in contact with the GA; providing opportunities to network with other Hispanic pastors at an annual event; offering the chance to connect with various offices (like the Ecumenical, Immigrant, and Multicultural offices) to get ideas for Hispanic ministries; and providing information about the Board of Pensions in Spanish. One participant mentioned that his/her connection with the GA Committee on Representation has helped connect her/him to other levels of the PC(USA), and another mentioned involvement with consultation committees.

Participants talked a great deal about the need for GA to intentionally pursue ministry with the growing Hispanic population in the United States, as the Catholic Church is doing—especially as PC(USA) membership is declining. The denomination needs to train Hispanics as pastors and as seminary professors, keep Hispanics on GA staff instead of laying them off during staff cuts, and involve more Hispanics on committees. One participant also called GA to take a more public stand in its support of immigrants, instead of conducting a largely unpublicized effort to support immigrants. Another participant noted that some differences in theological beliefs between Hispanic and non-Hispanic members of the PC(USA) can hinder open dialogue between the groups.

One participant noted that s/he gets support from all three levels of the governing body structure, with the highest level of support coming from the presbytery (since it is a daily form of support).

Q6. What opportunities are we missing among Hispanics that governing bodies might help you address?

One participant would like to see the governing bodies provide training to regional Hispanic leaders; offer regional models for successful Latino ministries; employ Hispanic lay pastors and clergy in presbyteries and local congregations; and promote fellowship, networking, and partnership among presbyteries’ Hispanic ministries coordinators and/or associates.

Miscellaneous Comments

One participant noted that Hispanic pastors are invited to serve on many committees, but when these pastors can’t attend committee meetings because of other responsibilities (like their local ministries) others assume that the Hispanic pastors don’t want to be involved.

Middle Eastern American Leaders

Participants: Rev. Fahed Abu-Akel, moderator of the National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus; Wesley Lasu, lay leader of the Sudanese fellowship at Beechmont Presbyterian Church in Louisville, KY; Rev. Hisham Kamel, pastor of Arabic Evangelical Presbyterian Church in Arcadia, CA; Rev. Moufid Houry, pastor of First Presbyterian Church in Allentown, PA; Rev. Mouris Yousef, pastor of Arabic Christian Fellowship of Moorestown, hosted by First Presbyterian Church in Moorestown, NJ; Rev. Raafat Zaki, secretary of the National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus

From the Commission: Roger Lee, elder of Woodland Park Presbyterian Church in Seattle, WA, and immediate past moderator of the Synod of Alaska-Northwest; Jane Smith, elder of First Presbyterian Church in San Bernardino, CA, and moderator of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii

Q1. Let’s talk about the effect that being part of the governing body structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has on the ministry you do among Middle Eastern Americans, beginning with presbyteries: In your experience, how has being part of a presbytery helped ministry among Middle Eastern Americans? And how has being part of a presbytery hindered ministry among Middle Eastern Americans?

Participants indicated that their involvement with presbyteries often seemed to hinder their ministries, rather than helping them. One participant said that a small number of presbyteries have been supportive in establishing fellowships/congregations for Middle Eastern worshipers, but that most have not been supportive of this goal. Another explained that the presbytery was initially very supportive of the congregation’s ministry, but is less so now. This participant attributed the lower level of support to the fact that he himself has gotten busier and has devoted less time to the PC(USA); yet years ago the PC(USA) hadn’t reached out to involve him either (even though he had expressed interest in serving on presbytery committees). Another participant initially had trouble with a presbyter who was unsupportive of Middle Eastern ministry. Although the current presbyter isn’t antagonistic toward such ministry, the presbytery’s lack of funds hinders its support of Middle Eastern ministry.

Participants noted difficulties in partnering with presbyteries to create immigrant fellowships or new congregations. One participant reported that the Book of Order gives vague instructions about how to create PC(USA) immigrant fellowships. When a group of immigrant worshipers seeks to become an immigrant fellowship, the stated clerks are able to interpret the Book of Order in ways that hinder the formation of these immigrant fellowships. This participant called for the development of a clear policy to encourage the formation of Middle Eastern fellowships in the PC(USA). Also, participants noted that GA’s new church development rules do not transfer well to Middle Eastern culture. For instance, the denomination suggests that new church developments conduct a demographic analysis of the area. Participants thought this wasn’t an effective or natural way to start a Middle Eastern congregation and reported that these rules kept viable Middle Eastern ministries from developing.

A couple of the participants are involved in Middle Eastern ministries that have relatively weak connections with their presbyteries. For example, one participant is a member of a presbytery, but the fellowship he leads is linked with an already-existing Presbyterian congregation, instead of being a stand-alone Presbyterian fellowship. This participant found it difficult to become an official member of the presbytery himself, and sensed that it would be hard for the fellowship to become a chartered PC(USA) congregation, too. Another participant’s fellowship is only connected to the Presbyterian Church through the pastor at the PC(USA) congregation hosting this fellowship. When this fellowship has requested help from the presbytery (by way of the pastor), the presbytery has at times responded that, since the church is not part of the PC(USA), it can’t receive much assistance from the presbytery.

One participant reported that local congregations are the best champions of Middle Eastern ministry. There has to be a staff person in a presbytery who advocates for Middle Eastern ministry in order for the presbytery to engage in this ministry. Local congregations that are passionate about Middle Eastern people have stepped up to engage in and support Middle Eastern ministry, instead of presbyteries and synods.

Q2. What kind of presbytery would you need in order to grow the Presbyterian witness in your area among Middle Eastern Americans? What would you change? What would you keep the same? [Not asked during the focus group]

Q3. Next, let’s talk about synods: In your experience, how has being part of a synod helped ministry among Middle Eastern Americans? And how has being part of a synod hindered ministry among Middle Eastern Americans?

Overall, participants indicated that synods aren’t very helpful to Middle Eastern ministry. One participant found some synods to be supportive and others to be unsupportive of racial-ethnic and Middle Eastern ministry. Another participant said that one synod is swimming in money, but doesn’t know what to use it for. This synod is constantly changing its direction, management, etc., and is considered ineffective by churches and racial-ethnic ministries under its care. One participant felt that synods are more removed from Middle Eastern ministry than presbyteries are.

Q4. Next, let’s talk about the General Assembly: In your experience, how has being part of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) helped ministry among Middle Eastern Americans? And how has being part of the General Assembly hindered ministry among Middle Eastern Americans?

One participant mentioned how supportive Amgad Beblawi (formerly of the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries Middle Eastern office, now with World Mission) had been toward Middle Eastern fellowships. Another participant reported that the GA is more supportive of Middle Eastern ministry than presbyteries and synods. He traced this support back to the work of Victor Makari and missionaries in the Middle East who helped draw attention to populations of Middle Easterners in the United States. This support has culminated in the National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus (NMEPC). However, this participant also noted that—no matter how supportive the GA has been—local congregational support has enabled his Middle Eastern ministry to survive. Another participant also mentioned that GA’s creation of NMEPC and the Office of Middle Eastern Congregational Support has been very important for Middle Eastern ministry. This participant noted that these two entities have been forces in new church development and the mobilization of Middle Eastern Presbyterians. Although the PC(USA) organizes itself from the bottom-up (churches form, are chartered by presbyteries, and become associated with the PC(USA)), this participant said that there aren’t enough worshipers in most Middle Eastern congregations to begin this process of joining the denomination—which is why GA support and resources are essential for successful Middle Eastern ministries.

Participants said that, thanks to the 2010 GA in Minneapolis, Middle Eastern Presbyterians are gaining a larger voice within the denomination. One participant noted that, before this GA meeting, the PC(USA) defined Middle Eastern people as White (consistent with the U.S. Census). Thanks to the efforts of the NMEPC and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), and through the decision of the last GA, this participant reported that the PC(USA) is seeking to consciously incorporate Middle Eastern Presbyterians on committees, staff, etc.

[Added during focus group] What are ways in which working with an individual local congregation has helped or hindered you in your ministries?

Participants noted that they currently share positive and supportive relationships with their host Presbyterian churches. There are different levels of integration between the host church and the Middle Eastern ministry: sometimes the ministry acts quite independently of the host church, but is still supported and accepted by the host church; at other times, the host church and Middle Eastern ministry are more unified. For example, one participant is very integrated into the life of his Presbyterian church. He is a pastor at this church, with all the same benefits as the other pastors (secretary, office, etc.). He mainly focuses on Arab ministry, but also serves the larger church by preaching at English-speaking services, conducting hospital visits, etc. Participants noted that their relationships with their host churches have facilitated their ministries’ growth.

Although relationships with host churches can be beneficial, they can also bring problems or conflict. One Middle Eastern congregation has had to move locations several times (for instance, when a new pastor has been called by the hosting church); this Middle Eastern congregation has now bought land to build its own church. In another Middle Eastern fellowship, the hosting church wanted the fellowship to hold its services solely at the church—but the fellowship didn’t feel like this would be most conducive to its worshipers, who came from many different areas. This conflict was resolved, and the hosting church now gives the fellowship much more freedom.

Q5. Where in the governing body structure would you say you receive the most support for your ministry among Middle Eastern Americans?

Although this question was not formally asked during the focus group, participants’ responses indicate that they find local congregations and the GA to be most supportive of Middle Eastern ministry.

Q6. What opportunities are we missing among Middle Eastern Americans that governing bodies might help you address?

A couple of participants talked about ways that local congregations can support racial-ethnic ministry. Local congregations, presbyteries, and synods can choose to generously support racial-ethnic ministry through the creative use of their resources (even if they have few resources), and to resource and encourage racial-ethnic ministries to engage in evangelism and outreach. One participant considered it important for local congregations to have a mission focus, telling of times when local congregations (with synod and presbytery support) hosted a racial-ethnic ministry which then turned into a new church development. Another participant felt that presbyteries can be so focused on administration that they miss the opportunity to think missionally.

Closing comments

It was noted that PC(USA) governing bodies are resourced and capable enough to reach out and support racial-ethnic ministry (including Middle Eastern ministry), but that many presbyteries and synods do not take this initiative.
Appendix K: Focus Group Summary
Middle Governing Body Commission

Native American Leaders and Leaders in Native American Ministries

Participants: Rev. Phil Campbell, pastor of Northern Light United Church in Juneau, AK; Rev. John Chambers, supply pastor of Utkeagvik Presbyterian Church in Barrow, AK; Rev. Irvin Porter, moderator of the Native American Consulting Committee and pastor of Church of the Indian Fellowship in Puyallup, WA; Janis Quinn, elder and vice moderator of the Native American Consulting Committee; Myra Schouten, intern at Papago United Presbyterian Church in Sells, AZ; Corbett Wheeler, elder and member of the Native American Consulting Committee

From the Commission: Roger Lee, elder of Woodland Park Presbyterian Church in Seattle, WA, and immediate past moderator of the Synod of Alaska-Northwest; Rev. José Olagues, associate executive for congregational resourcing for Grand Canyon Presbytery

Q1. Let’s talk about the effect that being part of the governing body structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has on the ministry you do among Native Americans beginning with presbyteries: In your experience, how has being part of a presbytery helped ministry among Native Americans? And how has being part of a presbytery hindered ministry among Native Americans?

Participants said that presbyteries provide payroll assistance to congregations without staff, financially support Native American ministries (including through mission grants and endorsements), offer supplies and lay ministry training through the presbytery resource center, provide opportunities for Native Americans to become involved with the presbytery (through presbytery meetings, etc.), and provide continuing education and leadership development opportunities (sometimes with a Native American ministry component to this training).

A couple of participants noted that the PC(USA) pastoral search process does not fit well with Native American culture, especially the mission study component that can take years to complete.

Another participant noted Native Americans’ dual image of the presbytery in her/his area of the country, where the presbytery is well-regarded because of its history of ministry to Native Americans, yet also remembered for its disregard of native culture. This participant reported that it is a struggle to figure out how to mend the rocky parts of the relationship between the native culture and the presbytery.

A couple of participants noted the differences in leadership styles between white culture and native culture. In their experience, Native Americans do not want others to take control for them, but that no one within native culture is quick to take the leadership role either. Another participant noted that every native culture is different—one has to enter their culture and work with their ways of making decisions. This participant said that people may treat Native Americans paternalistically, but Native Americans are capable of doing things on their own.

Q2. What kind of presbytery would you need in order to grow the Presbyterian witness among Native Americans in your area? What would you change? What would you keep the same?

One participant said s/he wants to see the presbytery budget money specifically for Native American ministry and make sure Native American ministry has a place in a restructured presbytery system.
Q3. Next, let’s talk about synods: In your experience, how has being part of a synod helped ministry among Native Americans? And how has being part of a synod hindered ministry among Native Americans?

Participants said that synods provide funding for Native American ministries, but some participants don’t receive synod funding for their ministries or have contact with the synod. Another participant mentioned having a synod executive who is an advocate for Native American ministries. One participant noted that historically the synod used to provide more support for Native American ministry than the presbytery. A few participants mentioned that geographical separation from the synod office and/or meetings and transitions in synod staff are hindrances. Participants report that in various areas of the country people are wondering if (or thinking that) the synod will cease to exist.

One participant spoke positively of her/his work with the Native American Consulting Committee, a group that helps support Native American congregations. Another participant expressed the opinion that the synod and national structures guiding the Native American Consulting Committee are outdated, that some people on the committee are getting too old to participate, and that there are a few people involved in the committee who end up doing a lot of work. One participant said that it’s important to look at the past and present before plotting a future course for the Native American Consulting Committee’s national structure.

Q4. Next, let’s talk about the General Assembly (GA): In your experience, how has being part of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) helped ministry among Native Americans? And how has being part of the General Assembly hindered ministry among Native Americans?

Participants said that the GA provides pension funds, manages the mission funds (for example, One Great Hour of Sharing funds), and helps facilitate meetings among Presbyterians involved in Native American ministry by holding national gatherings (GA, Big Tent) where they can come together without added expenses.

One participant said that, overall, GA isn’t very connected to Native American ministry. This participant wanted to see the GA make the process of calling a new minister more flexible for ethnicities/cultures in which the current process doesn’t work well. This participant also wanted to see the GA work to recruit pastors through seminaries for remote congregations and ministries, and mentioned the possibility of having one person travel across the nation recruiting for Native American congregations.

Another participant mentioned the Comprehensive Strategy for Ministries with Native Americans, which was passed by GA in 2000. This participant wondered if this strategy is periodically reviewed by the church, since s/he thought it is important to allow policies like this to be shaped and adjusted throughout the years.

Participants mentioned what they see as a weakened relationship between GA and Native American ministry. The GA, they said, now considers Native American ministry to be a racial-ethnic caucus, instead of the consulting committee it once was. Participants noted that this shift in GA perception makes Native American ministry feel downgraded in importance, power, and influence within the GA. One participant wanted to see GA consult the Native American Consulting Committee when hiring GA staff who will work with Native American ministry (which didn’t happen when Sallie Cuaresma, former associate for Native American congregational support, retired and was recently replaced by Martha Sadongei, church specialist for Native American congregational support, the participant said). This participant also wanted to get more passionate people on the Native American Consulting Committee and have the GA realize that Native American ministry is different from other racial ethnic ministries.
Q5. Where in the governing body structure would you say you receive the most support for your ministry among Native Americans? [This question was not asked.]

Q6. What opportunities are we missing among Native Americans that governing bodies might help you address? [This question was not asked.]

Miscellaneous Comments

One participant said that people are dropping out of Native American congregations because they find these congregations to be outdated.

Transitional Synod Executive/Stated Clerk
Synod of South Atlantic
118 E. Monroe Street
Jacksonville, FL  32202-3214

February 29, 2012

Dear Rev. Rim;

At its stated meeting yesterday (February 28, 2012), Cherokee Presbytery approved the following actions with respect to Bethany Presbyterian Church and its pastors, Rev. Byeongho Choi and Rev. Peter Lim:

- That the request of the Session of Bethany Presbyterian Church to be dismissed to the Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery be approved, subject to the following:
  - That Bethany and the Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery continue to abide by the covenant between Bethany and Ray Thomas Memorial, including the following provision as outlined in the minutes of the Bethany-RTM Administrative Commission meeting of September 27, 2007:
    ... restrictions or encumbrances of the Bethany church to sell the property at some time in the future and that Cherokee Presbytery must approve such and so must RTM as long as the later exists and if not, that such approval of authority would revert to the (Cherokee) Presbytery.
  - That the Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery and Cherokee Presbytery be invited and encouraged to become partners in the covenant relationship between Ray Thomas Memorial and Bethany Presbyterian Churches.

- That pending approval of Cherokee presbytery, the Synod of South Atlantic and the General Assembly, that Revs. Choi and Lim be dismissed to a non-geographic Korean Language Presbytery with the Bethany congregation.

- Cherokee Presbytery commends the transfer of Bethany Presbyterian Church to the Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery and urges the Synod of the South Atlantic to add its support to this overture and recommend its approval by the 220th General Assembly.

A word of explanation so that you will understand the caveats embedded in this overture (related to Ray Thomas Memorial Presbyterian Church): In 2005, Bethany and Ray Thomas Memorial entered into a covenant whereby they both share one facility and are working together to develop a multi-cultural congregation for the future. With the transfer of one of the covenant partners (Bethany) to another...
Presbytery and Synod, Cherokee Presbytery wishes to ensure that any property or strategic decisions include Ray Thomas Memorial and/or Cherokee Presbytery.

Therefore, with this letter, I hereby request that the Synod of South Atlantic consider these matters and vote in the affirmative to send this request to the 220th meeting of the General Assembly. Please contact me if you need further information.

Yours in Christ,

Rev. Rebecca M. Blackwell
Mission Coordinator and Stated Clerk

Dear Flint River Presbytery COM,

The First Korean Presbyterian Church of Valdosta respectfully requests to transfer membership to the Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery.

After meeting with our congregation (12/25/11), we believe that a transfer is a good decision for our church.

We are not asking to leave the denomination, and we know and are grateful to the Flint River Presbytery because it has been helping and supporting Korean churches for a long time.

Our church wants to be involved in the future ministry of mission and have different outreach viewpoints, and while we believe that we can have a more active ministry with the Korean-American Presbytery, we will still help with other projects with the Flint River Presbytery.

We are sure our church and the Flint River Presbytery can maintain a good relationship and cooperate for our denomination.

We would like to formally request to transfer membership and make it an agenda at the next presbytery meeting on February 25th 2012.

We sincerely hope the presbytery will approve and permit us to transfer our membership to the Atlantic Korean-American presbytery.

God Bless you and your ministry.

Very respectfully yours,

Subject: another Korean Church request
To: Kerri Nichols <kerrinichols@synodofsouthatlantic.org>

Dear Kerri,

Please have the Synod act upon the request for the Jesus Hope church to be transferred to the Atlantic Korean Presbytery. Not such when GA deadline is for Synod overtures. It may be March 2 when all constitutional changes are needed...sorry to through this at you. Hopefully the last. the request didn't come to us until our Feb 11 meeting.

Re: Allow Savannah Korean PC to move to the Atlantic Korean American Non-geographic Presbytery

At its Winter Stated Meeting on February 17, 2012, Savannah Presbytery unanimously voted to dismiss Savannah Korean Presbyterian Church to the above mentioned non-geographic presbytery. This action of Savannah Presbytery is contingent upon affirmative vote of both the Synod of South Atlantic and the 220th General Assembly.

Please include this item on your docket at the upcoming Stated Meeting of the Synod.

On Amending F-1.01, God’s Mission—From the Presbytery of Utah.

The Presbytery of Utah overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall F-1.01 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strikethrough; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“F-1.01 GOD’S MISSION

“The good news of the Gospel is that the triune God—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—creates, redeems, sustains, rules, and transforms all things and all people. This one living God, the Scriptures say, liberated the people of Israel from oppression and covenanted to be their God. By the power of the Spirit, this one living God is incarnate in Jesus Christ, who came to live in the world, die for the world, and be raised again to new life. The Gospel of Jesus Christ announces the nearness of God’s kingdom, bringing good news to all who are impoverished, sight to all who are blind, freedom to all who are oppressed, and proclaiming the Lord’s favor upon all creation.

“The mission of the Church is given form by the activity of the triune God in the world as told in the Bible and understood by faith.

“a. God’s Activity

“God created the heavens and the earth and made human beings in God’s image, charging them to care for all that lives; God made men and women to live in community, responding to their Creator with grateful obedience. Even when the human race broke community with its Maker and with one another, God did not forsake it, but out of grace chose one family for the sake of all, to be pilgrims of promise, God’s own Israel.

“b. God’s Covenant

“God liberated the people of Israel from oppression; God covenanted with Israel to be their God and they to be God’s people, that they might do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with the Lord; God confronted Israel with the responsibilities of this covenant, judging the people for their unfaithfulness while sustaining them by divine grace.

“F-1.0102 God in Christ

“God was incarnate in Jesus Christ, who announced good news to the poor, proclaimed release for prisoners and recovery of sight for the blind, let the broken victims go free, and proclaimed the year of the Lord’s favor. Jesus came to seek and to save the lost; in his life and death for others God’s redeeming love for all people was made visible; and in the resurrection of Jesus Christ there is the assurance of God’s victory over sin and death and the promise of God’s continuing presence in the world.

“F-1.0103 The Holy Spirit

“God’s redeeming and reconciling activity in the world continues through the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, who confronts individuals and societies with Christ’s Lordship of life and calls them to repentance and to obedience to the will of God.

“F-1.0104 The Church

“The mission of God in Christ gives shape and substance to the life and work of the Church. In Christ, the Church participates in God’s mission for the transformation of creation and humanity by proclaiming to all people the good news of God’s love, offering to all people the grace of God at font and table, and calling all people to discipleship in Christ. Human beings have no higher goal in life than to glorify and enjoy God now and forever, living in covenant fellowship with God and participating in God’s mission.”
There are two main reasons to support this change to our Book of Order.

1. The “new” language of the amendment better captures and explains who the God we worship is, who we are and why the church does what it does.

The current language of F-1.01 does an adequate job of giving a brief overview of who the God we worship is. However, the language from the 2009–2011 Book of Order (G-3.0100–3.0103; The Church and Its Mission”) and used nearly verbatim here as the amended language, does a more thorough job explaining how God has interacted with humanity throughout history and up to the present. It walks through the description of God’s work in Scripture. The Church universal has an important part to play in the communication of God with creation. The amended language here better explains why the Church is called to love others wholeheartedly, show deep mercy, and strongly advocate for justice in our communities and throughout the world.

2. The “new” amended language brings this section of the Book of Order into better concordance with The Book of Confessions.

Our Book of Confessions exists to help us frame our reading and understanding of Scripture within the bounds of reformed theology. Likewise, this amendment helps us keep the foundational section of the Book of Order in connection with our unique and historical understanding of Scripture.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-01

Advice on Item 06-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 06-01.

Rationale

The overture proposes to edit the text of F-1.01 in the following ways:

1. Deleting the first paragraph of the section in toto;
2. Inserting a text substantially identical to that of G-3.0100 from the 2011 text of the Form of Government, now to be numbered F-1.0101a and b, F-1.0102, and F-1.0103; and
3. Renumbering the current second paragraph of F-1.01 as F-1.0104.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that provisions of the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity are concise statements derived from the church’s faithful scholarly work. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity lay the groundwork for the polity of the church and are not confessional documents. Even so, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that the Foundations should not be amended without broadly demonstrated need, and then only after provision for study and discourse within the church.

The advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is that the existing F-1.01 sufficiently and succinctly states the theological substance of the former G-3.0100. The current two paragraphs of F-1.01, which concern God’s mission, together reflect the Reformed understanding of the Trinity in The Book of Confessions and are foundational for the polity provided in the Form of Government.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 06-01 would provide unnecessary amendment of F-1.

Item 06-02

In response to Item 06-02, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See p. 26.

On Amending D-10.0101–.0102 to Clarify the Duties of an Investigating Committee—From the Presbytery of Detroit.

The Presbytery of Detroit overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

1. Shall D-10.0101 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through.]

   “Procedure preliminary to a disciplinary case is initiated by submitting to the clerk of session or the stated clerk of the presbytery having jurisdiction over the member (D-3.0101) a written statement of an alleged offense, together with any supporting information. The statement shall give a clear narrative and allege facts that, if proven true, would likely result in disciplinary action. Such allegations shall be referred to an investigating committee. (D-10.0201)

2. Shall the first paragraph of D-10.0202 be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The investigating committee shall review the statement alleging a violation to determine whether it alleges any facts that, if true, constitute an offense defined in D-2.0203b. If no violation is alleged, it shall end its inquiry and report that to the clerk of the body. If a violation of the Constitution is alleged, it shall proceed to the steps below.”

In response to Item 06-02, the 220th General Assembly (2012) approved the following recommendation:

The 220th General Assembly (2012) directs the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall D-10.0202 be amended by adding a new section “a.” and re-lettering current “a.”–“k.” as “b.”–“l.” The new section is to read as follows:

“[a. review the statement of alleged offense to determine whether it alleges any facts that, if true, constitute an offense as defined in D-2.0203b. If no offense as defined in D-2.0203b is alleged, the investigating committee shall end its inquiry and report that to the clerk of the body. If an offense as defined in D-2.0203 is alleged, it shall proceed to the steps below.]”

Rationale

The wording of D-10.0101 states that the clerk of the body receiving the statement of allegations shall make an initial inquiry: whether “if proven true, would likely result in disciplinary action.” The function of such a provision is to provide a way to screen out claims that may be true, but which are not violations of the Constitution. It is similar to a grand jury or preliminary hearing in criminal law, and is comparable to the initial consideration of remedial complaints found in D-6.0305.

When a statement is referred to the investigating committee, its first duty, after providing a copy to the accused, informing the accuser of the procedures, and determining whether the allegations have been made before (D-10.0202 a–c), is to “make a thorough inquiry into the facts and circumstances of the alleged offense” D-10.0202d. (“An offense is any act or omission by a member or officer of the church that is contrary to the Scriptures or the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).”) This means that the investigating committee must proceed to an investigation of the facts.

In 1991, the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission ruled in Hoy and McGlamery, Jr. v. Pby of Tropical Florida, Remedial Case 203-1, that “a stated clerk has no constitutional authority to refuse to transmit to a permanent judicial commission a filing which on its face purports to be a complaint” (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 173). This means that a clerk receiving a statement containing allegations must refer it to an investigating committee whether or not a violation of the Constitution is alleged. Section D-10.0202d requires that investigating committee to investigate the facts, even if there is nothing alleged that could go to trial.

The Office of Constitutional Services, of the Office of the General Assembly, has recognized the problem in its Constitutional Musing 3. In a footnote to this musing, it notes that paragraph g states the investigating shall “determine, in accordance with G-3.0102 and D-2.0203b, whether there are probable grounds or cause to believe that an offense was committed by the accused,” suggesting that this can be an initial step. The problem is that a Constitutional Musing has no authority behind it, and the notion of probable cause in this sequence of events is something that must be determined after thorough inquiry. Moreover, there may be some clerks of session of presbytery that have not read the Constitutional Musings of the Office of the General Assembly.

Because of the Hoy and McGlamery decision, the initial intent of the Rules of Discipline that allegations against members be screened by the clerk to ensure that the allegations against a member are in fact violations has been removed, and no other provision has been made for this initial step. The result is that a person can write allegations against another Presbyterian that cannot be tried even if true, but nonetheless an investigating committee must conduct a thorough inquiry into the facts. This amendment allows an investigating committee to review the allegations as a first item of business, and, if the allegations even if true do not constitute a violation, can close the investigation.

Advice on Item 06-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 06-02 raises issues the assembly should consider.

Rationale

1. Amendment of D-10.0101

The overture would amend D-10.0101 by striking the phrase, “that, if proven true, would likely result in disciplinary action.”
The rationale of this overture points out an apparent conflict between the language of D-10.0101 and the General Assembly PJC decision in Hoy and McGlamery v. Presbytery of Tropical Florida (Minutes, 1991, Part I, Case No 203-1). This assessment, however, appears to misunderstand the context of the case in question. Hoy and McGlamery addresses the procedure in a remedial case, while D-10.0101 concerns the preliminary procedure in a disciplinary case. If there is to be an analogy to disciplinary cases, Hoy and McGlamery would address the refusal of a clerk to transmit to a permanent judicial commission a filing by an investigating committee that on its face purports to be charges.

Section D-10.0101 is silent concerning the matter of who is empowered to make the assessment of whether the alleged offense rises to the level of likely disciplinary action. However, D-10.0103 would appear to resolve the question: “Upon receipt of a written statement of an alleged offense, the clerk of session or the stated clerk of presbytery, without undertaking further inquiry, shall then report to the council only that an offense has been alleged ….” The proposed amendment, while consistent with Constitution, is unnecessary.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that it should disapprove the section of the overture dealing with amending D-10.0101.

2. Amendment of D-10.0202

The overture would add a new section “a” to D-10.0202, Investigating Committee Responsibilities,” requiring that an investigating committee review a statement of allegation to determine whether the facts alleged, if proven true, constitute an offense as defined in D-2.0203b. This amendment has the effect of duplicating the similarly-worded requirement of D-10.0101, and clarifying that it is a responsibility of the investigating committee.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the insertion of this provision clarifies the responsibility for assessment of whether an offense is alleged by specifically assigning it to the investigating committee. Neither D-10.0101 nor D-10.0103 are clear about ownership of this responsibility; D-10.0101 simply provides information concerning the required threshold of the contents of a statement of alleged offense, and D-10.0103 is clear that making further inquiry beyond receipt of the statement lies outside the purview of the clerk of session or stated clerk.

The advisory committee notes, however, that the language proposed in the overture could be improved in at least two respects. First, the use of the term “violation” introduces into the Rules of Discipline a term not otherwise found, and for which the Rules of Discipline have other standard vocabulary. The Rules of Discipline employ the phrase “offense against the Constitution,” or simply “offense” to describe matters that may eventuate in disciplinary action.

Second, the committee notes that as the initial subparagraph in D-10.0202, there is no antecedent for the pronoun “it.” This antecedent serves not only the subsequent occurrence of the pronoun in the proposed addition, but also the occurrence of the pronoun in subsection i.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that, if it agrees with the intent of the overture, the language of the section proposing amendment of D-10.0202 could be made clearer and more consistent with the Constitution by inserting a new section “a.” to read as follows:

“a. review the statement of alleged offense to determine whether it alleges any facts that, if true, constitute an offense as defined in D-2.0203b. If no offense as defined in D-2.0203b is alleged, the investigating committee shall end its inquiry and report that to the clerk of the body. If an offense as defined in D-2.0203 is alleged, it shall proceed to the steps below.”

[The assembly answered Item 06-03 by the action taken on Item 06-09. See p. 26.]

On Amending D-10.0106 and G-2.0904 Regarding Administrative Leave—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

1. Shall D-10.0106, regarding administrative leave, be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through.]

2. Shall G-2.0904 be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]
“The presbytery may inquire into reported difficulties in a congregation and may dissolve the pastoral relationship if, after consultation with the minister, the session, and the congregation, it finds the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it. The presbytery may amend the pastoral relationship if, after consultation with the minister and the session, it finds the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it.”

Rationale

Sexual abuse is devastating to a congregation. Past PC(USA) conversations in this regard have demonstrated the tension between the protections afforded the accused, that they are innocent until proven guilty, and the protection of a congregation, the putative victims, and potential victims from additional abuse.

Presently the Rules of Discipline provides three ways the teaching elder may be placed on administrative leave:

- the accused teaching elder may volunteer for a leave of absence;
- one of the victim/survivors of the alleged sexual abuse is under the age of eighteen;
- or it is alleged that the victim lacked the mental capacity to consent.

The conditions currently found in D-10.0401c.(1) are included in D-10.0106. The conditions sited in D-10.0401c.(2) are not included in D-10.0106. This amendment proposes to include those conditions as well. Essentially mandatory administrative leave would be able to be imposed upon any teaching elder if sufficient evidence of sexual abuse as defined in D-10.0401c exists as judged by the two persons appointed by the permanent judicial commission (PJC) chair.

Another change in the Book of Order is also necessary to provide the possibility to impose mandatory administrative leave in the presence of sufficient evidence. The proposed amendment to G-2.0904 makes this possible. A pastoral call is a contract between pastor, presbytery, and a congregation. Attempts to place a teaching elder accused of sexual abuse on administrative leave have been complicated in the past due to the fact that the congregation has not voted upon the leave of absence being imposed by the presbytery. The proposed amendment to G-2.0904 would provide for a course of action that could be imposed upon a teaching elder if evidence is sufficient to merit such. The presbytery could amend the terms of call to require teaching elders to abide by a presbytery’s administrative leave policies without the approval of the congregation itself. Due process as described in D-10.0106 related to administrative leave would remain the same. While the session and the teaching elder would be consulted, the lack of congregational action in this regard would no longer be an impediment to placing a teaching elder on administrative leave by a presbytery.

If this change is not made, even with evidence of sexual abuse by a teaching elder of someone with the alleged mental capacity to consent and who is over eighteen, the presbytery has little recourse other than to threaten removal from office based upon the judgment that “the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it” (G-2.0904). This threat is sometimes employed to persuade an accused teaching elder to voluntarily accept administrative leave. This is often a lengthy process following some weeks of negotiation with a presbytery ministry committee. This negotiation and delay is at the additional emotional, spiritual, and psychological expense of the putative victim(s) and trauma to the congregation. The proposed changes provide a means by which this administrative leave can be appropriately and expeditiously imposed in the context of existing due process. The proposed changes also provide for a course of action available to a presbytery that is short of removal from office when a teaching elder will not voluntarily agree to administrative leave.

Summary

The proposed changes preserve the existing rights of the accused and extend protection to the congregation, the putative victim(s), and potential victims by expanding the range of consideration to all persons, not just those who are under eighteen or who, it is alleged, lacked the mental capacity to consent. These changes make it possible to impose a leave of absence on any teaching elder accused of sexual abuse with any other person based upon the evidence available at that time. These changes leave intact the current process of consideration as defined in D-10.0106. It does not automatically impose the administrative leave but continues to leave it to the judgment of the two persons appointed by the chair of the permanent judicial commission to consider the evidence of sexual abuse.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-03

Advice on Item 06-03—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 06-03.

Rationale

This item and Item 06-09 (from Baltimore) propose similar amendments to two sections of the Book of Order aimed at expanding and facilitating the use of administrative leave when allegations of sexual abuse have been filed against a teaching elder.
Both items have provisions that would permit the presbytery to amend the terms of call of a teaching elder without consultation with the congregation when the church’s ministry under the Word imperatively demands it. Dissolution of a call after finding that the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it is an extraordinary step that does not require the congregation’s agreement to the dissolution, but it does require, at the very least, a consultation with the congregation. Amending a call without the congregation’s agreement would similarly be an extraordinary step, and at the very least the congregation should have the right to be consulted even if its expressed wishes are not followed.

The right of the congregation to be consulted prior to dissolution of a pastoral relationship was explicitly added to the Form of Government in 2007. Prior to that amendment, the 1990 decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Baumann and Griffiths v. Session of Bellefield Presbyterian Church (Remedial Case 202-1) affirmed the rights of the congregation. Part of that case involved a “Confidential Statement on Reconciliation of the Relationship Between the Session, on Behalf of the Congregation, and the Senior Pastor.” Relevant statements in that decision include:

The “Confidential Statement” made by the session was admittedly in the name of and for the congregation, and it was not appropriate to withhold this statement from the congregation. In addition, since the statement could be interpreted as changing the terms of call for the pastor, it would be a matter requiring approval by the congregation.

The major problem identified by the complainants in this case was a failure to inform the congregation in an adequate manner of matters affecting the life of the congregation. The recommendation a presbytery commission to the presbytery to sever a pastoral relationship is a matter seriously affecting the spiritual life of the congregation, and it is irregular to withhold this information from them. The government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is representative (Book of Order, G-6.0107). A session should keep the congregation advised of its actions insofar as reasonably possible.

The congregation is a necessary party to the call of a teaching elder to a pastoral position. Terms of call are not determined by sessions, but by congregations (see Book of Order, G-1.0503c and G-2.0804.) The terms of call for an existing pastoral relationship are first approved by the congregation before being sent to the presbytery for approval; if those terms are to be changed by the presbytery, the congregation is entitled to being consulted. When a congregation originally had agreed to pay a stated monthly sum to a teaching elder so that the teaching elder would provide pastoral services, it would be unfair for the presbytery, without even consulting with the congregation, to amend the terms of call so that the congregation would be obligated to continue paying the same when the elected teaching elder is not providing those same pastoral services.

Item 06-09 is almost identical to this item. The significant difference is its amendment to G-2.0904 would limit the presbytery’s authority further with the phrase “In the case of alleged sexual abuse having been received by the stated clerk against any teaching elder.” The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that even with this limitation the same concerns for consultation with the congregation remain.

Amending the constitution to take away the requirement of consultation with the congregation would represent a significant departure from our understanding of the pastoral call.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that presbyteries that have adopted an adequate administrative leave policy and that have required an explicit agreement of compliance with that policy as part of the minimum terms of call to be agreed upon by the teaching elder and the congregation do have the authority to institute administrative leave in the situations envisioned in these items. An adequate administrative leave policy would address the following six issues (identified by the ACC in 2004) in the face of alleged misconduct:

1. What process is due the accused before a leave of absence is imposed?
2. Who should implement the process?
3. What other parties, if any, should be involved in the process?
4. What types of allegations should trigger the process of determining whether to place a pastor on a leave of absence?
5. What timeline should apply to determining whether to place the pastor on a leave of absence?
6. Whether a pastor placed on leave should be compensated, and if so, by whom?

The administrative leave provisions in D-10.0106 were added to the Rules of Discipline as part of a response to the work of the Independent Committee of Inquiry, which was raising particular concerns about the protection of children in mission settings. The adopted language protects both persons under the age of 18 and those over the age of 18 who lack the mental capacity to consent.

In answer to question 4, D-10.0106 is currently limited to allegations of sexual abuse toward any person under the age of 18, or who it is alleged lacked the mental capacity to consent. A presbytery could identify in its administrative leave policy other alleged offenses that would expose a teaching elder to the possibility of administrative leave, but the presbytery would also need to provide answers to questions 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6 for those additional offenses because of the limitation in D-10.0106.

This proposed amendment to D-10.0106 would give a new answer to question 4. It would enlarge the scope of those alleged offenses that would mandate a judicial procedure that could lead to administrative leave pending the final outcome of the investigation or trial. The larger set of alleged offenses would encompass allegations of any form of sexual abuse as defined in D-10.0401c.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that the clear identification of alleged offenses that could mandate the D-10.0106 procedure is important. The current language is appropriately clear and specific, and the proposed amendment to D-10.0106 is also appropriately clear and specific.

One problem that this item and Item 06-09 point out is that D-10.0106 does not fully describe the process to be followed, who negotiates with whom about any payment for the costs of administrative leave, or how the administrative leave is to be imposed. These questions are left to presbyteries to answer in a way that is appropriate to their individual contexts. Section D-10.0106 merely identifies the process by which a decision is to be made that there should be administrative leave or restrictions on ministry. A presbytery administrative leave policy is needed in order to explain in advance the procedures the presbytery will follow to implement any administrative leave or restrictions.

The existence of a presbytery administrative leave policy and the inclusion in advance within the terms of call of an agreement by the congregation and the teaching elder to follow the administrative leave policy of the presbytery would mean that imposing administrative leave under that policy would involve merely doing what was already agreed, not amending the call. This procedure would eliminate the problem of needing to consult with the congregation to impose administrative leave in the initial stages of dealing with dire but unproven allegations. In the absence of such a provision within the call, both the session and the congregation should be consulted.

If the General Assembly believes that there should be a constitutional provision for amending terms of a pastoral call in the middle of a crisis, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 06-03 could be made consistent with other constitutional provisions with the following modification: The sentence this Item proposes to add to G-2.0904 should be amended by striking the words “minister and the session” and inserting in their place “teaching elder, the session, and the congregation” so that the proposed new sentence would read:

“The presbytery may amend the pastoral relationship if, after consultation with the teaching elder, the session, and the congregation, it finds the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it.”

If the General Assembly believes that D-10.0106 should be amended to address all situations of sexual abuse by a teaching elder, the ACC advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that this item’s proposed amendment to D-10.0106 is clear and consistent with the Constitution, but that D-10.0106 still requires presbyteries to determine many details in how they will implement administrative leave.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concern advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 06-03.

Rationale

This item and Item 06-09 propose similar amendments to two sections of the Book of Order aimed at expanding and facilitating the use of administrative leave when allegations of sexual abuse have been filed against a teaching elder.

Although we disapprove the G-2.0904 section of this item, ACWC urges the General Assembly to change D-10.0106 as requested by this overture to address all situations of sexual abuse by a teaching elder. Sexual abuse, no matter what age or “mental capacity,” has extreme detrimental effects not only for the victims, but also for the victims’ families and the congregation of which they are a part. By limiting D-10.0106 to include only situations that pertain to victims who are under eighteen-years-old or who allegedly lack the mental capacity to consent, we also minimize the horrors of sexual abuse of persons who are older than eighteen. Although we understand the current wording and procedure to specifically address and protect minors and persons who cannot consent, we strongly believe that the PC(USA) must voice that sexual abuse is an atrocity despite a person’s age or mental capacity to consent.
The ACWC advises against amending G-2.0904 as requested. Item 06-03 presents a situation in which presbytery may dissolve a pastoral relationship in a congregation after consultation with the teaching elder, session, and congregation. This relationship may then be amended after presbytery only consults with the teaching elder and session. While the session and the teaching elder would be consulted, the lack of congregational action in this regard would no longer be an impediment to placing a teaching elder on administrative leave by a presbytery. Part of the teaching elder’s call is in connection with the congregation, as well as the terms of call are not determined by session but by congregations (G-1.0503c and G-2.0804). If any aspect of the teaching elder’s call is changed, the congregation is entitled to be consulted.

On Amending G-3.0301 Regarding Commissioned Ruling Elders—From the Presbytery of Saint Andrew.

The Presbytery of Saint Andrew overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall the first paragraph of G-3.0301 of the Book of Order be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

G-3.0301 Composition and Responsibilities

“The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district. The presbytery shall adopt and communicate to the sessions a plan for determining how many ruling elders each session should elect as commissioners to presbytery, with a goal of numerical parity of teaching elders and ruling elders. This plan shall require each session to elect at least one commissioner and shall take into consideration the size of congregations as well as a method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. Ruling elders elected as officers of the presbytery shall be enrolled as members during the period of their service. A presbytery may enroll, or may provide by its own rule for the enrollment of, ruling elders serving as moderators of committees or commissions during terms of elected service to the presbytery or its congregations.”

Rationale

The 2009–2011 Book of Order contained an explicit provision that commissioned lay pastors (now commissioned ruling elders) could be granted voice and vote at meetings of the presbytery (former G-14.0562e). The current Book of Order omits that explicit provision, while continuing to include it for both certified Christian educators who are ordained ruling elders under certain circumstances (G-2.1103b) and for the presbytery’s officers and moderators of its committees or commissions (G-3.0301).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s parliamentary authority, Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised, 11th Edition (RONR), states as one of the general rules for the interpretation of bylaws (or constitutions) that “if the bylaws authorize certain things specifically, other things of the same class are thereby prohibited” (RONR pg. 589, ll. 33–34). At the very least, this principle draws into question whether or not presbyteries may continue to grant voice and vote to commissioned ruling elders.

While one solution would be to simply add commissioned ruling elders to the list of those who may, by rule, be enrolled as members of a presbytery, it seems more in keeping with the spirit of the new Form of Government to remove the specific permission to enroll moderators of committees or commissions, and replace that permission with a more general statement that any ruling elders elected by the presbytery to positions of leadership may be enrolled as members. This approach would seem to give presbyteries the most flexibility in determining their membership (a particular goal of the new Form of Government), within the constraints of our historic principle that “the election of the persons to the exercise of … authority, in any particular society, is in that society” (F-3.0106).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-04

Advice on Item 06-04—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 06-04.

Rationale

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 06-04 identifies a helpful improvement in the language of the first paragraph of G-3.0301.

On Adding New Section G-4.0203b Regarding Ownership of Property—From the Presbytery of Stockton.

The Presbytery of Stockton overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-4.0203 be amended by inserting an “a.” in front of the current text and inserting a new section “b.” as follows:

[Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

"G-4.0203 Church Property Held in Trust/Freedom of Conscience for Individual Congregations

"a. Church Property Held in Trust

"All property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), whether legal title is lodged in a corporation, a trustee or trustees, or an unincorporated association, and whether the property is used in programs of a congregation or of a higher council or retained for the production of income, is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)."

"b. Freedom of Conscience for Individual Congregations

"All property controlled by a local session and being used by an individual congregation shall be deemed to be the property of that individual congregation. It shall be considered as held in trust for that local congregation, not for another body. The individual congregation shall be the sole owner of such property and shall hold title to such property, even if the congregation votes by a two-thirds (2/3) majority to withdraw from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) due to theological disagreement with any action taken by a governing body or permanent judicial council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). No disciplinary action shall be brought against any individual congregation that takes action to withdraw from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In addition, no disciplinary action shall be brought against any presbytery that dismisses an individual congregation and also permits that congregation to hold sole title to property, under the control of its session, that is used by that congregation for its ministries."

Rationale

The Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) currently states “All property held by or for a particular church, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), whether legal title is lodged in a corporation, a trustee or trustees, or an unincorporated association, and whether the property is used in programs of a particular church or of a more inclusive governing body or retained for the production of income, is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” Many individual congregations raise extensive funds for their own buildings to further their local ministries. In keeping with the new missional emphasis of the PC(USA), permitting an individual congregation to retain its property furthers the work of the Church universal without penalizing that congregation in the event of a theological disagreement with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). A fundamental concern of individual congregations is that their theological beliefs will continue to be respected even if they vote by a two-thirds (2/3) majority to withdraw from and sever all ties to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

This amendment grants individual congregations the right to exercise their freedom of conscience in considering their continuing relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) without coercion.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-06

Advice on Item 06-06—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 06-06.

Rationale

Item 06-06 would amend G-4.0203, which provides that all church property is held in trust for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), lettering the current G-4.0203 as G-4.0203a and adding a new section G-4.0203b.
The proposed G-4.0203b would remove and shelter the individual congregation from what is commonly referred to as “the trust clause,” which states that without exception all property held by or for a congregation, presbytery, synod, the General Assembly or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is held in trust for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the proposed G-4.0203b would be inconsistent with the newly lettered but otherwise unchanged G-4.0203a, in that the proposed G-4.0203a would still read:

All property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), whether legal title is lodged in a corporation, a trustee or trustees, or an unincorporated association, and whether the property is used in programs of a congregation or of a higher council or retained for the production of income, is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). [current G-4.0203]

Item 06-06 fails to address other, more specific, provisions of G-4.02 on church property and specifying their applications to congregations and the property held by congregations. It is broadly inconsistent with the language and intent of G-4.0204 (on property used contrary to the Constitution), G-4.0205 (on property of a dissolved or extinct congregation), G-4.0206a (on selling or encumbering congregational property, along with G-3.0303f on presbytery responsibility to consider and act on congregation’s request for permission to sell or encumber church property), G-4.0206b (on leasing congregational property), G-4.0207 (on property of congregations in schism), and G-4.0208 (covering the time-limited exceptions to these Form of Government provisions on property). If approved, under F-3.03 (“No provision of the Book of Order can of itself invalidate any other”) Item 06-06 would not delete, dilute, or make inapplicable these interrelated provisions for ensuring that church property held by or for a congregation continues to be held in trust for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Another significant area of incompatibility of Item 06-06 with G-4.0208 lies in its intent to keep the church from adhering to its own constitutional standards and procedures by including language prohibiting exercise of judicial process involving an individual congregation “that takes action to withdraw from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” or “any presbytery that dismisses an individual congregation and also permits that congregation to hold sole title to property, under the control of its session, that is used by that congregation for its ministries.” It is contrary to the historic principles of our polity (F-3.0203, F-3.0206; cf. G-3.0101, D-1.0000) to exempt any action from accountability, review, and, if found contrary to the Constitution, remediation.

These deficiencies lead the Advisory Committee on the Constitution to advise the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 06-06 does not present the minimal compatibility with existing constitutional provisions reasonably to be expected in amending the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the proposed changes have the potential to generate significant issues in matters of civil law, both in the amendment itself and in its effects on the nature of our polity. The committee refers the 220th General Assembly (2012) to this committee’s advice to the 217th General Assembly (2006) in which it reviewed the church’s principle that all church property is held in trust for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The current provision [in the Form of Government] codifies a Presbyterian understanding of property ownership that prior to its adoption was settled in Presbyterian polity. Section G-8.0201 [now G-4.0203] was only added as a constitutional provision to avoid confusion in the civil courts as to the status of church property.

The origins of Chapter VIII of the Form of Government are found in both the Presbyterian Church in the United States (1981, pp. 224-25, 229–43) and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (1980, pp. 99–105). Both denominations shared a long and common history of understanding a congregation’s property to be held in trust for the whole church. This history is reflected in a number of judicial decisions, all the way to the United States Supreme Court, most notable in an 1872 case, Watson v. Jones, 80 U.S. (13 Wall) 679 (1872). However, for the protection of Presbyterian principles it became clear that it was necessary for the denominations to put in place a provision in its constitutional documents that which was implied in the earlier precedents, that is, that property is indeed held in trust for the benefit of the whole church. Both predecessor denominations engaged in long and careful studies of the history of these judicial decisions in the context of historic Presbyterian principles in adopting the antecedents to G-8.0201 [now G-4.0203].

This necessity for adoption of G-8.0201 [now G-4.0203] arose from court decisions that changed the permissible role of courts in determining disputes as to church property. Until a few years before the adoption of G-8.0201 [now G-4.0203], courts determining property disputes sought to determine from the doctrinal documents of a denomination whether the property of local congregations was held in trust for the larger church (this was referred to as the “implied trust” analysis). However, in 1979, the United States Supreme Court found that this type of inquiry into the doctrine of a denomination was an improper intrusion into the First Amendment right to freedom of religion. Accordingly, the courts were required to determine property disputes without seeking to interpret a denomination’s doctrine (the so-called neutral principles of law analysis). For Presbyterians, this change in the legal framework the civil courts applied suggested specific reference in property matters in a denomination’s constitutional documents was prudent. Section G-8.0201 [now G-4.0203] provides that explicit understanding of the long held Presbyterian understanding. As such, it was not a change in our Presbyterian polity, but rather an attempt to protect the denomination’s polity against changes in the permissible framework of legal analysis applied by the civil courts.

Chapter VIII [now Chapter IV] gives broad discretion to the presbytery in the resolution of property disputes. These provisions, which allow the presbytery to exercise its discretion in a property dispute in light of the mission of the Gospel within its bounds, provide a sound foundation for resolution of property disputes and should not be abandoned. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p.359–60).
Furthermore, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that Item 06-06 presents itself as providing for freedom of conscience, in that it would have its proposed G-4.0203b titled “Freedom of Conscience for Individual Congregations.” Paragraph titles in the Book of Order are not part of the Constitution and in themselves carry no constitutional weight for interpreting provisions.

Finally, in the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) there is no provision for a congregation, a council, or other entity to have or exercise a “freedom of conscience” more or less analogous to the conscience provisions afforded individuals in the church. “Each congregation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall be governed by this Constitution” (Book of Order, G-1.0103) means that actions of congregations must be in accord with the Constitution; constitutional remedies are available to the church when there is reasonable evidence that a congregation has acted outside what is constitutionally permitted (special administrative review by a higher level of the church, and remedial judicial process under the Rules of Discipline). It is the conscience of the individual which is constitutionally acknowledged and is both defended and limited for so long as the person remains a member in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (F-3.0101; F-3.0105; G-2.0105).

GAMC, PILP COMMENT ON ITEMS 06-06 and 06-07

Comment on Items 06-06 and 06-07—From the General Assembly Mission Council and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

Items 06-06 and Item 06-07 seek to amend the “trust clause” of the Book of Order by adding conflicting language to provide that property being held in trust for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is also owned by the individual congregation and held in trust for the local congregation, and not for any other body. The Book of Order at G-4.0203 currently provides important support and safeguards for the low-cost loan programs for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations provided by the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). Therefore, PILP believes the amendments proposed by Items 06-06 and 06-07 will cause unnecessary confusion due to the conflicting language in the proposed amendments, and will jeopardize fundamental and essential aspects of the loan programs of PILP and the GAMC, administered by PILP.

Without the current trust clause of the Book of Order, presbyteries would be unlikely to guarantee loans and without guarantees PILP’s ability to assist congregations would be significantly impaired. This change would be particularly difficult for small, mid-sized, and new congregations that may not be able to obtain bank financing.

The PILP makes low-cost loans to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [PC(USA)] congregations for new buildings and renovations. The funds for PILP loans are generated through the sale of Term Notes, which are debt securities to PC(USA) members and congregations and the sale of Denominational Account receipts (DARs) accounts to mid councils and PC(USA) agencies. The interest paid on these Term Notes and DARs and any redemptions are funded by the interest and principal repayment of the loans to congregations. The PILP relies on the congregation’s repayment of principal and interest to be able to pay interest to investors and to repay principal to investors at maturity.

The PILP administers the Church Loan Program for the GAMC. The Church Loan Program is a mission program under the responsibility of the GAMC and the principal corporation of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, where endowment funds are also used to make low-cost loans to congregations.

Most church building projects cannot be financed by congregations from their current receipts. Congregations depend on loans from PILP, the GAMC’s Church Loan Program, or commercial lenders to complete these projects. Generally, these loans are secured by first lien mortgages on the property of the borrowing congregation. The property of the congregation provides the collateral for these loans and is a potential source of repayment should the borrowing congregation not be able to repay the loan.

In addition to being secured, these loans are guaranteed by the presbytery of jurisdiction of the borrowing congregation. This means the presbytery is responsible to pay back the loan should the borrowing congregation fail to pay. The presbyteries have confidence in guaranteeing these secured loans due in part to G-4.0203 and G-4.0204, which state:

\[ G-4.0203 \text{ Church Property Held in Trust} \]

All property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), whether legal title is lodged in a corporation, a trustee or trustees, or an unincorporated association, and whether the property is used in programs of a congregation or of a higher council or retained for the production of income, is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

\[ G-4.0204 \text{ Property Used Contrary to the Constitution} \]

Whenever property of, or held for, a congregation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) ceases to be used by that congregation as a congregation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in accordance with this Constitution, such property shall be held, used, applied, transferred, or sold as provided by the presbytery. [Emphasis added.]

Under G-4.0204, when a congregation ceases to exist or leaves the denomination, the congregation’s property (which includes, but is not limited to, its real property, building, and other assets such as investments) is subject to the control of the
The presbytery continues to be responsible for mission of the PC(USA) in the area of the departing congregation, and the presbytery can use the property to implement that mission. If the departing congregation has a secured loan with PILP, guaranteed by the presbytery, the presbytery would have the ability to retain the property or the presbytery could use the property to raise funds to satisfy the presbytery’s responsibility under the guaranty. A presbytery may choose to give some or all of this property to a departing congregation, if the presbytery believes that this is the best use of the property in furthering the mission of the Church of Jesus Christ, but this choice will not result in a release of the obligation to repay the secured loan and/or in the release of the guaranty.

If a congregation has a secured loan with PILP and/or the GAMC and chooses to leave the denomination or is dissolved by a presbytery, the terms of the loan provide that the loan is accelerated and becomes immediately due and payable. The guarantee of the presbytery is not satisfied until the loan is paid in full. If the property is no longer held in trust for the PC(USA), there is no constitutional assurance the property would be controlled by the presbytery, and presbyteries would then be reluctant to sign guarantees. The PILP and the Church Loan Program would be more hesitant to make loans secured by mortgages if the underlying property could so easily be transferred and shifted outside the denomination to what would then be a non-PC(USA) congregation. It seems clear this proposed amendment would adversely impact congregations and the loan programs.

In the current economy and in the aftermath of the banking crisis, it has become increasingly difficult for small and mid-size congregations to obtain financing for capital projects from banks. These are often the new, young, or struggling congregations that need the resources of the denomination the most. The PILP is able to meet these needs of PC(USA) congregations. Without the current trust clause of the Book of Order, presbyteries would be unlikely to guarantee loans and without guarantees, PILP’s ability to assist congregations would be significantly impaired.

To the extent the proposed revision is related to denominational disagreements, it is crucial that current denominational disagreements not be allowed to overshadow the primary mission of the presbytery and congregation to carry out “The Great Ends of the Church.” Although the property trust clause gives ultimate control to the presbytery, it also gives the presbytery responsibility to assist the congregation in obtaining and properly sustaining the church buildings as homes for congregations. As a denomination we continue to spread the gospel of Jesus Christ. For centuries presbyteries have assisted congregations in finding church homes from which to carry out this mission. People in a congregation as a part of the PC(USA) have given the resources to build church buildings over generations. The current congregation should not be given the prerogative to take these resources out of the denomination because of a disagreement with current denominational positions.

For all the reasons stated above, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., with the concurrence of the GAMC, believes the amendments proposed by Items 06-06 and 06-07 will cause unnecessary confusion due to the conflicting language in proposed amendments, and will jeopardize fundamental and essential aspects of the church loan programs of PILP and the General Assembly Mission Council, administered by PILP.

On Adding New Section G-4.0203b Regarding Ownership of Property—From the Presbytery of Santa Barbara.

The Presbytery of Santa Barbara overtures the 220th General Assembly to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-4.0203 be amended by inserting an “a.” at the beginning of the current text and inserting a new section “b.” to read as follows:

“G-4.0203b Freedom of Conscience for Individual Congregations

“b. All property that is under the control of a local session and is being used by an individual congregation shall be deemed to be that individual congregation’s property and not be considered as held in trust for any body other than the local congregation. The individual congregation shall be the sole owner of such property, and shall hold title to such property, should the congregation vote by a two-thirds (2/3) majority to withdraw from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) due to theological disagreement with any action taken by a higher council or permanent judicial commission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), provided all financial obligations dealing with real property for which a council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a guarantor are removed. No action shall be brought against any individual congregation that takes action to withdraw from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). No action shall be brought against any presbytery that dismisses an individual congregation together with permitting the individual congregation to hold sole title to property under the control of the session and which is being used by the individual congregation for its ministries.”
The Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) currently states “All property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), whether legal title is lodged in a corporation, a trustee or trustees, or an unincorporated association, and whether the property is used in programs of a congregation or of a higher council or retained for the production of income, is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.”) (Book of Order, G-4.0203). Many individual congregations raise extensive funds for their own building to further the ministry of the local congregation. In keeping with the new missional emphasis, permitting an individual congregation to retain the property furthers the work of the Church universal without penalizing that congregation when there is a theological disagreement with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) It is vital to clarify for individual congregations that their theological beliefs will continue to be respected should they vote by a two-thirds (2/3) majority to withdraw from and sever all ties to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

This amendment gives the necessary affirmation that individual congregations will be permitted to exercise their freedom of conscience in considering their continuing relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The amendment also has narrow grounds on which a congregation may exercise their freedom of conscience. For example, a congregation that simply wants to withdraw because of a dispute with the presbytery over an administrative commission or disciplinary action against their pastor (teaching elder) may not do so under this provision.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-07

Advice on Item 06-07—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 06-07. The committee refers the General Assembly to its advice in response to Item 06-06.

Rationale

Item 06-07 to amend G-4.0203 as written is nearly identical to Item 06-06.

Such variation as exists is minor and does not alter their common intent as demonstrated in their proposed amending language and in their rationales. It is the determination of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution that the constitutional issues presented are the same.

GAMC, PILP COMMENT ON ITEMS 06-06 and 06-07

Comment on Items 06-06 and 06-07—From the General Assembly Mission Council and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

Items 06-06 and Item 06-07 seek to amend the “trust clause” of the Book of Order by adding conflicting language to provide that property being held in trust for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is also owned by the individual congregation and held in trust for the local congregation, and not for any other body. The Book of Order at G-4.0203 currently provides important support and safeguards for the low-cost loan programs for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations provided by the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). Therefore, PILP believes the amendments proposed by Items 06-06 and 06-07 will cause unnecessary confusion due to the conflicting language in the proposed amendments, and will jeopardize fundamental and essential aspects of the loan programs of PILP and the GAMC, administered by PILP.

Without the current trust clause of the Book of Order, presbyteries would be unlikely to guarantee loans and without guarantees PILP’s ability to assist congregations would be significantly impaired. This change would be particularly difficult for small, mid-sized, and new congregations that may not be able to obtain bank financing.

The PILP makes low-cost loans to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [PC(USA)] congregations for new buildings and renovations. The funds for PILP loans are generated through the sale of Term Notes, which are debt securities to PC(USA) members and congregations and the sale of Denominational Account receipts (DARs) accounts to mid councils and PC(USA) agencies. The interest paid on these Term Notes and DARs and any redemptions are funded by the interest and principal repayment of the loans to congregations. The PILP relies on the congregation’s repayment of principal and interest to be able to pay interest to investors and to repay principal to investors at maturity.

The PILP administers the Church Loan Program for the GAMC. The Church Loan Program is a mission program under the responsibility of the GAMC and the principal corporation of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, where endowment funds are also used to make low-cost loans to congregations.
Most church building projects cannot be financed by congregations from their current receipts. Congregations depend on loans from PILP, the GAMC’s Church Loan Program, or commercial lenders to complete these projects. Generally, these loans are secured by first lien mortgages on the property of the borrowing congregation. The property of the congregation provides the collateral for these loans and is a potential source of repayment should the borrowing congregation not be able to repay the loan.

In addition to being secured, these loans are guaranteed by the presbytery of jurisdiction of the borrowing congregation. This means the presbytery is responsible to pay back the loan should the borrowing congregation fail to pay. The presbyteries have confidence in guaranteeing these secured loans due in part to G-4.0203 and G-4.0204, which state:

G-4.0203 Church Property Held in Trust

All property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), whether legal title is lodged in a corporation, a trustee or trustees, or an unincorporated association, and whether the property is used in programs of a congregation or of a higher council or retained for the production of income, is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

G-4.0204 Property Used Contrary to the Constitution

Under G-4.0204, when a congregation ceases to exist or leaves the denomination, the congregation’s property (which includes, but is not limited to, its real property, building, and other assets such as investments) is subject to the control of the presbytery of jurisdiction. The presbytery continues to be responsible for mission of the PC(USA) in the area of the departing congregation, and the presbytery can use the property to implement that mission. If the departing congregation has a secured loan with PILP, guaranteed by the presbytery, the presbytery would have the ability to retain the property or the presbytery could use the property to raise funds to satisfy the presbytery’s responsibility under the guaranty. A presbytery may choose to give some or all of this property to a departing congregation, if the presbytery believes that this is the best use of the property in furthering the mission of the Church of Jesus Christ, but this choice will not result in a release of the obligation to repay the secured loan and/or in the release of the guaranty.

If a congregation has a secured loan with PILP and/or the GAMC and chooses to leave the denomination or is dissolved by a presbytery, the terms of the loan provide that the loan is accelerated and becomes immediately due and payable. The guarantee of the presbytery is not satisfied until the loan is paid in full. If the property is no longer held in trust for the PC(USA), there is no constitutional assurance the property would be controlled by the presbytery, and presbyteries would then be reluctant to sign guarantees. The PILP and the Church Loan Program would be more hesitant to make loans secured by mortgages if the underlying property could so easily be transferred and shifted outside the denomination to what would then be a non-PC(USA) congregation. It seems clear this proposed amendment would adversely impact congregations and the loan programs.

In the current economy and in the aftermath of the banking crisis, it has become increasingly difficult for small and mid-size congregations to obtain financing for capital projects from banks. These are often the new, young, or struggling congregations that need the resources of the denomination the most. The PILP is able to meet these needs of PC(USA) congregations. Without the current trust clause of the Book of Order, presbyteries would be unlikely to guarantee loans and without guarantees PILP’s ability to assist congregations would be significantly impaired.

To the extent the proposed revision is related to denominational disagreements, it is crucial that current denominational disagreements not be allowed to overshadow the primary mission of the presbytery and congregation to carry out “The Great Ends of the Church.” Although the property trust clause gives ultimate control to the presbytery, it also gives the presbytery responsibility to assist the congregation in obtaining and properly sustaining the church buildings as homes for congregations. As a denomination we continue to spread the gospel of Jesus Christ. For centuries presbyteries have assisted congregations in finding church homes from which to carry out this mission. People in a congregation as a part of the PC(USA) have given the resources to build church buildings over generations. The current congregation should not be given the prerogative to take these resources out of the denomination because of a disagreement with current denominational positions.

For all the reasons stated above, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., with the concurrence of the GAMC, believes the amendments proposed by Items 06-06 and 06-07 will cause unnecessary confusion due to the conflicting language in proposed amendments, and will jeopardize fundamental and essential aspects of the church loan programs of PILP and the General Assembly Mission Council, administered by PILP.

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-08. See pp. 26, 27.]

On Amending F-1.0403, Unity in Diversity—From the Presbytery of Mississippi.

The Presbytery of Mississippi overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall F-1.0403 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“‘As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise’ (Gal. 3:27–29).

“The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons all believers through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction beyond the bounds of human categories. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee commits itself to full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups of everyone within its membership. No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution or related to personal faith and morals as stated in our Confessions.”

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is governed by its constitution made up of the Bible, The Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order. These documents order and govern how members relate to one another and their leadership. It is thus important that the language that underlines the church’s commitment to inclusivity be precise and theologically accurate.

The only requirement for membership into Christ’s church is to profess faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior. In the body of Christ, everything that would separate us and divide us falls apart. Each believer is valued and a beloved image bearer of God and has unique gifts and abilities that make Christ’s church stronger and richer. It is thus appropriate for the church to underline the truth that baptism is inextricably linked to faith in Christ.

It does damage to the church when we allow human constructs to separate us and divide us into groups. Christ prayed that his church would be one. Each person comes to know Christ as a broken and sinful individual, healed by Christ and brought into a family of faith in local congregations and the church universal. As a result, each individual member in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is invited to participate fully in its life of worship and service.

At the same time, it is not appropriate for the church to guarantee participation in governance to any group of people. Section G-2.0102 reminds us that “The government of this church is representative, and the right of God’s people to elect presbyters and deacons is inalienable.” Simply belonging to a group of people therefore should not guarantee that anyone will be called to ordered ministry in the church. Instead, such a call should only be “evidenced by the movement of the Holy Spirit in the individual conscience, the approval of a community of God’s people, and the concurring judgment of a council of the Church” (Book of Order, G-2.0103).

Those called to ordered ministry “should be persons of strong faith, dedicated discipleship, and love of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. Their manner of life should be a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world” (Book of Order, G-2.0104a). Thus, their faith and morals should conform to the Confessions of the Church.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-08

Advice on Item 06-08—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 06-08.

Rationale

The overture would amend the second paragraph of F-1.0403 in the following ways:

1. Strike “persons” and insert “all believers” in the first sentence.
2. Strike “regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction” and insert “beyond the bounds of human categories,” in the first sentence.
3. Strike “shall guarantee” and insert “commits itself to” in the third sentence.

4. Strike “in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups” and insert “of everyone” in the third sentence.

5. Insert the phrase “or related to personal faith and morals as stated in our Confessions” at the end of the fourth sentence.

Each of these proposed changes merits comment.

1. There is a deep connection between Baptism and the unity of the Body of Christ. That this is true is immediately visible in the quotation from Galatians 3:27–28 that forms the first paragraph of F -1.0403: “As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ.” This unity with Christ is then the basis both for the unity of believers, and the rich diversity through which that unity is expressed. The replacement of “persons” with “all believers” as proposed in this overture may lead to the conclusion that only those persons who “believe” are admitted to Baptism and only through the precondition of faith. To the extent that this sentence would be so interpreted, it represents a significant departure from our Constitution. As the Directory for Worship makes clear, our theology of Baptism is deeply rooted in the language and imagery of God’s covenant of grace expressed in and through Baptism. In that covenant, it is the faithfulness of God that is signified in baptism rather than that of the person baptized. God’s faithfulness is manifest first in the dying and rising of Christ (W-2.3002), then in the recapitulation of the covenant of God with ancient Israel (W-2.3003), and finally through inclusion in God’s covenant of grace (W-2.3004). Section W-2.3008b is clear that “the Baptism of children witnesses to the truth that God’s love claims people before they are able to respond in faith” [emphasis added]. But even the Baptism of those who are baptized as adults “… witnesses to the truth that God’s gift of grace calls for fulfillment in a response of faithfulness” (Book of Order, W-2.3008c). In all these acts, the person baptized is not the principal actor but the object of the action of God’s grace. While the Directory for Worship does not argue that Baptism precedes faith, neither does it understand that faith is prerequisite to Baptism.

2. The replacement of the list of human conditions (“regardless of race,” etc) with the generic phrase “beyond the bounds of human categories” substitutes a much more vague and sweeping statement in place of a concrete list of human divisions overcome in baptism. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) notes that the present list has similarities with W-2.3005, which states: “Barriers of race, gender, status, and age are to be transcended. Barriers of nationality, history, and practice are to be overcome.”

3. The replacement of “shall guarantee” with “commits itself to” may be seen as some as weakening the commitment of the church to equality and unity within the life of the church.

4. The replacement of “in its worship, governance, and emerging life to persons or groups [within its membership]” with “of everyone” removes the specific areas in which the church commits itself to diversity within its unity in Christ, thus rendering the sentence less clear. It may be seen by some as weakening the church’s commitment to diversity within the unity of its membership.

5. The insertion of the phrase “or related to personal faith and morals as stated in our Confessions” is problematic. All persons—regardless of faith, morality, or adherence to The Book of Confessions—are welcome in the worship and life of the church. It is therefore inappropriate to exclude persons from membership on grounds not related to profession of faith. With regard to those who participate in the ordered ministries of the church, G-2.0104b makes clear that those called to the church’s ordered ministries are to be examined, at minimum, on their willingness to assent to the questions for ordination in W-4.4003, among which are commitments

- to accept the Scriptures as the unique and authoritative witness to Jesus Christ;
- to receive and adopt the essential tenets of the Reformed faith as expressed in the confessions of our church as authentic and reliable expositions of what Scripture leads us to believe and do;
- “in your own life” to seek to follow the Lord Jesus Christ, love neighbors, and work for the reconciliation of the world.

In addition, G-2.0104a identifies as a qualification of those called to ordered ministry that their “manner of life shall be a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world.”

In light of these concerns, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes that Item 06-08 is not an improvement over the current language of F-1.0403.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL FOR ITEMS 06-08, 06-13, AND 06-17

Advice and Counsel on Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17 recommend essentially three changes to the Book of Order, all having to do with statements in the section on Unity in Diversity (F-1.0403) and G-1.0204: (1) a softening of the word “guarantee” in the section on diverse representation on governance committees and worship; (2) the removal of the explicit list to which that representation applies; and (3) the removal of the wording “through baptism” which undergirds the church’s unity.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17 be disapproved.

Rationale

The 1983 Articles of Agreement between the PCUS and the UPCUSA contained the following statement in Article 8, Section 8.2.

Racial ethnic members in the United States (Presbyterians of African, Hispanic and Asian descent and Native Americans) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision-making of the Church, and shall be able to form caucuses.

Participation and representation of racial ethnic membership shall be assured by the Committee on Representation. …

We keep before us those things that we must remember: biblical truths that we study, memorize, hear in church each Sunday; laws that we must obey; even our “to-do” lists. Black churches in the UPCUSA had deep concerns of having no voice and no role in the new PC(USA), the predominantly white church, where the majority would rule. Hence the clear provisions of the Articles of Agreement, with minority groups explicitly listed and a mechanism for reminding us of the membership in this church (COR) and their need for representation. Removal of the “guarantee” for participation and the explicit list is an affront to all those churches and groups that joyfully celebrated based on these articles in 1983.

While the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recognizes that, in some geographical areas, low racial ethnic populations may make fulfillment of this “guarantee” difficult, exceptions can be granted. It is felt, however, that removal of the assurance in the Book of Order would begin a “slippery slope” of failing to search adequately for full representation.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 06-08.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns believes that the deleted words are crucial to prove the importance of diversity in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). “Beyond the bounds of human categories” is inadequate and too general a description. More specificity is required in order to ensure fair representation.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 06-08.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the Advice and Counsel of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the rationale of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution. Changing the wording to F-1.0403 not only weakens the church’s commitment to inclusion for all but attempts to claim discrimination no longer exists or is nominal at best. The human categories specifically mentioned are all examples of people groups who are unquestionably affected by discrimination. Naming the groups articulates our recognition of this fact and our commitment to working against these known forms of discrimination. Watering down the language to the vague term, “human categories,” flies in the face of the 1983 Articles of Agreement, which were intentionally specific. All “human categories” do not represent people groups who are and have historically been discriminated against, which is why the specificity of the current language is appropriate and ultimately more effective in articulating the true intent behind the statement.

Comment on Items 06-08, 06-13, 06-17—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17.
Rationale

The proposed amendments to F-1.0403 and G-2.0401 are dangerous to the Body of Christ and our own integrity.

As people of faith, we first seek the Lord, but we are renewed by the living word of God’s Scripture. The Living Word helps us understand who God is, our relationship to God, and our requisite relationship with one another. A central text in the self-understanding of call, for the sixteen elected members of the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) to particular service within the PC(USA), is found in 1 Corinthians 12. The tremendous diversity that makes up the Church is described as “one body, many parts.” As part of a single living organism, none of the parts can remain alive without being connected to the rest of the body, neither is one part greater than another. The metaphor is instructive to us as we address the actions recommended in Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17 to varying degrees.

In other parts of Scripture the oft echoed line of letting those with “ears to hear” and “eyes to see” witness God’s amazing work, but the others are left to their own illusory existences, disconnected from one another and from God. The idea of needing the right lens is critical to the ministry of the GACOR and to see injustice as status quo acts to disguise disparity and disregard difference, those privileged in a system are rendered blind to its faults, incapable without assistance to see how the system advantages some with unearned privileges and disadvantages others (sometimes creating real harm)

The list of conditions and identities currently included in F-1.0403 are not merely “human categories.” They have real meaning and consequences in human community. Systemic disadvantage, disparities in leadership, health, wealth, etc. are real impacts for persons in these categories. The intent of a person from a disadvantaged group makes little or no change to the altered realities they experience. The lack of women serving in installed pastorates as head of staff in large congregations remains infinitesimally small despite the majority of persons attending and graduating Presbyterian seminaries are female. These patterns are echoed in the much lower proportion of women being ordained relative to their ratio of persons in the ordination track. Race, while described as a social construct, has real effects on persons depending on what labels are attached to their skin color and features. We do not have to think too hard before coming up with numerous examples in church and society of racialized outcomes distorting the fullness God intends for human community. We talk about these realities in Scripture as well as in our Confessions. These are but two examples.

The GACOR has learned to look at the church and the world training its eyes and ears to see with lenses tuned to how power and privilege are wielded. These glasses make visible the lived experiences of persons who must contend with labels affixed to them because they are members of groups deemed “other” but the dominant group who determines the norms. Disparity and discriminatory practice are rife in human community and must be resisted. These realities are expressly why F-1.0403 exists in the first place so that we may, in the words of A Brief Statement of Faith, remind ourselves that

the Spirit gives us courage
to pray without ceasing,
to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior,
to unmask idolatries in Church and culture,
to hear the voices of peoples long silenced,
and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace. (The Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 65–71)

Unearned advantage results in an ability to “not see” and “not hear”—it allows persons to be silent in the presence of oppression and harm being foisted on others. Those who are privileged within a system are allowed to pretend they are not subject to the rules which create their advantage, and in doing so access even more advantage. It is not a mistake that Jesus made a big deal in his ministry of being witnesses of and for one another. Section F-1.0403 is one way we express this foundational principle of being Presbyterian within our communion. Seeing one another and connecting to one another to resist those was we are pulled apart along lines of difference, well, these are why we use the banner of “Unity in Diversity” for this section of the Foundations.

As you consider these amendments and the sometimes seemingly innocuous shift in language they suggest, you may want to consult the Preface of the Book of Order, which reminds the reader of the language used throughout the Constitution how it is interpreted.

In this Book of Order

(1) SHALL and IS TO BE/ARE TO BE signify practice that is mandated,

(2) SHOULD signifies practice that is strongly recommended,

(3) IS APPROPRIATE signifies practice that is commended as suitable,

(4) MAY signifies practice that is permissible but not required.

(5) ADVISORY HANDBOOK signifies a handbook produced by agencies of the General Assembly to guide synods and presbyteries in procedures related to the oversight of ministry. Such handbooks suggest procedures that are commended, but not required. (Book of Order (2011-2013) Preface, emphasis added)
By this measure the current language of “shall guarantee” signifies a practice that is mandated. The suggested replacement “commits itself” does not find its equivalent in this guideline and provides a standard with is at best uncertain and vague. This is not the only place where the suggested amendment produces an ambiguous new standard that is confusing. How is it that this assertion of membership now has a the addition of “morals,” followed up by the addition of “personal faith” and these are set up as a means for being “denied participation” The Advisory Committee on the Constitution does a good job in its comment explaining the various places where membership and leadership standards are distinguished. In F-1.0403 it is clearly an expression of the rich diversity of the church’s membership. The imposition of anxieties about standards of ordination and leadership in this section create an obstacle and become a stumbling block, denying groups of persons access to being welcomed by God’s family in worship and the church’s life.

This principle in the Foundations also reminds us of our commitment to be faithful. Within a Presbyterian and Reformed understanding, discerning the will of God for the church is done by listening to the Spirit with one another, connected in community. If we must be in community in order to best discern the will of God, it stands to reason that the greater the diversity of the community, the wider the participation, the greater the capacities for discerning the will of God, the greater access to gifts in community, the deeper faithfulness in the gathering. We err, when we fail to acknowledge where human community falls short, and does so systemically. To err in this way is to bind the body (the Body of Christ) with the shackles of the status quo. The suggested changes in Items 06-13 and 06-17 to make adjustments to G-2.0401 are efforts to lessen the standard and empower the inertia of inaction, enforcing the status quo.

As a testimony to the importance of this small piece of the Foundations, F-1.0403 appears in the Form of Government cited in twelve different locations and is cited once in the Directory of Worship in reference to “Worship and Ministry within the Community of Faith.” The GACOR humbly suggests the assembly pause before it considers amendment.

At every age and time, God calls us as the church to fight against oppressive structures that systematically alienate people from relationship with God and one another and which denies us the gifts of their leadership. The gospel and epistle writers named most every problem and issue, and declared that everyone who believes in Jesus Christ shall be included in the body of Christ. We live into that hope when we remain with the language of F-1.0403 as it is. Even in church, our shared cultural identity is deeply rooted in the dominant culture of U.S. society. As the denomination envisions means to grow the church deep and wide, we are called to preach and practice effective ways to include, especially those persons who are categorically discriminated against and denied the ability to determine their identity and expression unencumbered by demands made by the culture.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-08

Comment on Item 06-08—From the Office of the General Assembly.

In lifting up the importance of “Unity and Diversity” within the Reformed tradition, F-1.0403 affirms, “the unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership” [emphasis added]. As one body with many members (1 Cor. 12:12–31), F-1.0403 recognizes the need for diverse membership in the body of Christ and affirms that through baptism Christ unites persons regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction.

Along these lines, G-1.0302 in the Form of Government calls congregations to be a place of “welcome and openness” acknowledging that “no person shall be denied membership for any reason not related to profession of faith.” The Book of Order, F-1.0403, further notes that within the PC(USA)’s membership, “no member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution” [emphasis added] In line with this italicized clause, the Constitution does place limits on who may be ordained as deacons, ruling elders, or teaching elders in accordance with Chapter Two of the Form of Government (“Ordered Ministry, Commissioning, and Certification”) as well as W-4.4003 (“Constitutional Questions for Ordination, Installation, and Commissioning”) in the Directory for Worship.

In accordance with Reformed theological standards, W-4.4003 reminds the church that, among others, those seeking ordination and/or installation to ordered ministries must answer the following questions:

a. Do you trust in Jesus Christ your Savior, acknowledge him Lord of all and Head of the Church, and through him believe in one God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit?

b. Do you accept the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be, by the Holy Spirit, the unique and authoritative witness to Jesus Christ in the Church universal, and God’s Word to you?

c. Do you sincerely receive and adopt the essential tenets of the Reformed faith as expressed in the confessions of our church as authentic and reliable expositions of what Scripture leads us to believe and do, and will you be instructed and led by those confessions as you lead the people of God?
d. Will you fulfill your ministry in obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture, and be continually guided by our confessions?

e. Will you be governed by our church’s polity, and will you abide by its discipline? Will you be a friend among your colleagues in ministry, working with them, subject to the ordering of God’s Word and Spirit?

f. Will you in your own life seek to follow the Lord Jesus Christ, love your neighbors, and work for the reconciliation of the world?

g. Do you promise to further the peace, unity, and purity of the church? …

Accordingly, commissioners are encouraged to consider why it’s important to have a diverse church membership in line with F-1.0403 and 1 Cor. 12:12–31. Along these lines and in the context of our church’s history, commissioners are also encouraged to consider why F-1.0403 specifically enumerates the categories of “race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction.” Further, commissioners are encouraged to consider and reflect upon the importance of affording counsels a diverse pool of members from which to nominate, examine and elect those who are called to ordered ministry.

[The assembly approved Item 06-09 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 26, 27.]

On Amending D-10.0106 and G-2.0904 Regarding Administrative Leave—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

1. Shall D-10.0106, regarding Administrative Leave, be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through.]

   “When a written statement of an alleged offense of sexual abuse toward any person under the age of eighteen, or who it is alleged lacked the mental capacity to consent, has been received against a teaching elder, the stated clerk receiving the allegation shall immediately communicate the allegation to the permanent judicial commission. [The rest of the paragraph remains unchanged.]”

2. Shall G-2.0904 be amended as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown as italic.]

   “[The Presbytery may inquire into reported difficulties in a congregation and may dissolve the pastoral relationship if, after consultation with the minister, the session, and the congregation, it finds the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it. In the case of alleged sexual abuse having been received by the stated clerk against any teaching elder, the presbytery may amend the pastoral relationship if, after consultation with the minister and the session, it finds the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it.]”

Comment: Every presbytery needs to adopt an adequate comprehensive administrative leave policy with a list of types of allegations that trigger an immediate leave as an explicit agreement between the teaching elder, congregation, and presbytery.

Rationale

Sexual abuse is devastating to a congregation. Past PC(USA) conversations in this regard have demonstrated the tension between the protections afforded the accused, that they are innocent until proven guilty, and the protection of a congregation, the putative victims and potential victims from additional abuse.

Presently the Book of Order, Rules of Discipline, provides three ways the teaching elder may be placed on administrative leave:

1. the accused teaching elder may volunteer for a leave of absence;
2. one of the victim/survivors of the alleged sexual abuse is under the age of eighteen;
3. or it is alleged that the victim lacked the mental capacity to consent.

The conditions currently found in D-10.0401c(1) are included in D-10.0106. The conditions sited in D-10.0401c,(2) are not included in D-10.0106. This amendment proposes to include those conditions as well. Essentially mandatory administrative leave would be able to be imposed upon any teaching elder if sufficient evidence of sexual abuse as defined in D-10.0401c exists as judged by the two persons appointed by the PJC chair.

Another change in the Book of Order is also necessary to provide the possibility to impose mandatory administrative leave in the presence of sufficient evidence. The proposed amendment to G-2.0904 makes this possible. A pastoral call is a contract between pastor, presbytery, and a congregation. Attempts to place a teaching elder accused of sexual abuse have been complicated in the past due to the fact that the congregation has not voted upon the leave of absence being imposed by the presbytery. The proposed amendment to G-2.0904 would provide for a course of action that could be imposed upon a teaching elder if evidence is sufficient to merit such. The presbytery could amend the terms of call to require teaching elders to abide by a presbytery’s administrative leave policies without the approval of the congregation itself. Due process as described in D-10.0106 related to administrative leave would remain the same. While the session and the teaching elder would be consulted, the lack of congregational action in this regard would no longer be an impediment to placing a teaching elder on administrative leave by a presbytery.

If this change is not made, even with evidence of sexual abuse by a teaching elder of someone with the alleged mental capacity to consent and who is over eighteen, the presbytery has little recourse other than to threaten removal from office based upon the judgment that “the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it” (Book of Order, G-2.0904). This threat is sometimes employed to persuade an accused teaching elder to voluntarily accept administrative leave. This is often a lengthy process following some weeks of negotiation with a presbytery ministry committee. This negotiation and delay is at the additional emotional, spiritual, and psychological expense of the putative victim(s) and trauma to the congregation. The proposed changes provide a means by which this administrative leave can be appropriately and expeditiously imposed in the context of existing due process. The proposed changes also provide for a course of action available to a presbytery that is short of removal from office when a teaching elder will not voluntarily agree to administrative leave.

Summary

The proposed changes preserve the existing rights of the accused and extend protection to the congregation, the putative victim(s), and potential victims by expanding the range of consideration to all persons, not just those who are under eighteen or who, it is alleged, lacked the mental capacity to consent. These changes make it possible to impose a leave of absence on any teaching elder accused of sexual abuse with any other person based upon the evidence available at that time. These changes leave intact the current process of consideration as defined in D-10.0106. It does not automatically impose the administrative leave but continues to leave it to the judgment of the two persons appointed by the chair of the permanent judicial commission to consider the evidence of sexual abuse.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-09

Advice on Item 06-09—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 06-09 for the reasons given in the ACC’s advice on Item 06-03.

Rationale

If the assembly believes that this proposal presents a preferable set of amendments to address this matter, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed amendment to G-2.0904 could be strengthened by amending it as follows: [Text to be deleted from the proposed amendment is shown in brackets with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The Presbytery may inquire into reported difficulties in a congregation and may dissolve the pastoral relationship if, after consultation with the minister, the session, and the congregation, it finds the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it. In the case of an alleged sexual abuse having been received by the stated clerk against any teaching elder, the presbytery may amend the pastoral relationship if, after consultation with the [minister and the session] teaching elder, the session, and the congregation, it finds the church’s mission under the Word imperatively demands it.”

[In response to Item 06-10, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 26, 27.]

On Amending G-1.0503 Regarding Business at Congregational Meetings—From the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks.

The Presbytery of Plains and Peaks respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-1.0503 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“G-1.0503 Business Proper to Congregational Meetings “Business to be transacted at meetings of the congregation shall be limited to matters related to the following:

“a. electing ruling elders, deacons, and trustees, and members of the congregation’s nominating committee (G-2.0401);

“b. calling a pastor, co-pastor, or associate pastor, including election of a pastor nominating committee (G-2.0802);

“c. changing existing pastoral relationships, by such means as reviewing the adequacy of and approving changes to the terms of call of the pastor or pastors, or requesting, consenting to, or declining to consent to dissolution;

“d. buying, mortgaging, or selling real property;

“e. requesting the presbytery to grant an exemption as permitted in this Constitution (G-2.0404);

“f. business of the church corporation, such as adopting or amending articles of incorporation and corporate bylaws;

“g. creation, amendment, or dissolution of a joint congregational witness (G-5.05).

“Whenever permitted by civil law, both ecclesiastical and corporate business may be conducted at the same congregational meeting.”

In response to Item 06-10, that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve the following recommendation:

The 220th General Assembly (2012) directs the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Amend G-1.0503 by adding a new item f. to read as follows:

“f. Approving a plan for the creation of a joint congregational witness, or amending or dissolving the joint congregational witness (G-5.05).”

Rationale

The adoption of the revised Form of Government in 2011 was intended to create greater flexibility in governance to meet the mission needs of congregations. However, in the revision of former G-7.0304, language was removed that had provided congregations the power to conduct business necessary for the governance of the church. The present overture restores language to subsection “e.” that had been in former G-7.0304 granting such power.

Moreover, the language of G-1.0503 is unclear as to whether the election of nominating committees as required in G-2.0401 and G-2.0802 is subsumed under the current provisions. The present overture clarifies this by amendments to subsections “a.” and “b.”

In addition, the elimination of large portions of former G-7.0400 has added to the confusion as to the process by which corporate business may be transacted. The addition of subsection “f.” above clarifies that corporate business is permissible and appropriate to be conducted at a congregational meeting.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-10

Advice on Item 06-10—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 06-10 presents the following issues that the assembly should consider.

This item proposes adding a number of specific additions to the list of types of business that can be conducted at meetings of a congregation. The existing list is preceded by the phrase “matters related to the following.” This phrase indicates that the sphere of matters that are proper business at meetings of the congregation is broader than the single action described, and that some logical relation to the listed actions is necessary in order for unnamed business to be proper for a congregational meeting. The more lengthy and detailed the list in G-1.0503 becomes, the stronger would be the potential argument that any specific business not identified on the list was intentionally excluded from it. Accordingly, the General Assembly should give careful attention to any possible expansion of the list.

1. Election of Ruling Elders and Deacons (and Trustees)

The proposal asks that the election of the congregation’s nominating committee be added to the short list in G-1.0503a. The election of ruling elders and deacons is described in G-2.0401, which requires that the nominations come from “a committee elected by the congregation, drawn from and representative of the congregation’s membership.” The election of this committee is a requirement that is obviously related to the election of elders and deacons.
Interestingly, this proposal as submitted does not propose to add to G-1.0503a an item that would allow a meeting of the congregation to adopt a rule providing for the congregational nominating committee.

The proposal also asks that the election of trustees be added to the short list in G-1.0503a. The Form of Government at G-4.0101 addresses the election of individual trustees by congregations that are not able to form a corporation. It states “…Any such individual trustees shall be elected from the congregation’s members in the same manner as those elected to the ordered ministries of deacon and ruling elder. …” The election by the congregation of individual trustees thus has a relation to the election of ruling elders and deacons.

2. Calling of a Pastor

The proposal asks that the election of a pastoral nominating committee be added to the short list in G-1.0503a. The election of a pastor, co-pastor, or associate pastor requires that a nomination come from a pastor nominating committee (G-2.0802). The election of this committee is a requirement that is necessary to the calling a pastor, co-pastor, or associate pastor. An amendment would not be necessary to establish the appropriateness of a congregational meeting called to elect a pastor nominating committee.

Similarly, but not mentioned in the overture, the dismissal of the pastor nominating committee at the conclusion of its work would also be proper business for a meeting of the congregation.

3. Corporate Business

The proposal asks that a new item f be added to provide for corporate business. The sentence at the end of G-1.0503 already provides for corporate business to be transacted at meetings of the congregation. The Form of Government at G-4.0101 provides that “Where permitted by civil law, each congregation shall cause a corporation to be formed and maintained. …” Where the constitution mandates that a congregation form and maintain a corporation, it would be paradoxical to conclude that the congregation is unable to do so. Forming and maintaining such a corporation requires adopting articles of incorporation and by-laws, and amending them from time to time.

This ability to conduct corporate business is not unlimited, and does not include actions contrary to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

4. Joint Congregational Witness

The proposal asks that a new Section g be added to provide for joint congregational witness. Section G-5.05b requires a 2/3 vote by the congregation to approve a plan for the creation of a joint witness at a duly called meeting of the congregation. It specifically limits the congregation’s role to approving a plan for its creation. Once the congregation has done so, it is the presbytery that has the authority to approve the creation of the joint congregational witness.

The absence within the list in G-1.0503 concerning joint congregational witness would raise valid questions about a meeting to approve a plan for creating a joint congregational witness can be duly called. While some parts of such a plan might relate to matters listed in current G-1.0503a to e., approving such a plan is not related to any of the existing matters on the list in G-1.0503. The proposed addition of an item on the list in G-1.0503 would be necessary in order to call a meeting of a PC(USA) congregation to approve the plan for the joint witness, but the language proposed in this item is overbroad and could lead to confusion as to the role of the congregation.

A plan for a joint congregational witness should address the process for amending and dissolving the joint witness. It is likely that the plan’s provisions would require a congregational meeting to petition the presbytery to amend or dissolve the witness.

5. Conclusions

If the General Assembly finds that there is genuine uncertainty about whether a meeting of a congregation can elect trustees, or a congregational nominating committee, or adopt a rule providing for a congregational nominating committee, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that an authoritative interpretation would be a preferable way to provide clarity, rather than amendment. Such an authoritative interpretation would read:

“Section G-1.0503a permits business at a congregational meeting to include electing trustees, electing a congregational nominating committee, or adopting a rule providing for a congregational nominating committee in accord with G-2.0401.”

If the General Assembly finds that there is genuine uncertainty about whether a meeting of a congregation can elect a pastoral nominating committee, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that an authoritative interpretation would be a preferable way to provide clarity, rather than amendment. Such an authoritative interpretation would read:
“Section G-1.0503b permits business at a congregational meeting to include electing a pastor nominating committee in accord with G-2.0802, and dismissing such a committee at the conclusion of its work.”

If the General Assembly finds that there is genuine uncertainty about whether a meeting of a congregation can conduct corporate business such as adopting or amending articles of incorporation and corporate bylaws, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that an authoritative interpretation would be a preferable way to provide clarity. Such an authoritative interpretation would read:

“Section G-1.0503 permits corporate business to be conducted at congregational meetings, which may include electing trustees, or adopting or amending articles of incorporation and bylaws. The articles of incorporation and bylaws, and any proposed amendments thereto, must comply with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The presbytery is to provide assistance to congregations and their corporations in achieving such constitutional compliance.”

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) believes that the intent of Item 06-10 is appropriate with respect to the creation of a joint congregational witness, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed language can be made clearer and more consistent with that intent by being revised to propose only the addition of a new section “f,” “approving a plan for the creation of a joint congregational witness, or amending or dissolving the joint congregational witness,” and eliminating the other proposed insertions.

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-11 with comment. See pp. 26, 27.]

Comment: With the knowledge that each congregation is empowered to do its own work, we encourage each congregation to determine its own best practice.

On Amending G-2.0401 Regarding the Congregational Nominating Committee—From the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks.

The Presbytery of Plains and Peaks respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-2.0401 be amended to read as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown as italic.]

“Ruling elders and deacons are men and women elected by the congregation from among its members. The nomination and election of ruling elders and deacons shall express the rich diversity of the congregation’s membership and shall guarantee participation and inclusiveness (F-1.0403). Ruling elders and deacons shall be nominated by a committee elected by the congregation, drawn from and representative of its membership. Congregations may provide by their own rule for a congregational nominating committee, provided that the committee shall consist of at least three active members of the congregation, and shall include at least one ruling elder who is currently serving on the session to be designated by the session. The pastor shall serve ex officio and without vote. When elections are held, full opportunity shall always be given to the congregation for nomination from the floor of the congregational meeting by any active member of the congregation. A majority of all the active members present and voting shall be required to elect.”

Rationale

Historically, the composition of a congregational nominating committee has provided for the coordination of the respective powers of a congregation to elect its own officers and of the session to coordinate and oversee the ministry of the congregation. This has been accomplished through provision of representation of the session on the congregational nominating committee by designated representatives of the session. However, the revision of former G-14.0223 incorporated into G-2.0401 removes from the session the right to designate this representative. This fails to preserve the historic coordination of powers in the church. The present overture restores this through a simple clarification. We believe this amendment is necessary in order to assure proper communication between the nominating committee and the session, for the health and benefit of the congregation.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-11

Advice on Item 06-11—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 06-11 presents the following issues that the assembly should consider.

The item states that the current language of G-2.0401 fails to preserve the historic coordination of powers in the church, alluding to a balance of power between the congregation and the session. The assembly should determine whether the new language impinges upon the ability of the session to coordinate and oversee the ministry of the congregation. If the assembly finds that the current language creates such a problem, it should determine whether the proposed amendment is an appropriate remedy.

The practice in use until 2011 was first introduced in the PCUSA in 1956. The 165th General Assembly (1953) had appointed a committee on deacons and trustees with the charge “to clarify the relations of session and deacons and trustees.” That committee presented an interim report to the 166th General Assembly (1954), which sent the report to the presbyteries for study and comment. The committee presented its final report to the 167th General Assembly (1955), with recommendations to end the conflict and dissension within congregations between the sessions and boards of trustees and deacons. The report clarified that within the congregation final authority rested in the session.

Other recommendations in the report introduced mandatory practices now very familiar to the current generation of leaders in our church: the mandatory rotation of elders, deacons, and trustees; the mandatory use of a representative nominating committee; and the mandate for full opportunity for nominations from the floor.

Prior to the 1956 amendment mandating the rotation of officers, the Form of Government allowed congregations to opt for rotation of elders and deacons, but did not mandate it. The committee said that:

- the adoption of the mandatory rotary system would bring about the greater democratization of the life of the local church. It would broaden the base of churchmanship in the local congregation. It would solve the problem of any entrenched leadership which is unacceptable to the people. This system of mandatory rotation frees the local church of embarrassment or difficulty in enlarging the circle of leadership in the local church.

- In our church’s ongoing dialectic between local flexibility and the regularizing of practices, it may be helpful to be aware of the degree of local flexibility once permitted. Prior to the 1956 amendment that mandated the use of a representative nominating committee, the Form of Government required merely that “Every congregation shall elect persons from among its members in full communion to the office of ruling elder, and to the office of deacon, or either of them, in the mode most approved and in use in that congregation.”

The 1956 amendment mandating the use of a representative nominating committee identified the essential elements that were used until 2011 (i.e., not more than two members designated by and from the session; one member designated by and from the board of deacons; other members in sufficient number to constitute a majority chosen by the congregation; the pastor to serve as a member ex-officio with voice but without vote).

The committee explained:

- This representative nominating committee will add much to the strengthening and developing of leadership in the local congregation. Such a nominating committee has been in wide vogue among many of our churches and has grown in favor with usage. The representative nominating committee, where used, has brought new life and strength into the officiary of the local church. We believe that the mandatory provision for a representative nomination committee will do much to bring more adequate representative government into the life of the local congregation.

- The practice, until 2011, of mandating that the session designate the elders to serve on the nominating committee, has been a familiar and longstanding way of functioning that worked for the majority of congregations. The 2011 amendment gave the congregation the right to choose all of the members of the nominating committee, changed the number of ruling elders on the committee, removed the cap on ruling elder members on the committee, took away the session’s right to designate its representatives on the committee, removed any requirement for deacon representation on the nominating committee, and took away the right of the board of deacons to designate its representative.

- Item 06-11 raises concerns about the balance of power between the session and congregation. There are arguments that can be made for and against the validity of these concerns.

In favor of finding a valid concern about a shift in the balance of power, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution would note that there is the possibility of the congregation selecting an elder to serve on the nominating committee who may have other gifts for the work of the session, but who would not be reliable in representing the concerns of the session, or reliable in communicating back to the session matters that would raise the session’s concern, such as the possible nomination of a church member with a history of not working well with others. The nomination and election process can have a snowball effect, gathering momentum until there is little possibility of correction without creating embarrassment for the nominee or the congregation. This view would see the ability of the session to choose its representative on the nominating committee as essential to ensuring that early steps are taken to prevent destructive conflict within the congregation.

In opposition to finding a valid concern about the balance of power between the session and congregation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution would note that the session remains the final authority within the congregation, and has numerous available avenues for communication with the nominating committee. In congregations with installed pastors, the moderator of the session is a member ex-officio of the nominating committee with the ability to voice the concerns of the session in the committee’s deliberations. The session may invite the nominating committee to meet with it. Additionally, members of the session are themselves members of the congregation, with the full right to speak, vote, and make nominations from the floor in the meetings of the congregation. These nominations from the floor can be made for elders and deacons, but also for the membership of the congregation’s nominating committee. If the nomination and election process for elders or deacons were to go completely awry (in the view of the session), the session has the power to disapprove the examination of an unsuitable elder-elect or deacon-elect.

If the assembly finds that the current G-2.0401 has detrimentally changed the balance of powers between the congregation and its session, the question remains whether a constitutional amendment to remedy it is necessary.

Current G-2.0401 would permit any congregation that so wishes to adopt a rule for the composition of its nominating committee such that the ruling elder serving on the session would be designated by the session. The proposed amendment would place a limit on this congregational flexibility.

The dialectic between the role of the session and the rights of the congregation may be bridged by alternative language that would grant Session permission to nominate its participant(s) on the congregational nominating committee while preserving the congregation’s right to offer alternative nominations from the floor and to elect those who will serve. This may be accomplished with the following amendment to G-2.0401:

Congregations may provide by their own rule for a congregational nominating committee, provided that the committee shall consist of at least three active members of the congregation, and shall include at least one ruling elder who is currently serving on the session. The session shall nominate the requisite number of its members for service on the committee. The pastor shall serve ex officio and without vote.

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) believes that the intent of Item 06-11 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed language is clear and consistent with that intent.

Item 06-12

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-12. See pp. 26, 27.]

On Amending G-1.04 to “Add Special Consideration for Membership for Families Serving Yoked Churches”—From the Presbytery of Middle Tennessee.

The Presbytery of Middle Tennessee overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-1.04 of the Book of Order be amended by inserting a new section G-1.0405 to read as follows:

G-1.0405 Special Consideration for Membership for Families Serving Yoked Churches

The immediate family of a teaching elder who has been called to serve yoked churches or a multi-church parish setting may, if they desire, become active members (G-1.0402) of churches within the yoked or parish arrangement and will be received by each session and listed on the roll of active members (G-3.0204a) in the churches with full privileges in each church. No person with such special membership shall be allowed, if so nominated and elected, to serve as an active ruling elder on more than one council in the yoked or parish setting.

Within our denomination, the number of teaching elders who serve more than one congregation is growing and will continue to do so. With the changing landscape within our denomination, this kind of call will become more prevalent.

In the current Form of Government, the only choices for the family of the teaching elder are: join neither church and maintain a membership at a “home” church; or join one church as an active member and join the other(s) as an affiliate member.

Given the nature of the small churches that participate in such partnerships, either of the choices leaves the family members in limbo at best and at worst cause uneasiness between or among the churches as one is chosen above the other(s).

This special consideration will allow the family of the teaching elder to be full participants in all churches in the parish and foster a “family feeling” among the members of those churches and members of the pastor’s family.

In matters of original jurisdiction, any such matter would be addressed by the session of the church within which the issue arose.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-12

Advice on Item 06-12—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 06-12.
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds numerous instances of ambiguous language, incompleteness, and inconsistency with the rest of the constitution in this proposal. Before addressing those issues in this proposal, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the General Assembly discern whether the problem to be addressed requires a church-wide answer or could more effectively be resolved by a local or interpersonal solution.

It appears that this overture intends to resolve a quandary faced by some pastoral families by means of a constitutional amendment that has implications for our church’s understanding of membership in a congregation. The rationale for the overture suggests that the inability of the family of a teaching elder serving multiple congregations to join all of the congregations served causes problems. It appears to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution that the perceived problems are largely interpersonal and can be addressed effectively under the current Form of Government at the level of the congregation and session, and, if necessary, the presbytery.

The session has “… responsibility for governing the congregation and guiding its witness to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that the congregation is and becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness …” (Book of Order, G-3.0201). The session has the responsibility and power to provide “for regular preaching of the Word by a teaching elder or other person prepared and approved for the work” (Book of Order, G-3.0201a). For many small membership congregations this can involve working with the presbytery in identifying options that will enable the congregation to attract and retain such a teaching elder or other person. The session weighs the options of merger, yoking, joining a larger parish, or even dissolution of the congregation, and leads the congregation through the process of deciding on which path to pursue.

The session also has the responsibility and power to exercise “pastoral care among the congregation; in order that the Sacraments may be received as a means of grace, and the congregation may live in the unity represented in the Sacraments” (Book of Order, G-3.0201b). This includes the responsibility to counsel with members of the congregation whose unreasonable expectations concerning the pastor’s family threaten to disrupt the unity of the congregation, or the agreed-upon relationship with other congregations served by the same pastor.

“The presbytery is responsible for the government of the church throughout its district, and for assisting and supporting the witness of congregations to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that all congregations become communities of faith, hope, love, and witness” (Book of Order, G-3.0301). The presbytery has the responsibility and power to organize, merge, dismiss, and dissolve congregations in consultation with their members. The presbytery also has the responsibility and power to provide “encouragement, guidance, and resources to congregations in the areas of mission, prophetic witness, leadership development, worship, evangelism, and responsible administration to the end that the church’s witness to the love and grace of God may be heard in the world” (Book of Order, G-3.0301a). For small membership congregations this can involve the presbytery’s counseling with the session on strategies, such as merger, yoking, or forming a larger parish, that would enable those congregations to attract and retain a teaching elder or other qualified person to preach the Word. It is incumbent upon the presbytery to ensure that the session and congregation understand the implications and limitations of each option.

The presbytery also has the responsibility and power to exercise “pastoral care for the congregations and members of presbytery in order that the Sacraments may be received as a means of grace, and the presbytery may live in the unity represented in the Sacraments,” to promote “the peace and harmony of congregations and inquiring into the sources of congregational discord” (Book of Order, G-3.0301b, c). Specifically, the presbytery has the authority to “counsel with a session concerning reported difficulties within a congregation” (Book of Order, G-3.0303d).

The term “yoked or parish arrangement” is not defined within the Book of Order. The absence of constitutional definition would make the application of the proposed insertion dependent on presbytery policy that defines yoking arrangements. In a previous Form of Government, prior to 2007, G-14.0504 provided for a larger parish to be able to call a pastor, and specified agreements the congregations were required to make. As commonly used, the terminology of yoking and larger parish refers to arrangements in which each congregation retains its distinct identity and membership rolls, and continues to be governed by its own session. Such arrangements are distinct from merger, in which one or all of the congregations surrender their individual identities in order to become one congregation with only one set of membership rolls and one session governing the congregation.

It should be noted that the individual congregations in a yoked arrangement or larger parish decided to retain their separate identities rather than merge into a single congregation. Had the congregations sought merger into a single congregation, a member of the immediate family of the pastor would have a simple array of choices: ask to be received as an active member, ask to be received as an affiliate member, or not seek membership. By choosing to remain distinct congregations they have allowed a situation to continue in which one congregation could be chosen for membership and another not chosen.

If the congregations or individual active members forget what the congregations decided, it is the responsibility of the sessions to remind them rather than to allow unreasonable expectations about the shared pastor and her or his family to disrupt the life and work of the congregations. When the sessions are unable or unwilling to remind the congregations, it becomes necessary for the presbytery that approved the yoking arrangement or larger parish to assist the sessions with this task.

This is not the first time that the General Assembly has considered a proposal for membership in two congregations simultaneously. In 2010, in giving advice on Item 05-09 proposing a new category of “associate membership” in a congregation, we said:

It is a principle of Presbyterian polity that active membership is held in one body at a time. Thus, when a candidate is ordained as a minister of the Word and Sacrament, his/her membership moves from the particular church to the presbytery. Section G-10.0302b(4) provides that when a member joins another church, that member’s name is deleted from the rolls of the first church. For purposes of accountability, oversight, and order membership is held in one place at one time.

The Item 05-09 provides that “associate members” would be “entitled to all the rights and privileges of an active member.” This means that an associate member could vote and hold office. The overture stipulates that “an associate member shall not hold office in multiple churches simultaneously.” This requirement places an undue burden on the churches of membership to ascertain where the associate member is an officer, if at all, requiring consultation between nominating committees of various particular churches. An associate member who is an elder might be a commissioner to two or more different presbyteries during the same year, creating the possibility that one person could vote more than one time on certain issues, such as proposed amendments to the Constitution.

Associate membership gives rise to questions about potential dual obligations for per capita remittance.

Church members remain under the jurisdiction of the session. The amendment does not make clear how jurisdictional matters would be handled in disciplinary cases in which the associate member was accused.

As a practical matter, an associate member serving as a session member or member of the board of deacons in one particular church leaves that session or board with a functional vacancy during the portion of the year he or she resides in another location. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 326–27 of the electronic version)

Since that time there has been a major revision of the Form of Government, and the current G-3.0204a corresponds to the former G-10.0302b(4) in requiring the same view of our polity. This item does not include a proposed amendment to G-3.0204a, and thus would fail to achieve the goal of the overture.

Proposals to amend the Constitution to create a polity in which dual membership in congregations would be possible should be drafted so that the new language addresses the issues of accountability, oversight, and order. This proposal does not do so, but suggests in the rationale that original jurisdiction could be resolved based on “where the issue arose.” Not every issue that affects a congregation arises within the congregation. The answer to the question of where an issue arose is irrelevant if the person is an active member of only one congregation, but may not be simple at all under a dual-membership rule.

For example, if the proposal were approved and the pastor’s daughter or son (a member of all the yoked congregations served by the parent) were to sense a call to the ordered ministry of teaching elder, it is not clear which session is the one that the active member should ask to endorse the application to the presbytery to be enrolled as an inquirer.

This proposal does not state where in G-1.04 the suggested language would be inserted.

This proposal does not state that the reception of a family member would be the session’s action, but suggests (by using the language “will be received by each session”) that the reception in multiple churches would be a right based only on the decision of the family member. The qualification for this right, according to this proposed amendment, appears not to be based on profession of faith, but simply on being in the immediate family of the pastor of each congregation.

Some members of the pastor’s immediate family might more appropriately be placed on the Baptized Members Roll of one of the churches in the yoked arrangement or local parish. This overture as drafted appears to require the sessions to enroll a baptized child who has not yet made profession of faith as an Active Member simply at the child’s request. The basis for the session action would not be profession of faith, but relation to the pastor.

If this proposal is approved and a child of the pastor desires to become a member of each cooperating congregation on making a profession of faith, it may be difficult to interpret to other young people making their profession of faith at the same time why they don’t have the same choice open to them.

This proposal addresses only the family of a teaching elder serving in a multiple-congregation setting. It would not extend the same privilege to the immediate family members of a ruling elder commissioned to limited pastoral service serving multiple congregations. If this right to dual membership is found to be appropriate for the family of a teaching elder, it is not obvious why the immediate family of a ruling elder should not enjoy the same special consideration.

On Amending F-1.0403 and G-2.0401 to Eliminate the List of Those Whom We Refuse to Discriminate Against—From the Presbytery of Western New York.

The Presbytery of Western New York respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

1. Shall the second paragraph of F-1.0403 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

2. Shall G-2.0401, Election of Ruling Elders and Deacons, be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “Ruling elders and deacons are men and women elected by the congregation from among its members. The nomination and election of ruling elders and deacons shall seek to express the rich diversity of the congregation's membership and shall guarantee strive to ensure participation and inclusiveness (F-1.0403). [The balance of G-2.0401 would remain unchanged].”

Rationale

This overture would strike the list of those whom we refuse to discriminate against, noting instead that “God unites persons into the one body of believers regardless of human sensibilities, constructs, or categories.” The list that this new language would replace keeps growing. It is very tempting—given our present denominational dynamic—to add “sexual orientation” to the list. Yet, when do we stop expanding this constitutional registry? We might also add “body mass,” or “physical deformity,” or “personality type.” We could be yet more inclusive and say regardless of “economic standing,” or “social status,” or “mental acuity;” and the list goes on. Instead of continuing to lengthen the list, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should take the bold step of simply declaring that we refuse to discriminate and leave it at that: “God unites persons ... regardless of human sensibilities, constructs, or categories. There is no place in the life of the church for discrimination against any person,” period.

The laudable goal of expressing “the rich diversity of the congregation's membership” and of guaranteeing “participation and inclusiveness” may not be attainable in practice. For example, persons who are in a minority within “the congregation's membership” may decline to serve when asked; leaving that group or individual without representation. This same situation conceivably could occur in the higher councils of the church as well. Therefore, this goal should remain just that, a goal and not a mandate. The suggested changes, “seek to express” and “strive to ensure,” will preserve the goal without enshrining it as a dogmatic requirement.

The statement in F-1.0403 that “God unites persons through baptism” imputes a causality to “baptism” that surpasses a Reformed understanding of the Sacrament as a symbol that publicly proclaims what God has already accomplished. An individual is a member of “the one body of believers” from the moment he or she repents and believes the Gospel. Baptism celebrates this truth, but does not induce it. The words “through baptism” should be stricken.

Advice on Item 06-13—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 06-13 presents the following issues that the assembly should consider.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the intent of this overture is similar to that of Item 06-08 from the Presbytery of Mississippi, and the committee refers the assembly to advice offered on that overture in addition to its comments here.
The present overture would amend F-1.0403 to strike the phrase “through Baptism” near the end of the second sentence and replace it with “into the one body of believers.” Later in that sentence, the overture would strike the list of human condition regardless of which persons are united in Christ, replacing it with “human sensibilities, constructs, or categories.” Finally, in the fourth sentence, it would strike the word “guarantee” in favor of the phrase, “strive to ensure.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that G-1.0301 speaks of Baptism as “the visible sign” of God’s call to “faith and … membership in the Church, the body of Christ.” The paragraph goes on to meditate on the significance of the Baptism of both children and adults as illuminative of different facets of God’s inclusive love and grace. Section G-1.0402 identifies public profession of faith and Baptism, along with action by the session, as the marks of active membership in the church.

The Directory for Worship, W-2.3000 speaks more broadly still about the significance of Baptism on membership, reminding us that it is a direct command of Jesus to his followers (Mt 28:19), and rehearsing its meanings for the church: dying and rising with Christ (W-2.3002), as a symbol of the covenant forged in creation and with Israel in the passage through water (W-2.3003), and as a mark of inclusion in the covenant community (W-2.3004). Section W-2.3005 is particularly helpful:

The body of Christ is one, and Baptism is the bond of unity in Christ. As they are united with Christ through faith, Baptism unites the people of God with each other and with the church of every time and place. Barriers of race, gender, status, and age are to be transcended. Barriers of nationality, history, and practice are to be overcome [emphasis added].

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that the removal of the phrase “through Baptism” weakens the clear connection between Baptism and membership in the “one body of Christ” maintained elsewhere in the polity. In addition, the simultaneous removal of “through Baptism” and the insertion of “into the one body of believers” may give rise to the suggestion that only those who are “believers”—as opposed to “both believers and their children” (W-2.3008a, emphasis added; see also G-1.0301)—are included in the Church. To the extent that this impression was created or given credence, it would represent a significant departure from the view of Baptism and membership expressed in our Constitution.

With regard to the replacement of the list of human conditions with “human sensibilities, constructs, and categories,” the Advisory Committee on the Constitution refers to its advice on Item 05-08, which proposes a similar emendation. As noted in that advice, this change would weaken the sentence. In addition, the precise referent of “human sensibilities, constructs, and categories” is considerably less clear than is the present language of the second sentence of F-1.0403.

With regard to the replacement of “guarantee” with “seek to ensure,” the committee advises, as it did in its advice on Item 06-08, that the emendation considerably weakens the church’s expressed commitment to living out the unity of Christ in the life and governance of the church. That the church fails in living out its guarantee is a given; we are finally sinful and fall short of God’s intent for us. Such sinfulness and failure should not be an excuse to weakening the church’s commitment to living out its divinely given identity, that all of us are “one in Christ Jesus.”

The overture further proposes to amend G-2.0401, the description of the ruling elder, by inserting the words “seek to” prior to the word “express” in the second sentence, and by striking the word “guarantee” and inserting the words “strive to ensure” prior to the word “participation” at the end of that same sentence. As with the change of similar nature proposed by this overture to F-1.0403, this weakens the church’s commitment to displaying the unity of Christ through the diversity of its membership.

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) believes that the intent of Item 06-13 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed language can be made clearer and more consistent with that intent by being revised to the following:

Amend the second paragraph of F-1.0403 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction gender, status, age, nationality, history, or practice. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons and groups within its membership. No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution.”

Advice and Counsel on Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17 recommend essentially three changes to the Book of Order, all having to do with statements in the section on Unity in Diversity (F-1.0403) and G-1.0204: (1) a softening of the word “guarantee” in the section on diverse representation on governance committees and worship; (2) the removal of the explicit list to which that representation applies; and (3) the removal of the wording “through baptism” which undergirds the church’s unity.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17 be disapproved.

Rationale

The 1983 Articles of Agreement between the PCUS and the UPCUSA contained the following statement in Article 8, Section 8.2.

Racial ethnic members in the United States (Presbyterians of African, Hispanic and Asian descent and Native Americans) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision-making of the Church, and shall be able to form caucuses. Participation and representation of racial ethnic membership shall be assured by the Committee on Representation. …

We keep before us those things that we must remember: biblical truths that we study, memorize, hear in church each Sunday; laws that we must obey; even our “to-do” lists. Black churches in the UPCUSA had deep concerns of having no voice and no role in the new PC(USA), the predominantly white church, where the majority would rule. Hence the clear provisions of the Articles of Agreement, with minority groups explicitly listed and a mechanism for reminding us of their membership in this church (COR) and their need for representation. Removal of the “guarantee” for participation and the explicit list is an affront to all those churches and groups that joyfully celebrated based on these articles in 1983.

While the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recognizes that, in some geographical areas, low racial ethnic populations may make fulfillment of this “guarantee” difficult, exceptions can be granted. It is felt, however, that removal of the assurance in the Book of Order would begin a “slippery slope” of failing to search adequately for full representation.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-13

Advice and Counsel on Overture 06-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Rationale

Guaranteed representation has been a hallmark of Presbyterian polity and practice for many years. Reformed theologies of the church are marked by their identification of those who make up the church as the baptized. We find the inserted phrase “human sensibilities, constructs, or categories” confusing and without precedent in Presbyterian polity or Reformed theology. The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns understands that full compliance with parts of our Constitution that guarantee representation to all is not always realized. Nevertheless, stating that such representation is guaranteed commits us all, even as we struggle with our racism, our unwillingness to challenge privilege and hegemonic practices, and our inertia when confronted with a sinful status quo to move toward a more faithful stance as a church and as bodies within the church. Eliminating such lists may move us toward permitting greater mono-cultural composition of bodies within the church, with the argument that we strive and we failed. This is not what God calls us to in terms of representation.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 06-13.

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 06-08 is applicable here as well:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the Advice and Counsel of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the rationale of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution. Changing the wording to F-1.0403 not only weakens the church’s commitment to inclusion for all but attempts to claim discrimination no longer exists or is nominal at best. The human categories specifically mentioned are all examples of people groups who are unquestionably affected by discrimination. Naming the groups articulates our recognition of this fact and our commitment to working against these known forms of discrimination. Watering down the language to the vague term, “human categories,” flies in the face of the 1983 Articles of Agreement, which were intentionally specific. All “human categories” do not represent people groups who are and have historically been discriminated against, which is why the specificity of the current language is appropriate and ultimately more effective in articulating the true intent behind the statement.
Comment on Items 06-08, 06-13, 06-17—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17.

Rationale

The proposed amendments to F-1.0403 and G-2.0401 are dangerous to the Body of Christ and our own integrity. As people of faith, we first seek the Lord, but we are renewed by the living word of God’s Scripture. The Living Word helps us understand who God is, our relationship to God, and our requisite relationship with one another. A central text in the self-understanding of call, for the sixteen elected members of the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) to particular service within the PC(USA), is found in 1 Corinthians 12. The tremendous diversity that makes up the Church is described as “one body, many parts.” As part of a single living organism, none of the parts can remain alive without being connected to the rest of the body, neither is one part greater than another. The metaphor is instructive to us as we address the actions recommended in Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17 to varying degrees.

In other parts of Scripture the oft echoed line of letting those with “ears to hear” and “eyes to see” witness God’s amazing work, but the others are left to their own illusory existences, disconnected from one another and from God. The idea of needing the right lens is critical to the ministry of the GACOR and to see injustice as status quo acts to disguise disparity and disregard difference, those privileged in a system are rendered blind to its faults, incapable without assistance to see how the system advantages some with unearned privileges and disadvantages others (sometimes creating real harm).

The list of conditions and identities currently included in F-1.0403 are not merely “human categories.” They have real meaning and consequences in human community. Systemic disadvantage, disparities in leadership, health, wealth, etc. are real impacts for persons in these categories. The intent of a person from a disadvantaged group makes little or no change to the altered realities they experience. The lack of women serving in installed pastorates as head of staff in large congregations remains infinitesimally small despite the majority of persons attending and graduating Presbyterian seminaries are female. These patterns are echoed in the much lower proportion of women being ordained relative to their ratio of persons in the ordination track. Race, while described as a social construct, has real effects on persons depending on what labels are attached to their skin color and features. We do not have to think too hard before coming up with numerous examples in church and society of racialized outcomes distorting the fullness God intends for human community. We talk about these realities in Scripture as well as in our Confessions. These are but two examples.

The GACOR has learned to look at the church and the world training its eyes and ears to see with lenses tuned to how power and privilege are wielded. These classes make visible the lived experiences of persons who must contend with labels affixed to them because they are members of groups deemed “other” but the dominant group who determines the norms. Disparity and discriminatory practice are rife in human community and must be resisted. These realities are expressly why F-1.0403 exists in the first place so that we may, in the words of A Brief Statement of Faith, remind ourselves that

the Spirit gives us courage
to pray without ceasing,
to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior,
to unmask idolatries in Church and culture,
to hear the voices of peoples long silenced,
and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace. (The Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 65–71)

Unearned advantage results in an ability to “not see” and “not hear”—it allows persons to be silent in the presence of oppression and harm being foisted on others. Those who are privileged within a system are allowed to pretend they are not subject to the rules which create their advantage, and in doing so access even more advantage. It is not a mistake that Jesus made a big deal in his ministry of being witnesses of and for one another. Section F-1.0403 is one way we express this foundational principle of being Presbyterian within our communion. Seeing one another and connecting to one another to resist those was we are pulled apart along lines of difference, well, these are why we use the banner of “Unity in Diversity” for this section of the Foundations.

As you consider these amendments and the sometimes seemingly innocuous shift in language they suggest, you may want to consult the Preface of the Book of Order, which reminds the reader of the language used throughout the Constitution how it is interpreted.

In this Book of Order

(1) SHALL and IS TO BE/ARE TO BE signify practice that is mandated,
(2) SHOULD signifies practice that is strongly recommended,
By this measure the current the language of “shall guarantee” signifies a practice that is mandated. The suggested replacement “commits itself” does not find its equivalent in this guideline and provides a standard with is at best uncertain and vague. This is not the only place where the suggested amendment produces an ambiguous new standard that is confusing. How is it that this assertion of membership now has a the addition of “morals,” followed up by the addition of “personal faith” and these are set up as a means for being “denied participation” The Advisory Committee on the Constitution does a good job in its comment explaining the various places where membership and leadership standards are distinguished. In F-1.0403 it is clearly an expression of the rich diversity of the church’s membership. The imposition of anxieties about standards of ordination and leadership in this section create an obstacle and become a stumbling block, denying groups of persons access to being welcomed by God’s family in worship and the church’s life.

This principle in the Foundations also reminds us of our commitment to be faithful. Within a Presbyterian and Reformed understanding, discerning the will of God for the church is done by listening to the Spirit with one another, connected in community. If we must be in community in order to best discern the will of God, it stands to reason that the greater the diversity of the community, the wider the participation, the greater the capacities for discerning the will of God, the greater access to gifts in community, the deeper faithfulness in the gathering. We err, when we fail to acknowledge where human community falls short, and does so systemically. To err in this way is to bind the body (the Body of Christ) with the shackles of the status quo. The suggested changes in Items 06-13 and 06-17 to make adjustments to G-2.0401 are efforts to lessen the standard and empower the inertia of inaction, enforcing the status quo.

As a testimony to the importance of this small piece of the Foundations, F-1.0403 appears in the Form of Government cited in twelve different locations and is cited once in the Directory of Worship in reference to “Worship and Ministry within the Community of Faith.” The GACOR humbly suggests the assembly pause before it considers amendment.

At every age and time, God calls us as the church to fight against oppressive structures that systematically alienate people from relationship with God and one another and which denies us the gifts of their leadership. The gospel and epistle writers named most every problem and issue, and declared that everyone who believes in Jesus Christ shall be included in the body of Christ. We live into that hope when we remain with the language of F-1.0403 as it is. Even in church, our shared cultural identity is deeply rooted in the dominant culture of U.S. society. As the denomination envisions means to grow the church deep and wide, we are called to preach and practice effective ways to include, especially those persons who are categorically discriminated against and denied the ability to determine their identity and expression unencumbered by demands made by the culture.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-13

Comment on Item 06-13—From the Office of the General Assembly.

In lifting up the importance of “Unity and Diversity” within the Reformed tradition, F-1.0403 affirms, “the unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership” [emphasis added]. As one body with many members (1 Cor. 12:12–31), F-1.0403 recognizes the need for diverse membership in the body of Christ and affirms that through baptism Christ unites persons regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction.

Along these lines, G-1.0302 in the Form of Government calls congregations to be a place of “welcome and openness” acknowledging that “no person shall be denied membership for any reason not related to profession of faith.” The Book of Order, F-1.0403, further notes that within the PC(USA)’s membership, “no member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution” [emphasis added] In line with this italicized clause, the Constitution does place limits on who may be ordained as deacons, ruling elders, or teaching elders in accordance with Chapter Two of the Form of Government (“Ordered Ministry, Commissioning, and Certification”) as well as W-4.4003 (“Constitutional Questions for Ordination, Installation, and Commissioning”) in the Directory for Worship.

In accordance with Reformed theological standards, W-4.4003 reminds the church that, among others, those seeking ordination and/or installation to ordered ministries must answer the following questions:

a. Do you trust in Jesus Christ your Savior, acknowledge him Lord of all and Head of the Church, and through him believe in one God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit?
The triune God gives to the congregation all the gifts of the gospel necessary to being the Church.

counsels a diverse pool of members from which to nominate, examine and elect those who are called to ordered ministry.

“G-1.0101 The Mission of the Congregation

“The congregation is the church engaged in the mission of God in its particular context and within the world at large. The triune God gives to the congregation all the gifts of the gospel necessary to being the Church, making the congregation a basic form of the church, but it is not of itself a sufficient form of the church in its own right. Thus, as such, congregations are bound called to answer the prayer of Christ Jesus ‘that they may all be one’ by voluntarily binding themselves together in communion with one another, united in relationships of accountability and responsibility, and contributing their strengths to the benefit of the whole, and are called, collectively, the church.

“The congregation’s people carry out the ministries of proclamation, sharing the Sacraments, and living in covenant life with God and each other, and working in concert as a primary agent of mission. In the life of the congregation, individual believers are equipped for the ministry of witness to serve as witnesses to the love and grace of God in and for the world. Guided by the Holy Spirit and grounded in Scripture, the congregation labor in God’s mission of redemptive reconciliation, reaching out to people, communities, and the world to share the good news of Jesus Christ, to gather for worship, to offer care and nurture to God’s children, to speak for social justice and righteousness, to bear witness to the truth and to the reign of God that now is and is coming into the world.”

Rationale

This amendment seeks to begin restoring the congregation’s status and role, which was diminished by the adoption of the new Form of Government. The supposition that a Christian congregation is “not of itself a sufficient form of the church” cannot be sustained. Both the Bible and The Book of Confessions affirm that a particular church is “a basic and sufficient form of the church in its own right.” “Binding themselves together in communion with one another, united in relationships of accountability and responsibility, and contributing their strengths to the benefit of the whole” does not make congregations into something different or more than what they already are. Sufficiency to be the church flows from and through Jesus Christ alone.

Though it does not change the status of a congregation as a sufficient form of the church, such effort is very important because Christ Jesus himself prays for the unity of his church. Congregations do well in “voluntarily binding themselves together.” Such unity should never be forced or mandated. “Joining in communion with one another” is and of right ought to be the free choice of each congregation, voluntarily answering the prayer of Jesus Christ by “uniting in relationships of accountability and responsibility.” As particular churches exercise this right, the resulting fellowship is constituted as a community of equals engaged in reciprocal relationship. Each congregation contributes “their strengths to the benefit of the whole church.”

All Christians have been called to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ and to serve others. The local congregation is where Christians can come together to worship and serve God. “The congregation is the church engaged in the mission of God in its particular context and within the world at large.” As a sufficient form of the church, it “labors in God’s mission of redemptive reconciliation” in a mission field that is local, regional, and global. At all times congregations shall remain grounded in Scripture and guided by the Holy Spirit.

The particular church carries a unique responsibility to ensure that its members are prepared for this concerted effort and that “individual believers are equipped to serve as witnesses to the love and grace of God in the world.”

As congregations and their members “bear witness to the truth and to the reign of God,” it is important to keep in view the knowledge that God’s rule both “now is and is coming into the world.” “The reign of God” is a present reality. God is orchestrating everything to accomplish the Lord’s own good and perfect will, even as we look forward to that day when God’s reign shall arrive in its fulness.

A congregation is an instrument of God’s purposes “in its own right.” The approval of this amendment will help to restore the status and role of the congregation within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-14

Advice on Item 06-14—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 06-14.

Rationale

The overture proposes to amend G-1.0101—The Mission of the Congregation—by making several changes to both paragraphs of the present text. These changes fundamentally alter the meaning of the paragraph.

In the first paragraph:

In the first sentence: add “and within the world at large” after the word, “context.”

In the second and third sentences: reduce the 3rd sentence to a clause in the second, and strike “the” for “a” prior to the word “basic.”

Also in the second and third sentences: strike “but is not of itself a” and insert “and” and add “in its own right” after “church.”

In the fourth sentence: strike “Thus” and insert “As such”; strike “bound” and insert “call to answer the prayer of Christ Jesus ‘that they may all be one’ by voluntarily binding themselves” prior to “together in communion.”

Also in the fourth sentence: strike “united” and insert “uniting” prior to “in relationships.”

In the second paragraph:

In the first sentence: add “, and working in concert as a primary agent of mission” following “each other” at the end of the sentence.

In the second sentence: strike “for the ministry of witness” and insert “to serve as witnesses.”

In the third sentence: insert “Guided by the Holy Spirit and grounded in Scripture,” at the beginning of the sentence.

Also in the third sentence: insert “labors in God’s mission of redemptive reconciliation” following the word “congregation.”
Taken together, these amendments introduce a fundamentally different understanding of the church than that currently found in our polity in at least two ways: (1) they move from an organic connectionalism, in which congregations are bound together through their relationships in the larger church, to a voluntary congregationalism, in which relationships between congregations are a matter of chosen association on the part of the congregations themselves; and (2) they move from an understanding of ministry as the witness of the whole people of God within which individuals have their particular ministries, to an understanding in which individual believers are “primary agents of mission” without necessary reference to the congregation as a whole.

(1) From Connectionalism to Congregationalism

The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity is explicit about the connectionalism of the church. Section F-3.0201 is the basic principle: “The particular congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) wherever they are, taken collectively, constitute one church, called the church.”

Out of this basic principle grow other core ideas that undergird our polity:

That the church is gathered in councils of regular gradation, and that the action of any one council is the action of the whole church (F-3.0203). Without this principle it would be necessary to re-ordain deacons, ruling elders, or teaching elders each time one moved from one congregation or presbytery to another.

That review and control of the work of a lower council is the responsibility of a higher council (F-3.0206). Without this principle, a presbytery would be unable to come to the assistance of a congregation in conflict or crisis.

That councils possess the necessary administrative authority to carry out their responsibilities as assigned by a Constitution upon which the church as a whole has agreed (F-3.0209). Without this principle, councils would be paralyzed by constant negotiations and turf battles.

This organic connectionalism is perhaps most eloquently expressed in the opening lines of Chapter Three of the Form of Government (G-3.0101):

The mutual interconnection of the church through its councils is a sign of the unity of the church. Congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), while possessing all the gifts necessary to be the church, are nonetheless not sufficient in themselves to be the church. Rather, they are called to share with others both within and beyond the congregation the task of bearing witness to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in the world. The particular responsibility of the councils of the church is to nurture, guide, and govern those who witness as part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to the end that such witness strengthens the whole church and gives glory to God.

In the service of this charge to “nurture, guide, and govern” presbyteries are charged with responsibility for such things as “Organizing, receiving, merging, dismissing, and dissolving congregations” (G-3.0301a). This indicates that congregations exist as a result of the initiative of the larger church, rather than the larger church being the result of voluntary binding on the part of the congregations themselves.

Establishing and dissolving pastoral relations (G-3.0301a). Thus, the relationship of any pastor with a congregation is the direct result of the action of the presbytery to approve and place the call in the hands of a teaching elder.

Developing a strategy for the mission of the church in its district (G-3.0303a). Pursuant to this charge, the presbytery determines whether and where new congregations are located or existing congregations relocated (G-3.0303b).

Counseling with sessions concerning reported difficulties within a congregation, serving as advisor to the session, intervening as necessary to the health of the congregation, and assuming original jurisdiction over the congregation (G-3.0303d and e).

All of these powers, duties, and interrelationships rest on the foundation of the organic unity of the church, a unity that can neither be entered into nor broken “voluntarily.” Redefining the relationship between congregations as a “voluntary binding” of themselves in communion undercuts the fundamental ecclesiological self-understanding on which the powers and duties of the councils are based.

(2) From the Whole People of God to Individuals as Primary Agents of Mission

The Book of Order is also explicit about the nature of ministry, and the relationship of the individual to the ministry of the whole people of God. In its opening paragraphs, the Foundations for Presbyterian Polity establishes the basic premise that it is the Church as a whole—and not simply individuals—that participates in the mission of God:

The mission of the God in Christ gives shape and substance to the life and work of the Church. In Christ, the Church participates in God’s mission for the transformation of creation and humanity by proclaiming to all people the good news of God’s love, offering to all people the grace of God at font and table, and calling all people to discipleship in Christ. Human beings have no higher goal in life than to glorify and enjoy God now and forever, living in covenant fellowship with God and participating in God’s mission. (F-1.01)
Section G-2.0101 concretizes this principle: “The Church’s ministry is a gift from Jesus Christ to the whole Church. Christ alone rules, calls, teaches, and uses the Church as he wills…. The basic form of ministry is the ministry of the whole people of God.”

Section G-2.0102 continues the thought as it applies to the ordered ministries of the church: “…Ordered ministries are gifts to the whole church to order its life so that the ministry of the whole people of God may flourish.…”

The point of these passages is that the membership of a congregation is not an aggregate of individuals each engaged as “primary agents of mission” but a covenant community engaged in participating in the mission of Christ, to which individuals contribute their skills, gifts, and resources.

The Book of Order does define the role and ministry of the individual member, G-1.0304 provides that:

Membership in the Church of Jesus Christ is a joy and a privilege. It is also a commitment to participate in Christ’s mission. A faithful member bears witness to God’s love and grace and promises to be involved responsibly in the ministry of Christ’s Church. …

There follows then a list of ways in which such responsible involvement is expressed.

The overture thus poses a basic ecclesiological choice for the church. Is the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) a voluntary association of congregations which are themselves voluntary associations of individuals engaged as “primary agents of mission”? Or are we an organic whole, called into being by the summons of Christ, to which each of us is related as the branches to the vine? The latter is the historic and current self-understanding of the church.

Item 06-15

[Item 06-15 was withdrawn by the Presbytery of Grace on Saturday, June 9, 2012.]

Item 06-16

[The assembly answered Item 06-16 by the action taken on Item 06-04. See pp. 26, 28.]

On Amending G-3.0301, Composition and Responsibilities—From the Presbytery of North Puget Sound.

The Presbytery of North Puget Sound overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

“The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district. The presbytery shall adopt and communicate to the sessions a plan for determining how many ruling elders each session should elect as commissioners to presbytery, with a goal of numerical parity of teaching elders and ruling elders. This plan shall require each session to elect at least one commissioner and shall take into consideration the size of congregations as well as a method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. Ruling elders elected as officers of the presbytery shall be enrolled as members during the period of their service. A presbytery may provide by its own rule for the enrollment of ruling elders serving as moderators of committees or commissions or commissioned to particular pastoral service (G-2.10).”

Rationale

The former Form of Government allowed presbyteries to provide commissioned lay pastors a voice and vote during their time of service. They serve as pastors, like teaching elders, and should have voice and vote if a presbytery wants to allow it.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-16

Advice on Item 06-16—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 06-16.

Rationale

The overture would insert “or commissioned to pastoral service (G-2.10)” at the end of the final sentence of the first paragraph of G-3.0301. The effect of the change would be to include ruling elders commissioned to particular pastoral service under the terms of G-2.10 among those for whose enrollment as members the presbytery would provide by its own rule. Presently, the passage only covers ruling elders serving as moderators of presbytery committees or commissions.
Previous versions of the Form of Government provided that a presbytery might include in the commission of a (then) commissioned lay pastor the privilege of voice and vote in the meetings of the presbytery (2009–2011 Book of Order, G-14.0562e). Inserting the above-stated provision restores this option to the discretion of the presbytery and continues what has become standard practice in numerous presbyteries.

[The assembly answered Item 06-17 by the action taken on Item 06-08. See pp. 26, 28.]

On Amending F-1.0403 “Unity in Diversity” and G-2.0401 “Election of Ruling Elders and Deacons” to Ensure Participation—From the Presbytery of Grace.

The Presbytery of Grace respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote

1. Shall the second paragraph of F-1.0403 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism into the one body of believers regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction stance within the historic Christian tradition as expressed in The Book of Confessions. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall ensure full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this constitution.”

2. Shall G-2.0401, Election of Ruling Elders and Deacons, be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “Ruling elders and deacons are men and women elected by the congregation from among its members. The nomination and election of ruling elders and deacons shall seek to express the rich diversity of the congregation’s membership and shall ensure participation and inclusiveness (F-1.0403). [The balance of G-2.0401 would remain unchanged.]”

Rationale

The laudable goal of expressing “the rich diversity of the congregation’s membership” and of guaranteeing “participation and inclusiveness” may not be attainable in practice. For example, persons who are in a minority within the congregation’s membership may decline to serve when asked; leaving that group or individual without representation. This same situation conceivably could occur in the higher councils of the church as well. Therefore, this goal should remain just that, a goal and not a mandate. The suggested changes, “seek to express” and “strive to ensure,” will preserve the goal without enshrining it as a dogmatic requirement.

The statement in F-1.0403 that “God unites persons through baptism regardless of … theological conviction” is overly broad and imputes a causality to “baptism” that surpasses a Reformed understanding of the sacrament as a symbol that publicly proclaims what God has already accomplished. An individual is a member of “the one body of believers” from the moment he or she repents and believes the Gospel. Baptism celebrates this truth, but does not induce it.

Simply saying “regardless of … theological conviction” throws the door wide open to giving “representation” to all manner of spurious notions that may be contrary to theologically Reformed faith and practice. The phrase “regardless of … theological stance within the historic Christian tradition as expressed in The Book of Confessions” helps to make it clear that people come “into the one body of believers” by the narrow door of trust in Christ alone. Yet, that door is not so narrow as to exclude a variety of valid theological convictions that can be drawn from the rich well of “the historic Christian tradition as expressed in The Book of Confessions.”

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-17

Advice on Item 06-17—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 06-17 and refers the assembly to its advice on Item 06-13.

Rationale

Item 06-17 is identical to Item 06-13 except that it proposes to amend the second sentence of the second paragraph of F-1.0403 by striking “conviction” and inserting “stance within the historic Christian tradition as expressed in The Book of Confessions.”
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the first sentence of F-1.0403 pertains to the action of God to unite persons through baptism into the membership of the whole Christian Church, not simply the membership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the term “Church” in the Book of Order refers to the Church Universal; see footnote to the first page of the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity). The claim that God unites into membership in the Church of Jesus Christ only those persons who subscribe to the standards of confessions in The Book of Confessions is inaccurate, since persons in such Free Church traditions as the Baptist traditions would accept no creedal requirements, and yet would be regarded by our polity as fellow Christians.

The committee further notes that membership in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has never been subject to subscription to the confessions, but only to the basic prerequisites of profession of faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior and baptism (G-1.0401). Moreover, the church has committed itself to welcoming “all persons who trust in God’s grace in Jesus Christ and desire to become part of the fellowship and ministry of his Church” (Book of Order, G-1.0302).

The Advisory committee on the Constitution suggests that it may be helpful to see the second paragraph of F-1.0403 in its larger context. The section F-1.04 as a whole deals with the ongoing movement of the Spirit of God in the life of the Church Universal, and in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a subset of the larger Church. Section F-1.0403 begins with a quotation from Galatians 3:27–28 that affirms that we who are “… baptized into Christ have clothed [ourselves] with Christ. …” The unity of the Church then rests on this baptismal ingrafting into Christ: “There is no longer Jew or Greek, … [for] you are [all] one in Christ. …”

The second paragraph of F-1.0403 is a multi-tiered expression of this fundamental principle of unity in Christ. It is governed by the topic sentence: that the unity of Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ (note again the use of “Church” here). The second sentence then makes explicit what is implied in the first: that within that Church, God unites through baptism people who are widely diverse in their human particularity. Race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, and theological conviction—all these expressions of human diversity are secondary to God’s act in Christ to unite persons in the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ. It is important to note that the “membership” referred to in this sentence is not the membership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), but that of the Church Universal. The third sentence crystallizes this principle of unity in diversity in the Church Universal by declaring that discrimination against any person is always out of place among Christians of any sort, not merely of Presbyterians.

Only in the final two sentences does the second paragraph of F-1.0403 apply these principles to the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The fourth sentence commits the church—now lowercase and referring to the PC(USA)—to full participation and representation in the worship, governance, and emerging life of the church. Similarly, the fifth sentence affirms the fourth—that no member of the PC(USA) shall be denied participation and representation. Here, however, there is one important limitation imposed on the expression of diversity within the PC(USA): that there are reasons stated in our Constitution that may restrict or define participation. Such limits include, but are not necessarily limited to, the requirement of faith in Jesus Christ and the renunciation of sin for membership (see G-1.0301, G-1.0304, and W-4.2003), and the gifts and qualifications stated in G-2.0104 in the case of ordered ministry.

Advice and Counsel on Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17 recommend essentially three changes to the Book of Order, all having to do with statements in the section on Unity in Diversity (F-1.0403) and G-1.0204: (1) a softening of the word “guarantee” in the section on diverse representation on governance committees and worship; (2) the removal of the explicit list to which that representation applies; and (3) the removal of the wording “through baptism” which undergirds the church’s unity.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17 be disapproved.

Rationale

The 1983 Articles of Agreement between the PCUS and the UPCUSA contained the following statement in Article 8, Section 8.2.

Racial ethnic members in the United States (Presbyterians of African, Hispanic and Asian descent and Native Americans) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision-making of the Church, and shall be able to form caucuses.

Participation and representation of racial ethnic membership shall be assured by the Committee on Representation. …

We keep before us those things that we must remember: biblical truths that we study, memorize, hear in church each Sunday; laws that we must obey; even our “to-do” lists. Black churches in the UPCUSA had deep concerns of having no voice and no role in the new PC(USA), the predominantly white church, where the majority would rule. Hence the clear provisions of the Articles of Agreement, with minority groups explicitly listed and a mechanism for reminding us of their membership in this church (COR) and their need for representation. Removal of the “guarantee” for participation and the explicit list is an affront to all those churches and groups that joyfully celebrated based on these articles in 1983.

While the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recognizes that, in some geographical areas, low racial ethnic populations may make fulfillment of this “guarantee” difficult, exceptions can be granted. It is felt, however, that removal of the assurance in the Book of Order would begin a “slippery slope” of failing to search adequately for full representation.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-17

Advice and Counsel on Overture 06-17—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 06-17.

Rationale

Guaranteed representation has been a hallmark of Presbyterian polity and practice for many years. Reformed theologies of the church are marked by their identification of those who make up the church as the baptized. The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns understands that full compliance with parts of our Constitution that guarantee representation to all is not always realized. Nevertheless, stating that such representation is guaranteed commits us all, even as we struggle with our racism, our unwillingness to challenge privilege and hegemonic practices, and our inertia when confronted with a sinful status quo to move toward a more faithful stance as a church and as bodies within the church. Eliminating such lists may move us toward permitting greater mono-cultural composition of bodies within the church, with the argument that we strived and we failed. This is not what God calls us to in terms of representation.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-17

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-17—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 06-17.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on Item 06-17. We would further add that there is great danger in weakening the language of “guarantee” to “strive to ensure” when discussing full participation and representation in worship, governance, and emerging life of the church. The groups named are those who have historically experienced and continue to experience systemic discrimination in the world and in our church. As the body of Christ, it is our call to commit ourselves to working against the systems that hold people back. There is no reason we cannot commit to guaranteeing full participation and representation, and doing so can only result in the body of Christ more fully and accurately representing the breadth and diversity of God’s children and the gifts they bring. This is no “dogmatic requirement,” but rather, a faithful commitment to the entire body of Christ.

Comment on Items 06-08, 06-13, 06-17—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17.

Rationale

The proposed amendments to F-1.0403 and G-2.0401 are dangerous to the Body of Christ and our own integrity. As people of faith, we first seek the Lord, but we are renewed by the living word of God’s Scripture. The Living Word helps us understand who God is, our relationship to God, and our requisite relationship with one another. A central text in the self-understanding of call, for the sixteen elected members of the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) to particular service within the PC(USA), is found in 1 Corinthians 12. The tremendous diversity that makes up the Church is described as “one body, many parts.” As part of a single living organism, none of the parts can remain alive without being connected to the rest of the body, neither is one part greater than another. The metaphor is instructive to us as we address the actions recommended in Items 06-08, 06-13, and 06-17 to varying degrees.

In other parts of Scripture the oft echoed line of letting those with “ears to hear” and “eyes to see” witness God’s amazing work, but the others are left to their own illusory existences, disconnected from one another and from God. The idea of needing the right lens is critical to the ministry of the GACOR and to see injustice as status quo acts to disguise disparity and disregard difference, those privileged in a system are rendered blind to its faults, incapable without assistance to see how the system advantages some with unearned privileges and disadvantages others (sometimes creating real harm)
The list of conditions and identities currently included in F-1.0403 are not merely “human categories.” They have real meaning and consequences in human community. Systemic disadvantage, disparities in leadership, health, wealth, etc. are real impacts for persons in these categories. The intent of a person from a disadvantaged group makes little or no change to the altered realities they experience. The lack of women serving in installed pastorates as head of staff in large congregations remains infinitesimally small despite the majority of persons attending and graduating Presbyterian seminaries are female. These patterns are echoed in the much lower proportion of women being ordained relative to their ratio of persons in the ordination track. Race, while described as a social construct, has real effects on persons depending on what labels are affixed to them because they are members of groups deemed “other” but the dominant group who determines the norms. Disparity and discriminatory practice are rife in human community and must be resisted. These realities are expressly why F-1.0403 exists in the first place so that we may, in the words of A Brief Statement of Faith, remind ourselves that parity and discriminatory practice are rife in human community and must be resisted. These realities are expressly why F-1.0403 exists in the first place so that we may, in the words of A Brief Statement of Faith, remind ourselves that

the Spirit gives us courage
 to pray without ceasing,
 to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior,
 to unmask idolatries in Church and culture,
 to hear the voices of peoples long silenced,
 and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace. (The Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 65–71)

Unearned advantage results in an ability to “not see” and “not hear”—it allows persons to be silent in the presence of oppression and harm being foisted on others. Those who are privileged within a system are allowed to pretend they are not subject to the rules which create their advantage, and in doing so access even more advantage. It is not a mistake that Jesus made a big deal in his ministry of being witnesses of and for one another. Section F-1.0403 is one way we express this foundational principle of being Presbyterian within our communion. Seeing one another and connecting to one another to resist those wars we are pulled apart along lines of difference, well, these are why we use the banner of “Unity in Diversity” for this section of the Foundations.

As you consider these amendments and the sometimes seemingly innocuous shift in language they suggest, you may want to consult the Preface of the Book of Order, which reminds the reader of the language used throughout the Constitution how it is interpreted.

In this Book of Order
(1) SHALL and IS TO BE/ARE TO BE signify practice that is mandated,
(2) SHOULD signifies practice that is strongly recommended,
(3) IS APPROPRIATE signifies practice that is commended as suitable,
(4) MAY signifies practice that is permissible but not required.
(5) ADVISORY HANDBOOK signifies a handbook produced by agencies of the General Assembly to guide synods and presbyteries in procedures related to the oversight of ministry. Such handbooks suggest procedures that are commended, but not required. (Book of Order (2011-2013) Preface, emphasis added)

By this measure the current the language of “shall guarantee” signifies a practice that is mandated. The suggested replacement “commits itself” does not find its equivalent in this guideline and provides a standard with is at best uncertain and vague. This is not the only place where the suggested amendment produces an ambiguous new standard that is confusing. How is it that this assertion of membership now has a the addition of “morals,” followed up by the addition of “personal faith” and these are set up as a means for being “denied participation” The Advisory Committee on the Constitution does a good job in its comment explaining the various places where membership and leadership standards are distinguished. In F-1.0403 it is clearly an expression of the rich diversity of the church’s membership. The imposition of anxieties about standards of ordination and leadership in this section create an obstacle and become a stumbling block, denying groups of persons access to being welcomed by God’s family in worship and the church’s life.

This principle in the Foundations also reminds us of our commitment to be faithful. Within a Presbyterian and Reformed understanding, discerning the will of God for the church is done by listening to the Spirit with one another, connected in community. If we must be in community in order to best discern the will of God, it stands to reason that the greater the diversity of the community, the wider the participation, the greater the capacities for discerning the will of God, the greater access to gifts in community, the deeper faithfulness in the gathering. We err, when we fail to acknowledge where human community falls short, and does so systemically. To err in this way is to bind the body (the Body of Christ) with the shackles of the status quo. The suggested changes in Items 06-13 and 06-17 to make adjustments to G-2.0401 are efforts to lessen the standard and empower the inertia of inaction, enforcing the status quo.
As a testimony to the importance of this small piece of the Foundations, F-1.0403 appears in the Form of Government cited in twelve different locations and is cited once in the Directory of Worship in reference to “Worship and Ministry within the Community of Faith.” The GACOR humbly suggests the assembly pause before it considers amendment.

At every age and time, God calls us as the church to fight against oppressive structures that systematically alienate people from relationship with God and one another and which denies us the gifts of their leadership. The gospel and epistle writers named most every problem and issue, and declared that everyone who believes in Jesus Christ shall be included in the body of Christ. We live into that hope when we remain with the language of F-1.0403 as it is. Even in church, our shared cultural identity is deeply rooted in the dominant culture of U.S. society. As the denomination envisions means to grow the church deep and wide, we are called to preach and practice effective ways to include, especially those persons who are categorically discriminated against and denied the ability to determine their identity and expression unencumbered by demands made by the culture.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

[The assembly approved Item 06-18 with amendment. See pp. 26, 28.]

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) amend D-3.0101b(2) as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“(2) A teaching elder engaged in work within the geographic bounds of a presbytery other than the presbytery of membership, whether that work is under the jurisdiction of the presbytery or not, does, by engaging in that work, submit to the jurisdiction of that presbytery for the purposes of discipline. Should disciplinary process be initiated against a teaching elder under this provision, the presbytery of membership shall be notified. The presbytery within whose bounds the teaching elder is engaged in work may, at its discretion, either [alternatively, chose to] cede jurisdiction to the presbytery of membership, or choose to cooperate with the presbytery of membership in any disciplinary inquiry, alternative form of resolution, or trial. This paragraph shall apply even if the provisions of G-3.0306 concerning permission to labor outside or within the bounds have not been followed. This paragraph shall not apply if the teaching elder is working in an approved, validated ministry under the provisions of G-2.0502 and G-2.0503a in other service of this church such as a staff member of a mid or higher council [beyond the session], or of an organization related to one of these councils; or in an organization sponsored by two or more denominations, one of which is this church, such as a joint congregational witness church, a specialized ministry, an administrative office, an interdenominational agency; or as a partner in mission in connection with a church outside the United States of America.”

The Book of Order, D-3.0101b(2), was editorially revised in July 2011 as a result of the new Form of Government from:

(2) A minister engaged in work within the bounds of a presbytery other than the presbytery of membership, whether that work is under the jurisdiction of the presbytery or not, does, by engaging in that work, submit to the jurisdiction of that presbytery for the purposes of discipline. Should disciplinary process be initiated against a minister under this provision, the presbytery of membership shall be notified. This paragraph shall apply even if the provisions of G-11.0410 concerning permission to labor outside or within the bounds have not been followed. This paragraph shall not apply if the minister is working in a validated ministry under the provisions of G-2.0502 and G-2.0503a.

(2) A minister teaching elder engaged in work within the bounds of a presbytery other than the presbytery of membership, whether that work is under the jurisdiction of the presbytery or not, does, by engaging in that work, submit to the jurisdiction of that presbytery for the purposes of discipline. Should disciplinary process be initiated against a minister teaching elder under this provision, the presbytery of membership shall be notified. This paragraph shall apply even if the provisions of G-11.0410 concerning permission to labor outside or within the bounds have not been followed. This paragraph shall not apply if the minister teaching elder is working in a validated ministry under the provisions of G-2.0502 and G-2.0503a.

Issue: The last two sentences of this paragraph refer to a situation that is not found in the current Form of Government, namely “labor outside or within the bounds” requirement found in the former Form of Government as a requirement for a particular validated ministry. The last sentence refers to an exception to that particular validated ministry “labor outside or within the bounds” requirement that exempted persons who were engaged in a validated ministry “in other service of this church” so that they were not required to have approval to “labor outside or within the bounds.” Since there is no longer a category anymore of “labor outside or within the bounds” the third sentence edit is erroneous but moot (not harmful). The final sentence, which was the disciplinary exception to the exception to the labor outside the bounds requirement, now, unfortunately, incorporates the entire validated ministry category as exempt from the requirement of the first part of the paragraph. So that it reads as though the first part of the paragraph does not apply to all persons engaged in a validated ministry as opposed to a Rules of Discipline exception that mirrors the exception to the “labor outside or within the bounds” requirement (excepting persons in other service of this church from getting permission to labor outside or within the bounds) that was a subset of the validated ministry category. This has the effect of making the entire paragraph moot, which does not seem to be the intent of the editors.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-18

Advice on Item 06-18—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC).

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve Item 06-18 with amendment.

Rationale

This referral proposes amendment to D-3.0101b(2) concerning the exercise of jurisdiction for the purposes of discipline of teaching elders laboring outside the bounds of the teaching elder’s presbytery of membership. The amendment seeks to correct changes affecting this provision due to the omission of sections to which this provision refers in the Form of Government. In one case (laboring within bounds), the matters being referenced in D-3.0101b(2) no longer appear in the Form of Government. In the second case, the category of validated ministry being referenced (other service in the church) is no longer clearly and discretely identified. In both cases, the proposed change inserts interpretive language in D-3.0101b(2) seeking to preserve the intent of the provision. The overture supplements the editorial changes inserted in D-3.0101b(2) by the Office of the Stated Clerk under Section B.2.c. of the Organization for Mission in the Manual of the General Assembly for the 2011–2012 edition of the Book of Order and presented to the assembly as Item 06-18.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) will address the changes in the proposed amendment serially.

1. The insertion of “geographic” before the word “bounds”:

   The ACC advises that this is a helpful modification as it removes ambiguity in the assignment of jurisdiction where a non-geographic presbytery may also have a presence in a particular community. It also clarifies that it applies to ministers engaged in service in validated ministries beyond the congregation.

2. The replacement of the sentence, “This paragraph shall apply even if the provisions of G-3.0306 concerning permission to labor outside or within the bounds have not been followed” with the sentence, “The presbytery within whose bounds the teaching elder is engaged in work may, at its discretion, either cede jurisdiction to the presbytery of membership, or choose to cooperate with the presbytery of membership in any disciplinary inquiry, alternative form of resolution or trial.”:

   The ACC regards the intent of this change as a helpful clarification of process to fulfill the responsibility of jurisdiction for the purpose of discipline. However, it advises that the use of the phrase, “may, at its discretion, either” could be understood to imply that these are the only options available to the presbytery in whose bounds the teaching elder is serving. The ACC advises that this may be remedied by replacing the phrase with the words, “may, alternatively, choose to” (with the sentence continuing as proposed), so that the sentence reads, “The presbytery within whose bounds the teaching elder is engaged in work may, alternatively, choose to cede jurisdiction to the presbytery of membership, or choose to cooperate with the presbytery of membership in any disciplinary inquiry, alternative form of resolution or trial.”

3. The replacement of the sentence, “This paragraph shall not apply if the teaching elder is working in a validated ministry under the provisions of G-2.0502 and G-2.0503a.” with the sentence, “This paragraph shall not apply if the teaching elder is working in an approved, validated ministry under the provisions of G-2.0502 and G-2.0503a. in other service of this church such as a staff member of a mid or higher council, or of an organization related to one of these councils; or in an organization sponsored by two or more denominations, one of which is this church, such as a joint congregational witness church, a specialized ministry, an administrative office, an interdenominational agency; or as a partner in mission in connection with a church outside the United States of America.”:

   The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) advises this to be a helpful amendment to restore the clarifying language present in the previous Form of Government. The ACC advises that such clarification is necessary for the order of the mission of the graduated councils of the church, so that those serving these councils may be accountable to the councils, agencies, and partnerships which for which the service is rendered, and to the presbytery of membership for the purpose of discipline.

   However, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the terms “mid council” and “higher council” do not appear elsewhere in the Constitution. We believe the language of the proposed amendment would be clearer and more consistent if the phrase “mid or higher council” were changed to “council beyond the session,” so that the sentence would read,

   This paragraph shall not apply if the teaching elder is working in a validated ministry under the provisions of G-2.0502 and G-2.0503a. in other service of the church such as a staff member of a council beyond the session, or of an organization related to one of these councils; or in an organization sponsored by two or more denominations, one of which is this church, such as a joint congregational witness church, a specialized ministry, an administrative office, an interdenominational agency; or as a partner in mission in connection with a church outside the United States of America.

If the assembly agrees with the intent of Item 06-18, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that, with the exceptions noted under (2) and (3) above, the language of the amendment is clear and consistent to accomplish its intent.

Amending G-3.0104—From the Manager, Polity Guidance and Training

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) answer this request with the following response:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly that the changes to G-3.0104 are not editorial in nature and would require amendment of the Constitution, therefore the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

   “[First three paragraphs remain unchanged.]”

   “Each council shall elect a clerk who shall record the transactions of the council, keep its rolls of membership and attendance, maintain any required registers, including the rolls of all Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators and all Ruling Elders commissioned to particular pastoral service, preserve its records, and furnish extracts from them when required by another council of the church. [The rest of the text of G-3.0104 remains the same.]”

2. Amend G-3.0305 as follows: [Text be deleted is shown with strike through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “G-3.0305 Minutes and Records

   “Minutes and other official records of the presbytery are the property of the presbytery, and are subject to the review specified in G-3.0108. The stated clerk is responsible for the preservation of the presbytery’s minutes and records. These records shall include the rolls of the presbytery’s membership and registers of all Certified Christian Educators, Certified Associate Christian Educators, and ruling elders commissioned to particular pastoral service.”

Rationale

This recommendation comes as the result of a request received by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution from the manager of Polity Guidance and Training. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution does not initiate business before the assembly. However, pursuant to G-6.02, the Stated Clerk must submit to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution all questions requiring an interpretation of the Book of Order by the General Assembly. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution, in turn, must report its findings and any recommendations it has to the General Assembly. The assembly is free to approve, amend, or decline to approve the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution further recommends to the Stated Clerk that the current text of G-3.0104 contains a mixture of elements that would properly be separated into different provisions. Section G-3.0104 pertains to the office of the clerk, clerk of session, and stated clerk of higher councils and is not properly the place for enumerating the rolls and registers a clerk or stated clerk is required to keep. Moreover, the inclusion of the requirement to keep “rolls of all Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators and all ruling elders commissioned to particular pastoral service” is improperly placed in a sentence governing the function of all clerks, including clerks of session. These functions are appropriate only to the stated clerk of the presbytery, and not to any other clerk or stated clerk. This material is most appropriate in the section of Chapter Three pertaining to the presbytery (G-3.03) and specifically in G-3.0305, Minutes and Records, where its application is limited to the work of the stated clerk of the presbytery.
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution therefore advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the intent of this editorial correction may best be accomplished by amending both G-3.0104 and G-3.0305 as indicated above.

Question Presented to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Manager of Polity Guidance and Training of the Department of Constitutional Services asked whether the above are editorial changes, and whether the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly may be instructed to make such changes:

G-3.0104 Officers

“Each council shall elect a clerk who shall record the transactions of the council, keep its rolls of membership and attendance including two registers, one listing all Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators, and one listing all Ruling Elders commissioned to particular pastoral service…”

Rationale

Amendment 10-E, recommended by the 219th General Assembly (2010) and approved by the presbyteries amended G-11.0407 to read as follows:

“The stated clerk shall maintain four rolls, one listing the names of all of the ministers of the Word and Sacrament who are continuing members of the presbytery and who are active members, one listing the names of all of the ministers of the Word and Sacrament who are continuing members of the presbytery and who are members-at-large, one listing the names of all of the ministers of the Word and Sacrament who are continuing members of the presbytery and who are inactive members, and one listing all Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators within the bounds of the presbytery who are entitled to the privilege of the floor with voice at all presbytery meetings during the term of service in an educational ministry under the jurisdiction of the presbytery, and a fifth roll listing those who have been deleted from the other rolls. On or before December 31 of each year, the presbytery shall determine the category of membership of each continuing member in accordance with the relevant sections of this chapter and cause appropriate record of such determination to be made. The stated clerk shall also maintain two registers, one listing all Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators within the bounds of the presbytery who are entitled to the privilege of the floor with voice at all presbytery meetings during the term of service in an educational ministry under the jurisdiction of the presbytery, and one listing all Commissioned Lay Pastors within the bounds of the presbytery who are entitled to the privilege of the floor with voice and vote at all presbytery meetings during the term of service in a church or other validated ministry.”

The editorial adaptation of this amendment to the newly adopted Form of Government the G-3.0104 reads as follows:

“Each council shall elect a clerk who shall record the transactions of the council, keep its rolls of membership and attendance, maintain any required registers, including the rolls of all Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators and all Ruling Elders commissioned to particular pastoral service, preserve its records, and furnish extracts from them when required by another council of the church.”

The manager of Polity Guidance and Training suggests the recommended editorial changes, including replacing the word “roll” with “registers,” would more faithfully align with the wording of the originally approved overture.

Item 06-Info

A. Governing Bodies Statements of Compliance with General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission Decisions

Section IV.B.2.d of the Organization for Mission requires that when a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission contains an order directed to another governing body, the Stated Clerk report to the General Assembly a statement of the governing body’s compliance. Below is a report of the statements of compliance received by the Stated Clerk from the governing bodies for cases decided by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission during the years 2010–2012.

1. GAPJC Remedial Case 220-01, Ivan White and David Crews Appellants (Complainants), v. Session, St. Paul Presbyterian Church of San Angelo, Texas, Appellee (Respondent).

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Sun is hereby sustained.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Tres Rios report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.
IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Sun report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The decision was reported at the Synod of the Sun Stated Meeting on October 20, 2010, and the Presbytery of Tres Rios at its stated meeting on October 15, 2010.

2. GAPJC Disciplinary Case 220-02, Jean K. Southard, Appellant/Accused v. Presbytery of Boston, Appellee/Accuser.

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast is hereby reversed in part and affirmed in part.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the judgment of the Synod of the Northeast finding Southard guilty on charges 1 and 2 is reversed, and the Presbytery of Boston’s judgment of not guilty on charges 1 and 2 is reinstated.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Boston report this decision to the Presbytery of Boston at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Boston enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this decision to the Synod of the Northeast at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Northeast enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The decision was reported at the Synod of the Northeast Stated Meeting on October 21, 2011. The Presbytery of Boston has not yet provided confirmation of compliance.

3. GAPJC Remedial Case 220-03, Eric Parnell, Bruce McIntosh, Cordelia Shieh, Margaret Gelini, Greg Roth, Marsha Roth, Randy Young, and the Session of Walnut Creek Presbyterian Church, Appellants (Complainants), v. Presbytery of San Francisco, Appellee (Respondent).

This Commission denies the Appellee’s Motion to Dismiss, as the issues raised by the Appellants in the Specifications of Error are broader than the applicability of G-6.0106b.

The record does not reflect that the SPJC ruled on the Appellants’ contention that Scripture and the Confessions prohibit certain sexual behavior. While the Appellants’ complaint was based primarily on G-6.0106b, the Appellants clearly and consistently presented arguments at trial on the basis of scriptural and confessional standards without objection by the Presbytery. Since the doctrinal issue is central to the Appellants’ case, it was error for the SPJC not to expressly rule upon the issue.

The SPJC Decision is reversed in part and affirmed in part and the case is remanded to the SPJC to rule on the matters which are the subject of Specifications of Error Nos. 10 and 11 above, and such other matters as may come before it. Since the Constitution has changed, the SPJC is encouraged to direct the Presbytery to reexamine the candidate under G-2.0104b.

The Stay of Enforcement remains in place pending further adjudication of these proceedings.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific is hereby reversed in part and affirmed in part.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that this case is remanded to the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of San Francisco report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Pacific report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The decision was reported at the Synod of the Pacific Stated Meeting on November 11–13, 2011, and the Presbytery of San Francisco Stated Meeting on September 13, 2011.

The Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Moot is granted, and the Stay of Enforcement is lifted. The only alleged irregularities set out in Appellants’ Notice of Appeal cite G-6.0106b and Authoritative Interpretations of that section as the basis of their
The language of that section was removed from the Book of Order prior to the GAPJC hearing of the Appeal. In granting this motion, this Commission declines to rule upon the application of a provision of the Book of Order that no longer exists. Nothing in this Decision should be construed to interpret the ordination standards under the new Form of Government, as that issue is not before the Commission.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Moot is granted, and the case is Dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of John Knox report this decision to the Presbytery of John Knox at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of John Knox enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Lakes and Prairies report this decision to the Synod of Lakes and Prairies at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of Lakes and Prairies enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

This decision was reported at the Synod of Lakes and Prairies Stated Meeting on October 2, 2011. The Presbytery of John Knox has not yet provided certification of compliance.

After two days of trial, this Commission considered the documentary evidence presented to it, evaluated the testimony of the witnesses and carefully deliberated and voted on each alleged irregularity. This Commission finds that neither alleged irregularity is sustained by a preponderance of the evidence.

As to the first alleged irregularity, while it may be questioned whether the Synod wisely allocated G-11.0502 responsibilities between the SAC and the Presbytery, this Commission declines to substitute its judgment for that of the Synod. Under the Book of Order as currently interpreted, a synod may appoint an administrative commission with original jurisdiction over some or all of the functions of a presbytery Committee on Ministry (G-9.0503a); it may do so without giving the Commission complete jurisdiction over the Presbytery (G-9.0503a(4)).

In reaching this conclusion, this Commission acknowledges that, in 2003, the General Assembly adopted an authoritative interpretation of then G-9.0408 (now G-3.0108b) which listed the assumption of original jurisdiction over a presbytery by a synod as one of the remedies available to the synod if a presbytery within its jurisdiction is not obeying decisions of the General Assembly’s Permanent Judicial Commission. While this Commission defers to and does not set aside that authoritative interpretation, it notes that the authority to assume original jurisdiction over a lower governing body is not a specifically delegated authority in the Book of Order, except in the case of a presbytery assuming original jurisdiction of a session. This Commission lifts up to the church for its consideration the question of whether the 2003 Authoritative Interpretation adequately embodies the principle of F-3.0209 (formerly G-9.0103) that “the jurisdiction of each council is limited by the express provisions of the Constitution, with powers not mentioned being reserved to the presbyteries.” While the provision of former G-9.0503a(4) (now G-3.0109b(5)) makes it clear that councils may appoint administrative commissions to “inquire into and settle the difficulties” in bodies within their jurisdiction, this Commission suggests that assuming original jurisdiction of a lower body is a matter of such a serious nature that the authority to do so should be explicitly prescribed in the Book of Order.

As to the second alleged irregularity, it may be questioned whether the Synod should have included the TAC as one of the administrative commissions over which it was taking jurisdiction, since the record is unclear as to whether the TAC existed on December 18, 2010. However, the Synod’s action did not rise to the level of an irregularity since, if the TAC did then exist, the Synod would have had authority to assume jurisdiction over it under G-9.0503 (but see discussion above); if it did not then exist, the assertion of authority would have been of no effect.

At the conclusion of the trial, Complainant submitted a Motion for a Directed Finding regarding the status of the TAC. The Commission finds that such Motion is outside the limits of the Pre-Trial Order entered August 23, 2011, and is therefore ruled out of order.

IT IS ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first stated meeting following the date of this Order, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, that the Stated Clerk of the Synod deliver a copy of this Decision and Order to its Administrative Commission having jurisdiction over Hanmi Presbytery, and that an excerpt from the Synod’s minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Synod of Southern California and Hawaii will read the order into their minutes at their 2012 Stated Meeting.
6. GAPJC Remedial Case 220-06, Bruce F. Haapalainen, Complainant, v. Synod of Lincoln Trails, Respondent.

This Commission affirms the decision of the EC that Complainant does not have standing because he was not an “enrolled” commissioner to the Synod’s January 28, 2011, meeting.

The case of Fair-Booth v. National Capital Presbytery (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 300), establishes that a ruling elder elected to serve as a commissioner to a presbytery meeting must be present and enrolled in order to file a remedial complaint alleging that an irregularity or delinquency occurred at that meeting. The considerations governing enrollment of an elected commissioner at a synod meeting are indistinguishable from those considerations governing enrollment of an elected commissioner at a presbytery meeting. Like ruling elder commissioners to a presbytery meeting, commissioners to a synod are elected by a lower governing body, the presbytery. According to Fair-Booth, “the requirement for enrollment, as separate from election … is consistent with the principle that lower governing bodies do not determine the membership of higher governing bodies.” Moreover, as in Fair-Booth, the requirement of attendance “is not a mere technicality. … Presbyterians come together in governing bodies to deliberate and decide matters as a community of faith, open to the work of the Spirit among them.”

If any one of the four jurisdictional grounds of D-6.0305 is lacking, the complaint fails. Since this Commission found that the Complainant lacked standing, there is no need to address the EC’s finding that the Complaint was not timely filed.

The Executive Committee’s dismissal of the Complaint is hereby affirmed.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Dismissal of the Complaint is hereby sustained.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Lincoln Trails report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

This decision was reported at the Synod of Lincoln Trails Stated Meeting on January 27, 2012.

7. GAPJC Remedial Case 220-07, Bruce F. Haapalainen, Complainant, v. Synod of Lincoln Trails, Respondent.

This Commission affirms the decision of the EC that Complainant does not have standing to file the Complaint because he was not present at the Synod meeting of January 28, 2011, and consequently was not an “enrolled” commissioner to the Synod.

The case of Fair-Booth v. National Capital Presbytery (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 300), establishes that a ruling elder elected to serve as a commissioner to a presbytery meeting must be present in order to bring a remedial complaint against an action taken at that meeting. The considerations governing enrollment of an elected commissioner at a synod meeting are indistinguishable from those considerations governing enrollment of an elected commissioner at a presbytery meeting. Like ruling elder commissioners to a presbytery meeting, all commissioners to a synod are elected by a lower governing body. According to Fair-Booth, “the requirement for enrollment, as separate from election … is consistent with the principle that lower governing bodies do not determine the membership of higher governing bodies.” Moreover, as in Fair-Booth, the requirement of attendance “is not a mere technicality. … Presbyterians come together in governing bodies to deliberate and decide matters as a community of faith, open to the work of the Spirit among them.”

If any one of the four jurisdictional grounds of D-6.0305 is lacking, a complaint fails. Since this Commission has found that Complainant lacks standing, there is no need to address the EC’s finding that the Complaint failed to state a claim for which relief can be granted or the Respondent’s contention that the Complaint was not timely filed.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Dismissal of the Complaint is hereby sustained.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Lincoln Trails report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

This decision was reported at the Synod of Lincoln Trails Stated Meeting on January 27, 2012.

8. GAPJC Disciplinary Case 220-08, Jane Adams Spahr, v. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the Presbytery of Redwoods.

Decision

In Spahr 2008, Spahr was directed to refrain from implying, stating, or representing that a same-sex ceremony is a marriage. Within months of that order, Spahr performed marriage ceremonies for approximately sixteen same-sex couples.
Although counsel for both parties confirmed that state law recognizes the legality of these marriages, the change in state law did not and could not change what is permissible for marriages to be authorized by the PC(USA).

The Book of Order states that its provisions may be authoritatively interpreted by the General Assembly or by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission. No distinction is made between these forms of interpretation in authority or application, and the most recent interpretation is binding (G-13.0103r, now G-3.0501c and G-6.02). Since Spahr 2008 was decided, there have been attempts at the General Assembly level to expand the language in W-4.9000. Such attempts have failed.

Spahr 2008 did not arise in a vacuum. In 1991, the General Assembly issued an authoritative interpretation (1991 AI) clarifying the denomination’s stance on same-sex union ceremonies. The 1991 AI stated:

If a same-sex ceremony were considered to be the equivalent of a marriage ceremony between two persons of the same sex, it would not be sanctioned under the Book of Order.

The 1991 AI further stated that a session “should not allow the use of the church facilities for a same-sex union ceremony that the session determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony,” and that:

since a Christian marriage performed in accordance with the Directory for Worship can only involve a covenant between a woman and a man, it would not be proper for a minister of the Word and Sacrament to perform a same-sex marriage ceremony that the minister determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395, 21.124, Req. 91-23).

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do.

This Commission agrees with the SPJC regarding Specification of Error No. 1 d and e (Appellant’s Specifications of Error Nos. 6, 7, and 8). The SPJC correctly found that “being faithful to Scripture and the Constitution on other matters does not provide a defense for the actions charged in this case,” and “the constitutional interpretations of Spahr (2008) and Southard by the PPJC are not inconsistent with the Book of Order when read as a whole.” Both the PPJC and SPJC found that Spahr’s conduct violated the Constitution.

As to Specification of Error No. 3 (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 4), the SPJC did not rephrase the charges, contrary to Spahr’s argument. The SPJC included descriptive language regarding the Southard decision but that did not amount to a modification of the charge. The SPJC upheld the PPJC on the specific charges before it. The SPJC discussed the Southard decision as a statement that Spahr 2008 continues to apply in a state which authorizes same-sex marriage by civil law. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific is hereby affirmed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Pacific report this decision to the Synod of the Pacific at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Pacific enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of the Redwoods report this decision to the Presbytery of the Redwoods at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of the Redwoods enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Margaret MacLeod was absent and did not take any part in the deliberations or decision.

This decision was reported at the stated meeting of the Presbytery of Redwoods on May 12, 2012.

Decision

As noted above, the SPJC determined that the restructuring of the Presbytery’s Stated Clerk position and terms of call was part of a re-evaluation of its mission in response to a serious financial crisis. All existing staff of the Presbytery were affected by the restructuring, which included a number of terminations with severance packages. The SPJC further determined that the Stated Clerk’s restructured position and reduced terms of call did not constitute a constructive discharge.

While stated clerks must be elected to specific terms of office in accordance with the Book of Order, the GAPJC determines that their elected terms and any agreed-upon remuneration are not irrevocable contracts for those fixed terms, but rather terms of call that may, in the case of a serious financial crisis and/or mission re-evaluation, be adjusted by the employing entity, so long as fundamental fairness is demonstrated (G-6.0201 and G-14.0522). Fundamental fairness was evident through the numerous efforts of the Presbytery’s Personnel Committee to meet with all staff members and Edmonds and work with them in the process. It was ultimately demonstrated through Edmonds’ opportunity to speak on the floor of the Presbytery to the motion that effected the change to his terms of call.

Edmonds argued that since his term of office was for “a term of years, not for a term of years or until a successor is elected,” Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised, 10th Ed. (RONR), the parliamentary authority then in effect, prohibits the Presbytery’s action without a disciplinary procedure. The Presbytery responded that the provision of RONR relied upon by Edmonds does not apply since the exact wording of G-9.0302 is only that “meetings of governing bodies, commissions, and committees shall be conducted in accordance with the most recent edition of Robert’s Rules of Order except in cases where this Constitution provides otherwise” (emphasis added), and the rule Edmonds cited does not refer to the conduct of a meeting.

Both the Presbytery and Edmonds are in error. The rules in RONR regarding terms of officers are applied by means of decisions of assemblies rendered in the course of their meetings. RONR’s provisions regarding officers clearly do apply in this case. The RONR rule relied upon by Edmonds, however, relates to the removal of officers. The Presbytery did not remove Edmonds from office. The directly applicable provision from RONR is not its provision on the removal of officers, but rather its provision regarding the amendment of a society’s own rules relating to its officers:

Amendments to the article on officers may raise difficulties in relation to the time at which adopted changes take effect, unless special care is taken. A society can, for example, amend its bylaws so as to affect the emoluments and duties of the officers already elected, or even to abolish an office; and if it is desired that the amendment should not affect officers already elected, a motion so specifying should be adopted before voting on the amendment, or the motion to amend can have added to it the proviso that it shall not affect officers already elected. There is virtually a contract between a society and its officers, and while to some extent action can be taken by either party to modify or even terminate the contract, such action must be taken with reasonable consideration for the other party (RONR p. 579, ll. 9-21).

In this provision, RONR clearly contemplates the possibility that even a society’s currently elected officers can be affected by changes to its own rules—including both duties and emoluments (compensation)—even though “there is virtually a contract between a society and its officers.” Additionally, this provision establishes the principle that in such cases, “reasonable consideration for the other party” must be demonstrated. The record reflects that such consideration was extended to Edmonds.

While the SPJC did not rule on Counts Two, Three, and Four of the Complaint, it nevertheless would have considered those matters in the overall course of the proceedings. In addition, as previously stated, this Commission concludes that the errors alleged in the Counter-Appeal, if any, are collectively harmless and did not substantially affect the outcome of the case. Thus, the Commission sees nothing to be gained by remanding the case for a new trial.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast is reversed and the case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this decision to the Synod of the Northeast at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Northeast enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of New York City report this decision to the Presbytery of New York City, at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Northeast enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Margaret MacLeod was absent and did not take part in the deliberations or decision.

This decision was reported at the Stated Meeting of the Presbytery of New York City on March 31, 2012.

      DECISION AND ORDER
      Remedial Case 220-01

      Arrival Statement

      This filing before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is an appeal of a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Sun (SPJC) rendered on March 23, 2010. The Notice of Appeal was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on March 29, 2010.

      Jurisdictional Statement

      This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Appellants Ivan White (White) and David Crews (Crews) have standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal in D-8.0105.

     Appearances

      White and Crews appeared in person, representing themselves. The Session of the St. Paul Presbyterian Church (Session) was represented by Douglas Nave and Mary Noel Golder.
This case concerns an elder-elect who is openly gay and living in a committed same-sex relationship. However, the undisputed testimony is that the relationship is non-sexual.

The original complaint, filed by Wayne White and Ivan White on December 12, 2008, with the Presbytery of Tres Rios (Presbytery), challenged the action by the Session in sustaining the examination for ordination of David Cooper (Cooper) as an elder-elect for the class of 2011. The Presbytery’s Permanent Judicial Commission (PPJC) granted a stay of enforcement on December 18, 2008.

A trial was held by the PPJC on May 16, 2009. The Decision of the PPJC reversed the Session’s action to sustain the examination of Cooper as an elder. The Decision cited Cooper’s statement that “I am gay;” his participation in a commitment ceremony with a man he refers to as his partner; that on two occasions Cooper and his partner had been photographed together for a church pictorial directory; and the statement of Cooper’s partner at a November 2007 congregational meeting that Cooper’s name had been withdrawn from a slate of nominees for office at that time because “it is against Presbytery rules for anyone living in an openly homosexual relationship to serve as elder.” In rendering its decision, the PPJC cited Wier v. Second PC, Remedial Case 214-5, noting that the “governing body [had] reasonable cause for inquiry based on its knowledge of the life and character of the candidate,” and had “the positive obligation to make due inquiry and uphold all the standards for ordination and installation” (Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 341).

After the PPJC reversed the Session’s decision, on May 31, 2009, the Session conducted a second examination of Cooper, following the specific direction which had been provided by the PPJC “on the matters upon which examination should be conducted.” During this examination, the Session specifically asked Cooper if he was in compliance with G-6.0106b of the Book of Order. Cooper stated that he was in compliance. No information was submitted to contradict Cooper’s statement that his relationship with his male partner did not involve sexual activity. The Session sustained the examination.

On June 1, 2009, White and Crews filed a complaint virtually identical to the one filed earlier, alleging that the Session had sustained the examination of Cooper, “a self-affirmed, practicing homosexual,” as an elder-elect for the class of 2011. A second trial was held by the PPJC on September 8, 2009. The decision of the PPJC, rendered on September 12, 2009, again ordered that the Session’s examination of Cooper be reversed on the basis of its finding that “as a self affirmed homosexual living in a committed same sex relationship [Cooper] is in violation of confessional standards.” The PPJC also noted in its discussion that “The confessional statements and scripture do not make a distinction between homosexual orientation and practice.”

On October 19, 2009, the Session filed a Notice of Appeal with the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Sun (Synod) and requested a Stay of Enforcement of the PPJC’s decision, which was granted by the SPJC on November 16, 2009. On February 10, 2010, the SPJC issued a decision which was subsequently determined to be incomplete by the Executive Committee of the GAPJC on the grounds that the SPJC decision did not include a determination of “whether the decision of the lower governing body shall be affirined, modified, set aside, reversed, or the case remanded for a new trial” (D-8.0404b). A corrected decision by the SPJC, completed on March 23, 2010, clarified that the decision of the PPJC was reversed. No discussion or rationale is included in the SPJC decision and Order.

Subsequently, a Notice of Appeal and a Request for a Stay of Enforcement were received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. A Stay of Enforcement was granted on April 5, 2010. The Executive Committee of the GAPJC accepted the Appeal on April 16, 2010.

Specifications of Error and Decision

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC committed a procedural irregularity when the former moderator of the SPJC signed the corrected decision instead of the corrected decision being signed by the current moderator of the SPJC.

This Specification of Error Is Not Sustained for the reason stated below, following Specification of Error No. 3.

Specification of Error No. 2: The SPJC committed a procedural irregularity when its corrected decision was not rendered by a majority of SPJC members.

This Specification of Error Is Not Sustained for the reason stated below, following Specification of Error No. 3.

Specification of Error No. 3: The SPJC committed a procedural error when its corrected decision did not adjust the directive date.

This Specification of Error Is Not Sustained.

While the Notice of Appeal alleges that certain procedural errors were made by the SPJC, there are no facts in the record to support the allegations.
Specification of Error No. 4: The SPJC accepted as true Cooper’s statement that while he is in a committed same-sex relationship, he is not sexually active.

This Specification of Error Is Not Sustained.

There is no evidence in the record that contradicts Cooper’s statement. The SPJC was bound to the record it had before it, as is this Commission.

Specification of Error No. 5: The SPJC erred by not accepting the PPJC’s determination that Cooper refused to repent of his homosexual orientation and living in a committed same-sex relationship.

This Specification of Error Is Not Sustained.

The Church has repeatedly distinguished between sexual orientation and sexual practice. In 1998, the 210th General Assembly approved the following authoritative interpretation of G-6.0106 and G-4.0403:

Standing in the tradition of breaking down the barriers erected to exclude people based on their condition, such as age, race, class, gender, and sexual orientation, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) commits itself not to exclude anyone categorically in considering those called to ordained service in the church, but to consider the lives and behaviors of candidates as individuals (Minutes, 1998, Part I, pp. 68, 166).

There is no constitutional expectation that an individual would need to repent of any of the above “conditions.”

Cooper testified under oath that while he is gay and in a same-sex relationship, the relationship is non-sexual. He testified that his relationship “doesn’t preclude love, it doesn’t preclude caring for each other. It does preclude the sexual activity, the physical involvement of sexual activity.”

It was the Session’s responsibility to assess the suitability of Cooper for ordination, including the relationship between Cooper and his partner. Such an assessment may be overturned by a higher governing body only for “extraordinary reasons” (Rankin v. National Capital Union Presbytery, Minutes, 1981, Part I, pp. 113, 114). Neither the record nor the argument of the parties reflected that the PPJC had extraordinary reasons for overturning the action of the Session. This constitutional error by the PPJC was reversed by the SPJC.

This Commission concurs with the SPJC.

Specification of Error No. 6: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by failing to recognize the jurisdictional oversight of the Presbytery over a Session regarding the examination and ordination process.

This Specification of Error Is Not Sustained.

The SPJC properly exercised its responsibilities of judicial review of the decision of a lower governing body.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Sun is hereby sustained.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Tres Rios report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Sun report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Participants

Commissioner Clifford Looney was absent and did not participate in the deliberations.

Concurring Opinion

I concur in this Decision. I do so, however, with the conviction that additional comment is necessary regarding a perceived terminological problem in this case and the need for clarification.
The provision of G-6.0106b prohibits ordination of a person who is unrepentant of any “self-acknowledged practice” of sinful behavior as defined by the Confessions. The General Assembly as far back as 1978, reiterated by the General Assembly in 1998, and by this Commission as recently as 2002, distinguished between “orientation” and “practice,” in ruling that only the latter has been the basis of application of this prohibition. But, instant this case, the issue of “practice” has emerged anew through the claim that a “practiced” sexual dimension (here not applicable) is necessary in order for “practice” in G-6.0106b to apply, i.e., sexual practice is necessary beyond the acknowledged fact of participation in a committed homosexual relationship.

The church confronts here the need for clarification. Is the focus of the church exclusively on practice that is narrowly defined as “sexual practice” (undefined further within the spectrum of sexual conduct) or does it intend a wider application to a committed homosexual relationship in general?

In the absence of definitional clarity in this matter of “practice”, judicial judgment is faced with an interpretive dilemma that the church needs to address.

Dated this the 8th Day of August, 2010.

                                       GAPJC Disciplinary Case 220-02

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the Presbytery of Boston, ) Appellee, Complainant  )

Arrival Statement

This disciplinary case came before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on an appeal filed by the Appellant, Jean K. Southard (Southard), from a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast (SPJC) dated June 25, 2010.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Southard has standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal in D-13.0106.

Appearances

Southard was represented by Sara Taylor and Scott Clark. The Appellee, Presbytery of Boston (Presbytery), was represented by Jean K. Risley and Kevin Manuel.

Factual History

On March 1, 2008, Southard, a minister of the Word and Sacrament of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)), and a member of the Presbytery, officiated at a marriage ceremony between two women, Jennifer Irene Duhamel (Duhamel) and Sara Jane Herwig (Herwig). The ceremony, which was characterized by the participants as a “Christian marriage,” was conducted at the First Presbyterian Church, in Waltham, Massachusetts (First Presbyterian). Duhamel and Herwig were longtime active members of, and participants in the life of, First Presbyterian. Prior to the wedding, Southard conducted pre-marital counseling for the two women and concluded that they were well suited for marriage. The Session of First Presbyterian (Session) gave prior approval to the marriage.

The ceremony took place on March 1, 2008. The program for the wedding service was entitled “A Service of Christian Marriage and Worship” and the service followed the customary Presbyterian liturgy for marriage found in the Book of Common Worship. During the homily, Southard warned Herwig and Duhamel that “the majority of people out there may challenge you on the very fundamental fact of whether you are married at all.” At the conclusion of the service, Southard proclaimed the two women to be “joined together in holy marriage” and stated that they might “seal the covenant of marriage with a wedding kiss.”

At the time the events of this case occurred, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts recognized same-gender marriages conducted within its borders as legal marriages. On March 12, 2008, the Session added the marriage to its register of marriages. A certificate of the marriage of Duhamel and Herwig was signed by Southard as a member of the clergy and recorded in the town records on March 13, 2008.

This Commission’s decision in Spahr v. Presbytery of the Redwoods (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 314), was rendered on April 28, 2008, after the marriage was conducted.

Procedural History

This is an appeal of a decision of the SPJC dated June 25, 2010, in which the SPJC reversed a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Presbytery (PPJC), rendered on August 22, 2009. The PPJC decision came as the result of a disciplinary complaint filed against Southard, which was tried by the PPJC on August 22, 2009. Presbytery’s prosecuting committee initially promulgated five charges against Southard, but they were revised and consolidated such that two charges were actually tried by the PPJC. Neither charge was sustained by the PPJC.

The two charges were:

Charge 1: On 1 March 2008, in the sanctuary of the First Presbyterian Church of Waltham, Massachusetts, the Rev. Jean Southard as a minister of the Word and Sacrament violated the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by participating in and directing a worship service publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith:

a) that appropriated the liturgical forms for Christian marriage to celebrate the marriage of two women sanctioned by civil law and purporting to be consistent with the Christian understanding of marriage under the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);

b) where Rev. Southard declared that as a result of the marriage ceremony she performed, the two women were then joined in Christian marriage, declaring a new status that is reserved to the marriage of one man with one woman under the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);

c) where Rev. Southard failed to differentiate between the marriage celebrated between the two women and a Christian marriage between one man and one woman, but rather directed the marriage worship service to be similar to the marriage service between one man and one woman under the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), by conducting the service in the sanctuary and by including in the worship service one or more of the following elements:

i) the two women declared their intention to enter into Christian marriage;

ii) the two women exchanged vows of love and faithfulness similar to the vows expressed by a man and a woman in a ceremony of Christian marriage;

iii) prayers were offered for the two women as a new couple in their new dimension as being married together;

iv) Rev. Southard declared that as a result of the marriage ceremony the two women were then joined in Christian marriage.

By so participating and directing the worship service, Rev. Southard disregarded the Directory for Worship W-4.9000, in particular W-4.9001, which expressly defines our biblical and constitutional understanding of Christian marriage.

Charge 2: On 1 March 2008, in the sanctuary of the First Presbyterian Church of Waltham, Massachusetts, the Rev. Jean Southard as a minister of the Word and Sacrament failed to fulfill her ordination vow to be governed by our church’s polity (W-4.4003e) by participating in and directing the ceremony as set forth in Charge #1, purporting to perform a Christian marriage between two women.
On appeal to the SPJC by the Presbytery, the SPJC, on June 26, 2010, reversed the decision of the PPJC and remanded the case to the PPJC to determine the degree of censure, if any, to be imposed. Southard filed a Notice of Appeal to this Commission on August 13, 2010, which was received by this Commission on August 16, 2010. This Commission determined that it had jurisdiction, that Southard had standing to appeal the SPJC decision, that the Notice of Appeal was timely filed, and that the Notice of Appeal stated one or more of the grounds for appeal under D-13.0106.

A hearing on this Appeal was held by this Commission on February 4, 2011, in Louisville, Kentucky.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1 (Appellant’s 7 and 10): The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by determining that Southard committed an offense by participating in and directing a same-gender marriage ceremony as a Christian marriage.

This specification of error is sustained.

Specification of Error No. 2 (Appellant’s 9): The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by determining that Southard violated her ordination vows by participating in and directing the same-gender marriage ceremony as a Christian marriage.

This specification of error is sustained.

Specification of Error No. 3 (Appellant’s 5, 6, and 8): The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by determining that a minister of the Word and Sacrament who performs (participating in and directing) a same-gender marriage as a Christian marriage commits an offense prohibited by the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Authoritative Interpretations and violates his or her ordination vows.

(Note: Specification of Error No. 3 is distinguished from Specifications of Error No. 1 and 2 because the first two specifications pertain to Southard specifically, who acted prior to Spahr, while Specification of Error No. 3 refers to ministers of the Word and Sacrament in general.)

This specification of error is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 4 (Appellant’s 1): The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by failing to distinguish the difference between same-sex ceremonies and same-gender marriages.

This specification of error is not sustained (see “II. Appellant’s Characterization of SPJC Error” below).

Specification of Error No. 5 (Appellant’s 2): The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation in finding that the four statements contained in W-4.9001 constitute an exclusive definition of marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

This specification of error is not sustained (see “II. Appellant’s Characterization of SPJC Error” below).

Specification of Error No. 6 (Appellant’s 3, 13, and 14): An error in the proceedings occurred when the SPJC reversed the not guilty verdict of the PPJC without providing Southard with certain constitutionally required due process safeguards. This was contrary to D-11.0401 through 11.0403 and therefore constitutes an irregularity in the proceedings and an injustice in the process and the decision.

This specification of error is sustained.

Specification of Error No. 7 (Appellant’s 4, 11, and 12): The SPJC erred when it reversed the decision of the PPJC by reinterpreting and rephrasing the original charges to determine Southard was guilty of “performing a same-gender marriage as a Christian marriage.” This modification of the original charges constituted an irregularity in the proceedings and an injustice in the process and the decision.

This specification of error is not sustained.

Decision

I. Constitutional Interpretation (GAPJC Specifications of Error No. 1–3)

In this case, this Commission considers whether a minister of the Word and Sacrament is permitted under the Constitution of the PCUSA to conduct a marriage of two persons of the same gender when such marriages are permitted under the laws of the state in which the marriage is performed.
The precedents governing this case begin in 1991, when the General Assembly stated, in an Authoritative Interpretation, (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395) (1991 AI): “[S]ince a Christian marriage performed in accordance with the Directory for Worship can only involve a covenant between a woman and a man, it would not be proper for a minister of the Word and Sacrament to perform a same sex union ceremony that the minister determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony.” In Benton v. Presbytery of Hudson River (Minutes, 2000, Part I, pp. 580–89), this Commission quoted and affirmed the language of the 1991 AI.

The 1991 AI, as well as Benton and Spahr, involved relationships that did not constitute legal marriages as defined by the applicable civil law. The question before this Commission, then, is whether the Massachusetts law defining this relationship as a legal marriage changes the impact of the definitions in W-4.9001. This Commission holds that it does not. While the PC(USA) is free to amend its definition of marriage, a change in state law does not amend the Book of Order. It is the responsibility of the church, following the processes provided in the Constitution for amendment, to define what the PC(USA) recognizes as a “Christian marriage.” Consequently, Spahr’s holding, “By the definition in W-4.9001, a same sex ceremony can never be a marriage,” remains in effect.

This Commission further held in Spahr, for prospective application, “that the liturgy should be kept distinct for the two types of services.” In light of the change in the laws of some states, this Commission reiterates that officers of the PC(USA) who are authorized to perform marriages, when performing a ceremony for a same-gender couple, shall not state, imply, or represent that the same-gender ceremony is an ecclesiastical marriage ceremony as defined by PC(USA) polity, whether or not the civil jurisdiction allows same-gender civil marriages.

This Commission concluded in Spahr that prior authoritative interpretations lacked mandatory language. Southard conducted this ceremony two months prior to Spahr. Sensitive to the authoritative interpretation in Spahr, this Commission agrees with the SPJC that Spahr cannot be applied retroactively to the facts of this case. Therefore, Southard did not violate the Book of Order or her ordination vows by erring in her constitutional interpretation. She did not commit an offense because the applicable authoritative interpretation (Spahr) had not yet been promulgated.

II. Appellant’s Characterization of SPJC Error (GAPJC Specifications of Error No. 4 and 5).

This Commission does not sustain these two Specifications of Error because they do not accurately reflect the holding of the SPJC as to the matters involved.

III. Due Process (GAPJC Specification of Error No. 6).

The SPJC reversed the PPJC, finding Southard guilty on both counts, and remanded the case to the PPJC for a determination of censure. This was error. When an appellate permanent judicial commission reverses a not guilty finding, it must remand the case for a new trial, rather than imposing its own guilty verdict. As this Commission held in Davis (cite), the finding of guilt can only be made by the trier of fact, which has an opportunity to hear and evaluate the evidence.

If the appellate body finds that the trier of fact has made an error of law, the proper procedure is to identify that error and remand for a new trial.

In this case, there were disputed questions of fact, particularly around the issue of intent. The PPJC did not address these issues because it determined elsewhere that Southard’s actions did not violate the Book of Order. It would have been necessary for the trier of fact to consider these issues in order to determine guilt.

IV. Charges (GAPJC Specification of Error No. 7).

In reversing the PPJC, the SPJC did not address the details of charge 1. By addressing charge 1 only in its generalities, the SPJC effectively amended the charge to remove the detailed references to specific actions previously required by the PPJC. Such a modification of charges is not appropriate on appeal.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast is hereby reversed in part and affirmed in part.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the judgment of the Synod of the Northeast finding Southard guilty on charges 1 and 2 is reversed, and the Presbytery of Boston’s judgment of not guilty on charges 1 and 2 is reinstated.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Boston report this decision to the Presbytery of Boston at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Boston enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.
IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this decision to the Synod of the Northeast at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Northeast enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Margaret A. MacLeod did not participate in this case.

Certificate

We certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Disciplinary Case 220-102, Jean K. Southard, Appellant (Accused), vs. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the Presbytery of Boston, Appellee (Complainant), made and announced at Louisville, KY on February 7, 2011.

Dated this 7th of February, 2011.

Concurring Opinion

While we agree with the constitutional interpretation of the majority, we are intensely troubled by the underlying issue—the marginalization of gay, lesbian, and bisexual people by the constitution of the Presbyterian Church (PC(USA)). This issue is larger than the PC(USA). It is a human rights issue.

The PC(USA) is reformed and always being reformed. The constitution is contradictory in its language regarding the acceptance of our gay, lesbian, and bisexual brothers and sisters into the full fellowship of the church. See for example, G-4.0403; G-5.0103; G-5.0302; G-6.0106b; W-4.9000. We urge the General Assembly to amend the constitution to allow for the marriage of same sex couples in the PCUSA, and otherwise welcome gay, lesbian, and bisexual people into the full fellowship of the church.

Concurring Opinion

We concur in this decision. We have, nonetheless, a continuing concern about a foundational assumption in this case as well as other recent cases dealing with the definition of Christian marriage. This assumption would ground the definitive interpretation of marriage in the provisions of W-4.9001. The concern is whether W-4.9001 provides an effective and unambiguous definition of Christian marriage.

First, W-4.9001 is an introductory narrative for the whole section on marriage, outlining its biblical and theological characteristics as background to provisions of pastoral practice and nurture. Its content serves to establish a progression of four theological claims (gift, civil contract, covenant, commitment) as a foundation for the church’s general understanding of marriage.

In W-4.9001, there is an overarching, schematic narrative that develops a biblical and theological progression. These elements are explicated as four simple but profound claims, each of which has theological bearing. Marriage is viewed within a progression of God’s gift (general revelation in the created natural order), to civil order (part of universal civil order), to covenant (a distinctive mark of biblical people), and the characteristics of such covenant (promise, trust, and faithful commitment).

To claim that this paragraph is primarily and intentionally legal in nature places a strain upon its obvious narrative purpose. As a fourfold theological outline of Christian marriage in narrative form, it is arguable that it proposes either regulatory imperative or legal intention. Certainly, it does not have the kind of language or format that the church has come to expect in definitional statements, for the language in this paragraph is not obviously legislative, in the sense of providing regulatory lines that define boundaries or proscribe behavior.

Further, recent definitional arguments have revolved around ancillary elements in the text, which have taken priority over the primary focus of its sentences. The key sentence (“For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship”) has been treated as a consummate definition and legal regulation, based on one element in its secondary clause. The question may be raised whether a portion of a secondary
A clause, one part in a set that elaborates upon and describes the character of a covenantal relation, constitutes an absolute and exclusionary prescription. In fact, it can be argued that it is not immediately clear or textually obvious that any of the ancillary clauses in these four provisions rises to the level of legal intention or definitional weight.

Thus, W-4.9001 has become contested regarding whether it can bear the interpretive weight that judicial process and decision has put upon it. The church needs a sharper degree of clarification and guidance that precisely defines how it understands marriage, especially in light of the high financial and personal burden involved. Given the contention regarding the nature and practice of Christian marriage in our time, it would be important and valuable for the Church to state its definition in clearer and more precise legislation.

Rebecca New

Concurring Opinion

We concur with the Decision of the Commission, and with the holding that Spahr is not applicable as precedent because the actions taken by Southard took place before the Spahr Decision was rendered. However, it is disingenuous of Southard to claim that no guidance was available from the larger church on the advisability of performing a same-gender marriage.

The very language quoted in the History of the Decision from the Authoritative Interpretation of 1991 and Benton provides considerable counsel.

If, as Benton states, it is not “proper” for a minister to perform a same-gender ceremony determined to be the same as a marriage ceremony, it would logically seem to be “improper” for a minister to perform a ceremony that was, in actuality, a legally-sanctioned marriage service. This is particularly true in this case since, as the Decision points out, there is a direct conflict between the definition of marriage under local state law and the definition stated in our polity. Similarly, Benton antedates Spahr in stating the impropriety of using liturgical elements from the marriage service, especially a pronouncement that a new status has been conferred, whether the ceremony was a marriage (which would be itself “improper”) or a blessing of a same-gender relationship.

Southard should have consulted not only the Session about the advisability of officiating at this ceremony, but should have considered the guidance already available through the larger Church. While Southard may be commended for her desire to provide compassionate pastoral care, a failure to seek out the guidance of the larger Church would raise a concern about Southard’s willingness to “be governed by our church’s polity, and to abide its discipline.”

c. Remedial Case 220-03

Eric Parnell, Bruce McIntosh, Cordelia Shieh, Margaret Gelini, Greg Roth, Marsha Roth, Randy Young, and the Session of Walnut Creek Presbyterian Church, Appellants (Complainants), v. Presbytery of San Francisco, Appellee (Respondent)

Arrival Statement

This matter now before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is an appeal of a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific (SPJC) rendered on September 25, 2010. The Notice of Appeal was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on November 9, 2010.

Parties

The Appellants (originally Complainants) in the case are Eric Parnell, Bruce McIntosh, Cordelia Shieh, Margaret Gelini, Greg Roth, Marsha Roth, Randy Young, and the Session of Walnut Creek Presbyterian Church. The Appellee (originally Respondent) in the case is the Presbytery of San Francisco.
Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Appellants have standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal in D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellants were represented by Mary Holder Naegeli and Bruce McIntosh. Appellee was represented by Douglas Nave and Pamela Byers.

History

In April, 1997, the Presbytery of San Francisco (Presbytery) enrolled Lisa Larges (the Candidate) under care as a candidate for the office of minister of the Word and Sacrament, upon transfer from the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area. In December, 2007, the Committee on Preparation for Ministry of the Presbytery conducted its final assessment and on January 15, 2008, the Presbytery voted to certify the Candidate as ready for examination.

At its stated meeting of November 10, 2009, the Presbytery voted to validate the Candidate’s call to serve as coordinator of the organization That All May Freely Serve, pending her ordination as a minister of the Word and Sacrament. The Presbytery then voted to approve the Candidate for ordination to the office of minister of the Word and Sacrament. In her examination, she presented to the Presbytery both a Statement of Faith and a Statement of Departure. In the latter document and within her examination, she affirmed that she is not currently in a same gender relationship.

On December 21, 2009, Appellants filed a remedial complaint against the Presbytery for its approval of the Candidate for ordination who stated a departure from G-6.0106b. On January 11, 2010, the SPJC, in its Decision and Order on Preliminary Questions, accepted the case for trial and at the same time entered a Stay of Enforcement as requested by more than one-third of the commissioners present at the November meeting of Presbytery. The trial before the SPJC was held on September 23, 2010. Substantial evidence was presented to the SPJC about scriptural and confessional interpretations concerning sexual behavior.

In its decision of September 25, 2010, (SPJC Decision) the SPJC affirmed the Presbytery’s action to ordain the Candidate, with a departure. The record does not reflect that the SPJC ruled upon the scriptural and confessional issues noted above. The SPJC also ordered a continuation of the Stay of Enforcement in anticipation of an appeal to this Commission. On November 4, 2010, the Appellants filed a Notice of Appeal.

As of July 10, 2011, the Book of Order was amended to replace G-6.0106b with the language now codified in G-2.0104b. On July 15, 2011, the Presbytery filed a Motion to Dismiss, alleging that the Appellants’ case was now moot because G-6.0106b had been replaced. However, the parties conceded that the issues raised in this case were broader than G-6.0106b.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred when it failed to sustain Specification of Error No. 1, which stated: The Presbytery erred when it voted to approve the ordination of candidate Lisa Larges, because her refusal to abide by the constitutional requirement of G-6.0106b was equivalent to answering “No” to the fifth constitutional question for ordination, “Will you be governed by our church’s polity, and will you abide by its discipline?” (W-4.4003e), thus rendering her ineligible.

This specification of error is not sustained. See discussion under Specification of Error No. 8.

Specification of Error No. 2: The SPJC erred when it failed to sustain Specification of Error No. 2, which stated: The Presbytery erred when it found that the Candidate’s departure from G-6.0106b, a church-wide requirement for ordination, was not a serious departure from Reformed faith or polity.

This specification of error is not sustained. See discussion under Specification of Error No. 8.

Specification of Error No. 3. The SPJC erred when it failed to sustain Specification of Error No. 3, which stated: The Presbytery erred when it granted to the candidate a departure from G-6.0106b, a mandatory church-wide ordination standard, because such an act obstructs the constitutional governance of the church.

This specification of error is not sustained. See discussion under Specification of Error No. 8.

Specification of Error No. 4. The SPJC erred when it failed to sustain Specification of Error No. 4, which stated: The Presbytery erred when it granted to the candidate a departure from G-6.0106b, a mandatory church-wide standard, because departures can only be granted with regard to the interpretation of Scripture, not conduct.
This specification of error is not sustained. See discussion under Specification of Error No. 8.

Specification of Error No. 5. The SPJC erred when it failed to sustain Specification of Error No. 5, which states: The Presbytery erred when it granted to the candidate a departure from G-6.0106b, a mandatory church-wide ordination standard, because it exceeds the bounds of freedom of conscience for one who seeks to hold office in the PC (USA).

This specification of error is not sustained. See discussion under Specification of Error No. 8.

Specification of Error No. 6. The SPJC erred when it applied the Knox AI to expand the limits of freedom of conscience beyond those plainly stated in the constitution.

This specification of error is not sustained. See discussion under Specification of Error No. 8.

Specification of Error No. 7. The SPJC erred when it applied the Knox AI to excuse the candidate from the expressly stated mandatory “requirement” found in G-6.0106b.

This specification of error is not sustained. See discussion under Specification of Error No. 8.

Specification of Error No. 8. The SPJC erred when it found that an authoritative interpretation could amend, modify, or excise express terms from the meaning of the Constitution, even if it did not actually change or remove words from the printed page.

This specification of error is not sustained.

Given that the constitutional provisions under which the Candidate was examined are no longer part of the Constitution, and that the Candidate was not in a same gender relationship at the time of the examination, this Commission declines to interpret provisions that no longer exist. Therefore, Appellants’ Specifications of Error Nos. 1-8 are not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 9 (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 11). The SPJC erred when it failed to recognize that the Presbytery’s affirmation of the Candidate’s erroneous belief and statement of non-compliance was itself a departure from the essentials tenants [sic] of Reformed faith and polity.

This specification of error is not sustained.

The record does not sustain the contention that the Presbytery’s action constituted a departure.

Specification of Error No. 10 (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 9). The SPJC erred by not correcting the doctrinal error and abuse of discretion exercised by the Presbytery of San Francisco in this ordination decision.

This specification of error is sustained. See discussion in the Decision and Order below.

In sustaining this specification of error, this Commission is not ruling on whether doctrinal error or abuse of discretion occurred, but only that it is not evident from the language of the decision whether or not the SPJC ruled upon this matter.

Specification of Error No. 11 (Appellants’ Specification of Error No. 10). The SPJC erred when it failed to rule on the constitutionality of the ordination decision itself, limiting its comments to presbytery process only.

This specification of error is sustained. See discussion in the Decision and Order below.

Decision and Order

This Commission denies the Appellee’s Motion to Dismiss, as the issues raised by the Appellants in the Specifications of Error are broader than the applicability of G-6.0106b.

The record does not reflect that the SPJC ruled on the Appellants’ contention that Scripture and the Confessions prohibit certain sexual behavior. While the Appellants’ complaint was based primarily on G-6.0106b, the Appellants clearly and consistently presented arguments at trial on the basis of scriptural and confessional standards without objection by the Presbytery. Since the doctrinal issue is central to the Appellants’ case, it was error for the SPJC not to expressly rule upon the issue.

The SPJC Decision is reversed in part and affirmed in part and the case is remanded to the SPJC to rule on the matters which are the subject of Specifications of Error Nos. 10 and 11 above, and such other matters as may come before it. Since the Constitution has changed, the SPJC is encouraged to direct the Presbytery to reexamine the candidate under G-2.0104b.

The Stay of Enforcement remains in place pending further adjudication of these proceedings.
IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific is hereby reversed in part and affirmed in part.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that this case is remanded to the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Pacific report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Jeana Lungwitz did not participate in this case.

Concurrence of H. Clifford Looney

I am concurring in the disposition of this case because the result obtained by the majority suggests returning this case to the Presbytery.

The Presbytery was entitled to and required to decide on the appropriateness of ordination.

This case presents an element of belief about which there have been great tensions but about which resolution, to the degree achieved, has been only possible by emphasis upon the requirement of mutual forbearance. The extent to which we “forbear” is continually tested by so called “constitutional” questions raised by those who would impose a particular idea of what an essential tenet of our faith might be upon those who hold a less or more restrictive view on the belief or conduct of church officers. See the concurring opinion of Lungwitz, et al., in Southard (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 606, Section 2.b. of this report).

We need to continue to mutually forbear as individuals, as presbyteries, as synods, and as a denomination. To do that we should place more emphasis on our reluctance to micromanage the decisions presbyteries reach on the ordination of those who express the need to depart from scriptural or confessional interpretations that challenge what others regard as essential.

The record in this matter presents substantial evidence that the Presbytery found:

C. the requirements of G-6.0106b were not offended by the beliefs of the Candidate (there was no active offending conduct), or that she was entitled to exercise her right of scruple as expressed;

D. given the right of scruple, and that there was no seriously offending conduct, that there was not a refusal to repent;

E. the Candidate’s expression of her interpretation of scripture was not a “serious” departure from essentials of Reformed faith and polity;

F. the Candidate’s expression of departure did not infringe on the rights of others or obstruct church governance.

I would have preferred to simply affirm the SPJC because I would limit the use of “constitutional” questions to look behind the decisions of ordaining councils on the ordination of persons in ordered ministries. Hopefully the change in our Constitution will have a similar impact.

Aside from the rule which accords great weight to the factual decisions of ordaining bodies, ordination decisions by those bodies are regarded as being uniquely within their authority because of the intense, if not intimate, contact of the nurturing relationship that is required by the candidacy process. That relationship provides an ordaining body with a foundation for decision that cannot be supplanted by the appellate process. For appellate bodies to be empowered to continually micromanage the ordination process would inappropriately encourage disagreement and waste judicial resources.

The protocol for review by an appellate body needs, therefore, to be very prudently limited to those cases in which either an ordaining body or a Permanent Judicial Commission has very clearly erred or the process is so defective as to have deprived one of the parties of due process, such that there are extraordinary reasons for reversal. The duty of a reviewing body is to be discharged with caution and great deference. We have so held in Hope v. Presbytery of San Francisco (Minutes, 2004, p. 363).

I do not believe that the record here supports a finding that such extraordinary reasons are present.
Specifications of Error Nos. 10 and 11 should not be sustained. Our polity recognizes that it is the ordaining body that is best suited to make decisions about the candidate’s fitness for office, and factual determinations by examining bodies are entitled to deference by higher governing bodies in any review process. (see White and Crews, Remedial Case 220-01 Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 603; Section 2.a. of this report). This deference to the examining body exists because of the intense, if not intimate, contact of the nurturing relationship between the candidate and the examining body that is required by the candidacy process. It is that relationship that provides the examining body with a foundation for decisions that cannot and should not be supplanted by the appellate process unless for extraordinary reasons. No such reasons exist herein. For an appellate body to be empowered to micromanage the ordination process without there being extraordinary reasons would be ill-advised.

In this matter the Presbytery conducted a reasonable, responsible, prayerful and deliberate examination of the Candidate. Based upon the evidence in the Record, the Presbytery considered both the scriptural and confessional standards of the church as well as the relevant provisions of the Book of Order. In reviewing the Presbytery’s decision, the SPJC also had presented to it both the scriptural and confessional standards of the church in addition to the relevant ordination provisions of the Book of Order including G-6.0106b. While the SPJC decision might have been more clear in its language, and indeed may have been in-artful, to suggest that the SPJC itself did not rule upon the scriptural and confessional standards ignores the totality of the language in its decision and elevates form over substance.

Both parties urged this Commission not to remand this case for further hearings as they recognized that to do so would not only cause significant and unnecessary expense to the church, but would also result in no difference in outcome. This Commission is charged with securing the “economical determination of proceedings.” We believe that sending the case back to the SPJC does not accomplish that charge.

Dated this August 1, 2011.

d. Remedial Case 220-04

Arrival Statement

This matter now before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is an appeal of a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of Lakes and Prairies (SPJC) dated October 8, 2010. The Notice of Appeal was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on November 22, 2010.

Parties

The Appellants (originally Complainants) in the case are the Session of Caledonia Presbyterian Church, Paula Bremer, James Gunn, Alan Crandall, Jerry Indermark, James F. Scaife, The Presbytery of Central Florida, The Presbytery of Prospect Hill, and The Presbytery of Stockton. The Appellee (originally Respondent) in the case is the Presbytery of John Knox.
Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Appellants have standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal in D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellants were represented by Whitman H. Brisky and Vashti Varnando. Appellee was represented by Douglas Nave, Marilyn Gamm, and Michael Hibbs.

History

At a stated meeting convened February 20, 2010, The Presbytery of John Knox (the Presbytery) approved Scott Anderson (the Candidate) for ordination as minister of the Word and Sacrament and approved his call as Executive Director of the Wisconsin Council of Churches.

As stipulated between the parties before the SPJC, at the time of such approval for ordination the Candidate was known to the Presbytery to be living in a committed partnership of many years’ duration with another man and not within a covenant of marriage between a man and a woman. During his examination by the Presbytery, the Candidate stated that “in every respect” his relationship with his partner is exactly like a marriage except for procreation, and that he has never taken a vow of celibacy. The Candidate stated at his examination that he believes his manner of life is consistent with Scripture and the Confessions, as well as with the ordination standards in the Book of Order.

After examination and collective discernment, the Presbytery voted to approve the Candidate’s ordination by a vote of 81 in favor, 25 against. The Complainants thereafter filed a remedial case with the SPJC objecting to such ordination approval by the Presbytery. The SPJC by a vote of 7 in favor, 2 opposed (1 opposed/1 abstain on one specification), did not sustain the specifications of error in the complaint to the SPJC. This Appeal to the GAPJC followed. A Stay of Enforcement had been entered, and remains in effect.

A number of weeks before the scheduled date for the hearing before the GAPJC, G-6.0106b of the Book of Order was replaced with new language (now G-2.0104b) by a majority vote of the presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), effective July 10, 2011. In light of this change, the Appellee submitted to the GAPJC a Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Moot. Appellant filed a Response to such motion. The parties orally argued the motion, and the GAPJC reserved its decision on the motion until after completion of the arguments in the scheduled hearing on the specifications of error in the Appeal.

Decision & Order

The Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Moot is granted, and the Stay of Enforcement is lifted. The only alleged irregularities set out in Appellants’ Notice of Appeal cite G-6.0106b and Authoritative Interpretations of that section as the basis of their Appeal. The language of that section was removed from the Book of Order prior to the GAPJC hearing of the Appeal. In granting this motion, this Commission declines to rule upon the application of a provision of the Book of Order that no longer exists. Nothing in this Decision should be construed to interpret the ordination standards under the new Form of Government, as that issue is not before the Commission.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Moot is granted, and the case is Dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of John Knox report this decision to the Presbytery of John Knox at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of John Knox enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Lakes and Prairies report this decision to the Synod of Lakes and Prairies at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of Lakes and Prairies enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Concurrence of Bradley C. Copeland, Yun Jin Kim Meta Cramer and Susan J. Corman

We concur with the decision of the majority to grant the Motion to Dismiss on the basis of mootness.

While we find the “Knox AI” to be flawed, we believe that the Presbytery acted in good faith when it based its decisions on its interpretation of that Authoritative Interpretation of G-6.0108 adopted by the 218th General Assembly (2008). G-13.0103r of the Form of Government in force at the time of the contested ordination examination states, “The most recent interpretation of a provision of the Book of Order shall be binding.” In this case this would be the Knox AI. The flaw of the Knox AI, however, is that it fails to recognize that any AI, regardless of who issues it, cannot modify a specific requirement of the Book of Order. An AI can interpret the Constitution but the only way to modify such an explicit requirement (G-6.0106b) is through the amendment process.
Additionally, the Appellants, while arguing on appeal a scriptural basis for overturning the Presbytery’s action, failed to include such arguments in either their original complaint or the specification of errors. These omissions meant that this Commission was unable to address issues broader than the application of G-6.0106b in its Decision.

Finally, given that the language of G-6.0106 has now been replaced through the amendment process, we believe that it would have been in the best interest of the church had the parties withdrawn this case, as they were urged to do, and agreed to examine the candidate under the new standard of ordination, G-2.0104b.

Concurrence of William E. Scheu

I concur in the majority’s decision to grant the Motion to Dismiss on the basis of mootness.

Had the passage of Amendment 10A not occurred prior to the hearing of this case, I would have voted to reverse the decision of the SPJC by which it affirmed the action of the Presbytery in granting to Scott D. Anderson a departure to a mandatory provision of the constitution (G-6.0106b). In my view, the Anderson departure, as approved by the Presbytery, was an obstruction of constitutional governance, and thereby not a permissible exercise of conscience under G-6.0108a. In reversing the SPJC I would have joined with a dissent in this case which held that that the Knox AI did not reverse Bush because the General Assembly by an authoritative interpretation could not and in fact did not interpret away the explicit mandatory standard expressed in G-6.0106b.

However, Amendment 10A passed and the express mandatory standard of G-6.0106b is no longer in the constitution. Therefore there is now no obstruction of constitutional governance and neither the Knox AI nor Bush have any remaining vitality as they relate to G-6.0106b. The denomination by constitutional process has decided to proceed under different rules. In granting the Motion to Dismiss, we members of this Commission model the old standard of life together, expressed in the old PCUS Book of Church Order as “subjecting ourselves to our brethren in the Lord.”

My prayer is that the new constitutional provision will lead to ordination examinations that take the meaning of Scripture and the Confessions seriously and honestly, so that the peace, unity and purity of the church may be upheld and nourished.

Concurrence of H. Clifford Looney, Barbara A. Bundick, A. Bates Butler III

We concur in the result obtained by the majority opinion. The position of the appellant at virtually all stages of this proceeding relied on their objections to the approach taken by the Presbytery to the ordination decisions only in the context of G-6.0106b. Those provisions are no longer to be a bone of contention. The Presbytery relied in good faith on the principles of freedom of conscience and mutual forbearance. Its reliance was justified.

The practical aspects of this situation and the interests of our denomination suggest that we have no reason to disturb the decision of the Synod PJC.

We would prefer to affirm the Synod but concur in this result.

Dissent of Michael J. Lukens and Margaret MacLeod

We respectfully dissent from the majority opinion of this Commission.

We agree that it serves no useful purpose to review the validity of a complaint against an action that was taken under a law that no longer exists. However, at the very core of this issue are doctrinal matters that rest upon our interpretation of Scripture and understanding of the covenantal nature of our faith. The record in this case amply demonstrates that such issues were considered by the SPJC, yet these matters are not reflected in its judgment.

While the Appellants in this case focused their complaint primarily within the constitutional provisions of G-6.0106b (now altered in the current Form of Government), both parties reflected extensive investment in deeper doctrinal and scriptural foundations. It is a common assessment in this record as well as within the whole church that controverted doctrine and moral theology are the critical arenas of conflict in the question of ordaining practicing homosexual persons. The SPJC in its ruling ignores these critical dimensions. It is the responsibility of the SPJC in the testing of the Appellants’ Complaint against the Presbytery to review not only the validity of the process but also the core substance of the Complaint, i.e., whether the action of the Presbytery was consistent with the range of acceptable doctrinal formulation in the Reformed interpretation of Scripture and Confessions. This the SPJC did not do. A more comprehensive review does not require definitive doctrinal or scriptural judgment on a widely controverted issue in the church today. The review, however, does mean that the SPJC is to provide a judgment on the range of legitimate interpretive options before the church, options that can be validated within the parameters of our theological legacy. For we have a legacy in which we are bold to strive openly for the true teaching of our faith, in which we are confident that, by the rule of the Spirit, we may exhibit to the world the wonders of God’s grace and the truth that is before us in the ministry and love of Jesus Christ. In this legacy, judicial review extends not just to procedural matters but also to the very foundations of our faith.
In the absence of this substantial doctrinal judgment, the SPJC decision is flawed. The SPJC decision should be reversed and the matter remanded for this further consideration and judgment regarding attendant doctrinal and scriptural matters in this case.

Dissent of Gregory A. Goodwiller, Margaret MacLeod, Tony Cook and Flor Vélez-Diaz

We respectfully dissent from the majority’s conclusion that the elimination of G-6.0106b to the Book of Order make this case moot. The result is that Presbytery is free to ordain this candidate, based on the Synod review, without any determination by this Commission that either G-6.0106b or the new language authorizes such an ordination. However, any candidate in similar circumstances that the Presbytery might consider in the future may be subjected to challenge and full judicial process. By this decision the majority is essentially creating a decision-free zone of time in which an ordination can occur without substantive review beyond the Synod level. We believe that a better result is one in which the issues are clearly decided.

In its decision, the SPJC relied heavily on its interpretation of an Authoritative Interpretation of G-6.0108 adopted by the 218th General Assembly (2008) (the so called “John Knox AI”) that is purported to overturn the historic understanding of our polity that those who are ordained to office or ordered ministry in our church must be willing to abide by all constitutional standards.

This understanding has been clearly articulated many times in our denomination’s life, and was well stated in the document, Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, presented to the 195th General Assembly (1983) which concludes: “Church officers must conform their actions, though not necessarily their personal beliefs or opinions, to the practice of the church in areas which the church has determined to be necessary or essential” (Minutes, UPC, 1983, p. 141ff).

While G-6.0108 of the Book of Order (now G-2.0105) clearly establishes the importance of maintaining freedom of conscience (another historic principle of our tradition), it also sets limits on that freedom. Freedom of Conscience for those in ordered ministries (church officers) is to be maintained only “so far as may be possible without serious departure from these standards, without infringing on the rights and views of others, and without obstructing the constitutional governance of the church” (G-6.0108a. now G-2.0105).

The Candidate in question is undeniably unwilling to “conform” his “actions” to a “practice of the church” in an area “which the church has determined to be necessary” (by placing G-6.0106b into the Book of Order), which clearly should have led the Commission to sustain Specification of Error #2. We contend that the Presbytery of John Knox has obstructed the constitutional governance of our church by voting to proceed to ordain him despite the Candidate’s unwillingness. We further contend that while the John Knox AI does not need to be read as an abrogation of these principles, to the extent that it does so, the John Knox AI is unconstitutional.

We also recognize that since the church has now voted to remove the “fidelity and chastity” language from the former G-6.0106b (now G-2.0104); the circumstances that gave rise to the John Knox AI have changed. We pray that the church will now return to its historic polity and practice with respect to freedom of conscience articulated in the Authoritative Interpretation adopted by the 195th General Assembly (1983) as recommended in Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government:

The Historic Principles of Presbyterianism have sought to establish balance between the private judgment of the individual and the freedom of the church to order its affairs. While the majority cannot force its will on an unwilling minority, neither can the minority thwart the intention of the majority on the grounds that the conscience of the minority is violated. Freedom of conscience does not require that the conscientious opinion of every member of the church will prevail. Where there are differences of opinion, our church recognizes that the ways of resolving conflict between the freedom of individual conscience and the requirements of our polity are compromise, acquiescence by one group or another, or withdrawal without causing schism. Therefore freedom of conscience is not abridged by the requirements of our Constitution.

We realize that this process has gone on for many years and been exceedingly costly to all involved. Nevertheless, for the sake of maintaining the peace, unity, and purity of our beloved church, and in ultimate fairness to both the Appellants in this case and the Candidate himself, we would urge him to voluntarily submit to another examination and ordination decision by his presbytery under the new provision (G-2.0104) of our Book of Order.

Scaife, Presbytery of Central Florida, Presbytery of Prospect Hill, and Presbytery of Stockton Appellant (Complainants), v. e. Remedial Case 220-05

v.

Synod of Southern California and Hawaii, Respondent.

Arrival Statement

This is a remedial case of original jurisdiction which is before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) as a result of a Remedial Complaint filed by Complainant Steve S. Hwang (Hwang) against the Respondent Synod of Southern California and Hawaii (Synod). The trial of the case was held at the Fall, 2011 meeting of the GAPJC held in San Diego, California, October 27-31, 2011. Hwang was present and was represented by W. Dan Lee. Synod was represented by Kay Virginia Gustafson and its Committee on Counsel members Leon Fanniel and Paul Kim.

Jurisdictional Statement

In its Preliminary Order dated April 5, 2011, the Executive Committee of the GAPJC found that this Commission has jurisdiction, that Complainant has standing to file the Complaint, that the Complaint was timely filed, and that the Complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Appearances

The Complainant was represented by W. Daniel Lee. The Respondent was represented by Kay V. Gustafson, Leon Fanniel, and Paul Kim.

Brief History

The case involves actions taken by the Synod at a meeting held on December 18, 2010 (the Meeting). On February 13, 1999, the Synod had appointed an Administrative Commission (SAC) to take jurisdiction over Hanmi Presbytery (Presbytery). The SAC’s duties and powers were modified several times over many years, and the SAC was still operating on the date of the meeting. At the meeting, the Synod voted to add to the jurisdiction of the pre-existing Synod Hanmi Presbytery Administrative Commission by giving the Commission complete jurisdiction over the responsibilities of the Presbytery’s Committee on Ministry (COM) outlined in G-11.0502 a, b, c, and j of the Book of Order, adding jurisdiction over the administrative commissions previously created by Presbytery, specifically including the Administrative Commission for Torrance First Presbyterian Church (TAC), and (iii) prohibiting the Presbytery and its COM from taking any actions from those designated responsibilities without the prior consent of the SAC.

Prior to the trial, there were three pre-trial conferences held pursuant to D-6.0310. By agreement of the parties and pursuant to a Pre-Trial Order dated August 23, 2011, the issues tried by the GAPJC were limited to:

(i) Whether on December 18, 2010, the Synod committed an irregularity under G-11.0502 when it added to the jurisdiction of the pre-existing Synod Hanmi Presbytery Administrative Commission by giving the Commission full jurisdiction over the responsibilities of the Presbytery’s Committee on Ministry as outlined in G-11.0502 a, b, c, and j, without giving the Commission complete jurisdiction over the Presbytery itself; and

(ii) Whether on December 18, 2010, the Synod committed an irregularity under G-9.0502 when it gave the pre-existing Synod Hanmi Presbytery Administrative Commission complete jurisdiction over administrative commissions previously constituted by Hanmi Presbytery, including specifically the Administrative Commission for Torrance First Presbyterian Church.

Decision

After two days of trial, this Commission considered the documentary evidence presented to it, evaluated the testimony of the witnesses and carefully deliberated and voted on each alleged irregularity. This Commission finds that neither alleged irregularity is sustained by a preponderance of the evidence.
As to the first alleged irregularity, it may be questioned whether the Synod wisely allocated G-11.0502 responsibilities between the SAC and the Presbytery, this Commission declines to substitute its judgment for that of the Synod. Under the Book of Order as currently interpreted, a synod may appoint an administrative commission with original jurisdiction over some or all of the functions of a presbytery Committee on Ministry (G-9.0503a); it may do so without giving the Commission complete jurisdiction over the Presbytery (G-9.0503a(4)).

In reaching this conclusion, this Commission acknowledges that, in 2003, the General Assembly adopted an authoritative interpretation of then G-9.0408 (now G-3.0108b) which listed the assumption of original jurisdiction over a presbytery by a synod as one of the remedies available to the synod if a presbytery within its jurisdiction is not obeying decisions of the General Assembly’s Permanent Judicial Commission. While this Commission defers to and does not set aside that authoritative interpretation, it notes that the authority to assume original jurisdiction over a lower governing body is not a specifically delegated authority in the Book of Order, except in the case of a presbytery assuming original jurisdiction of a session. This Commission lifts up to the church for its consideration the question of whether the 2003 Authoritative Interpretation adequately embodies the principle of F-3.0209 (formerly G-9.0103) that “the jurisdiction of each council is limited by the express provisions of the Constitution, with powers not mentioned being reserved to the presbyteries.” While the provision of former G-9.0503a(4) (now G-3.0109b(5)) makes it clear that councils may appoint administrative commissions to “inquire into and settle the difficulties” in bodies within their jurisdiction, this Commission suggests that assuming original jurisdiction of a lower body is a matter of such a serious nature that the authority to do so should be explicitly prescribed in the Book of Order.

As to the second alleged irregularity, it may be questioned whether the Synod should have included the TAC as one of the administrative commissions over which it was taking jurisdiction, since the record is unclear as to whether the TAC existed on December 18, 2010. However, the Synod’s action did not rise to the level of an irregularity since, if the TAC did then exist, the Synod would have had authority to assume jurisdiction over it under G-9.0503 (but see discussion above); if it did not then exist, the assertion of authority would have been of no effect.

Order

IT IS ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first stated meeting following the date of this Order, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, that the Stated Clerk of the Synod deliver a copy of this Decision and Order to its Administrative Commission having jurisdiction over Hanmi Presbytery, and that an excerpt from the Synod’s minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Concurring Opinion

We reluctantly concur with the decision. The parties carefully agreed on the specific issues before this body. As the issues have been narrowly defined, no irregularity occurred. However, this case demonstrates the difficulties that can arise when a synod administrative commission assumes original jurisdiction over a troubled presbytery.

Original jurisdiction is an inadequate and confusing response to the problems posed by a troubled presbytery, particularly where, as here, the presbytery membership is of a discrete ethnic, cultural and linguistic minority. A fundamental principle of the Presbyterian Church is that “[t]he government of this church is representative, and the right of God’s people to elect their officers is inalienable” (G-6.0107). The right to self-government of the members and congregations of the Hanmi Presbytery has been restricted for a dozen years. While the Synod has diligently tried to respect the cultural differences between itself and the Presbytery, the lack of self-government over such an extended time has created distrust and misunderstanding.

If a presbytery is so fragile or so conflicted that it cannot govern itself then it should be asked if the presbytery is viable. If not, the presbytery should be dissolved and its congregations transferred to other presbyteries. However, a presbytery, having been established, should first be given a fair opportunity to succeed or fail by its own efforts. The current situation, where a presbytery is deemed viable but denied self-government, is unworkable. The congregations and ministers of Hanmi Presbytery deserve better.

Opinion Concurring in Part and Dissenting in Part

We are dissenting from the Decision of the Commission as it pertains to Issue #1. We are in agreement with Commissioner Lukens’ rationale and have signed his dissenting opinion.
We concur with the legal conclusion of the Commission regarding the SAC’s assumption of jurisdiction over all existing ACs in Hanmi Presbytery. We are troubled, however, by some of the testimony heard at trial.

We heard testimony that the report of the Hanmi Administrative Commission was not distributed to commissioners prior to the October 2010 meeting of the Synod Assembly. We heard that no consultation took place between the Hanmi AC and representatives of Hanmi Presbytery. Indeed, we heard that the SAC’s report and recommendations were intentionally kept confidential prior to the meeting of the Assembly.

We also heard at trial energetic efforts by the Synod to suppress information about the Synod PJC Decision in Case Number: R-2010-03 (Sohn v. Hanmi Presbytery consolidated with Case No. R-2010-04, Chon and Kang v. Hanmi Presbytery). This Decision post-dated the events considered in this proceeding. However, the underlying complaint was filed at the time of the Stated Synod Assembly meeting of October 2010; was certainly in process before the December 18, 2010 vote; and dealt with Hanmi Presbytery’s action of September 30, 2010 which dissolved the AC in place at the Torrance Presbyterian Church, an AC which had been appointed by Hanmi Presbytery on March 24, 2005.

In other words, the status of the Torrance AC was the subject of judicial process at the time of the Hanmi AC’s report and its subsequent adoption by the Synod. It seems, therefore, rather disingenuous for the report to have included the words, “including specifically the Administrative Commission for [Torrance] First Presbyterian Church.” This does not seem to be a transparent representation of the status of the Torrance AC which, as the Decision in this case states, was at best “unclear.”

While we concur with the legal reasons for denying the Complainant’s Motion for a Directed Finding, we believe that the facts, including the decision of the SPJC, support the conclusion that “the Torrance AC did not exist on December 18, 2010.” Therefore, it was inappropriate and even misleading for the SAC’s recommendation to have given specific emphasis to the Torrance AC. That portion of the Synod’s action should be considered null and void. Neither a declaration by the Synod nor a Decision of this Commission can call back into existence an AC which no longer exists.

Dissenting Opinion

We undersigned respectfully dissent from the majority’s decision.

It is the constitutional mandate that all governing bodies of the church share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers. And also, “with powers not mentioned being reserved to the presbyteries” (G-9.0103, now F-3.0208-.0209).

Since, the jurisdiction of each governing body is limited by the express provisions of the Constitution, even though it is possible that a higher governing body exercise its right of review and control over a lower one (G-9.0407-0408), In Johnston, et al. v. Heartland Presbytery, this Commission ruled that “it must not be understood in hierarchical terms, but in light of the shared responsibility and power at the heart of Presbyterian order” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 462), and such a reviewing authority does not provide authority for a pro-active taking over of the jurisdiction of a lower governing body. It is not the Presbyterian way that “one governing body interferes with the constitutional mandate of another governing body” (Williamson vs. Presbytery of Western North Carolina, Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 475).

The Presbytery’s Committee on Ministry (COM) and Administrate Commission (AC) are the core entities of the Presbytery to carry out its mission in its boundary and govern the local churches effectively (G-11.0103s, G-11.0501a). Granting a Synod Administrative Commission (SAC) jurisdiction over the Presbytery’s COM jurisdiction and over Administrative Commissions appointed by the Presbytery will paralyze the role and function of the Presbytery. Furthermore, since the SAC does not have complete jurisdiction over the Presbytery, it will bring unnecessary conflict of accountabilities and confusion between two governing bodies. During the course of the trial, the witnesses of both sides demonstrated their misunderstanding and confusion regarding the governing bodies’ structures and accountabilities resulting from this Synod decision.

Our constitution has no explicit provision whether a synod can appoint an Administrative Commission to assume the original jurisdiction over a Presbytery. Applying a provision for Presbytery to Synod is over-reaching interpretation of the Constitution and may not be well reflected the principle of Presbyterian governing (F-3.0208, F-3.0209). We believe the empowering of the SAC by the Synod to intervene in the existing Presbytery’s power to govern its congregations through its committee on ministry and administrative commissions is un-Presbyterian and an erroneous decision and, therefore, the complaints must be sustained.

Opinion Concurring in Part and Dissenting in Part

In the first stipulated issue in this case, Synod granted to the Synod Administration Commission additional authority in partial jurisdiction over the Committee of Ministry of Hanmi Presbytery. This additional authority pertained to G-11.0502, a., b, c, and j, while the other functions in G-11.0502 remained with the Hanmi Presbytery Committee.

The functions of a Committee on Ministry as outlined in G-11.0502, a-j, are not to be pastorally or operationally fragmented because its processes and procedures are holistic by nature. The segregation of selected functions or divided authorization between a committee and a commission is unwieldy and unnecessary. It fractures the operations of work that is often pastorally delicate and operationally intricate.

This action presents the possibility of a highly disruptive situation in the life of the Presbytery. Action that offers the possibility of substantial confusion and chaotic operation may be legal but in its threat of disorder it rises to the level of irregularity.

The substantial likelihood, if not inevitability, of disorder and disruption supports a decision to sustain the Complaint that this action is irregular. If the Synod’s intention was alleviating problems within the Hanmi Presbytery Committee on Ministry, the better option for preserving the unity and integrity of the functions in G-11.0502 would be to grant complete jurisdiction to the Synod Administrative Commission.

While I concur with the decision of the Commission regarding the second issue in the Complaint, I respectfully dissent from the majority view of this Commission on the first issue and would sustain the Complaint that this action is irregular.

Arrival Statement

This matter now before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is the Challenge of a May 6, 2011, Preliminary Order of the Executive Committee (EC) of the GAPJC to Dismiss the Complaint. In its D-6.0305 Examination of Papers, the EC found that Bruce E. Haapalainen lacked standing to file the case and that the Complaint was not timely filed. The Notice of Challenge under D-6.0306 was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on May 25, 2011.
Parties

The Complainant is Bruce E. Haapalainen (Complainant). The Respondent is the Synod of Lincoln Trails (Synod).

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that the Challenge was properly filed by Complainant within thirty days after receipt of the EC’s Preliminary Order of Dismissal.

Appearsances

Complainant was represented by W. Dan Lee. Respondent was represented by Judy L. Woods and Linda Long.

History

This remedial case concerns allegations of irregularities arising from the action of a Synod Administrative Commission for the Presbytery of Midwest Hanmi (AC) in causing the removal of Yong Sam Rhee from the jurisdiction of the church. On November 7, 2010, acting under G-6.0702, the AC caused the removal of Yong Sam Rhee from membership and ordained office in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Synod next met on January 28, 2011. According to the Complaint, the AC did not report its November 7, 2010, action at that time. It is undisputed that the Complainant was not present at the January 28, 2011, Synod meeting. The Complaint was filed on March 7, 2011.

Upon its examination of papers under D-6.0305, the EC found that this Commission had jurisdiction over the matter under D-6.0202. However, the EC also found that Complainant did not have standing to file the case under D-6.0202a(2) because he was not an enrolled commissioner of the Synod at the meeting of January 28, 2011. The EC further determined that the Complaint was not timely filed because the action complained against, the declaration of renunciation, was effective on November 7, 2010, and the Complaint was not filed within 90 days after that action.

Decision and Order

This Commission affirms the decision of the EC that Complainant does not have standing because he was not an “enrolled” commissioner to the Synod’s January 28, 2011, meeting.

The case of Fair-Booth v. National Capital Presbytery (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 300), establishes that a ruling elder elected to serve as a commissioner to a presbytery meeting must be present and enrolled in order to file a remedial complaint alleging that an irregularity or delinquency occurred at that meeting. The considerations governing enrollment of an elected commissioner at a synod meeting are indistinguishable from those considerations governing enrollment of an elected commissioner at a presbytery meeting. Like ruling elder commissioners to a presbytery meeting, commissioners to a synod are elected by a lower governing body, the presbytery. According to Fair-Booth, “the requirement for enrollment, as separate from election ... is consistent with the principle that lower governing bodies do not determine the membership of higher governing bodies.” Moreover, as in Fair-Booth, the requirement of attendance “is not a mere technicality....Presbyterians come together in governing bodies to deliberate and decide matters as a community of faith, open to the work of the Spirit among them.”

If any one of the four jurisdictional grounds of D-6.0305 is lacking, the complaint fails. Since this Commission found that the Complainant lacked standing, there is no need to address the EC’s finding that the Complaint was not timely filed.

The Executive Committee’s dismissal of the Complaint is hereby affirmed.

ORDER

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Dismissal of the Complaint is hereby sustained.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Lincoln Trails report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

DECISION AND ORDER

Remedial Case 220-07

Arrival Statement

This matter now before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (this Commission) is the Challenge of a Preliminary Order of the Executive Committee (EC) of this Commission dated May 6, 2011. In its D-6.0305 Examination of Papers, the EC found that the Complainant lacked standing to file the case and that the Complaint failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted. The Notice of Challenge under D-6.0306 was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on May 25, 2011.

Parties

The Complainant in the case is Bruce E. Haapalainen (Complainant). The Respondent is the Synod of Lincoln Trails (Synod).

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that the Challenge was properly filed by Complainant within thirty days after receipt of the EC’s Preliminary Order of Dismissal.

Appearances

Complainant was represented by W. Dan Lee. Respondent was represented by Judy L. Woods and Linda Long.

History

In 2008, Synod appointed an Administrative Commission (AC) that later assumed original jurisdiction of the Presbytery of Midwest Hammi (Presbytery).

Complainant alleges that at its meeting on January 28, 2011, the Synod committed an irregularity when it adopted the minutes of the previous Synod meeting of October 29, 2010, without modification or revision of the report of the AC. At the October meeting, the Synod had received a report that on September 8, 2010, the AC declared that the Canaan Presbyterian Church, part of Presbytery, was in schism. The AC report was reflected in the minutes of the October 29, 2010 meeting. Complainant does not allege any factual inaccuracy in those minutes.

It is undisputed that the Complainant was not present at the January 28, 2011 Synod meeting where the October 29, 2010 minutes were approved. The Complaint was filed on March 7, 2011.

Decision and Order

This Commission affirms the decision of the EC that Complainant does not have standing to file the Complaint because he was not present at the Synod meeting of January 28, 2011, and consequently was not an “enrolled” commissioner to the Synod.

The case of Fair-Booth v. National Capital Presbytery (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 300), establishes that a ruling elder elected to serve as a commissioner to a presbytery meeting must be present in order to bring a remedial complaint against an action taken at that meeting. The considerations governing enrollment of an elected commissioner at a synod meeting are indistinguishable from those considerations governing enrollment of an elected commissioner at a presbytery meeting. Like ruling elder commissioners to a presbytery meeting, all commissioners to a synod are elected by a lower governing body. According to Fair-Booth, “the requirement for enrollment, as separate from election ... is consistent with the principle that lower governing bodies do not determine the membership of higher governing bodies.” Moreover, as in Fair-Booth, the requirement of attendance “is not a mere technicality.... Presbyterians come together in governing bodies to deliberate and decide matters as a community of faith, open to the work of the Spirit among them.”

If any one of the four jurisdictional grounds of D-6.0305 is lacking, a complaint fails. Since this Commission has found that Complainant lacks standing, there is no need to address the EC’s finding that the Complaint failed to state a claim for which relief can be granted or the Respondent’s contention that the Complaint was not timely filed.
IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Dismissal of the Complaint is hereby sustained.

h. Disciplinary Case 220-08

Jane Adams Spahr, Appellant (Accused),
v.
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the Presbytery of the Redwoods, Appellee (Complainant).

Arrival Statement

This case before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is an Appeal from the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific (SPJC) dated March 25, 2011, affirming the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Presbytery of the Redwoods (PPJC) dated August 27, 2010.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that the Appellant, Jane Adams Spahr (Spahr), has standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal required under D-13.0106.

Appearances

Spahr appeared in person and was represented by Sara Taylor, Scott Clark, and Beverly Brewster. The Appellee, Presbytery of the Redwoods (Presbytery), was represented by JoAn Blackstone.

History

On April 28, 2008, this Commission issued its Decision and Order in the case of Jane Adams Spahr v. Presbytery of the Redwoods (Spahr 2008) (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 314). That decision stated that a same-sex ceremony is not a marriage and that officers of the PC(USA) shall not state, imply, or represent that a same-sex ceremony is a marriage. On May 17, 2008, the Supreme Court of California ruled that same-sex marriages were legal under California law. Later that month, Spahr sent a request seeking a modification or clarification of Spahr 2008 due to the change in California law. The GAPJC denied the request, stating that “the Book of Order provides no standing for any party to request a reconsideration of a final decision of this Commission.”

Same-sex marriages were sanctioned by the State of California from June 20, 2008, through November 4, 2008. During that time period Spahr performed wedding ceremonies for approximately sixteen same-sex couples.

In 2010, a prosecuting committee of the Presbytery brought charges against Spahr for officiating at these ceremonies and a three day trial was held before the PPJC in August of 2010. At the conclusion of the trial the PPJC found her guilty of three of the four charges, issued a Rebuke, and enjoined her “to avoid such offenses in the future.” The three charges read in salient part as follows:

1. Committing the offense of representing that a same-sex ceremony was a marriage by performing a ceremony in which two women were married under the laws of the State of California and thereafter signing their Certificate of Marriage as the person solemnizing the marriage;
2. Persisting in a pattern or practice of disobedience concerning an authoritative interpretation of the Book of Order, in that under the laws of the State of California, she represented that no fewer than fifteen such additional ceremonies she performed were marriages of persons of the same sex;

3. Acting in violation of the authoritative interpretation of the Book of Order by failing to be governed by the polity of the PC(USA) in violation of her ordination vows.

A fourth charge of intentionally and repeatedly acting in violation of the Book of Order, and therefore failing to further the peace, unity, and purity of the church, was not sustained, and that finding was not challenged. The PPJC also declared that the “rebuff and injunction shall not be imposed” until any appeals were complete. Spahr appealed to the SPJC.

On March 25, 2011, after a hearing, the SPJC affirmed the decision of the PPJC. Spahr filed this Appeal to the GAPJC on May 4, 2011.

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by:

a. Affirming that Spahr committed the “offense of representing that a same sex ceremony was a marriage” (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 1) and stating, implying, or representing that these “ceremonies were ecclesiastical marriages” in violation of W-4.9001 as interpreted in Spahr 2008 and Southard 2011 (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 3).

b. Determining that an authoritative interpretation can serve as a basis for an offense against the Constitution of the PC(USA) (First Part of Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 2).

c. Determining that Spahr violated her ordination vow in W-4.4003e and acted in violation of Spahr 2008 (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 5).

d. Affirming the PPJC’s guilty verdict that was contradicted by the PPJC’s own findings that Spahr was faithful to Scripture and the Book of Order in celebrating marriages of same-sex couples and does not meet burden of proof requirements under D-11.0403a (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 6).

e. Requiring ministers to discriminate against lesbian, gay, bi-sexual, and transgendered persons, contrary to constitutional requirements of pastoral care under G-6.0202(b), G-6.0203, W-6.3002, W-6.3010, W-6.4000, W-7.3000, and W-7.4000; Spahr 2008; as well as being contrary to Scripture and G-3.0401, G-4.0403, and G-5.0103 (Appellant’s Specifications of Error No. 7 and 8).

f. Failing to determine whether Spahr’s ministry with same-sex couples and families was faithful to Scripture and essentials of reformed faith and polity under G-6.0108 (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 9).

This specification of error is not sustained.

See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 2: The PPJC, SPJC, and GAPJC (in the Spahr 2008 and Southard cases) have erred by usurping the legislative power of the General Assembly (Second Part of Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 2).

This specification of error is not sustained.

See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 3: The SPJC erred in rephrasing the charges to determine that Spahr was guilty (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 4).

This specification of error is not sustained.

Decision

In Spahr 2008, Spahr was directed to refrain from implying, stating, or representing that a same-sex ceremony is a marriage. Within months of that order, Spahr performed marriage ceremonies for approximately sixteen same-sex couples. Although counsel for both parties confirmed that state law recognizes the legality of these marriages, the change in state law did not and could not change what is permissible for marriages to be authorized by the PC(USA).

The Book of Order states that its provisions may be authoritatively interpreted by the General Assembly or by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission. No distinction is made between these forms of interpretation in authority or application, and the most recent interpretation is binding (G-13.0103r, now G-3.0501c and G-6.02). Since Spahr 2008 was decided, there have been attempts at the General Assembly level to expand the language in W-4.9000. Such attempts have failed.
Spahr 2008 did not arise in a vacuum. In 1991, the General Assembly issued an authoritative interpretation (1991 AI) clarifying the denomination’s stance on same-sex union ceremonies. The 1991 AI stated:

If a same sex ceremony were considered to be the equivalent of a marriage ceremony between two persons of the same sex, it would not be sanctioned under the Book of Order.

The 1991 AI further stated that a session “should not allow the use of the church facilities for a same sex union ceremony that the session determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony,” and that:

… since a Christian marriage performed in accordance with the Directory for Worship can only involve a covenant between a woman and a man, it would not be proper for a minister of the Word and Sacrament to perform a same sex union ceremony that the minister determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395, 21.124, Req. 91-23).

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do.

This Commission agrees with the SPJC regarding Specification of Error No. 1 d and e (Appellant’s Specifications of Error Nos. 6, 7, and 8). The SPJC correctly found that “being faithful to Scripture and the Constitution on other matters does not provide a defense for the actions charged in this case,” and “the constitutional interpretations of Spahr (2008) and Southard by the PPJC are not inconsistent with the Book of Order when read as a whole.” Both the PPJC and SPJC found that Spahr’s conduct violated the Constitution.

As to Specification of Error No. 3 (Appellant’s Specification of Error No. 4), the SPJC did not rephrase the charges, contrary to Spahr’s argument. The SPJC included descriptive language regarding the Southard decision but that did not amount to a modification of the charge. The SPJC upheld the PPJC on the specific charges before it. The SPJC discussed the Southard decision as a statement that Spahr 2008 continues to apply in a state which authorizes same-sex marriage by civil law. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific is hereby affirmed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Pacific report this decision to the Synod of the Pacific at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Pacific enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of the Redwoods report this decision to the Presbytery of the Redwoods at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of the Redwoods enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Margaret MacLeod was absent and did not take any part in the deliberations or decision.

Concurring Opinion

I concur with the majority that Spahr’s action in conducting these ceremonies as marriages was not authorized.

According to the 1991 AI, Presbyterian teaching elders do not have authority to perform same-gender marriages. Thus, when a teaching elder performs a same-gender ceremony as a marriage, he or she is misrepresenting the authority granted by Presbyterian polity.

The issue of authority is not exclusively ecclesiastical. With marriage, church law and secular law intersect. All United States jurisdictions grant clergy the authority to act as agents of the secular government in conducting civil marriages. The basis for granting that authority varies from one jurisdiction to another. In some jurisdictions, clergy can only perform those marriages that are authorized by their denominations. Other jurisdictions are more generous in the grant of authority. Some jurisdictions will validate a marriage even if the pastor erred. Other jurisdictions will not. According to the counsel for both Spahr and the Presbytery, the marriages Spahr conducted in 2008 will remain valid marriages under California law even if this Commission holds that her actions exceeded the authorization granted by the PCUSA. The result could have been different had Spahr performed the same acts in a different jurisdiction. Overstepping one’s authority thus risks putting a trusting couple in the position of discovering that the civil law does not recognize their marriage.
While I affirm the majority opinion, I have serious concerns that the majority, in affirming the SPJC’s decision, is also affirming the SPJC’s criticism of the content of the ceremonies and the counseling Spahr conducted. In drawing a distinction between same-sex blessings, which are permissible, and same-sex marriages, which are not, the authoritative interpretations have gone beyond the definition of marriage to dictate the nature of the liturgy that can be used in same-sex blessings. As was stated in Benton (cite), “Ministers should not appropriate specific liturgical forms from services of Christian marriage or services recognizing civil marriage in the conduct of such ceremonies.” In Spahr 2008, this Commission stated “the liturgy should be kept distinct for the two types of services.” This aspect of the precedent has created a difficult situation for those who minister to the GLBT community.

There is an inevitable and legitimate overlap between a same-sex blessing ceremony and a mixed-sex marriage ceremony. Both ceremonies involve a couple making promises to each other in the presence of God, their families and their community. As oft noted, “Form follows function.” Moreover, many, if not most of the trappings surrounding such ceremonies reflect popular culture rather than Biblical command. Given the overlap and the input from popular culture, how the two liturgies can be “kept distinct” is a mystery.

Requiring different liturgies has led to judicial micromanagement of the liturgy. In this case, the SPJC ruled:

The cumulative effect of signing the marriage license as a Presbyterian minister, conducting ceremonies on church property, using the same pre-marital counseling, and using the same liturgy for services further supports the implication that these were ecclesiastical marriages.

Conducting same-sex ceremonies on church property has always been appropriate, providing one is clear about the nature of the ceremony. Requiring that relationship counseling offered to same-sex couples should somehow differ in kind from that offered to mixed-sex couples ignores the nature and purpose of counseling. In a world where neutral relationship counseling becomes grounds for censure, teaching elders who conduct same-sex blessings cannot realistically determine what they can appropriately do, even when they are clear that the blessing is not a marriage ceremony.

The best solution is for the General Assembly to amend the definition of marriage to authorize teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to preside at the marriages of same-sex couples in civil jurisdictions that recognize such marriages as legal. The definition now found in W-4.9001 was never designed for these circumstances. It was adopted in a world where same-sex marriages were inconceivable. By retaining that definition despite the increasing number of jurisdictions recognizing same-sex marriage, the church creates a form of second class citizenship for faithful Christians despite all the other places in the Book of Order where the full equality of persons regardless of sexual orientation is affirmed. I encourage the General Assembly to so act.

Concurring Opinion

The Appellant argues that W-6.3002, W-6.3010, W-6.4000; W-7.3000 and W-7.4000 support a teaching elder’s ability to officiate at same-sex marriage ceremonies as a form of pastoral care. This argument is an interpretation of these provisions. At the same time, the Appellant argues that the Authoritative Interpretation made by this Commission in Spahr 2008 is not sufficient grounds for considering this action an offense. The Appellant asks this Commission to substitute her own interpretation for that made by this Commission in Spahr 2008.

W-6.3010 states that pastoral care includes the recognition of “transitions which bring joy and sorrow in human life” and specifically mentions the establishment of households and the making of new commitments. This portion of the constitution would appear to provide ample support for the celebration of relationships, including the commitment of same-sex couples to one another.

Marriage, however, is discussed in W-4.9000 and is described as a “civil contract,” a “covenant,” and a “lifelong commitment” between a woman and a man. W-4.9004, concerning the “Form and Order of Service,” also refers to declarations of intention and marriage vows spoken by a man and a woman and the declaration by the teaching elder that the “woman and the man are now joined in marriage.”

There is clearly disagreement with the definition and description of marriage provided in W-4.9004. However, this Commission has authoritatively interpreted this portion of the Constitution in Spahr 2008. Descriptions of pastoral care found in the Directory of Worship do not reach to the question of marriage.

The appropriate way to redefine marriage and permissible practice within the PC(USA) is not through individual reinterpretation of the advice of the larger church, but by means of an amendment to the Constitution approved by the General Assembly and ratified by the presbyteries of the church.

Dissenting Opinion

Book of Order W-4.9001 has been interpreted to deny homosexuals their rights as full members of the PCUSA, despite the overwhelming language in our Constitution recognizing the equality and rights of all people. See F-1.0403, F-1.0404, G-1.0302. The majority’s application of the Book of Order provision provided by the Spahr 2008 and Southard cases injures where it should not, and its presence interferes with our process of being in conversation about how celebrations of the joining of lives are to be conducted.

Both parties agree that before the Spahr 2008 decision there was no limitation on the conduct of teaching elders (clergy) regarding how they approached the matter of gay marriage, although most of the denomination hesitated to perform same gender marriages. The dissent in the first Spahr 2008 decision questioned the appropriateness of the interpretation of the majority. In that case five commissioners stated in part:

Neither the 1991 AI, nor this Commission's decision in Benton, prohibited ministers from performing ceremonies intended to bless or recognize the union between two men or two women. Because a same sex ceremony cannot be a "marriage" as marriage is defined by W-4.9001, it should not be necessary to say more. It is not the place of this Commission to go any farther and step into the legislative realm. The larger church has declined at least four times to amend W-4.9001 with regard to same sex ceremonies. The majority now takes this step to amend the definition to include prohibitions. See the Annotations to W-4.9001 describing repeated unsuccessful attempts to change W-4.9001. Any steps to define or distinguish same sex ceremonies or the nomenclature applied to them is best left to the General Assembly, not this Commission.

Benton attempts to draw a line between a marriage and a same sex ceremony based on the conclusion that a marriage confers a new status on the couple, while a same sex union blesses an existing relationship. The new status on which Benton differentiates marriages from same sex ceremonies is not defined. Then in circular fashion, Benton concludes the status results from the pronouncement of “marriage” which is a priori defined by W-4.9001 as a status only available to a man and a woman. Benton and the 1991 AI “admonished” ministers and sessions to take special care to avoid confusing same sex ceremonies with marriages. This advice is consistent with the current state of our Constitutional language, which makes it clear that there is no such thing as “marriage” between same sex couples. W-4.9001. The majority purports that Benton (on which the SPJC relied heavily for its decision to censure Spahr) is not applicable. However, the holding in this case extends the holding in Benton. The majority refused to address Benton squarely or acknowledge that Benton is built on a foundation of sand. We dissent because the majority fails to point out the fallacies of Benton, and then converts admonitions in Benton into prohibitions. We disagree with that portion of the majority decision and do not join in it.

We agree with the dissent in Spahr 2008. The larger church has repeatedly declined to amend W-4.9001 with regard to same-sex ceremonies. The church needs a sharper degree of clarification and guidance that precisely defines how it understands marriage, especially in light of the high financial and personal burden involved. Given the contention regarding the nature and practice of Christian marriage in our time, it would be important and valuable for the Church, through its General Assembly, to state its definition in clearer and more precise legislation.

Spahr was specifically called to a validated ministry by the Presbytery to provide pastoral care to the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgendered (LGBT) community. It is ironic that the majority has now found her in violation of the Constitution by pursuing a natural consequence of such ministry.

We cannot perpetuate the idea that LGBT couples are children of a lesser God. They are ethically and spiritually the equals of heterosexual couples in the eyes of our Lord. None of us can honestly declare to a committed couple that somehow heterosexuals reflect a more perfect image of the God we worship than they who view their gender differently. Our denomination has failed to do justice to the LGBT community while emphasizing the traditions of heterosexual marriage which are embodied in W-4.9001.

As Christians we claim the high goal of loving and including all, then seek to exclude the LGBT community. This second class (or worse) treatment proclaims the hypocrisy of our present interpretations. Since the Directory for Worship is part of our constitution and the majority has found that it may give rise to disciplinary cases, then it should be immediately amended to clearly state that we fully welcome the LGBT community into their rightful place in our church, including allowing them to marry. For the reasons explained above we must respectfully dissent from the majority opinion which perpetuates our reliance upon an incorrect construction of W- 4.90001 and continues the discrimination against our LGBT brothers and sisters.

Dissenting Opinion

We respectfully dissent from this Decision.

The majority judges this case primarily in relation to the decisions in Spahr 2008 and Southard (2011) in a conviction that, behind its judicial interpretation, there is in the Constitution an explicit basis against officiating in a same-sex marriage. In fact, this conviction rests upon an assumption rather than explicit constitutional rule. It is grounded principally upon one section, even one sentence, in the Directory of Worship, that is claimed to have clear and obvious legal status. The Commission assumes here and in earlier cases that W-4.9001 presents a legal basis for denying the permissibility and validity of same-sex marriage because it presents a “definition” of marriage as exclusively between a man and a woman. This assumption is flawed. This provision in the Directory of Worship cannot serve effectively as a judicial criterion.

There are several reasons why W-4.9001 is incapable of bearing the legal significance and weight that the Commission has placed upon it. First, this paragraph emerged decades ago, in a very different time and context. In its language and descriptions, it reflects conventions of a time when same-sex unions presented little, if any, cultural concern or attention. The exclusive conventional norm was heterosexual marriage, when same-sex marriage, either civil or ecclesiastical, was unimaginable.

Secondly, W-4.9001 is an introductory narrative for a distinctive, introductory section on marriage, outlining its biblical and theological characteristics as background to provisions of pastoral practice and nurture. Its content serves to establish a progression of four theological claims (gift, civil contract, covenant, commitment) as a foundation for the church’s general understanding of marriage. In W-4.9001, there is an overarching, schematic narrative that develops a biblical and theological progression. These elements are explicated as four simple but profound claims, each of which has theological bearing. Marriage is viewed within a progression of God’s gift (general revelation in the created natural order), as an element of civil order (part of universal civil order), rooted in our covenant (a distinctive mark of biblical people), and with the characteristics of such covenant (promise, trust, and faithful commitment). To claim that this paragraph is primarily and intentionally legal in nature forces an artificial warp upon its evident narrative purpose. As a fourfold theological outline of Christian marriage in narrative form, in no way is it clear or obvious that it proposes regulatory imperative or legal intention. Certainly, it does not have the kind of language or format that the church has come to expect in definitive juridical statements, the kind of “shall” language that is common to our order in providing regulatory lines for boundaries of action or proscribed behavior.

Further, recent definitional arguments have devolved from ancillary elements in the text that seem to take priority over the primary focus of its sentences. The key sentence from W-4.9001: “For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” has been treated as a consummate definition and legal regulation, based on one element in its secondary clause. For many, the secondary gendered example has become more central that the primary definitional clause that denotes the covenantal nature of marriage. This displaced emphasis the common role of such secondary material as descriptive and illustrative. The question may be raised whether a portion of a secondary clause, one part in a set that elaborates upon and describes the character of a covenantal relation, constitutes an absolute and exclusionary prescription. In fact, it can be argued that it is not immediately clear or textually obvious that any of the ancillary clauses in these four provisions rises to the level of legal intention or definitional weight.

Thus, W-4.9001 cannot bear the interpretive weight that judicial process and decision has put upon it. Referring to W-4.9001, the majority in this Decision claims: “…the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct…”—and in that approach precisely avoids the truly foundational issues in this and all recent related cases. The church has long held a biblically-based, covenantal theology of marriage, as outlined above, well beyond views expressed within natural theology or gendered orders of creation. So-called definitional descriptions do not suffice because they lack depth and weight, because definition is neither directive nor legislative.

This is all to say that, in cases such as this one, a determination of offense requires clear demonstration of a violation against Scripture or the Constitution, in which the terms of a mandate are unambiguous and expressly stated. In this case and in the other recent cases, it is strikingly significant to note the absence of arguments upon perceived biblical warrants or directly applicable mandates in our Constitution and the presence of mere definitional bases.

In this case and the other recent decisions, my principal concern is that this Commission has forged a standard upon an extremely fragile provision, employing a strained interpretation that does not provide the necessary legal foundation for resolution of our dilemma or foster pastoral guidance in the life of the church. By relying so heavily on W-4.9001, the Commission has ruled upon convention rather than law. The definitive clarity that the church deserves and expects in this continuing and vexatious dispute awaits deeper foundational judgment as well as more precise legislation.

Certificate

We certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Disciplinary Case 220-08, Jane Adams Spahr Appellant (Accused), v. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through the Presbytery of Redwoods, Appellee (Complainant) made and announced at San Antonio, TX, this 20th day of February, 2012.

Dated this 20th day of February, 2012.

i. Remedial Case 220-09

Presbytery of New York City,) Appellant/Counter-Appellee,)

v.

Cornell A. Edmonds,
Appellee/Counter-Appellant.

Arrival Statement

This remedial case comes to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on an appeal filed by the Appellant, Presbytery of New York City (Presbytery), from a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast (SPJC) on April 1, 2011. A Counter-Appeal was subsequently filed by Counter-Appellant, Cornell A. Edmonds (Edmonds).

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that both the Appellant and Counter-Appellant have standing to file the appeals, that the appeals were properly and timely filed, and that both the Appeal and Counter-Appeal state one or more of the grounds for appeal in D-8.0105.

Appearances

At the request of the Appellant/Counter-Appellee with the concurrence of the Appellee/Counter-Appellant and this Commission, oral argument was waived and neither party appeared in person before the GAPJC.

Structure of this Decision

This Decision is structured so as to consider the specifications of error in the Appeal, first, and then the Counter-Appeal, with the overall Decision being applicable to and inclusive of both.

History

Edmonds, then a Ruling Elder, was elected to the office of Stated Clerk of the Presbytery for a four-year term that began on March 1, 2004. In September 2006, Edmonds was then ordained as a Teaching Elder to the validated ministry position of Stated Clerk. He was elected to a second four-year term as Stated Clerk in September 2008.

On June 30, 2010, the Presbytery adopted recommendations from its Personnel Committee which were developed in response to a substantial financial crisis of the Presbytery. Those recommendations included the declaration that all staff positions would be considered vacant as of July 31, 2010, and that the position of the Stated Clerk would be reduced to 60% of a full-time call, with a commensurate reduction in compensation. Edmonds filed a remedial complaint concerning this action with the Synod of the Northeast on September 28, 2010. The SPJC conducted a trial on March 31 and April 1, 2011.

In a Decision and Order dated April 1, 2011, the SPJC found in Edmonds’ favor, ordering that he receive full-time compensation at the terms he had received prior to the Presbytery’s action from the date of that action (June 30, 2010) through the conclusion of the term to which he had been elected in 2008 (December 27, 2012). In reaching that decision, however, the SPJC did not sustain Edmonds’ claim that the reduction in his terms of call constituted a “constructive discharge.” Rather, the SPJC found the Presbytery’s action was “irregular.” The SPJC subsequently deemed it unnecessary to answer counts Two, Three, and Four of the Complaint. Those counts alleged failure to provide Edmonds with “fundamental fairness” in the process that led to reduced terms of call and failure to abide by the two constitutional questions asked of the calling body during a service of installation (W-4.4006b).

The Presbytery filed a Notice of Appeal from the Decision and Order of the SPJC on May 5, 2011, objecting not only to the SPJC’s Decision and Order regarding Edmonds’ reduction in employment and compensation, but to the SPJC’s failure to rule on the other allegations in Edmonds’ Complaint. The Presbytery also requested a Stay of Enforcement which was granted on May 10, 2011, three members of the GAPJC certifying that in their judgment probable grounds existed for finding the decision erroneous and that harm would occur if the decision were not stayed.

On May 12, 2011, Edmonds filed a Counter-Appeal asking that, should this Commission find for the Presbytery in its appeal of the Decision and Order of the SPJC, three procedural decisions of the SPJC and three alleged irregularities in the SPJC’s own proceedings should then be addressed by this Commission, or alternatively that a new trial should be ordered on the claims that were not addressed by the SPJC Decision.

An Objection to the Stay of Enforcement was received on June 3, 2011. On August 17, 2011, the Executive Committee of the GAPJC conducted a hearing which resulted in a continuation of the Stay.

On December 21, 2011, this Commission granted the request of the Presbytery, with the concurrence of Edmonds, that the case be decided on the record and briefs submitted to it without oral argument by the parties.

Specifications of Error of Appellant Presbytery

Specification of Error No. 1: That there was injustice in the process or decision, specifically that the SPJC sustained the alleged irregularity of Count One for a reason not alleged in Count One of the Complaint, while at the same time finding that Presbytery’s actions did not constitute a “constructive discharge.”

This specification of error is sustained.

See the following Rationale.

Specification of Error No. 2: That there was an error in constitutional interpretation, specifically that the SPJC erroneously concluded on Count One that the Presbytery did not have the power and authority to alter the terms of Edmonds’ position as Stated Clerk and his call to that office, contrary to the arguments and evidence submitted by Presbytery at trial, instead erroneously finding that an irrevocable contract for a fixed term had been made with him that was breached by Presbytery.

This specification of error is sustained.

See the following Rationale.

Specification of Error No. 3: That there was an error in constitutional interpretation, specifically that the SPJC erroneously declined to reach and decide Counts Two, Three and Four of Edmonds’ Complaint, as required by D-7.0402a-c, and further failed to find the irregularities alleged in Counts Two, Three and Four NOT sustained for the reasons articulated by Presbytery at Trial.

This specification of error is sustained.

Rationale: As more fully discussed in the following Decision, this Commission notes that the SPJC entered a specific finding of fact that the Presbytery staff and Stated Clerk reductions in time, job functions, and compensation were the result of a serious financial crisis. The SPJC found that the facts and circumstances did not constitute a constructive discharge. Factual determinations made by a trier of fact are accorded a presumption of correctness. These determinations are not to be disturbed on appeal unless they are “plainly wrong, without supporting evidence or manifestly unjust” (Chesterbrook Taiwanese Presbyterian Church v. National Capital Presbytery, Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 493, and Hardwick v. Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of North Carolina, Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 45).

However, based on the record we disagree with the SPJC’s conclusion that Edmonds’ reduction in terms of call constituted an irregularity. Given its financial crisis, the Presbytery could constitutionally reassess its mission and amend the terms of call of its Stated Clerk (G-6.0201 and G-14.0522), and it afforded Edmonds fundamental fairness in its process. This Commission finds no support for the SPJC’s decision that some otherwise undefined irregularity occurred in the reduction of Edmonds’ terms of call, or that the process was fundamentally unfair.

Specifications of Error of the Edmonds’ Counter Appeal

Specification of Error No. 1: It was error for the Complainant’s request for production of additional documents to be denied by the Executive Committee on March 25, 2011, and affirmed by the Permanent Judicial Commission on March 31, 2011.
This Specification of Error is not sustained.

See the following Rationale.

Specification of Error No. 2: The refusal of a member of the SPJC to recuse herself for conflict of interest, which decision was supported by the SPJC, was in error.

This Specification of Error is not sustained.

See the following Rationale.

Specification of Error No. 3: The SPJC refused to grant the motion for a change of venue.

This Specification of Error is not sustained.

See the following Rationale.

The following irregularities in proceedings by the SPJC are appealed:

Specification of Error No. 4: The SPJC refused to allow Edmonds to present the case in the sequence and manner he believed necessary to prove it, thereby seriously prejudicing his ability to introduce evidence in a logical and persuasive way (D-8.0105a).

The Specification of Error is not sustained.

See the following Rationale.

Specification of Error No. 5: The SPJC refused to receive proper and relevant testimony and evidence, thereby excluding critical evidence (D-8.0105c).

The Specification of Error is not sustained.

See the following Rationale.

Specification of Error No. 6: The SPJC hastened to its decision by refusing to allow sufficient time for Edmonds to present his case or to present closing arguments (D-8.0105d).

The Specification of Error is not sustained.

Rationale: The errors alleged by Edmonds in the Counter-Appeal concern trial procedures and related matters, but whether separately or collectively analyzed they did not prejudice Edmonds because the SPJC found in Edmonds’ favor. Within its proper trial discretion, the SPJC ruled on each of these matters, and there is no basis in the record from which to conclude that any such decisions were other than harmless error, if that.

Similarly, given that this Commission reverses the SPJC on the grounds of constitutional misinterpretation, the errors alleged in Edmonds’ Counter-Appeal, separately or collectively, could amount to no more than harmless error, and on this record cannot be seen as determinative of any injustice having been experienced.

Decision

As noted above, the SPJC determined that the restructuring of the Presbytery’s Stated Clerk position and terms of call was part of a re-evaluation of its mission in response to a serious financial crisis. All existing staff of the Presbytery were affected by the restructuring, which included a number of terminations with severance packages. The SPJC further determined that the Stated Clerk’s restructured position and reduced terms of call did not constitute a constructive discharge.

While stated clerks must be elected to specific terms of office in accordance with the Book of Order, the GAPJC determines that their elected terms and any agreed-upon remuneration are not irrevocable contracts for those fixed terms, but rather terms of call that may, in the case of a serious financial crisis and/or mission re-evaluation, be adjusted by the employing entity, so long as fundamental fairness is demonstrated (G-6.0201 and G-14.0522). Fundamental fairness was evident through the numerous efforts of the Presbytery’s Personnel Committee to meet with all staff members and Edmonds and work with them in the process. It was ultimately demonstrated through Edmonds’ opportunity to speak on the floor of the Presbytery to the motion that effected the change to his terms of call.

Edmonds argued that since his term of office was for “a term of years, not for a term of years or until a successor is elected,” Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised, 10th Ed. (RONR), the parliamentary authority then in effect, prohibits the Presbytery’s action without a disciplinary procedure. The Presbytery responded that the provision of RONR relied upon by Edmonds does not apply since the exact wording of G-9.0302 is only that ‘meetings of governing bodies, commissions, and committees shall be conducted in accordance with the most recent edition of Robert’s Rules of Order except in cases where this Constitution provides otherwise” (emphasis added), and the rule Edmonds cited does not refer to the conduct of a meeting.

Both the Presbytery and Edmonds are in error. The rules in RONR regarding terms of officers are applied by means of decisions of assemblies rendered in the course of their meetings. RONR’s provisions regarding officers clearly do apply in this case. The RONR rule relied upon by Edmonds, however, relates to the removal of officers. The Presbytery did not remove Edmonds from office. The directly applicable provision from RONR is not its provision on the removal of officers, but rather its provision regarding the amendment of a society’s own rules relating to its officers:

Amendments to the article on officers may raise difficulties in relation to the time at which adopted changes take effect, unless special care is taken. A society can, for example, amend its bylaws so as to affect the emoluments and duties of the officers already elected, or even to abolish an office; and if it is desired that the amendment should not affect officers already elected, a motion so specifying should be adopted before voting on the amendment, or the motion to amend can have added to it the proviso that it shall not affect officers already elected. There is virtually a contract between a society and its officers, and while to some extent action can be taken by either party to modify or even terminate the contract, such action must be taken with reasonable consideration for the other party (RONR p. 579, ll. 9-21).

In this provision, RONR clearly contemplates the possibility that even a society’s currently elected officers can be affected by changes to its own rules -- including both duties and emoluments (compensation) -- even though “there is virtually a contract between a society and its officers.” Additionally, this provision establishes the principle that in such cases, “reasonable consideration for the other party” must be demonstrated. The record reflects that such consideration was extended to Edmonds.

While the SPJC did not rule on Counts Two, Three, and Four of the Complaint, it nevertheless would have considered those matters in the overall course of the proceedings. In addition, as previously stated, this Commission concludes that the errors alleged in the Counter-Appeal, if any, are collectively harmless and did not substantially affect the outcome of the case. Thus, the Commission sees nothing to be gained by remanding the case for a new trial.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast is reversed and the case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this decision to the Synod of the Northeast at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Northeast enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of New York City report this decision to the Presbytery of New York City, at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Northeast enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Margaret MacLeod was absent and did not take part in the deliberations or decision.

Presbytery of San Francisco, Appellee (Respondent).

652 220TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2012)
Arrival Statement

This remedial case before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is an appeal from the Decision on remand of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific (SPJC) dated September 17, 2011.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Eric Parnell, Bruce McIntosh, Cordelia Shieh, Margaret Gelini, Greg Roth, Marsha Roth, Randy Young, and the Session of Walnut Creek Presbyterian Church (Appellants) have standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal required under D-8.0105.

Appearances

The Appellants were represented by Mary Holder Naegeli and Bruce McIntosh. The Appellee, the Presbytery of San Francisco (Presbytery), was represented by Douglas Nave and Pamela Byers.

History

In a stated meeting on November 10, 2009, the Presbytery validated the call of the Candidate, Lisa Larges (Candidate), to institutional service outside the jurisdiction of the church. The Presbytery then voted to approve her ordination to the office of minister of the Word and Sacrament. In the ordination examination, there was extensive and elaborate discussion in which the Candidate presented both a Statement of Faith and a Statement of Departure, the latter in regard to provisions in the (then) Form of Government, G-6.0106b.

Appellants filed a remedial complaint against the Presbytery with the SPJC on December 21, 2009, citing errors in the Presbytery’s acceptance of the Candidate’s departure from G-6.0106b. A Stay of Enforcement was entered.

The trial before the SPJC was held on September 23, 2010. The record contains a comprehensive consideration of scriptural and confessional texts dealing with homosexuality as well as scholarly analysis by expert witnesses on the interpretation of these texts. This testimony reflected a spectrum of diverse theological and interpretive perspectives.

The SPJC Decision to affirm the action of the Presbytery was rendered on September 25, 2010. The SPJC at the same time ordered a continuation of the Stay of Enforcement, in anticipation that its Decision would be appealed. A Notice of Appeal was filed on November 9, 2010 (Remedial Case 220-03).

On July 15, 2011, Appellee filed a motion with the GAPJC to dismiss Appellants’ remedial complaint, alleging that the Appellants’ case was now moot because the Book of Order was changed on July 10, 2011, to amend G-6.0106b (now G-2.0104b). The motion was denied by the GAPJC on August 1, 2011.

The GAPJC Decision in Remedial Case 220-03, also rendered on August 1, 2011, affirmed the SPJC Decision on nine of the original Specifications of Error, primarily on the basis that the G-6.0106b arguments were moot. The GAPJC also determined that the record did not reflect whether the SPJC had ruled on Specification of Error No. 10, which read: “The SPJC erred by not correcting the doctrinal error and abuse of discretion exercised by the Presbytery of San Francisco in this ordination decision.” Furthermore, the GAPJC sustained Specification of Error No. 11, which read: “The SPJC erred when it failed to rule on the constitutionality of the ordination decision itself, limiting its comments to presbytery process only.” This Commission remanded the case to the SPJC “to rule on the matters which are the subject of Specifications of Error Nos. 10 and 11 above, and such other matters as may come before it.”

In its rationale for remand, this Commission stated:

The record does not reflect that the SPJC ruled on the Appellants’ contention that Scripture and the Confessions prohibit certain sexual behavior. While the Appellants’ complaint was based primarily on G-6.0106b, the Appellants clearly and consistently presented arguments at trial on the basis of scriptural and confessional standards without objection by the Presbytery. Since the doctrinal issue is central to the Appellants’ case, it was error for the SPJC not to expressly rule upon the issue.

Upon remand, the SPJC determined that the existing record was complete and did not require augmentation by the parties. On September 17, 2011, the SPJC rendered its final Decision not to sustain Specifications of Error Nos. 10 and 11, and to affirm the action of the Presbytery approving the ordination of the Candidate. The Appeal of this Decision was received on October 31, 2011.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1. The SPJC committed an error of constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g) when it failed to act according to its constitutional responsibility to warn and bear witness against error in doctrine within its bounds (G-3.0401c).
This specification of error is not sustained.
See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 2. The SPJC committed an error of constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g) when it presumed that it was the presbytery’s prerogative to determine the essentials of Reformed faith and polity, when they are expressed in the Constitution (G-2.0105).

This specification of error is not sustained.
See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 3. The SPJC committed an error of constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g) when it failed to properly reconcile the Historic Principles of Church Order by giving effect only to F-3.0101 (Freedom of Conscience) at the expense of all the others.

This specification of error is not sustained.
See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 4. The SPJC committed an error of constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g) when it applied the concept of mutual forbearance (F-3.0105) to permit the candidate’s conscientious objection to a scriptural and confessional standard to infringe upon the rights and views of others (G-2.0105).

This specification of error is not sustained.
See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 5. The SPJC committed an error of constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g) when it failed to apply and enforce the interpretation of Scripture found in the Confessions (G-2.0105) with regard to sexual conduct.

This specification of error is not sustained.
See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 6. The SPJC committed an error of constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g) when it failed to discipline and rebuke the Presbytery for its failure to admonish and instruct the candidate in correct doctrine (G-3.0301c).

This specification of error is not sustained.
See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 7. The SPJC committed an error of constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g) when it permitted the Presbytery to accept a candidate for ordination who could not, by her rejection of sound doctrine, provide an affirmative answer to each of the constitutional questions for ordination (W-4.4003, 4005b, 4006b).

This specification of error is not sustained.
See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 8. The SPJC committed an error of constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g) when it permitted mere authoritative interpretations - in this case, the PUP and Knox AI - to override constitutional provisions, including those found in the Book of Confessions.

This specification of error is not sustained.
See Decision below.

Decision

This Commission holds that the SPJC both effectively answered the remanded items and appropriately ruled that the Presbytery acted within the bounds of the Constitution. This Commission finds that the eight Specifications of Error in the current Appeal deal with alleged errors in constitutional interpretation by the SPJC Decision on remand. These alleged errors can be subsumed under two categories: (1) doctrinal error by errant interpretation of Scripture and Confessions, and (2) the authority of the Presbytery in the examination of the Candidate for ordination. The Commission agrees with the SPJC Decision that the Presbytery properly exercised its prerogative in determining that the Candidate did not depart from the essentials of Reformed faith and polity.

This Commission agrees with the SPJC assessment of the record that a vast diversity of interpretation of scripture and the confessions regarding human sexuality evident in the record is also manifest across the churches and members of the denomination. Such thoughtful disagreement among reasonable and faithful Presbyterians is itself an important and faithful part of the Reformed tradition.

This Commission agrees with the SPJC that, within this diversity of interpretation, the Presbytery did not commit “doctrinal error or abuse of discretion” and that the Presbytery acted within its constitutional authority in making the ordination decision challenged by the Appellants.

Beginning with the Adopting Act of 1729, as reaffirmed by the Swearingen Commission Report of 1926-1927, presbyteries have had full authority to determine whether a candidate for ordination adheres to the necessary and essential tenets of the Reformed faith. This tradition is currently articulated in the Book of Order at G-2.0105, which states that “persons who serve [the Church] in ordered ministries shall adhere to the essentials of the Reformed faith and polity as expressed in this Constitution,” and the “decision as to whether a person has departed from essentials of Reformed faith and polity is made initially by the individual concerned but ultimately becomes the responsibility of the council in which he or she is a member.”

The Book of Confessions reflects that the Church listens to a multitude of voices in shaping its beliefs. The Book of Confessions is hardly univocal, containing as it does eleven different creeds, catechisms, and confessions of faith written over millennia of Christian witness. They each “arose in response to particular circumstances within the history of God’s people....They are the result of prayer, thought and experience within a living tradition....They affirm a common faith tradition, while also from time to time standing in tension with each other” (F-2.01). Therefore, the confessional tradition is, itself, an instrument of reform. The Book of Confessions, much like Scripture itself, requires discernment and interpretation when its standards are to be applied in the life and mission of the church.

This Commission affirms the SPJC conclusion that the Presbytery acted within its constitutional authority to determine that in this ordination examination of the Candidate, she did not depart from the necessary and essential tenets of the Reformed faith as understood by the Presbytery.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Pacific is hereby affirmed and the stay of enforcement is hereby vacated.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Pacific report this decision to the Synod of the Pacific at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Pacific enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of San Francisco report this decision to the Presbytery of San Francisco at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of San Francisco enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Flor Vélez-Díaz was absent and did not take any part in the deliberations or decision. Commissioner Jeana Lungwitz did not participate in this case.

Concurring Opinion of Gregory A. Goodwiller, William E. Scheu, Tony M. Cook, and Yun Jin Kim

We concur with the result reached by the majority, but make the following observations. The Presbytery faithfully examined this Candidate and voted by a majority (157 to 138) to ordain her. At the time of the examination, it allowed a “scruple” which we believe to have then been unconstitutional. But since that occasion the constitutional language to which the Candidate objected has been removed and replaced. Although this Commission in its previous Order dated August 1, 2011, “encouraged” the SPJC “to direct the Presbytery to reexamine the candidate” under the new constitutional provision, it declined to do so and determined instead that:

This vast diversity of interpretation of scripture and the confessions regarding human sexuality evident in the record is also manifest across the churches and members of the denomination. Such thoughtful disagreement among reasonable and faithful Presbyterians is itself an important and faithful part of the Reformed tradition. This range of interpretations reached through thoughtful and prayerful discernment is, in itself, evidence that the candidate’s departure cannot be from an essential of Reformed faith and polity. Disagreements over particular passages of scripture and confessions, and their interpretation in light of scripture and confessions as a whole, preclude designating such passages as somehow uniquely While we concur with this assessment of where the PC(USA) is as a denomination, we lament that it is in this place – where differences over matters of human sexuality have become so diverse and divisive, where slim majority votes create huge shifts in the communal life of the denomination, and where every decision the church makes in this area is a sweet victory for one side, and a bitter defeat for the other, ultimately causing entire congregations to determine that they can no longer remain in fellowship with the denomination. As Joe Small described in a recent article in First Things, our denomination has relied on polity instead of scriptural and theological discernment to decide particular manifestations of the dilemma in which we find ourselves.

In many respects the denomination has been transformed by a culture of sexual fixation rather than being transformative of that culture. What difference does it make to be “Christian” when it comes to our lifestyles? Have we spoken truth to power on issues such as promiscuity, premarital, extramarital and postmarital sex and the “soft” pornography that is rampant in our television shows and advertisements? Have we been willing to teach our children and each other on these matters? Or have we succumbed to the tyranny of cultural peer pressure? How can we discipline officers for sexual misconduct when we are unwilling to discipline ourselves generally? Have we been blinded by the “trees” of the homosexual issue, while overlooking the “forest” of the larger issues of sexual gluttony generally?

That said, dissention and division in our denomination are nothing new. In many ways, our predecessor church was in a similar place in the 1920s—when the General Assembly had in the previous decade adopted “five essentials” to which all ministers were required to subscribe. The reports of a Commission appointed by the General Assembly (the Swearingen Commission) are widely praised for restoring peace in the church after that time of upheaval.

The preliminary statements of the Swearingen Commission’s first report in 1926, however, include the following assessment of the church in their day:

> There is practically no demand for change in the Constitution of the Church. Such suggestions to this effect as have been made, have not met with appreciable response throughout the Church. All parties appear to be willing to rest upon the Constitution of the Church as it stands. They are agreed that the remedies for our troubles are within the Constitution itself. This is an immense advantage. It leaves to be decided the question of interpretation only. If there were insistence upon alterations in the substance of our organic law, if it were proposed to add new articles, or to amend old ones, our difficulties would be multiplied greatly. So long as the Church is satisfied with the Constitution as it is, we have not broken the continuity of our history, and are in position to be guided by courses adopted in the past when the fathers faced conditions similar to those existing to-day.

The same assessment could not be given today, and it is precisely our arguments over the constitution – including acts of outright defiance of constitutional provisions by those on both “sides” in our various debates – that we believe threaten our continued existence and future vitality as a faith tradition. There was a time when our covenantal commitment to each other was strong, and when “mutual forbearance” meant a willingness to abide by our constitution even as we worked to change it. Because of our increasing differences regarding what the constitution ought to say, those days are gone – and we are therefore in the position described by the Swearingen Commission in which our difficulties are “multiplied greatly.”

The Swearingen Commission went on to say:

> A spiritual revival and a reconsecration of every life to Christ are imperative if harmony is to prevail and our Church is to render full service. Doubtless everyone will assent to this statement. In all our discussions its truth should be assumed as a prime condition of accord. We must begin on our knees, with confession of our sins and sincere repentance, and must move forward in the spirit of renewed allegiance to the Master and of closer fellowship with God which will conquer our selfishness, pride and hardness, and will assure us humility of mind and the purity of heart which yields a vision of God.

Our prayer is that all in our church would still affirm that statement, and that we would once again “begin on our knees” to rebuild the covenant community that we know as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Concurring Opinion of Michael Lukens and A. Bates Butler III

As both this majority opinion and the SPJC have clarified, the matter of interpretation is central because in large part it is inevitable within scriptural and confessional authority. The necessary act of interpretation has been at the heart of the Reformed tradition from its inception. One may, in fact, claim that the Reformation in itself was an event of radical reinterpretation, i.e., a corrected interpretation of the Bible in a recovery of the priority of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and the means of grace. The Confessions of the Reformation period stand as consummate expressions resulting from this interpretive turn. The necessary role of textual interpretation within the Reformed tradition is, for example, clearly summarized in the second chapter of the Second Helvetic Confession (“Of Interpreting the Holy Scriptures; and of Fathers, Councils, and Traditions”). This hermeneutic practice and process upon which the Reformation is grounded has continued in further confessional development and has retained a critical role in the modifications in Reformed church life and doctrine since.

In this case, the parties agree on the necessity of continuing interpretation in understanding the meaning of Scripture and Confession through the application of modern textual analysis. The record exhibits testimony and general agreement in a
A number of interpretive conflicts in the church’s more recent history dealing with issues such as the role of women in the church, or in the matter of divorce and remarriage. The use of textual-critical methods, especially in the last century, has altered the range of interpretation to such an extent that scriptural and confessional texts in the arena of social and sexual relations areas have become open to alternate understandings.

Only in the matter of homosexuality do the Appellants claim an exception, i.e., pressing a univocal meaning and interpretation across vastly different historical periods and socio-cultural contexts. Although in other areas of contention there is an acceptance of the conditioning nature of radically altered historical-cultural situations, including differing social and scientific assessments, that may lead to the legitimacy of variant interpretation, in the argument of this Appeal homosexuality is an exception. It alone is held to be exempt from such interpretive analysis. The Appellants do not offer a convincing rationale in support of this exception. There is extended reference to a simple preponderance of pre-modern and early modern testimonies, but the argument remains rooted in an assumption of univocal constancy, with little reference to contemporary critical analysis or contextual differentiation. Absent such substantiation, the Appellants present no basis for rejecting the truth claim in variant interpretations.

Contention over scriptural and confessional texts is both inevitable and common. However, it is not for this Commission or the judicial process overall to test the value or judge the truth of variant interpretations of particular texts, excepting egregious refutation or abuse of primary or first order creedal affirmations, to which level the issue in this case does not rise. The majority decision affirms the historic tradition about the appropriate and traditional place for such evaluation in councils of the church. It is, then, for this Commission to adjudge whether a council is within its authority to evaluate and determine the fitness of persons for ordination. The majority decision speaks clearly to this matter.

Further, there is an assumption in this Appeal that the doctrinal issue herein deals with an “essential and necessary” dimension of Reformed doctrine. Although the church has long resisted and does not have a listing of specific doctrines or moral practices that fulfill this character, there exists a valuable conception for illuminating the nature of “essential and necessary” in the Swearingen Commission Report of 1927. That which is “essential and necessary” is that which must be present in the doctrinal system of the church in order to uphold its central witness and maintain its distinctive character. Absent such doctrine, the system collapses. The test then becomes whether a particular doctrine or practice is necessary for the integrity of the system of doctrine as a whole. The record in this case does not sustain the notion that the ordination of a gay or lesbian person to the ministry of the Word and Sacrament is so critical that it would compromise or undermine the “essential and necessary” character of Reformed doctrine.

Dated this 29th day of April, 2012.
This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction to review the SPJC Decision, that the Appellant, Sandra M. Thomas (Thomas), has standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal required under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Thomas was present and represented herself. The Appellee, Presbytery of Philadelphia (Presbytery), was represented by Keith D. Lawrence and Greg Heller, members of the Committee of Counsel of Presbytery.

History

In a Statement of Complaint (Complaint) filed with the SPJC, signed on June 8, 2010, by Thomas and on June 11, 2010, by her counsel, Archibald Wallace, III, Thomas complained that the Presbytery and the Presbyterian Church of Chestnut Hill (Church) had committed irregularities in the dissolution of her pastoral relationship with the Church and the honoring of certain agreements reached by Thomas and the Church concerning the dissolution. The Complaint sought the following specific relief from the SPJC:

1. Determine that the Church failed to honor the agreements it made that were part of the consideration for the dissolution.
2. Determine that the actions of the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery (Stated Clerk), acting as the agent of the Church and Presbytery, were an abrogation of the powers of the Church and the Presbytery, and were not authorized by the Church or the Presbytery.
3. Determine that the Presbytery committed an irregularity by not preventing the usurpation of its powers and responsibilities by the Stated Clerk.
4. Determine that the Presbytery failed to cure the irregularity of allowing the Stated Clerk to act as he did without specific authority.

Presbytery filed an Answer to the Complaint on July 28, 2010. On August 9, 2010, the officers of the SPJC determined not to accept the case for trial because the Complaint was not timely filed, and it failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. On September 9, 2010, Thomas challenged that decision of the SPJC officers. On November 22, 2010, the SPJC as a whole sustained the challenge, stating as to the issue of timeliness that a letter from the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery dated April 15, 2010, was within the 90-day filing period. In rendering that decision the SPJC stated, “Assuming that everything alleged by the Complainant can be proved at trial as true, we find that this case is initiated by the letter of April 15, 2010...” The SPJC also said that the action of the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery in writing the April 15, 2010, letter constitutes a “potential irregularity” upon which relief could be granted.

The SPJC trial of this case began on September 12, 2011. After Thomas rested her case, but before Presbytery had begun putting on evidence, Presbytery moved for a “nonsuit” (dismissal) based on timeliness, arguing that Thomas had not proved that any actions complained of occurred within 90 days before the Complaint was filed and that the Book of Order required a filing within such period. Thomas then added that, “[T]he 90 days should be counted from the time my contract ended when I sold my house, February 28, 2010.”

The SPJC recessed to consider Presbytery’s motion, after which it announced that it had voted unanimously “to grant the motion of nonsuit.” The SPJC entered its Decision dismissing the case, finding that Thomas “failed to present any evidence of an irregularity that occurred within the 90 day time limit.” In doing so the SPJC reconsidered its prior decision and found that Thomas did not prove that the April 15, 2010, letter contained language upon which a complaint could be based, and therefore did not advance the time within which a complaint could be filed.

Subsequently, Thomas filed a Notice of Appeal to this Commission.

Specifications of Error

The Notice of Appeal raised the following Specifications of Error:

1. There were irregularities in the proceedings (D-8.0105a):
   a. Motions were not delivered to Thomas.
   b. Thomas did not receive materials made available to others.
   c. Thomas was disadvantaged because she was not represented by counsel.
d. Witnesses were not effectively segregated.

This Specification of Error is not sustained. See the following Decision.

2. There were restrictions on Thomas’ ability to provide proper evidence or testimony (D-8.0105c):
   a. A civil court injunction barred Thomas from speaking to the PC(USA).
   b. An irregular and unconstitutional “confidential agreement” was forced upon Thomas by the Church session.

This Specification of Error is not sustained. See the following Decision.

3. There was a manifestation of prejudice in the conduct of the case (D-8.0105e):
   a. There was no person of color or woman on the SPJC.
   b. The extreme wealth of the Church and the session’s willingness to use it in the conduct of the case resulted in a disadvantage and severe financial hardship to Thomas.

This Specification of Error is not sustained. See the following Decision.

4. There was injustice in the process or decision (D-8.0105f):
   a. It was unjust to require that Thomas end her wage and hour case in civil proceedings while the Church’s civil injunction remained in place.
   b. The SPJC erred by not imposing a financial remedy upon the Church.
   c. To make “recommendations” for reconciliation rather than ordering reconciliation makes it difficult for the parties to reconcile.

This Specification of Error is not sustained. See the following Decision.

5. There was error in constitutional interpretation (D-8.0105g):
   a. The SPJC erred by dismissing the Church from the case.
   b. The SPJC erred by not imposing a financial remedy upon the Church.
   c. The continuing civil injunction against Thomas is an offense to the Constitution.

This Specification of Error is not sustained. See the following Decision.

Decision

This Commission affirms the SPJC Decision that the Complaint was not timely filed and was properly dismissed. The SPJC found that no irregularity occurred within 90 days of the Complaint being filed and that the 90-day period required by the Constitution had expired (D-6.0202a). In doing so, the SPJC reconsidered its prior Decision as to timeliness and concluded Thomas had not proven that the April 15, 2010, letter was an irregularity, and therefore could not advance the date so as to bring it within the 90-day filing requirement. This Commission agrees. Because of the untimely filing of the Complaint, which is jurisdictional, this Commission does not rule on the procedural and substantive claims in the Specifications of Error. Since the Book of Order’s initial time requirement for filing a remedial complaint in D-6.0202a is jurisdictional, it can be raised at any time prior to a final decision.

None of Thomas’ Specifications of Error address the timeliness issue which is jurisdictional. Therefore, none of the Specifications of Error is sustained.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Trinity is hereby affirmed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Trinity report this decision to the Synod of the Trinity at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Trinity enter the full decision upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

k. Remedial Case 220-12

Claire Cubbin-Will, Appellant (Complainant),

v.

Presbytery of Tropical Florida, Appellee (Respondent).

Decision and Order

Remedial Case 220-12

Arrival Statement

This remedial case comes before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on an appeal dated March 11, 2012, by Appellant Claire Cubbin-Will (Cubbin-Will) from a decision by the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of South Atlantic (SPJC) dated November 15, 2011.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Cubbin-Will has standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal enumerated in D-8.0105.

Appearances

Cubbin-Will appeared in person, joined by Albert Will and Ronald Weir as Co-Counsel. Appellee Presbytery of Tropical Florida (Presbytery) was represented by George McIlrath.

History

Presbytery appointed two Administrative Commissions between 2006 and 2008 with authority to determine the viability of the Second Presbyterian Church of Ft. Lauderdale, Florida (SPC), and to respond to difficulties between SPC and another congregation sharing the building. The pastor of SPC retired in 2007. SPC was not able to afford a full-time called pastor after that point and subsequently had multiple temporary pastors.

The Presbytery Committee on Ministry (COM) recommended to the Coordinating Council that a new Administrative Commission (AC) be appointed. At a Presbytery stated meeting held on November 20, 2010, the following motion was adopted:

Council recommends to Presbytery that an Administrative Commission be appointed with original jurisdiction over Second Presbyterian Church, Ft. Lauderdale, with the charge of providing pastoral care and developing a process for closing and celebrating the ministry of the church in consultation with their members, with plenary authority including but not limited to the administration and management of the church. This process will include determining all the correct steps for said closing in consultation with the office of the stated clerk of the General Assembly.

Three days later, the SPC session moderator, who was later appointed moderator of the AC, met with the session of SPC and stated that the session was dissolved by the November action of the Presbytery. That dissolution led to the filing of the Complaint in this case.

At the Presbytery meeting on February 26, 2011, after full notice and opportunity for discussion and debate, Presbytery adopted a motion identical to and ratifying the November 20, 2010, action.
During the week of the hearing, Cubbin-Will submitted a “Motion to Strike Two Members of Appellee’s Committee of Counsel and Silence Appellee’s Advisors,” and a “Formal Request for Presence of Court Reporter during Oral Argument,” both of which were denied.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred in improperly considering actions of the Presbytery at its February 26, 2011, meeting which occurred after the original Complaint was filed, as curing the deficiencies of the Presbytery action on November 20, 2010.

This specification of error is not sustained. See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 2: The SPJC erred by receiving evidence of events and Presbytery action that occurred after the Presbytery meeting on November 20, 2010.

This specification of error is not sustained. See Decision below.

This specification of error is not sustained. See Decision below.

Specification of Error No. 4: The SPJC committed an error in constitutional interpretation by holding that the action of Presbytery on February 26, 2011, could “render moot” the Complainant’s requested remedy of reinstatement of the Session of SPC as it was on November 20, 2010.

This specification of error is not sustained. See Decision below.

Decision

During the February 26, 2011, meeting the Presbytery approved a motion regarding the AC for SPC. The motion was styled as a motion to “ratify” the Presbytery’s earlier November action. However, the February motion incorporated an expanded notice and discussion procedure, to meet the requirements of Book of Order G-11.0103s. Members of the November 2010 Session were specifically invited to the Presbytery meeting and given the opportunity to speak. Opportunity was afforded other congregational members as well. As such, whether it is viewed as a continuation of the November action, or as a new action, the fulfillment of due process in the February meeting is sufficient to overcome any objection to that action. Further, the February action was not challenged by Cubbin-Will.

After the meeting on February 26, 2011, an AC had been properly created with original jurisdiction to move forward to consider the proper course of “administration and management” of SPC. By then, it was not clear that closing the church was necessary. Both parties now refer to changes that have subsequently occurred in the life of the congregation which obviate closure. The goals of Cubbin-Will, albeit achieved by the AC with the prospect of a changed Session, are similar to the goals of the present AC. SPC is apparently ready to move on and away from the prospect of closure.

This Commission affirms the Synod decision in full. The cases cited by Cubbin-Will, Janet E. Wolfe v. Presbytery of Winnebago (Minutes, 2009, p. 398), and Daniel O. Hennigan v. Presbytery of Charlotte (Minutes, 2000, p. 583), are different from this case. Judicial economy and other practicalities dictate that in limited circumstances, such as those in this case, it is appropriate to allow evidence of events subsequent to the filing of a remedial complaint. In Wolfe and Hennigan, the GAPJC found that it would be improper to consider evidence of actions by the respondent subsequent to the filing of a complaint. However, where there is subsequent and properly accomplished action which achieves the remedy that might otherwise be imposed by a judicial commission, it is appropriate to receive such evidence. This Commission therefore draws a narrow distinction in this case that is consistent with George R. Stewart v. Mission Presbytery (Minutes, 2008, p. 316), where the remedy sought had already been achieved.

Although Cubbin-Will’s argument is based on her objection to the admission of the minutes of the February 26, 2011, Presbytery meeting, Cubbin-Will and Presbytery have both repeatedly referred to events in the life of SPC and the work of the AC that are central to the selection of an appropriate remedy. This Commission does not interpret the prior cases to impose a rule which would discourage repair of procedural errors at the Presbytery level. The Hennigan decision obviously permitted consideration of post-complaint events in fashioning an appropriate remedy. This Commission determines that such an approach is necessary in the limited circumstances presented here.

For these reasons, this Commission accepts the SPJC conclusion that the relief sought by Appellant can no longer be achieved.
IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of South Atlantic is hereby sustained.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of South Atlantic report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Tropical Florida report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Flor Vélez-Díaz was absent and took no part in the deliberations for this case. Commissioner William Scheu did not participate in this case.

Certificate

We certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Remedial Case 220-12, Claire Cubbin-Will, Appellant (Complainant) vs. the Presbytery of Tropical Florida, Appellee (Respondent), made and announced at Indianapolis, IN, on April 29, 2012.

Dated this 29th day of April 2012.

C. Vote of Presbyteries on Proposed Amendments.

On Amending G-2.0104b to Make It Consistent with the Constitutional Questions in W-4.4003—From the Presbytery of Kiskiminetas.

The Presbytery of Kiskiminetas overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0104b be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“b. Standards for ordained service reflect the church’s desire to submit joyfully to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in all aspects of life (F-1.02). The council responsible for ordination and/or installation (G.2.0402; G-2.0607; G-3.0306) shall examine each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of ordered ministry. The examination shall include, but not be limited to, a determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003). Councils shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates. When examining those being presented for ordination and or installation, the council shall do so in obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture and guided by our confessions.”

Rationale

Section G-2.0104b requires a candidate for ordination/installation to be able and committed to “fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003).”

The constitutional questions require “obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture and ... continually guided by our confessions” (Book of Order, W-4.4003d).

We affirm that our confessions are standards in the church, they are subordinate standards to the Scriptures (Book of Order, F-2.02).

Therefore, we propose the above amendment to make the language internally consistent by reiterating the authority of Scripture over our confessions.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-01

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) with the following comment concerning Item 07-01:

The overture proposes to replace the final sentence of the recently adopted language of G-2.0104b with new language. The new language to be inserted is drawn directly from the questions for ordination and installation in W-4.4003d. The avowed purpose of the proposed amendment is to “make the language [of G-2.0104b] internally consistent by reiterating the authority of Scripture over our confessions.” The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the present F-2.02 already guarantees that “confessional statements are subordinate standards in the church, subject to the authority of Jesus Christ, the Word of God, as the Scriptures bear witness to him” (Book of Order, F-2.02). Thus the Constitution elsewhere accomplishes the avowed purpose of this overture.

The final sentence of G-2.0104b currently provides that, “Councils shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates.” The present language creates a relationship between the guidance of Scripture and the confessions on the one hand and the determination of readiness of an individual candidate on the other, by indicating that the guidance of Scripture and the confessions is to be sought in the process of applying standards in each individual examination. The session or presbytery seeks the guidance of Scripture and the confessions as part of each examination discussion. Examinations are thus a conversation between a candidate for ordination and/or installation and a session or presbytery, in which are brought to bear the resources of Scripture and the confessions on the question of whether that particular candidate is ready for the ordered ministry under the standards of the Constitution. Removal of this sentence weakens the clarity of the present requirement that the application of standards is an essential element of the examination of each individual candidate.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution further notes that the constitutional questions of W-4.4003, including the portion of W-4.4003d proposed for inclusion in this overture, bind individuals seeking admission to the church’s ordered ministry, rather than the actions of councils of the church. By contrast, the proposed language for insertion in this overture would apply this individual standard to the council, so that its examination would be conducted “in obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture, and guided by the confessions.” It is unclear precisely what conducting an examination in this manner entails. Moreover, it would appear to stand in tension with the church’s long-established standard for the conduct of examinations, found in Rankin v. National Capital Union Presbytery (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1981, Part I, p.113, Remedial Case 193-10). Under the Rankin decision, examinations are to be conducted “reasonably, responsibly, and deliberately within the Constitution of the Church.”

Advice and Counsel on Items 07-01 and Item 07-12–From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

Item 07-01 from the Presbytery of Kiskiminetas overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to amend G-2.0104b by replacing language related to the guidance of Scripture and the confessions with the specific language of the constitutional question in W-4.4003: “obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture and guided by our confessions.” Item 07-12 from the Presbytery of Wyoming overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to amend G-2.0104b to specify examination of a candidate’s willingness to “lead a life in obedience to Scripture. …” It also adds that a council’s ordination decision must meet the same standards.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises Item 07-01 and Item 07-12 be disapproved.

Rationale

Both Items 07-01 and 07-12 state the intent to amend G-2.0104b to clarify the primary authority of Scripture as the basis for standards of ordination and the discernment process of ordaining councils. However, this principle is already well-established in the Constitution of the PC(USA): “confessional statements are subordinate standards in the church, subject to the authority of Jesus Christ, the Word of God, as the Scriptures bear witness to him” (Book of Order, F-2.02).

Item 07-12 attempts to emphasize the priority of Scripture by inserting language from The Confession of 1967 that relates to living one’s life in obedience to Scripture. Yet that language does not achieve the stated purpose of clarifying the unique authority of Scripture as the basis for ordination standards and the decisions of councils.

Item 07-01 would replace the sentence that directs examining councils to “be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates” with language from the constitutional questions asked of candidates for ordination. It is unclear what is gained from this.

While ACSWP does not advise the necessity of any amendments to G-2.0104b, if the 220th General Assembly (2012) concludes that G-2.0104b needs to be amended to emphasize the unique authority of Scripture, ACSWP advises that the language proposed by Item 07-01 is less disruptive of the purpose of G-2.0104b.

Item 07-02

[The assembly disapproved Item 07-02. See p. 52 .]

On Amending G-2.0104b to Clarify Standards for Ordination—From the Presbytery of Stockton.

The Presbytery of Stockton overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0104b be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“b. Standards for ordained service reflect the church’s desire to submit joyfully to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in all aspects of life (F-1.02). These standards are found in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as interpreted by the confessions of the church and include the commitment to live a chaste and disciplined life, whether in holy marriage between a man and a woman or in single life (The Book of Confessions, 4.108). The council responsible for ordination and/or installation (G.2.0402; G-2.0607; G-3.0306) shall examine each candidate’s commitment to these standards, calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of ordered ministry. The examination shall include, but not be limited to, a determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003). Councils shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates. Only those who affirm a desire to adhere to the standards for ordained service and who make an affirmative answer to the constitutional questions shall be ordained or installed.”

Rationale

The Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) currently states that the manner of life of those called to ordained office in the church “should be a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world” (G-2.0104a).
It is vital to clarify that this gospel we are called to demonstrate is not whatever one wishes it to be, but is, rather, the faith “once for all delivered to the saints” (Jude 3). This gospel is found in the Scriptures as interpreted by our confessions.

Further, the Form of Government currently states that “Standards for ordained service reflect the church’s desire to submit joyfully to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in all aspects of life (F-1.02)” (G-2.0104b). This affirmation begs the question of what the Lordship of Jesus Christ means. The answer includes that we have no knowledge of Jesus Christ other than as he is revealed to humanity in the written Word of God. Therefore joyful submission to the Lordship of Jesus Christ means to seek obedience to the way of life that is commended to us in the Scriptures as interpreted by our confessions.

This amendment gives necessary definition to terms used in the Form of Government and removes ambiguity in the present wording that is causing grievous disruption to the peace, unity, purity, and witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Advice on Item 07-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 07-02 presents issues that the assembly should consider.

The overture proposes an amendment to G-2.0104b that (1) would add a new second sentence to the paragraph, (2) would insert the phrase “commitment to these standards” in the resulting third sentence, and (3) would strike the current final sentence and replace it with a new sentence. The new second sentence indicates that the “standards for ordained service” are found in the Scriptures and the confessions and include “the commitment to live a chaste and disciplined life whether in holy marriage between a man and a woman or in single life.” The sentence to be added in place of the current final sentence reads: “Only those who affirm a desire to adhere to the standards for ordained service and who make an affirmative answer to the constitutional questions shall be ordained or installed.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly of the following concerns:

1. Introducing the language of “holy” marriage may confuse the issue by raising questions of whether the marital relationship permitted under the proposed addition is exclusively a “Christian” marriage, and thus whether someone married in a civil ceremony would qualify for ordination or installation. If the assembly is satisfied with the intent of this overture, it may wish to consider using “the covenant of marriage” in place of the proposed “holy marriage.”

2. The insertion of the phrase “commitment to these standards” in the current second (proposed third) sentence of the paragraph is at least partly repetitive, since the next sentence mandates that the examination shall “include … a determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003).” Since a candidate must affirm the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as “the unique and authoritative witness to Jesus Christ in the Church Universal and God’s Word to [the candidate],” a commitment to these as standards is implied in the required affirmation.

3. The proposed requirement of an affirmation of a “desire to adhere to these standards of ordained service,” may limit a candidate’s right of freedom of conscience under G-2.0105. A candidate may declare an objection to one or more provisions of the Constitution, which might include a “standard of ordained service” as envisioned in this overture. It would then be the responsibility of the examining body to determine whether the objection constitutes a departure from an essential of Reformed faith and polity. Requiring an affirmation of a candidate’s desire to adhere to a standard to which he or she has objection raises the desire to adhere itself to the status of a necessary and essential article.

4. The final sentence to be added by the overture is at least partly repetitive of language already present in G-2.0104b. The text of the present statement contains the sentence that the examination shall “include but not be limited to a determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003).” The implication of the existing sentence is that a candidate who does not make an affirmative answer to the constitutional questions would not sustain his or her examination. The addition of the new final sentence serves to make explicit what is already implied in the previous sentence; the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the explication is unnecessary and could be deleted without loss of meaning.

5. The approval of this amendment would in substance reverse the decision of the 219th General Assembly (2010) and the subsequent approval of a majority of the presbyteries to remove the specific behavioral standard of “fidelity in marriage between a man and a woman or chastity in singleness” from the Form of Government. The assembly should weigh carefully whether it believes the majority of the church took that action in error before proposing this amendment.

Advice and Council on Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, and 07-16—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, and 07-16 from the Presbyteries of Stockton, Central Florida, Washington, and Foothills, respectively, overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to reinstate, as a standard for ordination, the requirement that candidates live either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman or to live in chastely in singleness.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, and 07-16 be disapproved.

Rationale

The effect of Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06 and 07-16 would be to reverse the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010), which has since been ratified by ninety-seven presbyteries, ten more than needed. Essentially, presbyteries would be asked to vote again on the same issue. While the 220th General Assembly (2012) can choose to do that, the current Constitution places the decision of a candidate’s suitability for ordination within the ordaining body.

Since 1978, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and its predecessors have recognized that ordination issues are justice issues. The history of the church’s struggle to embrace equality in ordination for women and racial ethnic men is a clear example of this connection. The action of the 217th General Assembly (2006), to approve Paragraph 5 of the Theological Task Force on the Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Church report, was intended to provide a way by which we could live together in mutual forbearance and respect our differences regarding ordination of homosexual persons. In response to a decision by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in Bush v. Presbytery of Pittsburgh (Remedial Case 218-10), the 218th General Assembly (2008) approved two authoritative interpretations intended to return to governing bodies the responsibility to determine what is “essential” and to avoid rigid and legalistic standards, particularly ones that highlight certain sexual sins while not naming many other forms and categories of serious sin.

The first stated: “Section G-6.0108 requires examining bodies to give prayerful and careful consideration, on an individual, case-by-case basis, to any departure from an ordination standard in matters of belief or practice that a candidate may declare during examination. However, the examining body is not required to accept a departure from standards. ...” The second affirmed that categorical statements by PC(USA) predecessor bodies, which declared that the ordination of a “self-affirming, practicing homosexual person to ministry” would be contradictory to Scripture and the will of Christ, would no longer be in effect.

The effect of the actions of the 218th and 219th General Assemblies (2008 and 2010) is to allow a governing body, based on their careful case-by-case consideration of the candidate, to determine that a candidate’s departure from the specific standard of fidelity in marriage and chastity in singleness is not a departure from the essentials of Reformed faith and polity. These actions attempt to balance the relationship between a council’s identification of the essentials of faith in the Reformed tradition and the individual’s right of conscience. They also strive to respect the diversity of theological views and methods of biblical interpretation that exist within our unity in Christ. Ultimately, these actions continue to place the responsibility for determining an individual’s readiness for ordination with sessions and presbyteries: “The decision as to whether a person has departed from essentials of Reformed faith and polity is made initially by the individual concerned but ultimately becomes the responsibility of the council in which he or she is a member (Book of Order, G-2.0105).

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 07-02.

Rationale

After more than thirty years of debate on this issue, the 219th General Assembly (2010), followed by a majority vote of the presbyteries, passed a resolution that removed the very language this resolution suggests reinserting into the Book of Order. The language now affirmed by the majority of the denomination moves us forward in this debate, calling for high standards for ordination that no longer single out a particular group of people for exclusion. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns believes that the Holy Spirit works in and through our denomination and is present in all of our processes of discernment, including that of the last General Assembly and the presbyteries over the past two years. The language we now have in the Book of Order as a result of that process reflects a movement of our church ever further in the direction of the grace and love expressed to us by the One in whose image we are all created. To reinsert the suggested language would be a reversal in both process and progress.

On Amending G-2.0104a to Include Standards Regarding Sexual Behavior—From the Presbytery of Central Florida.

The Presbytery of Central Florida overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-2.0104a be amended as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. To those called to exercise special functions in the church—deacons, ruling elders, and teaching elders—God gives suitable gifts for their various duties. In addition to possessing the necessary gifts and abilities, those who undertake particular ministries should be persons of strong faith, dedicated discipleship, and love of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. Their manner of life should be a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world, including living either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman (W-4.9001), or chastity in singleness. They must have the approval of God’s people and the concurring judgment of a council of the church.”

Rationale

Ordained persons who have abused the power of their office have harmed many in the church. This sends a strong message that such behavior will not be tolerated.

The removal of clear standards regarding sexual behavior is harmful not only to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), but also to many of our ecumenical relationships.

The removal of clear standards about appropriate sexual behavior has created misrepresentation of our beliefs and persecution of Christians in parts of the world where Christians are in the minority.

The passage of Amendment 10-A has been destructive to the peace, purity, and unity of the church.

In a world filled with confusion about sexual ethics and commitment, the church needs to emphasize the importance of fidelity within the bonds of marriage.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-03

Advice on Item 07-03—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 07-03 presents issues that the assembly should consider.

The proposed language would amend G-2.0104a by adding a clause at the end of the third sentence. Under the added language, that a candidate’s “manner of life” is “a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world” would be determined, at least in part, by whether or not the candidate lives in “fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman or chastity in singleness.” Inasmuch as the amended sentence of G-2.0104a is governed by the word “should,” approving this language would lift up a particular manner of life—sexual behavior and practice—as “a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world.” It would have the force of establishing a strongly recommended practice, but would not establish a required standard for service in the church’s ordered ministry. A session and presbytery would be expected to ascertain whether a candidate lives in the aforesaid fidelity and/or chastity as a partial determination of whether the candidate is ready for the ministry to which he or she has been elected.

The General Assembly will, of course, be aware that the language proposed for addition is part of the wording of the former G-6.0106b (Book of Order, 2009–2011) that was removed by majority vote of the presbyteries in favor of the current contents of G-2.0104b.

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) believes that the intent of Item 07-03 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed language is clear and consistent with that intent.

On Amending the Book of Order Concerning the Titles Used for Those in Ordered Ministries—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

The Presbytery of Santa Fe respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

1. That in the Form of Government (newly approved, 2011) the terms “ruling elder” and “teaching elder” used for those in ordered ministries be replaced throughout the with the former terms “elder” and “minister of Word and Sacrament” being substituted.

2. Amend F-3.0202 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“This church shall be governed by presbyters, that is, ruling elders and teaching elders ministers of the Word and Sacrament. Ruling Elders are so named not because they ‘lord it over’ the congregation (Matt. 20:25), but because they are chosen by the congregation to discern and measure guide in its fidelity to the Word of God, and to strengthen and nurture its faith and life. Teaching elders Ministers of the Word and Sacrament shall be committed in all their work to teaching the faith in word and in deed and equipping the people of God for their ministry and witness.”

3. Amend G-2.0301 follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Ruling Elder Defined

“As there were in Old Testament times elders for the government of the people, so the New Testament church provided persons with particular gifts to share in discernment of God’s Spirit and governance of God’s people. Accordingly, congregations should elect persons of wisdom and maturity of faith, having demonstrated skills in leadership and being compassionate in spirit. Ruling elders are so named not because they ‘lord it over’ the congregation (Matt. 20:25), but because they are chosen by the congregation to discern and measure guide in its fidelity to the Word of God, and to strengthen and nurture its faith and life. Ruling elders, together with teaching elders Elders, together with ministers of the Word and Sacrament, exercise leadership, government, spiritual discernment, and discipline and have responsibilities for the life of a congregation as well as the whole church, including ecumenical relationships. When elected by the congregation, they shall serve faithfully as members of the session. When elected as commissioners to higher councils, ruling elders participate and vote with the same authority as teaching elders ministers of the Word and Sacrament, and they are eligible for any office.”

4. Amend G-2.05 and G-2.0501 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Teaching Elders: The Ministry of the Word and Sacrament: Teaching Elder and Pastor

“G-2.0501 Teaching Elder Minister of the Word and Sacrament Defined

“Teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament) Ministers of the Word and Sacrament (also called teaching elders and pastors) shall in all things be committed to teaching the faith in word and deed and equipping the saints for the work of ministry (Eph. 4:12). They may serve in a variety of ministries as authorized by the presbytery. When they serve as preachers and teachers of the Word, they shall preach and teach the faith of the church, so that the people are shaped by the pattern of the gospel and strengthened for witness and service. When they serve at font and table, they shall interpret and ‘show forth’ the mysteries of grace and life in word and action, lifting the people’s vision toward the hope of God’s new creation. When they serve as pastors they shall support the people in the disciplines of the faith amid the struggles of daily life. When they serve as presbyters, they shall participate in the responsibilities of governance, seeking always to discern the mind of Christ and to build up Christ’s body through devotion, debate, and decision.”

Rationale

Language is important. As humans we easily adapt to the descriptors used for us; and people’s expectations of us are built around those same descriptors. Despite its historical provenance in the Reformed and Presbyterian tradition, the change in the PC(USA)”s new Foundations of Presbyterian Polity and Form of Government of the titles used for those called to “ordered ministry” falls short of providing a sufficient and accurate description of the offices of elder and minister of the Word and Sacrament. The shift to the designations of “ruling” and “teaching” elders as the primary titles is descriptively misleading and inadequate to the scope of the roles and functions associated with those offices. The new language also seems more institutional than communal and relational in its focus.

The change from “elder” to “ruling elder” is both restrictive and negative in its implications. It was apparently of sufficient concern to the authors of the new Form of Government to cause them to write a disclaimer into their text (“Ruling elders are so named not because they ‘lord it over’ the congregation…etc.”) in two places (F-3.0202 and G-2.0301). The need for this is understandable, as the word “ruling” evokes an authoritarianism that is foreign to the “ministry” of elders in the current church. In historical Presbyterian practice in Britain and the U.S., the “ruling elders” truly ruled, primarily as a disciplinary court. Old session minutes are often dominated by cases of Sabbath breaking, drunkenness, swearing, adultery, fornication, and other infractions by members of congregations, answered by various forms of public repentance imposed by the local session. The “ruling elders” of old even ruled on who was deemed to be duly prepared and ready to receive the Lord’s Supper every time (annually or quarterly) that it was dispensed. The word “ruling” carries troubling echoes of the “discipline” of former times, over against the vision of church as “a covenant community of disciples” set forth in the new Form of Government (F-1.0303).

The simple biblical term “elder” has broader implications without the negative aspect. The word evokes the elders of ancient Israel, and those of the early church. The elder is not, as the new Form of Government’s disclaimer says, someone who “lords it over” others; but who (hopefully) is a wise and faithful leader from whom one seeks counsel and guidance. The godly elder, in our tradition, is to be a person of prayer, a person grounded in Scripture, and ideally a memorable figure who—often more than the ministers—guides and shapes the local community across the generations. The Christian elder is, like Christ, more a servant than a ruler.

Comparable concerns arise in relation to the title “teaching elder.” Vocational ministry encompasses many functions. There is, of course, a “teaching” aspect, but even there the current terminology of “spiritual formation” may better convey the reality of what is intended for “teachers” of the gospel. A primary focus on the “teaching” role can too easily direct us toward old tendencies of focusing on the intellect at the expense of the heart and habits of life. It also raises the question of how the designation “teaching elder” encompasses the pastoral aspect of the vocational minister’s function.

Another, presumably unintended, consequence of the change to “teaching elder” from “minister of the Word and Sacrament” is that the emphasis on “teaching” may too easily focus on “the Word” at the expense of “Sacrament.” Presbyterians assert a balance of “Word” and “Sacrament” but in practice we have often emphasized the “Word” to the neglect of “Sacrament.” The former designation of “minister of the Word and Sacrament” constantly reminds us of the intended balance, and hopefully of the importance of experiencing the “sacred mysteries” of the faith in conjunction with our study and reasoning.

The role of a vocational minister is to minister the Word and the Sacraments to and with the people of God. The minister does this not, primarily, as a social worker, or psychologist, or administrator, or (even) teacher. The minister’s primary function is to bring the Word and the Sacraments to the community of faith “truly” and “rightly” so that they may be used by the Holy Spirit to do God’s work within and among us. Thus, the title “minister of Word and Sacrament” conveys—not only to those who bear the office, but to members of the community of faith, and even to those with no church affiliation—a clearer descriptive summary of what the role and function is.

A return to the nomenclature of “elder” and “minister of Word and Sacrament” is particularly appropriate in light of the new Form of Government’s repeated emphasis on the three historic “marks” of the Reformed church as being a body that “proclaims and hears the Word of God … administers and receives the Sacraments … and nurtures a covenant community of disciples of Christ” (F-1.0303).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-04

Advice on Item 07-04—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 07-04 presents issues that the assembly should consider.

The proposed amendment would require editing the entire Book of Order, so that wherever the current text reads “ruling elder” or “teaching elder,” those terms would be replaced by “elder” and “minister of the Word and Sacrament,” respectively. In addition, it would alter the wording of F-3.0202 concerning the governance of the church by presbyters, G-2.0301 concerning the definition of the ordered ministry of the ruling elder, and G-2.0501 concerning the definition of the ordered ministry of the teaching elder. The terms “elder” and “minister of the Word and Sacrament” are those used in the Book of Order prior to the revision approved by the church in 2011.
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes as a preface to this discussion that the title “minister of the Word and Sacrament” is not absent from the Form of Government; it appears in both G-2.0501 and G-4.0301. Historically, both the terms, “teaching elder” and “minister of the Word and Sacrament,” have been important in the language of the church. Both terms continue to have validity and currency. Thus the title, “minister of the Word and Sacrament,” is still in use and may be employed by the church in various contexts. This fact may eliminate the need for this overture.

As the rationale for this overture notes, “language is important.” It is through our language that we communicate to each other—and indeed, shape in our own minds—what we think. It is therefore vital that the terminology we use reflects as accurately as possible the theological commitments we make as a people of God. It is for this reason that the Form of Government employs the titles “teaching elder” and “ruling elder.”

The Form of Government as adopted by the church in 2011 understands that “the basic form of ministry is the ministry of the whole people of God, from whose midst some are called to ordered ministries, to fulfill particular functions” (G-2.01). In establishing this principle, the Form of Government seeks to counteract the tendency abroad in the church toward clericalism. Clericalism is the habit of the religious communities to rely mainly or even exclusively on a limited number of leaders—often professional leaders—to carry out the work of ministry. There are at least two ways in which clericalism poses a danger for Reformed communities.

First, clericalism suggests an unwarranted limitation on the call to ministry. Using the term “minister” to apply particularly to those ordained as teaching elders suggests that “ministry” is the work of the “minister of the Word and Sacrament” rather than the work of the whole people of God and of every baptized person individually.

Second, clericalism undermines the basic parity between ruling and teaching elders in the governance of the church. The Form of Government uses the terms “Teaching Elder” and “Ruling Elder” to suggest that, while the particular orders of ministry of the two are different, they are united in the shared responsibility as elders to govern and guide the ministry of God’s people. It is the unique gift of the Reformed community that there is a basic parity in the governance of the church between ruling and teaching elders.

The terms “teaching elder” and “ruling elder” point to vital functions that lie at the heart of these orders of ministry. The Form of Government lifts up teaching as the primary function through which the ministry of the Word and Sacrament is exercised. Section G-2.0501 states: “Teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament) shall in all things be committed to teaching the faith and equipping the saints for the work of ministry (Eph 4:12).”

The paragraph then goes on to elucidate the ways in which this teaching function is expressed through the various pastoral activities of proclamation, sacramental celebration, pastoral care, and service in the councils of the church.

The Form of Government lifts up this teaching function because it is central to the ministry of the Word and Sacrament. In so doing, it follows the tradition established early in the history of the Kirk of Scotland. In Chapter 4 of the Second Book of Discipline (1621), the Kirk of Scotland describes as a central function of the minister the “teaching of the word of God … publickly and privately, always travelling [travelling] to edifie, and discharge his [sic] conscience, as God’s word prescribes him.” That same section notes the minister’s responsibility for the administration of the Sacraments, “for both are appointed by God, as means to teach us, one by the ear and the other by the eyes, and other senses, that by both knowledge may be transferred to the minde.” By virtue of the educational requirements of those ordained to this ministry, the teaching elder is nearly always the best prepared, and in many communities uniquely prepared, to serve as the teacher of the faith.

The order of ruling elder is so named in recognition of the ministry of discernment and governance. Again, in the early polity of the Kirk of Scotland, the ruling elder is called to “be diligent in admonishing all men of their duty according to the rule of the Evangel (Second Booke of Discipline, 1621, Chapter 6). The title “ruling elder” preserves this significant function. Section G-2.0301 states: “… Ruling elders are so named not because they ‘lord it over’ the congregation (Matt 2:25), but because they are chosen by the congregation to discern and measure its fidelity to the Word of God, and to strengthen and nurture its faith and life.”

Finally, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the overture as proposed would introduce an inconsistency in the descriptions of the three orders of ministry in Chapter II. Currently, the titles of G-2.02, G-2.03, and G-2.05 exhibit a basic consistency of form, meant to suggest that each order has a name and then a defined function in ministry. Thus, G-2.02 describes “Deacons: The Ministry of Compassion and Service”; G-2.03 describes “Ruling Elders: The Ministry of Discernment and Governance”; G-2.05 describes “Teaching Elders: The Ministry of the Word and Sacrament.” The overture would alter this pattern. It does not propose a change in the title of G-2.03 but would change the text of G-2.0301 in a way that would be inconsistent with the title (preserving “Ruling Elder” in the title of G-2.03 but not in the title or text of G-2.0301). The proposed title in G-2.05 would abandon this form in favor of an apposition between the terms “Minister of Word and Sacrament” and “Teaching Elder and Pastor.”

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) believes that the intent of Item 07-04 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly to instruct the Stated Clerk to make the changes in section titles as follows:
Item 07-05

On Amending G-2.0104a to Include “Repentance of Sin” and “Means of Grace”—From the Presbytery of San Jose.

The Presbytery of San Jose overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0104a of the Book of Order be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“a. To those called to exercise special functions in the church —deacons, ruling elders, and teaching elders —God gives suitable gifts for their various duties. In addition to possessing the necessary gifts and abilities, those who undertake particular ministries should be persons of strong faith, dedicated discipleship, and love of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. Their manner of life should be a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world. This includes repentance of sin and diligent use of the means of grace. They must have the approval of God’s people and the concurring judgment of a council of the church.”

Section G-2.0104 of the Book of Order states:

a. To those called to exercise special functions in the church —deacons, ruling elders, and teaching elders —God gives suitable gifts for their various duties. In addition to possessing the necessary gifts and abilities, those who undertake particular ministries should be persons of strong faith, dedicated discipleship, and love of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. Their manner of life should be a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world. They must have the approval of God’s people and the concurring judgment of a council of the church; and

Q. 195. What do we pray for in the sixth petition?

A. In the sixth petition (which is, “And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil”), acknowledging that the most wise, righteous, and gracious God, for divers holy and just ends, may so order things that we may be assaulted, foiled, and for a time led captive by temptations; that Satan, the world, and the flesh, are ready powerfully to draw us aside and ensnare us; and that we, even after the pardon of our sins, by reason of our corruption, weakness, and want of watchfulness, are not only subject to be tempted, and forward to expose ourselves unto temptations, but also of ourselves unable and unwilling to resist them, to recover out of them, and to improve them; and worthy to be left under the power of them; we pray: that God would so overrule the world and all in it, subdue the flesh, and restrain Satan, order all things, bestow and bless all means of grace, and quicken us to watchfulness in the use of them, that we and all his people may by his providence be kept from being tempted to sin; or, if tempted, that by his Spirit we may be powerfully supported and enabled to stand in the hour of temptation; or, when fallen, raised again and recovered out of it, and have a sanctified use and improvement thereof; that our sanctification and salvation may be perfected, Satan trodden under our feet, and we fully freed from sin, temptation, and all evil forever. (The Book of Confessions, The Larger Catechism, 7.305)

When a church member is found guilty of an offense because of acting contrary to the Scriptures and/or the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), that person is censured and the following is part of the public rebuke:

“We urge you to use diligently the means of grace to the end that you may be more obedient to our Lord Jesus Christ” (Book of Order, D-12.0102).

We respectfully overture for the above specified amendment to G-2.0104a.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-05

Advice on Item 07-05—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 07-05 presents the following issues that the assembly should consider.
The overture would amend G-2.0104a by inserting as the fourth sentence the following: “This includes repentance of sin and diligent use of the means of grace.” The effect of the insertion of this sentence is to define the requirement of the third sentence that those called to the church’s ordered ministry exhibit a manner of life that is “a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world” by requiring repentance and diligent use of the means of grace.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that G-2.0104a bears the title “Gifts and Qualifications.” While the titles are not, of themselves, constitutional, they do provide important clues in the interpretation of the content of the text. In this paragraph, the Constitution affirms that God gives “suitable gifts” for the various duties of ordered ministry. In addition to these gifts, those who undertake these ministries should be persons possessed of certain qualifications. There is, therefore, a relationship between the “suitable gifts” and the qualifications of those who serve in the church’s ordered ministry. This relationship should stand as a caution to the church against quantifying behaviors that demonstrate the qualifications for ordered ministry, and against devising metrics or arbitrary standards by which the presence or absence of these qualifications should be measured.

The additional qualifications envisioned in this overture bear comment. “Repentance of sin” is a broad phrase that may be open to considerable interpretation, especially when it is seen as a qualification for ordered ministry. Renunciation of evil is a part of the profession of faith made by all active members of the church (Book of Order, W-3.3603b). Moreover, since “… all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God” (Rom. 3.23), the commitment to renounce sin and rely on God’s grace is a continuing one applicable to all believers, candidates included. Neither the language of profession nor that proposed here lifts one sin above others as especially requiring repentance (e.g., sexual behavior), nor does it differentiate between sins as to their magnitude or implication for service in the church’s ordered ministries. Care must be taken not to use the proposed sentence as the basis for establishing minimum standards of sins to be repented. The question is not “Has one repented of a particular sin?” but “Does the life of this individual show evidence of the humility required for repentance?”

The “means of grace” are well-defined in our confessional tradition as the “outward and ordinary means whereby Christ communicates to us the benefits of redemption ….” Those means are “especially the Word, sacraments, and prayer, all of which are made effectual to the elect for salvation” (The Book of Confessions, 7.088; see also 7.264). A manner of life that demonstrates the Christian gospel in the church and the world would, under this sentence, show evidence of regular participation in the proclamation and hearing of the word, regular participation in the church’s observation of the sacraments, and regular participation in worship (“prayer”). Whether a particular candidate’s participation in the means of grace is sufficiently “diligent” might be a matter for discussion within a congregational nominating committee or presbytery committee charged with care of candidates, and might also be a subject to be addressed in the candidate’s examination. It might also be subject to nuanced consideration in light of the candidate’s physical limitations, family circumstances, or employment requirements.

Although it is not clear from the rationale, the intent of this overture may be to restore in substance, if not in precise wording, the prohibition from ordination and/or installation for those sexually active outside heterosexual marriage. The phrase “repentance of sin” is reminiscent of the phrase, “repent of any self-acknowledged practice the confessions call sin” that was removed from the Book of Order by action of the assembly and presbyteries in 2010–2011. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the insertion of the phrase “repentance of sin” will not have the effect of restoring the recently removed prohibition. Whether a candidate’s manner of life demonstrates the Christian gospel in the church and the world ultimately remains a matter for the council responsible for the ordination and/or installation to determine, under the provisions of G-2.0104b.

Finally, the advisory committee notes the similarity between the qualifications to be added to this paragraph and the commitments undertaken at profession of faith and/or Baptism (see Book of Order, W-4.2003, especially b and c). The committee suggests that any active member of the church, having made or reaffirmed such commitments, might reasonably be deemed to have met the qualifications proposed for addition by this overture. Since active membership in the church is a prerequisite for ordination and/or installation to the church’s ordered ministries (Book of Order, G-1.0402), the inclusion of these items in G-2.0104a is consistent and appropriate, if perhaps redundant.

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) agrees with the intent of Item 07-05, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed language is consistent with the church’s Constitution.

Item 07-06

The Presbytery of Washington overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:
Shall G-2.0104b be amended by striking the current text and inserting the text from G-6.0106b of the former Form of Government so that it will read as follows: [Text to be stricken is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Standards for ordained service reflect the church’s desire to submit joyfully to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in all aspects of life (F-1.02). The council responsible for ordination and/or installation (G-2.0402, G-2.0607, G-3.0306) shall examine each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of ordered ministry. The examination shall include, but not be limited to, a determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003). Councils shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates. Those who are called to office in the church are to lead a life in obedience to Scripture and in conformity to the historic confessional standards of the church. Among these standards is the requirement to live either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman (W-4.9001), or chastity in singleness. Persons refusing to repent of any self-acknowledged practice which the confessions call sin shall not be ordained and/or installed as deacons, ruling elders, or teaching elders.”

Rationale

We urge this change back to the historical language not only based on our individual consciences, but more importantly upon the timeless truth found in Scripture—our only infallible rule of faith and practice. Both the Old and New Testaments proclaim clearly that practiced homosexuality is outside God’s design laid out both in Creation as well as in the moral Law. As part of the moral law, these expectations are affirmed by Christ who came “not to abolish but to fulfill [the law]” (Mt. 5:17).

Those who argue that Christ has not given words of guidance in this matter and therefore we should lean to the side of tolerance, make an argument from silence, and therefore it is invalid from the very premise. Christ upheld the sacredness of sexuality as outlined in the Old Testament Law. We make these assertions not out of a spirit of exclusion or prejudice, but a conviction to remain true to the spirit of Scripture as well as to the letter. We are all sinners saved by grace, but we are still called to recognize what is outside God’s law and to respond in obedience.

Concurrence to Item 07-06 from the Presbytery of Yukon (with Additional Rationale).

We hold the following statements to be true:

- Presbyterians know it is essential to uphold the authority of Scripture,
- The historical witness of the church through our confessions condemns same-sex behavior,
- Christians must recognize God’s call through Scripture for Christians to be holy and set apart,
- It is necessary for us to be uncompromising when standing for God’s truth, and
- We remember the biblical teaching for Christians to be “in the world and not of it.”

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-06

Advice on Item 07-06—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 07-06 presents issues that the assembly should consider.

The proposed overture would delete current G-2.0104b and in its place add the text of former G-6.0106b.

The Advisory Committee advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the effect of this change would be directly to rescind the amendment of this passage in 2011 and to restore the previous standard of “fidelity within marriage between a man and a woman (W-4.9001) or chastity in singleness” to the Constitution.

The committee refers the assembly to its advice to the 219th General Assembly (2010) on Items 06-04 and 06-09. Specifically, the committee advised the assembly on Item 06-09:

This overture seeks to restore the ordination practice and principles affirmed in the Adopting Act of 1729, the paradigm through which the tension between the differing points of view and the unity of the church have been maintained through much of our denomination’s history. Examining bodies are required not only to examine “… each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of office,” but are also required to judge the candidate’s “… ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003)” (Item 06-09, emphasis added). These questions require that the candidate affirm the authority of scripture, adopt the essential tenets of the Reformed faith as contained in our confessions, and submit to the polity and discipline of the church. Moreover, the overture specifically states, consistent with the Adopting Act, that the examining bodies “… shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates…” (Item 06-09, emphasis added). …
The effect of reversing the approval of Item 06-09 (subsequently Amendment 10-A; now G-2.0104b) would be to rescind the more broadly stated language of current G-2.0104b, and to eliminate the connection our ordination standards and the principles of dissent upheld in the Adopting Act. It would restore the prohibition against the ordination of persons “who refuse to repent of any self-acknowledged practice the confessions call sin.” The effect of this restoration, if taken at face value, is to invite the creation of a list of “practices the confessions call sin” against which the behavior of the candidate might be compared. Such a list would likely be both long and onerous to use. The focus of the second sentence on sexual practice would have the effect of lifting sexual practice to a position of special prominence—a sin somehow more important than other sins—in the examination process of candidates for ordered ministry. The elevation of one sin above others runs counter to Reformed theology and its refusal to “grade” sins according to their “cardinal” or “venal” status.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution further notes that the approval of revisions to the Form of Government would necessitate certain editorial changes in the text of the overture as proposed; specifically, “ordered ministry” for “office,” “ruling elder” for “elder,” and “teaching elder” for “minister of the Word and Sacrament.”

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) believes that the intent of Item 07-06 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed language can be made clearer and more consistent with that intent by being revised to:

“Those who are called to [office] [ordered ministry] in the church are to lead a life in obedience to Scripture and in conformity to the historic confessional standards of the church. Among these standards is the requirement to live either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman (W-4.9001.), or chastity in singleness. Persons refusing to repent of any self-acknowledged practice which the confessions call sin shall not be ordained and/or installed as deacons, ruling elders, or teaching elders.”

Advice and Council on Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, and 07-16—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, and 07-16 from the Presbyteries of Stockton, Central Florida, Washington, and Foothills, respectively, overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to reinstate, as a standard for ordination, the requirement that candidates live either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman or to live in chastely in singleness.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, and 07-16 be disapproved.

Rationale

The effect of Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06 and 07-16 would be to reverse the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010), which has since been ratified by ninety-seven presbyteries, ten more than needed. Essentially, presbyteries would be asked to vote again on the same issue. While the 220th General Assembly (2012) can choose to do that, the current Constitution places the decision of a candidate’s suitability for ordination within the ordaining body.

Since 1978, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and its predecessors have recognized that ordination issues are justice issues. The history of the church’s struggle to embrace equality in ordination for women and racial ethnic men is a clear example of this connection. The action of the 217th General Assembly (2006), to approve Paragraph 5 of the Theological Task Force on the Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Church report, was intended to provide a way by which we could live together in mutual forbearance and respect our differences regarding ordination of homosexual persons. In response to a decision by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in Bush v. Presbytery of Pittsburgh (Remedial Case 218-10), the 218th General Assembly (2008) approved two authoritative interpretations intended to return to governing bodies the responsibility to determine what is “essential” and to avoid rigid and legalistic standards, particularly ones that highlight certain sexual sins while not naming many other forms and categories of serious sin.

The first stated: “Section G-6.0108 requires examining bodies to give prayerful and careful consideration, on an individual, case-by-case basis, to any departure from an ordination standard in matters of belief or practice that a candidate may declare during examination. However, the examining body is not required to accept a departure from standards. …” The second affirmed that categorical statements by PC(USA) predecessor bodies, which declared that the ordination of a “self-affirming, practicing homosexual person to ministry” would be contradictory to Scripture and the will of Christ, would no longer be in effect.

The effect of the actions of the 218th and 219th General Assemblies (2008 and 2010) is to allow a governing body, based on their careful case-by-case consideration of the candidate, to determine that a candidate’s departure from the specific standard of fidelity in marriage and chastity in singleness is not a departure from the essentials of Reformed faith and polity. These actions attempt to balance the relationship between a council’s identification of the essentials of faith in the Reformed tradition and the individual’s right of conscience. They also strive to respect the diversity of theological views and methods of bibal interpretation that exist within our unity in Christ. Ultimately, these actions continue to place the responsibility for determining an individual’s readiness for ordination with sessions and presbyteries: “The decision as to whether a person has departed from essentials of Reformed faith and polity is made initially by the individual concerned but ultimately becomes the responsibility of the council in which he or she is a member (Book of Order, G-2.0105).

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-06
Advice and Counsel on Item 07-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).
The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 07-06.

Rationale
The ACWC’s rationale for Item 07-02 is applicable here as well:

After more than thirty years of debate on this issue, the 219th General Assembly (2010), followed by a majority vote of the presbyteries, passed a resolution that removed the very language this resolution suggests reinserting into the Book of Order. The language now affirmed by the majority of the denomination moves us forward in this debate, calling for high stan-ards for ordination that no longer single out a particular group of people for exclusion. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns believes that the Holy Spirit works in and through our denomination and is present in all of our processes of discernment, including that of the last General Assembly and the presbyteries over the past two years. The language we now have in the Book of Order as a result of that process reflects a movement of our church ever further in the direction of the grace and love expressed to us by the One in whose image we are all created. To reinsert the suggested language would be a reversal in both process and progress.

[The assembly approved Item 07-07 with amendment. See pp. 52, 53.]

On Reevaluating the Process by Which Ordination Exams Are Written, Administered, and Graded—From the Presbytery of Cascades.

The Presbytery of the Cascades overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to do the following:
1. Reexamine the viability of testing as a way of discerning a candidate’s suitability for ministry.
2. Reevaluate and reassess the process by which the exams are written, administered, and graded.
3. Assess the exams’ assumed cultural neutrality and revise exams as needed to address disparities in pass rates.
4. Work with councils to develop effective, alternative methods of examination, and to encourage their use to grow the pastoral leadership pool for immigrant communities in need.
5. Request the assembly fund an expanded study of the overall process of preparation for ministry including the standard ordination examinations with recommendations to be reported to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

[Financial Implications: 2013: $17,660; 2014: $10,260 (Per Capita—OGA)]

Rationale
It has been forty-four years since the standard ordination exams were established for candidates for the Ministry of Word and Sacrament (teaching elder). Times have changed and we as a society have discovered that people today learn and process knowledge in different ways, especially those persons with learning disabilities as well as those who come to us from whom English is a second language. Many of our candidates are failing to pass the exams on the first, second, or even third attempts.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-07
Advice and Counsel on Item 07-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).
The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly approve Item 07-07
as amended:

Insert new Recommendations 3 and 4 to read as follows:
“[3. Assess the exams’ assumed cultural neutrality and revise exams as needed to address disparities in pass rates.

“[4. Work with councils to develop effective, alternative methods of examination, and to encourage their use to grow the pastoral leadership pool for immigrant communities in need.]”

Rationale

Research demonstrates disparities in pass rates between African American, Hispanic/Latino, and EuroAmerican candidates. African American and Hispanic/Latino readers have suggested revisions are needed to move the exams toward more cultural neutrality and a fairer examination process. As demographics shift, the church requires a diverse pool of trained leaders; thus, we must strive for the most effective process of assessment.

Additionally, alternative methods of examination are often more effective in cases where disability or a lack of English fluency render the standard exams difficult to use fairly.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 07-07

Comment on Item 07-07—From the Office of the General Assembly.

The Office of the General Assembly supports the presbyteries in the preparation for ministry process, which includes staff support for the Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) in administering the standard ordination examinations. The Office of Vocation and the PCCEC are in the midst of a multiyear effort to update the technological basis for administering the examinations and to provide the presbyteries with an effective tool for assessment of candidates’ readiness for ministry in today’s diverse contexts.

Both the overall preparation for ministry process and the role of the standard examinations within it were designed decades ago in response to the needs of the church and its ministry context at the time. The wide range of changes in the church, our ministry context, and in candidates preparing for ministry requires adaptive change in the process of formation of leadership. To that end, the Office of Vocation plans to bring together diverse leaders from across the church to consider the process of preparing persons for ministry as teaching elders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In order to build upon on the “Special Committee to Study the Nature of the Church in the 21st Century” and the “General Assembly Commission on Mid Councils” reports before this assembly, the plan calls for having this group to meet in the second half of 2012. The goal is to perform a ground-up review of the process, not only responding to changing needs but also learning from innovative approaches to ministry formation both within our church and among other denominations.

Rather than focus narrowly on the standard ordination examinations in isolation from the overall preparation for ministry process, we would ask that commissioners consider responding to Item 07–07 by requesting the assembly fund an expanded study of the overall process of preparation for ministry including the standard ordination examinations with recommendations to be reported to the 221st General Assembly in 2014.

Financial implications: $27,680

On Adding G-2.0104c Allowing Operational Manuals to Require Adherence to Certain Theological and/or Behavioral Expectations—From the Presbytery of South Alabama.

The Presbytery of South Alabama overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G. 2.0104 be amended by adding a new paragraph “c.” to read as follows:

“c. Councils may publicize in their operational manuals any theological, ethical, and behavioral expectations that reflect prevailing biblical and confessional interpretations of that governing body. These guidelines may be used to inform and instruct nominating and examining committees of a particular council.”

Rationale

The Constitution of the PC(USA) now requires councils such as sessions and presbyteries to make their own determination of the faith, giftedness, capacity, and general fitness for ordained leadership in the church. The governing body qualified to make such a determination for elders and deacons in a congregation is the session; for ministers of Word and Sacrament, the Presbytery. Based upon the principle of fairness and transparency, operational manuals for these councils should publicize guidelines to inform and instruct nominating and examining committees, as well as candidates for ordination, on issues that might be considered in the nominating and examining process.

The newest paragraph in the Book of Order pertaining to gifts and qualifications (G. 2.0104b) requires the use of the Scriptures and the confessions as guidelines, but needs clarification as to whether councils may use these guidelines to require adherence to certain theological and/or behavioral expectations. The intent of this overture is to clarify that a given council’s interpretation of Scripture or the confessions is to not only inform the process, but require adherence to standards based upon those interpretations.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-08

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 07-08 raises issues best addressed by the following authoritative interpretation of G-2.0104:

“Councils may impose other requirements on those in ordered ministries, after ordination and installation, such as requirements to abide by ethics or sexual misconduct policies. These policies may be used to inform nominating and examining committees of a particular council. Nominating and examining bodies may inform potential nominees or candidates of the existence of these policies, but the policies may not be used to establish prejudicial barriers. They do not excuse a council or its examining body from its responsibility to ‘examine each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of ordered ministry,’ nor do they prevent a council from determining that a waiver of one or more aspects of such policies may be warranted in light of the candidate’s examination.”

Rationale

The overture would add a new section G-2.0104c to the section “Gifts and Qualifications” to provide that “councils may publicize in their operational manuals any theological, ethical, and behavioral expectations that reflect prevailing biblical and confessional interpretations of that governing body,” and that “these guidelines may be used to “inform and instruct nominating and examining committees of a particular council.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the overture correctly understands the restriction placed on councils lower than the General Assembly with regard to ordination standards. In Bush v. Pittsburgh Presbytery (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p.319, Remedial Case 218-10), referring to the authoritative interpretation of (then) G-6.0108 by the 217th General Assembly (2006), the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GA PJC) determined:

The Authoritative Interpretation correctly states that the standards for ordination of officers in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are set forth in the Book of Confessions and the Form of Government. Section “b” of the Authoritative Interpretation states that “these standards are determined by the whole church, after the careful study of Scripture and theology, solely by the constitutional process of approval by the General Assembly with the approval of the presbyteries” (emphasis added). The constitutional process for amending ordination standards (or any other provision of the Constitution) is defined in Chapter 18 of the Form of Government. While the General Assembly and the GAPJC may interpret these standards, the Authoritative Interpretation did not (and constitutionally could not) change any ordination standard, including the requirements set forth in G-6.0106b. Similarly, no lower governing body can constitutionally define, diminish, augment or modify standards for ordination and installation of church officers.

The commission attached to this statement a footnote, which reads: “Governing bodies may impose other requirements on church officers, after ordination and installation, such as requirements to abide by ethics or sexual misconduct policies.”

The clear requirement of this decision is that no session or presbytery (or synod) can establish its own standards for ordination and installation, such standards serving as potential prejudicial barriers to candidates and thereby precluding individual examination and determination of readiness for ministry. At the same time, as the aforementioned footnote makes clear, a session or presbytery may establish ethics policies and to require adherence to them, provided that such policies are understood to apply to persons already ordained and installed in the ordered ministries of the church. This power is inherent in the right of any council, from the session to the General Assembly, to “frame statements of faith, bear testimony against error in doctrine and immorality in life,” etc (Book of Order, G-3.0102).

It is reasonable that, having adopted such ethics policies, a session or presbytery may wish to inform potential candidates, as well as those who nominate candidates and examine them of the existence of such policies. Such policies cannot be used to preclude individual examination of candidates, and their existence cannot relieve a session or presbytery of responsibility to hear objections to one or more aspects of the policy on the part of a candidate. Instead, having heard candidates regarding their objections, the examining council must determine whether to waive part or all of the policy in light of the rationale offered by the candidate.

The ACC notes that “Instruct” does not include instructing a nominating committee whom it may nominate or a congregation whom it may elect. In order to avoid confusion, the ACC advises that the word is essentially redundant, and could lead to confusion; it should be deleted.
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that, if it agrees with the intent of Item 07-08, that intent can better be accomplished by authoritative interpretation of G-2.0104, rather than by the addition of a new section of the Constitution.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 07-08 overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to add to G.2.0104 a new paragraph permitting ordaining councils to establish interpretations of Scripture and the church’s confessions and to require that judgments about a candidate’s adherence to ordination standards be based upon such interpretations.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 07-08 be disapproved.

Rationale

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 07-08 violates a Foundation of Presbyterian Polity: F-1.04 Openness to the Guidance of the Holy Spirit. This section clearly defines our Christian unity as embodying our many diversities: “In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction” (Book of Order, F-1.0403, italics added). In contrast, Item 07-08 would impose upon individual members of a council (sessions and presbyteries) a particular interpretation of Scripture or the confessions that they must apply as they try to discern a candidate’s adherence to the standards of ordination. Such a requirement ignores the responsibility of council members to be open to the movement of the Spirit.

Furthermore, Item 07-08 violates G-2.0105 Freedom of Conscience, which states: “So far as may be possible without serious departure from these standards, without infringing on the rights and views of others, and without obstructing the constitutional governance of the church, freedom of conscience with respect to the interpretation of Scripture is to be maintained.” As stated in the overture’s rationale, the clear intent of Item 07-08 is to “… require adherence to certain theological and/or behavioral expectations.”

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 07-08.

Rationale

The ACWC understands this item as motivated by a desire to reinsert on a local level the ordination requirement that was just removed from the Book of Order relating to living “either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman, or chastity in singleness.” Approval of this item would essentially allow a locally based reinsertion of the discriminatory language that was just removed from the Book of Order. Thus, ACWC’s rationale for Item 07-02 is appropriate here:

After more than thirty years of debate on this issue, the 219th General Assembly (2010), followed by a majority vote of the presbyteries, passed a resolution that removed the very language this resolution suggests reinserting into the Book of Order. The language now affirmed by the majority of the denomination moves us forward in this debate, calling for high standards for ordination that no longer single out a particular group of people for exclusion. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns believes that the Holy Spirit works in and through our denomination and is present in all of our processes of discernment, including that of the last General Assembly and the presbyteries over the past two years. The language we now have in the Book of Order as a result of that process reflects a movement of our church ever further in the direction of the grace and love expressed to us by the One in whose image we are all created. To reinsert the suggested language would be a reversal in both process and progress.

[The assembly disapproved Item 07-09. See pp. 52, 53.]

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of G-2.0402 and G-3.0306 to Clarify the Appropriateness of Questions to Officers-elect—From the Presbytery of Genesee Valley.

The Presbytery of Genesee Valley respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to issue the following authoritative interpretation of G-2.0402 and G-3.0306:
“Because members of an examining council are to assess the fitness of officers-elect on a case-by-case basis, in light of each person’s faith, life, and witness, and because such assessments are to be made in collective discernment under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, an elder-elect may not be required to commit during examination to how he or she might assess the fitness of other officers-elect in the future.”

Rationale

Following recent amendment of the church’s ordination standards, some have expressed concern that they may be disqualified from service given their opposition to ordained service by persons who are in same-sex relationships. This authoritative interpretation is meant to defuse apparent tensions over the potential misuse of abstract questions about this in examination.

The Constitution vests sole authority for the election of church officers in congregations, and sole authority for assessing the fitness of officers-elect in sessions and presbyteries. When they gather together to examine officers-elect, sessions and presbyteries “are not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ” (F-3.0204).

As authoritatively interpreted by General Assembly, the Constitution (G-2.0105) also makes clear that all examinations must be conducted on a case-by-case basis, in light of each officer-elect’s faith, life, and witness. Accordingly, it would be improper for any person to commit (or be asked to commit) to a particular view on matters relating to the fitness of other officers-elect outside the context of the actual examinations of such persons. Abstract questions about whom an incoming elder might or might not find fit for ordained service in the future are inconsistent with these basic principles, and may contribute to a climate of intimidation and mistrust. This authoritative interpretation is intended to make clear that such questioning during examination is improper.

Advice on Item 07-09—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 07-09.

The overture proposes an authoritative interpretation of G-2.0402 and G-3.0306, the former pertaining to the preparation and examination of deacons- and ruling elders-elect, and the latter pertaining to the examination of candidates for ordination or installation as teaching elders. The proposed interpretation anticipates that, in the course of the examination of a candidate for ordered ministry, the candidate might be asked to declare how he or she would vote in assessing the fitness of a subsequent candidate. The interpretation seeks to determine that all such questions concerning the fitness of persons not presently under examination are prohibited.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that it should be extremely cautious in placing limits on what a session or presbytery may or may not ask in the context of examining candidates for ordered ministry. Section G-2.0104b establishes only minimum limits—a candidate’s “ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003)” —and does not set boundaries in exploring a candidate’s theology or practice. The committee believes it would be unwise of the assembly to move beyond this minimal standard, and advises that the content of examinations is best left to the particular council responsible for ordination and installation.

The advisory committee is aware that there may be considerable tension and anxiety in the church over the question of whether dissent from the recently adopted revision of G-2.0104b may result in a constitutional bar to the ordination and/or installation of the dissenter. It may be that the intent of this overture is to prevent the application of the principles of the Maxwell v. Presbytery of Pittsburgh case (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1975, Part I p. 254, Remedial Case 1) to candidates who express objections of conscience to the provisions of G-2.0104b. If so, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the proposed interpretation will not offer such protection.

At stake in Maxwell (the so-called “Kenyon” case) was the candidate’s refusal to participate in the ordination of women, whom he understood Scripture to bar from ordained service. The General Assembly Permanent Judicial Council found that the then-Constitution of the UPCUSA contained a positive requirement that “the office of ruling elder shall be open to all members regardless of race, ethnic origin, sex, marital status, or age” (then 39.03), and “Every congregation shall elect persons from among its members, giving attention to a fair representation of both the male and female constituency of that congregation…” (then 47.01). It determined that, on the basis of that requirement, “refusal to ordain women on the basis of their sex is contrary to the Constitution.”

The Book of Order contains no positive requirement that persons sexually active outside the bounds of heterosexual marriage shall be ordained or installed in the ordered ministry of the church. The decision as to whether a candidate’s stated objection to the ordination or installation of such persons is or is not acceptable remains the prerogative of the examining council (Book of Order, G-2.0104b). Section G-2.0105 protects the right of a candidate to declare an objection of conscience to provisions of the Constitution, provided that such objections neither infringe upon the rights and views of others nor obstruct the constitutional governance of the church. It vests the examining council with the ultimate responsibility to determine, after hearing the objection and rationale, whether the objection constitutes a departure from the essentials of Reformed faith and polity. Given the absence of a positive requirement to ordain or install persons sexually active outside the bounds of heterosexual marriage, a council would be within its rights either to sustain or decline to sustain the examination of a person expressing an objection to such ordinations, as it was guided by Scripture and the confessions to do.

The committee further notes that the limitation of G-2.0105 prohibiting “obstructing the constitutional governance of the church” would require that a moderator of a session bears certain responsibilities toward that session (see G-3.0104). A refusal to carry out these constitutionally-mandated responsibilities would amount to obstruction of the church’s constitutional governance. The committee refers the assembly to its advice on this point in response to Item 06-19.

If it is the desire of the assembly to provide protection of conscience for those who cannot in good conscience participate in the ordination of one whose “manner of life,” in their opinion, “is not a demonstration of the gospel in the church and in the world,” then a more appropriate avenue would be to approve an authoritative interpretation that addresses the issue directly, such as the following interpretation of G-2.0104 and G-2.0105:

“The right of individual conscience to refrain from participation in an act of ordination or installation of a particular candidate for ordered ministry whose manner of life, in the judgment of the individual, does not constitute a demonstration of the gospel may not be abridged, provided that the constitutional governance of the church is not thereby obstructed.”

Advice and Counsel on Items 07-09 and 07-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 07-09 and 07-13 from the Presbyteries of Genesee Valley and Albany overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve an authoritative interpretation of G-2.0402 and G-3.0306 that would clarify that ordination examination by sessions and presbyteries may not require a current candidate to state how he or she might judge the fitness of future candidates.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Items 07-09 and 07-13 be disapproved.

Rationale

The ACSWP agrees that examining councils must make judgments as to the fitness of candidates for ordination on a case-by-case basis and in a spirit of discernment that is open to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. We sympathize with the concern raised in these items: the reduction of examinations for ordination to one litmus test. However, the proposed authoritative interpretation could create greater problems by precluding more general inquiries into candidates’ understanding of Scripture, the confessions, and Christian theology if responses might reveal the candidate’s view on, for example, the ordination of persons in same-gender relationships.

The better response to the concerns expressed in the overtures’ rationale is not to limit types of questions that may be asked, but to adhere fully to the Foundation of Presbyterian Polity concerning the inclusion of theological diversities (F-1.0403) and the responsibilities of ordaining councils as stated in G 2-0104b: “The council responsible for ordination and/or installation (G.2.0402; G-2.0607; G-3.0306) shall examine each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of ordered ministry. The examination shall include, but not be limited to, a determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003). Councils shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates.”

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 07-09

Comment on Item 07-09—From the Office of the General Assembly.

This overture may produce discussions of Kenyonization, a term arising from Maxwell vs. Presbytery of Pittsburgh (UPC, 1975). In Maxwell, Walter Wynn Kenyon, a candidate for ordination as a teaching elder, was asked whether he would ordain women elected to the congregation’s session. Kenyon answered “no,” citing biblical grounds. However, during the examination, Kenyon acknowledged he would be pleased to call in or have the presbytery send in another minister to ordain a duly elected woman to serve on the session. Kenyon also said he willingly would serve and work with ordained women. Following the examination, the presbytery voted to proceed to ordination and asked Kenyon the constitutional questions/ordination vows including, “Do you endorse our church’s government, and will you honor its discipline?” Kenyon answered all the questions affirmatively and the Presbytery ordained him. On appeal, the synod overturned Kenyon’s ordination. This decision was appealed to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC), the denomination’s highest court.
As a remedial case, the presbytery’s decision to ordain Kenyon was clearly the main issue up for GAPJC review. In reading the decision, it also seems that prior to making this determination, the GAPJC first had to determine the constitutionality of Kenyon’s refusal to ordain women on the basis of whether this violated the candidate’s vows of ordination, particularly endorsing the church’s government and honoring its discipline. Citing the Form of Government at the time, the GAPJC noted that men and women may be called as officers and that “every congregation shall elect persons from among its members, giving attention to fair representation of both the male and female constituency of that congregation” (then 47.01). The GAPJC further noted that the Book of Order contained numerous requirements “that the leadership of our church be open to all regardless of race, ethnic origin, sex, marital status, or age” (Maxwell, UPC, 1975, p. 258). The GAPJC held that Kenyon’s refusal to ordain women on the basis of their sex was contrary to the Constitution and acknowledged that:

> to permit ordination of a candidate who has announced that he cannot subscribe to the cited constitutional provisions has implications for the Church far beyond that one instance. The precedent, if applied generally, would affect every session, presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly, and more than one-half of our Church’s members. The challenged decision of Presbytery was not unique or of but minimal significance. The issue of equal treatment and leadership opportunity for all (particularly without regard to considerations of race and sex) is a paramount concern of our Church. Neither a synod nor the General Assembly has any power to allow a presbytery to grant an exception to an explicit constitutional provision.

Accordingly, the GAPJC held that the decision of the Presbytery of Pittsburgh to ordain Kenyon was not in conformity with the requirements set-out under the Form of Government on the ordination of ministers.

Underlying this overture seems to be two basic questions:

1. Can a presbytery deny someone membership because they are not willing to ordain someone in a same-gender relationship?
2. Can a presbytery deny someone membership because they are willing to ordain someone in a same-gender relationship?

Commissioners are thus encouraged to consider and reflect upon these questions in light of Maxwell vs. Pittsburgh (Kenyon) as well as how to balance this with the right that a body has to determine its own membership (Book of Order, F-3.0106, F-3.0102, G-2.0102, G-3.0306).

Item 07-10

[The assembly disapproved Item 07-10 with comment. See pp. 52, 53.]

On Adding New Section G-2.0106 Regarding Freedom of Conscience Pertaining to Ordinations—From the Presbytery of Stockton.

The Presbytery of Stockton overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Insert a new section “G-2.0106” after the present section G-2.0105 in order to clarify the right to freedom of conscience for governing bodies, to read as follows:

“G-2.0106 Freedom of Conscience for Councils

“Councils shall have the same freedom of conscience in their ordination decisions as that expressed for individuals in G-2.0105. This includes the decision to refuse ordination and/or installation of a candidate who, upon examination, does not desire or is unwilling to lead a chaste and disciplined life, whether in holy marriage between a man and a woman or in single life (The Book of Confessions, 4.108). No disciplinary action shall be taken against any council that decides, by majority vote, not to uphold the candidacy of an individual for ordination and/or installation to the office of deacon, ruling elder, or teaching elder on the grounds set forth above.”

Comment: Recognizing that some councils fear being reviewed for decisions they make regarding ordination, we remind those who would file complaints against, and the higher councils who will review those complaints, to bear in mind the previously adopted standards of review contained in the interpretation of G-6.0108/G-2.0105:

> Whether the examination and ordination and installation decision comply with the Constitution of the PC(USA), and whether the ordaining/installing body has conducted its examination reasonably, responsibly, prayerfully, and deliberately in deciding to ordain a candidate for church office is subject to review by higher governing bodies” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 515, and action, pp. 28–29).

Rationale

The current Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) fails to address freedom of conscience for governing bodies, now called councils. At a time when many governing bodies are trying to establish guidelines and procedures for implementing the new G-2.0104b, it is more necessary than ever to affirm and guarantee their freedom of conscience—to clarify that governing bodies will continue to be free from compulsion when making decisions about whether or not to uphold the candidacy of any individual for ordained office, following examination of that person.

This amendment guarantees that governing bodies will be permitted to exercise their freedom of conscience as they make decisions regarding ordination of any individual, including a practicing homosexual person, to all of the offices of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-10

Advice on Item 07-10—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 07-10.

The overture would add a new section G-2.0106 pertaining to freedom of conscience for examining councils (sessions and presbyteries) in decisions regarding ordination and installation.

Providing “freedom of conscience” to councils represents a new and potentially problematic right to be granted within the constitution. Hereafter, G-2.0105 (and its predecessor, G-6.0108) guaranteed freedom of conscience only to individual candidates under examination. Additionally, such freedom is bounded by three important limitations: “without serious departure from … standards, without infringing on the rights and views of others, and without obstructing the constitutional governance of the church.” This view of freedom of conscience as pertaining to an individual under examination makes the application of this language to a council difficult. In the case of the individual, the conscience under examination is singular and presumably clear; in the case of the council the “conscience” is not singular at all, but the majority will of a body composed of multiple consciences. The remedy for those whose individual consciences cannot be accommodated is voluntarily to leave the church. This is not an option for councils, which exist in organic relation to the whole. The organic unity of the church, expressed through the Principles of Presbyterian Government (F-3.02) requires councils to adhere to a single constitution. For this reason, the Constitution has never guaranteed such freedom to councils.

The matter raised by the overture pertains to a potential decision by a council not to ordain or install someone who is unwilling to lead a “chaste and disciplined life, whether in holy marriage between a man and a woman or in single life (The Book of Confessions, 4.108).” The citation from the Heidelberg Catechism does not contain the phrase “marriage between a man and a woman,” but rather uses the term “wedlock” (the advisory committee notes that the wording of this section of the Heidelberg Catechism may be altered to employ term “marriage” if the proposed retranslation of the confession is approved and adopted). The proposed phraseology thus depends not so much on the Catechism as on the definition of marriage in W-4.9001 of the Book of Order (a section also under consideration for amendment at the 220th General Assembly (2012)). Moreover, the inclusion of this language in this section appears to seek to reinsert language similar to the former “fidelity and chastity” language of G-6.0106b, removed by action of the church in 2011. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the reintroduction of this language as proposed in this overture would not constitute the definition of “chaste and disciplined life” as an ordination standard, but rather would serve as an example of the sort of reason a session or presbytery might adduce for declining to ordain or install a candidate.

The final sentence of the proposed section states that “No disciplinary action shall be taken against any council that declines to ordain or install a candidate “on the grounds set forth above.” There are two problems with this language.

First, this language conflicts with the previously adopted interpretation of G-6.0108/G-2.0105:

> d. Whether the examination and ordination and installation decision comply with the Constitution of the PC(USA), and whether the ordaining/installing body has conducted its examination reasonably, responsibly, prayerfully, and deliberately in deciding to ordain a candidate for church office is subject to review by higher governing bodies. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 515; and action, pp. 28–29).

Since judicial action is one form of review, by eliminating the possibility of remedial challenge to the action of a session or presbytery, the General Assembly would be exempting from review a significant responsibility of sessions and presbyteries. The principle of review and control by higher councils is essential to the organic unity of the church as expressed in the Principles of Presbyterian Government (F-3.0203 and F-3.0206).

Second, the antecedent referent of terms, “on the grounds stated above,” is both unclear and problematic. Is the intent of the overture to exempt sessions and presbyteries from remedial challenge to any decision regarding ordination and installation decisions (the content of sentence 1 of the proposed addition), or only to those decisions made concerning a candidate’s willingness or unwillingness to live a “chaste and disciplined life, whether in holy marriage… or single life (sentence 2)?” If the former, this provision constitutes a sweeping limitation on the rights of members to raise remedial challenges to actions of the councils of which they are members; if the latter, it raises a candidate’s sexual practices to a position of prominence not accorded any standard otherwise stated in the Constitution.

Finally, the advisory committee notes that the standards of review for a council in dealing with decisions regarding ordination and/or installation are established in Rankin v. National Capital Union Presbytery (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1981, Part I, p.113, Rem. 193-10): that the council acts “reasonably, responsibly, and deliberately within the Constitution of the Church.” The General Assembly affirmed this standard in its actions in 2006 as part of the recommendations of the Peace, Unity, and Purity Task Force:
07 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH ORDERS AND MINISTRY

Whether the examination and ordination and installation decision comply with the Constitution of the PC(USA), and whether the ordaining/installing body has conducted its examination reasonably, responsibly, prayerfully, and deliberately, in deciding to ordain a candidate for church office is subject to review by higher governing bodies (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 515).

Advice and Counsel on Items 07-10 and 07-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 07-10 and 07-11 from the Presbyteries of Stockton and Santa Barbara overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to add a section to G-2.0106 that would permit councils to refuse ordination to “practicing homosexual persons,” without incurring disciplinary action, as an expression of a council’s freedom of conscience.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Items 07-10 and 07-11 be disapproved.

Rationale

Items 07-10 and 07-11 propose to create a new “freedom of conscience for councils,” particularly as it would apply to councils’ freedom to deny ordination to “practicing homosexual persons,” or others, in order to protect ordaining councils from being compelled in ordination decisions. The ACSWP advises disapproval for several reasons.

First, in the Reformed Tradition, the concept of “freedom of conscience” has been understood as a right of individuals because of our understanding that an individual’s relationship with God may lead to unique and sincere views not recognized by the majority of good and well-meaning Christians. One might think of an early abolitionist or the authors of the Barmen Confession as examples. However, the individual’s right of freedom of conscience has never been understood as an absolute right. For example, in our Constitution, it is balanced with a concern that those in ordained ministry “adhere to the essentials of the Reformed faith and polity as expressed in this Constitution.” The ultimate decision about that is placed in the hands of the ordaining council (G-2.0105).

Similarly, the decision of an ordaining council, guided by Scripture and the confessions with sincere openness to the Holy Spirit, is also not absolute. Councils of the church are subject to the review of a higher governing body. This principle of review by higher bodies is essential to the just administration of the serious duties of the church’s councils. Particularly in the case of examining and ordaining individuals, the deliberations of councils are to be reasonable, responsible, deliberate, and prayerful. Without higher review, there would be no check on the abuse of power, no remedy of appeal for the misuse of power.

The ACSWP concurs with the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on these items and urges serious consideration of the constitutional issues they raise.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 07-10.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns would lift up the advice given on this item by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and would note that this overture would reverse the progress made by the 219th General Assembly (2010). The rationale ACWC gave for Item 07-02 is also suited for this overture:

After more than thirty years of debate on this issue, the 219th General Assembly (2010), followed by a majority vote of the presbyteries, passed a resolution that removed the very language this resolution suggests reinserting into the Book of Order. The language now affirmed by the majority of the denomination moves us forward in this debate, calling for high standards for ordination that no longer single out a particular group of people for exclusion. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns believes that the Holy Spirit works in and through our denomination and is present in all of our processes of discernment, including that of the last General Assembly and the presbyteries over the past two years. The language we now have in the Book of Order as a result of that process reflects a movement of our church ever further in the direction of the grace and love expressed to us by the One in whose image we are all created. To reinsert the suggested language would be a reversal in both process and progress.

[The assembly disapproved Item 07-11 with comment. See pp. 52, 53]

On Adding G-2.0106, Freedom of Conscience for Councils—From the Presbytery of Santa Barbara.

The Presbytery of Santa Barbara overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall a new section, G-2.0106, be inserted to read as follows:

“G-2.0106 Freedom of Conscience for Councils

“In addition to the freedom of conscience expressed in G-2.0105 for individuals, councils shall have the same freedom of conscience in their ordination decisions, including the decision to refuse ordination and/or installation following the examination of a candidate who does not desire or is unwilling to lead a chaste and disciplined life whether in holy marriage between a man and a woman or in single life (The Book of Confessions, 4.108). No action shall be brought against any council that makes a decision by majority vote to not uphold the examination of any candidate for ordination and/or installation to the office of deacon, ruling elder, or teaching elder, on the grounds set forth above.”

Comment: Recognizing that some councils fear being reviewed for decisions they make regarding ordination, we remind those who would file complaints against, and the higher councils who will review those complaints, to bear in mind the previously adopted standards of review contained in the interpretation of G-6.0108/G-2.0105:

“Whether the examination and ordination and installation decision comply with the Constitution of the PC(USA), and whether the ordaining/installing body has conducted its examination reasonably, responsibly, prayerfully, and deliberately in deciding to ordain a candidate for church office is subject to review by higher governing bodies.” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 515, and action, pp. 28–29).

Rationale

The Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) currently is silent on the freedom of conscience for governing bodies, now called councils. It is vital to clarify that governing bodies will continue to be free from compulsion in making decisions on whether or not to uphold an examination of any candidate for ordained office. At a time when many governing bodies are trying to establish guidelines and procedures for implementing the new G-2.0104b, it is necessary to affirm and guarantee their freedom of conscience.

This amendment gives the necessary affirmation that governing bodies will be permitted to exercise their freedom of conscience as they make decisions regarding ordination of practicing homosexual persons to all of the offices of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-11

Advice on Item 07-11—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) answer Item 07-11 with its response to Item 07-10.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 07-10 AND 07-11

Advice and Counsel on Items 07-10 and 07-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 07-10 and 07-11 from the Presbyteries of Stockton and Santa Barbara overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to add a section to G-2.0106 that would permit councils to refuse ordination to “practicing homosexual persons,” without incurring disciplinary action, as an expression of a council’s freedom of conscience.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Items 07-10 and 07-11 be disapproved.

Rationale

Items 07-10 and 07-11 propose to create a new “freedom of conscience for councils,” particularly as it would apply to councils’ freedom to deny ordination to “practicing homosexual persons,” or others, in order to protect ordaining councils from being compelled in ordination decisions. The ACSWP advises disapproval for several reasons.

First, in the Reformed Tradition, the concept of “freedom of conscience” has been understood as a right of individuals because of our understanding that an individual’s relationship with God may lead to unique and sincere views not recognized by the majority of good and well-meaning Christians. One might think of an early abolitionist or the authors of the Barmen Confession as examples. However, the individual’s right of freedom of conscience has never been understood as an absolute right. For example, in our Constitution, it is balanced with a concern that those in ordained ministry “adhere to the essentials of the Reformed faith and polity as expressed in this Constitution.” The ultimate decision about that is placed in the hands of the ordaining council (G-2.0105).

Similarly, the decision of an ordaining council, guided by Scripture and the confessions with sincere openness to the Holy Spirit, is also not absolute. Councils of the church are subject to the review of a higher governing body. This principle of review by higher bodies is essential to the just administration of the serious duties of the church’s councils. Particularly in the case of examining and ordaining individuals, the deliberations of councils are to be reasonable, responsible, deliberate, and prayerful. Without higher review, there would be no check on the abuse of power, no remedy of appeal for the misuse of power.

The ACSWP concurs with the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on these items and urges serious consideration of the constitutional issues they raise.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 07-11.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns would lift up the advice given on this item by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and would note that this overture would reverse the progress made by the 219th General Assembly (2010). The rationale ACWC gave for Item 07-02 is also suited for this overture:

After more than thirty years of debate on this issue, the 219th General Assembly (2010), followed by a majority vote of the presbyteries, passed a resolution that removed the very language this resolution suggests reinserting into the Book of Order. The language now affirmed by the majority of the denomination moves us forward in this debate, calling for high standards for ordination that no longer single out a particular group of people for exclusion. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns believes that the Holy Spirit works in and through our denomination and is present in all of our processes of discernment, including that of the last General Assembly and the presbyteries over the past two years. The language we now have in the Book of Order as a result of that process reflects a movement of our church ever further in the direction of the grace and love expressed to us by the One in whose image we are all created. To reinsert the suggested language would be a reversal in both process and progress.

On Amending G-2.0104b to Clearly State the Authority of Scripture as the Most Important Basis for the Ordination of an Office of the Church—Presbytery of Wyoming.

The Presbytery of Wyoming overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0104b be amended as follows: (Text to be deleted is shown with strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.)

“Standards for ordained service reflect the church’s desire to submit joyfully and obediently to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in all aspects of life.(F-1.02) The council responsible for ordination and/or installation (G.2.0402; G.2.0607; G.3.03060) shall examine each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of ordered ministry. The examination shall include, but not be limited to, the candidate’s willingness to lead a life in obedience to Scripture whereby his or her faith and obedience are nourished and regulated (Confession of 1967, 9.27), and the determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003). Councils shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates held to the same standards as the candidates as a basis for their decision to ordain and/or install an officer of the church.”

Rationale

The present G-2.0104b does not state clearly that the Scriptures are the most important basis for the standards for the ordination/installation of an officer of the church. This needs to be clarified.
The present G-2.0104b does not emphasize the authority of Scripture, and this needs to be strengthened in this portion of Book of Order to be consistent with the second ordination question.

Our Confession of 1967 spells out a wonderful understanding of the Bible. Using Section 9.27 to guide us, and also borrowing from the first ordination question, G-2.0104b needs to clarify the importance of Scripture by stating that “the candidate’s willingness to lead a life in obedience to Scripture whereby his or her faith and obedience are nourished and regulated.”

Our Rules of Discipline, D-2.0203b, states:

“b. An offense is any act or omission by a member or person in an ordered ministry of the church that is contrary to the Scriptures or the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” Since the Scriptures are a central basis for the discipline of a church officer, so should they be just as vital in the ordination of a church officer.

The present G-2.0104b does not hold the councils to the same standards as the persons to be ordained/installed. Councils need to be held to the same standards.

Authority of Scripture

A simple definition:

The Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the primary and foundational writings and teachings of the Christian faith. No other writings or teachings can be held to be more important or powerful because they have been given to us by God and have been inspired by the Holy Spirit.

The Confession of 1967:

The one sufficient revelation of God is Jesus Christ, the Word of God incarnate, to whom the Holy Spirit bears unique and authoritative witness through the Holy Scriptures, which are received and obeyed as the word of God written. The Scriptures are not a witness among others, but the witness without parallel. The church has received the books of the Old and New Testaments as prophetic and apostolic testimony in which it hears the word of God and by which its faith and obedience are nourished and regulated.

The New Testament is the recorded testimony of apostles to the coming of the Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth, and the sending of the Holy Spirit to the Church. The Old Testament bears witness to God's faithfulness in his covenant with Israel and points the way to the fulfillment of his purpose in Christ. The Old Testament is indispensable to understanding the New, and is not itself fully understood without the New.

The Bible is to be interpreted in the light of its witness to God’s work of reconciliation in Christ. The Scriptures, given under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, are nevertheless the words of men, conditioned by the language, thought forms, and literary fashions of the places and times at which they were written. They reflect views of life, history, and the cosmos which were then current. The church, therefore, has an obligation to approach the Scriptures with literary and historical understanding. As God has spoken his word in diverse cultural situations, the church is confident that he will continue to speak through the Scriptures in a changing world and in every form of human culture.

God's word is spoken to his church today where the Scriptures are faithfully preached and attentively read in dependence on the illumination of the Holy Spirit and with readiness to receive their truth and direction. (The Book of Confessions, 9.27–9.30)

Second ordination question:

“Do you accept the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be, by the Holy Spirit, the unique and authoritative witness to Jesus Christ in the Church universal, and God’s Word to you?” (Book of Order, W-4.4003b)

I do.

The Confession of 1967:

1. PREACHING AND TEACHING

God instructs his church and equips it for mission through preaching and teaching. By these, when they are carried on in fidelity to the Scriptures and dependence upon the Holy Spirit, the people hear the word of God and accept and follow Christ. The message is addressed to men in particular situations. Therefore, effective preaching, teaching, and personal witness require disciplined study of both the Bible and the contemporary world. All acts of public worship should be conducive to men's hearing of the gospel in a particular time and place and responding with fitting obedience. (The Book of Confessions, 9.49, emphasis added)

The Scots Confession:

CHAPTER XIX

The Authority of the Scriptures

As we believe and confess the Scriptures of God sufficient to instruct and make perfect the man of God, so do we affirm and avow their authority to be from God, and not to depend on men or angels. We affirm, therefore, that those who say the Scriptures have no other authority save that which they have received from the Kirk are blasphemous against God and injurious to the true Kirk, which always hears and obeys the voice of her own Spouse and Pastor, but takes not upon her to be mistress over the same. (The Book of Confessions, 3.19)

The Second Helvetric Confession:
CHAPTER I

Of The Holy Scripture Being The True Word of God

CANONICAL SCRIPTURE. We believe and confess the canonical Scriptures of the holy prophets and apostles of both Testaments to be the true Word of God, and to have sufficient authority of themselves, not of men. For God himself spoke to the fathers, prophets, apostles, and still speaks to us through the Holy Scriptures.

And in this Holy Scripture, the universal Church of Christ has the most complete exposition of all that pertains to a saving faith, and also to the framing of a life acceptable to God: and in this respect it is expressly commanded by God that nothing be either added to or taken from the same.

SCRIPTURE TEACHES FULLY ALL GODLINESS. We judge, therefore, that from these Scriptures are to be derived true wisdom and godliness, the reformation and government of churches; as also instruction in all duties of piety; and, to be short, the confirmation of doctrines, and the rejection of all errors, moreover, all exhortations according to that word of the apostle. “All Scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof,” etc. (II Tim. 3:16–17). Again, “I am writing these instructions to you,” says the apostle to Timothy, “so that you may know how one ought to behave in the household of God,” etc. (I Tim. 3:14–15). SCRIPTURE IS THE WORD OF GOD. Again, the selfsame apostle to the Thessalonians: “When,” says he, “you received the Word of God which you heard from us, you accepted it, not as the word of men but as what it really is, the Word of God,” etc. (I Thess. 2:13.) For the Lord himself has said in the Gospel, “It is not you who speak, but the Spirit of my Father speaking through you”; therefore “he who hears you hears me, and he who rejects me rejects him who sent me” (Matt. 10:20; Luke 10:16; John 13:20). (The Book of Confessions, 5.001–5.003, emphasis added)

The Westminster Confession of Faith:

10. The Supreme Judge, by which all controversies of religion are to be determined, and all decrees of councils, opinions of ancient writers, doctrines of men, and private spirits, are to be examined, and in whose sentence we are to rest, can be no other but the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scripture. (The Book of Confessions, 6.010, emphasis added)

A Brief Statement of Faith:

We trust in God the Holy Spirit, everywhere the giver and renewer of life.
The Spirit justifies us by grace through faith, sets us free to accept ourselves and to love God and neighbor, and binds us together with all believers in the one body of Christ, the Church.
The same Spirit who inspired the prophets and apostles rules our faith and life in Christ through Scripture, engages us through the Word proclaimed, claims us in the waters of baptism, feeds us with the bread of life and the cup of salvation, and calls women and men to all ministries of the Church.

In a broken and fearful world
the Spirit gives us courage
to pray without ceasing,
to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior,
to unmask idolatries in Church and culture,
to hear the voices of peoples long silenced,
and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace.

In gratitude to God, empowered by the Spirit, we strive to serve Christ in our daily tasks and to live holy and joyful lives, (The Book of Confessions, 10.4. Lines 52–74)

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-12

Advice on Item 07-12—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 07-12.

The overture would amend the language of G-2.0104b in two places:

1. By adding to the third sentence the expectation that the examination of a candidate shall include “the candidate’s willingness to lead a life in obedience to Scripture . . . ,” and

2. By deleting from the final sentence language about the examining council being “guided by Scripture and the confessions” and replacing it with the requirement that councils shall be “held to the same standards as candidates” in their decisions about ordination and installation.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes the following concerns:

1. The material proposed for addition to the third sentence of G-2.0104b appears to alter the meaning of the cited passages from The Book of Confessions, 9.27. This section of the Confession of 1967 deals with the nature of the Bible itself, and not directly with the use of Scripture as a standard for the behavior of those elected to ordered ministry. The entire paragraph reads:

Advice on Item 07-12
The one sufficient revelation of God is Jesus Christ, the Word of God incarnate, to whom the Holy Spirit bears unique and authoritative witness through the Holy Scriptures, which are received and obeyed as the word of God written. The Scriptures are not a witness among others, but the witness without parallel. The church has received the books of the Old and New Testaments as prophetic and apostolic in which it hears the word of God and by which its faith and obedience are nourished and regulated. (The Book of Confessions, 9.27; emphasis added)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the proposed addition to G-2.0104b alters the language of the confession in a small but significant way by substituting “his or her” for “its” in the final clause, thereby rendering the possessive antecedent as the candidate, rather than the “church” as the confession states. The alteration of the confessional language individualizes and personalizes the hearing of Scripture that then leads to the individualization of faith and obedience that are nourished by Scripture. By contrast, in each of the confessional citations adduced in the rationale in support of the overture, it is the church—and not the individual believer—that hears, is instructed by, believes, and confesses Scripture.

2. The proposed addition to the final sentence of G-2.0104b applies to councils (sessions and presbyteries) the “same standards as candidates as a basis for their decisions to ordain or install an officer of the church.” The proposed language is, at best, unclear. What “standards” are intended? The present paragraph, G-2.0104b, states that the examination is to include, at minimum, on the candidate’s “ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions” in W-4.4003. Sessions and presbyteries, as councils, do not answer the questions for ordination and installation; these questions are framed as required affirmations on the part of individuals prior to their ordination or installation into service on a council. The previous paragraph, G-2.0104a, lists as “qualifications” given to those who consider answering the call to ordained service “strong faith, dedicated discipleship, and love of Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior,” and a “manner of life” that is “a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world.” Once again, this passage is framed as a description of an individual believer and candidate, rather than of a council as a body.

The Advisory Committee also notes that the Book of Order no longer uses the term “officer” to describe persons called, ordained, and installed in one of the orders of ministry described in Chapter Two of the Form of Government.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL FOR ITEMS 07-01 AND 07-12

Advice and Counsel on Items 07-01 and Item 07-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

Item 07-01 from the Presbytery of Kiskiminetas overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to amend G-2.0104b by replacing language related to the guidance of Scripture and the confessions with the specific language of the constitutional question in W-4.4003: “obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture and guided by our confessions.” Item 07-12 from the Presbytery of Wyoming overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to amend G-2.0104b to specify examination of a candidate’s willingness to “lead a life in obedience to Scripture. …” It also adds that a council’s ordination decision must meet the same standards.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises Item 07-01 and Item 07-12 be disapproved.

Rationale

Both Items 07-01 and 07-12 state the intent to amend G-2.0104b to clarify the primary authority of Scripture as the basis for standards of ordination and the discernment process of ordaining councils. However, this principle is already well-established in the Constitution of the PC(USA): “confessional statements are subordinate standards in the church, subject to the authority of Jesus Christ, the Word of God, as the Scriptures bear witness to him” (Book of Order, F-2.02).

Item 07-12 attempts to emphasize the priority of Scripture by inserting language from The Confession of 1967 that relates to living one’s life in obedience to Scripture. Yet that language does not achieve the stated purpose of clarifying the unique authority of Scripture as the basis for ordination standards and the decisions of councils.

Item 07-01 would replace the sentence that directs examining councils to “be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates” with language from the constitutional questions asked of candidates for ordination. It is unclear what is gained from this.

While ACSWP does not advise the necessity of any amendments to G-2.0104b, if the 220th General Assembly (2012) concludes that G-2.0104b needs to be amended to emphasize the unique authority of Scripture, ACSWP advises that the language proposed by Item 07-01 is less disruptive of the purpose of G-2.0104b.

[The assembly answered Item 07-13 by the action taken on Item 07-09 See pp. 52, 54.]

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of G-2.0402 and G-3.0306 to Clarify the Appropriateness of Questions to Officers-elect—From the Presbytery of Albany.

The Presbytery of Albany respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to issue the following authoritative interpretation of G-2.0402 and G-3.0306:

220TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2012) 695
Because members of an examining council are to assess the fitness of officers-elect on a case-by-case basis, in light of each person’s faith, life and witness, and because such assessments are to be made in collective discernment under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, an elder-elect shall not be required to commit during examination as to how he or she might assess the fitness of other officers-elect in the future."

Rationale

Following recent amendment of the church’s ordination standards, some have expressed concern that they may be disqualified from service given their opposition to ordained service by persons who are in same-sex relationships. This authoritative interpretation is meant to defuse apparent tensions over the potential misuse of abstract questions about this in examination.

The Constitution vests sole authority for the election of church officers in congregations, and sole authority for assessing the fitness of officers-elect in sessions and presbyteries. When they gather together to examine officers-elect, sessions and presbyteries “are not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ” (Book of Order, F-3.0204).

As authoritatively interpreted by General Assembly, the Constitution (G-2.0105) also makes clear that all examinations must be conducted on a case-by-case basis, in light of each officer-elect’s faith, life, and witness. Accordingly, it would be improper for any person to commit (or be asked to commit) to a particular view on matters relating to the fitness of other officers-elect outside the context of the actual examinations of such persons. Abstract questions about whom an incoming elder might or might not find fit for ordained service in the future are inconsistent with these basic principles, and may contribute to a climate of intimidation and mistrust. This authoritative interpretation is intended to make clear that such questioning during examination is improper.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-13

Advice on Item 07-13—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) answer Item 07-13 with its response to Item 07-09.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 07-09 AND 07-13

Advice and Counsel on Items 07-09 and 07-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 07-09 and 07-13 from the Presbyteries of Genesee Valley and Albany overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve an authoritative interpretation of G-2.0402 and G-3.0306 that would clarify that ordination examination by sessions and presbyteries may not require a current candidate to state how he or she might judge the fitness of future candidates.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Items 07-09 and 07-13 be disapproved.

Rationale

The ACSWP agrees that examining councils must make judgments as to the fitness of candidates for ordination on a case-by-case basis and in a spirit of discernment that is open to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. We sympathize with the concern raised in these items: the reduction of examinations for ordination to one litmus test. However, the proposed authoritative interpretation could create greater problems by precluding more general inquiries into candidates’ understanding of Scripture, the confessions, and Christian theology if responses might reveal the candidate’s view on, for example, the ordination of persons in same-gender relationships.

The better response to the concerns expressed in the overtures’ rationale is not to limit types of questions that may be asked, but to adhere fully to the Foundation of Presbyterian Polity concerning the inclusion of theological diversities (F-1.0403) and the responsibilities of ordaining councils as stated in G 2-0104b: “The council responsible for ordination and/or installation (G.2.0402; G.2.0607; G-3.0306) shall examine each candidate’s calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of ordered ministry. The examination shall include, but not be limited to, a determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003). Councils shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates.”

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 07-13

Comment on Item 07-13—From the Office of the General Assembly.

This overture may produce discussions of Kenyonization, a term arising from Maxwell vs. Presbytery of Pittsburgh (UPC, 1975). In Maxwell, Walter Wynn Kenyon, a candidate for ordination as a teaching elder, was asked whether he would ordain women elected to the congregation’s session. Kenyon answered “no,” citing biblical grounds. However, during the examination, Kenyon acknowledged he would be pleased to call in or have the presbytery send in another minister to ordain a duly elected woman to serve on the session. Kenyon also said he willingly would serve and work with ordained women. Following the examination, the presbytery voted to proceed to ordination and asked Kenyon the constitutional questions/ordination vows including, “Do you endorse our church’s government, and will you honor its discipline?” Kenyon answered all the questions affirmatively and the Presbytery ordained him. On appeal, the synod overturned Kenyon’s ordination. This decision was appealed to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC), the denomination’s highest court.

As a remedial case, the presbytery’s decision to ordain Kenyon was clearly the main issue up for GAPJC review. In reading the decision, it also seems that prior to making this determination, the GAPJC first had to determine the constitutionality of Kenyon’s refusal to ordain women on the basis of whether this violated the candidate’s vows of ordination, particularly endorsing the church’s government and honoring its discipline. Citing the Form of Government at the time, the GAPJC noted that men and women may be called as officers and that “every congregation shall elect persons from among its members, giving attention to fair representation of both the male and female constituency of that congregation” (then 47.01). The GAPJC further noted that the Book of Order contained numerous requirements “that the leadership of our church be open to all regardless of race, ethnic origin, sex, marital status, or age” (Maxwell vs. Pittsburgh, UPC, 1975, p. 258). The GAPJC held that Kenyon’s refusal to ordain women on the basis of their sex was contrary to the Constitution and acknowledged that:

- to permit ordination of a candidate who has announced that he cannot subscribe to the cited constitutional provisions has implications for the Church far beyond that one instance. The precedent, if applied generally, would affect every session, presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly, and more than one-half of our Church’s members. The challenged decision of Presbytery was not unique or of but minimal significance. The issue of equal treatment and leadership opportunity for all (particularly without regard to considerations of race and sex) is a paramount concern of our Church. Neither a synod nor the General Assembly has any power to allow a presbytery to grant an exception to an explicit constitutional provision.

Accordingly, the GAPJC held that the decision of the Presbytery of Pittsburgh to ordain Kenyon was not in conformity with the requirements set-out under the Form of Government on the ordination of ministers.

Underlying this overture seems to be two basic questions:

1. Can a presbytery deny someone membership because they are not willing to ordain someone in a same-gender relationship?
2. Can a presbytery deny someone membership because they are willing to ordain someone in a same-gender relationship?

Commissioners are thus encouraged to consider and reflect upon these questions in light of Maxwell vs. Pittsburgh (Kenyon) as well as how to balance this with the right that a body has to determine its own membership (Book of Order, F-3.0106, F-3.0102, G-2.0102, G-3.0306).

Item 07-15

On Affirming Statements in the Book of Order to Guide Councils in Examining Candidates for Ordination or Installation—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

The Presbytery of the Foothills overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve the following resolution:

“Be it resolved that the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in order to clarify and guide councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in their responsibility to examine candidates for ordination and/or installation, maintaining the standards of the church (G-2.0104b), does hereby affirm the following statements contained in the Book of Order:

“1. The Scriptures of the Old and New Testament are the Word of God written, witnessing to God’s self-revelation (W-2.2001);"
“2. The Confessions guide the church in its study and interpretation of the Scriptures, but they are also subordinate to the Scriptures (F-2.01 and F-2.02);

“3. The character, qualifications, and authority of ruling and teaching elders are laid down in the Holy Scriptures (F-3.0106);

“4. All are called to obey the Scriptures, which teach us of Christ’s will for the Church (F-1.0203);

“5. Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith (W-4.9001).”

Rationale

The 219th General Assembly (2010) and a majority of the presbyteries approved Amendment 10A, which altered wording regarding the gifts and qualifications of candidates for ordination and/or installation. The newly adopted statement affirms the importance of standards in the church. Such statement makes clear that the appropriate council is responsible for determining a candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill those standards and it is important for the General Assembly to guide those councils by reaffirming certain central standards set in the Book of Order. Although the statements of this resolution are already contained in the Book of Order, they are scattered in various places and therefore it is important to reaffirm, in one place, these central standards of the church as a guide to the councils when examining candidates.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-16

Advice on Item 07-16—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 07-16.

Rationale

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that Item 07-16 does not pose a question requiring interpretation of the Constitution. Although the item states that the purpose of the proposed resolution is to “clarify and guide” ordaining councils, it does not indicate what lack of clarity or need for additional guidance exists. In the absence of a specific question being asked or answered, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) not to respond to this item in a manner that might be thought binding upon the whole church.

Nevertheless, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that a comment is in order.

Item 07-16 calls on the 220th General Assembly (2012) to affirm together five statements drawn from passages in the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity or the Directory for Worship. Statements 1–4 are partial quotations or paraphrases of passages from W-2.2001, F-2.01, F-2.02, F-3.0106, and F-1.0203. Statement 5 is the full text of W-4.9001.

By extracting these quotes or paraphrases from their full contexts, nuances are lost and meanings are changed. For example, in F-1.0203, the paraphrase indicates that Scripture is to be obeyed, but in the provision cited, it is Christ’s will in Scripture that is to be obeyed. Partial citations such as these may lead to the impression that only the “affirmed” portions are significant, thereby diminishing the importance of the rest of the context from which each is drawn.

The process of examining persons elected for ordered ministry is provided in G-2.0104b. If the intent of the overture is to supplement the process of examination, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that this must be done by means of constitutional amendment.

Finally, as passages from the Book of Order, all five provisions cited are already binding on the whole church, and thus the “affirmation” of these statements is unnecessary.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, AND 07-16

Advice and Council on Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, and 07-16—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, and 07-16 from the Presbyteries of Stockton, Central Florida, Washington, and Foothills, respectively, overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to reinstate, as a standard for ordination, the requirement that candidates live either in fidelity within the covenant of marriage between a man and a woman or to live in chastely in singleness.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Items 07-02, 07-03, 07-06, and 07-16 be disapproved.
Item 07-17

On Honoring Christ in Our Relationships with One Another—From the Presbytery of Sacramento.

The Presbytery of Sacramento respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve the following statement:

“Because

• Jesus taught that our highest ethical obligation is to ‘... love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your strength, and with all your mind; and your neighbor as yourself’ (Lk. 10:27); and this is how ‘everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another’ (Jn. 13:35);

• having experienced Christ’s gracious love for us while we are yet sinners, we are called to ‘welcome one another, therefore, just as Christ has welcomed you, for the glory of God’ (Rom. 15:7);

• we affirm the solemn commitments expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination, installation, and commissioning, including that we intend to fulfill our ministries ‘in obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture, and ... continually guided by our confessions’; that we will be friends among our colleagues in ministry; that we ‘seek to follow the Lord Jesus Christ, love [our] neighbors, and work for the reconciliation of the world’ (Book of Order, W-4.4003);

• ‘... we hold that interpretation of the Scripture to be orthodox and genuine which is gleaned from the Scriptures themselves (from the nature of the language in which they were written, likewise according to the circumstances in which they were set down, and expounded in the light of like and unlike passages and of many and clearer passages) and which agree with the rule of faith and love, and contributes much to the glory of God and man’s salvation’ (The Book of Confessions, Second Helvetic Confession, 5.010);

• the larger Catechism lifts up the duty of holding ‘... a charitable esteem of our neighbors,’ and forbids the sin of ‘... misconstruing intentions, words, and actions’ (The Book of Confessions, 7.254–255).”
“The 220th General Assembly (2012) acknowledges that faithful Presbyterians earnestly seeking to follow Jesus Christ hold different views about what the Scriptures teach concerning the morality of committed, same-gender relationships. Therefore, while holding persons in ordered ministry to high standards of covenant fidelity in the exercise of their sexuality, as in all aspects of life, we [decline to take an action that would have the effect of imposing on the whole] acknowledge that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [does not have] one interpretation of Scripture in this matter. We commit ourselves to continue respectful dialogue with those who hold differing convictions, to welcome one another for God’s glory, and not to vilify those whose convictions we believe to be in error. We call on all Presbyterians to join us in this commitment.

[Comment: We request that this statement be brought before each presbytery at a stated meeting in which the report from the 220th General Assembly (2012) is given.]

Rationale

Some Presbyterians read the Scriptures to condemn all forms of same-gender sexual intimacy, and sometimes accuse other Presbyterians of abandoning the authority of Scripture, ignoring the need for repentance, and leading persons into serious sin.

Some Presbyterians read the Scriptures to bless committed same-gender relationships, and sometimes accuse other Presbyterians of bigotry, responsibility for bullying and suicides, and other harm caused by anti-gay attitudes.

All Presbyterians acknowledge that we are sinners in need of repentance, but we disagree about whether all homosexual intimacy is sinful, and over the best way to love our LGBT (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender) neighbors.

Each “side” perceives the other to be harming the cause of the Gospel.

Although the Scriptures contain a variety of patterns of sexual relationships without condemnation, most Presbyterians believe that intimate sexual expression is to be restricted to a committed partnership between two consenting adults who regard one another as equals and seek to honor God, community, and each other in their covenant relationship. While some believe that the partners must be a man and a woman, and others are convinced that the gender of the two partners is not of concern to God, all share the conviction that relationships should be life-giving, responsible, and a blessing to family, church, and community.

While it is incumbent on all to continue to seek God’s will for sexuality, no human being has a full understanding of God’s Truth and all are called to humility before the Lord and charity toward one another. Questioning the faithfulness of those who in good conscience disagree with our interpretation does not bring honor to Christ or build up his church.

Nothing in current Presbyterian polity or policy, including the ordination standard in G-2.0104, takes one side or another in the conflict over the morality of same-gender relationships. A variety of views is now allowed to coexist in the PC(USA), consistent with the historic Presbyterian principles of freedom of conscience in the interpretation of Scripture and mutual forbearance (Book of Order, F-3.01). Until God blesses the church with a clear consensus, continued attempts to impose uniformity are detrimental to the peace, unity, and purity of the church.

Advice on Item 07-17—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 07-17 does not seek constitutional interpretation and is, on its face, a request of the assembly to take certain actions to acknowledge differences among faithful Presbyterians concerning the morality of same-gender relationships. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution offers no advice to the assembly on this matter.

The advisory committee notes that the assembly has a duty to respond to all business before it. Requesting the assembly “to decline to take an action that would have the effect of imposing on the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) one interpretation of Scripture” places the assembly in the position of determining which of its actions might impose such limited interpretative possibilities. If the assembly chooses to respond affirmatively to this request, it will be answered by the actions of the 220th General Assembly (2012).

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-17 AND 07-18

Advice and Counsel on Items 07-17 and 07-18—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

Items 07-17 and 07-18 from the Presbyteries of Sacramento and Chicago overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to acknowledge the differences that exist among Christians regarding committed, same-gender relationships; to decline to impose any one scriptural interpretation of such relationships on the whole church; to continue in respectful dialogue, welcoming one another; and to call upon the whole church to join in this commitment.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 07-17 and 07-18 be disapproved.

_Rationale_

While the ACSWP supports the spirit of tolerance and the promotion of respect between diverse views apparently intended by these overtures, we advise that these items as formulated may create unintended consequences in their implementation. For example, it is unclear how a determination regarding the effect of a proposed action would be determined and by whom. The very tolerance of differences called for here is interpreted by some as a rejection of biblical standards.

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-17—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)._

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 07-17.

_Rationale_

While the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns affirms the need for respectful dialogue and the importance of treating one another as sisters and brothers in Christ even in disagreement, this overture has the potential to stand in the way of a continuation of the progress the church has made in removing discriminatory and marginalizing practices in the ordination process that target a specific group of people.

Even if God has not blessed the church with a clear consensus on the issue of same-sex marriage, God has blessed us with a clear call to do justice. To call for waiting for clear consensus to do justice is to lift a standard of acceptance of discrimination while we wait. This particular issue on which we do not yet all agree is not simply an abstract theological principal or doctrine, but a community of people living, moving, and serving in our churches while being denied full inclusion.

The dialogue must certainly continue, but to take a general stand on not taking any action that imposes one interpretation of Scripture in this matter has the potential to be used down the road to impede the progress we have made toward just treatment of LGBTQ members of the PC(USA).

On Committing Ourselves to Respectful Dialogue with Those Who Hold Differing Convictions—From the Presbytery of Chicago._

The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to make the following statement:

“Because

• Jesus taught that our highest ethical obligation is to ‘love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your being, with all your strength, and with all your mind, and love your neighbor as yourself’ (Lk. 10:27); and ‘this is how everyone will know that you are my disciples, when you love each other’ (Jn. 13:35);

• having experienced Christ’s gracious love for us while we are yet sinners, we are called to ‘welcome each other, in the same way that Christ also welcomed you, for God’s glory’ (Rom. 15:7);

• we affirm the solemn commitments expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination, installation, and commissioning, including that we intend to fulfill our ministries in obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture, and continually guided by our confessions; that that we will be friends among our colleagues in ministry; that we seek to follow the Lord Jesus Christ, love our neighbors, and work for the reconciliation of the world (Book of Order, W-4.4003);

• ‘we hold that interpretation of the Scripture to be orthodox and genuine which is gleaned from the Scriptures themselves (from the nature of the language in which they were written, likewise according to the circumstances in which they were set down, and expounded in the light of like and unlike passages …) and which agree with the rule of faith and love, and contributes much to the glory of God and man’s salvation’ (The Book of Confessions, The Second Helvetic Confession, 5.010);

Therefore, while holding persons in ordered ministry to high standards of covenant fidelity in the exercise of their sexuality, as in all aspects of life, we decline to take an action that would have the effect of imposing on the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) one interpretation of Scripture in this matter or preventing any teaching elder and/or congregation from providing the pastoral care and presence their consciences and faithful reading of the Scriptures tell them is necessary for them to fulfill ordination and baptismal vows. We commit ourselves to continue respectful dialogue with those who hold differing convictions, to welcome one another for God’s glory, and not to vilify those whose convictions we believe to be in error. We call on all Presbyterians to join us in this commitment.”

Report of the Office of Vocation on the Process to Evaluate the Current Call System to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, through the Office of Vocation, recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve the following actions:

1. That the Office of Vocation send a copy of this report to each presbytery encouraging their consideration of the findings as they create and update their presbytery call process.

2. That in its resourcing, training, and consultation with presbyteries, the Office of Vocation share ways in which a pastoral search process can be shortened.

3. That online resources be created for presbyteries and congregational pastor nominating committees that highlight the ways a pastoral search process can be shortened.

4. That training for presbyteries regarding the call process includes information about ways a call process can be shortened.

5. That the revision of the current Church Leadership Connection system includes changes that will assist in shortening the call process.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2010 Referral: Item 06-19. On Establishing a Process to Evaluate the Current Call System—From the Presbytery of New Covenant (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 47, 477).

A. Introduction

The 219th General Assembly (2010) referred Item 06-19 to the Office of Vocation, instructing them to provide the requested evaluation of the current call system. Specifically, the referred overture requested “a process to evaluate the current call system of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and bring recommendations back to the 220th General Assembly in 2012 for changes that will shorten the length of time during which a church seeking a pastor is ordinarily without an installed pastor” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p.248 of printed Journal, p. 477 of electronic Journal).

The call system of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) includes the process required by the Book of Order, policies and processes of each presbytery, processes of congregations and other calling bodies, and the national call referral system managed by the Office of Vocation. In responding to this item, the Office of Vocation considered each of those parts and how best to effect the change needed.

B. Evaluation Process

The PC(USA) Office of Vocation added the evaluation of the current call system for this stated purpose into its regular five-year review and update of Church Leadership Connection (CLC), the online matching and referral system of the denomination. Beginning with the 2010 Fall Polity Conference, Office of Vocation staff used opportunities at conferences, meetings, and training events to gather insights, critiques, and suggestions about the current call system.

In 2010, Research Services surveyed users of CLC and compiled their feedback. Findings from the 2011 CLC survey will be also be compiled by Research Services in early 2012. Individuals and small groups of those with experience with the current call system were also consulted. Those consulted included:

- Presbytery and Synod Staff (approximately half of presbyteries)
- Pastor Nominating Committee (PNC) chairs, upon completion of a search process
- Teaching Elders and Candidates who have recently completed a search process
- Association of Presbyterian Tentmakers (APT)
- Association of Presbyterian Interim Ministry Specialists (APIMS)
- Presbytery committee on ministry moderators and members
- Presbytery committee on preparation for ministry moderators and members
- Seminary placement officers
- PC(USA) Evangelism and Church Growth staff
- PC(USA) Legal and Constitutional Services staff
- PC(USA) Information Technology staff

The results of these consultations have been compiled and summarized in this report.

C. Concerns Identified

The concern expressed in the original overture highlighted the real problem that a long call process can present to congregations, especially in terms of the loss of momentum that congregations can ill afford. This same sentiment was expressed by a number of presbytery leaders.

In 2010, the median search time for churches that used CLC, from the time a Church Information Form (CIF) was submitted until a person was called, was ten months. However, in most cases there were already a number of additional months of pastoral vacancy before a CIF was submitted to CLC. At the end of the process, once a PNC has selected a candidate, presbytery and congregational approvals add additional time before the way is clear for the called pastor to end their current call and move to the new community. All of this together can leave a congregation with temporary leadership for as many as several years during which ministry may be in a holding pattern, new comers fail to commit, and search committee members become weary.

1. Presbytery Process

The section in the Book of Order on the call process (G-2.0803) begins with the phrase “According to the process of the presbytery…” While the Office of Vocation has the resource On Calling a Pastor to walk congregations and presbyteries through a “normal” call process, each presbytery has its own policies and processes. It is clear that there is no one standardized call process used by all presbyteries to assist congregations in calling a pastor. There are also many leadership positions that do not fit the norm.

Some presbyteries require an extensive congregational mission study before the search for a new pastor can begin. Others wait until after the new pastor has been in place for a year or two and involve pastor and people together in a process of discernment and engagement with their ministry context.

Some presbyteries use the shorter designated term call process for many of their congregations while others almost always use the “normal” process. In some presbyteries, ministry commissions have been empowered to approve calls on behalf of the presbytery while in others, call decisions, including the examination of teaching elders, must wait until regularly scheduled meetings of presbytery. With changing ministry needs and a new form of government that encourages flexibility, presbyteries are reviewing their call processes, especially with an eye toward shortening the length of time a congregation is without pastoral leadership.

2. The Current System

The current online call referral system was designed primarily to address the needs of presbyteries and congregations seeking full-time, installed pastors. While it is used for tent-making, temporary, shared, parish clusters, and co-pastor positions, it is less effective and is challenging for all involved.

Although the matching and referral process of this current system is much improved over cumbersome paper system of the 1990s that took twenty-seven minutes for one computerized match, it is still dependent on prompt actions of staff and volunteers in several key roles to move the process along.
In order to ensure awareness and approval of the key parties involved in the call process, the online call referral system requires electronic signatures of congregational and presbytery leaders. Prompt action helps to move the process quickly.

Approximately half of PC(USA) presbyteries ask the staff of CLC, to do the matching and referral functions for their positions. The CLC staff usually complete matches for PNCs on the day they are requested. However, CLC staff do not know the climate and culture of each congregation and have only a limited view through the CIF. Presbytery staff have a better understanding of the congregation and ministry context so are able to make more informed referrals. They may not be able to do the matching as promptly due to many other demands.

3. Supply and Demand Issues

While there are far more ministers and candidates seeking to find a call by using CLC than there are positions posted, small congregations in more rural locations of the denomination still have a difficult time finding pastoral leadership. Over half of all PIFs in CLC limit their search geographically and almost half of all PIFs will not consider a congregation of less than 100 members or a congregation located in a rural community. PNCs of smaller congregations located away from major metropolitan areas complain that many of the individuals with PIFs that have been matched to their CIF are not really open to considering their positions, no matter what their PIF may say. PNCs waste much time and energy looking at PIFs of individuals who are not open to considering their call.

While there is a desire to shorten the time a congregation has a pastoral vacancy, there is a greater desire to find the right pastoral leader for a particular ministry context. Presbyteries and congregations want good leaders to choose from AND short searches. A shorter search process with a number of good, viable teaching elders and candidates to consider can allow a PNC to spend more time and energy in discernment.

A number of constituents expressed a desire for a call system that, rather than matching on preferences, would embody a more biblical theology of call, which invites leaders to offer themselves to service of Christ, being open to the movement of the Spirit knowing that God may call them to serve in roles and places they might not have imagined.

D. Findings

There are particular steps that congregations, presbyteries, and the Office of Vocation through Church Leadership Connection, can take to help to shorten the length of time a congregation is without a pastor.

1. Congregations

• Consult with the presbytery as early as possible in a pastoral vacancy in order to understand presbytery processes in the calling of a new pastor.

• Consider completing a congregational mission study AFTER the new pastor has begun his or her ministry and can participate with the congregation in discernment.

• When given permission by presbytery, elect the PNC as soon as possible. The Book of Order allows the PNC to be elected as soon as presbytery has approved the effective date of the dissolution of the pastoral relationship.

• Elect a PNC that can work together well to discern God’s call. Members should be open to be surprised by God and be able to commit time to frequent meetings. A search will be slowed by committee members who have their mind made up from the start or by those who cannot come to meetings. Members should be “representative of the whole congregation” but not factions within the congregation. A PNC made up of individuals each focused on one area of interest will have a hard time agreeing on a pastor to present to the congregation.

• Take time to meet with presbytery leaders for orientation to your task and build good working relationships. This will speed the process.

• Take advantage of technologies to speed up the work of the PNC, such a viewing sermons on-line, using a program like Skype for interviewing, and communicating through email and text messaging. Also, use the congregation’s website to offer more information about the congregation to potential candidates.

• When considering PIF’s, make contact with potential candidates by email or phone very early in the process to ascertain if they are open to a call to your particular congregation.

2. Presbyteries

• Develop call processes that identify ways congregations and presbytery can work together to shorten the length of time a congregation is without a pastor. Communicate these processes to congregations and PNCs.
• Facilitate a congregational mission study after a new pastor has begun his or her ministry with the congregation, and not as a step in calling the new pastor.

• Allow the congregation to elect the PNC as soon as possible. The Book of Order allows the PNC to be elected as soon as presbytery has approved the effective date of the dissolution of the existing pastoral relationship.

• Speed up timeline for presbytery approvals and permissions in the call process. Consider called meetings of ministry commissions or presbytery rather than waiting for regularly scheduled meetings that can sometimes stretch decisions out for a month or more. Ensure that those responsible for signing off on PIFs and CIFs and doing matching and referral understand their responsibilities to do so in a timely manner.

• Consider a process that would offer congregations a way to “fast track” a call process, such as with pastors called for a designated term (see G-2.0504a).

3. Office of Vocation—Church Leadership Connection

• Encourage openness to God’s call by changing or removing some of the parameters on the PIF that identify “preferences” (community type, church size, geographic limitations).

• Narrow referrals to active call seekers, by inviting those who put PIFs into CLC to designate whether they are “actively seeking” a call or “not actively seeking, but open to a call.”

• Create the environment for the church to call forth needed leaders by allowing presbyteries to do their own discrete sorting of PIFs to find leaders with particular skills or experiences for a specific ministry setting within the presbytery.

• Develop a way for PNCs to manage PIFs and individuals to manage CIFs within CLC that would allow for easier and quicker downloading, contacting, ranking, notes, etc.

• Provide flexibility for a wide variety of positions that do not fit the parameters of a “normal” pastoral position.

• Change from skills to ministry emphasis; provide definitions for uniform understanding.

• Provide ability to attach sermons to PIFs for PNCs to listen.

Item 07-20

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) answer this request with the following response:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve the following authoritative interpretation of G-2.0702:

The qualifier “ordinarily” in G-2.0702 applies to the word “presbytery.” Examination, ordination, and installation are “ordinarily” acts of the presbytery having jurisdiction over the ministry of a teaching elder or candidate. The acts of examination and ordination are not optional in becoming a teaching elder (G-2.0104b; G-3.0306). A presbytery having jurisdiction over the ministry may, at its discretion, invite the presbytery of care to conduct the ordination of a candidate on its behalf; in such cases the presbytery of care may, at its discretion, conduct its own examination of the candidate prior to ordination. The act of examination by the presbytery having jurisdiction over the ministry is not optional in transferring the membership of a teaching elder from one presbytery to another. The presbytery having jurisdiction over the ministry shall install a teaching elder in a pastoral position. Installations are optional in validated ministries, and are at the discretion of the presbytery having jurisdiction over the ministry.

Findings

Pursuant to G-3.0501c, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the questions presented:

With respect to the first question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question presents a matter in which interpretation of the G-2.0702 is advisable.
There is a clear expectation in the Book of Order that candidates for the ministry of the Word and Sacrament shall be examined prior to being ordained, and that both candidates and previously ordained teaching elders shall be examined prior to being received as members of a presbytery (G-2.0104b, G-3.0109b3, and G-3.0306).

At the same time, the history of who conducts the examination and ordination of a candidate is varied. In antecedent polities, there was a difference of practice with regard to whether the ordination of a candidate was an act of the presbytery having supervised the preparation of the candidate or the presbytery having jurisdiction over the ministry. At various times and in various traditions, candidates for ordination as teaching elders have been examined and ordained by either the presbytery of jurisdiction (as was the case in former PCUS polity) or the presbytery of care (as was the case with the former UPCUSA polity). After wrestling with this question for several years after reunion, in 1997 the church settled on a preference for ordaining candidates in the presbytery of care, but used the word “ordinarily” to indicate that the place of examination and ordination could be negotiated between representatives of the presbyteries of jurisdiction and care.

The current Form of Government reverses this preference, however, lodging responsibility for examination, ordination, and installation of a candidate with the presbytery having jurisdiction over the ministry, albeit with the qualifier, “ordinarily.” The effect of the current provision is to link the examination, ordination, and installation of a candidate together as acts of the presbytery of jurisdiction. This linkage is consistent with the theology of ordination and call expressed in G-2.0103, in which the call to ministry is a three-part act, culminating in the “concurring judgment of a council of the church”—in this case, the presbytery issuing the call to a candidate it deems prepared and ready for the ministry entailed therein.

Linking ordination and installation also clarifies the examination process. Under the provisions of the former Form of Government, a candidate was often examined twice in quick succession, first for membership in the presbytery of jurisdiction, and again for ordination by the presbytery of care, which then proceeded to ordain and transfer the new ordinand to the presbytery of jurisdiction. Under the current language, the presbytery of care certifies that the candidate is ready for examination for ordination (G-2.0607), and the presbytery of jurisdiction examines for ordination and membership (G-3.0306).

At the same time, because the locus of ordination is often an emotional matter as well as a theological and ecclesiastical one, the current language does provide that the presbyteries of jurisdiction and care may negotiate between them which shall conduct the service of ordination, with the option of decision belonging to the presbytery of jurisdiction. In these cases, the presbytery of care is understood to be acting on behalf of the presbytery of jurisdiction, whose examination for membership may be accepted by the presbytery of care as sufficient to substitute for its own examination for ordination. This understanding should not be seen as in any way abridging the right of the presbytery of care to conduct its own examination for ordination, should it so choose. But the presbytery of care should be aware that, if it exerts this privilege, it is subjecting its own candidate to two examinations over the same material within a short time span.

Question Presented to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

This request from the Office of the General Assembly presents the following question upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

In G-2.0702, does the qualifier “ordinarily” apply to which presbytery (call or care) may perform the required actions (“shall … examine, ordain, and install”) or does it qualify the actions themselves, making “examine, ordain, and install” usual but not constitutionally mandated actions?

Authoritative Interpretation on 10-A. Pastor Will Not Moderate Session—From Associate Presbytery Pastor/Stated Clerk, Presbytery of Los Ranchos.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) answer this request with the following response:

Findings

Pursuant to G-3.0501c, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the questions presented:

1. With respect to the first question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question does not present a question requiring interpretation of the Book of Order, G-2.0105.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that G-3.0104 provides that, “If it is impractical for the pastor to moderate [a meeting of the session], he or she shall invite another teaching elder who is a member of the presbytery … to serve as moderator. If there is no installed pastor, or if the installed pastor is unable to invite another moderator, the presbytery shall make provision for a moderator.”

Under the circumstances envisioned in the request, the pastor would have responsibility to appoint a moderator in his or her stead, or, failing that, the presbytery would be responsible to appoint a moderator.

The committee notes that while the pastor may be excused from moderating the session under the terms of G-3.0104, he or she is not relieved of responsibility to appoint a moderator or to abide by and execute such duties as may be necessitated by decisions of the session.

However, the committee further notes that the clear intent of first sentence of G-3.0104 is that the pastor of a congregation shall serve as the moderator of the session. This is a constitutionally mandated function of the pastor. The third sentence of the paragraph, cited above, is intended to provide a means by which the pastor may be excused occasionally or “when it is impractical.” It should not be read as permitting a pastor permanently to excuse him or herself from moderating the session on grounds of conscience. The Book of Order, G-2.0105, provides for freedom of conscience within certain boundaries. The section states, in relevant part: “So far as may be possible without serious departure from these standards, without infringing on the rights and views of others, and without obstructing the constitutional governance of the church, freedom of conscience with respect to the interpretation of Scripture is to be maintained” [Emphasis added].

A presbytery has the authority to determine that an examined candidate’s refusal to fulfill constitutionally mandated functions on a regular and/or permanent basis exceeds the freedom of conscience granted in G-2.0105 and obstructs the constitutional governance of the church.

2. With respect to the second question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question does not present a question requiring interpretation of the Book of Order, G-2.0105.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the General Assembly has already addressed the constitutional issue at the heart of this complex hypothetical question. In 2006, the General Assembly rendered the following authoritative interpretation:

b. These standards are determined by the whole church, after the careful study of Scripture and theology, solely by the constitutional process of approval by the General Assembly with the approval of the presbyteries. These standards may be interpreted by the General Assembly and its Permanent Judicial Commission.

c. Ordaining and installing bodies, acting as corporate expressions of the church, have the responsibility to determine their membership by applying these standards to those elected to office. These determinations include:

(1) Whether a candidate being examined for ordination and/or installation as elder, deacon, or minister of Word and Sacrament has departed from scriptural and confessional standards for fitness for office,

(2) Whether any departure constitutes a failure to adhere to the essentials of Reformed faith and polity under G-6.0108 [now G-2.0105] of the Book of Order, thus barring the candidate from ordination and/or installation,

d. Whether the examination and ordination and installation decision comply with the Constitution of the PC(USA), and whether the ordaining/installing body has conducted its examination reasonably, responsibly, prayerfully, and deliberately in deciding to ordain a candidate for church office is subject to review by higher governing bodies.

e. All parties should endeavor to outdo one another in honoring another’s decisions, according the presumption of wisdom to ordaining/installing bodies in examining candidates and to the General Assembly, with presbyteries’ approval, in setting standards. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 515)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that a candidate for ordination or reception into the membership of a presbytery has freedom of conscience with respect to the interpretation of Scripture, within certain bounds. The determination as to whether a candidate making a declaration of conscience has departed from essentials of Reformed faith and polity rests with the examining presbytery. In making this determination, the presbytery should be aware of the limitations on freedom of conscience as provided in G-2.0105 as discussed in the response to question #1 above.

A declaration of conscience in and of itself is not necessarily a violation of an essential of Reformed faith and polity or an obstruction of constitutional governance. A candidate who declares an objection to ordaining a person sexually active outside the covenant of heterosexual marriage may not, in the eyes of the presbytery, have violated an essential of Reformed faith and polity, particularly if that individual is willing to secure another moderator for the ordination under the provisions of G-3.0104. However, in light of the answer to #1 above, the presbytery must counsel the candidate under examination that, once ordained or installed, he or she has a duty to fulfill constitutionally mandated responsibilities, including serving as regular moderator of the session (G-3.0104), and that failure to do so could result in disciplinary process against the minister.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution further notes that Item 07-08 (Ovt 018) deals with somewhat similar matters, and the committee refers the assembly to its advice there.
This request from the Presbytery of Los Ranchos presents the following questions upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

In light of the provisions of new G-2.0104: “… a determination of the candidate’s ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003)…”

1. How should a presbytery respond when a pastor refuses to moderate a session that includes a self-identified gay/lesbian individual in a public, long-term relationship, and concerning whose behavior the session has determined falls within the parameters of that congregation’s scriptural understanding of the manner of life required for ordered ministry per the provisions of G-2.0105?

2. How should a presbytery respond if this question was posed to a candidate being examined for ordination—or to a pastor being examined for membership in the presbytery—and they answer as the above pastor does?

Item 07-22

Question as to Whether G-2.0104b Has Been Amended—From the Session, First Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Tennessee.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) answer this request with the following response:

Findings

Pursuant to G-3.0501c, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the questions presented:

With respect to the question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question does not require interpretation of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that ample and clear notice was provided to the presbyteries concerning the fact that, should both Amendment 10-A (amending then G-6. 0106b) and the Proposed Amendments Part 3 of 3 (the revision of the Form of Government) be approved, the newly approved language of 10-A would replace section G-2.0104b as published in the Proposed Amendments Part 3 of 3. The approved language of Amendment 10-A thus properly appears as the text of G-2.0104b, and as such it, and not the language of former G-6.0106b, is a standard for ordination of persons to the ordered ministries of the church.

Section G-6.01 of the Book of Order affirms that the amendment procedures of the Constitution are “understood as a means to faithfulness.” Thus, the right of presbyteries to overture the General Assembly to amend the Constitution of the church may not lightly be abridged. Even when the General Assembly recommended to the presbyteries a complete revision of the Form of Government, it simultaneously placed before the church a number of other amendments, some to the then-current Form of Government for the affirmative or negative votes of the presbyteries. It did this in the expectation that, should the proposal to revise the entire Form of Government fail, the church still wished to consider amending the then-current Form of Government. In this context, Amendment 10-A, on amending G-6.0106b, was sent down. At the same time, the assembly and the Office of the Stated Clerk were aware that there needed to be a clear statement of the impact on the proposed new Form of Government of the adoption of any amendments, including Amendment 10-A. It provided that statement at the end of each amendment in italicized font. Upon passage of both a proposed amendment and the Form of Government revision as a whole, the Office of the General Assembly acted to revise the new Form of Government in a manner completely in accord with the published impact statements at the end of each amendment entry.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the rationale attached to the request presumes that there is a chronological sequence associated with the adoption and efficacy of the amendments proposed for adoption by the General Assembly. In point of fact, this is not accurate. As G-6.04 states, proposed amendments that meet the requirements of G-6.04 a–d “shall become effective one year following the adjournment of the assembly transmitting the proposed amendment.” All amendments approved by a General Assembly and receiving the positive votes of a majority of the presbyteries take effect simultaneously, rather than in chronological sequence. Thus the revisions to the Form of Government and to [then] G-6.0106b/now G-2.0104b took effect at the same time, and under the provisions recommended by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and approved by the General Assembly.
Questions Presented to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

This request from the session of First Presbyterian Church of Cleveland, Tennessee, presents the following questions upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

Since the Proposed Amendments to the Constitution, Part 3 of 3, amending the contents of the Form of Government, contained a section G-2.0104b whose wording was substantially identical to that of former G-6.0106b; and since the proposed revision of the Form of Government was approved by a majority of the presbyteries, thereby making it part of the Book of Order, is not the language of G-2.0104b as published in the proposed Amendments to the Constitution, Part 3 of 3 the present controlling language and as such is to be used as a guideline for standards of ordination?

The Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) establish the following process for determining PCCEC membership and to include the “Guiding Principles” of the PCCEC (see Appendix A) in the Manual of the General Assembly’s Guidelines and Policies:

MEMBERS: The Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) will be composed of no fewer than twelve members and no more than twenty-four members who are ruling or teaching elders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Any changes to this membership range will require a two-thirds majority vote of the PCCEC before submission to commissioners at a General Assembly for action on behalf of the presbyteries.

• Every two years, the PCCEC will review the number of members required to complete its work and will set a specific number of members within the range approved by the presbyteries by action of commissioners to the General Assembly.

• No more than half and no less than one-third of the members will be elected by the General Assembly to four-year terms on a staggered schedule. These members will be eligible to be reelected for an additional term. Candidates for these positions are nominated through the General Assembly Nominating Committee with consideration being given to areas of needed expertise, to gender and racial ethnic representation, to an approximate balance of ruling and teaching elders, and to various subcultures within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with regard to the overall composition of the PCCEC.

• Remaining members of the PCCEC will be elected from among and by examination readers designated by the presbyteries. To facilitate representation across the church, the PCCEC will group presbyteries into regions. These members will be elected and serve on a staggered schedule in four-year terms, and will be eligible to be reelected for an additional term.

Rationale

The Form of Government directs that examinations required as part of the final assessment of candidates’ “fitness and readiness for a call to ministry requiring ordination” as a teaching elder (Book of Order, G-2.0604) “shall be prepared and administered by a body created by the presbyteries” (Book of Order, G-2.0607d). Currently the Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) serves in this capacity. The committee wishes to reorganize its membership in order to provide more structural flexibility in meeting these responsibilities. The most practical means for the presbyteries to exercise their proper control over this body is through their commissioners to a General Assembly.

In order to assure transparency and clarity regarding the processes whereby the PCCEC goes about its work and seeks approval from the presbyteries for substantive changes to its own organization or the standard ordination examinations, the committee also requests that its “Guiding Principles” document be included in the Manual of the General Assembly among its Guidelines and Policies.

Appendix A

GUIDING PRINCIPLES
PRESBYTERIES’ COOPERATIVE COMMITTEE ON EXAMINATIONS FOR CANDIDATES

NAME: This permanent committee of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called the Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates. For convenience, the committee may be referred to as the PCCEC.

PURPOSE: The PCCEC’s purpose was defined by the action of the 1965 General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. in creating the committee:
In order to assist and support the work of presbytery committees which are responsible for the examination of candidates for ordination, to provide a more equitable standard of expectation among all the presbyteries, and to offer candidates a more uniform basis for their preparation for ordination examination, there shall be a Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates which shall report regularly to the General Assembly. (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1965, Part I, p. 113; for the full report and action, see pp. 104–118)

Historical note: A similar committee was created by the Presbyterian Church in the United States in 1976. At the time of the reunion of the PCUS and the UPCUSA in 1983, a successor committee was included in the Constitution of the re-united church.

The continuing work of the PCCEC is governed by the provisions of the most recent Book of Order as duly amended by the General Assembly and the several presbyteries. Its current commission derives from G-2.0607d that gives to the General Assembly the ability to approve standard ordination examinations that “shall be prepared and administered by a body created by the presbyteries.”

RESPONSIBILITIES: The PCCEC is charged with:

- Preparing those standard ordination examinations approved by the General Assembly. Currently these examinations are developed in five subject areas:
  - Bible Content
  - Open Book Biblical Exegesis (including Old Testament/Hebrew and New Testament/Greek texts)
  - Theological Competence
  - Worship and Sacraments
  - Church Polity

The PCCEC, in conversation with other bodies and representatives of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), may propose changes to the examination areas, names, or forms of these standard ordination examinations. Such proposed changes require a two-thirds majority vote by the committee prior to submission to the General Assembly for approval. These changes will continue to uphold the importance of integrated and critical thinking in the life and work of a pastor with regard to Scripture, The Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order. Candidates taking examinations will be directed to answer questions within the tradition of Reformed Theology, understood as theology in broad agreement with The Book of Confessions and the theology of John Calvin.

- Maintaining the security of the examination questions until they have been administered and maintaining the security of the Bible Content examination questions indefinitely. Security entails making sure that no one other than committee members, consultants (e.g., sensitivity reviewers), or staff of the Office of Preparation for Ministry/Examinations have access to draft or final versions of the examination questions prior to their administration.

- Administering the examinations.

- Organizing and working with readers to evaluate examinations.

- Training the readers to evaluate the examinations reliably and to write constructive comments.

- Maintaining a record of the final evaluation of each examination.

- Distributing the evaluations to the candidate, seminary, and presbytery.

- Providing a Handbook for Candidates that describes each examination as well as the process for registering for and taking the examinations.

- Collaboration with units within the Office of Vocation and the Committee on Theological Education.

- Reviewing regularly the nature, format, and effectiveness of the standard examinations and the means by which they are administered and evaluated.

The PCCEC is assisted in carrying out these responsibilities by staff of the Office of Preparation for Ministry/Examinations within the Office of Vocation.

ACCOUNTABILITY: The PCCEC is accountable to the General Assembly that is mandated to regularly review the work of each permanent committee. In its on-going work, the PCCEC is accountable through the Office of Vocation to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and the General Assembly Mission Council. The PCCEC assists and supports the work of the presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in a number of ways—first and foremost through the examinations administered on behalf of the presbyteries. Presbyteries elect readers to evaluate the examinations, and these readers are strongly encouraged to report their experience to their respective presbyteries. Those who have experience with the evaluation process can be a valuable resource for their presbytery’s committee overseeing inquirers and candidates.

MEMBERS: There shall be a total of twenty-four members who are ruling elders or teaching elders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Any changes to this structure will require a two-thirds majority vote of the committee before submission to the General Assembly for approval.

- Twelve members are elected by the General Assembly to four-year terms and are eligible to be reelected for an additional term. Candidates for these positions shall be nominated through the General Assembly Nominating Committee with consideration being given to areas of needed expertise, to gender and racial/ethnic representation, and to an approximate balance of ruling elders and teaching elders on the PCCEC.
• Each of the six regional reading groups will elect (on a staggered schedule) two members to serve as co-conveners of the reading group and as members of the PCCEC, preferably a teaching elder and a ruling elder. Each convener/member will serve a four-year term and is eligible to be reelected for an additional term.

MEETINGS: The PCCEC meets at least once annually to develop and review the forthcoming examinations and to transact such other business as may be necessary. All members are expected to attend the annual meeting and at least one of the reading groups.

OFFICERS: The officers of the PCCEC are a moderator and a secretary, elected annually by the entire committee.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE: The Executive Committee is composed of the moderator and secretary of the PCCEC and the chairs of the several task groups responsible for particular examinations. A designated General Assembly staff person is an ex officio member of the Executive Committee. The Executive Committee meets in conjunction with the PCCEC annual meeting and at such other times as may be necessary. The Executive Committee may conduct its business through conference calls or other electronic media. Decisions reached electronically need to be confirmed and entered into the minutes of the next face-to-face or conference call meeting.

TASK GROUPS: The members of the PCCEC are divided into task groups of approximately equal size. Each task group is responsible for the development of questions and evaluation standards for one or more of the standard ordination examinations. Members are assigned by the Executive Committee based upon personal interest and expertise of each member as well as upon the comparative needs of each task group.

Upon approval of the Executive Committee, volunteer consultants may be invited to augment a particular task group or reading group to provide expertise or capacity needed by that group.

• Bible Content Specialists: The Bible task group will be assisted by two Bible specialists with responsibility to create new Bible Content questions and to assemble two forms annually of the Bible Content exam for administration on-line.

• World Language Specialists: Appropriate members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will be designated to translate the examinations into other languages (e.g., Korean, Spanish) designated by the General Assembly.

READING GROUPS: The readers who evaluate the examinations are elected by their presbyteries to serve the wider church (G-3.0302b). Each reading group elects its own leadership (conveners) who are also members of the PCCEC. The process and procedures for conducting the reading groups is described in the Conveners’ Handbook.

ELECTIONS: The officers and chairs of the several task groups will normally be elected at the annual meeting of PCCEC upon nomination by a nominating committee formed of the members of PCCEC who are not eligible for reelection to service on PCCEC. If a vacancy occurs between annual meetings, such vacancy may be filled by an election conducted electronically upon nomination by the Executive Committee. The person so elected will serve until the end of the next annual meeting and is eligible to be elected to the same position through the usual election procedure at the annual meeting.

FINANCES: The work of the PCCEC is funded through two sources, the General Assembly per capita budget and the fees charged in conjunction with registration for the examinations. The PCCEC will regularly review these fees and decide on appropriate fees for subsequent years.

PARLIAMENTARY AUTHORITY: All meetings of the PCCEC will be conducted in accordance with the most recent edition of Roberts Rules of Order, Newly Revised except in those cases where the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) provides otherwise.

AMENDMENTS: These guidelines may be amended by a two-thirds majority vote of the PCCEC at its annual meeting, except in those areas noted within these guidelines where additional approval is required by the presbyteries acting through their commissioners to a General Assembly. The executive committee, subject to review by the full PCCEC, is empowered to make editorial revisions to assure compliance with changes to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (USA).

[The assembly answered Item 07-24 by the action taken on Item 07-17. See pp. 52, 55.]

On Honoring Christ in our Relationships with One Another—From the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area.

The Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to make the following statement:

“Because

• Jesus taught that our highest ethical obligation is to ‘love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your being, with all your strength, and with all your mind, and love your neighbor as yourself’ (Lk. 10:27); and ‘this is how everyone will know that you are my disciples, when you love each other’ (Jn. 13:35);
• having experienced Christ’s gracious love for us while we are yet sinners, we are called to ‘welcome each other, in the same way that Christ also welcomed you, for God’s glory’ (Rom. 15:7);

• we affirm the solemn commitments expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination, installation, and commissioning, including that we intend to fulfill our ministries in obedience to Jesus Christ, under the authority of Scripture, and continually guided by our confessions; that that we will be friends among our colleagues in ministry; that we seek to follow the Lord Jesus Christ, love our neighbors, and work for the reconciliation of the world (Book of Order, W-4.4003);

• ‘we hold that interpretation of the Scripture to be orthodox and genuine which is gleaned from the Scriptures themselves (from the nature of the language in which they were written, likewise according to the circumstances in which they were set down, and expounded in the light of like and unlike passages …) and which agree with the rule of faith and love, and contributes much to the glory of God and man’s salvation’ (The Book of Confessions, The Second Helvetic Confession, 5.010);

• All Presbyterians acknowledge that we are sinners in need of repentance, but we disagree about whether all homosexual intimacy is sinful. While it is incumbent on all to continue to seek God’s will for sexuality, no human being has a full understanding of God’s Truth and all are called to humility before the Lord and charity toward one another. Questioning the faithfulness of those who in good conscience disagree with our interpretation does not bring honor to Christ or build up his church.

“The 220th General Assembly (2012) acknowledges that faithful Presbyterians earnestly seeking to follow Jesus Christ hold different views about what the Scriptures teach concerning the morality of committed same-gender relationships. Therefore, while holding persons in ordered ministry to high standards of covenant fidelity in the exercise of their sexuality, as in all aspects of life, we decline to take an action that would have the effect of imposing on the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) one interpretation of Scripture in this matter. We commit ourselves to continue respectful dialogue with those who hold differing convictions, to welcome one another for God’s glory, and not to vilify those whose convictions we believe to be in error. We call on all Presbyterians to join us in this commitment.”

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-24

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-24—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 07-24.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 07-17 is applicable here as well:

While the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns affirms the need for respectful dialogue and the importance of treating one another as sisters and brothers in Christ even in disagreement, this overture has the potential to stand in the way of a continuation of the progress the church has made in removing discriminatory and marginalizing practices in the ordination process that target a specific group of people.

Even if God has not blessed the church with a clear consensus on the issue of same-sex marriage, God has blessed us with a clear call to do justice. To call for waiting for clear consensus to do justice is to lift a standard of acceptance of discrimination while we wait. This particular issue on which we do not yet all agree is not simply an abstract theological principal or doctrine, but a community of people living, moving and serving in our churches while being denied full inclusion.

The dialogue must certainly continue, but to take a general stand on not taking any action that imposes one interpretation of Scripture in this matter has the potential to be used down the road to impede the progress we have made toward just treatment of LGBTQ members of the PC(USA).
Report of the Special Committee on Existing Authoritative Interpretations of the Book of Order

In accordance with the guidelines contained in the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010), the Special Committee on Existing Authoritative Interpretations of the Book of Order recommends the following:

1. That the authoritative interpretations described below that are derived from decisions of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission be removed as having no effect because the former Form of Government language on which they were based is no longer in the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity or The Form of Government, [or,] is contradicted by new language [or was previously removed]. [Comment: In Recommendation 2, it was discovered that item reference 90-2 is not an authoritative interpretation.]

3. That the authoritative interpretations described in the narrative report of the committee be acknowledged as retained because the language of the current text is identical to or essentially the same as the language previously interpreted. [Reference guidelines # 1 & 2.]

4. That the Special Committee on Existing Authoritative Interpretations of the Book of Order be dismissed with [admiration and] thanks [and commended for their gift to the church].
Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2010 Referral: Alternate Resolution to Item 07-11. Appoint Special Committee on Existing Authoritative Interpretations of the Book of Order, Composed of Six Members Recommended by the GAPJC, the ACC, and the OGA, Charged to Make Recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012) Concerning the Status of Specific Existing Authoritative Interpretations of the Constitution Based on the Status of Authoritative Interpretation—From the 219th General Assembly (2010). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 18, 26, 566ff of the electronic version, p. 299 of the print copy)

Interpretations of the Constitution provided by decisions of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission or by the General Assembly itself upon the advice of the Advisory Committee of the Constitution are of great value to the church as leaders seek to make determinations in relation to matters of faith and practice. Such interpretations maintain their value over time and only cease to be of value when the language of the Constitution that they interpret is removed or so altered as to render them of no relevance. While the special committee evaluated all judicial decisions since 1983 and all official actions of the General Assembly over that time, the purpose of the committee was to determine those interpretations that would not be retained under the new Foundations of Presbyterian Polity and The Form of Government. Therefore, the recommendations above detail only those interpretations we determined to be no longer supported.

The column headed “Description” is intended to note the core or central point of an action and is not intended to be an exhaustive summary of the case or question at issue. Those authoritative interpretations determined by the committee to be supported in the new Foundations of Presbyterian Polity and The Form of Government are displayed in a similar chart format as a part of the narrative report of the special committee.

Narrative Report General Assembly Special Committee

On Existing Authoritative Interpretations of the Constitution

Introduction

The 219th General Assembly (2010) directed that should the proposed Revised Form of Government become the Form of Government (FOG) a committee be appointed to determine the status of statements of authoritative interpretation under the previous FOG. The committee was selected as directed. Serving as former General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) members were Ruling Elder Steven Taber and Teaching Elder Fane Downs. Serving as former members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) were Ruling Elder Alyson Janke and Teaching Elder Neal Lloyd. Ruling Elder Laurie Griffith and Ruling Elder Doska Ross (who subsequently moved to service as the executive of the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii) were assigned by the Office of the General Assembly (OGA). The committee met in Louisville on January 17–18, 2011. After the initial meeting, all work was conducted by conference call aided by “Go To Meeting” software. The committee held twenty conference call meetings, each of approximately two hours duration, to complete the assignment.

The Task

The shape and form of the task grew out of questions that were referred to the ACC prior to the 219th General Assembly (201) and the ACC response. Five guidelines were put forward to shape the committee’s work:

1. If language approved in the Constitution explicitly restates the content of existing authoritative interpretations, it is no longer an authoritative interpretation but is incorporated into the Constitution.

2. If language is approved that is identical to, or essentially the same as the language of constitutional provisions that have already been interpreted, current authoritative interpretations would continue in force.

3. If language is approved that is substantively different from currently interpreted constitutional language, clarification from the General Assembly would be required as to the status and applicability of existing authoritative interpretations through the provisions of G-13.0103r (now G-6.02).

4. If language is approved that contradicts the substance of an existing authoritative interpretation, the current interpretation would have no effect.

5. If language is approved that totally removes a constitutional provision that has been authoritatively interpreted, the authoritative interpretations attached to that provision would be removed as well.

An authoritative interpretation (AI) of the Constitution is created when the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) renders a decision or the General Assembly itself approves an interpretation (Book of Order, G-3.0501c). However, there has not been a discrete repository of these authoritative interpretations. The only attempt to codify... has been the work done by the Office of the General Assembly in producing an Annotated Book of Order. Legal and historical scholars seeking to understand or use our Constitution would, of necessity, go directly to the Minutes of the General Assembly to determine the full context of any interpretive statement. For such persons, the Annotated Book of Order serves as an index of where to find the full record on any matter. In practice, the annotations are prepared as much for the amateur or casual user seeking general information. Thus, while some annotations may note the actual words of a decision or statement, in many instances interpolations are used to give the “intent” of the decision while condensing the words. Hence, it can be determined that an AI has been rendered in regard to a particular constitutional provision, but the precise wording may not be evident in the annotation.

The special committee determined that its task required examination of the complete record. Each PJC decision and each assembly action was reviewed to clearly establish what constitutional provision was interpreted and what the interpretation was. This work preceded any decision on its relationship to the new text.

Each PJC case is unique in its own setting. The decision gives an interpretation in regard to the specific unique facts of the case. Actions of the assembly itself are often less clear. Matters come to the assembly from any number of sources and the questions put before the ACC are typically more general or abstract in nature. Often requests made to the ACC are themselves less than clear and the particular situation of the questioner may be unknown or unstated. When the assembly “approves” the ACC material or wording of its own creation, an interpretation is thus rendered. Some of these interpretations lift broad general principles of our polity, while others interpret specific words or phrases in particular passages of the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity or The Form of Government. To decide which provisions of the Constitution are being interpreted is not always an easy task.

The ordination standards in the former G-6.0106b were changed by the amendment process at the same time the nFOG was adopted. The new standards for ordination are found in G-2.0104b. In its recommendations related to GAPJC decisions and General Assembly authoritative interpretations dealing with the subject matter of ordination affected by G-6.0106b, the special committee has recommended that they not be retained to the extent that an interpretation relates to qualification for ordination. However, to the extent that the interpretation relates to procedural matters or the manner or timing of determining qualification for ordination, the committee has recommended that such interpretation be retained, provided that such interpretation has not been affected by other changes in nFOG.

The special committee determined to use a tabular method of reporting our work. Each PJC decision recorded in the Minutes and each General Assembly action indexed in the Annotated Book of Order that contained relevant information has been entered into a table. Since the most recent authoritative interpretation is binding, based on the guidelines presented above, the committee is recommending that the General Assembly vote not to retain interpretations no longer in effect. All interpretations clearly reflective of current wording as in the past are presented at the conclusion of this report. The assembly is being asked to acknowledge these continuing interpretations. For information purposes, PJC decisions that interpreted no specific section of the Foundations or nFOG are listed in a separate table.

The committee wishes to thank the Reverend Mark Tammen (who was at the beginning of our task the Associate Stated Clerk and director of Constitutional Services) for his work and especially Joanne Green for her invaluable assistance.

Advice on Item 08-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC).

With respect to Recommendation 1., the ACC advises that the special committee’s recommendation be approved, with the following exceptions:

UPC of Blasdell v. Presbytery of Western NY, Remedial Case 197-09 (It is unconstitutional for the church to ordain any self-affirming, practicing, and unrepentant homosexual as elder, deacon, or minister of the Word; the General Assembly has power to determine matters of interpretation.)

Sallade v. Presbytery of Genesee Valley, Remedial case 205-05 (A self-affirmed practicing homosexual may not be invited to serve in a PC(USA) position that presumes ordination.)

With respect to Recommendation 2., the ACC advises that the special committee’s recommendation be approved.

With respect to Recommendation 3., the ACC advises that the General Assembly receive for information the report of the special committee that it had determined that the items on the list were authoritative interpretations, that it found that the language interpreted was identical or essentially the same as the current language in the Form of Government, and that the statements continue with whatever force they originally had.

Although Recommendation 4. does not raise issues of constitutional interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution would heartily concur with expressing thanks to the special committee for its work.

Rationale

In 2010 the ACC advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) concerning the analysis by which it could be determined whether the approval of a major revision of the constitution would result in the continuation or removal of an authoritative interpretation of the constitution made prior to such major revision. The 219th General Assembly (2010) formed the special committee to review the existing authoritative interpretations and charged it “to make recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012) concerning the status of specific existing authoritative interpretations of the Constitution based on the Status of Authoritative Interpretations,” which was the analysis described by the ACC.

During the course of the special committee’s work a current member of the ACC observed many of its meetings. The ACC reviewed a preliminary draft of the special committee’s report, and gave advice to the special committee, which then followed the majority of the advice given as it prepared its final report.

The Form of Government in G-6.02 defines the processes by which the Book of Order is interpreted. It affirms the authority of the General Assembly’s Permanent Judicial Commission to render authoritative interpretations in remedial and disciplinary cases. With regard to interpretations to be made in the General Assembly meeting in plenary, it provides:

All questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order arising from councils of the church shall be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such questions of interpretation to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, except those pertaining to matters pending before a judicial commission. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall communicate its report and recommendations to the next session of the General Assembly, no less than sixty days prior to the General Assembly.

The process of comparing the originally interpreted constitutional text to the current text takes place with the understanding that each authoritative interpretation is an interpretive act by the General Assembly that continues in effect until the General Assembly rescinds it, amends it, or supersedes it with a new authoritative interpretation. If the General Assembly does not take such an action with regard to an existing authoritative interpretation, it continues to be binding upon the whole church.
The frequent practice of the General Assembly has been to render new authoritative interpretations that supersede prior ones and modify them. However, it should be noted that on at least one occasion the General Assembly has explicitly set aside an existing authoritative interpretation. The 218th General Assembly (2008) used its interpretive authority when, acting on its Item 05-09 (https://www.pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=1461; see also Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 373), it decided that "Interpretive statements concerning ordained service of homosexual church members by the 190th General Assembly (1978) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and the 119th General Assembly (1979) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and all subsequent affirmations thereof, have no further force or effect."

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the effect of the 2008 action cited above is that a number of authoritative interpretations discussed in the report of the special committee were no longer in existence at the time it began its work. These include specific holdings concerning ordained service in the following decisions of the General Assembly’s Permanent Judicial Commission: UPC of Blasdell v. Presbytery of Western NY, Remedial Case 197-09; and Sallade v. Presbytery of Genesee Valley, Remedial Case 205-05.

The first two recommendations from the special committee are in the nature of motions to rescind specific authoritative interpretations. The General Assembly has the authority to exclude any of the listed authoritative interpretations from the approval of those recommendations.

1. Advice on Special Committee Recommendation 1.

The special committee has correctly explained the fact that a decision of the GAPJC can contain multiple authoritative interpretations, and has used its tables to identify which of the authoritative interpretations in a decision it is recommending be made of no further force and effect. Its descriptions of these authoritative interpretations are terse, because the special committee encourages the reader not to stop at the wording of annotations in the Annotated Book of Order, or at its own brief statements, but to read the original decision or action for full understanding of each authoritative interpretation.

The ACC advises the assembly that the actions recommended by the special committee would not amend the decisions or change the outcome of the specific cases, but would merely change the continuing force of the specified authoritative interpretations in those decisions.

The ACC agrees with the special committee that the constitutional language originally interpreted in these authoritative interpretations is so different from the language of the current Foundations of Presbyterian Polity and Form of Government that removal of each existing authoritative interpretation in the list is warranted.

The special committee has explained its inclusion of specific interpretations in Blasdell and Sallade in its list of authoritative interpretations to be made of no further force and effect, saying “Since the most recent authoritative interpretation is binding, based on the guidelines presented above, the committee is recommending that the General Assembly vote not to retain interpretations no longer in effect.”

The special committee cites Sallade for an authoritative interpretation not to be retained, which says, “A self-affirmed practicing homosexual may not be invited to serve in a PCUSA position that presumes ordination.” This is one of the authoritative interpretations made of no further force or effect by the 2008 action cited above. The ACC advises the assembly that the special committee reached the correct conclusion by comparing the current constitutional text to the earlier interpreted text, but that the special committee erred in not recognizing that this interpretation was no longer in existence. This part of the special committee’s recommendation puts the assembly in the confusing position of being asked to take an action that is plainly redundant.

The special committee cites Blasdell for two authoritative interpretations, one of which was made of no further effect by the 2008 action cited above. The ACC regrets the decision of the special committee to treat that authoritative interpretation as though it were still in existence and needed to be evaluated again on the basis of comparison of the two versions of the Constitution, but does agree that the special committee correctly did the textual analysis described in its charge. This part of the special committee’s recommendation puts the assembly in the confusing position of being asked to take an action that is plainly redundant.

The special committee also cites the Blasdell decision for the authoritative interpretation that the General Assembly has powers to determine matters of interpretation. The ACC advises the assembly that it considers the statements in Blasdell concerning the General Assembly’s powers of interpretation to continue to be good law in the church, and consistent with G-3.0501c and G-6.02. Making these statements of no further force and effect would cause confusion in the church and could raise questions about subsequent interpretations that relied on Blasdell.

2. Advice on Special Committee Recommendation 2.

The ACC agrees with the special committee that the constitutional language originally interpreted in these authoritative interpretations is so different from the current language that removal of these authoritative interpretations is warranted.
The special committee has described its challenge in identifying all of the existing authoritative interpretations by using the annotations in the Annotated Book of Order. Not every annotation states an authoritative interpretation.

One example would be Ref. 90-2, 1990 (Proposals for significant change in Book of Order should not originate with ACC.). This statement was drawn from the rationale for encouraging the proponents of a commissioners’ resolution proposing a constitutional amendment to reinitiate their proposal through their presbyteries. The ACC still agrees with the statement, but advises the assembly that it is not an authoritative interpretation, and was not claimed as one when it was made. Declaring it of no further force or effect may be helpful in clarifying the state of our polity. Removing this item from the motion would not have the effect of transforming what was never an authoritative interpretation into one binding upon the whole church.

3. Advice on Special Committee Recommendation 3.

The special committee has provided a highly useful list of the statements it reviewed, and concerning which it states that the statements are retained. This list is very helpful in showing the breadth of the committee’s work. The ACC advises an alternative way of responding to this list for three reasons.

First, as stated earlier, it is in the nature of authoritative interpretations to continue in force until rescinded, modified, or superseded. A motion to acknowledge authoritative interpretations currently in effect as retained might create confusion suggesting that they have been reaffirmed. It is possible that new situations or new questions might shed a different light on any of these statements, and the church should not be bound by a recent quasi-reaffirmation of them.

Second, it is possible that some of these statements were not authoritative interpretations when originally stated. Acknowledging them as retained, as the special committee recommends, could give these statements more authority than they merit.

Third, many decisions of the GAPJC can be cited for a large number of authoritative interpretations because of the highly significant way in which that commission contributes to the ongoing work of interpreting our Constitution. The special committee’s list of “retained” authoritative interpretations does not (and could not without quoting the entire decisions) identify every interpretation made in those decisions.

The ACC advises the assembly that this list prepared by the special committee is useful, but that there is the risk of confusion for the church if a reader gives too much significance to the fact that it does not include a reference to a particular interpretation for which a decision can be cited. As stated earlier, authoritative interpretations continue unless reversed, modified by a new interpretation, or rescinded. Thus, a failure to mention a particular authoritative interpretation in this list has as much effect as citing an interpretation on this list.

A preferable response of the assembly to this list would be to acknowledge that the special committee determined these statements to be authoritative interpretations within the scope of its responsibility, that it carefully reviewed these statements, that it did not find a reason to recommend that the assembly remove them, and that the statements continue with whatever status they originally had undisturbed.

4. The Clarification Process Will Continue After This Assembly

The special committee did not identify any existing authoritative interpretations as needing clarification (following the third guideline in its charge). This is a recognition that our church has normal procedures for obtaining clarification of whether existing authoritative interpretations apply to new situations. A council may submit a request for interpretation to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, referred to the ACC, and answered by the General Assembly in plenary with a new interpretation, a modified interpretation, or the rescission of an existing interpretation (G-3.0501c, G-6.02). Alternatively, the GAPJC may determine in a remedial or disciplinary case whether an existing authoritative interpretation adequately addresses a new fact setting with different issues at work, and may render a new interpretation, modify an existing interpretation, or simply rescind an existing interpretation (G-3.0501c, G-6.02).

The ACC wishes to express its thanks to the Special Committee on Existing Authoritative Interpretations of the Book of Order. The work undertaken by this committee posed difficult challenges that were met by the consistent faithfulness of its members’ endeavors.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 08-01

Comment on Item 08-01—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully offers the 220th General Assembly (2012) the following comment on Item 08-01:
The recommended action would remove two assembly derived authoritative interpretations relative to committees on representation. One defines youth and various age categories, another does not allow for committees on representation to be merged with another committee or body.

The functions of committees on representation (a required body in all councils above session) and its nominating processes (where committees are not required) are only marginally related. The narrow task of recruiting leaders and nominating a slate may be seasonal in the life of a council. The multiple functions of committees on representation have an ongoing nature and include responsibilities regarding the employment of personnel in the council. We hope that councils will be (1) imaginative in their encouraging participation and leadership, (2) experimental in their means of measuring and reporting their interpretations, (3) adaptive designing the accountability structures appropriate for their context in light of the mandated functions, and (4) connectional as they work for the wholeness of their council. The Book of Order, G-3.0103, currently says committees on representation should not be merged with other committees or entities, we wish the stronger language were retained.

While rigid definitions of what youth means has prompted debate at assemblies as recent as the 219th General Assembly (2010), GACOR wants to remind the assembly that the majority of Presbyterians are older and there is need for intentional inclusion and involvement of younger Presbyterians in the decision-making processes and leadership of our councils and congregations. Examining how our leadership is distributed as to age is one factor in providing a helpful snapshot of who is participating and whose voices are included and whose stories are normative for our communities.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of G-3.0306 Regarding Laboring Inside the Bounds of a Presbytery—From the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks.

The Presbytery of Plains and Peaks respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve the following authoritative interpretation of G-3.0306 regarding the responsibility of presbyteries to develop written criteria for validating ministries within their bounds:

“Work is properly within the responsibility of a presbytery when:

• Responsibility for the work is constitutionally assigned to the presbytery (e.g., service to congregations under the jurisdiction of the presbytery);
• The work is in service to another church and an ecumenical agreement (G-5.0201) with that church assigns responsibility to the presbytery for permitting a minister to serve the other church; or
• The consultation of the presbytery with other councils (G-3.0106) has resulted in an agreement that the presbytery is to be responsible for the type of work.

“Work is not properly within the responsibility of a presbytery when:

• Responsibility for the work is constitutionally assigned to another council (e.g., service to synod or General Assembly);
• The work is in service to another church and an ecumenical agreement assigns responsibility to a council other than the presbytery for permitting a minister to serve the other church; or
• The consultation of the presbytery with other councils (G-3.0106) has resulted in an agreement that another council is to be responsible for the type of work.

“Presbyteries may assert responsibility for work within their bounds where responsibility is not otherwise assigned.”

Rationale

The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved the above authoritative interpretation to the former G-11.0401a, for the purpose of clarifying the rights, powers, and responsibilities of presbyteries to oversee ministries within their bounds (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 59, 344, Item 05-23). However, G-11.0401a was removed from the Form of Government in the revision adopted in 2011. Nevertheless, clarifying rights, powers, and responsibilities of presbyteries concerning oversight of persons laboring inside and outside the bounds of presbyteries is necessary to the orderly governance of the church. We believe that by attaching the authoritative interpretation approved in 2010 to G-3.0306, with minor amendment of citations and nomenclature to reflect the current Form of Government, these powers and responsibilities may be clarified for the church.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 08-02

Advice on Item 08-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve item 08-02.

Rationale

This proposed authoritative interpretation restates an authoritative interpretation rendered by the 219th General Assembly (2010) of a provision that no longer exists.

The language of presbytery “bounds” does continue within the Form of Government at G-3.0106 [per capita apportionment among the particular congregations within presbytery’s bounds], G-3.0107 [records of sessions that cease to exist become property of presbytery within whose bounds the session was prior to cessation], G-3.0301b [authorizing Lord’s Supper for non-congregational entities meeting within presbytery’s bounds], G-3.0301c [warning and bearing witness against error in doctrine and immorality in practice within presbytery’s bounds], G-3.0306 [validating ministries within presbytery’s bounds], G-3.0501 [commissioners to General Assembly to be reflective of diversity with presbytery’s bounds], W-3.6204(1), D-3.0101b(2) [engaging in work within bounds of presbytery is submission to jurisdiction of that presbytery], D-10.0201c [expenses of investigation of alleged offense to be paid by council within whose bounds offense was alleged to have occurred].

The request to the 219th General Assembly (2010) was related to the procedures for obtaining permission to labor inside and outside the bounds. The authoritative interpretation rendered is equally appropriate for current G-3.0306, which has to do with the validation of ministries.

On Celebrating the 45th Anniversary of the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba and the Mission Partnership Between the PC(USA) and the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

The Presbytery of Santa Fe overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Request the Moderator and the Stated Clerk to send a formal communication to the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba expressing the joy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on the occasion of the 45th Anniversary of the formation of the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba as an autonomous and independent sister church, congratulating that church for its steadfast faith and testimony to the gospel in difficult times throughout the forty-five years of its existence and for its significant leadership contribution to the world ecumenical movement, expressing thanksgiving for the vital mission ties that bind together the many congregations and presbyteries in the Presbyterian Cuba Partners Network in the U.S. and Cuba, and assuring them of our prayers as they gather in the Fourth National Institute to chart a course for mission and ministry in Cuba in the years ahead.

2. Request the Moderator and the Stated Clerk to prepare a communication to the Cuba Partners’ Network Gathering, meeting in December 2012 in Cuba, to be read in that gathering, expressing appreciation to the individual members and pastors of the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba in that gathering for their faithful and effective ministry to the people of Cuba, and assuring them of the prayerful support of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as they continue to enrich the life and deepen the faith of their U.S. partners.

3. Urge the committees and officers of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to recognize the 45th Anniversary of the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba in a plenary session of the General Assembly and make provision for the commissioners to hear directly from the Reverend Francisco Marrero, the general secretary of the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba.

Rationale

After its founding in 1890 by a Cuban layman, Presbyterianism in Cuba was intimately connected with both of the immediate predecessor churches of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.): the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.

In an early act of reunion, the mission efforts of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. and the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. were united in 1918 into one presbytery of the Presbyterian Church U.S.A., which became the Presbytery of Cuba of the Synod of New Jersey.

After a three-year process of theological reflection following the First National Institute led by Dr. John A. Mackay, as Cuban Presbyterians faced a difficult future under a hostile government, a greatly diminished body of pastors and members, and the cutoff of support and communication with the U.S. church, the Presbytery of Cuba sent an overture to the 178th General Assembly (1966) of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., meeting in Boston, asking to be dismissed in order to form an independent and autonomous Presbyterian Church, which overture was approved.

In January 1967, the Presbytery of Cuba was dissolved and the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba (Iglesia Presbiteriana-Reformada en Cuba) was constituted in Havana with the participation of Moderator Ganse Little, Stated Clerk William P. Thompson, and Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations Secretary John Coventry Smith; and immediately emphasized its ecumenical commitment by joining the World Council of Churches, the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and the Latin American Council of Churches, in which organizations Cuban Presbyterians have provided distinguished leadership through the years.

After twenty years of separation created by the United States government embargo of Cuba, representatives of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission agencies were able to meet with the leaders of the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba in Havana and craft a Mutual Mission Agreement to guide the mission relations of the two denominations, adopted in 1986 by the General Assemblies of both churches.

As a result of the provisions of the Mutual Mission Agreement, there are now twelve synods and presbyteries and eighty-one congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with partnership ties to entities of the Presbyterian Reformed Church in Cuba, in addition to the Outreach Foundation, the Presbyterian Cuba Connection, and Living Waters for the World, organized into the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Cuba Partners Network.
Members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Cuba Partners Network will gather with their Cuban partners in Cuba December 3–10, 2012, to celebrate their unity in mission and the 45th Anniversary of the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba.

The Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba will convene the Fourth National Institute in October 2012 to celebrate the 45th anniversary of its founding and seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit for the path ahead in a time of great change and confusion in Cuba.

The Reverend Francisco Marrero, general secretary of the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba and dean of the Evangelical Theological Seminary in Matanzas, is an ecumenical visitor to the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Concurrence to Item 09-01 from the Presbyteries of Chicago, Middle Tennessee, South Louisiana, and the Twin Cities Area.

Concurrence to Item 09-01 from the Presbytery of Long Island (with Additional Rationale).

The overture speaks for itself, expressing in proper ‘whereas’ form the history, and ongoing role that the Presbyterian-Reformed Church enjoys in Cuba, and its prominent leadership positions in international religious organizations. It is worthy of Presbytery of Long Island support. The Cuba Work Group feels, however, that it has something to add to the deliberations of the committee as it makes its recommendation on concurrence.

Ecumenical mission work has been defined as “the whole work of the whole church to take the Gospel to the whole world.” To better fulfill this Great Commandment, the Presbytery of Long Island chose thirty years ago to act upon the invitation of our brothers and sisters in Christ in the Presbyterian-Reformed Church in Cuba to join hands once more. They were once our “mission children,” so it meant rejoining the long line of saints who were already remembered and revered in Cuba for their seventy years of Presbyterian missionary presence there. With the monetary and advisory support of the Boards of National Mission of both the Northern and Southern governing bodies, the young Cuban church was incorporated into the Synod of New Jersey, Presbytery of New Brunswick. These mission workers labored to build churches and hospitals, and being Presbyterian, focused on educating and training pastors and lay leaders. The schools that they established provided educational opportunities of a superior quality for Cuban youth and young adults.

The triumph of the Revolution in 1959 and the resulting U.S. economic embargo of 1962 forced an inevitable, tragic estrangement between our churches. After four years of being deprived of all economic and fraternal support, the Cuban church was moved to seek a status independent of and isolated from its mother church in the U.S. At the General Assembly of the UPCUSA in 1967, the Presbyterian Reformed Church in Cuba was inaugurated. Its promise was recorded: “Have confidence in us and we will be faithful.” A Cuban pastor summed up their first decade alone, under a government officially “atheist,” in this way: “And we have tried to be so:

“We have tried to be faithful to the Tradition that you taught us;
“We have tried to be faithful to our Lord, Jesus Christ;
“We have tried to be faithful to Reformed principles;
“We have tried to be faithful to our Cuban situation.”

Some fifteen years on, when the Cuban church reached out to what had become PC(USA), in hopes of repairing the breach, the Presbytery of Long Island was among the first in the denomination to reach back, to explore the challenge of a mission partnership that requires constant perseverance in overcoming the barriers that two hostile governments erect, to isolate each other and confound the audacity of such mutual Christian witness and accompaniment in the Fields of the Lord. The Cuban church is forty-five-years old now, but the economic embargo is fifty. Our Cuban partnerships have been a serious tutorial for us in the cost of discipleship and the price of the suffering caused to these family members by the collateral damage of our flourishing failed diplomacy. We stand humbled by their ambitious outreach in the reality of so few resources, confident in the power of prayer to redeem.

“We have tried to be faithful to the Tradition that you taught us;
“We have tried to be faithful to our Lord, Jesus Christ;
“We have tried to be faithful to Reformed principles;
“We have tried to be faithful to our Cuban situation.”

He continued: “This faithfulness has not been easy. It has cost great sacrifices. The Church has ... had to pay the price of discipleship, the sacrifice of the Cross; but it is now discovering the Resurrection stage.”

Whereas: the Cuba Work Group of the Presbytery of Long Island wishes to lift up our Cuban partners and their accomplishments of forty-five years as an independent entity, and to celebrate the occasion with the 220th General Assembly (2012) in Pittsburgh. More than that, we hope that we highlight by our demeanor the joy that these thirty years of knowing, enduring, learning, teaching, loving, and supporting one another have afforded us all in the service of the Kingdom. By the power and direction of the Holy Spirit we have been able to walk hand-in-hand in undiminished commitment to the healed breach. To this end, we also gratefully acknowledge the importance of our year by year faithful support from presbytery mission grant monies, and the prayers of the people.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-01

Comment on Item 09-01—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Presbyterian World Mission welcomes this overture as an opportunity to celebrate the forty-five years of faithful ministry of the Presbyterian Reformed Church in Cuba, its contribution to the world ecumenical movement, and its partnership with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We assure the church in Cuba of our prayers as they gather in the Fourth National Institute to chart a course for mission and ministry in Cuba in the years ahead.

Item 09-02

[The assembly approved Item 09-02. See p. 9.]

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) invite the following churches to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the 221st General Assembly (2014):

Overseas: Church of Christ in Thailand (CCT), Indonesian Christian Church (GKI), Evangelical Church of Peru, Evangelical Lutheran Church of Bolivia, Moravian Church in Nicaragua, Ethiopia Evangelical Church Mekane Yesus, Presbyterian Community of Congo (CPC), Reformed Church in Hungary, The Episcopal Church of the Holy Land, and the Presbyterian Church of Sudan.

Within the United States: African Methodist Episcopal Church, Moravian Church (Southern Province), Reformed Church in America, the Seventh Day Adventist Church, United Methodist Church.

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations nominates to each General Assembly churches to be invited to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the subsequent assembly (Standing Rule B.2.g.; Organization for Mission, Section IV.C.7). We recommend ten overseas churches and five churches from within the United States. Of the overseas churches, we recommend at least one church from each area staffed by World Mission. Of the churches within the United States, we recommend at least one church from the Formula of Agreement, two churches from other Covenant Relationships (CUIC, Moravian, KPCA), and one church from a tradition that we are not in a traditional ecumenical relationship.

Item 09-03

[The assembly approved Item 09-03. See p. 9.]

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (GACEIR) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Affirm with gratitude to God the achievements of the World Council of Churches (WCC) since its founding in 1948 and express its appreciation to the member churches for their participation in this instrument of the ecumenical movement, as we seek to find the unity declared by our Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Offer gratitude for the witness and presence of the WCC in some of the challenging places in our world through its willingness and ability to pull together the various expressions of Christianity and ultimately offering a collective voice affecting change and support to some of the troubling situations. A collective voice is proven more powerful than any singular expression.

3. Request the WCC to enter into a time of open conversation with member churches regarding how to increase the involvement of women, youth, and indigenous people in leadership and in programming.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate to the WCC, in regards to the PC(USA) governance review, PC(USA) values of representation, inclusivity, and transparency in discerning the mind of Christ and the exercise of governance.

5. Request the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations to take the following actions and report to the General Assembly following the next WCC review:
a. to continue to document and report progress of the participation of women, youth, and indigenous people in the various aspects of the WCC;

b. to follow and report on the Global Christian Forum as it relates to the global ecumenical movement and the WCC.

6. Request the WCC to find more effective ways to communicate and network its resources as it relates to both member and nonmember churches.

7. Express our appreciation to the open and responsive way in which senior staff of the WCC cooperated with our review, providing full information in a timely and collegial fashion.

8. Declare intent for PC(USA) to seek to sustain its current support for the core budget of the WCC and, where possible, to seek ways to support the programmatic function of the WCC. Urge PC(USA) WCC Central Committee members to insist on balanced WCC budgets.

9. Direct the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to continue and/or increase participation on the various committees, commissions, and leadership of the WCC as invited; request OGA and GAMC to inform the WCC of internal structural changes or changes in personnel so that invitations may be appropriately offered.

10. Instruct the Office of Communications to regularly include the work of the WCC (and other ecumenical bodies) in its communication portfolio and regularly update the church about the witness and ministry of the WCC for local church participation as appropriate; encourage the GAMC to utilize WCC resources in the development of PC(USA) materials and programs; direct GACIER to work with and offer suggestions to OGA, GAMC, and particularly the Office of Communications regarding ecumenical engagement and information sharing of such in these communication structures, i.e. website and other forms of communication.

Rationale

A. Assigned Task

At the 212th General Assembly (2000), and in response to concerns voiced within the General Assembly Council (GAC), the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) was asked to design a process “for review of councils and other ecumenical alliances to which the PC (USA) belongs.” The 213th General Assembly (2001) approved the decision, and the 215th General Assembly (2003) received the first review document of the World Council of Churches (WCC). This current report is the second such review.

The review team included: the Reverends Judy Angleberger, Gun Ho Lee, Krystin Granberg (members of GACEIR ), Elenora Giddings Ivory and Ashley Seaman. The financial review was done by Elder James Tse and the Reverend Carlos Malave was staff.

The 215th General Assembly (2003) raised questions of leadership and finance of the WCC, This review has sought to address these questions.

B. Our Process

The review committee conducted face-to-face interviews; used video conferencing or e-mailed a questionnaire to the following representatives of the WCC and the PC(USA):

World Council of Churches Staff: the Reverend Dr. Olav Fykse Tveit, general secretary World Council of Churches; the Reverend Garland Pierce, senior assistant to the general secretary; the Reverend Dr. Hielke Wolters, associate general secretary; Natasha Klukach, programme executive for Church and Ecumenical Relations and North America Region.

Female Presidents of the WCC: The Reverend Dr. Ofelia Ortega, Cuba; Dame Mary Tanner, England; the Reverend Dr. Bernice Powell Jackson, U.S.A.

PC(USA):

Office of the General Assembly—Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons, Director of Department of Ecumenical and Agency Relations Robina Winbush, and Associate for Ecumenical Relations Carlos Malave.

General Assembly Mission Council—Executive Director Linda Valentine, Program and Project Directors Sara Lisherness, Hunter Farrell, Charles Wiley, Ann Ferguson, Lee Hinson-Hasty, Gina Yeager-Buckley, Mark Koenig, and Bill Somplasky-Jarmon. For experiences and perspectives from across the denomination, letters were sent to the 174 ecumenical liaisons of the presbyteries and to the executive/general presbyters.

C. History of the WCC & PC(USA)

Many church historians will agree that while the 19th century was the century of mission, the 20th century was the century of ecumenism. As we look back on these two centuries of mission and unity from the perspective of a renewed commitment by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the ecumenical movement, we are grateful to God for the faithful and relevant ministries rendered by the World Council of Churches (WCC), particularly its committed staff and delegates from member churches. Since its founding in 1948, the WCC has been and still is a privileged instrument of “the one ecumenical movement” by which formerly separated sisters and brothers of the Christian faith are now drawn closer to and engaged with one another under the common lordship of Jesus Christ. There is a Christocentric and Trinitarian Basis, as a reference point for its member churches. “The WCC is a fellowship of churches that confess the Lord Jesus Christ as God and Savior according to the Scriptures, and therefore seek to fulfill together their common calling to the glory of the one God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit.” The WCC consists now of 349 member churches who are seeking visible unity all over the world through the four main streams of the ecumenical movement, i.e., common fellowship (Faith and Order), common witness (Mission and Evangelism), common service (Life and Work), and common renewal (Learning and Prayer). The 10th General Assembly, the WCC’s highest governing body, will meet in Busan, Korea, in 2013 with an assembly theme focused on God’s vision of justice and peace in the light of its sixty-five years of life together in Christ.

As one of the WCC’s 147 charter member churches, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has continuously contributed to the activities and programs of the WCC. The 2003 report of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations to the 215th General Assembly (2003) on the Review of the World Council of Churches put it succinctly: “Presbyterians have played an important role in the history of the WCC in a variety of ways, through the sharing of theological insights from our tradition, the contributions of individual Presbyterians to WCC programs, and the provision of financial and material support. ... We have contributed programs aimed at strengthening human rights concerns, women’s concerns, and issues concerning justice, peace, and the integrity of creation. We have also played a key role in the interfaith dialogue discussions and relationships with people of other faith traditions.”

As the WCC is in search of the common understanding and vision of the ecumenical movement, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can give a more fundamental contribution to the WCC from the perspective of reformation. Not only the world-renowned Presbyterians such as John A. Mackay and Eugene Carson Blake but also all the faithful Presbyterians who served the WCC as its staff and committee members have contributed to the formation and development of the WCC by their being both reformed and ecumenical. The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), http://oga.pcusa.org/ecumenicalrelations/resources/ecumenical-stance-of-the-pcusa.pdf, points to this calling clearly: “From the earliest days of European settlement in North America, there has been a dynamic tension between the distinctively Reformed identity claimed by Presbyterians and our confession of ‘one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church’ that embraces the larger community of believers and churches. This has played out over the years in varying degrees of emphasis on a Presbyterian ‘brand’ in doctrine and polity, and a simultaneous commitment to unity in Christian ministry and mission.” The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been and will be determined to live out this dynamic tension between being reformed and ecumenical, while “at all levels [seeking] to manifest more visibly the unity of the body of Christ and [being] open to opportunities for conversation, cooperation, and action with other ecclesiastical groups” (Book of Order, G-5.0101).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s reference point regarding ecumenical relations, The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), was an outcome of the 2007 consultation called to “review our ecumenical vision and construct an ecumenical stance and policy to guide the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) staff and elected bodies for the next ten years.” This policy statement, approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), covers well the biblical and theological basis of ecumenism, a historical overview of Presbyterian ecumenical involvement including a review of the ecumenical work of the General Assembly over the previous decade (1997-2007), and an analysis of ten priorities facing up to an emerging new reality in our changing ecumenical landscape. What is most significant for the purpose of our review of the WCC from the perspective of reformation is its broader ecumenical vision that discovers new ecumenical conversation partners such as immigrants, human rights activists, and people of other faiths “in building the human community that God intended from the very beginning.” As The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) states, “The purpose of the ecumenical movement is to help make manifest God’s intention for the household of God. In the past, churches have often limited that vision to a unified Church that would help bring about a united world or even unify the world within it. The ecumenical vision that is part of God’s vision is actually much larger. John 10:10b describes the vision as God’s desire that the inhabitants of the household of God ‘may have life, and have it abundantly.’ This is a vision of justice and peace that allows space for all of God’s creation to live life in its fullness. God is continually active in bringing loving wholeness to creation, where all can live in peace, God is especially attentive to those who have been excluded from abundant life and calls the church to cooperate in this process.”

D. Current Nature of the WCC

The WCC works to make manifest God’s intention for the household of God. Empowered by member churches, the WCC offers hope to the hopeless, gives voice to the voiceless, and provides a common table for theological reflection and ecumenical conversation.
Member churches participate in the WCC through the Central Committee, WCC conferences, consultations, social networks, Living Letters teams, and the Ecumenical Institute of Bossey, to name a few. The WCC is currently structured into the following programmatic areas (see www.oikumene.org,)

- The Ecumenical Movement in the 21st century
- Unity, Mission, Evangelism, and Spirituality
- Public Witness: Addressing Power, Affirming Peace
- Justice, Diakonia, and responsibility for creation
- Education and Ecumenical Formation
- Interreligious Dialogue and Cooperation

In the ecumenical movement, the WCC continues to be unique in its role, authority, networks, and reputation as a convener of the necessary people for theological dialogue, and for political, social, and economic Christian witness. The WCC is a global catalyst for expanding the common table of traditional ecumenical relationships. It is the only ecumenical organization engaged in partnership between Orthodox and Protestant Christian Communions. It facilitated the creation of the Global Christian Forum, a gathering with evangelical and Pentecostal Christian Communions. In justice advocacy and theological dialogue, it is finding new ways of bringing churches together for action and connection. With the turmoil and turbulence in many countries, the WCC has had impact working with and through churches of various nations and has been able, as one body, to provide an important and unified voice in these situations. The general secretary asked the question we should all ask: “What does it mean to carry the cross together?” The world is suffering and the WCC is invited to participate as a reconciling agent as told in these stories:

1. Russia-Georgia War

When the Russia-Georgia War broke out in late August of 2008, the Orthodox churches of both nations called upon the World Council of Churches to come to stand with them as they tried to bring an end to the hostilities and establish peace between the two nations. The Patriarchates did not describe the war as a battle between nations, but rather as a situation of Orthodox killing Orthodox as each nation is 90 percent Orthodox. The churches wanted the WCC to stand with them as they built a bridge of peace. The hostilities were focused on disputed adjoining territorial borders of South Ossetia and Abkhazia.

The WCC, through its peacemaking program, established a pastoral delegation to visit Russia and Georgia from 3 to 7 September 2008. The delegation visited and listened to WCC member churches in both countries and encouraged their efforts for peace. The delegation also visited people displaced by the violence and with church aid programmes. The goal was to encourage Christians in both countries to keep talking to each other and praying for each other so that Christians in Georgia and Russia could manage not to allow the divide between their countries to separate them from one another. The delegation has also visited with government officials to ask them to do what is in their power to stop hostilities and said “in so much as it depends on you, return no one evil for evil” and to move towards a peaceful resolution of the conflict.

The delegation met with high-level representatives of the Russian Orthodox Church, Georgian Orthodox Church, Evangelical Baptist Church of Georgia and others. The delegation visited humanitarian work of Action by Churches Together (ACT) International and its local partners. ACT International is a WCC-backed coordination body for emergency relief.

Members of the WCC delegation, using its “Churches in Conflict Situations Project” heading were: Metropolitan Nifon of Targoviste, Romanian Orthodox Church (head of the delegation); the Reverend Jean-Arnold de Clermont, Reformed Church of France, president of the Conference of European Churches; the Reverend László Lehel, director of Hungarian Interchurch Aid, on behalf of ACT International; the Reverend Elenora Giddings Ivory, director of Public Witness and Global Advocacy, World Council of Churches; Jonathan Frerichs, WCC programme executive (Middle East and nuclear disarmament).

2. Rwanda

Some fifteen years after the major Rwandan genocide of 1994, which killed 800,000 people in ethnic hatred and tensions over a period of 100 days, the WCC was asked by the churches of Rwanda and neighboring Congo to send a delegation to bring more international focus and attention to the fact that violence had not ended. People who lived along the Rwandan/Congo border were in fear of their lives—particularly the women who had come to be the target of widespread rape and mutilation. Rape is still a weapon of war.

The July 2009 WCC Living Letters visit was to challenge the churches to do more in the light of what the women were experiencing. The delegation challenged churches to end their denial of the violence that was being perpetrated against women. The churches seemed to relegate the violence to the private sphere and only understood it as a physical act while ignoring the emotional toll it was taking.

The goal of the delegation was to have everyone acknowledge that the violence actually existed. The delegation met with an All Africa Conference of Churches (AACC) women’s workshop on Transformation Leadership for Peace, Healing and Reconciliation in Kinshasa, Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC), where the women heard the delegation offer validation of their plight and prayers for its resolution. “This means taking it out of the private arena and placing it squarely at the altars of our churches, in the seats of our parliament and in the halls of our academies,” said Dr. Sam Kobia, the then general secretary.

Churches in the DRC report that as rebel groups continue their activities in the country, women and girls persistently suffered sexual violence by armed men. Some had been brutally gang-raped, often in front of their families and communities. In numerous cases, men have also been forced at gunpoint to rape their own relatives.

Those women had been traumatized. They kept to themselves and asked what they could do to stop the violence. The delegation met with Dr Christine Amisi, the coordinator of the HIV and AIDS programme of Panzi Hospital in Bukavu, South Kivu. The hospital specializes in handling cases of sexual violence. In 2008, for example, it had handled 3,500 cases of sexual violence. “But those who have power seem to have a deaf ear,” Amisi added.

The WCC once again was asked to stand on the side of victims. The delegation moved around the country and visited with both church and government officials in Kinshasa, Bukavu, South Kivu, and Goma.

E. Common Engagement with WCC

It has been said that to be Presbyterian is to also be ecumenical. There are several places where the PC(USA) is drawing on the WCC in programming and ecclesial work. Listed below are several examples of our common engagement.

1. The WCC with PC(USA) Engagement

The Nature and Mission of the Church—This sixty-four page document brought the breadth and depth of theological reflection of the member churches to the common table to shape of this current statement on the church. Though not all are in agreement, the conversation that began would not have happened without the WCC. The PC(USA)’s Office of Theology and Worship, which shared in the production of the document, is a participant of the WCC’s Faith and Order work with representation and some funding for the very reason that “international and ecumenical theology cannot be done in any other venue.”

Week of Prayer for Christian Unity—Shortly after the beginning of each year, Christians around the world pray for church unity. The Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, traditionally celebrated January 18–25, draws on resources sponsored jointly by the World Council of Churches (WCC) and the Pontifical Council for the Promotion of Christian Unity of the Roman Catholic Church. This is a much used resource of many Presbyterian churches. http://www.pcusa.org/news/2011/1/20/week-prayer-christian-unity-focus-jerusalem/.

International Day of Peace—September 21—The WCC invites individuals to pray for peace on September 21 and encourages congregations to pray for peace at their services before or after that date. The WCC also suggests that congregations and individuals consider participating in the International Day of Peace Vigil or consider holding twenty-four-hour prayer vigils or other observances in their own congregation on September 21. Because this year’s annual focus of the Decade to Overcome Violence—Churches Seeking Reconciliation and Peace is on the United States, the WCC is asking people across the world to include prayers for the churches, religious communities, ecumenical organizations, and all people of goodwill in the United States who pursue peace and justice. http://www.pcusa.org/media/uploads/interfaithrelations/pdf/ecumenicaldialogue.pdf.

2. Resources of the WCC Used to Support PC(USA) Ministries

Evangelism Sunday—September 30—As congregations celebrate Evangelism Sunday, the PC(USA) resource entitled, Turn to the Living God: A Call to Evangelism in Jesus Christ’s Way, approved by the 203rd General Assembly (1991), recognized that there are unchurched populations worldwide. The General Assembly relied on a WCC document when it said, “Some of the larger people groups and many smaller subcultures still have no indigenous church, one that expresses their unique culture. While they may be found in isolated parts of the world, unevangelized people groups are increasingly likely to be found in the teeming cities of the world.” Mission and Evangelism: An Ecumenical Affirmation, an ecumenical document of the WCC (paragraph 25), calls for the establishment of congregations in every human community and culture: This task of sowing the seed needs to be continued until there is, in every human community, a cell of the kingdom, a church confessing Jesus Christ and in his name serving people. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is committed to this task. In fulfilling this calling we will be sensitive toward the cultures of people groups with whom we engage in mission. At the same time we will work cooperatively with other churches and Christian groups seeking to relate to particular people groups. A recent exciting outcome of this cooperative work in mission and evangelism is “Christian Witness in a Multi-Religious World: Recommendations for Conduct,” a joint statement by the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue (PCID), the World Council of Churches (WCC), and the World Evangelical Alliance (WEA) after five years of common study on the subject.

World Aids Day—December 1—The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved the resolution, “Becoming an HIV and AIDS Competent Church: Prophetic Witness and Compassionate Action,” in exercise of its responsibility to help the whole church address matters of “social righteousness.” As a social witness policy statement, it is presented for the guidance and edification of both church and society, and determines procedures and program for the ministries and staff of the General Assembly. It is recommended for consideration and study by sessions, presbyteries, and synods, and commended to the free Christian conscience of all congregations and members for prayerful study, dialogue, and action. This social witness resolution satisfies the rules that govern the formation of social policy in the PC(USA).

3. Programs in Conjunction with United Nations

Because of its unique standing with the United Nations, there are a number of programs that the WCC and its member churches, including the PC(USA), are in engagement with the United Nations:

The UN Millennium Development Goals—To the extent congregations and presbytery committees are working on the economic justice issues as delineated in the Millennium Development Goals of the WCC, they are working with others around the world to (1) eradicate extreme poverty and hunger, (2) achieve universal primary education, (3) promote gender equality and empower women, (4) reduce child mortality, (5) improve maternal health, (6) combat HIV/AIDS, malaria, and other diseases; (7) ensure environmental sustainability, and (8) develop a global partnership for development. The WCC has made these goals a center piece of its economic justice program (http://www.oikoumene.org/en/resources/documents/wcc-programmes/public-witness-addressing-power-affirming-peace/poverty-wealth-and-ecology/statement-on-the-millenium-development-goals.html).

UN Economic and Social Council—The WCC holds the much coveted ECOSOC status, meaning that it holds credentials to speak to the United Nations of issues of economic justice. The Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) assists the UN General Assembly in promoting international economic and social cooperation and development. The ECOSOC has fifty-four members and meets once a year in July for a four-week session. Since 1998, it has held another meeting each April with finance ministers heading key committees of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF). Viewed separate from the specialized bodies it coordinates, ECOSOC’s functions include information gathering, advising member nations, and making recommendations. In addition, ECOSOC is well-positioned to provide policy coherence and coordinate the overlapping functions of the UN’s subsidiary bodies and it is in these roles that it is most active. As Presbyterians, we are privileged to be part of this voice for justice as the WCC advocates these concerns by virtue of our membership in the WCC.

UN High Commissioner of Refugees with several other agencies performs most of its humanitarian work in partnership with some of the other UN agencies. Examples include mass vaccination programs (through the World Health Organization), the avoidance of famine and malnutrition (through the work of the World Food Programme) and the protection of vulnerable and displaced people. At a WCC annual advocacy event, participants heard about the “new environment refugee” to describe all the thousands who are now being displaced by natural disasters of tsunamis, earthquakes, tidal waves for which the UN must assist. Whole islands are disappearing in the Pacific. Residents must be relocated. When we send our contributions to help with these sudden disasters, they go towards helping provide a worldwide Christian presence during these traumatic times. Some of these people will never have a place to which they can return. These are often the indigenous people mentioned in the 2003 review of the WCC—those on whom the PC(USA) wanted to focus particular attention.

UN Human Rights Council was established in 2006, to address human rights violations. As the WCC promotes the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, it also provides opportunities for advocacy on behalf of indigenous peoples by bringing representatives of some of these communities to Geneva when the Human Rights Council is reviewing these concerns and violations. There are approximately 370 million indigenous peoples around the world according to the UN web site. “The declaration outlines the individual and collective rights to culture, language, education, identity, employment, and health, thereby addressing post-colonial issues that had confronted indigenous peoples for centuries. The declaration aims to maintain, strengthen, and encourage the growth of indigenous institutions, cultures, and traditions. It also prohibits discrimination against indigenous peoples and promotes their active participation in matters that concern their past, present and future. The United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues is the UN’s central coordinating body for matters relating to the concerns and rights of the world’s indigenous peoples. The forum is an advisory body within the framework of the United Nations System that reports to the UN’s Economic and Social Council” (www.un.org/en).

F. Transition and Changes

The WCC is again in a time of transition as their leadership has spoken of the need for greater vision and outreach. A Governance Review is being conducted that will provide a place for reflection, prayer, and action, not on its own merit, but in relation to its more than three hundred member churches. One of the female presidents shared this perspective
My own hope would be that we will all get hold at a deeper level of the fact that the WCC is not a structural organization over against the churches but a fellowship of churches. The structure that enables the fellowship to work, think, and pray together has to be appropriate for the support of the fellowship of churches and not a structure with its own separate life. This means greater clarity about the role of the Assembly and its responsibility to give account to the member churches of the fellowship of work done in the past 7 years and to set plans for the next 7 years. There has to be greater accountability to the churches for the agenda of the WCC. I hope the GRC will help to sort out the different responsibilities of the Assembly, the CC and the EC and the proper inter-relation between them; make a clear distinction between governance and management; clarify the roles of the Moderator and Vice moderators of the CC and the General Secretary; define more clearly the role of the Presidents; help the staff to understand their role and work in support of the fellowship of churches and the proper lines of accountability in the interest of good management. Whatever changes are suggested I hope that they will be changes in the perspective of the central mandate of the Council to call the churches to the goal of visible unity.

Review began recently and its proposals will not be known immediately.

The ecumenical table has been expanded by the WCC when it facilitated the formation of the Global Christian Forum that has begun to develop relationships with church families not traditionally involved with the WCC, like the Pentecostal and Evangelical churches. The general secretary recently visited Pentecostal churches in South Africa and Korea. The leadership does not see the Global Christian Forum standing on its own but can be a doorway to a new way of being church together. At this point there is no formal relationship between the two bodies, albeit one formed from the other.

1. Women, Youth and Indigenous Peoples

Specific in this review is response to the 215th General Assembly (2003) regarding the following recommendation:

That the PC(USA) continue to advocate for the WCC’s historic commitment to the greater participation of women, youth, and indigenous people in the life of the council and for the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations to document and report progress being done in that regard in a clear and concise fashion to the next General Assembly following each WCC review. Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 341

With regard to representation, the WCC relies on the member churches to nominate and support candidates of differing gender, race, ethnicity, and age. The WCC is a product of its members. One of the gifts of the WCC is to provide a forum for the different Christian churches to engage and challenge one another to broaden their historic understanding of leadership. As reported to us by one of the female presidents “We have to go on challenging one another in the structures of the Council and also challenging the churches with a vision of greater wholeness and holiness while all the time trying to understand those churches and individuals who see things differently from the way we see them. In the WCC we have to model inclusive community.”

Given this, the review team finds much progress in these areas, though challenges remain, as follows:

a. Women

There are still no women involved in the four senior staff positions that are the general secretary, the deputy general secretary, and the two associated general secretaries. One of the associate general secretary positions is currently vacant. The hope is that a woman will fill the position. The Central Committee, at its last meeting, held firm to the need for greater representation of women in the leadership of the WCC.

The dialogue between Anglican Protestant and Orthodox Church leaders reflects a new limitation on women’s participation in the WCC. These traditions have different understandings of women’s ordination and the role of women in public and spiritual leadership. The WCC culture still expects women to compromise their voice and calling to ministry for the sake of keeping the dialogue and relationship active.

b. Youth

Youth are adequately represented at WCC conferences and on committees. The energy of youth has become a force in the global ecumenical movement. A “Youth Desk” still exists and the council supports various international youth gatherings, courses at the Ecumenical Institute of Bossey (http://www.oikoumene.org/en/activities/bossey.html), the Echoes magazine (http://www.oikoumene.org/en/news/news-management/eng/a/article/1634/echos-for-peace-ecumenic.html), and virtual networks for youth to connect with each other, the council, and further social organizing and theological reflection.

Even as the council includes youth, the structure of the WCC is not as flexible and responsive as other social movements to encourage a functional youth movement or to create new forms of being church.

c. Indigenous

There has not been any improvement in representation in leadership positions of the WCC. Most of the emphasis with indigenous peoples concerns has been through the Climate Change campaign and working group as it has great impact on these communities.

There continues a struggle to live into a world with women, indigenous, and youth being equals in participation, recognition and voice. Each voice challenges in its own way: women’s ordination with the Orthodox tradition, youth with the broadening ecumenical and interreligious landscape, and the indigenous who engage in north/south economic dynamics and around the care of creation.

2. Financial State of the WCC

The financial review is based on the documents made available for the three years from 2008–2010. Because the WCC is based in Geneva, Switzerland, the financial data are reported in Swiss Francs (CHF) which makes them vulnerable to foreign currency risks. The currencies giving rise to this risk are principally the Euro, the Swedish Krona, the U.S. Dollar, and the Pound Sterling.

The WCC has a healthy balance sheet. However, the fact that the current ratio (current assets divided by current liabilities), which measures the ability to meet current obligation, has deteriorated from more than 4.5 times in 2008 and 2.4 times in 2009 to only 1.1 times in 2010 is of concern. The cause of this reduction is a result of the mortgage loan due on Staff Residential Building of more than 10 million CHF in 2010. If this loan was not renegotiated in 2011, it would considerably cause a drain in cash assets.

The WCC has maintained a consistent Funds and Reserves (net assets) balance of 39.8 million CHF, 39.5 million CHF and 40.7 million CHF for 2008, 2009, and 2010, respectively. Of those balances, 16.0 million CHF, 15.6 million CHF, and 16.3 million CHF are in Restricted Funds, and 23.8 million CHF, 23.9 million CHF, and 24.5 million CHF, are in Unrestricted & Designated Funds for 2008, 2009, and 2010, respectively.

In accordance with the Funds and Reserves Policy approved by the Central Committee in August 2003, General Reserves are defined as those funds available to the council after meeting its obligations and commitments, without realizing fixed assets. In February 2005, the Central Committee set the General Reserves target at six months’ salary cost.

During 2008, the deterioration in the financial markets led to a fall in WCC’s investments, which was valued at 15.5 million CHF in 2007 to 10.0 million CHF in 2008. This resulted in a net realized and unrealized loss of 2.9 million CHF in 2008. The investments rebounded to 12.7 million CHF in 2009 with a gain of 1.0 million CHF. However, the investments fell again in 2010 to 9.9 million with a loss of 0.4 million CHF.

The WCC derives more than 80 percent of its income on contributions from its membership dues and donations, which has decreased from 35.7 million CHF in 2008 and 36.2 million CHF in 2009 to 32.5 million CHF in 2010. Based on the 2010 financial data, 68 percent of the membership income comes from Europe, 25 percent from North America and the remaining 7 percent from a combination of Asia, Africa, Middle East, Pacific, Caribbean, and Latin America.

To balance its reduced budget, a 20 percent staff reduction was instituted from 173 employees in 2008 to 166 employees in 2009 to 144 employees in 2010. As a result of the staff reduction, the personnel costs have been reduced from 17.9 million CHF in 2008 to 18.5 million in 2009 to 16.4 million CHF in 2010. The overall expenses have decreased from 39.3 million CHF in 2008 to 36.7 million CHF in 2009 to 31.5 million CHF in 2010.

Overall during the three-year review period of 2008–2010, WCC has been able to manage its budget in meeting the challenges of declined membership contributions and financial markets.

The 2003 Review called the GACEIR to address the following questions, the response follows:

Declare its intent that the PC(USA) shall seek to sustain the level of its support, both financial and in human resources, to the work of the World Council of Churches, while also urging our partner churches to seek every possible way of increasing their support. To these ends, we encourage the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations to address the following questions by the next World Council of Churches (WCC) review:

- Why do so few churches choose to be a part of the WCC?
- Why do so many member churches choose not to support the WCC financially?
- What role has the PC(USA) played in creating or perpetuating this situation?
- Is the WCC perceived by many churches in Asia, Africa, the Middle East, Latin America, etc. as an essentially Eurocentric or Western institution? Does the contribution of 98 percent of its funding give to European and North American churches a disproportionate and unjust degree of power within the WCC in relation to larger but less wealthy churches? If so, how can such inequities be fairly and justly resolved?

Financial concerns challenge the WCC as with all churches in these economic times. In response, the WCC has made changes to its budgeting process that has been balanced for the last two years, has established staff positions to connect with member churches, has begun to reach out to foundations for funding, and is seeking to diversify income by possibly approaching individual congregations where the formal relationship with a member church allows such direct contact. In addition to financial gifts and space usage, in kind services are being assessed as gifts to the WCC.

In regard to giving, there are member churches which exist in volatile and disruptive conditions so that any giving would be neither wise nor safe. With other member churches there are no funds available for leaders to even participate in meetings.
In both situations, these churches recognize the broader global impact of the Christian church and voice and find it meaningful to be part of this community.

The PC(USA)’s core support of $458,402 has remained at the same level since 2003. Due to the influence of exchange rates, the total contribution in Swiss Francs has been reduced from approximately 630,000 CHF to 426,000 CHF, a loss of approximately 32 percent. Since 2007, mission support has been reduced more than $650,000, which does not reflect the devaluation from exchange rates. The decrease represents financial challenges within programs related to the One Great Hour of Sharing (OGHS) Offering—especially as it impacted the Presbyterian Hunger Program. The Hunger Program was a significant donor to the WCC for many years. The OGHS receipts have been declining for more than ten years. The Hunger Program worked very hard to maintain its commitments to the WCC but had to make some hard decisions in 2008. The PC(USA) has been a consistent voice in encouraging member churches to pay their dues.

Currently 349 churches are involved in the WCC, which include major church bodies in many countries. Participation may vary dependent upon ecclesial organizations, such that in some places the WCC may not relate directly to a denomination but instead relate to national, regional, or local councils, which themselves have a number of church members. In some countries there is a national church that holds the membership in the WCC representing several churches.

One challenge to the WCC is the critique of its Eurocentric nature and location in Geneva, one of the most expensive cities in the world. The general secretary and other leaders have stated that Geneva is the center for nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) with representation from almost every nation in the world. By being present in Geneva, the WCC has the opportunity to engage with these NGOs as well as with the United Nations work on human rights.

As a church in the global north, PC(USA) has received many gifts. According to Luke, Jesus said, “From everyone to whom much has been given, much will be required …” (Lk. 12:48). The gifts received are not only for the use of the PC(USA) but for the good of the world, thus it becomes imperative to share this relative abundance. Essential to the “requirement” of sharing is an opportunity and a privilege to serve. Such can be said of the European and North American churches with regard to contributions to the WCC.

The Luke verse continues by saying “and from the one to whom much has been entrusted, even more will be demanded.” Contributions are entrusted to the WCC and as such much will be demanded of their use. In this same section of Luke, Jesus says “those who store up treasures for themselves are not rich toward God,” (Lk. 12:21) but foolish in the abundance of possessions. The call for the “rich” churches, like PC(USA), is to give as it will strengthen God’s mission in the world.

Many parts of the global south are still in a development mode and continue to struggle with the refinement of natural resources. The PC(USA), as with other churches in the global north, is called to find ways to not appear oppressively powerful with what God has blessed upon us as these nations and their churches strive toward self-sustainment.

The United States has not been plagued with continuous war on our soil, crippling natural disasters, and unchecked diseases to the degree experienced in other parts of the world. Although the U.S. economy is currently at a weak point, it is still stronger than many nations of the southern hemisphere. The calling for PC(USA), as with other global north partners, is to share with those whom we live as worldwide neighbors.

If the PC(USA) has played a role in sustaining a feeling of unjust power over smaller churches, it can vow to find ways to listen to the desires of others when the WCC is in a decision-making mode. This would include encouraging a healthy, viable, and acknowledged approach toward other cultures within the WCC.

G. Appreciation of PC(USA) Engagement in the WCC

Affirmations of PC(USA) Participation

The PC(USA) presence from the founding of the WCC has had great impact on the work and direction of the council. In the interview with the general secretary, the Reverend Dr. Tveit expressed appreciation and praised the PC(USA) for the • quality of persons who have served the WCC in various roles specifically mentioning the legacy of General Secretary Eugene Carson Blake (1966–1972);

• ability to function globally with a breadth of ecumenical commitments and connections worldwide;
• commitment to keeping tough issues on the table, asking difficult questions or critical questions, and raising concern for those who live on the margins;
• theological, political, and organizational competency;
• strength and wisdom in dealing with important decisions;
• openness to the gifts of other churches while being faithful to the gifts of being Presbyterian;
quality of work produced by PC(USA) representatives; ability to understand and like to work programmatically and collegially; and financial and managerial support.

H. Challenges And Hopes

1. Challenges

As the PC(USA) and other member churches undergo staff changes and structural realignments, it presents a challenge to the WCC to keep up with avenues of communication. The WCC is not always aware of the changes within the internal structure of PC(USA)—such that communications with particular offices need to be internally defined and then shared with the appropriate offices of the WCC. This information needs to be shared from PC(USA) to the WCC.

Priorities in the GAMC continue to shift focus toward the nurture of the local church—the challenge still remains for us to be a church in the world so that the PC(USA) does not lose sight of being a worldwide witness to the gospel. The PC(USA)’s continued relationship with the WCC can be part of the bridge with the greater church in proclaiming the gospel. We should not see our work as either that we work with the local church or that we work internationally. As identified in the connections made earlier in this report, we connect at the local level with the internationally generated programs of the WCC.

Through the review process it became clear that the PC(USA) website could better serve local congregations if there were more visible links to ecumenical agencies including the WCC. Those programs and information appropriate to congregations will strengthen the church local and universal and offer value of what it means to find our unity in Christ.

Central to our communication is an internal engagement with the WCC through the OGA and the GAMC program areas of Theology and Worship; Theological Education; Peacemaking; Presbyterian Office at the UN; Justice; Immigration; Climate Change; and Environment. These relationships and the work engaged add value to the work and witness of the PC(USA) staff and local congregations. The work with the WCC is not additional responsibility but a calling to fulfill ministry in both a local and a global context. Both are necessary aims for fulfilling our Christian mandate to love God and to love our neighbor as we love ourselves.

2. Hopes

Words of hope for continuing work together with the WCC were offered by the Reverend Dr. Tveit, the WCC presidents, and also by the staff and responses from those in the PC(USA). There is hope of increasing the programmatic work being done together by reaching into the depths of commitment and presence of the PC(USA) staff and with congregations, as appropriate. The WCC welcomes and embraces the strong reformed theology that is also an ecumenical presence as a key ingredient to the vision and direction of the WCC and the work in the world and looks to the PC(USA) to continue its leadership and involvement.

The hope is that having been good companions on the common journey of faith, life, witness, and learning, the WCC and the PC(USA) together are now called to renew the ecumenical commitment and reform the ecumenical vision in face of the changing and challenging world from the perspective of God’s justice and peace.

Item 09-04

[The assembly approved Item 09-04. See p. 9.]

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012)

1. Authorize participation in the Eighth Round of Reform/Catholic dialogue, which will begin in the fall of 2012, and request a report to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

2. Appoint the Reverend David Gambrell, associate for Worship in the General Assembly Mission Council, and the Reverend Cynthia Campbell, Ph.D., interim pastor, Highland Presbyterian Church (Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky) as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) representatives to this dialogue.

Rationale

Following a meeting in New York on 19 September 2011, and a follow-up phone conference on 4 October 2011, ecumenical officers of the SEIA, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Reformed Church of America, the Christian Reformed Church, and the United Church of Christ agreed to the following prospectus for the next round of the Catholic-Reformed consultation.
Even as we wrestled through theological and dialogical challenges in the last round, the five communions, in a historically significant moment, affirmed These Living Waters: The Agreement on the Recognition of Baptism. The time for a new round of dialogue, which we agree needs to manifest signs of continuity with the last round by means of advancing the foundations in sacramental theology that were established, seems appropriate. The topic of the consultation is largely based, therefore, on the recommendations made in This Bread of Life, the culminating document from the previous round of consultation.

More precisely, in its conclusion to the last round of dialogue, participants noted: “We must also acknowledge that our deliberations were hampered by several ecclesiological issues that arose which were sometimes the cause of considerable tension. Thus we believe that it would be good for us in the future to explore together these ecclesiological issues which still stand before us, including how our sacramental theology relates to the theology of ministry and ordination, the relationship between an individual congregation and the universal Church, understanding each other’s polity, and the nature of the Church and how authority is exercised within that understanding in service to the Body of Christ.”

The upcoming consultation will focus on the nature and meaning of the Church.

Given the challenges and preliminary goals identified, the dialogue will be designed to address issues that are ecclesiological in scope. We envision that the proposed dialogue will begin in the fall of 2012. Among the questions that the dialogue will address are the following:

A. On the ecclesial dimension of the Catholic-Reformed communions:

1. What is our understanding of the role of ministry and the meaning of ordination?
2. How does our sacramental theology, especially our respective interpretations of Eucharist, relate to ministry and ordination?
3. How does each of us understand the relationship between an individual congregation and the universal church?
4. How do we interpret the relationship between the exercise of authority and the role of service?
5. How do we understand the role of episkopé in the Roman Catholic and Reformed traditions?
6. How might the ministry of the Bishop of Rome be helpful in the cause of Christian unity?
7. What do we understand to be the mission of the church in light of our shared study on Baptism and Eucharist?
8. How does our understanding of the church’s participation in God’s mission shape our view of the nature of the church?

Endnote

Item 09-05

[The assembly approved Item 09-05. See pp. 9, 10.]

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) elect the following persons as delegates to the General Assembly of Church World Service and the National Council of Churches from 2012–2015:

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly
Associate Stated Clerk for Ecumenical Relations
General Assembly Mission Council (or its successor body) representative (elected)
Committee on the Office of the General Assembly representative (elected)
The Reverend Carmelo Mercado Jr.
Hikari Nakam
Tyler Orem
The Reverend Paul Rader

Alternates: The Reverend Sherri Houser; The Reverend Aimee Moiso.

Rationale

The General Assembly of Church World Service and the National Council of Churches meets every two years. The GACEIR is nominating eight delegates and two alternates to complete the PC(USA) delegation to the assembly. In addition to staff with particular ecumenical portfolios, the nominations include elected persons with connections to General Assembly agencies and committees with ecumenical responsibilities, young adults, seminarians, and local pastors.

Item 09-06

[The assembly Item 09-06. See pp. 9, 10.]

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve the following persons to be elected as delegates to the 10th Assembly of the World Council of Churches:

1. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly (by virtue of office); Alternate—Associate Stated Clerk for Ecumenical Relations (by virtue of office).

2. The Reverend Laura Mariko Cheifetz; Alternate—Everdith Landrau

Rationale

The 10th Assembly of the World Council of Churches will meet October 30–November 8, 2013, in Busan, South Korea. The PC(USA) has been allocated two delegates.

Recommendations Regarding Covenant to Adopt the Lund Principle—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to give particular concern to implementing the Lund Principle with PC(USA) full communion and covenant partners and where possible with other Christian churches, and to bring a progress report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

2. Encourage Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations to study The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 517ff) using the General Assembly study guide, God’s Unity, Our Journey.

3. Encourage mid councils to study The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (Ibid.) in collaboration with mid council judicatories of PC(USA) full communion and covenant partners.

4. Remind Presbyterian delegations appointed to conciliar bodies and bilateral and multilateral dialogues currently underway of the importance of the Lund Principle in the ecumenical witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2010 Referral: Item 08-01. Recommendation to refer the Covenant to Adopt and Implement the “Lund Principle” and Codicil to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations, requesting a report with recommendations by the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Synod of the Northeast.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (GACEIR) is pleased to receive Item 08-01 from the Synod of the Northeast as approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010), which offers the whole church the example of the Vermont Ecumenical Council in its commitment to implement the Lund Principle.

The Lund Principle, developed at an international ecumenical conference held in Sweden in 1952, provides the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) an important guidepost for the way it carries out its ecumenical commitments: “Should not the Churches act together in all matters except those in which deep differences of conviction compel them to act separately?”

As Item 08-01 reminds the church, the Lund Principle is embodied in numerous places in the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and is a central conviction in The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), approved by the 208th General Assembly (2008) (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 517ff).
The GACEIR, as it assists and gives guidance to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in fulfilling its ecumenical vision, is committed to keep the Lund Principle as a centerpiece of its work in - welcoming diverse patterns of the visible unity of Christ’s church, seeking concord in essential things: faith, sacraments, mission, and ministry;

- participating in mission and witness globally with ecumenical church partners, and in mission and witness nationally with regional councils, local associations, and neighboring congregations;
- engaging in bilateral and multilateral dialogues with other churches and traditions to remove barriers of misunderstanding and establish common affirmation;
- working for the union or reunion of separate churches in the Presbyterian and Reformed family;
- reaching out to unfamiliar traditions and associations of churches; and
- searching for the fuller expression of the visible unity to which we are called.

Over the next several years, GACEIR believes that the Lund Principle will provide an important framework as we work to strengthen several areas of our work:

1. Living Constructively with the Tension Between the Academic and the Practical

   Historically, the search to discover our unity in Christ through the exploration of doctrinal differences among the churches has been seen as an academic exercise. Theologians and ecclesiologists have met in bilateral and multilateral dialogues, some of which have continued for decades, to seek common ground on matters of theology. As a result, ecumenism is perceived by many in the church as something academicians do, without practical consequences for the life of the church.

   On the other hand, as the Lund Principle suggests, ecumenism is a very practical matter. When full communion agreements are entered into by churches, there are consequences: new relationships among brothers and sisters in the faith who were once divided; the sharing of the Eucharist in places where it has not been shared; and the orderly exchange of ministers of Word and Sacrament among churches that have not enjoyed the benefits of receiving ministers from the other tradition, for example.

   The GACEIR believes that it must find ways to live constructively with the tension between the academic (dialogues resulting in significant agreements) and the practical (resources, ecumenical liaisons, communication networks, and ecumenical formation). While different seasons of church’s life will require different emphases, GACEIR wants to lift up both the academic work of ecumenical engagement and the practical work of implementation for the church as a whole, recognizing that both are critical components of the church’s ecumenical life and witness.

2. Increased Programmatic Focus

   Given the staff reductions within the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) related to ecumenical programmatic work in recent years, GACEIR sees the need to move more proactively into developing a programmatic thrust and educational resources that were once the sole purview of the GAMC. These include study resources related to our church’s conciliar relationships and full communion agreements, and increased attention to the need for ecumenical formation throughout the denomination. Appropriate faculty at PC(USA) seminaries and others should be brought into this process. The Lund Principle provides a helpful framework as GACEIR pursues a more programmatic focus.

3. Strengthening Ecumenical Reception at the Local Level

   While the PC(USA) has invested considerable resources over the last several decades to participate bilateral and multilateral dialogues, some of which have led to full communion agreements, less effort has been invested in implementing the results of these agreements at the local level. Cutbacks in staff, along with the lack of an overarching strategy for implementation, have contributed to this disparity.

   As GACEIR develops an implementation strategy for ecumenical reception, in partnership with mid councils of the church, keeping the Lund Principle as central to local reception will help assure that the church’s ecumenical agreements are fully embraced throughout all levels of the church’s life.

   As the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) moves into its next season of life within a changing cultural context, the Lund Principle provides both a useful framework and a valuable tool to assist the church in fulfilling its ecumenical vision while dealing with diminishing resources and facing new challenges. Guided by the Lund Principle, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations is committed to this work.
Item 09-08

Commissioners' Resolution. On a Green Church Ecumenical Network.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) requests the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations to explore and report back to the 221st General Assembly (2014) on the following:

1. The creation of a network of “Green Churches” seriously concerned with global climate change and its danger to future generations, building upon the Environmental Justice Working Group of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and denominational environmental programs, and building also on college and university campus ministries involving Christian students and faculty.

2. The relation of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. (NCCC) and Church World Service in environmental ministry and theology, in light of the administrative separation of these two bodies, once united in witness and mission.

3. The appeal of such direct new names as “Green Church” for young people in U.S. culture.

Rationale

The next church needs to be a green church. The ecumenical movement can become a movement again by uniting new generations with agencies that continue to have strength, infrastructure, and wisdom for social transformation guided by the Gospel of Christ. The Environmental Justice Work of the NCCC is among its strongest programs. The General Assembly should contribute interchurch vision to the whole church, also inviting and learning from local and regional efforts.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness counsels the following considerations:

This resolution has two foci. It requests the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations to explore the creation of a network of green churches and, secondly, to explore the relations of the NCCC and CWS environmental ministries subsequent to administrative separation of the two groups.

The effort to promote green churches fits well within current PC(USA) policy as stated in The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming. The PC(USA) Environmental Ministries program has established a network of Earth Care Congregations and the creation of this network will complement this existing work.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-08

Comment on Item 09-08—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The PC(USA) Environmental Ministries program, which participates actively in the Eco-Justice Working Group of the NCCC, currently provides an active certification program for “Earth Care Congregations” in the PC(USA). It also regularly distributes NCCC and Church World Service (CWS) resources to Presbyterian congregations as appropriate. Through PC(USA) representation at the NCCC Eco-Justice Working Group, the PC(USA) is in conversation with the environmentally focused programs in the other NCCC-member communions and their green church certification programs.

The PC(USA) Earth Care Congregation (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/environment/earth-care-congregations/) certification program, begun in 2010, supports holistic environmental justice concerns, including education and action on climate change. The currently certified 95 Earth Care Congregations holistically integrate caring for God’s creation throughout the life of their congregation—in worship, education, facilities, and outreach. The Environmental Ministries program will continue to work with the NCCC, Church World Service, and other ecumenical partners to support local congregations, to engage youth and young adults, and to have a strong ecumenical presence and unified voice in addressing climate change and other environmental issues.
Item 09-09

[The assembly received Item 09-09. See pp. 9, 10.]

The Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations received the report as written. The task was completed in December 2011.

Response: In response to this referral, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations appointed an implementation team to meet with the representatives from the Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad (KPCA). The joint implementation team, upon the advice and counsel of Vocation staff of the PC(USA), adapted the existing Orderly Exchange of Ministers document currently developed under the Lutheran Reformed Formula of Agreement. Meetings were also held with the Board of Pensions and the KPCA general secretary to address issues related to participation in the Board of Pensions. Upon the advice and counsel of the Constitutional Services staff, processes for transfer of churches were developed. The joint implementation committee finalized the orderly exchange processes for ministers and congregations in December 2011, and the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations approved the processes and forwarded to the 220th General Assembly (2012) for information. [For text of the Orderly Exchange of Ministers document, see 01-02-gaceir-orderly-exchange-of-ministers.pdf.]

Item 09-Info

Christians and Jews, People Of God: A Contribution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the Interfaith Conversation—From the General Assembly Mission Council (Office of Theology and Worship).

In an effort to fulfill the mandate of the 216th General Assembly (2004) to “reexamine and strengthen the relationship between Christians and Jews and the implications of this relationship for our evangelism and new church development,” the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Office of Theology and Worship, offer this draft of “Christians and Jews, People of God: A Contribution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the Interfaith Conversation” to the church for comment. Significant revisions have already been made in accordance with the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010) that directed the GAMC to consult more widely with the church. Additional revisions based on the churchwide comment process will be considered before the document is presented for final approval to the 221st General Assembly (2014). Send comments to taw@pcusa.org.

Christians and Jews, People Of God,
A Contribution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the Interfaith Conversation

PREFACE

The Origin of this Document: the General Assembly Directive, the Abiding Task

The 216th General Assembly (2004) directed the Office of Theology and Worship, the Office of Interfaith Relations, and the Office of Evangelism to “reexamine and strengthen the relationship between Christians and Jews and the implications of this relationship for our evangelism and new church development.” This directive was a step in the PC(USA)’s continuing response to the 211th General Assembly’s (1999) mandate to guide the church in “bearing witness to Jesus Christ in a pluralistic age.”

The 2004 General Assembly action was prompted in large part by a new church development by a “messianic Jewish” congregation. The Assembly also took actions regarding the state of Israel. For our Jewish sisters and brothers these developments called into question the PC(USA)’s continued commitment to the views established in “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship between Christians and Jews,” views they had received with appreciation.

In partial response to the General Assembly’s mandate, staff from the offices of Theology and Worship, Interfaith Relations, and Evangelism met eight times with representatives of the National Council of Synagogues. These conversations led to four consultations that included rabbis from the Conservative, Reform, Orthodox, and Reconstructionist branches of Judaism, and Presbyterian pastors, theologians, and governing body staffs. Through these consultations it was found that three particular topics needed further theological clarification: God’s covenant with the Jews and the relationship of Christianity to that covenant, the land, and evangelism. Since 2010, the Office of Theology and Worship has consulted with Christians in Middle East countries, with the Presbyterian Middle East Caucus, the Israel-Palestine Mission Network of the PC(USA), and others.
The relationship of Christianity to Judaism, and thus of Christians to Jews, is directly relevant to every Christian. This is true both for Christians who live in the presence of Jews, and for those who do not. To understand Christian faith requires understanding the relationship of Christianity and Judaism.

Recognizing the importance and complexity of Christianity’s relationship with Judaism, the 199th General Assembly, (1987), approved the document, “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews.” This document was approved as “a pastoral teaching document to provide a basis for continuing discussion within the Presbyterian community and to offer guidance for occasions in which Presbyterians and Jews converse, cooperate, and enter into dialogue.” This document was an important milestone in the PC(USA)’s exploration of its relationship with Judaism and Jews.

A string of significant documents published since the 1987 PC(USA) report bear witness to Christian grappling with Christianity’s relationship with Judaism. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Presbyterians have shared in continuing engagement with Judaism and Jews. The years since publication of the 1987 document have seen an increase in the number of PC(USA) presbyteries, congregations, and ministers who have developed close ties with Jewish organizations, synagogues, and rabbis. The Christian need to understand Christianity’s unique relationship with Judaism is an abiding need. This document seeks to contribute to that understanding.

This document, “Christians and Jews: People of God” is not meant to replace “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship between Christians and Jews.” The 1987 study paper represented a significant advance in Christian theological understanding and in Presbyterian-Jewish relations. Its “Affirmations and Explications” remain a valuable resource for discussion within the church. The present paper is offered by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), reflecting its own North American context, to further the conversation of the theological understanding of the relationship between Christianity and Judaism. As such, it stands alongside other such efforts in the United States, in the Middle East, and across the world as an additional resource for discussion in the church and for conversations between Christians and Jews.

Definitions

As “A Theological Understanding of the Relationship Between Christians and Jews” notes, “The defining of terms on this subject is complex but unavoidable.” It goes on to offer a few definitions, which will be followed in this paper as well.

We understand “Judaism” to be the religion of the Jews. It is practiced by many today and extends back into the period of the Hebrew Scriptures. Judaism of late antiquity gave rise to that form of Judaism that has been developing since the first century, known as “Rabbinic Judaism.” Judaism of late antiquity] gave rise to early Christianity as well. Both Christianity and Judaism claim relationship with the ancient people Israel; the use of the term “Israel” in this study is restricted to its ancient reference. When referring to the contemporary State of Israel this document will use “State of Israel.” We understand “Jews” to include those persons whose self-understanding is that they are descended from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, and Leah, and those converted into the Jewish community. We recognize that Jews are varied in the observance of their religion, and that there are many Jews who do not practice Judaism at all.

There is one exception to these definitions. In the New Testament, references to “Israel” often do not mean only an ancient group of people. They mean the descendants of Jacob running across history, to this day, and into the future. For example, Ephesians 2:12 speaks of gentile Christians as once being “aliens from the commonwealth of Israel.” “Israel” in this verse is not limited to an ancient Israel. Within this paper, when quoting from Scripture, “Israel” may refer to something more than the ancient group. In such cases this paper will not change the wording to fit its definitions.

The Complicating Factor of Middle East Politics

All theological work is done contextually. Part of the context of contemporary interfaith theological dialogue between Christians and Jews is the continuing thorny politics of the state of Israel and Palestine. This paper is consistent with the position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.): Both the Israeli and Palestinian peoples have the right to secure homelands in which to live responsibly and pursue their national, religious, and cultural aspirations. Policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding the Israeli-Palestinian conflict make clear that an end to all forms of violence, together with the establishment of two viable states through a negotiated resolution of this conflict, are desperately needed for peace, security and justice for both peoples. This policy has been affirmed over and over again by PC(USA) General Assemblies, most recently through the approval of “Breaking Down the Walls” at the 219th General Assembly (2010).iii

THEOLOGICAL PERSPECTIVES

“… to share the rich root of the olive tree …” (Rom. 11:17).

The relationship between Christianity and Judaism, and therefore between Christians and Jews, is unique. It is unlike the relationship of Christianity to any other religion.iv

The relationship between Christians and Jews is not simply a particular instance of “interfaith relations.” The relationship between Christianity and Judaism is unique, foundational, and enduring. The New Testament bears consistent witness to this relationship—the mercy of God in Jesus Christ embraces both Jew and Gentile; it does not abandon Jews in favor of Gentiles or forsake Jews in favor of the church. Supersessionism, the belief that God’s covenant with the church has replaced God’s covenant with Jews, and that the church has supplanted the Jewish people, is contrary to the core witness of the New Testament and is not supported by the mainstream of the Reformed tradition.

Unfavorable New Testament references to “the Jews” do not refer to all Jews of the first century, and certainly not of the twenty-first. The fact that many first century Jews and most Jews since then have not placed faith in Jesus as God’s Messiah troubles some Christians, but it does not cancel God’s continuing fidelity to his people Israel. “Has God rejected his people?” asks Paul; “Have they stumbled so as to fall?” His answer is clear: “By no means!” (Rom. 11:1, 11).

When Paul draws the differences between Judaism and Christianity, Jews and Christians most starkly, he proclaims God’s enduring faithfulness to Jews: “As regards the gospel they are enemies of God for your sake; but as regards election they are beloved, for the sake of their ancestors; for the gifts [of God] and the calling of God are irrevocable” (Rom. 11:28–29). Because God remains true to Jews, Christians have confidence that God will remain true to us. Karl Barth asks, “Do you believe that it lies with us to exclude the Jew from this faithfulness of God? Do you really believe that we can and may deny him this?” “If God is not faithful in keeping covenant with the Jews, then neither can God be trusted to keep covenant with Christians.

Nor can human faithlessness destroy God’s covenant. This is a central affirmation of our Reformed tradition: God’s sovereign grace is never dependent on human faithfulness. “And so, as we confess that God the Father created us when we were … enemies to him, so also do we confess that the Holy Ghost does sanctify and regenerate us, without respect to any merit proceeding from us, be it before or be it after our regeneration.” Our Reformed tradition stands here with both the Old Testament and the New.

The relationship of Christianity to the Judaism of Jesus’ day, of Christians to Jews is not that of a replacement, but of “a wild olive shoot” grafted into “the rich root of the olive tree” (Rom. 11:17). While the New Testament contains numerous references to God’s “new covenant” in Christ, these cannot be taken to mean that “new” cancels God’s previous covenants. Just as the covenant at Sinai did not dissolve the covenant with Abraham, so the new covenant sealed in Christ’s blood “does not annul a covenant previously ratified by God, so as to nullify the promise” (Gal. 3:17). Rabbinic Judaism and Christianity are best understood as two children of the Second Temple Judaism practiced in the time of Jesus.

In the centuries of European experience from which the PC(USA) descended, the way that Christians relate to Jews has been a barometer of the church’s spiritual health. Too often, across the history of the church, Christians have carried out persecution and pogroms, forced “conversions,” ghettos, multiple forms of discrimination, and subtle modes of contempt—indications that Christians have again become “aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenants of promise” (Eph. 2:12), thus contradicting the redeeming work of Christ. Often, these attitudes and events have resulted from uninformed stereotypes of Jews and Judaism. Genuine knowledge is essential, not only for the sake of Jews, but also because Christians can fully understand who we are as people of faith only when we understand who Jews are as people of faith. Understanding who Jews were in biblical times is insufficient; we must recover in our time the good news that Christ “has broken down the dividing wall, that is, the hostility between us” (Eph. 2:14).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to explore more deeply what it means to affirm that Christians and Jews now worship and serve the same God, and how this differentiates Christian-Jewish relations from Christian relationships with adherents of other religions.

“… and has remembered his holy covenant …” (Lk. 1:72).

The Bible is made up of two Testaments. The Old Testament is not replaced by the New Testament. The books of the Old Testament are Scripture for Judaism. The two Testaments stand together for Christians. Christians and Jews share these biblical books, collected in different orderings in the Christian Old Testament and the Jewish Tanakh.

John Calvin, devoting an entire chapter of the Institutes to an explication of “The Similarity of the Old and New Testaments,” declares that “The covenant made with all the patriarchs is so much like ours in substance and reality that the two are actually one and the same.” Clearly, there are differences in “the mode of dispensation” between the two, so that Calvin readily acknowledges that there are differences between the Old and New Testaments. “I freely admit the differences in Scripture, to which attention is called,” says Calvin, “but in such a way as not to detract from its established unity.”

Christian faith is firmly grounded in the Old Testament, for Christian faith affirms that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is the one triune God. Superficial contrasts between “the wrathful God of the Old Testament” and “the loving God of the New Testament” are not only inaccurate readings of both Old and New Testaments, but also denials of the very foundations of Christian faith.

One of the earliest challenges faced by the Christian church came from Marcion’s attempt to detach Christianity from its Jewish heritage. He set out to remove all references to the Old Testament from Christian writings: only an edited version of Luke’s Gospel and edited versions of Paul’s letters remained once Marcion had excised all favorable mention of Israel, the law, and the justice of God. The church rejected Marcion’s assertion that the God who “has spoken to us by a Son” is not the same God who spoke “in many and various ways by the prophets” (Heb. 1:1–2). The early church preserved the truth of the gospel, yet both mild and virulent versions of Marcion’s heresy have endured.

Some Christian treatments of Scripture can reduce the Old Testament to a narrative account of what people used to believe long ago and far away. For Christians, the Old Testament is more than a record of ancient Israel’s faith; it is Christian Scripture. Jesus proclaimed, “Do not think that I have come to abolish the law or the prophets; I have come not to abolish but to fulfill” (Mt. 5:17). Similarly, Paul says that “Christ is the telos of the law so that there may be righteousness for everyone who believes [telos—“end”—not as “termination” of the law, but as the law’s “goal, purpose”].

Well-intentioned replacement of the terms “Old Testament” and “New Testament” by “Hebrew Bible” and “Early Christian Writings” can have unintended yet unfortunate effects. They combine to imply that the “Hebrew Bible” is “their Bible,” not Christian Scripture, and that “Christian Writings” are confined to the New Testament. Using the common term “testament” for both indicates the integral, inseparable connection between the two. “Old” and “New” may be retained because the former does not mean outdated or inferior and the latter does not imply the replacement of the former. (“Older and Newer Testaments” or “First and Second Testaments” are alternatives that also convey this connection.)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to explore more deeply the reality that Christians and Jews share Scripture. At the same time, the church is called to recover the Old Testament as Christian Scripture, reading the Old Testament with and through the New Testament.

“… and has broken down the dividing wall [of] hostility …” (Eph. 2:14).

Christian teaching of hostility and contempt for Jews has blighted the history of the church. It has been a mark of failure to understand and live the Christian faith.

Many Christians mistakenly equate contemporary Jews with New Testament Pharisees, and the current state and people of Israel with Old Testament Israel. There is a sense in which the latter is an understandable mistake, for modern Middle Eastern cities and states often bear the same names as they did in the past—e.g., Egypt, Syria, Jerusalem, and Israel. However, biblical realities should not be read into present-day political situations, nor should modern political situations be read into biblical narratives or accounts of the gospel. Twenty-first century Christians do not live with Egyptians under the Pharaohs, Assyrian conquerors, Babylonian captors, David’s Jerusalem, the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, the Roman Empire, or religious rule by scribes and Pharisees. Christians live now with the modern heirs of those peoples, shaped by all of the intervening events and forces of history. Today’s Judaism is not the ancient Judaism that we see in the Bible, but Rabbinic Judaism. It is a faith that is rooted in Scripture, but one, like our own, that has been shaped by centuries of faithful interpretation, change, and renewal. Today’s Jews must be understood in relation to their long history since the time of Jesus, and in light of the faith, ethics and practice that marks their lives today.

The survival of the Jewish people, in spite of hostility, exile, diaspora, and holocaust, is theologically significant for Christian faith. Karl Barth relates the story about Frederick the Great asking his personal physician for a single proof of the existence of God. The physician replied, “Your Majesty, the Jews!” Barth comments that, “in the person of the Jew there stands a witness before our eyes, the witness of God’s covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and in that with us all.”

It is a witness to the faithfulness of God, and the faithfulness of the Jewish people. The survival of the Jews comes in spite of suppression, separation, and persecution, most lamentably by Christians. Christian teaching of contempt for Jews and the subsequent history of ghettos, pogroms, and even holocaust is not simply a distant memory. Anti-Semitism is a continuing reality throughout the world, including within the Christian church.

The New Testament does not merely encourage toleration of the Jews. The New Testament surprise is not that Jews are encompassed within the grace of God. No, the New Testament surprise is that God’s mercy extends beyond Jews to include the Gentiles. It is the people of the other nations, the “Gentiles” (the overwhelming majority of Christians) who were “without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers to the covenants of promise.” It is they who have been brought near by the cross of Christ (Eph. 2:12–13) so that “there is no longer Jew or Greek … for all … are one in Christ Jesus” (Gal. 3:28). The good news of the New Testament is not confined to the first century; its proclamation has enduring significance. Paul’s affirmation that God has not rejected his people Israel, that the Jews have not stumbled so as to fall, and his declaration that “all Israel will be saved” (Rom. 11:26) is as true today as Paul’s proclamation of our salvation in Christ.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to examine all aspects of its life: its interpretation of Scripture, its theology, its educational materials, and its public policy, in order to avoid explicit or implicit teaching of contempt for Judaism and Jews. Continuing conversation with Jews should include faithful exploration of inaccurate and offensive characterizations of Jews and Judaism.

THE LAND

“… the LORD appeared to Abram and said, ‘To your offspring I will give this land …’” (Gen. 12:7).
Theological Reflection on God, Peoples, Land: Necessary, Complex

As the 1987 statement reminded the church, a faithful effort to understand the relationship of Christianity to Judaism, and of Christians with Jews, “cannot avoid the reality of the promise of land.”

Addressing this issue is extremely difficult today. It is difficult, first, because of the unresolved conflict between the State of Israel and Palestinians. Second, it is difficult because theological assertions about the land figure centrally in political debates and in justifying state policies. The long Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory and the suffering of the Palestinian people has sometimes been justified on the basis of the biblical promise. A minority of Jews, particularly in the settlers’ movement, and a minority of Christians, particularly Christian Zionists and some who hold to dispensationalist theologies, have misappropriated the biblical promise, employing it as a political instrument. Moreover, some see any discussion of the issue of land as de facto part of a position statement on the Middle East, or on Israeli-Palestinian peace. As the 1987 statement reminded the church, "The question with which we must wrestle is how this promise is to be understood in the light of the existence of the modern political state of Israel. … The State of Israel is a geopolitical entity and is not to be validated theologically.”

Related to these positions, and yet distinct from them, there is theological work to be done, seeking to understand the God who made the promise of land, and the relationship of God and God’s promise to Christianity and Judaism today. It remains to explore the biblical promise of land, and how it can be understood in the present context of the Christian-Jewish interfaith relationship.

As Christians read and interpret Scripture, the concrete particularity of the biblical promise of land has often proved to be a stumbling block, in much the same way that the particularity of the incarnation and crucifixion of Jesus Christ have been a stumbling block (cf. 1 Cor. 1:18–25). God acts in and through the concrete realities of Jesus’ life and passion. In the same way, the Bible witnesses to God’s election of one people out of many, and God’s promise to one person, Abraham. It is not possible to deny the particularity of God’s gift of a specific land to the people of God’s covenant. Faced with this gift and its concrete particularity, Christians need to ask what this gift means for all the people of the world, and for the people of that particular place, both Israelis and Palestinians, at this time in history.

Land: A Place to Know the Abiding Presence of The Lord

In the biblical account, land is given by God to the people Israel. This land was promised to the descendants of Abraham and Sarah. This land was to be the place in which God’s people were to keep God’s covenant, live according to God’s will, and be a light to the nations. “If you obey my voice and keep my covenant, you shall be my treasured possession out of all the peoples. Indeed the whole earth is mine, but you shall be for me a priestly kingdom and a holy nation” (Ex. 19:5–6).

In the biblical account, the land is integral to the responsibility of the ancient people Israel. The land is given not just as a place to live, but primarily as the place in which the people Israel can live out the covenant and carry out God’s commandments. The concrete gift of land, as presented in the biblical text, comes less with rights than with distinctive responsibilities. The gift of the land is conditional upon the following of God’s way. The Scriptures warn repeatedly that failure to do so will result in God casting the people out of the land (cf. Lev. 20:22; Deut. 8: 11–20, 30: 15–18, etc.).

The promised gift of land abides even through the Babylonian exile, when the people are removed from the territory of ancient Israel as an act of God’s judgment on the people’s failure to be faithful to God. Thus the Scriptures also speak of this land in proclaiming the return of God’s people from exile; the land is central to the redemption of God’s people. God found this particular people “in a desert land, in a howling wilderness” (Deut. 32:10), and appointed them to be the Lord’s people. God gives this particular land to them, in which they are to fulfill the divine will, in order to establish the Sovereignty of God on earth.

Central to the meaning of land—before, during, and after the exile—is that it is a place to know the abiding presence of the Lord. It is a place in which concretely to experience God’s presence. In the words of Christian biblical scholar Walter Brueggemann,

The land for which Israel yearns and which it remembers is never unclaimed space but always a place with Yahweh, a place well filled with memories of life with him and promise from him and vows to him. It is land that provides the central assurance to Israel of its historicity, that it will be and always must be concerned with actual rootage in a place which is a repository for commitment and therefore identity.

The Reformed Tradition Affirms: God, Peoples, Lands

There is a strong Christian tradition that has understood God’s gift of land in more spiritual or metaphorical terms. They assert that with the coming of the new covenant, God is no longer concerned with physical land, but with the human heart, and not solely with one particular people, but instead with all of humankind. God’s gift of this particular land to this particular people is seen by these interpreters as a demonstration of God’s gift of the potential for life, for fruitfulness, and for the pursuit of holiness and justice to all people, in all places.
Reformed and Presbyterian interpreters have usually understood the promise of “land” primarily as an earthly and historical reality. The foundational events of Christian faith also took place in this land; it is here that the Word became flesh in Jesus of Nazareth, a Jew who lived in this same land, then under Roman occupation. History and the concrete material world are foundational to our understanding of God’s work of salvation. In biblical perspective, life in relation with God always involves actual human communities in concrete places, struggling to live within God’s kingdom.

Both the Old and New Testaments are clear: God alone owns the land; all others are stewards acting on God’s behalf. “The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it” (Ps. 24:1). The earth is God’s creation, and God alone is holy and to be worshipped. Other texts go on to suggest that “in the end” God will create a “new heaven” and a “new earth,” in order to accomplish God’s own intentions (Isa.65:17; 66:22; Rev. 21:1–5). No one but God has everlasting ownership of land on this earth, and because God owns the land, no one has ever been more than caretakers of the land of Israel, or of any other land. At the same time, God’s people, whether we mean the particular Jewish people or are speaking more universally, are not less than stewards. God has given the land as a trust for safekeeping, a place for responsibility, and an arena in which to deal justly with one another and with the land (Ex. 19:6).

“… to provide for those who mourn in Zion … (Isa. 61:3).

God, Peoples, Land, and the Present

The connection between the Jewish people and the particular land of Israel has been expressed in every generation of Jews, in liturgy and poetry, in daily prayers and charitable giving, and in periodic movements to return. Their connection with this land has been, and remains, a part of Jewish self-understanding, from antiquity through today. Though there are Jews who do not find this connection to either the biblical land or the modern state essential to their self-understanding, for the great majority of Jews the biblical land, the State of Israel, and Jewish identity are inextricably intertwined. At the same time, there are others whose identity is inextricably intertwined with this particular land: the Palestinians who have raised families, farmed crops, and lived out their hopes and dreams on this land for centuries.

In order to understand contemporary Jewish identity theologically in interfaith relationship, one must understand this ongoing relationship between Jewish peoplehood and land. To make an effort for understanding does not necessarily imply agreement or support.

Most Jews understand that the land of biblical Israel and the modern State of Israel are two distinct realities: the state is a contemporary secular and political entity, whereas the land is the geographic place promised and given by God in the Torah, the boundaries of which are not exactly defined. Nevertheless, the two are closely related elements of Jewish peoplehood.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms the ongoing covenantal relationship between God and the Jewish people, and the continuing commitment of Jewish men and women to live out God’s will in daily life, for the sake of fulfilling God’s purpose for all humanity. Yet it is difficult for Christians to understand how a modern state can play a role for Jews, similar to the role of the ancient land, in the fulfillment of this covenant. In light of Christian experience through time, it is difficult for us to accord a contemporary state spiritual or religious significance.

While we affirm that God’s gift of land was, like the incarnation, particular and concrete, we also give thanks to God as the giver of the potential for life, fruitfulness and justice to all of humanity in all lands. God’s gift of this particular land, and the potential and responsibility that goes with that gift, pertains both to the Jews and to the Palestinian people who live along side each other in what was the ancient, biblical land of promise. Both peoples have claims on the same land. Jews and Palestinians give voice to incompatible historical narratives and political claims, each assumed to be “correct” by its narrators. What is not often clearly said in the midst of the conflict is that both people, in different ways, are recipients of God’s gift and responsibility. The tradition of God’s gift of land in the biblical account does not resolve this conflict, or provide any basis by which to settle modern territorial disputes. Neither the Israeli state nor the Palestinian authorities has a divine right to the land.

Christian Engagement with the Land: Theological Errors to Avoid

A wide-spread, traditional interpretation of Scripture has argued that, because the Jews rejected Jesus, God rejected the Jews, put the church in the place of the Jewish people as God’s chosen ones, and cast them out of the land. This is Supersessionism, the teaching that Christians have superseded Jews, that Christianity has taken the place of Judaism in God’s plan and favor. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has clearly rejected this supersessionist teaching, affirming that “the church, elected in Jesus Christ, has been engrafted into the people of God, established by the covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Therefore, Christians have not replaced Jews.”

A minority of modern Christian interpreters attributes the creation of the modern State of Israel directly to God, and sees the ingathering of Jews to that state as a fulfillment of prophecy, or as the beginning of the end times. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has rejected such dispensationalist biblical interpretations, which purport to discern the time and order of God’s future activity. Presbyterian are also wary of attributing too much theological significance to a state, rejecting with Barmen “the false doctrine, as though the state, over and beyond its special commission, should and could become the single and totalitarian order of human life, thus fulfilling the church’s vocation as well.”

Presbyterian commitments to justice and peace for Palestinians and Israelis alike can only stand if we base these commitments on strong support for justice for all people. This means that, in our work for Israeli-Palestinian peace, we must be sure to seek justice and security for both peoples. We must also reject and not make use of the history of Christian anti-Judaism and all of the stereotypes and prejudices that accompany it. Likewise, we must reject and not make use of Arab or Palestinians stereotypes and prejudice.

Whenever our critique of the Israeli-Palestinian situation employs stereotypes, we cloud complicated issues with the rhetoric of ignorance, subliminal prejudices, or the language of hate. Such sources and ideas fail to tell the truth. Such failure to tell the truth undermines the church’s advocacy for peace and justice.

Likewise, characterizations of Zionism that distort that movement can all too easily demonize Jews. The origins, development, and practices of Zionism and its relationship to the realities of the Israeli-Palestinian situation are very complex. Characterizations of Zionism that distort that movement can all too easily demonize Jews. Many Israelis working passionately for peace in the Middle East are motivated by forms of Zionism. When Zionism is presented as monolithic or univocal, or solely as an extension of European colonialism and a result of anti-Semitism, the Zionist movement’s history, internal debates, and ethical concerns are distorted.

Critique of the state of Israel and its policies is certainly legitimate and is not, in itself, anti-Jewish or anti-Semitic. It is common among Jews and Christians; Israelis, Palestinians and Americans. However, critique by Christians must take care that the tone of such criticism not become a denunciation of Judaism or the Jewish people. Polemic that identifies Israeli officials with Jewish authorities in the time of Jesus is especially problematic, and clouds an accurate understanding of the current situation. In addition, citizens in democracies such as the State of Israel and the United States are responsible before God for the actions of their governments. The citizens of the State of Israel, not the Jewish people as a whole, are responsible for the conduct of Israeli state policy.

The Exodus narrative is a story of God’s liberation for all oppressed people and is the central narrative of salvation in the Old Testament. Some Christians reflect on their experience as an oppressed people and their liberation in light of the experience of ancient Israel. Broad theological use of the Exodus narrative does not abrogate its continuing centrality in the faith and self-understanding of the Jewish people. The biblical stories of liberation, like those of God’s gift of land, are at one and the same time particular narratives regarding God’s relationship with the Jewish people, and also descriptions of God’s intention to free and provide a home for all peoples. In claiming the Exodus story, Christians should avoid use of the Exodus story that identifies Jews in general as the oppressors in that narrative.

Further, responsible theological critique of state policies should not characterize a whole people as oppressors or “Christ-killers.” Such a characterization of the situation can easily sound like an echo of the classic anti-Jewish accusation that all Jews everywhere are guilty of killing Christ. For Jews this is terrifying, because the narrative of the passion and crucifixion has been used as a theological basis for the ghettoization, denigration, and killing of Jews for nearly twenty centuries. At the same time, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must remain attentive to Palestinian and other Middle East Christians within its own life as well as in the Middle East as they speak theologically about what is happening to them.

God, Peoples, Land, the Present: Living With Our Neighbors

Clearly, the relationships of Presbyterians (or any Christians) and Jews should neither depend on, nor dictate, particular positions regarding the Israeli-Palestinian situation or its resolution. Our relationships with Jewish neighbors do not necessitate approval of Israeli state policy. Speaking out respectfully against actions of Israeli authorities and groups, or of Palestinian entities, is to be expected among Christians and Jews. Disagreements about the dynamics and possible solutions of the Israeli-Palestinian situation are to be expected as well. Jews and Presbyterians may be surprised by the similarity of their critiques of the State of Israel’s or Palestinians actions as well as by their shared hopes for the aspirations of Palestinians and Israelis alike.

As PC(USA) Christians live in relationship with Jews, questions regarding our understandings of land, and of the politics of the Israeli-Palestinian situation will be central. In order to build relationships of respect and honest understanding with our Jewish neighbors, Presbyterians must be willing and prepared to talk with them about our concerns and questions regarding the State of Israel, its relations with Palestinians and other neighbors, and the land. Presbyterians must also be willing to listen to their expressions of attachment to Israel (both the land and the modern state), their understanding of the biblical promise of land, and the ways that the State of Israel speaks to them of responsibility, justice, and hope.

EVANGELISM

“… the promise is for you, for your children, and for all who are far away, everyone whom the Lord … calls to him …” (Acts 2:39).
The Church is called to tell all people everywhere the good news of salvation by the grace of God through faith in Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. In the midst of a world of death and decay, the Church witnesses to the reality of God’s love revealed in Jesus Christ through its proclamation of the gospel and the character of its transformed life. The Church’s incarnational witness has both personal and social implications. The community of faith declares the mighty acts of God, pointing others to Christ rather than to itself. “Evangelism is joyfully sharing the good news of the sovereign love of God and calling all people to repentance, to personal faith in Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord, to active membership in the church, and to obedient service in the world.”

The church’s evangelistic task is to be witnesses, teachers, practitioners, and sharers, who engage in the struggles of life and extend to others the invitation to become Christ’s disciples. Unfortunately, the history of Christian mission includes some examples of evangelization carried out with little regard for the people to whom the gospel was proclaimed, in ways that have been aggressive, disrespectful, and damaging. Even so, Christian proclamation of the gospel has attempted to be faithful to “the Great Commission” that we follow Jesus into all the world, inviting all people everywhere to become Christ’s faithful disciples.

In recent decades, Presbyterians have become increasingly aware of two new challenges to evangelism: the secularization of the culture and the religiously plural character of American society. North America is a mission field, and churches can no longer depend on the natural entrance of people into the community of Christian faith. These realities confront the church with new questions about the appropriate character and means of Christian proclamation.

How should the gospel be shared with Jews? The New Testament makes it clear that Jews are not empty vessels, without God, who must be filled with Christianity in order to be restored to divine favor. “I ask then, has God rejected his people? By no means! … So I ask, have they stumbled so as to fall? By no means! … As regards election they are beloved … that they too may now receive mercy” (Rom. 11:1, 11, 28, 31). With Paul, we affirm these things, but we also join our voices to Paul’s to affirm that these things are a mystery, and to confess, “O the depth of the riches and wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and how inscrutable his ways! … For from him and through him and to him are all things” (Rom. 11:33, 36).

God remains faithful to the Jews; God remains faithful to Christians. As a people, Jews remain faithful to the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; the Church remain faithful to the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob whom we know in Emmanuel, Jesus Christ. As two peoples who are known and loved by God and who know and love the one God, Christians and Jews are therefore called to be faithful to one another as children of the covenant.

One mark of Christian fidelity to Jews is honest sharing of the faith that is in us. Christians bear witness to Christ because brothers and sisters who live together in integrity do not withhold their deepest convictions from one another. Jews and Christians are called to live in open relationships of mutual witness in which beliefs and hopes are shared in love. Christians and Jews speak to one another, listen to one another, and learn from one another. And together, Jews and Christians bear witness to the world, showing in word and deed the faithfulness of the one God.

Mutual witness goes beyond formal dialogue to patterns of shared life in which conversation, cooperation, and collaboration develop between churches and synagogues, rabbis and ministers, individual Christians and Jews. It includes mutual disclosure of the ways God is known in the lives of both peoples, respectful listening to and learning from one another. It embraces both mutual affirmation and, when necessary, mutual questioning and correction.

While Christian witness should extend to all peoples, it should not specifically target Jews for pointed and deceptive strategies of proselytism. Especially to be avoided are attempts to present Christian faith in Jewish guise, duplicating Jewish liturgies and practices while avoiding or marginalizing distinctively Christian sacraments and symbols. Faithful, authentic witness to the gospel must always be both truthful and modest. Christian love can never be a Trojan horse for aggressive proselytism, and words of Christian proclamation cannot be used as weapons to coerce conversion. With Jews and all other people, Christians should always be prepared to give “an accounting for the hope that is in [us]; yet do it with gentleness and reverence” (1 Pet. 3:15, 16).

Yet persons who come to Christian faith from Jewish backgrounds must not be asked to deny their Jewish heritage, even though from a Jewish perspective they are no longer religiously Jewish. In the first century of the church, it became clear that Gentiles did not have to become Jews in order to become Christians. It would also be a denial of the gospel if in the twenty-first century, Jews had to become Gentiles in order to become Christians. Yet Christian communities and all who confess faith in Christ should make clear the Lord to whom they belong, and publicly profess their Christian faith in work, liturgy, and life. Because Jews find it difficult to understand how Christian converts from Judaism continue to claim their Jewish heritage, Christians and Jews can engage in careful conversation in order to explore their incommensurate understandings of this matter.

Some Christians and Jews find themselves in “interreligious marriages.” For a long time the history of Jewish-Christian separation, suspicion, and antagonism made it difficult for both Jewish and Christian partners, as well as their families and... religious communities, to discover how each partner can live out their faith with integrity. Now intermarriage between Jews and Christians is increasingly common. Too often, the difficulties are such that both partners drift into “no religion.” The birth of children presents parents with the dilemma of how they can share religious faith within the family. We encourage families to work with minister and rabbi so that the children are not deprived of any engagement with Judaism or Christianity or fall into an easy syncretism. “Interreligious marriages” pose challenges to synagogues and churches, and especially to Christian and Jewish spouses and their families. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should see this complex matter as an occasion for intensive dialogue with the Jewish community.

PARTNERS IN HOPE

“I am about to do a new thing …. do you not perceive it?” (Isa. 43:19).

The relationship between Christianity and Judaism, Christians and Jews is not simply a concept. Theological understanding is essential, but theology is never mere theory, abstracted from life. Paul’s letter to the Romans is not an academic essay, coolly considering the theological question of Jews who have not professed faith in Jesus as Messiah and Lord. Paul grapples with this matter that touches him personally and deeply:

I have great sorrow and unceasing anguish in my heart. For I could wish that I myself were accursed and cut off from Christ for the sake of my people, my kindred according to the flesh. They are Israelites, and to them belong the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, the worship, and the promises; to them belong the patriarchs, and from them, according to the flesh, comes the Messiah, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen. (Rom. 9:2–5)

Christians are called to know Jewish brothers and sisters, to listen and learn from them in the sharing of faith and faithfulness, and to give thanks for their living testimony to the enduring fulfillment of God’s gracious promises. In our worship and personal prayers we can join voices throughout the church, praying …

God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,
Father of us all, whose Son Jesus was born a Jew, was circumcised, and was dedicated in the Temple:
Thank you for patriarchs and prophets and righteous rabbis, whose teaching we revere, whose law is our law fulfilled in Jesus Christ.
Never let us forget that we, who are your people, are by faith children of Abraham, bound in one family with Jewish brothers and sisters, who also serve your promise;
through Jesus Christ, our Master and Messiah. Amen. (The Worshipbook)

Almighty God, you are the one true God, and have called forth people of faith in every time and place.
Your promises are sure and true.
We bless you for your covenant given to Abraham and Sarah, that you keep even now with the Jews.
We rejoice that you have brought us into covenant with you by the coming of your Son, Jesus Christ, himself a Jew, nurtured in the faith of Israel.
We praise you that you are faithful to covenants made with us and Jewish brothers and sisters, that together we may serve your will,
and come at last to your promised peace. Amen. (Book of Common Worship)

May Jews and Christians join in voicing our foundational affirmation, “The LORD is our God, the LORD alone,” in mutual witness to the world.

iv. This claim is made because of the unique history between Christianity and Judaism. The General Assembly has called for a similar exploration of the theological relationship between Christianity and Islam. That relationship reflects a different history and is in its beginning stages. Other religions have their own unique relationship to Christianity—each relationship has its own integrity and requires particular attention.

The reference is to biblical theology; Brueggemann has made clear more recently that this does not confer a “supernatural right” to land in the midst of the realities of political life today, and amidst the rights of others. He says, “What [Israel] claimed to be supernatural does not and cannot carry weight in the world of political-military reality.” The Christian Century, January 2009.

The Theological Declaration of Barmen was written by a group of church leaders in Germany to help Christians withstand the challenges of the Nazi party and of the so-called “German Christians,” a popular movement that saw no conflict between Christianity and the ideals of Hitler’s National Socialism. It was the response of some Reformed and Lutheran churches in Germany to what they believed was the one most critical issue in their situation in 1933, the relation between loyalty to Jesus Christ and loyalty to the state.

Item 10-01

On Recognizing Bloomfield College as a Racial Ethnic College—From the Presbytery of Newark.

The Presbytery of Newark overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the General Assembly Mission Council to do the following:

1. Recognize Bloomfield College, Bloomfield, New Jersey, as a racial ethnic college.

2. Admit Bloomfield College to the list of schools and colleges supported through the Christmas Joy Offering.

Comment: In Sections 8.3 and 8.4 of the 1983 Articles of Agreement between the PCUS and the UPCUSA, a commitment was made to support those schools and institutions “that historically have served Black Americans and those serving other racial ethnic groups.” The General Assembly Mission Council was asked to propose ways in which this responsibility could be fulfilled. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) related schools currently listed as racial ethnic include Barber Scotia, Cook Native American Ministries, Johnson C. Smith University, Knoxville College, Menaul School, Presbyterian Pan American School, and Stillman College. The Christmas Joy Offering was established and has for many years been divided between recognized racial ethnic schools and retired church workers with underfunded pensions.

Many colleges and secondary schools within the United States today accept racial ethnic students and some, like Bloomfield, have a majority of racial ethnic students. While Bloomfield’s recruitment and admission policies should be acknowledged and applauded, the specific nurturing and confidence-building environments provided by the currently recognized racial ethnic schools to their students do not appear to have the same curricular focus in schools such as Bloomfield.

We advise that the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) be asked to develop a brief strategy report that articulates those elements in racial ethnic schools that have effectively generated new and positive racial ethnic leadership within our church and our communities. Bloomfield College should be encouraged to reapply if they feel they meet the criteria once those attributes have been more clearly defined.

Rationale

“For nearly 145 years, Bloomfield College has embraced a student body that is mainly composed of racial and ethnic minorities. The college’s students are drawn from the urban centers of northern New Jersey, as well as from surrounding states, and from more than 50 countries. Fifty percent of the college’s students are African American and African Caribbean; 19 percent Hispanic; and 3 percent Asian. Thirty percent of students are over 25 years old; 65 percent are women; and more than 54 percent are the first in their families to attend college. Thirty-six percent of students are from families with an income of less than $20,000 per year; and 90 percent receive some form of financial aid.

Bloomfield College is chartered by the State of New Jersey and accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. The nursing program is accredited by the New Jersey Board of Nursing and the Commission on Collegiate Nursing Education. The education program is accredited by the national Teacher Education Accreditation Council.

Bloomfield College is ranked by U.S. News and World Report as the seventh most diverse campus among National Liberal Arts Colleges. The college is recognized by the federal government as a predominantly black institution and is one of 200 selected nationally to participate in the federally funded Ronald E. McNair program. The McNair program prepares students from disadvantaged backgrounds for success in doctoral studies. Additionally, Bloomfield College is one of only nine schools in New Jersey that takes part in the Louis Stokes Alliances for Minority Participation program, a National Science Foundation funded program that promotes minority advancement in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics.

Bloomfield College is the only Presbyterian–related college in the Synod of the Northeast. Founded as a seminary to prepare German immigrants for ministry in the Presbyterian church, Bloomfield College has continued its tradition of access, inclusiveness, and diversity. The college is now a comprehensive liberal arts institution serving more than 2,100 degree-seeking students. In addition, 1,600 students from around the world are instructed through noncredit professional training and continuing education programs. The mission of Bloomfield College is to prepare students to attain academic, personal, and professional excellence in a multicultural and global society.

Bloomfield students acquire a personal education that is both broad based and practical. Community service has been central to a Bloomfield College education since its founding. The required Sophomore Core Program teaches social responsibility through community projects. As a matter of fact, Bloomfield College was recently honored by the Corporation for National Community Service as a leader among institutions of higher education for its support of volunteering, service-learning, and civic engagement. The college was also admitted to the President’s Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll.
Bloomfield College continues its commitment to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through its partnership with the Synod of the Northeast and through the employment of a college chaplain who is a Presbyterian teaching elder. Additionally, the college partners with the Westminster Foundation Advisory Board, which was established in 1998 to support the work of the chaplain and to strengthen the college’s Presbyterian heritage.

The northeastern region of the United States continues to be a center of the country’s growing diversity, yet there is currently no Presbyterian-related racial ethnic college from the region included in the church’s Christmas Joy Offering. Of the non-racial ethnic Presbyterian-related colleges, Bloomfield College has the largest percentage of minority students. Participation in the Christmas Joy Offering will help Bloomfield College continue to provide a greater access to students who may not have considered, yet deserve, a college education. At the same time, inclusion in the offering will help ensure an ongoing Presbyterian presence in the lives of these gifted children of God.

The potential economic benefit of a college degree is greater now than at any other time in our history. It is critical that the young men and women of New Jersey’s urban areas are afforded this opportunity. At Bloomfield College, these students experience an environment that allows them to grow academically, socially, and spiritually while in pursuit of a college degree.

This overture is offered as an expression of the hope that the relationship between college and church shall continue and be strengthened in ways that enhance the unique mission and role of both the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Bloomfield College.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 10-01 be disapproved.

Rationale

In Sections 8.3 and 8.4 of the 1983 Articles of Agreement between the PCUS and the UPCUSA, a commitment was made to support those schools and institutions “that historically have served Black Americans and those serving other racial ethnic groups.” The General Assembly Mission Council was asked to propose ways in which this responsibility could be fulfilled. While Bloomfield’s recruitment and admission policies should be acknowledged and applauded, the specific nurturing and confidence-building environments provided by the currently recognized racial ethnic schools to their students do not appear to have the same curricular focus in schools such as Bloomfield.

We advise that the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) be asked to develop a brief strategy report that articulates those elements in racial ethnic schools that have effectively generated new and positive racial ethnic leadership within our church and our communities. ACREC & ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advise that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 10-01.

Rationale

The 1983 Articles of Agreement contains the following two sections:

- Section 8.3—“finding ways to assure the funding and operational needs of schools and other … racial ethnic groups.”
- Section 8.4—“… Consistent with the dire need for racial ethnic church leadership, the General Assembly Council shall propose to the General Assembly ways whereby the General Assembly shall be able to fulfill its responsibility for education through colleges and secondary schools and for meeting the operational and developmental needs of those Presbyterian schools that historically have served Black Americans and those serving other racial ethnic groups.”

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACRE) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) sees that the impact of this action would drastically affect the racial ethnic and disadvantaged communities in the following ways:

- The racial ethnic community would lose the support that it is currently receiving for racial ethnic colleges and schools. These institutions have served functions that in this day and time cannot and are not attractively or successfully addressed in any other ways.
- The racial ethnic colleges and schools are still addressing the needs of first generation college educated students. It is true that mainline colleges and institutions are seeking to reach out but the uniquely supportive and educational needs of some to many racial ethnic students are uniquely met in the intentional framework of the environment of the racial ethnic colleges and institutions.
- Historically, the institutions have played a major role in evangelizing, recruiting, and developing leadership in the racial ethnic community and building racial ethnic churches. We can make direct ties between the decrease in membership in our church and leadership of some racial ethnic groups to the withdrawal and demise of support for racial ethnic schools and institutions that essentially educated Presbyterians as a way of church building.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 10-01

Comment on Item 10-01—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) received an overture from the Presbytery of Newark on recognizing Bloomfield College as a racial ethnic college. The assembly referred the action to the General Assembly Mission Council for consideration in a way that would not diminish the funding to other institutions.

The General Assembly Mission Council appointed a Racial Ethnic Education Support Work Group. In its report to the 217th General Assembly (2006) it stated that educational guidelines and standards would be developed for schools who receive Christmas Joy Offering funds and recommended that until such guidelines and standards were established that the Christmas Joy Offering continue to be used exclusively for the historically Presbyterian racial ethnic institutions with whom the GAMC has traditionally covenanted. The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved the Racial Ethnic Education Support Work Group’s recommendations (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 1081–88).

Institutional Standards for Participating in the Christmas Joy Offering were developed and approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008). The distribution of the Christmas Joy Offering did not change beyond the list of Historic Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPREIs).

The list of Historic Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions is maintained by the GAMC, through its Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area through a covenant process with the General Assembly. The Partnership Covenant between the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was approved at the 219th General Assembly (2010) (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 1158–62).

If the General Assembly wishes to once again consider adding Bloomfield College to this list, a referral to the GAMC for study would be appropriate as in previous years. Bloomfield College in Bloomfield, New Jersey, was founded in 1868 as a Presbyterian seminary, the German Theological School of Newark, to prepare German immigrants for the ministry. In its almost 140-year history, the college has changed in response to the changing needs of the community around it.

All Presbyterian colleges enroll racial ethnic students. Bloomfield does not identify itself as a racial ethnic institution, though it does have a large enrollment of racial ethnic students.

The Racial Ethnic Education Support Work Group recommended no change in distribution of the Christmas Joy Offering. The work group found there to be a subtle but, nonetheless, significant difference between being a racial ethnic college, i.e., a college whose mission and identity specifically involves educating racial ethnic students, and being a college that welcomes such students in addition to others. As a Presbyterian college, Bloomfield is eligible to receive certain forms of scholarship assistance from the denomination.

With respect to receiving Christmas Joy Offering funds, the General Assembly Mission Council refers commissioners to the recommendation of the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force, which proposes a change in the way Christmas Joy Offering receipts would be distributed beginning in 2014.

On Instituting a Special Offering Designated to Native American Ministry for a Period of Three Years—From the Presbytery of Inland Northwest.

The Presbytery of Inland Northwest overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to institute and support a request for a Native American Special Offering for three successive years following a period of time to develop appropriate materials for this special offering. The General Assembly urges its members, congregations, presbyteries, synods, and national staff units, including the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, to study this matter and to seek appropriate ways to support this offering plan. It is further recommended that a report of the progress of this fund be made to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Comment: “We ask the GAMC staff to work with this group to ensure there are ways for individuals and organizations to designate gifts toward this cause.”

Rationale

The 219th General Assembly (2010) voted to cease National Mission Partnership Funding beginning in 2014. This removes funding from the Native American Consulting Committee (NACC), which coordinates/oversees Native American ministries. This reduced funding impacts NACC and Native American congregations in eight synods. These reductions have been further impacted by the elimination of the full-time Native American staff person in Louisville. The NACC needs time to consider ways to bring vitality to Native American congregations and to exercise options in the new environment. This will be done by challenging Native American stewardship, providing for training for congregations, and curriculum that includes a cultural dimension. Hopefully, development of new funding sources will aid with self-determination for Native American congregations.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 10-02.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns is well aware of the Churchwide Policy Statement adopted in 1979 with the Native American Consulting Committee. This historical agreement has been the sacredness among Native people to feel the inclusion and support by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In the area of Mutuality in Mission it states: “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through its agencies and governing boards will make it possible for Native Americans to participate and contribute fully in the total life of the church in order that the whole church may be enriched and benefit from partnership and involvement in the larger body of Christ. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will develop ways to include Native Americans in its decision-making process, especially in those areas that affect the lives and destinies of Native Americans.”

There is a dire need to continue our ministry among Native Americans so the PC(USA) will seek to understand Native American culture and respect the philosophy, values, gifts, and heritage of Native Americans in order that Presbyterians may learn from Native American lifestyles and benefit from fellowship with them. In order for this to be possible, funding must happen.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 10-02

Comment on Item 10-02—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The General Assembly Mission Council’s Office of Native American Congregational Support, located in Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW, enables the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to respond to Native American congregational issues, empowers Native American Presbyterians to participate actively in the mission of the PC(USA), facilitates the church’s task of evangelism and leadership development, and serves as a liaison to ecumenical and denominational entities in relation to issues affecting Native American Presbyterian churches and chapels.
Item 10-02 expresses concern that “reductions have been further impacted by the elimination of the full-time Native American staff person in Louisville.” This concern is not accurate. The GAMC continues to support Native American congregations and a three-quarter time staff person works approximately thirty hours per week, resourcing Native American congregations and communities of faith. This staff person is deployed, thus not requiring her to move to Louisville, Kentucky, but allowing her to engage in ministry out in the church, where she can provide direct support to Native American churches and chapels.

This member of the staff visits worshipping communities on reservations and in the city, supports lay leaders as they seek to develop ministries with Native American youth, travels to Louisville and meets with the grant team, which provides grants to Native American congregations engaged in mission and ministry projects, and she works in partnership with mid councils and other GAMC offices to nurture strong and growing churches and empower Native American leaders in the church. In partnership with the Native American Consulting Committee (NACC), GAMC staff identify social justice inequities surrounding race, class, and gender in the church and work to find ways to address and improve these concerns. Staff also supports Native American Presbyterian Women, Native American Presbyterian Men, and the American Indian Youth Council.

In partnership with NACC, the GAMC recently held a Native American Consultation in Phoenix, Arizona, January 24 through January 26, 2012. Pastors, elders, and leaders throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) gathered to discuss the challenges and opportunities Native American Presbyterians have in connection with their own congregations and the larger church.

During the three-day event, the group of about forty people was asked by NACC members to break into smaller discussion groups and focus on obstacles and solutions for three key areas: leadership development, denominational relationships, and financial realities.

As for the advisability of an additional special offering, commissioners are referred to the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force report. The task force has data showing that the church will not support another special offering.

There are serious challenges in bringing vitality to Native American and other congregations in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The GAMC refers commissioners to new objectives and directional goals for new and existing worshipping communities in its Mission Work Plan 2013–2016.

On Supporting Young Adults in Mission and Leadership Development for the Future of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—From the Presbytery of Western New York.

The Presbytery of Western New York overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the General Assembly Mission Council to provide budgetary support to those individuals called by God and the church to serve in witness and mission through the Young Adult Volunteer program of the World Mission Office, in the amount of $10,000 for each young adult volunteer above and beyond what is currently budgeted for the Young Adult Volunteer program, to further enable their ability to serve nationally and internationally in the name of Jesus Christ through this ministry. These funds would go toward the alleviation of the annual living expenses of each young adult volunteer, including housing and utilities, health insurance, food, and transportation, as well as easing the emotional strain of living with debt. Each young adult volunteer would continue to personally raise financial support for her or his year of service, though toward a more attainable amount.

This request for funds is for up to 100 volunteers per year, not to exceed $1,000,000 annual total per YAV term (August–August). The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) shall review and evaluate this funding mandate every second General Assembly year (every fourth calendar year).

“In recognition of the new directional goal of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) regarding young adults, which includes reducing the funding responsibilities for individual young adult volunteers, the 220th General Assembly (2012) directs the GAMC to increase promotion of this vital and dynamic program to mid councils while encouraging mid councils to increase their mission funding by 10.01 percent beyond the Pentecost offering over the next five years, dedicated to inspiring, equipping, and connecting with young adults to further enable their ability to serve nationally and internationally in the name of Jesus Christ.”
We believe that God continues to call the church, and the PC(USA) in particular, to live into a bold vision of God’s presence and work in and for this creation. This vision calls God’s people to work toward living in faithful and loving relationship with all aspects of creation.

In the recent discussion of and emphasis on being mission-oriented peoples, congregations, and churches, it is to be noted that there is a program currently in place that, to date, has commissioned, sent out, and supported some 1,500 individuals over the past two decades. These mission volunteers have gone on to continued service both in the church as we know her, and in creating other faithful worshipping communities in the places in which they live, nationally and internationally. Through the Young Adult Volunteer program of the World Mission Office, individuals have effectively touched the lives of uncountable amounts of people living in the communities in which they have served with the love of God and the witness of God’s kingdom, which is a ministry to not only be continued but strengthened in the years to come.

The GAMC Deputy Executive Director of Mission recently shared a vision of planting and recognizing 1,001 new worshipping communities in the next ten years by raising up transformational leaders with the practice of compassionate, prophetic discipleship. Because of the nature of their service experiences, focusing on global discipleship in relevant and meaningful ways, young adult volunteers (YAVs) and YAV alumni are in a unique position to relate the good news of the gospel in their current local contexts in new, creative, and applicable ways, walking alongside the church in her work. Investing in this program is a step toward investing in the future of the church.

The World Mission Council has recently identified three critical global issues in realizing more fully the kingdom of God present in the world:

- We will identify and address the root causes of poverty, particularly as it impacts women and children.
- Together with other members of Christ’s body, we will share the good news of God’s love in Jesus Christ.
- We will engage in reconciliation amidst cultures of violence, including our own.

The Young Adult Volunteer program routinely orients its mission volunteers to be mindful of these realities in our world, particularly as they pertain to the communities in which they serve. They enter into their time of service with the desire to not only work to alleviate such realities, but through education and awareness, to address the systems and constructs that lead to such brokenness in the first place.

Members in and alumni of the Young Adult Volunteer program frequently go on to ministry in the church, both in traditional ways (seminary, church leadership, etc.) and in nontraditional ways (homeless shelters, counseling networks, etc.). Alumni of the YAV program engage society with a mindfulness toward intentional Christian community, simple living, faithful discernment, and active discipleship. This program truly embodies the phrase, “A year of service for a lifetime of change.”

Financial support for YAVs comes from multiple sources, including the sites they serve, and such support at every level is to be continued and encouraged. However, the ongoing ability of individuals and sites to supplement the financial requirements is decreasing. In such light, this becomes an opportunity for us to faithfully step alongside such resources, allowing the ministry and service they offer to continue in the gap.

In a society and economy where more and more individuals are leaving college and graduate work with financial burdens not seen before, as well as the inability of friends and family to give supportively at levels of the past, the increasing cost of entering into a year of service is becoming prohibitive. It behooves us, as the members of the church, to take steps to not only keep this opportunity in place, but to increase involvement in it, for the sake of the church, the culture in which she lives, and the present work of God’s kingdom.

COTE COMMENT ON ITEM 10-03

Comment on Item 10-03—From the Committee on Theological Education.

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to include offering $10,000 scholarships to young adult volunteers who choose to also attend a PC(USA) seminary after their year of service. The issues of seminarian debt is raised by the Special Committee on the Nature of the Church in the 21st Century in Recommendation 6.e. of their report.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 10-03

Comment on Item 10-03—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) is very appreciative to the Presbytery of Western New York for its support of the Young Adult Volunteer (YAV) program. Item 10-03, as proposed by the Presbytery of Western New York, has a significant financial impact: one million dollars in 2012 and again in 2013.
If approved by the General Assembly, this overture would require the elimination of multiple programs within the GAMC mission budget. The GAMC requests that the General Assembly disapprove Item 10-03 and respond to this request by drawing attention to the church-wide giving opportunities already in place to support the YAV program.

Rationale

The YAV program began in 1994 with goals “to identify, assess, recruit, prepare, and deploy a large number of Presbyterians for service and learning experiences in cross-cultural, cross-economic settings. … To assist individuals and congregations to understand our cultural captivity as U.S. citizens … to empower a new generation of Christian leadership for the church and for the world … and to evangelize and revitalize congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) …” for “… as many as one hundred young adults [to] be introduced to the 206th General Assembly— the vanguard of an undertaking aimed at nothing less than changing the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) …” (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 214).

More than 1,200 young adult volunteers have joined in national and international service and learning during the past eighteen years. As these young adults continue to mature and respond to God’s call for faithfulness and transformation, many become church and community leaders, committed to the missional values learned and practiced during their time as YAVs.

There are currently nine national YAV sites in cities around the U.S. and six international sites with global partners in other countries. The YAVs serve for one year with a commitment to spiritual growth, simple living, mission service and learning, vocational discernment, and leadership development.

In its 2013–16 Mission Work Plan, the GAMC has identified partnering and engaging with young adults (those 18–30 years old) as one of six strategic goals. Specifically, the GAMC is committed to inspiring young adults to participate in a season of service, as well as quadruple the number of young adults currently participating in ministries of the GAMC such as the YAV program.

The YAV program is currently funded through a combination of unrestricted contributions, endowments, 25 percent of the Pentecost Offering, grants from presbyteries and participating community agencies within the U.S., and fund raising on the part of YAV participants.

In a very real sense, the more that Presbyterians give, the more YAVs the GAMC will be able to support. An extra commitment opportunity account is available for support: #E049075. Funds given through this account are used for programmatic site support or to directly support young adult volunteers through grants for outstanding student loans, medical insurance, housing and food allowance, and travel costs. The YAV program needs the support of the whole church to expand this important ministry. The GAMC requests that the General Assembly respond to this overture by drawing attention to these giving opportunities.

On Maintaining the Integrity of the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh.

The Presbytery of Pittsburgh overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to amend the General Assembly Mission Council, Special Offerings Advisory Task Force, recommendations to:

1. restore program names and percentages in the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering,
2. maintain a separate Special Offering for Peacemaking.

Rationale

Our God is especially concerned with the plight of economically poor, oppressed, and marginalized people, and our denomination’s major response to this group is through the One Great Hour of Sharing (OGHS) offering ministries.

The One Great Hour of Sharing, received during Lent, has a sixty-three-year history as an ecumenical endeavor that now involves seven denominations and Church World Service, who respond to the world’s hungry, poor, home-
Congregational pastors indicate the OGHS has appeal because it is large, unifying, and more identifiable with disaster responses, self-development of people, and hunger relief. There is a feeling that OGHS is proactive and impactful. Pastors also noted that it is appealing to note that multiple denominations participate (from Alford Group Report, cited in Special Offerings Advisory Task Force [SOATF] report).

“The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force believes that God is calling PC(USA) to a new vision of missional generosity and commitment as a denomination. Special Offerings unite us in mission. Special Offerings allow churches of all sizes to participate in mission together. Special Offerings give opportunities for Presbyterians in every place to contribute as they are able. Special Offerings allow for churches and members to choose areas of passion and impact. Together, we can do more than any of us apart” (p. 2 of SOAFT report proper).

The current PC(USA) policy on Special Offerings (“Operating Guidelines for Special Offerings) states: “There will be no more than five churchwide Special Offerings in any given calendar year.”

“Everything boils down to need—we give where we feel called to help” (from Alford Group Report, cited in SOATF Report). Eighty-seven percent of pastors report that their congregations received the OGHS offering in 2011. Seventy-seven percent received the Christmas Joy Offering, 53 percent the Peacemaking Offering, and 42 percent the Pentecost Offering (from Alford Group Report, cited in SOATF report).

“Peacemaking is seen as ‘up and coming’ but could benefit from more specific interpretation” (from Alford Group Report, cited in SOATF Report).

The SOATF report states, “Aligning Special Offerings with the GAMC strategic planning process requires that the GAMC have flexibility for funding allocations within those priorities in accordance with the broad designations established for the Special Offerings.” (Page 9, GAMC, SOATF, recommendations).

Rationale for Restoring Program Names and Percentages

At present, the Special Offerings allow the people in the pews to distinguish which offerings and missions to support, based upon passionate interest, perceived need, and the impact of these individual ministries.

Most congregations support those offerings for which they feel an affinity, but few support all special offerings. Eighty-seven percent of congregations received the OGHS offering in 2011. Seventy-seven percent received the Christmas Joy Offering, 53 percent the Peacemaking Offering, and 42 percent the Pentecost Offering (From Alford Group Report, cited in SOATF report). These percentages reflect the high value Presbyterians hold for the One Great Hour of Sharing and its ministries, and indicate that there is no need to change the offering by removing the names of the ministries that it supports, or by eliminating the percentages directed to each of them.

Without program names and percentages, there’s a risk of creating a competitive spirit among and between mission programs of GAMC, thereby weakening and/or eliminating the ability of certain ministries to fulfill their commission. With the proposed arrangement, collaborative working relationships will almost certainly be challenged, if not doomed, as ministries fight with one another for funding.

By not including the specific names of the programs included in the OGHS, the possibility of programs being defunded becomes very real. While the report repeatedly states that it has no intention to defund existing ministries, it actually will, for by eliminating the Peacemaking Offering and adding “peacemaking” to the OGHS, all four ministries will be at least partially defunded.

By eliminating program names, and using instead “community development, disaster assistance, hunger ministries,” and the newly added “peacemaking,” runs the risk of all existing ministries being partially defunded or completely eliminated.

Additionally, there is no guarantee that the Peacemaking Offering revenue stream would transfer to the OGHS. Indeed, there is every likelihood that it will not.

At its core, this recommendation (eliminating program names and percentages from the OGHS) eliminates the right of the donor to give to specific programs, and gives denominational decision-makers the power to decide how to use the donors’ gifts without donor input.

Rationale for Maintaining a Separate Special Offering for Peacemaking

Fifty-eight percent of all congregations do not currently take all four special offerings. Additionally, the PC(USA)’s own “Operating Guidelines for Special Offerings” has for years stated, “There will be no more than five churchwide Special Offerings in any given calendar year.” Because of these two realities, there seems to be no harm in adding a fifth Special Offering (for World Mission), and then continuing to allow congregations to decide which of the five Special Offerings they wish to support. This is much simpler than the confusing recommendation in the Special Offering Advisory Task Force Report (eliminating the Peacemaking Offering, folding Peacemaking into the One Great Hour of Sharing, and then adding a new fourth offering for World Mission, to be taken on World Communion Sunday, when the Peacemaking Offering has traditionally been received).

Peacemaking is an entirely different topical program than the other programs of the OGHS. If peacemaking is included in the OGHS, this will prevent “the more specific interpretation” that the SOATF calls for in its report. Including Peacemaking in the OGHS destroys the programmatic unity of purpose historically affirmed by givers to the OGHS. With its purpose weakened, it is anticipated that receipts will decrease. Adding the proposed fourth recipient to OGHS weakens the offering’s identity as a Presbyterian way of caring for “the least of these:” the poor, the hungry, and victims of disaster, which is the clear purpose of the ministries of the OGHS.

While the report repeatedly states that it has no intention to defund existing ministries by eliminating the Peacemaking Offering and adding it to the OGHS, all four ministries will be at least partially defunded.

There is no guarantee that the Peacemaking revenue stream would transfer to the OGHS. Indeed, there is every likelihood that it will not.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-05—from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that this overture be approved with an amendment to Recommendation 2., as noted below: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“2. maintain a separate Special Offering for Peacemaking[.] or retain its identity within a combined World Communion Sunday offering season, such as through a World Communion Peacemaking and International Mission Offering.”

Rationale

Item 10-05 correctly notes that the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force recommendations would not only eliminate the Peacemaking Offering but, by combining peacemaking with the three One Great Hour of Sharing humanitarian assistance offerings, effectively confuse the long-established mission of that offering as well. We feel that the Peacemaking Offering should be retained in a clearly identifiable form, for its threefold purpose, and in its general season, around World Communion.

The church is built on memory and relationships. Each offering has developed a community of support over time. Changing any of the offerings threatens to uproot a constituency of support. In the case of One Great Hour of Sharing, that constituency is in fact ecumenical, and changing its content would necessitate a new Presbyterian-specific interpretative framework. Of the other denominations that have long been partners in One Great Hour of Sharing, some do not use percentage designations because all their funds go to church world service for work similar to that in our three designated programs.

In the case of the Peacemaking Offering, the 219th General Assembly (2010) approved a six-year process of churchwide discernment to reexamine the place and meaning of peacemaking in our church. It noted a substantial Peacemaking Program developed over thirty years and the impact of the last ten years of war in Iraq and Afghanistan as factors for Presbyterians to consider in light of their own convictions regarding violence and nonviolence. Restructuring the Peacemaking Offering would preempt this work of discernment insofar as it would remove institutional support and visibility.

This overture uses some of the good data from the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force Report but differs in its interpretation and application of that data. The Peacemaking Offering, in particular, has remained reasonably stable at approximately $1,000,000 per year since 1990 (it had been higher) and was up slightly last year, despite the lack of a program coordinator since 2010. The Special Offerings Task Force recommends retaining the threefold form of the offering: percentages for congregational, presbytery, and General Assembly level use, but generalizing their purpose. Yet the form of the Peacemaking Offering matched its purpose; encouraging specific peacemaking activities at the several council “levels” of the church.

The Special Offerings Task Force makes a number of other recommendations concerning the administration of offerings and fundraising more generally, including the use of direct mail, which has focused on World Mission. Data from the Presbyterian Panel show that Presbyterians favor mission at home by a substantial margin; hence the challenge of fundraising for international mission is understandable. The solution to that problem, however, need not unduly disrupt other offerings and the relationships on which they depend.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEMS 10-05 and 10-06

Comment on Items 10-05 and 10-06—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Special Offerings are an important part of the connectional fabric that unites Presbyterians together in mission. In recent years, declining receipts have weakened this bond, and diminished the impact of Presbyterian witness.

Every four years, Special Offerings are reviewed to ensure that they are well-coordinated, and relevant to PC(USA) mission. Concerned by the continued decline in Special Offerings, the General Assembly, in response to the quadrennial review of 2008, directed that the next four year review be enlarged to include:

- A review of the possible role and functions of Special Offerings;
- Ways to encourage and expand the role of Special Offerings as a connective bond in the church;
- Identification of what Special Offerings can do best and what steps need to be taken in order to enable them to do that well;
- Clarification and simplification of the process for considering programs and causes to be included in Special Offerings.

This was in addition to their primary assignment—to provide for review and evaluation of the causes supported by churchwide special offerings, and to consider new causes in light of established criteria.

The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force has spent the four years investigating the current context, and has proposed significant changes in the way Presbyterians engage Special Offerings in support of the mission of the church. Their recommendations should be carefully considered.

The central focus of their recommendations is that the decline in Special Offerings can be reversed. The task force calls the church to embrace a goal of $20 million in annual receipts by 2020. The GAMC has responded to this call, embracing the goal, and is encouraging the General Assembly to approve it also. The task force is recommending substantive changes in order to meet that goal. As with any call for change, some are concerned about the impact of that change on existing ministries. These are the factors that commissioners will have to weigh as they discern where God is leading the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). As an important step in that discernment, the GAMC urges commissioners to read the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force report firsthand, rather than relying upon accounts from others as to what the report recommends. Reversing the decline, and reaching $20 million in annual receipts by 2020 is too important to be left to secondhand information on what the report recommends.

Among the clarifications that should be made to the overtures received thus far:

- Several overtures are concerned about the possibility of decreased funding for particular programs as a result of the changes. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force report, however, argues that the risk of doing nothing to reverse the overall decline is greater. If the goal of reaching $20 million in annual receipts by 2020 is met, then more than 50 percent in additional funds will be available for mission.

- Some are concerned that without an explicit connection to existing denominational programs, Special Offerings receipts will be diminished. The example from other denominations, however, is that donors give to causes, not programs. When other denominations promote their special offerings, they are not explicit in advance with programs or allocation percentages. They do report specific allocations as a matter of year-end accountability for disbursements.

- The changes proposed by the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force do not eliminate the designation on any gifts to Special Offerings. Each Special Offering will be specifically designated toward the purpose for which it was received. The proposals call for the GAMC to allocate funds biannually, as part of the General Assembly budget approval process, within these designations. The key difference here is that the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force recommendations call for the offerings to be designated toward particular causes, not toward particular programs. Donors retain the right to designate their gifts specifically, if they so desire.

- The task force found strong evidence that the denomination was unwilling to support more than four Special Offerings. Eighty-one percent of pastors, and 69 percent of ruling elders felt that four Special Offerings was either the right number, or too many.

- Finally, there is some confusion in the overtures concerning what actions have been taken by the GAMC in this regard. The GAMC has endorsed the goal of annual receipts of $20 million by 2020, and has created a new staff position to focus efforts toward this end. The GAMC was not asked to approve any particular changes in Special Offerings, either to create new offerings or eliminate existing offerings, as this is properly a General Assembly decision, in response to the direction of the 218th General Assembly (2008). The GAMC asks that commissioners prayerfully consider the recommendations of the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force. The opportunities to reverse the decline, and generate new funds for mission are important to our witness as Presbyterians.

The Presbytery of Albany respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to issue the following affirmation and direction:

“That the Peacemaking Offering be vigorously affirmed as an independent offering appropriate to World Communion Sunday since it has continuously borne good fruit for God’s Reign; and

“That the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministry (not Communications and Funds Development) be directed to retain stewardship of this offering and interpret peacemaking anew using new media and offering young adults the opportunity to tell their stories of building peace.”

Rationale

The General Assembly Mission Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has concurred with the recommendation of the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force that the Peacemaking Offering be incorporated into the One Great Hour of Sharing, which recommendation is coming before the 220th General Assembly (2012). However, for forty-one years the Peacemaking Offering has provided resources for local initiatives by faithful disciples in building peace at the congregational and presbytery levels of our church (as well as at the General Assembly level). Knowing that Jesus blesses the peacemakers (Mt. 5:9), IS our peace (Eph. 2:14), breaks down walls of hostility, and works for “a new humanity,” we affirm that the continuation of the peacemaking offering is a clear sign of our calling as Presbyterians and Christians.

Resource for Future Study: “FOR CHURCH LEADERS: Keep the Peacemaking Offering.” by Earl S. Johnson Jr. [This article will be published in a future 2012 issue of Presbyterian Outlook. Distributed and printed by permission of Presbyterian Outlook.]

On February 16, 2012 the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) announced that it has approved the recommendations of a Special Advisory Task Force, led by the Rev. Karl Travis, to eliminate the Peacemaking Offering and restructure the other three seasonal offerings. Peacemaking will be assumed under One Great Hour of Sharing (OGHS) and will be replaced in October by a new World Communion Sunday Offering. Congregations and presbyteries will continue to retain 25% each of the new offering, the remaining 50% being allocated to the GAMC. The changes will require the approval of the General Assembly in July to take effect.

According to Travis these and other recommendations were made because of a 25% decline of giving to Peacemaking and the Christmas Joy Offering over the years, a lack of understanding of the purpose of the offerings by Presbyterians, inadequate interpretation to members, and declining attendance and giving in many congregations.

Although it can be assumed that the three year study was undertaken diligently and prayerfully, there are historical, theological, biblical, and practical reasons why the elimination of the Peacemaking Offering should be rejected by the General Assembly.

First of all, we need to be reminded that since the early 1960s peacemaking has been an integral part of our identification as Presbyterians and followers of Jesus Christ. In the Confession of 1967, for example, the Vietnam War caused Presbyterians to oppose war and violence as a way to settle conflicts (C-9.45). “The church in its own life is called to practice the forgiveness of enemies and to commend to the nations as practical politics the search for cooperation and peace. This search requires that nations pursue fresh and responsible relations across every line of conflict, even at risk to national security.”

In 1969 the UPCUSA GA supported the right of believers to object to war on pacifist grounds, and in 1976 the PCUS called on the president to pardon those who refused military service. In 1975 a special task force was appointed and its remarkable report “Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling” was approved by both assemblies in 1980 and 1981. It has served since as a primary definition of Presbyterian determination to work for peace and justice in all spheres of life. Its theological and biblical studies also remind us today that in a century racked with violence almost everywhere we turn we dare not neutralize or weaken our commitment to peacemaking.

Some people will ask, of course, what our offerings have accomplished in the past? A few specific examples will provide samples of the Peacemaking Offering’s value. In the church I served in Johnstown, NY, the congregation gave its share for more than 20 years to the local Domestic Abuse program. Members know that their gifts have literally saved the lives of women (and men) all around our community. In the Presbytery of Albany, Furthermore, its 25% has been used since 2005 for many vital peacemaking activities including mission trips to Nicaragua, Mexico, the New Orleans area, and programs in the United Nations. Grants were given to local churches for attendance at local Peace Colloquies, a Peace and Justice Fair, and a congregation’s summer program for students from violent and troubled neighborhoods. No doubt similar examples can be cited from other congregations and presbyteries around the nation.

In regard to use by the General Assembly it is possible to examine the annual reports issued by the GAMC (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/special-offerings). It is proposed that the 2011 offering be used in primary areas of Evangelism, Discipleship, Servanthood, and Diversity (nearly $2 million was received in 2010). Specifically, it calls for funds to facilitate the International Peacemaking Program, to provide a day-long intensive training on Gun Violence and Gospel Values, to create a web-based resource with prayers on peace and justice concerns, and to send election observers to the Philippines, mentioning just a few.

Ephesians 2:13-22 powerfully proclaims that Jesus Christ himself is our peace (v.14). As he breaks down dividing walls of hostility and works to create “a new humanity” we are reminded that a continuing Peacemaking Offering is a clear sign of who we really are as Christians and Presbyterians.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEMS 10-05 and 10-06

Comment on Items 10-05 and 10-06—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Special Offerings are an important part of the connectional fabric that unites Presbyterians together in mission. In recent years, declining receipts have weakened this bond, and diminished the impact of Presbyterian witness.

Every four years, Special Offerings are reviewed to ensure that they are well-coordinated, and relevant to PC(USA) mission. Concerned by the continued decline in Special Offerings, the General Assembly, in response to the quadrennial review of 2008, directed that the next four year review be enlarged to include:

- A review of the possible role and functions of Special Offerings;
- Ways to encourage and expand the role of Special Offerings as a connective bond in the church;
- Identification of what Special Offerings can do best and what steps need to be taken in order to enable them to do that well;
- Clarification and simplification of the process for considering programs and causes to be included in Special Offerings.

This was in addition to their primary assignment—to provide for review and evaluation of the causes supported by churchwide special offerings, and to consider new causes in light of established criteria.

The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force has spent the four years investigating the current context, and has proposed significant changes in the way Presbyterians engage Special Offerings in support of the mission of the church. Their recommendations should be carefully considered.

The central focus of their recommendations is that the decline in Special Offerings can be reversed. The task force calls the church to embrace a goal of $20 million in annual receipts by 2020. The GAMC has responded to this call, embracing the goal, and is encouraging the General Assembly to approve it also. The task force is recommending substantive changes in order to meet that goal. As with any call for change, some are concerned about the impact of that change on existing ministries. These are the factors that commissioners will have to weigh as they discern where God is leading the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). As an important step in that discernment, the GAMC urges commissioners to read the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force report firsthand, rather than relying upon accounts from others as to what the report recommends. Reversing the decline, and reaching $20 million in annual receipts by 2020 is too important to be left to secondhand information on what the report recommends.

Among the clarifications that should be made to the overtures received thus far:

- Several overtures are concerned about the possibility of decreased funding for particular programs as a result of the changes. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force report, however, argues that the risk of doing nothing to reverse the overall decline is greater. If the goal of reaching $20 million in annual receipts by 2020 is met, then more than 50 percent in additional funds will be available for mission.

- Some are concerned that without an explicit connection to existing denominational programs, Special Offerings receipts will be diminished. The example from other denominations, however, is that donors give to causes, not programs. When other denominations promote their special offerings, they are not explicit in advance with programs or allocation percentages. They do report specific allocations as a matter of year-end accountability for disbursements.
• The changes proposed by the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force do not eliminate the designation on any gifts to Special Offerings. Each Special Offering will be specifically designated toward the purpose for which it was received. The proposals call for the GAMC to allocate funds biannually, as part of the General Assembly budget approval process, within these designations. The key difference here is that the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force recommendations call for the offerings to be designated toward particular causes, not toward particular programs. Donors retain the right to designate their gifts specifically, if they so desire.

• The task force found strong evidence that the denomination was unwilling to support more than four Special Offerings. Eighty-one percent of pastors, and 69 percent of ruling elders felt that four Special Offerings was either the right number, or too many.

• Finally, there is some confusion in the overtures concerning what actions have been taken by the GAMC in this regard. The GAMC has endorsed the goal of annual receipts of $20 million by 2020, and has created a new staff position to focus efforts toward this end. The GAMC was not asked to approve any particular changes in Special Offerings, either to create new offerings or eliminate existing offerings, as this is properly a General Assembly decision, in response to the direction of the 218th General Assembly (2008). The GAMC asks that commissioners prayerfully consider the recommendations of the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force. The opportunities to reverse the decline, and generate new funds for mission are important to our witness as Presbyterians.

The Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Advisory Committee, Presbyterian Hunger Program Advisory Committee and the National Self Development of People Committee have expressed similar concerns to those of these overtures, through the Justice Mission Committee of the GAMC.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 10-06 recommends retaining the Peacemaking Offering as an independent offering related to World Communion Sunday and maintained by Compassion, Peace, and Justice ministries.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) counsels the following considerations:

Rationale

Item 10-06 celebrates what has been a major initiative in the witness and ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) over the past thirty-two years. The frequent and positive use of the word, “peacemaking,” itself reflects the wide acceptance of this work, recalling Jesus’ words, “Blessed are the peacemakers,” in the Sermon on the Mount. The overture correctly notes that the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force recommendations would eliminate an independent Peacemaking Offering. That concern would be merged with the three One Great Hour of Sharing humanitarian assistance offerings. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy addresses concern for all four offerings in its Advice & Counsel memorandum to Item 10-05, where the committee affirms that the Peacemaking Offering should be retained in a clearly identifiable form, for its threefold purpose, and in its general season, around World Communion. We do not repeat those points here.

There are several considerations relevant to the arguments for dissolving the Peacemaking Offering:

1. Much of the Special Offerings Task Force argument hinges on restricting the number of special offerings to four, yet many congregations add and subtract offerings based on their finances, capital campaigns, and local mission emphases. For the General Assembly Mission Council to offer resources for five offerings could give congregations more choice, even if most congregations would stick to four offerings.

2. The overture (in Earl Johnson’s essay) notes how peacemaking is anchored historically, theologically, biblically, and practically in the life of the church. At the same time, commissioners may wish to reflect on how much this offering and others point beyond the church itself, to violence continuing to mark all relations, from the interpersonal to the international.

3. Peacemaking Offering receipts have been quite steady since 1990, with a slight upturn last year, despite the lack of a program coordinator since 2010. While it may be argued that the current set of special offerings will decline from the current aggregate $13 million, it may also be hard to see how re-configured offerings based primarily on new marketing could reach $20 million.

4. If the number of official offerings is limited to four, the logic of keeping peacemaking with World Communion and international mission and evangelism would need to be contrasted with adding it to the humanitarian hunger, development, and relief work under One Great Hour of Sharing.

5. The Interim Report on Peace Discernment (Item 14-05) describes the six-year process approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010) to discern new approaches to peacemaking in the 21st Century. Commissioners may wonder how the Special Offerings Task Force plan would impact the process of church-wide discernment that is being prepared, even though the Peacemaking Offering is not to be phased out immediately.

6. The Special Offerings Task Force report contains much valuable data and proposals that would change other offerings as well. Commissioners may wish to consider how much change overall is being proposed by the various special committees, as well as by the on-going program bodies of the church and by contentious issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY MISSION COUNCIL PRESBYTERIAN MISSION AGENCY MANUAL OF OPERATIONS

I. Introduction

“A. The General Assembly Mission Council, as an agency of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency implements policies established by the General Assembly, coordinates the work of the General Assembly Ministries in light of General Assembly mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities; works in partnership with synods and presbyteries; and develops and proposes a comprehensive budget to the General Assembly. Members of the council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board are elected by the General Assembly and are representatives of synods, presbyteries, and the church at-large. [See Organization for Mission, Section I., History of the Structure for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)]

“The Book of Order also provides that “each governing body above the session shall, in consultation with the governing body above and below it, develop a manual of administrative operations” (G-9.0405 and G-13.0202).

“The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may change those appendixes to the Manual of Operations that are within its purview following a first reading, which may be electronic, and adoption at a subsequent plenary session. First reading and action may take place during the same session of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee shall submit a written report of changes to the appendixes to the next General Assembly (See Appendix 11 for the Process and Procedure for Submitting Changes to the GAMC Manual of Operations.)

“B. Use of Robert’s Rules of Order (Revised)

“The meetings of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and related bodies are held in accordance with the provisions of the Book of Order. As specified in G-9.0302 G-3.0105, “... the most recent edition of Robert’s Rules of Order...” is used.

II. Composition of the Council Board

“A. Membership:

“The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is currently composed of 57 members (40 voting and 17 non-voting). Elected membership members of the GAMC Board serve one a six-year, non-renewable term:

“1. Voting Members

“a. Elected Membership (36)

• 6 General Assembly commissioners (2 from current assembly, 2 from the two immediate past assemblies)
10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

“• 4 young adults (ages 18–35)
“• 3 ordained presbytery staff
“• 2 ordained synod staff
“• 21 from recommendations of presbyteries

“b. Ex-officio Members (4)
“• Current Moderator of the General Assembly “• Immediate past Moderator of the General Assembly
“• The current Moderator of the Churchwide coordinating Team of Presbyterian Women
“• A representative from the National Council of Presbyterian Men, Inc.

2. “Non Voting Members - with voice:

“a. Corresponding Members (15)
“• Stated Clerk of the General Assembly
“• Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency “• Representative from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA)
“• Chair of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)
“• Chair of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)
“• Chair of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) “• Representative from the Committee on Theological Education (COTE) “• Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) President “• Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Chair or designee “• Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation President
“• Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation Chair or designee “• Presbyterian Publishing Corporation President
“• Presbyterian Publishing Corporation Chair or designee “• Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. President
“• Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. Chair or designee

“Corresponding members are not assigned to a committee and may attend any committee meeting that is conducting business of interest to them. Corresponding members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board have voice but not vote in Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and committee.

“b. Ecumenical Advisory Members

“Ecumenical advisory members are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee for election by the General Assembly for two-year terms, with eligibility for two additional terms, on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. One ecumenical advisory member shall serve on the Justice Mission Committee and one shall serve on the Evangelism Mission Committee, with voice and vote in committee. Ecumenical advisory members to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall not be elected to the Executive Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

“3. GAMC Committee At-large members

“The General Assembly Nominating Committee nominates for General Assembly election 2 persons to serve on the Audit Committee and 2 persons to serve on Stewardship Committee. These members are nominated from the church at large for their special expertise in each of these following areas. While they are not members of the General Assembly Mission Council, they are granted the privilege of the floor during General Assembly Mission Council plenary sessions on matters related to their special expertise.

“The General Assembly Nominating Committee nominates for General Assembly election 2 persons to serve on the Audit Committee and 2 persons to serve on Stewardship Committee, with voice and vote, in consultation with the committees. These at-large members serve a two-year term, and are eligible for re-election twice. These members are nominated from the church at-large for their special expertise in each of these areas. While they are not members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, they are granted the privilege of the floor during Presbyterian Mission Agency Board plenary sessions on matters related to their special expertise.

“B. Inclusiveness and Diversity:

“General Assembly policies ensure that elected bodies represent the wealth of diverse gifts found in the church and provide a means to share responsibilities and decision making. The General Assembly Nominating Committee provides for diversity and inclusiveness in the council’s membership. The General Assembly Committee on Representation monitors their work as well as the appointment of committees and task forces by the council.

“It is the policy of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency to use expansive language when referring to God and inclusive language when referring to God’s people.

“C. Areas of Service:

“The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may change the names, number, and structure of GAMC Board committees in order to carry out the goals and objectives of the Mission Work Plan using the process delineated in Appendix 11. The work of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is carried out by elected members who may serve in the following areas: on board committees as well as in liaison relationships.

“* General Assembly Mission Council Executive Committee
“* Evangelism Mission Committee
“* Justice Mission Committee “* Vocation Mission Committee “* Discipleship Mission Committee “* Stewardship Committee
“* Audit Committee
“* General Assembly Mission Council Nominating Committee
“* Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy
“* Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns
“* Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns
“* Committee on the Office of the General Assembly “* Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Board of Pensions
“* Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation “* Presbyterian Publishing Corporation
“* Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.
“* Committee on Theological Education

“III. PC(USA) Constitutional Mandate and Role of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

“According to Book of Order G-13.0201, the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall have the following responsibilities
“A. To cultivate and promote the spiritual welfare of the whole church.

“B. To provide resources to support equal employment opportunity and affirmative action for members of racial ethnic groups, for women, for various age groups, for persons regardless of marital condition (married, single, widowed, or divorced), and for persons with disabilities.

“C. To develop and propose for GA approval, the mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities of the GAMC Presbyterian Mission Agency, doing so by taking into account the mission work being done by sessions, presbyteries, and synods, and to propose for GA approval, an accompanying budget that will implement the mission work plan of the GAMC Presbyterian Mission Agency.

“D. To act in those specific matters assigned to the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board by the General Assembly or this Constitution, acting always according to previously enacted General Assembly policies, reporting fully to each subsequent General Assembly its actions.

“E. To perform such additional responsibilities and duties as may be assigned by the General Assembly.

“The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, in consultation with appropriate individuals and groups, establishes such committees, task forces, and work groups as are necessary to conduct its business. Current committees are recorded in Appendix 1 of this manual.

“The Executive Director reports to the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee and the Council Board itself. The Executive Director shall provide direction, leadership, and coordination for the total mission program and shared services including review and evaluation.

“IV. Citation of Major Documents

“The following documents guide the work of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and are maintained in offices engaged in work related to their subject matter. Unless appended, these documents are available on the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Website, with printed copies available by request.

“F. Seeking to be Faithful Together: Guidelines for Presbyterians During Times of Disagreement.

“V. General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Staffing

“A. The GAMC Presbyterian Mission Agency Board fulfills its work, in part through staff led by the Executive Director. The Executive Director carries out responsibilities with staff in the following ministries: Mission, Communications and Funds Development, Shared Services; and the Office of the Executive Director. For GAMC the Presbyterian Mission Agency staff organization, refer to Appendix 2.

“B. Between meetings of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, upon recommendation of the Executive Director, is authorized to restructure the staff organization, always in alignment with the mission direction of the General Assembly. Any such organizational changes will be reported to the next General Assembly.

“VI. Election and Confirmation of the GAMC Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director

“The Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency shall be elected by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to a four-year term subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. (See Book of Order G 9.0703.) Upon election, the Executive Director serves with the full authority of the office until confirmed by the next General Assembly. (Organization for Mission, Section V.G.)”
Rationale

The GAMC Manual of Operations calls for the Manual to be reviewed, in conjunction with other manuals and the Organization for Mission, for consistency and relevance in the current context.

The GAMC approved the changes as recommended by the Procedures Subcommittee. Changes to the GAMC Manual of Operations must be approved by the General Assembly.

Item 10-08

[The assembly approved Item 10-08. See pp. 61, 74.]

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve changing the name of the General Assembly Mission Council, as follows:

From: General Assembly Mission Council (organization)
To: Presbyterian Mission Agency

From: General Assembly Mission Council (elected) To: Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

Rationale

General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) Name Change

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) considered several options for renaming the General Assembly Mission Council organization and elected body. Two options received the most support:

• Presbyterian Mission Agency & Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

• Presbyterian Mission & Presbyterian Mission Board

After much discussion, and consideration of input from mid council partners, “Presbyterian Mission Agency” and “Presbyterian Mission Agency Board” were chosen for recommendation to the General Assembly.

A. Why Change Our Name?

The General Assembly Council (as it was originally known) has been encouraged to clarify its identity for more than seven years.

• In 2004, the Mission Work Plan called for the development of a communication strategy, due to low awareness by pastors and Presbyterians in the pews of the mission and ministry of the General Assembly Council.

• In 2007, the “General Assembly Task Force to Review the GAC” joined this effort, directing the council to create an identity for the mission agency.

• In 2008, the council’s effort from 2004 concluded with a similar call: create an identity for the mission agency. This call was answered with a first step, approved by the General Assembly and a majority of presbyteries: changing the name of the “General Assembly Council” to the “General Assembly Mission Council.”

• In 2009, the Six Agency Review Task Force also called for a heightened identity for the mission agency.

Each of these efforts have called on the GAMC to be more intentional about the way it communicates so that those who participate in its ministries have an awareness of where these ministries originate, how to obtain additional information, and how to support the expansion of these ministries for other audiences.

The adoption of the new Form of Government by the General Assembly and a majority of presbyteries provides additional impetus for the name change effort. The term “council” is changing in the life of the denomination. Under the new Form of Government, “councils” are the term for what was once referred to as “governing bodies.” Since the GAMC is not a governing body, the term “council” should no longer be part of the GAMC’s name.

B. Choosing a Name

Building upon the work from 2007, the core identity for the GAMC is mission. Therefore it is not surprising to see “mission” central to most of the names that have been proposed:
There has been discussion as to whether “mission” was a sufficient description for the work of the council. Several individuals have suggested adding “ministries” to the name in order to indicate more fully the breadth of the council’s work. After a healthy discussion, however, the consensus has returned each time to “mission” being at the core of the council’s work, and a conclusion that the term is sufficient on its own to carry council’s identity.

After resolving that “mission” stands alone at the core, most discussion has focused on whether to use “Presbyterian,” “General Assembly,” or “Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” at the beginning of the name.

In 2007, when the council sought input on changing its name, from General Assembly Council, to better reflect its identity, the feedback was varied. Council members narrowly chose GAMC for their name over Presbyterian Mission Board and Presbyterian Mission Council. However, among church sessions, names that included “Presbyterian” were much more highly valued.

Most of the other General Assembly agencies also use “Presbyterian” in their name, and only the Office of the General Assembly, uses “General Assembly.”

- Board of Pensions
- Office of the General Assembly
- Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation
- Presbyterian Investment and Loan
- Presbyterian Publishing

Therefore, “Presbyterian” was chosen as the first part of the recommended name because it is the simplest and most descriptive term for describing the mission work that we do, and it is consistent with usage by other agencies and “Presbyterians in the pew.”

The last piece of conversation has focused on whether “Presbyterian Mission” was sufficient or whether another term should be added at the end of the name. Some have felt that “Presbyterian Mission” was too strong or exclusive for a name... for one of the church’s agencies, since Presbyterian mission could rightly be said to be accomplished in each congregation, presbytery, and synod, and not just at the General Assembly level. Others have responded there should be no timidity in claiming a strong identity for the church’s mission agency. After all, the General Assembly has given other agencies similar names without making exclusive claims.

In this conversation, the GAMC has sought to give special attention to the voices of mid council (formerly known as middle governing body) staff. Mid council staff voiced a preference for another term to be added to the name, so that it did not appear that the GAMC was claiming to be the only “Presbyterian Mission” organization in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Several options were explored (see the list above). In many casual discussions, if the current name (GAMC) isn’t used, the conversational term tends to be “the mission agency.” For individuals who have been confused about what the GAMC is, “the mission agency” seems to make sense. Therefore, as a means of being sensitive to the concerns of mid council staff and also using language that is already natural for many Presbyterians, the organizational name proposed by the GAMC is “Presbyterian Mission Agency.”

Organizational and Governance Identity

The name “General Assembly Mission Council” has also been confusing in that it presently represents both the staff organization and the governance body. Other General Assembly agencies have resolved this problem by defining their elected members as a committee, board, or trustees. [For a chart of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Structural Organization, see gamc-edo-name-change-chart.pdf or see p. 939.]

In order to eliminate confusion between the staff organization and the elected governance body, the GAMC recommends that the elected body be called the “Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.”

Item 10-09

[The assembly approved Item 10-09. See pp. 61, 74.]

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve the following vision, mission, directional goal statements, and core values for the 2013–2016 GAMC Mission Work Plan:

Vision: Presbyterians joyfully engaging in God’s mission for the transformation of the world.

Mission: Inspire, equip, and connect the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in its many expressions to serve Christ in the world through new and existing communities of faith, hope, love, and witness.

Directional Goals:

Transformational Leaders

Inspire, equip and connect the church to: Cultivate, nurture, and sustain diverse, transformational leaders for Christ’s mission.

I chose you and appointed you so that you could go and produce fruit. John 15:16 (CEB)

Compassionate and Prophetic Discipleship

Inspire, equip, and connect the church to: Make, receive and send disciples who demonstrate and proclaim God’s justice, peace, and love in an increasingly globalized world.

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because the Lord has anointed me. [God] has sent me to preach good news to the poor, to proclaim release to the prisoners and recovery of the sight to the blind, to liberate the oppressed, and to proclaim the year of the Lord’s favor. Luke 4:18–19 (CEB)

New Worshiping Communities

Inspire, equip, and connect the church to: Ignite a movement within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that results in the creation of 1,001 new worshiping communities.

They praised God and demonstrated God’s goodness to everyone. The Lord added daily to the community those who were being saved. Acts 2:47 (CEB)
Young Adults

Inspire, equip and connect the church to: Engage and join with young adults in reforming the church for Christ’s mission.

I will set up my covenant with you and your descendants after you in every generation as an enduring covenant. I will be your God and your descendants’ God after you. Genesis 17:7 (CEB)

General Assembly Engagement

Engage with, respond to, resource and represent the General Assembly in alignment with the vision and mission for the General Assembly Mission Council.

The apostles and the elders gathered to consider this matter. Acts 15:6 (CEB)

Organizational Integrity

Build confidence, trust, and engagement in all that we do by being Collaborative, Accountable, Responsive, and Excellent (C.A.R.E.).

If anything is excellent and if anything is admirable, focus your thoughts on these things. Philippians 4:8a (CEB)

Core Values of the General Assembly Mission Council

C.A.R.E. (Collaborative, Accountable, Responsive, Excellent)

Within the GAMC and the wider church, we will be:

Collaborative. Working together in an inclusive community, we will invite input, share ideas, and seek the best ways to accomplish our common goals.

Accountable. Relying on the Holy Spirit to enable us to trust and to be trustworthy, we will take responsibility for our actions and work with integrity, transparency, and love.

Responsive. Acting as servant leaders, we will faithfully respond to the voices and needs of the church by being timely, helpful, enthusiastic, and mission-centered.

Excellent. Demonstrating faithful stewardship and service through God’s empowering grace, we will work with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.

Rationale

2013–2016 GAMC Mission Work Plan

The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) is currently carrying out its work as outlined in the 2009–2012 Mission Work Plan. In the summer of 2011, the GAMC engaged in a strategy planning process to develop a new Mission Work Plan to guide its work for 2013–2016. Feedback and input was solicited from diverse leaders across the church to help determine the critical needs of the denomination, what the church believes the GAMC does best, and how the GAMC can best serve the church.

The GAMC has engaged in a process that will strategically align its ministries to support common mission, vision, directional goals, and core values that will be shared across the mission agency. The vision, mission, and directional goals provide direction and a guide for decision making and allocating resources. The GAMC believes that the new Mission Work Plan will enable the agency to attract engagement and support by congregations, mid councils, and other constituents; spotlight ministries that are sustainable by the church; and encourage periodic evaluation and continuous strategic thinking and innovation to enable the mission agency to anticipate changes in the church and the world.

With input from conversations with staff and leaders across the PC(USA) and its review of feedback from other discussions, the General Assembly Mission Council staff leaders developed vision, mission, directional goal statements, and core values in consultation with the Strategy Advisory Group and the General Assembly Mission Council Executive Committee. The Strategy Advisory Group presents these for the approval of the full elected body of the General Assembly Mission Council at its meeting on February 15–17, 2012.

Below is a theological framework for the strategy planning process.
Theological Context

What is the Gospel of Jesus Christ and how do we, as a church, live it out? This is central to our role as the General Assembly Mission Council. To that end, the Strategy Working Group engaged in an in-depth study of the Gospel of Mark. Mark gives a vivid picture of Jesus, his message, and what it means to follow him as a disciple. The picture of following Jesus is challenging. The call of the disciples that announces the Reign of God that requires a change from those that follow: “Now is the time! Here comes God’s kingdom! Change your hearts and lives, and trust this good news!” (Mk. 1:15 CEB). Faithfulness to the Gospel is good news—a good news that invites us to change our hearts and lives. We continue to be called to follow this Jesus, embracing this good news of repentance. More than anything else, we hope to see all Presbyterians following Jesus Christ faithfully. Thus we believe our vision should be: Presbyterians joyfully engaging in God’s mission for the transformation of the world. We believe a smaller vision is not worthy of our calling. Now is the time.

We follow this vision in a context changing at a breathtaking rate. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) continues to decline in numbers at the same time that the fastest growing religious segment in the United States is among the so-called “nones.” We see church structures, including our own, built to serve a church that is disappearing while the need for the Good News is pressing around the world. We are aware of the fact that we have not done a good job engaging the church’s young adults in the adventure of faith or in reaching beyond our own. We face a time of fragmentation in our own church body. What is our calling in this context that we might see the vision before us?

Presbyterians are called to be like the twelve “appointed to be with him, to be sent out.” (Mk. 3:14 CEB) Recognizing that this basic rhythm of gathering around Christ and being sent out in his name, nurtured by Word and Sacrament, is fundamental to our life as church, we see our mission tied to new and existing worshiping communities. Our mission is to: Inspire, equip, and connect the PC(USA) in its many expressions to serve Christ in the world through new and existing communities of faith, hope, love, and witness. This is consistent with the affirmation in the new language of the Form of Government that the congregation is the basic form of church. These worshipping communities are not sufficient to themselves—they need connective tissue and are thereby bound together in relationships of accountability and responsibility (G-1.0101).

The Form of Government gives a rich theological vision of such communities:

The church is to be a community of faith, entrusting itself to God alone, even at the risk of losing its life.

The church is to be a community of hope, rejoicing in the sure and certain knowledge that, in Christ, God is making a new creation. This new creation is a new beginning for human life and for all things. The church lives in the present on the strength of that promised new creation.

The church is to be a community of love, where sin is forgiven, reconciliation is accomplished, and the dividing walls of hostility are torn down.

The church is to be a community of witness, pointing beyond itself through word and work to the good news of God’s transforming grace in Christ Jesus its Lord (Book of Order, F-1.0301).

Having established the reality of what we hope to see in our vision statement and how we will accomplish it in our mission statement, we have been guided by important insights from the Gospel of Mark that shape our approach to this mission and ministry.

Jesus’ ministry consistently crossed significant cultural and ethnic boundaries. He healed the man possessed by demons who lived in the tombs in the Gerasenes, Gentile territory (Mk. 5:1–20). Jesus healed the daughter of an immigrant woman who dared to ask him (Mk. 7:24–30). In an increasingly globalized world, we, too, are called to ministry and mission across all divides.

We do so out of abundance, not scarcity. We remember that we are fed by the same one who took loaves and fishes and fed all with an abundance left over. Our reliance is on the one who provides all that we need (Mk. 8:14–21), and our ministry is founded on the conviction that it is God who brings the increase:

Then Jesus said, “This is what God’s kingdom is like. It’s as though someone scatters seed on the ground, then sleeps and wakes night and day. The seed sprouts and grows, but the farmer doesn’t know how. The earth produces crops all by itself, first the stalk, then the head, then the full head of grain. Whenever the crop is ready, the farmer goes out to cut the grain because it’s harvest time.”

Jesus call to us is challenging. “All who want to come after me must say no to themselves, take up their cross, and follow me. All who want to save their lives will lose them. But all who lose their lives because of me and because of the good news will save them (Mk. 8:34–35). Are we ready to lose our lives for Jesus’ sake?

We are saddened by the response of the rich man to Jesus’ command to go and sell all he had and follow, for we, too, are rich people (Mk. 10:17–31). We are then challenged and inspired to see the example of Bartimaeus, the man without sight.
who was healed and threw aside all he owned to follow Jesus (Mk. 10:46-52). What does it look like for a wealthy, U.S. church in 2012 to follow the example of the disciple Bartimaeus? Part of it must be to confess our own desire for prominence (James and John), recognizing that those who long for honor in the assembly will be judged harshly (Mk. 12:39–40), but those who lose their lives for Christ’s sake will be rewarded.

As we work, as we attempt to follow faithfully, our vocation is to “keep watch” for what God is doing and to align ourselves with the mission of Jesus through the power of the Spirit (Mk. 13:5–27). Just as the Peter failed during the trial of Jesus, we know that we will fail to be faithful, but we are encouraged by the promise that God will be faithful to us, even when we falt er. The future is uncertain. Mark ends with the disciples afraid in the face of the empty tomb. What enabled the early disciples to be faithful in this situation? What enabled the early readers of Mark to stay faithful? “The world into which the reader is invited is one in which people fail. Longed for resolutions do not occur. Loose ends are not tied up. It is as Jesus says: ‘the end is still to come.’”1 The story is unfinished.

The Gospel gives us reasons to be faithful even in difficult times. And these are difficult times for the PC(USA). But just as the disciples witnessed Jesus taking a few loaves and fishes, feeding the crowds, and having enough left over to strain the baskets, we look to witness the abundance of our God even in these difficult times. We keep watch and continue to follow.

We do not know the end of the story. But we see the overwhelming attractiveness of Jesus and the Reign he proclaimed, and the promise that God will be faithful to us. And as those first disciples were called, so we are called to engage in Christ’s mission for the transformation of the world. May it be so.

Item 10-10

[The assembly approved Item 10-10. See pp. 61, 74.]

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve the following changes to Sections V.–VIII. of the Organization for Mission: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“V. The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency

“The Presbyterian Mission Agency is the body of the General Assembly in which are lodged the following responsibil ities:

“a. to cultivate and promote the spiritual welfare of the whole church;

“b. to provide resources to support equal employment opportunity and affirmative action for members of racial ethnic groups, for women, for various age groups, for persons regardless of marital condition (married, single, widowed, or divorced), and for persons with disabilities;

“c. to develop and propose, for General Assembly approval, the mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency; doing so by taking into account the mission work being done by sessions, presbyteries, and synods, and to propose for General Assembly approval an accompanying budget that will implement the mission work plan of the Presbyterian Mission Agency;

“d. to act in those specific matters assigned to the Presbyterian Mission Agency by the General Assembly or this Constitution, acting always according to previously enacted General Assembly policies, reporting fully to each subsequent General Assembly its actions;

“e. to perform such additional responsibilities and duties as may be assigned by the General Assembly.

“The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall advise and respond to the General Assembly on priorities, programs, and strategies for addressing matters of concern for the Ministries of our church. The primary purpose of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is to lead and coordinate the total mission program. It will cultivate a style of work that emphasizes

• coordination among ministries;
• flexible deployment of resources to match changing needs;
allocation of funding to reflect stated goals;
attention to the needs and gifts of congregations; effective relationships with all governing bodies mid councils; and holding the vision described without reverting to old patterns.

According to the Book of Order, G-13.0201, the General Assembly Mission Council is the body of the General Assembly in which are lodged the following responsibilities:

A. Policy Responsibility

The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may recommend churchwide policies to the General Assembly and is responsible for implementing policies established by the General Assembly and for establishing overall procedures for the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency, and its Ministries.

B. Planning and Priority Setting

C. General Assembly Budget

All restricted and unrestricted funds (principal or income) that support the programs or functions for which the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency is responsible are allocated by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and distributed in accordance with procedures approved by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. In every case the instructions of the donors are carefully followed. Such resources presently include contributions from individuals, congregations, and related organizations; proceeds from wills and bequests; and sales of property and other assets. All funds administered by the Board of Pensions, including dues and earnings on investments, are specifically excluded.1

D. Personnel Responsibilities

Regarding the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency staff, the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is responsible for the following:

1. Approval of personnel procedures.

2. Approval, annually, of a staff rationale that determines staff commitments for the year. Any staff deployed regionally must be approved as part of the annual staff rationale.

3. Election of the Executive Director subject to confirmation by the General Assembly.

“6. Approval of compensation guidelines within which salaries are administered.

“Members of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board are not eligible for election or selection as staff during the period of their term of service.

“E. Reporting

The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is responsible for submitting a report to the General Assembly. The Ministries will report regularly to the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, keeping the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board fully informed about the work. Recommendations from Ministries, including matters that involve an exception or a proposed change in General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency procedures, a major shift in program emphasis, or a major budget adjustment, require action by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Issues of social witness policy, advocacy for racial ethnic and women’s concerns, and those related to Presbyterian theological institutions are reported to the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and General Assembly.

“F. Elected Leadership

“Direction and oversight of General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency entities deploys a majority of General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members as members of Mission Committees and Audit Committee. The work of the Ministries is a direct expression of the planning and mission understanding of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, which is accountable to the General Assembly in this regard. The number and makeup of the committees and assignments are adjustable to accomplish the work of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency in its mission and to allow flexibility to meet changing emphases in Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission. The Mission Committees are to be policy, strategy, and planning committees.

“Each Ministry evaluates its need for area program committees. The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board determines how many are to be established, specifying the expertise and/or experience needed, the terms of service for members, and the duration of the committees’ existence.

“The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board ensures the continuation of a committee that includes representatives of each Presbyterian theological institution, and that will review the effectiveness and stewardship of the schools on behalf of the church, will exercise the governance responsibilities of the church to the schools, and will encourage and enhance cooperation among the church’s theological schools. The committee will be provided direct access to the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the General Assembly.

“The principal legal corporation is the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a Corporation, which receives, holds, and transfers property, and facilitates the management of the church’s corporate affairs. All voting members of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board serve as members of the board of directors of this corporation.

“G. Staff Leadership

“1. Executive Director

“Election and Review—The Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency is elected by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. The Executive Director is accountable to the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Upon election, the Executive Director serves with the full authority of the office until confirmed by the next General Assembly following election. Should the General Assembly refuse to confirm any Executive Director, the position becomes vacant immediately. Periodic in-depth reviews of the Executive Director are the responsibility of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The Executive Director is elected for a term of four years and may be reelected for additional terms. Initial four-year terms start on the date that work commences following election. Subsequent four-year terms commence on the day following expiration of the prior term. The Executive Director may be dismissed by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in conformity with current personnel policies and procedures.

“Responsibilities—The responsibilities of the Executive Director include:

“a. enabling the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, in response to mission directions and policies set by the General Assembly, to lead the whole church in the implementation of directions for the life and mission of the church;

“b. supporting the organizational health of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);

“c. enabling the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to fulfill its constitutional responsibilities;

“d. providing oversight of the work of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency as a whole and the linkages among the various parts that carry out its work;

“e. providing leadership and administrative oversight to the staff and to the staffing and personnel decision process of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency;

“f. leading and supervising the staff lodged in the office of the Executive Director including a staff rationale, position description, selection of staff, annual performance reviews and staff development;

“g. bearing direct responsibility for the coordination of planning and budgeting for the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency;

“h. leading the council in implementing policies and procedures related to inclusiveness, affirmative action, and equal employment opportunity; and “i. presiding as president of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation.

“2. Deputy Executive Directors

“Deputy Executive Directors are hired by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director subject to confirmation by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

“Responsibilities—The Deputy Executive Directors are responsible for the healthy functioning of their Ministries in the fulfillment of their responsibilities, as well as for the support of the wider organizational health of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

“For detailed staff organization, refer to the GAMC website.

“3. Staff

“All staff are staff of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and are accountable to the Executive Director. Mission personnel have shared accountability both to the overseas partner church to which they are assigned and to the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency through the Deputy Executive Director for Mission.

“VI. General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Relationships

“The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency works in partnership with synods, presbyteries, and sessions to enable the various governing bodies councils to join together in churchwide expression of the life and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

“The Ministries are responsible for carrying out the mission program for the General Assembly. The Ministries are linked together through the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and with the church on behalf of that part of the mission entrusted by God to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

“The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency is responsible for financial and corporate services supporting the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
“Other relationships include the following committees:

1. Advocacy and Advisory Committees

“The Executive Director has the responsibility for the advocacy and advisory committees. All three groups have direct access to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, and their work is coordinated through the Office of the Deputy Executive Director.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns shall assist the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to give full expression of the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, F-1.0403. The Committee shall be a prophetic voice for involving racial ethnic people in the formation of public policy, particularly where race is a factor that negatively impacts the quality of life of people of color. The committee will also monitor the implementation of policies adopted by the church that impact the quality of life of racial ethnic people in the church and in the world.

“The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns shall assist the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to give full expression of the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, F-1.0403. The committee shall monitor and evaluate policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church and the world; and shall advocate for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society as a whole.

“The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, is responsible for the process of developing and recommending social witness policy to the General Assembly. The term “social witness policy” refers to the positions adopted by the General Assembly to express its stance on and guide response to issues in the public order, including their relation to the church’s own life and mission. These positions may take the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, or social involvement reports, as defined in the Manual of the General Assembly, p. 65, Forming Social Policy, 2.a.

2. Committee on Theological Education

“The Committee on Theological Education has direct access to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, and their work is coordinated through the Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry with staff accountability to the director of the Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry. The purpose of the Committee on Theological Education is to provide an effective linkage between the General Assembly and the theological seminaries of the PC(USA) by: providing a forum through which the church-at-large can express its concerns to the seminaries; interpreting the mission of the denomination’s theological seminaries to the whole church; overseeing the interpretation and administration of the Theological Education Fund (1% Plan); serving as a means for cooperation among the church’s theological seminaries; implementing suggestions made by the Special Committee to Study Theological Institutions as approved by the 205th General Assembly (1993); serving as an agency of the denomination for relating to theological seminaries other than those of the PC(USA); and working in partnership with middle governing bodies mid councils and agencies of the General Assembly to provide for leadership in local congregations, the denomination, and the world.

VII. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, (previously the Central Treasury Corporation—CTC) is a corporate entity of the General Assembly and, as the principal church corporation, will hold title to property in accordance with the 1986 Deliverance (see www.pcusa.org/game), and provide accounting, reporting, and financial services for the General Assembly and its entities. All voting members of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (previously the General Assembly Mission Council—GAMC) are members of the board of directors. (See www.pcusa.org/game.)

“The officers of the corporation include a president, an executive vice-president and a chief financial officer (“treasurer”), one or more vice-presidents, a secretary, a controller, and an associate treasurer. The president shall be elected by the board of directors for a term of four years subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Ordinarily, the offices of the president and the treasurer are held by the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Deputy Executive Director for Shared Services, respectively.

“Responsibility for managing the activities of this corporation is assigned to the Deputy Executive Director for Shared Services and other Shared Services staff who have been elected officers of the corporation under the direction of the president.

“The treasurer shall prepare an annual report, audited by a certified public accountant, of the financial position and operations of the General Assembly activities for the General Assembly.
“A. Board of Pensions

“The Board of Pensions is the legally responsible corporate body established under a civil charter for the purpose of administering the pension and benefits program of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It is required by law to administer these programs for the sole and exclusive benefit of its participants and members.

“The relationship between the Board of Pensions and the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is set forth in an official “Memorandum of Understanding” (see www.pcusa.org/game) to provide the necessary and desirable cooperation between these bodies, while respecting and reflecting the special needs of the Board of Pensions as it carries out its ministry to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) within an ecclesiastical structure.

“In view of the close relationship between compensation, benefits, pensions, and financial assistance, there is need for a close continuing relationship between the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Board of Pensions. Consistent with the “Memorandum of Understanding” between the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) the Board of Pensions, the chairperson of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (or designee) serves as a corresponding member of the Board of Pensions, while the chairperson of the Board of Pensions or designee serves as corresponding member of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board proposes to the General Assembly Nominating Committee one of its members to be elected to the Board of Pensions. This person also represents the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in regard to churchwide personnel and compensation policies. At the staff level, the Board of Pensions’ president has the privilege of the floor at the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings but without vote and is included as part of the Expanded Staff Leadership Team through the Office of the Executive Director. The Board of Pensions reports directly to the General Assembly.

“B. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation

“Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (the Foundation) is a corporate entity that acts as a “fiduciary” for the General Assembly, providing investment services, holding title on behalf of the church to the investment assets of the church, providing a deferred giving and wills emphasis program, and otherwise assuring that there is strict adherence to the wishes and restrictions of donors and others who have entrusted funds to its care. The Foundation holds title to property in accordance with the 1986 Deliverance. In addition to its work on behalf of the General Assembly, the Foundation offers similar services to churches and church organizations as well as to individuals who wish to use such programs as an expression of their Christian faith and stewardship. The board of the Foundation is elected by the General Assembly through the normal nominating processes. It reports to the General Assembly with a definitive copy to the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, which may comment on the report. The Foundation provides information about its work to the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on a regular basis. The total budget of the Foundation is made available for review by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The Foundation reports directly to the General Assembly.

“In view of the close relationship between stewardship, mission funding, and deferred giving, there is need for a close continuing relationship between the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Foundation. A future appendix will define such a relationship. The joint report of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Foundation, as reported to the 208th General Assembly (1996), provides agreements and understandings regarding restricted funds and is can be seen at www.pcusa.org/game. The chairperson of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (or designee) sits with the trustees of the Foundation with voice and without vote, for purposes of coordination. This person also represents the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in regard to churchwide personnel and compensation policies. The board of the Foundation appoints one member to serve on the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board as a corresponding member.

“At the staff level, the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is a trustee of the Foundation; the Foundation’s president has the privilege of the floor at General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings, but without vote. In addition, the Foundation’s president is included as part of the Expanded Staff Leadership Team through the Office of the Executive Director.

“C. Presbyterian Publishing Corporation

“The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation is a legally independent, self-supporting corporation dedicated to the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It is responsible for publishing books and educational materials for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and for a broad ecumenical audience around the world. The publishing program strives to extend the mission of the church to the widest possible audience, representing a wide range of religious, social, and cultural points of view.
“In view of the dynamic interrelationship between the printed word and the mission of our church, there is need for a close continuing relationship between the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. The corporation is governed by its board of directors, one of whom is the corporation’s president and publisher, and one of whom is the Executive Director. The remaining directors are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly for four-year terms and shall be eligible for reelection to one additional term. No member may serve more than two terms, full or partial. The board of directors elects officers of the corporation in accordance with its corporate bylaws.

“The chairperson (or designee) of the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation is a corresponding member of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board with voice and without vote. At the staff level, the president and publisher of the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation has the privilege of the floor at the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings but without vote, and is included as part of the Expanded Staff Leadership Team through the Office of the Executive Director. The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation reports directly to the General Assembly.

“D. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a great commission community. It tells and retells the story of salvation in Jesus Christ to successive generations. It does so in buildings that are shaped to meet the needs of worshipping, witnessing, serving congregations. Generating capital to build and rebuild church buildings is the work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., (the Program) is incorporated in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The Program offers unsecured, interest bearing investments in various states, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia. In general, any individual and any organization related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may invest. The funds generated by investments become mortgage loans that are used by congregations, governing bodies, and related entities for building church buildings and rebuilding existing facilities.

“Close relationships of cooperation exist among the Program, Foundation, and General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency. Both the Foundation and Council Presbyterian Mission Agency have significant investments commitments with the Program.

“The Board of Directors consist of fifteen (15) members. All members are elected by the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. The General Assembly Nominating Committee nominates six at-large members, one member from among the synods, and one member from among the presbyteries. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation nominates two members and the Corporation’s Personnel/Nominating Committee nominates three at-large members. The Program reports to the General Assembly through the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

“The Chair of the Program’s Board of Directors and its President and Chief Executive Officer have privilege of the floor without vote at General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings. They are corresponding members of the General Assembly Mission Council Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. In addition, the President participates in the Expanded Staff Leadership Team plus Synod Executives Forum.”

1. See Appendix A of this document for additional procedures related to budgets and funding.

Item 10-11

[The assembly approved Item 10-11. See pp. 61, 74.]

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) strike the requirement (listed in two places) to disburse funds within 60 days of receipt from the Organization for Mission, Appendix A: Financial Issues, so that the sections would read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The obligations of designators are to:
"a. honor restrictions that have been accepted or to consider permitting additional support of a project beyond its approved budget;
"b. ensure conformity with all applicable civil law;
"c. report back to all donors and contributors;
"d. disburse money received within 60 days;
"e. contact all donors or contributors if restricted giving cannot be used according to its restrictions—if restrictions cannot be met and the donors or contributors do not agree to the use of funds for other purposes, the gifts are to be returned to the donor.”

The General Assembly will observe the following minimum standards for its operations. It is expected that presbyteries and synods will also adopt and adhere to these same standards:

“(1) Provide a detailed receipt to a contributor or congregation for all money received.
“(2) Close monthly and remit funds within sixty days of receipt.
“(3) Utilize the Federal Reserve system to expedite the transfer of funds whenever and wherever possible.
“(4) Use a standardized, detailed transmittal format for transmitting data and funds electronically between presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly.
“(5) Establish and follow cash management policies and procedures that are designed to maximize cash management earnings.”

Rationale

As a matter of transparency with donors, no one is served if policy is adopted, but cannot be implemented. The former sixty-day disbursal requirement may be reasonable if all funds received are for “pass through” accounts, that is, if the funds received are not actually gifts for the ministry of PC(USA), but rather are for the ministry of a related or third party organization. Theoretically, these gifts do not require management; they are simply received and disbursed, without manual or programmatic intervention. In fact, however, by IRS regulations, all tax-deductible gifts to PC(USA) are “gifts to PC(USA)” for its mission, and require due diligence and careful planning on the part of PC(USA).

Gifts toward budget items are disbursed according to the budget needs of the ministry, which may or may not occur within sixty days.

Gifts over and above the budget may be disbursed within sixty days, but this is not the practice for all gifts. Smaller gifts are often held in good stewardship until the total accumulates to a level where the gift may be used, justifying the expense of processing the payment.

Other gifts are intentionally held for long-term use, based on approved ministry needs and budgets.

Rather than possibly misleading donors with a provision regarding the timing of gift disbursement, this recommendation seeks to delete the requirement, in order to maintain a consistency between practice and policy.

Item 10-12

[The assembly approved Item 10-12. See pp. 61, 74.]

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve that the name of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) remain unchanged.

Rationale

This recommendation is in response to the following referral: 2010 Referral: Item 09-16. Recommendation 2. Request That ACREC Bring a Report and Recommendation of a New Name of ACREC to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 72, 84, 681–82).
The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a report from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), “Report on Creating A Climate for Change within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” which recommended that the term “racial ethnic” be replaced with a term that would include persons of color (ethnic and cultural groups not predominantly European in origin) that were becoming part of the demographics emerging in the United States. The General Assembly directed ACREC to consider changing ACREC’s name to reflect the growth of these new ethnic and cultural groups. With the assistance of the Reverend Dr. Virstan Choy, an ACREC subcommittee read, studied, and discussed what name would best reflect ACREC’s representation of new communities that are non-European in origin. This subcommittee was not able to make a definitive decision, and as a result, ACREC requested a two-year extension to discern whether there was a name that might more accurately reflect the work they are called to do. The 219th General Assembly (2010) granted ACREC a two-year extension.

For the past two years, the renaming subcommittee of ACREC has studied and reexamined the possibility of renaming ACREC. With professional consultation and extensive reading, the renaming subcommittee discussed various names. Ultimately, the committee voted to retain their name because they believe that race and ethnicity continue to dictate and shape the relationship between people of color and people who are primarily European in origin (termed “White”) whether the people of color are new immigrants or people whose communities are well-established. The committee determined that with their decision to keep their name, it was important to reiterate the role of race in the context of access to power and privilege, to be intentional about the inclusion of new immigrant fellowships in ACREC’s work, and to educate the denomination on the purpose and advocacy work of ACREC.

Why Advocacy for People of Color Is Still the Focus of ACREC

Allan G. Johnson, sociologist and author of the book Privilege, Power, and Difference, says that “White” as a classification of people is not about the color of skin; rather, it is a “code word” for who is “in” and who is not. In examining the social history of the United States, there have been periods when certain groups have not been considered “White” but who now are. For example, Irish Catholics, Italian Catholics, and European-ancestry Jews were once not considered White, but in the decade of 1960s, this began to change. All three groups are now considered “White.” These examples support Johnson’s definition of “White” as a code word for access and status and not a skin color. The question that needs to be addressed is not what constitutes “White,” but how does a person access the power and privilege that comes with being labeled “White?” How does one, no matter what the color of their skin, become part of the “in” crowd?

As long as there are people and groups of people who continue to meet barriers that keep them from being in the inner circle of the society they live in, there will be a need for continued advocacy for their voices. In a lecture at UC, Berkeley, in 2010, Allan Johnson spoke of “unearned” power and privilege being invisible to those who have it and have always had it. Johnson demonstrates how individuals in the dominant culture defend themselves against accusations of racism, when in fact, it is not necessarily the individuals who are racist, but the systems in which they participate and live. United States’ society reflects a historical system of power and privilege where some social groups enter that system with the major advantage of inherited power and privilege.

A good illustration of this unearned and often unrecognized privilege is seen in Peggy McIntosh’s “White Privilege: Unpacking the Invisible Knapsack,” a short and now famous article that lists privileges taken for granted by the dominant, culture of those European in origin. McIntosh says “White privilege is like an invisible weightless knapsack of special provisions, maps, passports, codebooks, visas, clothes, tools and blank checks” that give unearned advantage to those who carry the knapsack. Allan Johnson likens living in a system as exists in the U.S. to playing a game of monopoly in which one person always “ends up with everything” and everyone else “ends up with nothing” because the game is designed that way. Even if four saintly “Mother Teresas” were playing the game, says Johnson, one would dominate the rest. Sociologists note that it is easier to detect racism in systems and institutions of our society if we look at the wider picture, rather than trying to pick out privileged individuals who are benefiting from the system because of its inherent discriminatory design.

Given the current economic downturn, it is also important to be reminded that the dominant culture of those European in origin is always better off in these situations than the more vulnerable people of color, who often find themselves in poorer communities. Inequality and poverty are compounded for those who have little or no access to the “invisible knapsack.” Since the presidency of Ronald Reagan and the advent of Milton Friedman’s “trickle down economics,” a popular argument has been that “a rising tide lifts all boats.” In order to benefit from this kind of system, however, one must first “have a boat.” This lack of insight is a direct result of that “invisible knapsack” of privilege, and it only highlights how those with privilege cannot see past their own paradigm.

Johnson uses a very instructive metaphor by analogizing the day-to-day struggle of the working and middle classes to a game of musical chairs, with the chairs representing wealth and/or upward mobility. In the last three decades especially, as the participants of this “game” of musical chairs have worked to acquire a chair before the music stops, more and more people have found themselves on the floor without a chair, says Johnson. More than ever before, this country has “produced more chairs” but there are fewer and fewer of them out there in the “game” for people to sit on. We have produced the chairs, says Johnson, in greater supply than ever before, but where are they? The problem, he says, is not with the production of Access is becoming more difficult for most people, and most difficult for people of color.

In the midst of this severe inequality and hypersensitivity to our racial and ethnic differences comes the question of whom ACREC needs to advocate for. While it was suggested to ACREC in the past that “White” is an ethnicity that also needs advocacy, ACREC’s mandate is to speak out for those whose access to power and privilege is limited and even nonexistent. Our nation is now approximately 60 percent “White,” and the PC(USA) is approximately 90 percent “White.” When “White” members of our society ask why they cannot be included as an ethnicity that needs advocacy, they are unaware of their knapsack of privilege.

An intentional effort needs to be made to educate all persons, both white and persons of color about, (1) the invisible, unearned privileges of the dominant culture, (2) how to recognize the unequal U.S. social economic system based on privilege, and (3) how to embrace the beloved community that acknowledges and respects our common humanity while celebrating differences amongst the vast kaleidoscope of faces of all children of God.

In the most unequal economic times in America since the Great Depression, now more than ever, ACREC needs to advocate for racial ethnic communities in our midst, especially the new immigrant communities who struggle the most. As our history has shown, until this trend is reversed, people of color will be by far the most affected victims of this inequality. It is ACREC’s task, as mentioned in our mission statement, to “advocate for full access for all racial ethnic/immigrant groups” and to continue to call to the church’s attention issues of concern affecting these groups, both in our church and in society.

Item 10-14

The General Assembly Mission Council, upon recommendation of the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force, recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:
1. Set a shared goal to be owned by the whole church to increase total Special Offering receipts to $20 million in the year 2020—20 by 20.

   Rationale for Recommendation 1.

   “your young … shall see visions, and your old … shall dream dreams” (Acts 2:17)

   “where there is no prophecy, the people cast off restraint” (Prov. 29:18)

   “I am about to do a new thing … do you not perceive it?” (Isa. 43:19)

   Modern Presbyterians embrace giving and generosity in a different way from previous generations. Donors seek an emotional connection to ministry that changes lives. Special Offerings provide a direct connection to a multitude of transformational ministries. Therefore, there is a tremendous untapped potential in Special Offerings.

   The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved the request to commission a Special Offerings Advisory Task Force, which would:

   - Review the possible role and functions of Special Offerings,
   - Examine the role of Special Offerings within the larger communication and funds development contexts of the denomination,
   - Encourage and expand the role of Special Offerings as a connective tissue of the church,
   - Identify what Special Offerings can do best and what steps need to be taken in order to enable them to do that well.

   The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force has embraced this opportunity to take a fresh look at the role of Special Offerings within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—for the first time since the reconfiguration of Special Offerings at reunion a generation ago.

   This opportunity to review Special Offerings and provide recommendations comes at a crucial time, as the offerings are no longer working as they once did for the church. For the past decade, Special Offerings have been in decline. We live in a time of great transformation for the church, as evidenced by the move away from regulatory structures to approaches that are uniquely customizable locally by those seeking to be faithful in their own context. The task force believes that similar changes are required for Special Offerings, in order to transform Special Offerings to a place of esteemed commitment by the denomination to Christ’s mission.

   We have initiated conversations about the offerings with leaders and members of small, mid-sized, and large congregations, both from those who participate in Special Offerings and from those who do not. We have reached out to presbytery leaders, General Assembly committee members, and front-line ministry staff in the areas funded by Special Offerings. Our goal was to build upon what is already working, and to make changes in other areas that would reconnect Special Offerings to the mission of the denomination in flexible and nimble ways.

   Our recommendations, we believe, strengthen Special Offerings and are faithful to the input we heard from those we engaged. We have great hope that the recommendations, if approved, will result in increased funding for Christ’s mission … with a specific target we are recommending for churchwide embrace: 20 by 20 ($20 million in Special Offerings annual receipts by the year 2020).

   The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force believes that God is calling PC(USA) to a new vision of missional generosity and commitment as a denomination. Special Offerings unite us in mission. Special Offerings allow churches of all sizes to participate in mission together. Special Offerings give opportunities for Presbyterians in every place to contribute as they are able. Special Offerings allow for churches and members to choose areas of passion and impact. Together, we can do more than any of us apart.

   The task force resists any approach that passively accepts the current rate of decline as inevitable, pointing to a shrinking denomination or a challenging economy. Rather, as a blessed and faithful people, Presbyterians must listen more attentively than ever to Christ’s call.

   The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force urges the General Assembly Mission Council and the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve a bold, transformational goal that will challenge Presbyterians to higher levels of impactful mission than ever before, and to engage Special Offerings with renewed energy, fervor, and commitment.
The task force recommends a goal of $20 million in Special Offerings receipts annually by the year 2020—this is our “20/20 Vision to Impact the world as Presbyterians united in Special Offerings mission.”

The task force believes this goal to be achievable, with appropriate investment in funds development and communications staff, technology, and infrastructure as recommended below.

Our consultants, The Alford Group, have also deemed the goal achievable. Other mainline denominations are successfully adopting church-wide unified goals for occasional offering mission endeavors and utilizing technology to champion and facilitate giving. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force believes that it is time for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to make a bold commitment for growth in mission.

Reaching this goal in 2020 will require a 50 percent increase over the total 2010 giving level to Special Offerings. However, the recommendations of this task force strengthen each of the Special Offerings, linking them more closely to the liturgical seasons in which they are received, allowing for a season of interpretation for each offering, and providing a variety of technological means for individuals and congregations to participate in the offerings. While a 50 percent increase within a decade may seem steep, on a per-member giving basis, an increase of $3.50 is well within reach. The question is whether we together as a denomination have a vision for doing something more together. We, as members of the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force, believe that we do. (See Figures 1 and 2 in game-special-offerings-task-force-rec-graphs.pdf; see also page 940.)

[The assembly approved Item 10-14, Recommendation 2. See pp. 61, 76.]

2. Approve the following revised Special Offerings Criteria and update Appendix A, Section C.1.a. of the Organization for Mission:

   “a. Criteria for Participation in Receiving Special Offerings Funds

   “The Special Offerings operate within the PC(USA) as a distinct but integrated part of the church’s overall, coordinated funds development and communication strategy. As they provide important sinew bonds for the connectional church, they are too valuable a resource to be squandered on emphases of passing interest to church members a critical resource for the long-term mission of the whole church. The following criteria attempt to outline ways of discerning whether a particular focus ministry is eligible to be considered for funding by one of these special offerings.

   “(1) Churchwide Special Offerings ministries will provide valuable mission interpretation opportunities within the overall funds development and communications strategy of the whole church.

   “(2) Churchwide Special Offerings ministries will enable the church to meet historical and ongoing needs in relationship to the total mission priorities of the church, always proclaiming the name of Jesus.

   “(3) Causes included in a churchwide special offering Special Offerings ministries will have demonstrated potential for churchwide donor support.

   “(4) Causes included in a churchwide special offering Special Offerings ministries will specifically define the needs to be met, provide plans will be provided for funds’ allocation, program ministry implementation, set measurable goals, and demonstrate impact, effectiveness, and accountability to the General Assembly Mission Council.

   “(5) Causes grouped within the same churchwide special offering will have a focused, coherent mission purpose.”

   Rationale for Recommendation 2

   The Organization for Mission provides for a quadrennial review of Special Offerings criteria and operating guidelines, as well as their form and distribution. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force was charged with conducting this review. In this recommendation the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force addresses the criteria for receiving Special Offerings funds as found in the Organization for Mission, Appendix A: Financial Issues.

   The editorial changes recommended here emphasize Special Offerings’ contribution to the church’s missional identity and call. While Special Offerings are unique, they are also a part of the church’s larger vision for mission and funding.
In its research and interviews, the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force discovered a widespread desire to improve the missional effectiveness of the ministries that receive funds from Special Offerings, both to maximize the impact of mission dollars and to ensure the contributor’s confidence in Special Offerings ministries. The changes in the fourth criterion are directed at this concern, and define the General Assembly Mission Council as the responsible party for ensuring this level of oversight.

[The assembly approved Item 10-14, Recommendation 3. See pp. 61, 76.]

3. Approve the following revised Operating Guidelines for Special Offerings in Appendix A of the Organization for Mission, Section C.1.b.: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “b. Operating Guidelines for Special Offerings

   “In order to fulfill the promise of special offerings, the following principles and practices are necessary to will guide the churchwide special offerings of the PC(USA):

   “(1) Review

   “(a) On an annual basis, the General Assembly Mission Council Executive Director, or designee, will review Special Offerings ministries’ impact, effectiveness, and accountability against stated goals. The review will also include the appropriateness of Special Offerings ministries’ reserves. Funds development expense and staffing will also be reviewed annually with respect to goals, effectiveness, and strategies. All review findings will be forwarded to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

   “(b) On a four-year cycle, the General Assembly Mission Council will provide a task force for the review and evaluation of the cause Special Offerings and the recipient ministries supported by churchwide special offerings, and will consider the recommendation for causing Special Offerings purposes in light of established criteria, for recommendation to the General Assembly. Between reviews, the task force created for this evaluation will continue to review performance, accountability, and accumulation of reserves on an annual basis and will forward its findings to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). Finally, this task force will send its findings and active questions to the successor task force.

   “(2) When allocating funds, the General Assembly Mission Council will align Special Offerings ministries with its strategic vision and mission.

   “(3) Each GAMC Special Offerings ministry will maintain financial reserves of not more than two years of that ministry’s annual budget. Understanding the particularity of Presbyterian disaster response ministries, with commitment to long-term recovery, it is understood that disaster response funds are exempt from this requirement, provided that the GAMC has approved and annually reviews a plan for disbursement.

   “(4) Churchwide special offerings promotions will occur in a central promotions office the GAMC’s Communications and Funds Development ministry area rather than within programmatic entities.

   “(5) Costs of promoting and receiving each churchwide special offering Special Offerings will be paid from receipts of the offering. After deducting each offering’s costs from total receipts, restricted and unrestricted, of that offering, all receipts will then be considered permanently restricted, and will be used only for the purposes for which they were given to the purpose of the Offering. Each offering’s Offering’s costs will be determined by the GAMC through its regular budget process.

   “(6) Start-up costs for new or significantly revised special offerings Special Offerings will be expensed as incurred.

   “(7) Promotion materials for a special offerings Special Offerings will relate to the liturgical season in which the offering Offering is received.

   “(8) Any change in the pattern of distribution of a churchwide special offerings Special Offerings will require allow for an eighteen-month time period before becoming effective to allow adequate time for development and distribution of interpretive and promotional materials.

   “(9) There will be no more than five four churchwide special offerings Special Offerings in any given calendar year. The General Assembly will identify times for the promotion and receipt of offerings Offerings.

   “(10) The agencies ministries receiving churchwide special offerings Special Offerings funds will prepare an annual report concerning the receipt and distribution of those special offerings Special Offerings funds for review by the General Assembly Mission Council. This report, which shall include a compilation of reports from congregations and middle governing bodies where portions of the offering have remained summarizing their use, will be made available to churches and other governing bodies council.

“(9) All programs ministries receiving funds from churchwide special offerings Special Offerings will work with mission interpretation Communications and Funds Development staff to identify and develop networks of potential interpreters throughout the church.

“(10) All churchwide special offerings Special Offerings will develop interpretive materials that are well-grounded in Reformed theology and appropriate to the offering’s Offering’s recommended liturgical season.

“(13) To advance mission and acknowledge generosity, congregations are asked to submit Special Offerings receipts directly to the GAMC and presbytery as designated by each Offering. GAMC will record and notify presbyteries of congregational donations and thank congregations in a timely manner.”

Rationale for Recommendation 3.

The Organization for Mission provides for a quadrennial review of Special Offerings criteria and operating guidelines, as well as their form and distribution. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force was charged with overseeing this review, and proposing any necessary revisions to the operating guidelines for Special Offerings. This recommendation addresses the operating guidelines for Special Offerings, as found in the Organization for Mission, Appendix A: Financial Issues.

Guideline 1

Organizational effectiveness requires ongoing attention and continuing nurture. Representative task forces are not well suited to overseeing the regular annual review, evaluation, and improvement of Special Offerings ministries. By assigning responsibility and authority for annual evaluation to the GAMC Executive Director, to be reported to the elected GAMC, the church is ensured that Special Offerings ministries receive current attention and refinement. Likewise, by assigning responsibility and authority for review to a task force every four years, the church engages an evenhanded system of checks and balances. In this way, Special Offerings ministries receive input from, and partnership with, elected leadership, appointed leadership, and staff.

Guideline 2

Historically, Special Offerings ministries received funding largely independent of denominational goal setting, strategic budget planning processes, and an overall vision for denominational mission. This produced a consistent funding flow for these recipient programs, without requiring integration and coordination with other priorities, and was effective so long as the offering receipts grew to keep pace with changing needs.

Over the last decade, however, the trend line for Special Offerings receipts has fallen. Since 2007, the decline has been even more dramatic. The General Assembly Mission Council has been strategic in aligning its mission budget within an overall vision for denominational work, but Special Offerings ministries have largely remained outside that coordinated planning process. By aligning Special Offerings ministries with the General Assembly Mission Council’s strategic vision and mission, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) allows its elected leadership flexibility, nimbleness, and license to direct mission dollars to their areas of greatest impact.

Together we can align our efforts toward a single set of denominational priorities, through the funds allocation process.

Guideline 3

Financial reserves are faithful when they foster responsible planning and ensure dependable funding for the near term. Reserves are unfaithful when they go unspent amidst urgent human need. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force was charged with reviewing the reserve levels for each Special Offerings ministry. We have not found any current reserve level to be inappropriate. This recommendation provides guidance for staff on an ongoing basis, striking a balance between utilizing all available funds and proper contingency planning.

Guideline 9

The previous quadrennial review process called for four Special Offerings, but left open the possibility of five Special Offerings, by leaving “five” in the guidelines. The research of this task force, however, shows conclusively that the denomination is unwilling to support more than four special offerings. Less than 3 percent of specialized clergy, pastors, elders, or members felt that four Special Offerings were too few. Therefore, we recommend that the guidelines call for no more than four Special Offerings.
10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

Are four special offerings: | Members | Elders | Pastors | Specialized Clergy
---|---|---|---|---
Too many? | 19% | 25% | 31% | 16%
The right number? | 40% | 44% | 50% | 56%
Too few? | 2% | 1% | 1% | 3%
Not sure? | 39% | 30% | 18% | 24%

Guideline 10

Each ministry of the church is called to effective witness and mission. By setting clear and measurable goals and reviewing them annually, Special Offerings ministries will heighten impact and continue to build contributor confidence.

Guideline 13

The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force worked with a consulting firm, The Alford Group, to conduct focus groups, interviews, and internal assessments of PC(USA) processes and procedures. The Alford Group found that there are inconsistencies in the denomination’s records of what funds have been contributed by specific churches and the numbers the church has on record. This inconsistency in reporting and recording makes it extremely difficult to appropriately acknowledge and thank congregations. Participating congregations report that acknowledgement was irregular or they did not recall being acknowledged for their contribution.

The Presbyterian Panel also asked questions about gift acknowledgement with regard to the Christmas Joy Offering and found that most individuals had no recollection of being thanked for their gifts.

Did your congregation receive a letter from the PC(USA) thanking the congregation for its 2010 contributions to the Christmas Joy Offering?

| Did your congregation receive a letter from the PC(USA) thanking the congregation for its 2010 contributions to the Christmas Joy Offering? | Members | Elders | Pastors | Specialized Clergy |
---|---|---|---|---|
Yes, and I read it or heard it read | 6% | 16% | 44% | 16%
Yes, but I didn’t read it or hear it read | 3% | 6% | 8% | 6%
No | 3% | 3% | 4% | 3%
Don’t know | 88% | 76% | 43% | 75%

Since members are more likely to contribute to an organization that they believe will be a good steward of their contributions, and as PC(USA) works to further engage churches in the Special Offerings, it will be important to build confidence in processes and record-keeping as well as to communicate directly with churches regarding the impact of their gifts.

Currently, it is common for months to pass between congregations receiving the offering and their contributions reaching the Special Offerings ministries. The simplest process for getting dollars from the pew and into active mission is for local congregations to remit their contributions directly. For the Special Offerings where funding is shared between a presbytery and the General Assembly Mission Council, the task force proposal would encourage congregations to remit their contributions directly to their presbytery and to the General Assembly Mission Council. For the Special Offerings where General Assembly agencies are the sole recipient, then the task force proposal encourages congregations to remit directly to the General Assembly Mission Council.

In each case, the GAMC will acknowledge the gifts of congregations in a timely manner, including notification to the presbytery.
4. Approve the following Seasons and Ministries of Special Offerings for 2014–2017: [The following text shows the changes being suggested from the approved text of Item 08-03 from the Minutes of the 218th General Assembly (2008), Part I, pp. 586–87. “a. CHRISTMAS JOY OFFERING:

“(1) Season: interpreted and received during throughout the Advent and Christmas seasons in gratitude for God’s gift of Jesus Christ to prepare and care for church leaders in every generation.

“(2) Causes Ministries:

“(1) (a) Assistance programs to meet identified and emerging needs for professional church workers and spouses through the Board of Pensions, 50 percent;

“(2) (b) Racial ethnic education church leadership development through Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries the General Assembly Mission Council, 50 percent.

“b. ONE GREAT HOUR OF SHARING:

“(1) Season: interpreted and received during Lent and on Easter Sunday in response to Christ’s call to us to feed the hungry, house the homeless, minister to the suffering, and empower the poor and oppressed sacrificial love for world.

“(2) Causes administered through the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministry. Causes: Ministries of justice, peace, development and compassion as determined bi-annually by the General Assembly Mission Council such as:

“(1) (a) Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, 32 percent community development;

“(2) (b) Presbyterian Hunger Program, 36 percent disaster assistance;

“(3) (c) Self Development of People, 32 percent hunger ministries;

“(d) peacemaking endeavors.

“c. PENTECOST OFFERING:

“(1) Season: interpreted and received in relation to during the Pentecost Sunday season to celebrate God’s gift of the Holy Spirit for a new generation in support of ministry with youth and young adults and in response to the needs of children at risk.

“(2) Causes Ministries: Ministries with youth and young adults and children-at-risk:

“(1) (a) Fifty percent will be used for Youth and Young Adult Ministries and divided as follows 60% allocated bi-annually by the General Assembly Mission Council for:

“(b) (ii) World Mission, 12.5 percent (for national volunteers in shared ministry Ministries encouraging young adult Christian service in national and international settings;

“(e) (iii) World Mission, 12.5 percent (for international volunteers in shared ministry) Ministries advocating justice on behalf of children.

“(2) Ten percent will be used for its Children at Risk programs through the Child Advocacy Office in the Peace and Justice Ministry.

“(3) (2) 40 percent Retained retained by Congregations, congregations for ministries such as Vacation Bible School, 40 percent. Congregations are encouraged to use this 40 percent for college and campus ministry ministries, camping, and/or camps, and conference centers, children in need, and youth mission trips in their region in addition to Children at Risk ministries. Such purposes are in keeping with the goal of keeping youth and young adult ministries at camps and college campus setting supported and vibrant.

“d. PEACEMAKING OFFERING, interpreted and received in relation to World Communion Sunday, recognizing the call to bring Christ’s peace to all creation. Causes:
“Holistic peacemaking programs sensitive to the restoration of God’s creation and including peacemaking in individuals, families, congregations, communities, the international arena, and the environment through:

“(1) General Assembly Council, Presbyterian Peacemaking, 50 percent;
“(2) Synods and Presbyteries, 25 percent;
“(3) Congregations, 25 percent.

d. THE WORLD COMMUNION OFFERING

“(1) Season: Interpreted and received in preparation for and dedicated on World Communion Sunday, recognizing Christ’s Great Commission to witness “in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, and to the ends of the earth” (Mt. 28:19–20, Acts 1:8).

“(2) Ministries: For God’s global mission of witness and justice

“(a) 25 percent to be used by congregations for local witness and outreach to the world;
“(b) 25 percent to be used by presbyteries for shared witness and outreach to the world;
“(c) 50 percent to be allocated bi-annually by the GAMC for global witness and outreach beyond the United States”

In the spirit of Items 10-19 and 10-5 (overtures from the Presbyteries of Pittsburgh and Western North Carolina), it is important to maintain existing programs, percentages, and designees in the One Great Hour of Sharing, the Christmas Joy Offering, the Pentecost offerings [and the Peacemaking Offering]. The 220th General Assembly (2012) recommends that the [current distribution patterns be maintained for the next funding cycle and that the existing Special Offerings Task Force be asked to report to the 221st General Assembly (2014) on the effect of new fund raising techniques, to work collaboratively with funding recipients, update progress on the 20 million by 2020 goal, and recommend additional strategies].

[World Communion offering be shared by Global Missions and Peacemaking and distributed in the following manner:

50 percent GAMC, Presbyterian Peacemaking]
25 percent to be allocated bi-annually by the GAMC for global witness and outreach beyond the United States]
20 percent to be used by congregations, and]
5 percent by presbyteries for peacemaking and or outreach to the world.]

Rationale for Recommendation 4.

The Organization for Mission provides for a quadrennial review of Special Offerings criteria and operating guidelines, as well as their form and distribution. The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force was charged with this review. This recommendation addresses the form and distribution of Special Offerings for the next quadrennium (2014–2017).

The four Special Offerings offer each Presbyterian an opportunity to demonstrate the witness of Christ locally and throughout the world. Historically, these offerings have provided a significant contribution to our mission budget, and we are hopeful that this contribution will increase over the coming years, with the benefit of some specific changes in the offerings that will make the offerings easier to promote and demonstrate a tighter connection between the gift of donors and recipient ministries.

The Operating Guidelines for Special Offerings call for a close relationship between the promotion of each offering and the liturgical season in which it is received. Our changes seek to tighten and align the offerings within each liturgical focus.

Our research suggested that each offering would benefit from a season of interpretation, rather than being limited to a single day in the life of the church, so we have made changes in each offering to expand the period in which a congregation might choose to interpret and receive the offering.

We have also sought to integrate the offerings into the visioning and strategic planning work of the General Assembly Mission Council, so that the denomination gains flexibility to use these critical funds strategically.

In most cases, the task force proposal changes the distribution pattern away from specific ministry programs, where there is less flexibility and directs the distribution instead toward topical areas of ministry. In most cases, the General Assembly Mission Council would be the body that recommends specific distribution of receipts across those topical areas of ministry, when it recommends a budget to each General Assembly. In this way, we have a holistic sense of the work of each offering, rather than solely funding the work of one office, in one ministry area, without alignment with our overall mission. As part of this shift, the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force also recommends eliminating percentage allocations that direct how funds will be used.

It is not the intent of the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force to defund any ministry. Rather, we believe that ministry prioritization and funding allocations are the responsibility of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), in partnership with the General Assembly. Special Offerings are one revenue stream alongside others for funding GAMC ministries. Aligning Special Offerings with the GAMC strategic planning process requires that the GAMC have flexibility for funding allocations within those priorities in accordance with the broad designations established for the Special Offerings.

Finally, The Alford Group helped us see growth potential for the offerings by making specific suggestions for how congregations and presbyteries could use their share of Special Offerings receipts. Our recommendations include suggestions for local opportunities related to Special Offerings. By exciting churches and presbyteries about the change that they can affect in their own communities, it is possible to increase the engagement of the pastor, session, mission committee, and members. In addition, church members who see an impact close to home are more likely to increase their overall giving.

1. Rationale for Revisions to the Christmas Joy Offering

   The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force has sought to expand the season of interpretation for the Christmas Joy Offering by including both the Advent and Christmas seasons as possible windows of interpretation by congregations. For some, the Advent season is too busy for other emphases. For others, Advent is not imaginable without the opportunity to participate in the Christmas Joy Offering. We seek to make room for both types of congregations by expanding the season.

   The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force also recommends a change in the primary purpose of the offering. Promotion for the Christmas Joy Offering hasn’t always been clearly integrated. It has benefited “assistance programs of the Board of Pensions,” and “racial ethnic education,” each receiving 50 percent of the offering. To many it has seemed as though the two causes were unrelated, and had simply been tossed together as part of the reunion of the northern and southern churches a quarter-century ago. True as that may be, it has now been twenty-five years since reunion, and we believe it is time to build a new unity into this offering. By focusing our own giving through the Christmas Joy Offering on “gratitude for God’s gift of Jesus Christ” in order “to prepare and care for church leaders in every generation,” we believe that a single focus may be possible: the Christmas Joy Offering would be about preparing and caring for church leaders in every generation. We do that in part through the assistance programs of the Board of Pensions, and we do that in part through racial ethnic church leadership development, all in gratitude for God’s gift in Jesus Christ.

   The GAMC portion of the Christmas Joy Offering has supported several emphases during its history, always with a connection to racial ethnic leadership. For several years, it was specifically focused on “racial ethnic schools and colleges.” Then it was changed to “racial ethnic education.” It is the hope of the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force that the General Assembly will choose to tighten this focus on “racial ethnic church leadership development,” in keeping with the strategic leadership development goals of the GAMC.

   We believe passionately that 50 percent of Christmas Joy Offering funds should be spent to develop future racial ethnic leaders for church leadership. As a task force, we have no specific recommendation on how the General Assembly Mission Council should allocate these funds. In a separate recommendation, we propose that the GAMC create a short-term task force of racial ethnic church leaders to give advice on how these funds might best be used for this purpose.

   We expect that some may react to the possible loss of funding by racial ethnic schools and colleges (the current recipient, under the present distribution to “racial ethnic education.”) The task force is sensitive to the needs of racial ethnic schools and colleges, and notes the critical line in the “Articles of Agreement” for reunion from 1983:

   > Racial ethnic educational institutions have been the primary source from which racial ethnic church leadership has developed. Consistent with the dire need for racial ethnic leadership, the General Assembly shall propose to the General Assembly ways whereby the General Assembly shall be able to fulfill its responsibility for education through colleges and secondary schools and for meeting the operational and developmental needs of racial ethnic church leaders. (Book of Order, Articles of Agreement, Article 8.4, p. B-8)

   Guided by Article 8.4, the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force acknowledges that the General Assembly Mission Council will need to revisit the funding patterns used to support and sustain Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPREI).

   In this paradigm the GAMC will reexamine, redefine, and refocus its funding patterns for HPREI, within the context of “racial ethnic church leadership,” as called for by Article 8.4. As part of the aforementioned task force, we hope that the GAMC will continue in dialogue with the HPREI leadership and other stakeholders.

   A similar issue of a special task force was also raised by the Racial Ethnic Educational Support Work Group (2006), which stated in its report:

8.4 Racial ethnic educational institutions have been the primary source from which racial ethnic church leadership has developed. Consistent with the dire need for racial ethnic leadership, the General Assembly shall propose to the General Assembly ways whereby the General Assembly shall be able to fulfill its responsibility for education through colleges and secondary schools and for meeting the operational and developmental needs of racial ethnic church leaders. (Book of Order, Articles of Agreement, Article 8.4, p. B-8)
The work group recommends that the National Ministries Division convene a small group of persons with relevant expertise to develop measurements and standards that will help ensure a quality education for those attending Christmas Joy Offering-supported schools and colleges—for instance, that faculties are strong, that facilities are adequate, that curriculum and instruction are competent and that there is reasonably long-range stability.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) responded by approving four recommendations:

1. The General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, Racial Ethnic Support Work Group, recommends that the 217th General Assembly (2006) reaffirm the church’s mission of racial ethnic educational support and its commitment to the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPREI): Barber-Scotia College, Cook College and Theological School, Johnson C. Smith University, Knoxville College, Sheldon Jackson College, Stillman College, Menaul School, and Presbyterian Pan American School. …

2. The General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, Racial Ethnic Support Work Group, recommends to the 217th General Assembly (2006) that a special group (including a representative of Mission Support Services (MSS)) be formed to develop educational guidelines and standards and a method for applying them in order to ensure that the Christmas Joy Offering supports institutions that can most effectively serve populations for whom access to educational opportunities would otherwise be difficult if not impossible to attain. These educational guidelines, standards, and the method for applying them should be completed, enacted and reported to the 218th General Assembly (2008). …

3. The General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, Racial Ethnic Support Work Group, recommends to the 217th General Assembly (2006) that until such guidelines and standards are established the Christmas Joy Offering continue to be used exclusively for the historically Presbyterian racial ethnic institutions with whom the GAC has traditionally covenanted. …

4. The General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, Racial Ethnic Support Work Group, recommends to the 217th General Assembly (2006) that the General Assembly Council (GAC) consider establishing a special fund and case statement to help meet the unique needs of the HPREIs. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp.1082–1089, Item 1081.)

In 2008, the General Assembly approved the General Assembly Council’s response, which established institutional standards for participating in the Christmas Joy Offering:

Institutional Standards for Participating in the Christmas Joy Offering

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessors have a long history of support for minority education. That support continues through the distribution of funds collected annually through the Christmas Joy Offering, one-half of which is designated for support of Historic Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPREI).1 In order to be a good steward of these funds and accountable to those who contribute to the offering, the church establishes the following formula for the dissemination of monies from the Christmas Joy Offering designated for racial ethnic education.

I. BASE GRANTS

One half of the funds distributed shall be earmarked for Base Grants to institutions that meet the following criteria:

A. Mission. An institution must show evidence of commitment to the stated mission of its governing board and to the mission goals of the General Assembly Council (GAC) of the PC(USA). Those goals include:

1. Leadership and Vocation
2. Spirituality and Discipleship
3. Justice and Compassion
4. Evangelism and Witness

The evidence must demonstrate that an institution’s mission is understood and supported by all of its constituent groups and must include a covenant between the institution and one or more church governing bodies and published statements in the institution’s catalogue, promotional materials, and other public documents.

B. Audit. By November 1 each year, an institution must provide to the church an independent audit by a certified public accountant of the institution’s financial condition during the previous fiscal year.

C. Strategic Plan. An institution must provide a current three- to five-year strategic plan for the institution’s continued operation.

D. Accreditation.

1. Degree granting institutions must be accredited by a U.S. Department of Education-approved accrediting association. Institutions that are not accredited will have a three-year period in which to achieve accreditation.

2. Non-degree granting institutions must have an alternative educational model that is consistent with their mission to educate racial ethnic students and has been approved by the General Assembly Council in lieu of accreditation.

3. Institutions must demonstrate how they provide financial support for students.

E. Racial Ethnic Student Enrollment. Enrollment of racial ethnic students must be demonstrated by an institution’s mission and substantiated by the demographics of its student body.

II. PERFORMANCE INDICATORS

Of funds not earmarked for Base Grants:
A. Mission Validity.

Twenty percent (20%) will be available to institutions that demonstrate mission validity by meeting the following criteria. For each criteria that is met, an institution will receive one-sixth (1/6) of the total amount for which it is eligible based on mission validity.

1. Evidence of Racial Ethnic Mission
   a. An institution must demonstrate a racial ethnic composition within its student enrollment of at least fifty percent (50%).
   b. An institution must demonstrate that at least seventy-five percent (75%) of its students are financial disadvantaged and eligible for need-based aid.

2. Evidence of Successful Educational Program
   a. An institution must show evidence of having a qualified faculty to serve the enrolled student body.
   b. An institution must demonstrate a retention rate of at least seventy percent (70%) of its students from the first to the second year for colleges or from year to year for secondary schools.

3. Evidence of Achievement
   a. An institution must demonstrate a six-year persistence to graduation rate of at least forty percent (40%).
   b. An institution must have in place a systematic outcomes assessment program.

B. Institutional Viability.

Twenty percent (20%) will be available to institutions that demonstrate institutional viability by meeting the following criteria. Accreditation without sanction by the appropriate regional accrediting association is a prerequisite to receiving Institutional Viability funds. For each of the other criteria met, an institution shall receive one-seventh (1/7) of the amount for which it is eligible.

1. Evidence of Financial Integrity
   a. An institution must show evidence of a balanced budget within constraints approved by its governing board.
   b. An institution must be able to produce an unqualified independent audit of financial operations for the previous fiscal year.

2. Evidence of Long-Range Strength
   a. An institution must show evidence of a systematic plan for raising funds to support the institution beyond what is received through tuition and financial aid.
   b. An institution must show a debt-to-net-worth ratio within the recommended limits of the National Association of College and University Business Officers (NACUBO).

3. Strength of Governing Board
   a. An institution’s governing board must broadly represent constituencies served by the institution and the public.
   b. An institution’s governing board must demonstrate through financial support an active participation in the work of the board.
   c. An institution’s governing board must demonstrate its responsibility for policy determination, oversight of the institution, and respect for the boundaries of its responsibility.

C. Contingency Funds.

Ten percent (10%) will be available for institutions faced with emergency costs that have no other means of covering those costs.

III. SITE VISITS

In order to ensure compliance with these standards, educational institutions that receive money from the Christmas Joy Offering will be reviewed every four years by a team that includes:

1. The president of a comparable institution
2. A person knowledgeable about the higher education evaluation process
3. A member of the General Assembly Council
4. The GAC associate for Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges (ex officio)

Endnote

1. These institutions include Barber Scotia College, Cook School for Christian Leadership, Johnson C. Smith University, Knoxville College, Sheldon Jackson College, Stillman College, Menaul School, and Presbyterian Pan American School. (Source: Minutes, 2008 Part I, pp. 584–86, Item 08-02.)
The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force recognizes the need for ongoing financial support of our racial ethnic educational institutions and observes that this is not necessarily a responsibility of Special Offerings. Article 8.4 of the Articles of Agreement directs the General Assembly Mission Council to “…propose to the General Assembly ways whereby the General Assembly shall be able to fulfill its responsibility …” (Book of Order, Articles of Agreement, 8.4, p. B-8). There is a clear need to explore potential and creative means of expanding the funding base for these valuable and dynamic institutions, and the General Assembly Mission Council should propose possible solutions.

By refocusing the GAMC portion on “racial ethnic church leadership development,” the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force believes that the offering will become stronger and more compelling to donors. (See Figure 3 in gamc-special-offerings-task-force-rec-graphs.pdf; see also page 941.)

2. Rationale for Revisions to the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering

The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force seeks to strengthen the thematic unity of the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering by linking the offering to Christ’s call to sacrificial love for the world during the Lent and Easter seasons.

In the distribution section, following our effort to link the offerings to the strategic priorities of the General Assembly Mission Council, we have eliminated the mandated percentage distributions for the Offering and funding for specific program areas in the GAMC. Instead, we recommend that the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering fund ministries within four topical areas: community development, disaster assistance, hunger ministries, and peacemaking endeavors.

Three of these areas of ministries reflect traditional causes supported by the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering, but without the specific programmatic assignment, and without a designated percentage. The fourth area represents potentially a new focus area for One Great Hour of Sharing Offering receipts.

The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force seeks to strengthen the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering by focusing on compelling ministry areas, rather than particular programs. The General Assembly Mission Council would have flexibility in recommending specific use of these funds, within the parameters established for the Offering, subject to General Assembly approval in the budgeting process. With this linkage between pressing needs, established purposes, strategic alignment with GAMC priorities, and donor commitments, we feel that the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering will become stronger, and revenues will increase.

To better align Special Offerings, the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force proposes that peacemaking endeavors be joined with the ministries of compassion, peace, and justice supported by the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering. This proposal would discontinue the Peacemaking Offering as a stand-alone offering, while ensuring that peacemaking endeavors could continue to be funded by Special Offerings. This recommendation is not intended to defund peacemaking causes, but rather is part of an effort to align Special Offerings around the strategic priorities of the GAMC planning process.

The task force believes that peacemaking causes are a much better fit with the other current One Great Hour of Sharing Offering causes than with any other offering. The task force does not see this as threatening to the other One Great Hour of Sharing Offering causes, since with the diligent focus on offering interpretation and promotion called for in this report, the task force believes that offering receipts will grow over time, creating funding for the full complement of causes.

3. Rationale for Revisions to the Pentecost Offering

The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force has sought to strengthen the thematic unity of the Pentecost Offering by drawing a tighter focus on celebrating God’s gift of the Holy Spirit for a new generation. This theme unites the previous emphases of children-at-risk, youth, and young adults. After many thorough studies, surveys, and face-to-face conversations with pastors from small, medium, and large congregations, and presbytery leaders, the task force found that though the Pentecost Offering has maintained a considerable increase in receipts throughout the years, there has been little clarity of focus for the offering, and congregations have had difficulty describing its purpose, impact, and ways that the congregational portion might be used. Strengthening the focus for the offering and providing examples of ways that congregations can use their share of the offering will help to overcome this weakness.

In addition, traditionally, interpretation for, and receipt of, the Pentecost Offering has been limited to Pentecost Sunday. The task force recommendations expand the season of interpretation to include all of Pentecost, forging a creative link for congregations between the Pentecost Offering, and a congregation’s own early summer programs with children and youth.

The percentage distribution between the General Assembly Mission Council and congregations remains the same at the macro level, but the new recommendation no longer stipulates the distribution percentages for the General Assembly Mission Council. Instead, this determination will be made by the General Assembly Mission Council, based on its strategic planning process, and subject to the approval of the General Assembly during the budgeting process, as with the other Special Offerings.
4. Rationale for the Creation of a World Communion Offering

With great expectations, the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force proposes a new special offering, the World Communion Offering, to be dedicated on World Communion Sunday. Receipts would be used to support God’s global mission of witness and justice.

Jesus said, “From everyone to whom much has been given, much will be required; and from one to whom much has been entrusted, even more will be demanded” (Lk. 12: 48). The American church has a special place, call, and responsibility for engaging ministry in partnership outside of the United States.

Such an offering meets the criteria for a successful offering:

- A strong liturgical connection exists between partaking of the Lord’s Supper together and reaching out communally to share God’s love with the world.
- Interviews revealed widespread, passionate donor interest in global mission, without an easily accessible opportunity for funding that passion. A Special Offering focused on global mission would provide that opportunity for Presbyterians and potentially increase donor engagement.
- Interpretation opportunities abound to engage a wide audience of donors.

The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force believes that the Peacemaking Offering has maximized its potential to solicit donor support as a stand-alone offering. The Peacemaking Offering has consistently produced about $1.1 million each year, for the past twenty years. While there have been years in which occasionally the offering has had higher or lower receipts, over the past twenty years, response to the Peacemaking Offering has been flat. (See Figure 4 in gamc-special-offerings-task-force-rec-graphs.pdf; see also page 941.)

In addition, the number of congregations participating in the Peacemaking Offering has remained relatively flat over the past eight years.

The Pentecost Offering, while producing lower receipts and engaging less participation than the Peacemaking Offering, is a newer offering, and the response, both in terms of revenue and engagement, is increasing over its shorter tenure. The task force feels that it is wiser to strengthen the Pentecost Offering within its current focus. We affirm the ministry of peacemaking as an essential calling for Christ’s church, and therefore recommend moving “peacemaking endeavors” to the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering, and to repurpose the Special Offering on World Communion Sunday to the unmet purpose of global witness. We believe this proposed Special Offerings pattern will maximize the long-term potential for engaging donors and funding the mission of the denomination.

By making this recommendation, the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force is not intending to defund any peacemaking cause; rather we believe that peacemaking causes are a better fit with the current One Great Hour of Sharing Offering causes. The task force does not see this as threatening to the other One Great Hour of Sharing Offering causes since by increasing the focused promotion called for by this report, the task force believes that offering receipts will grow over time, creating funding for the full complement of causes, including peacemaking efforts. In addition, the GAMC may also choose to fund peacemaking endeavors from funds other than Special Offerings receipts.

The new World Communion Offering will be grounded in the scriptural call to spread the gospel of Christ around the world, beginning at home. Accordingly, a portion (25 percent) of offering receipts will be retained by congregations for their efforts of witness and outreach to the world. Another portion (25 percent) of the receipts will be sent to presbyteries for their shared ministries of witness and outreach to the world. The remainder (50 percent) of World Communion Offering receipts will be sent to the General Assembly Mission Council for global witness and outreach beyond the United States.
In 2007, the Presbyterian Panel asked participants about the possibility of creating an Offering that would benefit international mission personnel. More than 40 percent of members and elders and a majority of clergy supported the concept, and, among those in favor, more favored the possibility as a replacement for one of the other Offerings, than as an additional Offering. The majority of those who favored an Offering for international mission personnel as a replacement for one of the other Offerings overwhelmingly favored the replacement of the Peacemaking Offering:

Under this recommendation, the General Assembly Mission Council will be responsible for making specific allocations from the World Communion Offering for global witness and outreach beyond the United States as part of its regular budgeting process, for General Assembly approval. This change would be phased in over an eighteen-month period.

5. Celebrate and affirm efforts to coordinate funds development strategies among the General Assembly Mission Council, the Office of the General Assembly, the Board of Pensions, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation.

Rationale for Recommendation 5.

The Task Force’s research showed time and time again, “donor weariness” among Presbyterians in the pews. Congregations, presbyteries, the General Assembly Mission Council, the Board of Pensions, and many other causes bearing the denominational seal are repetitiously soliciting funds from the same individuals. Likewise, church leaders are confused and conflicted about which ministries of the church are allowed to solicit funds, from whom, using what methods, and with what authority. The Unified Budget model is in its final days while its successor system is ill-defined, poorly coordinated, and clumsy. This disorder cries out for communication and coordination between those who are soliciting funds. We commend those efforts.

6. Delay the full implementation of a new World Communion Offering until 2015, and continue the current distribution of the Peacemaking Offering during 2014. The GAMC may create a pilot program for the new World Communion Offering in 2013 and 2014, with a selection of congregations who have not historically participated in the Peacemaking Offering.

Rationale for Recommendation 6.

The Operating Guidelines for Special Offerings allow an eighteen-month window for implementing changes to Special Offerings. Accordingly, the changes being considered by the 220th General Assembly (2012) impact the 2014–2017 quadrennium for Special Offerings.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) will also be asked to approve the 2013–2014 General Assembly Mission Budget upon recommendation from the General Assembly Mission Council.

The recommendation to replace the current Peacemaking Offering with a new World Communion Offering, if approved by the General Assembly, would take effect in 2014, in the middle of a GAMC budget cycle. Due to the complexity of recommending a budget two years in advance (during 2012 for 2014), with an unproven funding stream (the new World Communion Offering, if approved by the General Assembly), the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force requests the General Assembly to delay the full implementation of the new offering by one year.

A delay would allow the General Assembly Mission Council to bring its budget recommendation, incorporating the new World Communion Offering, and changes to the One Great Hour of Sharing distribution, for the 2015–2016 cycle, to the 21st General Assembly (2014) for approval. This delay allows additional time for the development of the new Offering, and additional time for the transition away from the Peacemaking Offering as a source of funding for peacemaking ministries, prior to the shift to the One Great Hour of Sharing offering.

During 2013 and 2014, the General Assembly Mission Council would be empowered to begin pilot projects in advance of fully implementing the new World Communion Offering among congregations who do not participate in the Peacemaking Offering.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-14

Advice and Counsel on 10-14—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns sees that the impact of this action would affect drastically the racial ethnic and disadvantaged communities in the following ways:

- The racial ethnic community would lose the support that it is currently receiving for racial ethnic colleges and schools. These institutions have served functions that in this day and time cannot and are not attractively or successfully addressed in any other ways.

- The racial ethnic colleges and schools are still addressing the needs of first generation college educated students. It is true that mainline colleges and institutions are seeking to reach out but the unique supportive and educational needs of some to many racial ethnic students are uniquely met in the environment of the racial ethnic colleges and institutions.

- Historically, the institutions have played a major role in evangelizing, recruiting, and developing leadership in the racial ethnic community and building racial ethnic churches. We can make direct ties between the decrease in membership in our church and leadership of some racial ethnic groups to the withdrawal and demise of support for racial ethnic schools and institutions that essentially educated Presbyterians as a way of church building.

Today we are attempting to develop models that are certainly a part of church building but the larger issue is related to our sense of oneness.

The Special Offerings, e.g. The Christmas Joy Offering, allows the identification with this specific concern and so it has not had the diminishing returns that some of the others have had. Being able to identify with specific racial ethnic institutions and special groups like racial ethnic and low income pastors caused a focused response and therefore drew the response to help.

Self-development as an area of the special offerings allowed the focus on self-help in the disadvantaged and racial ethnic communities that was an important linkage between the church and the community. It was empowering for the recipients and enabling for the givers.

The biblical concept of the “haves” sharing with the “have-nots” is good bible that all might enjoy the blessings of God.

The direction of this report does not encourage the concept of more involvement/participation.

The Methodology Task Force Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Design for a Study of the Status of Women in the PC(USA)

The Status of Women Methodology Task Force recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012):

1. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC, soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) to provide full funding in the amount of $143,750 to support the research outlined in this report.

2. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) to oversee the appointment of a subcommittee to serve as a Coordinating Committee for the Study of the Status of Women. The coordinating committee will be composed of seven members and be created by ACWC in collaboration with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), and the Office of Theology, Worship, and Education (TWE) and the Board of Pensions. Committee members will include: one member to represent ACWC, ACREC,
3. Urge the Board of Pensions (BOP) to provide access to [individual level] compensation data of male and female members that can be merged with data from Research Services to form an analytic dataset. Prior to the release of this data, researchers will identify and adopt appropriate research practices to maintain the confidentiality of compensation data.

4. Direct the coordinating committee to report the progress of the study to the 221st General Assembly (2014) with a final report due at the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 09-12. Resolution to Explore the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the PC(USA), Recommendation 1. Create a Task Force to Design a Mechanism for the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the Church That Will (a) Assess the Presence, Participation, and Effectiveness of Women at All Levels of the PC(USA), Both Elected and Employed, (b) Explore and Analyze Attitudes About Women in Leadership, and (c) Describe the Treatment of Women in Leadership Positions, Including How They Are Compensated as Compared with Men—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 961–64).

The 218th General Assembly (2008) passed a “Resolution to Explore the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the PC(USA).” This Design for a Study of the Status of Women is a result of that action. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) sent a resolution to the 218th General Assembly (2008) that called for a church-wide study of the status of women on all levels of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The ACWC is the committee designated by the church to work toward full inclusiveness and equality in the church and in society and to provide a prophetic witness to and for the church on existing and emerging issues concerning women. The resolution called for the creation of a task force “to design a mechanism for the study of the status of women at all levels of the church” with three main goals:

a. assess the presence, participation, and effectiveness of women at all levels of the PC(USA), both elected and employed;

b. explore and analyze attitudes about women in leadership; and

c. describe the treatment of women in leadership positions including how they are compensated as compared with men. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 961)

In response to the resolution described above, the 218th General Assembly (2008) mandated that a task force be created, stipulating, “This task force of seven members shall include two current or past members of ACWC, one current or past member of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and four people chosen for their statistical and sociological expertise. A majority of the task force members shall be women” (Ibid.).

Members of the task force: Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty, chair (ACWC), teaching elder (Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky), associate professor of theology, Bellarmine University; Courtney Hoekstra, associate for Advocacy Committee Support (staff); Eric Johnson, data analyst for BookRenter.com; Deborah Kapp, teaching elder (Presbytery of Chicago), Edward F. and Phyllis K. Campbell associate professor of urban ministry, McCormick Theological Seminary; Lois Gehr Livezey, ruling elder (Presbytery of New York), professor emerita, McCormick Theological Seminary; Lillian Oats (former member of ACWC), ruling elder (Presbytery of the Grand Canyon); Carmen Rosario (ACREC), teaching elder (Presbytery of New York City), temporary supply pastor, Ft. Washington Heights Presbyterian Church.

Two additional members served on the Methodology Task Force at the beginning of the process, but needed to resign from the committee because of other commitments. Deborah Block (teaching elder, Presbytery of Milwaukee) and Patricia Petty Morse (ruling elder, Presbytery of National Capital) participated in meetings as the task force began its’ work. Block also served as chair of the committee at the beginning of the process.

A. Introduction to the Design for the Study of the Status of Women in the PC(USA)

The Design for the Study of the Status of Women that follows is the result of action taken by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and the summary of the work completed by the task force named above. It is important to note that the goal of the task force was to design a study and not to conduct the actual research for the study. The discussions of the task force were far-reaching and identified broad areas of concern where research is necessary to gain a deeper understanding of the status of women on all levels of the church.

1. Study Grounded in an Understanding of the Church as a Community of Shared Partnership

The task force is diverse in age, gender, race/ethnicity, ecclesiastical status, and experience. Each task force member came to the task with a different understanding of the need for a church-wide study of the status of women. However, throughout our discussions we recognized that members of the task force shared a common assumption about the church—the mission and ministry of the church itself is best understood as a community of shared partnership.
Jesus authorizes and empowers the disciples and apostles for ministry instructing them to work in partnership with each other (Mt. 18:1–35, Lk. 10:1–20) and cautioning them against competing to be greater than one another and redefining what it means to be “great” (Mk. 10:35–45). Jesus challenged his society’s norms of who was “the greatest” or “most valued” by welcoming children, by breaking social and religious boundaries by eating with tax collectors, consorting with Gentiles, and healing those named “unclean,” by challenging the authority of religious and political leaders, and by calling women who had been pushed aside to stand up and act upon their faith.

As part of our work, the task force discussed the theological basis for our work in the model of “church in the round.” Each member of the task force shared her or his perspective on the theological basis for a study of the status of women. During our discussion the story of Jesus’ healing a bent over woman in Luke 13 emerged as a powerful metaphor of Jesus’ concern for women today who are underpaid, undervalued, and overburdened by responsibilities for caregiving. In the story, Jesus sees that the woman is unable to stand up straight and he enables her to be set free.

Now he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath. And just then there appeared a woman with a spirit that had crippled her for eighteen years. She was bent over and was quite unable to stand up straight. When Jesus saw her, he called her over and said, “Woman, you are set free from your ailment.” When he laid his hands on her, immediately she stood up straight and began praising God. (Lk. 13:10–13, NRSV)

Since its earliest beginnings Christian communities have formed and found their identities both living as and in alliance with those who have been pushed to the margins of society. Koinonia is the Greek word most frequently used in the New Testament to refer to the community of people seeking to follow in the way of Christ (see Acts 2 and 24). Koinonia refers to a sense of partnership through which people come together to share as any might have need.

Confessional statements included in The Book of Confessions of the PC(USA) also emphasize an understanding of the mission and ministry of the church as a community of shared partnership among equals. The Barmen Declaration states:

The various offices in the church do not establish a dominion of some over the others; on the contrary, they are for the exercise of ministry entrusted to and enjoyed upon the whole congregation.

We reject the false doctrine, as though the Church, apart from this ministry could and were permitted to give to itself, or allow it be given to it, special leaders vested with ruling power. (The Book of Confessions 8.20–21)

The Confession of 1967 clearly defined those joined to Christ and the church as “commissioned to serve as [God’s] reconciling community” (The Book of Confessions, 9.10). The Brief Statement of Faith emphasizes that “the Spirit give us courage … to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace” (The Book of Confessions, 10.4).

In the gospels and in our confessional statements, the notion that some members of the church would be perceived as more important than others is clearly challenged. In contrast, the church as a community of shared partnership among equals with a mission of reconciliation in the church and for the world is celebrated.

2. Access for Women Leaders to Serve as Full Partners Gained Slowly Over Time

And yet it is clear that the church has been called at different times to examine and to reexamine its own understanding of ministry and mission as a community of shared partnership. Centuries passed before women in Reformed faith communities were considered full partners in ministry as ordained leaders in the church. Many Christian communities today still have not honored women’s service through ordination.

In Reformed communities of faith, the question of women’s ordination was raised as early as the 16th century as women reformers such as Marie Dentière, a woman preacher in Geneva, Switzerland, argued for women’s right to preach on the basis of the biblical witness. Dentière’s writings, however, were considered too radical for the time, perhaps even dangerous in light of the social context, and ultimately suppressed by the Council of Geneva. Dentière was not the only woman who became a leader in the sixteenth century movement for reform. There were many other women who prophesied, such as Ursula Jost, cared for refugees like Katherine von Bora, and led the movement in other ways.

Women’s ordination was not fully supported in Reformed churches until long after the 95 Theses were nailed to the door at Wittenberg and the magisterial Reformation began. In the U.S., women were not ordained as elders in the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA) (the northern Presbyterian church) until 1930 despite prior many attempts to argue for women’s ordination as elders, deacons, and ministers. The General Assembly of the UPCUSA defined arguments for women’s ordination as Causes of Unrest Among Women in the Church. Women were not ordained as ministers of Word and Sacrament in the northern church until 1955; it was not until 1965 that the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) (the southern Presbyterian church) voted to ordain women to serve in offices as ruling elders, deacons, and ministers of Word and Sacrament.

Space limitations of this report make it impossible to fully outline the history of women’s ordination, but it is important to make an additional observation that all women did not gain access to ordination as elder, deacon, or minister of Word and Sacrament at the same time. In churches and denominations with less hierarchical decision-making structures (Pentecostal, Holiness, and Congregational churches ordained women in the 19th century) women were ordained earlier than in churches with more hierarchical decision-making structures. Geographical location and race and ethnicity were also important factors in the struggle for women to be ordained in Protestant churches in the U.S. Within the Presbyterian church, it took longer for women of color to be ordained.

B. Equal Partners in Christ’s Mission? Factors Meriting Examination

In 1981 Jane Parker Huber penned the lyrics to the hymn “Called as Partners in Christ’s Service.” The hymn exemplifies the vision of shared partnership among equals. The third verse reminds the church

Thus new patterns for Christ’s mission, In a small or global sense, Help us bear each other’s burdens, Breaking down each wall or fence. Words of comfort, words of vision, Words of challenge said with care, Bring new power and strength for action, Make us colleagues, free and fair.

A church that is fully alive is able to explore barriers and burdens in order that we may join with God in repairing and renewing ourselves for Christ’s mission. And so we now turn to such factors which merit examination.

1. Gaining Access to Ordination Does Not Guarantee the Equal Treatment of Women

The fact that women have gained significant access to leadership positions as pastors, elders, and deacons in the last eighty years is reason to celebrate, but not necessarily evidence that the church has lived into its own ideal as a community of shared partnership. The church has assumed that gaining access to ordained positions implies that women are treated as equal partners.
The two graphs, listed as Figure 1 and Figure 2 in the file game-status-of-women-task-force-graphs&charts.pdf, p. 942, are based upon the 2010 Comparative Statistics2 gathered by Research Services of the PC(USA) and show gender of PC(USA) members, elders, deacons, commissioned lay pastors (CLPs), candidates, and active ministers. Six in ten members of the PC(USA) are women and yet only 33 percent of all active ministers in the PC(USA) are women. Women are not equally represented among leaders ordained as ruling elders, deacons, and teaching elders on all levels of ministry in the church.

Mainline seminaries report that the majority of their students are women; this fact represents more than a shift in their student bodies, but also in the number of women who are now candidates for ministry. How will this shift impact leadership in the church? The 2007 Presbyterian Panel study on “Women in the Churches” reported that a narrow majority of congregants, 58 percent, would feel “very comfortable” with women as pastors. Equally important is the fact that among those surveyed, only 48 percent of Presbyterians would be “very comfortable” with women of color fulfilling a pastoral role.
According to a recent study conducted by the Association of Theological Schools (ATS), racial ethnic women represent the fastest-growing student population in 2011 in seminaries accredited by ATS. Considered also in light of the fact that racial ethnic women represent the fastest-growing student population in Presbyterian seminaries the church may experience problems in the future if we do not seek to understand and resolve these biases.

2. The PC(USA) Lacks Adequate Data to Examine the Relationship Between Leadership and the Dynamics of Gender, Race, Ethnicity, and Age

The 218th General Assembly (2008) directed

… the Office of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, the Board of Pensions, the Presbyterian Foundation, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation to collect, organize, and report data for all research in the church (such as comparative statistics, Presbyterian Panel, data gathered by the Vocation’s office on inquirers, candidates and clergy, the Stated Clerk’s annual statistical report, etc.) in a disaggregated form by race, ethnicity, gender, and age, so that data on women of color and young adult women of color may be identified separately for analysis, where possible and as permissible by law. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, 965)

At the time of the writing of this design by the methodological task force, this disaggregated data was not yet available. Collecting, organizing, and reporting such data will be central to the study’s ability to accurately portray the status of women of color in the church.

The data collected up to the present time by the PC(USA) focuses primarily on equity issues related to women clergy, particularly clergy compensation, and does not examine the intersecting dynamics of gender, race, ethnicity, and age. 4Our current approach to gathering data reflects our polity. Presbyteries maintain records regarding congregations and clergy. This method of collecting information also assumes dominant male-defined norms of leadership and past models of membership in presbyteries. For example, the majority of Christian educators are women but we have little to no data over time that would reflect changes in employment, salaries, benefits because there is no national mechanism designed to track this data.

Data gathered by the PC(USA) to date compares to studies conducted by other denominations. For example, the United Methodist Church has done some study of traditional and stereotypical gender norms in relation to the experiences of women clergy and clergy spouses (which are primarily women in the United Methodist Church).

In the work done by the Methodology Task Force, we found that other denominations who have conducted studies of the status of women in their churches recognize that the data that they have gathered remains incomplete. Statistical data and analysis done by the PC(USA) and other denominations provides little or no information about women who are not ordained as deacons, elders, or ministers (women serving as administrative assistants, preschool directors, custodians, etc.), but are still employed by congregations or other church-related organizations or who fulfill volunteer leadership roles. There are several studies available that examine the status and role of women in various denominations, including the U.S. Congregational Life Survey, the Commission on the Status and Role of Women of the United Methodist Church, and the Episcopal study of clergy careers and clergy women. The studies explore primarily clergy roles and some aspects of changing dynamics of work in the U.S. and how that is affecting clergy. Investigating the status of non-clergy women leaders would enhance a larger ecumenical understanding of women’s status and roles.

Comparative statistical reports do not provide adequate information to examine dynamics in relation to both race/ethnicity and gender. For example, there has never been a Presbyterian Panel that focused on gathering data about race and ethnicity. In addition, in 2008, the ACSWP asked that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve recommendations “to uncover and correct unjustified disparities in the church caused by gender and/or race stereotypes.” God’s Work in Women’s Hands presents a list of recommendations emphasizing the strong need to gather information and employ evaluative tools that could be helpful in illuminating disparities based on gender and race. The recommendations also would direct entities such as local congregations, presbyteries, the Office of Vocation, the Board of Pensions, and the Presbyterian Foundation to engage creative strategies to uncover and correct any disparities that do exist. We discovered three pay equity studies being designed by three different offices (Human Resources, the Office of Vocation, and Research Services). Another problem is that Research Services does not have access to information collected by the Board of Pensions and that is critical for studying issues of pay equality.

Finally, there is no common repository within the national offices of the PC(USA) for data, information related to programming, or other issues concerning women in the PC(USA). As offices have made transitions in recent years, particularly the office of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries, historical data related to past work has been lost. Currently, the limited number of staff makes it difficult to maintain complete records even regarding current projects such as Deborah’s Daughters, a conversation group for women leaders in the PC(USA). A church-wide study on the status of women could enable such a repository to be created.

3. Women Report Gender Stereotypes Still Shape Norms for Ministry

Despite access to ordained positions women still report feeling limited or restricted by traditional norms for ministry defined according to gender stereotypes. Several books have been published that tell stories about the attitudes and problems women confront when breaking through the “stained glass ceiling.” Voices of Experience: Lifestories of Clergywomen in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), edited by Alice Brasfield and Elisabeth Lunz and published in 1991, represents just one example. More recently, in 2011, a group of younger women clergy published The Girlfriends’ Clergy Companion: Surviving and Thriving in Ministry, which gives practical advice for surviving the many challenges that still face women clergy. Other efforts have been made by ACWC, the National Network of Presbyterian Clergywomen, and the office of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries PC(USA) to collect the stories of women’s experiences in ministry through such efforts as the Women of Color Consultations and Deborah’s Daughters. Stories of women’s experiences are often discounted as merely subjective and anecdotal evidence, but the cumulative nature and consistency of these stories cannot simply be discounted. Many women have been alienated from the church when they have not been honored as equal partners in leadership. And the church, in turn, has lost ministers who it had affirmed as having been called by God.

There is also a need to gather data that has been gathered by the PC(USA) and assessed in a way that gives insight into difficulties that women face when trying to fit into leadership roles defined primarily by traditional and stereotypical gender norms. The UPCUSA and PCUS merged in 1983 and formed the PC(USA). The PC(USA) has always ordained women. Why then are members of congregations still hesitant to welcome women into pastoral roles, particularly when they are women of color? What continues to shape gendered understanding of norms for pastoral ministry? On the other hand, in what ways are traditional norms for pastoral roles changing and how does the changing shape of norms for ministry relate to the increased number of female clergy and how women exercise their vocation of ministry?

4. New Patterns for Leadership Are Emerging

Women’s leadership takes a variety of forms and cannot only be understood and defined according to traditional male norms and patterns. Few will disagree that gender impacts one’s identity in ordained ministry, but our understanding is more limited when thinking about the variety of forms of women’s leadership in congregations. For example, evidence offered for equality and to underscore the proven and effective leadership of women often highlights women who have been called to serve as Head of Staff of “tall steeple” or “pillar” congregations. According to the 2010 Comparative Statistics the frequency of women holding senior pastor positions in congregations with more than 1,000 or more members is only 4.7 percent. The majority of women serve in congregations of fewer than 300 members (see Figure 3 in game-status-of-women-task-force-graphs&charts.pdf; see also page 943). Women are also disproportionately represented among clergy serving non-parish ministries such as chaplaincies and social ministries when considering their overall representation among clergy. (In 2010, there were 8,882 active male ministers compared to 4,382 active female ministers.) Study is needed to explain the cause(s) of these trends and the degree to which they are a function of various discriminatory patterns.
Another dynamic also needs to be addressed. Effective leadership cannot be defined only in terms of women who succeed in “rising to the top” of the ecclesiastical job ladder. Serving as head of staff in a large congregation shows some progress in terms of the perception of women’s abilities to lead, but it is not the only and should not be the primary gauge of effective ministry. Some of the most effective and fulfilling ministries for women are within smaller congregations as well as outside established congregations themselves in new church developments, chaplaincy, social ministries, para-church organizations, denominational leadership, volunteer positions, etc. Further, this “tall steeple” measure of effectiveness and fulfillment is itself a false standard even when applied to men. For the whole church, including all its leaders, to thrive, many different skills are needed and many measures of “success” and “fulfillment” must be used.

Women have made up a large majority of Christian educators. Historically, Christian educators have played important leadership roles in congregations, presbyteries, and the PC(USA) denominational offices. However, there is little or no data available about certified Christian educators because they are not members of presbytery. Certified Christian educators and certified associate Christian educators are only tracked by the denomination at the time of certification. At the present time, there is no denominational process that tracks changes in employment or salaries and benefits of certified Christian educators. Historically, women have made up the majority of those serving in positions as Christian educators. Without data concerning the circumstances (i.e. compensation, work hours, etc.) of their employment, we, as a church, cannot adequately understand the status of women on all levels of the PC(USA) in the past or in the present.

Moreover, definitions of leadership in church and society are changing. Many will agree that new definitions of leadership, mission, and ministry of churches are emerging in our church and broader culture. Mission and ministry are often understood as bi-vocational, practiced through networking (virtual and real), focused on local communities but with a more intentional and conscious global focus, and with a growing emphasis on lay empowerment. How have and will these emerging definitions of leadership, mission, and ministry specifically impact women leaders in PC(USA) congregations and in ministries beyond the local church?

In addition, workers in our culture (both women and men) have changed their attitudes toward the path of their own career. “Climbing the ladder” was once a popular metaphor used in reference to a clear upward path for one’s career. Paths to “success” in any chosen vocation are not so easily defined today. Many workers have chosen to “climb the lattice” rather than “climb the ladder,” do job sharing, are more interested in flex time, emphasize the strong desire and need for family medical leave for a variety of reasons, and recognize the importance and fulfillment of dual career families. Similar studies to that proposed here have been conducted by the United Methodist Church and the Episcopal Church. The United Methodist Church and Episcopal studies reference the important impact dual-clergy and dual-career families are having on choice of call, mobility, etc. but neither study fully explored changing ideas about what constitutes effective and fulfilling career paths. The PC(USA) has never conducted such an exploration of the impact on our changing perceptions of work on leaders in our church. What impact will changing attitudes toward individuals’ and couples’ career paths have on leadership in the PC(USA)?

5. A Church-wide Study of the Status of Women Is Timely

Perhaps most important is the fact that a church-wide study of the status of women is timely. We are living in a time in which both church and society are experiencing rapid change. Mainline denominations no longer experience the influence and status that they once held. The globalized economy is changing realities for all workers and the church. Christians in the U.S. are more aware than ever before of the interdependence of nations, peoples, and the earth. Historians and sociologists continue to underscore demographic shifts in the U.S. and the “erosion of white America.”10 Shifts in the population are challenging the historical assumption that the majority of U.S. citizens identify with whiteness. Immigrants today are coming primarily from Latin America, Asia, and Africa. The largest numbers of immigrants to the U.S. are Hispanic and Latino/a; a slight majority of those immigrants are women. These facts and shifts are making an impact on our church and have been identified in other reports such as the report of the Joint Commission on Leadership Needs on Raising Up Leaders for the Mission of God. But, many of the reports make no mention of the impact of these shifts on our understanding of women’s leadership. All leaders across the church—women together with men, leaders of white majority, racial ethnic churches, and multiracial, multiethnic churches—will have to work in partnership to help the church respond to God’s call in this new day as we endeavor to bear witness to the good news of Jesus Christ.

Despite intentional and sustained efforts since the 1970s within the church and the academy to expand the church’s language and to broaden the church’s theological imagination, the church is still prone to theological anemia and biblical myopia. The PC(USA) has not yet fully celebrated, welcomed, and embraced theologies emerging from the experience of people who are marginalized because of their race, ethnicity, gender, or class. Among other evidence of the church’s theological anemia is the fact that there is no confessional statement that draws directly upon women’s experiences despite the vital contribution women have made to the history of the church. Nor has the church been able to recognize the important ways that contributions from feminist, womanist, liberationist, and post-colonial theologies have exposed the experiential nature of all theology, not simply that of women or other marginalized peoples. What we see depends on where we stand, no matter who we are.
Language about who we are and who God is shapes our ability to see and celebrate God’s action in our midst. But too often, scales remain on our eyes, distorting our vision. Among other evidence of the church’s theological anemia and biblical myopia is the fact that a large majority of members in PC(USA) churches remain comfortable with the use of exclusively masculine language for God and there is no confessional statement that draws directly upon women’s experiences. The General Assembly (GA) took action in 1971, 1973, 1975, 1976, 1978, 1980, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1998, 2000, and 2010 encouraging the use of inclusive language in worship, education, publications, and theological and biblical reflection.1 And yet the 2007 survey reported fewer than half of the PC(USA) congregations use expansive, biblical language for God in worship. In addition, large majorities—87 percent—either “strongly agreed” or “agreed” with the statement that “using male terms for God seems natural to me”; 47 percent believe that “God is best understood in masculine terms.” Only 19 percent of the laity agreed that “the Bible contains many female images of God”; a much larger percentage of clergy (66 percent) agreed with this statement.

Theological dialogue and debate surrounding contextual theologies in both the church and academic circles in the last forty years also bears the potential to nourish and enrich the churches’ theological imagination. Two-thirds of all Reformed Christians reside in the Global South. Some of the strongest and most relevant ecumenical statements such as the Accra Confession of the World Council of Reformed Churches regarding the changes we are experiencing in the world are coming from the Global South. Contextual theologies emphasize the need to make connections between race, ethnicity, gender, and class. Making these connections advances the church’s understanding of social, political, and economic injustices experienced by those pushed to the margins of church and society and the way in which God reveals Godself in the struggle of people against oppression. Have we as a church been able to fully estimate the impact that our lack of attention to inclusive language and contextual theologies has had on the well-being of all our members? How might the church more fully embody a community of shared partnership by welcoming and engaging theologies emerging from the experiences of people living on the margins? How do different cultural constructs of gender and attitudes toward women impact the practice and theology of our church? What potential problems may we face as a denomination and what divine opportunities may we miss if we do not examine connections between race, gender, and class more closely and pay more attention to the ways we speak about God?

C. The Proposed Design for the Study of the Status of Women in the PC(USA)

Much more could be said, but the circumstances of women described above and the limited amount of sociological and ecclesiastical data regarding intersections of race/ethnicity and gender concerning the leadership in the church, suggests strong enough evidence of the need to reexamine leadership in a church that understands itself as a community of shared partnership. Therefore the Task Force to Design a Study of the Status of Women on All Levels of the Church proposes that a comprehensive study be conducted in two main research areas, theological and sociological. The study will focus on five broad questions:

- Where are women doing the work of leadership and how do women themselves define their own leadership within the PC(USA)?
- What is the status of women in these positions, relative to men?
- What factors support/hinder women’s level of representation and participation in decision making?
- In what ways are our perceptions of leadership in the church shaped not only by gender but also by race, ethnicity, class, and age?
- How do our current definitions of leadership reflect the Reformed theological traditions of the church and how do these definitions of leadership specifically impact women?

1. Theological Research Questions and Methodology

The Task Force to Design a Study of the Status of Women on All Levels of the Church recommends that a coordinating committee (see recommendations for membership and oversight of the coordinating committee on page 826) be constituted. One of the tasks of the coordinating committee will be to plan and execute a theology consultation that focuses on women’s leadership and the Reformed theological tradition. The theology consultation should include pastors, lay leaders, and theologians with relevant areas of expertise to accomplish the goals that follow. The main purpose of the consultation is to explore the importance of contextual theologies for a church and society in the midst of change.

Questions to be addressed at the consultation should include but are not limited to the following:

- What theological anthropologies are most relevant in shaping an understanding of the full humanity of women and people of color? How do we as human beings understand ourselves in relation to God?
How does our language about God shape our understanding of who God is and how God leads? How do we articulate a theological framework that acknowledges that all women and men are created equally in God’s image and explores the gifts of women’s ministries in that light?

In addition to the Bible and Reformed traditions, what other sources of knowledge should we draw upon to inform our understanding of leadership and church in order to serve in the midst of a rapidly changing world?

What are Reformed understandings of leadership, and how have they evolved since the 16th century to include women together with men as leaders in the church?

How have women leaders in Reformed traditions defined their own understanding of leadership and what can we learn from these women?

How is our understanding of leadership informed and/or challenged by feminist, womanist, mujerista, and other theologies forged from critical reflection upon women’s experience?

What are the most relevant characteristics of Reformed ecclesiology for the church today? How do they relate to our own contemporary discussion of the church as a community of shared partnership?

The coordinating committee will be responsible for ensuring that all members of the church will have access to discussions held at the theology consultation either by producing a print and/or online resource.

2. Sociological Research Questions and Methodologies

A second task of the coordinating committee will be to plan and implement three sociological analyses of the status and experience of women in the church, one qualitative, one quantitative, and a concluding survey that will be a quantitative/qualitative mix.

Quantitative analyses are usually studies of big data sets of numbers, which, when analyzed, provide a broad picture of what is happening in a given population—in this case the PC(USA). Data can be analyzed for a given time period, such as the analysis we see in Presbyterian Panel reports or the annual Comparative Statistics, or they can be analyzed longitudinally, examining how certain realities like, for example, the numbers of women serving as solo pastors, have changed since 1983. People who are skilled in statistical analysis can use a broad range of techniques to identify trends, discern what dynamics match up with those trends, and begin to explain what might account for this or that. How the data are analyzed and what is discovered depends on what questions a researcher asks.

The quantitative analysis that the task force proposes will be a statistical analysis of the data that are available to the PC(USA). Using methods such as regression, multilevel regression, and event history analysis the study will, in part, address four of the five primary research questions identified in Section C. above of this report:

- Where are women doing the work of leadership in the PC(USA) (the first half of question 1)?
- What is the status of women in these positions, relative to men?
- What factors support/hinder women’s level of representation and participation in decision making?
- In what ways are our perceptions of leadership in the church shaped not only by gender but also by race, ethnicity, class, and age?

An analysis of data, such as those found in previous Presbyterian Panel surveys, annual reports, the Church Leadership Connection, and the Presbyterian samples for the U.S. Congregational Life Survey can provide significant (though not exhaustive) insight into the questions identified above. When these existing data and the questions above are probed in depth, the task force anticipates that the church will have a significant opportunity to learn more about how women participate in leadership at all levels of church life in congregations, governing bodies, schools, seminaries, and other church-related institutions. The church will gain a keener grasp of what factors support or constrain women’s ministry. The church will also gain deeper insight into the varying experiences of men and women in ministry, including similarities and differences in compensation, career trajectories, and decisions to leave ministry.

Qualitative analyses examine different kinds of data than those examined in quantitative studies. Rather than looking at numbers, qualitative studies examine narratives, descriptions, documents, and other artifacts that allow researchers to identify how people experience and interpret certain aspects of their lives. Such studies tend to be focused in scope, and produce a rich understanding of the dynamics that shape a set of circumstances and the meaning that people attach to them. The rich interpretive and explanatory findings of qualitative research are good complements to quantitative studies.
The qualitative study that the task force proposes will be informed by the quantitative study, and will constitute a series of structured interviews that will, in part, address four of the five primary research questions identified above in Section C. of this report13:

- How do women themselves define their own leadership within the PC(USA) (the second half of question 1)?
- What factors support/hinder women’s level of representation and participation in decision-making?
- In what ways are our perceptions of leadership in the church shaped not only by gender but also by race, ethnicity, class, and age?
- How do our current definitions of leadership reflect the Reformed theological traditions of the church, and how do these definitions of leadership specifically impact women?

The task force proposes that structured interviews be conducted, in person or by telephone, with men and women who serve as teaching elders, certified Christian Educators, commissioned ruling elders, and who represent the cultural, ethnic, and racial diversity of the denomination. Interviewees will be selected systematically using the denomination’s data sources, and questions will be based on the most salient differentiating factors identified by the quantitative analysis. The purpose of these interviews will be to hear the stories of people’s call, their experiences of being hired and employed by the church and/or elected by the church, their understandings of vocation and leadership, and their experiences as leaders. The interviews will include both prompted and unprompted sections.

In addition the task force proposes that structured interviews be held with members of congregational pastoral nomination committees and personnel search committees at regional and national levels, and who also represent the denomination’s diversity. The purpose of these interviews will be to solicit stories of call from the perspective of those who hire women and men to staff the ministries of the church; and to hear of the processes, understandings of leadership, attitudes and criteria that shaped various search processes and their outcomes.

The task force anticipates that the qualitative portion of the study will help the church understand how leadership is called forth, supported, and sometimes constrained in various church communities. The study will also identify best practices that support and encourage women in their ministries.

Because research projects often raise questions as well as answer them, the task force also proposes that funds be set aside to conduct a follow-up survey through the Presbyterian Panel to explore further the findings that emerge from the structured interviews. Such a survey will examine attitudes about women and leadership, and could be compared to earlier panel surveys that examined similar issues; a comparison like this will help the church understand how attitudes and practices about women’s leadership have changed over the years. The task force assumes that this survey will, like most Presbyterian Panel surveys, be a mixed-method gathering of both quantitative and qualitative data.

Existing Data and Bibliography

A variety of resources and some data necessary to conduct a Church-wide Study on the Status of Women on All Levels of the Church are already available. Some of the resources that the task force reviewed are listed below:

Endnotes

1. See Appendix I, Recommendations from the “Resolution to Explore the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels of the Church.”

4. One of the most significant reasons for this is that data is gathered through presbyteries in which ministers are members and the Board of Pensions.

9. In 2002, the Advocacy for Women’s Concerns, in response to action taken by the 212th General Assembly (2000), conducted a survey of “Clergywomen’s Experiences in Ministry: Realities and Challenges.” The survey examined trends related to the decreasing number of women in ministry, but did not look at the ways in which women identified themselves with effective and fulfilling ministries. To see the 2002 report, http://oga.PC(USA).org/publications/clergywomenexp03.pdf.

12. Briefly, regression is a method of analysis that allows researchers to understand the correlation between two variables, for example, the correlation between women teaching elders’ age and their employment status. Multilevel regression allows researchers to examine the correlation between a variable and multiple levels of another variable, for example, the correlation between their age and the employment status of women teaching elders in local congregations, regional judicatories, and the national church. Event history analysis is a method of analysis that helps researchers track things like employment history, noting when and to what position a teaching elder has been called, how long she stayed in that position, etc. The method also allows researchers to break down the data by gender, presbytery, congregational factors, and other data included in annual statistical reports.

13. A structured interview is an interview that has a standardized set of questions. Because all interviewees are asked the same questions, researchers can then compile and compare answers, and, where differences exist between, say, men and women, begin to identify and describe what those differences might be. Structured interviews can include multiple choice questions that have fixed answers, open-ended questions to which people respond with a narrative answer, or both.

Appendix I

Recommendations from the “Resolution to Explore the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the PC(USA)”

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Create a task force to design a mechanism for the study of the status of women at all levels in the church that will:
a. Assess the presence, participation, and effectiveness of women at all levels of the PC(USA), both elected and employed;

b. Explore and analyze attitudes about women in leadership, and

c. Describe the treatment of women in leadership positions including how they are compensated as compared with men.

This task force of seven members shall include two current or past members of ACWC, one current or past member of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and four people chosen for their statistical and sociological expertise. A majority of the task force members shall be women. This task force will report to the 219th General Assembly (2010);

2. Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC) to:

a. Provide sufficient funding and staff support for the task force;

b. Explore additional funding for research, data collection and analysis in consultation with the task force; and,

c. Report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

3. Equip all GAC staff and members to be responsive to the needs of all women as part of their continuing commitment to valuing the gifts that all persons bring to the PC(USA). Continue to encourage General Assembly Council staff and members to reflect on and incorporate the values articulated in the “Report on Creating a Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004) (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 540ff.).

Appendix II

The Schedule of Meetings

Conference Calls

June, 4 2009: Initial call to begin forming the Status of Women task force.

February 15, 2010: Discussion of the task force’s financial status and prospects for seeking further funding resources; also partners for the research this study will require.

March 15, 2010: Discussion some of the issues for women in leadership in the church (significance of mentoring—or lack thereof, impact of women’s leadership on change in the structures of the church and what “tipping point” is required for women’s leadership to change the structures) and the outcomes we seek for the task force and the research to follow.

September 27, 2010: Clarification of the budget for the task force; Decision to follow-up on inviting new members of the task force.

October 20, 2010: Continuing discussion of how to focus our work in response to the GA resolution—again focusing on issues to be addressed (and how), the information needed, and the outcomes sought.

December 17, 2010: Conversation with Cynthia Hess and Bob Drago of the Institute for Women’s Policy Research. We also reviewed the data we have from the PC(USA) and U.S. Congregational Life Survey, other denominational studies (especially the Episcopal study).

March 30, 2011: The discussion continued to build on proposal for sociological research—with respect to the need for multiple methodologies and concern to acknowledge the complexity of the issues of leadership; also the importance of sorting out the role of gender amidst contextual factors.

June 27, 2011: Reviewed first draft of the introduction; set schedule for compiling the draft.

July 25, 2011: Continued discussion on next draft of introduction; discussion of process and theology.

August 25, 2011: Review of draft; discussion of methodology; setting meeting dates and agenda.

December 16, 2011: Discussed final draft of report.

Face-to-face Meetings (Presbyterian Center, Louisville KY)

January 25, 2010: Initial discussion of methodology, the diversity of constituencies to be studied, leadership, partners for the work of the task force.

February 16, 2011: We reviewed the history of the Status of Women project, “agenda” of the task force and developed a “grid” of questions, detailed questions (on norms, data, policies, practices, and processes within religious institutions), that must be addressed in the design we construct for ongoing work on the status of women study.

1. Congregations. For each congregation we have all information that comes in on the Session Annual Statistical Form (SASR) each year (e.g., membership, average worship attendance, gender and race ethnicity of members, gender of active elders and deacons, baptisms, church school enrollment, finances, etc.). This is the information that’s reported in the annual Minutes, Part II-B, Statistics. We have SASR data going back many years, so we can look at change over time, if needed. Note that proposed revisions to the SASR include eliminating gender of members, elders, and deacons. The 220th General Assembly (2012) will likely decide on the revisions with the changes to take effect in 2013.

2. Ministers. The minister file has information about all ministers (active and retired) and commissioned lay pastors including sex, date of birth, date of ordination, race ethnicity, address, current occupational code, and PIN of church being served (if applicable). The occupational codes are listed in the Minutes, Part III-A, Directory on page 2 under Ministers. We have reported this information yearly in Comparative Statistics, which will allow us to track gender over time. The minister file does not contain salary information or career history, although OGA has told us they are working on a career history file.

Research Services Own Primary Databases

1. Clerks Annual Questionnaire (CAQ). Each year we put together this survey that every congregation is asked to complete (in 2010, 66 percent did). The questions vary from year to year and address issues that various entities of the church want to know about PC(USA) congregations. For example, an office might want to identify congregations that are using a particular program or curriculum. The CAQ would allow them to do that. This would be the vehicle to learn about the number and gender of church staff.

2. Presbyterian Panel. The Panel provides information about members, elders, and ministers of the denomination based on responses of random samples of individuals in each group. We have information about demographic characteristics of these groups, their religious backgrounds, and their current church participation. Panelists respond to four surveys each year for three years; each survey covers a topic of interest to an office or entity of the church. The current Panel includes about 1,200 ministers—27 percent of pastor panelists are women, and 45 percent of panelists who are ministers serving in non-pastoral positions are women. Data go back to 1973. Updated information about Presbyterian views regarding women in leadership could be gathered through the Panel.

3. U.S. Congregational Life Survey (US CLS). This survey was given in worship in a random sample of congregations from a wide variety of denominations. A random sample of PC(USA) congregations also participated. All worshipers in participating congregations completed a survey. Results include information about worshipers’ characteristics, the ways in which worshipers are involved in their church, their beliefs, etc. Each participating congregation also completed a profile that gathered many details about the congregation (size, types of programs, number of worship services, features of the largest worship service, etc.). Finally, one key leader in each participating congregation (head of staff, solo pastor, CLP) completed a leader survey about ministry. In 2011 we also invited all full-time PC(USA) associate pastors to complete the leader survey. The leader survey includes questions on entry into ministry, theological education, salary and benefits, hours worked, and some career history information. We have data for 145 women and 338 men serving as key leader in PC(USA) congregations in 2008/2009 (most are solo pastor or head of staff) and 383 male and 363 female associate pastors. In 2001, 412 male and 97 female key leaders in PC(USA) congregations participated.

4. Annual EEO/AA Analysis. This survey is conducted each year for the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) Human Resources office in response to a General Assembly mandate. Every General Assembly agency, presbytery, synod, PC(USA) seminary and conference center is asked to report their staff by gender, race-ethnicity, full-time or part-time status, and exempt or nonexempt status. In 2010 the response rate was 80 percent, meaning we do not have this information for all entities. We have data from 2005 forward.

Other Data Sources Not Covered Here

1. Board of Pensions. The Board of Pensions has other databases on plan members (e.g., ministers, other staff of PC(USA) organizations) to which we do not have access.

2. OGA/General Assembly Committee on Representation. OGA tracks General Assembly commissioners by age, gender, and elder vs. minister commissioner for each assembly. The GACOR collects data from synods annually on the gender of their committees, boards, and councils. The GACOR or OGA may also collect such information for General Assembly boards and committees.

Appendix IV

Cost Estimate Provided by Research Services for Analysis of Existing Data

In consultation with the task force, Research Services has been asked to develop an estimate of costs involved in assessing women’s representation across many entities of the denomination, as specified in (a) above. This estimate covers costs to gather gender distribution data only. Results will show the percentage of people in various groups who are women. This estimate does not include costs to study salary difference between men and women, to compare men and women on various characteristics, to examine the effectiveness of women at all levels of the PC(USA), or to address goals (b) or (c) above.

The task force identified these PC(USA) groups and entities as the focus of this study:

- ministers of Word and Sacrament
- commissioned lay pastors
- Christian educators
- ruling elders
- active deacons
- members of PC(USA) congregations
• staff of mid councils (presbyteries and synods)
• faculty and staff of PC(USA) seminaries
• faculty and staff of PC(USA)-affiliated colleges and universities
• staff of PC(USA) conference centers
• congregational staff other than pastors
• PC(USA) college and university faculty and staff
• elected boards and committees of GA entities
• elected boards and committees of mid councils
• other elected boards
• PC(USA) candidates and inquirers
• GA commissioners

The task force also expressed interest in looking at trends over time, where possible.

Research Services has identified sources of gender representation information for many of these groups (see Attachment A). For groups where Research Services already has data, research costs will cover extracting data from appropriate sources and compiling this information.

To gather such information for some groups will require obtaining data from outside sources (where available) or collecting data (when outside sources will not release the information or when no outside source exists). For example, no source exists for examining the current gender composition of congregational staff (including administrative staff, custodians, etc.). Research Services last asked about this topic on the 1992 Clerk’s Annual Questionnaire—a form that all congregations are asked to complete each year. Replicating those questions in the future will allow us to look at women’s current representation among congregational staff and to compare their representation today to that of 1992. Similarly, the Association of Presbyterian Colleges and Universities (APCU) may have data on the gender of faculty and staff at PC(USA)-affiliated colleges and universities. If APCU does not have this information, Research Services will develop an appropriate data-gathering tool and request the information from each college and university.

Research Services will prepare a narrative report and statistical overview summarizing the findings.

Because the availability of gender data for some groups is unknown, this is an estimate of costs to conduct this project. It is possible that gathering data for certain groups might prove so expensive or problematic that they cannot be included in this study.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-15

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-15—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 10-15 be approved.

This report describes the background and rationale for a study of women in the PC(USA) and proposes five research questions to be examined using available databases, plus additional collection of both qualitative and quantitative data.

Rationale

The report makes a strong argument for the need to examine the status of women at all levels of the church. This wide scope is necessary if the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council are to fully understand the roles women perform and the barriers and facilitators to women’s leadership in the PC(USA). The PC(USA) has established a strong foundation for equal status of men and women within the church—at all levels of church work. This foundation is evident in Minutes of the General Assembly as cited in the policy statement, God’s Work in Women’s Hands [http://www.pcusa.org/media/uploads/acswp/pdf/acswppayequity.pdf], approved by the 218th General Assembly (1999). Relevant to the wide scope of this commitment is the following statement: “God works through all persons in a variety of ways without regard for a hierarchy based upon gender” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 80, 591).
There has been no comprehensive study of women’s roles in the church and as the church considers how it will function in a multicultural society of the 21st century, it will be especially useful to understand the nature of women’s leadership currently and the contributing factors of race/ethnic, income level, and age. Answers to the five research questions will be useful toward envisioning and planning because this information will not only describe current leadership of women throughout the denomination, but should also tell us about our understandings of leadership and what organizational or cultural facilitators and barriers impact women’s level of representation and participation in decision-making. This information is necessary to develop strategies to enhance future leadership and the status of women in the PC(USA).

While the proposed design is very general, the recommended design includes a mixed methods approach and identifies where quantitative and qualitative data would be collected and employed. Potentially useful data sources are identified in order to utilize secondary data and avoid duplicate data collection.

Although the cost of such a study may seem high, analyses that include the variables of gender and other important cultural and social conditions such as race/ethnicity, age, and income are complex. They also require large sample sizes and data collected from multiple perspectives (e.g., perspectives of women in leadership, perspectives of the members of organizational entities whose authority promotes and regulates leadership). Both the wide scope of the study (the status of women at all levels of the church) as well as the intent to understand the barriers, facilitators, and visions of women’s leadership in some depth require a budget sufficient to compile a variety of datasets and produce useful analytical results.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-15

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-15—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly approve Item 10-15.

Rationale

The ACREC concurs with the assessment of the need to learn more about the situations and experiences of women of color throughout the church as detailed in the report. The proposed methodology has the potential to glean valuable information and insights into the experiences of women of color in the church that would allow the church to make decisions and take actions moving forward that pay greater attention to both the gifts and the needs of women of color. From there, the church can more faithfully celebrate and utilize the gifts of women of color and work to correct the negative attitudes and actions that exist toward women of color in the church today.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-15

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-15—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 10-15.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns strongly recommends approval of Item10-15 and concurs with the Advice and Counsel memorandum from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. This report presents the background for a study of women in the PC(USA) and outlines research questions and the process for the study and reporting back to the General Assembly.

This effort to create a Status of Women Research Project began in 2006. Now is the time for approval. The report sets out a reasonable time span for the overview and good membership requirements for the task force. With the continual downsizing of program within the denomination and the effort to transform the church into a 21st century response to the work of Jesus Christ, it is imperative to know the status of women throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). A study of this magnitude has never been done in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

It is clear from the 2007 Presbyterian Panel Survey that although people think and say women participate equally, the individual comments reveal a continuing backlash toward women’s participation and a bias toward male leadership. Personal stories from clergymen and women of color throughout the church remind us that the church is far from achieving its intended goals. A study including uncovering the reality of “women’s equality” in the church is essential to inform programmatic development to realize full inclusion of women.

Women hold up more than “half the sky” in the church, yet they are not equally represented in decision making. Providing concrete disaggregated statistics will clarify where strategies need to be developed to ensure changes and will also put to rest the debate regarding just how much equality women do have in the church today. Approval of Item 10-15 is essential to the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
The church’s commitment to valuing women as equal partners in Christ’s mission needs analysis at every level of the church, from volunteer to teaching elder. Gender and racial discrimination still exist and need to be examined so that all members can learn how they inadvertently contribute to discrimination.

The research efforts are finely drawn, and they can provide valuable information for the future of the church. They can help identify best practices toward fostering a willingness to be open to and celebratory toward the gifts of all and lead into the future for women in the PC(USA), providing a model for secular society of the value of women’s leadership.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 10-15

Comment on Item 10-15—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully offers the 220th General Assembly (2012) the following comment on Item 10-15:

The GACOR supports this motion and respectfully asks the assembly to consider expanding it further by seeking and reporting disaggregated data research, which helps the church to better understand how far the PC(USA) has come in its support of women in leadership as well as assess the work yet to be done.

Rationale

The GACOR has collected and reported data in a disaggregated means when possible. Most reliably it does so with regard to teaching elders within the PC(USA). What we have learned is that while the numbers of women in ministry are increasing, there are still nearly two male clergy for every female clergy, and the numbers are even more disconcerting when we look at the number of young women of color within the office of teaching elder. In addition, the research from the 2007 Presbyterian Panel study on “Women in the Churches” shows a continued reluctance on the part of members of the PC(USA) to fully embrace women in a pastoral role. The GACOR encourages the assembly to approve this recommendation and enable deeper learning in this area so that the church can better understand the resistance women experience, and the hesitancies that still exist in order to learn how best to become a more faithful church that is fully open to the Spirit who “calls women and men to all ministries of the Church” (The Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, 10.4, Line 64).

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

---

Item 10-16

[The assembly approved Item 10-16 with comment. See pp. 61, 75–76.]

The General Assembly Mission Council, on behalf of the Women of Color Consultation Committee, recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Direct the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A), especially mid councils, to continue welcoming and embracing the leadership of women of color in all ministries of the church and encourage the church to identify, train, and equip racial ethnic young women in all levels of the church’s life and ministry.

2. Encourage presbyteries and synods, or their successive bodies, to create venues that encourage and support the building of relationships across cultural lines, including bridge-building among cultures, intentional learning communities, worship, fellowship, and mission.

3. Direct the Office of Theology Worship and Education to strive to incorporate the voices of racial ethnic women in curriculum and theological resources.

4. Direct the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW ministry areas, in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, to plan a Women of Color Consultation (WoCC) that focuses on the inclusion of women of color of all ages in leadership and decision-making in presbyteries and synods, and/or their successor bodies. The next WoCC shall be held no later than the fall of 2013 and be reported on to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

5. Direct the Office of Vocation to conduct an annual review of the committee on ministry and the committee on the preparation for ministry’s guidelines and handbooks to ensure gender and racial ethnic equity as it relates to inquirers and candidates in the call process.
6. Direct the Office of Vocation, in consultation with congregations, presbyteries, and seminaries, to identify and encourage prospective racial ethnic women to consider pastoral ministry.

7. Encourage Presbyterian Women in the PC(USA) to renew its commitment to cross-cultural relationships by heightening a sense of interconnectedness with racial ethnic women through its cross-cultural ministries, therewith embracing the concept of “Ubuntu: I am because we are.”

Comment: Even though the overall 2011 consultation was beneficial and sought to do what it was tasked to do according to the 2008 report, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, we acknowledge that there were painful events that transpired during the consultation for many of its participants. Specifically, generational conflicts, issues of internalized oppression, intersections of race, gender, and class and white and male privilege occurred. These were moments of learning opportunities that were missed. The 2008 report, “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies,” continues to address the problems and issues raised at the 2011 Women of Color Consultation.

Rationale

Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies

Women of Color Consultation Committee Report

As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. (Gal. 3:27–28)

The women of color in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) express their love of Jesus Christ and of the church. However, too often their voices are not heard, their gifts not recognized and celebrated, and their desire for full participation in the church is ignored. Women of color have a vision of an inclusive, diverse, and joyful church, echoing the words of Paul in Galatians 3:27–28, “As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus.” We yearn for a glimpse of the kingdom of God that is here and now, that includes all as one in Christ.

A. Background

On October 20–23, 2011, 120 racial ethnic women gathered for the Women of Color Consultation in Charlotte, North Carolina. This was in response to a referral from the 218th General Assembly (2008), Item 09-13 “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies.” In October 2004, more than 180 women of color from across the church came together in Atlanta where they met with approximately forty staff and elected consulting partners for a national consultation. The 2004 consultation was the first opportunity for women of color to meet together since 1993.

The 2011 consultation included women from sixteen synods and one international participant. The consultation included persons serving throughout the PC(USA) as teaching and ruling elders, seminarians, and those serving in different settings. Group dialogue centered on themes from the great hymns of the church, including:

Blest Be the Tie That Binds: Participants focused on ways in which we can value the traditions of our history while recognizing and celebrating the new among us. Participants discussed the church in transition and how women of color can be vital in leadership in the midst of the changes in our churches.

Cry of My Heart: Participants shared stories of incidents that have been cultural barriers as they have served in leadership positions. They dialogued around ways to overcome cultural barriers that hinder women of color in leadership and that prevent them from being considered for leadership positions.

We Are One in the Spirit: Participants affirmed that there is a need for continued antiracism training and resources in presbyteries and synods. They suggested that there are still unresolved issues around prejudice and racism that need to be addressed.

We Have Come This Far by Faith: Participants looked at current and future leaders, and stories were heard about persons who have completed the ordination process but have not yet been ordained. Breaking through the glass ceiling, pay equity, and clergy support were all topics discussed.
Fairest Lord Jesus: Participants engaged in conversation concerning equity issues of women of color in the church. Pay equity, specialized ministry, calls as head of staff and solo pastor, as well as other types of calls were discussed.

It Is Well with My Soul: Participants explored ways in which women of color may enhance their spiritual lives as they seek to be in leadership in the church. It examined current spiritual practices and introduced helpful new practices.

God of Our Life, Through All the Circling Years: Participants dialogued around concerns related to the roles of women of color in the emerging church. The group considered the opportunity for leadership positions and full participation in decision-making in the church.

What Does the Lord Require of You: Participants discussed making room for new leadership. It examined ways to address underused leaders, how to identify leadership instead of just filling a slot, provide training opportunities, and what are some of the issues related to using commissioned lay pastors rather than ordained clergy.

All the Gifts That God Has Given: Participants focused on how to mentor and provide opportunities for youth and young adults to serve in the church. One of the questions considered was, “How is the PC(USA) or the institutional church encouraging/discouraging youth and young women of color?” Other issues discussed were representative leadership, worship, and institutional polity.

B. Summary

There were many suggestions recommended by women who participated in the Women of Color Consultation. A number of these suggestions were already being implemented by various offices within the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly. However, to hear these suggestions voiced in the plenary session indicates that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must work more effectively in communicating the existing programs and ministries already occurring and having been implemented since the Women of Color Consultation in 2004. Special attention should be given to how to most effectively communicate the programs and ministries that support women of color to grassroots leaders and Presbyterian women from diverse racial ethnic backgrounds. Some of the suggestions offered at the consultation that are presently being implemented by the General Assembly Mission Council include:

- Antiracism Training—Office of Gender and Racial Justice in RE&WMIPW. (Local facilitators also provide training in different regions in the church.)
- Racial Ethnic Referrals & Church Leadership—Office of Vocation.
- Pathways Program—Office of Vocation. (Theological and practical mentoring and training for youth leaders.)
- Cross Cultural Ministries Initiative—Office of Cross Cultural Ministries in RE&WMIPW.

C. Conclusion

The Women of Color Consultation provided racial ethnic women in the PC(USA) a space to talk about life and ministry within the denomination. There were stories of struggle, grief, anger, tears, perseverance, laughter, triumph, and hope for the future. Within the church, women of color have come far since the ordination of Dr. Katie Geneva Cannon, the first African American woman ordained as clergy in the Presbyterian church (UPCUSA, 1974); the Reverend Blanqui Ontario Rivera, the first Latina woman ordained to ministry in the Presbyterian church (PCUS, 1975, the Reverend Rebecca Reyes was ordained in the PCUS in 1979 and the Reverend Ofelia Miriam Ortega was ordained to ministry in Cuba in 1967), the Reverend Elizabeth Kwon, the first Korean American clergywoman in the Presbyterian church, who transferred her ordination from Japan (UPCUSA, 1978); the Reverend Holly Haile Smith, the first Native American woman ordained to ministry in the Presbyterian church [PC(USA) (1986)]; and the Reverend Roula Alkhouri, the first Middle Eastern clergywoman in the PC(USA) (2000). The first women deacons were ordained in 1906, and the first women elders were ordained in 1930. Although we rejoice in this progress, the reality is we have come several steps forward, and unfortunately, several step backwards. The collective voices of the women gathered for the Women of Color Consultation expressed that the Presbyterian system is still resistant to women’s leadership.

As new generations of racial ethnic leaders emerge, the obstacles that continue to prevent women leaders from freely serving must be overcome. Thus, racial ethnic women press onward and continue to hear and sing new songs to God. Our hope is that the church will listen to these voices and respond with actions that will bring us closer to becoming a witness to the reign of God.
ACWC AND ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-16

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-16—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advise that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove the recommendations in this report.

Rationale

The Report of the 2011 Women of Color Consultation highlights the good that was accomplished through the gathering in Charlotte, North Carolina; however, it does not adequately address or respond to the more difficult and painful events that transpired at the consultation for many of its participants.

While the recommendations are palatable, they glaringly omit the financial implications necessary to act on some of the recommendations, incapacitating the church’s ability to faithfully respond. Furthermore, the recommendations do not address some of the root issues that led to the misunderstanding and pain experienced at the consultation.

We believe the report of the Women of Color Consultation Task Force, “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies,” more aptly addresses the problems and issues raised at the 2011 Women of Color Consultation.

The Task Force’s report calls us to dismantle internalized oppression and privilege with a timeline as follows:

1. The intersections of race, gender, and class by 2010;
2. Internalized oppression (race and gender) by 2012;
3. White privilege and male privilege by 2014.

Unfortunately, neither the task force’s recommendations nor the spirit of the report were consulted, adhered to, or reflected in the planning and implementation of the 2011 Women of Color Consultation (WoCC).

We believe that the recommendations and analysis that came from the task force to the 218th General Assembly (2008) are stronger and more directly address the concerns of women of color in the PC(USA).

As such, we advise that rather than approve the recommendations of the 2011 Women of Color Consultation, the 220th General Assembly (2012) reaffirm and recommit to the report and recommendations of the Women of Color Consultation Task Force, “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies.” Additionally, we recommend that we commit part of the GAMC budget to broaden the scope and effectiveness of some of the work that came out of that 2008 report. For example, while some work has been done with regards to antiracism training (as directed in #4 of that report), the work unfortunately remains largely unknown and participation has been optional in nearly all cases. While the church cannot force all of its members to participate in training, certainly employees and staff of the church on the national and local levels could be required to participate.

Further, we would urge the assembly to refer to the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns’ resolution in relation to some of the ways the work from that report could be done more effectively. See Item 10-20.

Our hope would be that future Women of Color Consultations would be carried out with greater attention paid to the original intention behind bringing women of color together for this event as described in “Hearing and Singing New Songs” and that our denomination would recognize the need to continue lifting up and celebrating the voices and gifts of women of color.

Real change and transformation are still needed within the PC(USA), and we have a terrific resource in “Hearing and Singing New Songs.” Our recommendation is to go back to that document to continue its implementation in a more intentional and effective manner.
Item 10-17

Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group Recommendations and Rationale

A. Recommendations Regarding Leadership Development

The Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

[The assembly answered Item 10-17, Recommendation A.1., by the action taken on Item 16-07. See pp. 48–51, 61, 76, and 1462.]

1. Encourage presbyteries and direct the six agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to develop and maintain websites and publications in the Spanish language in addition to the English language so that Spanish speakers might have full access to information regarding the work and ministry of the church.

Rationale for Recommendation A.1.

In spite of the multilingual presence in our church, currently only a few selected PC(USA) resources and statements are translated into languages other than English. Presently, callers to the Presbyterian Center who do not speak English are faced with difficulties in getting the information they need. The PC(USA) website is predominantly in the English language. Thus many current and prospective church members cannot read or hear information in their own languages, preventing them from full participation in the connectional church. As we look toward the future of the church, we can make the ministry of the PC(USA) accessible to those who do not speak English.

The January 2012 Research Study commissioned by the Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group was conducted by Research Services; at the request of the group, Research Services prepared a version of the survey in Spanish. Of the total 266 persons surveyed, 142 (53 percent) self-identified as Hispanic/Latino/a. Of those who identified as Hispanic/Latino/a, 86 (61 percent) took the Spanish version of the survey. This fact indicates a preference and a need to have Spanish-language materials available especially with respect to official denominational communications and resources.

[The assembly approved Item 10-17, Recommendation A.2. See pp. 61, 76.]

2. Encourage presbyteries to create staff positions, cross-cultural commissions, and/or committees of sufficiently qualified people that will resource congregations to explore and carry out new ways of ministering with Hispanic/Latino/a communities. These could include, but are not limited to, developing new churches, organizing Bible study fellowships, providing English for Speakers of Other Languages (ESOL) classes as well as Spanish classes, engaging in/promoting social action and ministry, and supporting the development of “nesting” and cross-cultural congregations.

Rationale for Recommendation A.2.

Knowledge of cultural, linguistic, social, and other characteristics of a certain community is paramount to inform and determine how strategies intended to reach out to those communities will be shaped and carried out. Staff and/or committees that understand the Hispanic/Latino/a realities in the United States are necessary in order to develop effective, faithful ministries with Hispanics/Latinos/as as well as to serve as “bridge builders” among all churches in the presbytery.

The January 2012 Research Study found that the Hispanic/Latino/a leaders surveyed indicated a preference for presbyteries to sponsor programs and initiatives designed specifically for Hispanic/Latinos/as. Furthermore, the study also found that the “presence of Hispanic/Latinos/as in key decision making groups” (within the presbytery) was the most commonly indicated positive influence on effective implementation of a strategy for Hispanics/Latinos/as.

[The assembly approved Item 10-17, Recommendation A.3. See pp. 61, 76.]

3. Urge presbyteries to examine the cultural contexts in which their congregations do ministry and help church members and leaders broaden their understandings of community. Furthermore, urge presbyteries to offer the benefit of antiracism and immigration issues educational opportunities to learn how white privilege and power, as well as other discriminatory attitudes and practices, limit the potential for building up the body of Christ.

Rationale for Recommendation A.3.

The church is a community opposed to racism, yet many presbyteries and congregations resist the call to understand fully how internalized privilege informs attitudes about people of color and how racism continues to harm the Body of Christ. Today, more than ever, helpful tools and training models exist for improving negative attitudes toward people of color. Such training will help Christians minister more effectively in a broken world, grateful for God’s love for all and prepared to discern together how to grow in understanding of one another.
4. Empower and resource the Racial/Ethnic/Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women program and the Theology, Worship, and Education areas of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) in cooperation with the National Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterian Caucus to develop and implement programs and resources that will help Hispanic/Latino/a communities engage in cross-cultural opportunities amongst the different Spanish-speaking cultures and nationalities.

Rationale for Recommendation A.4.

Hispanic/Latinos/as in the United States come from more than twenty countries. Though these countries share a common language, each has unique linguistic and cultural characteristics. These unique characteristics often include political, socioeconomic, and historical differences, which can sometimes create divisions amongst Hispanic/Latino/a communities. These varied Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterian groups need to engage in intentional, ongoing dialogue regarding how they can work together and thereby more effectively impact the church.

B. Recommendations Regarding Theological Education

The Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Request the Committee on Theological Education (COTE) to revisit underlying cultural assumptions not limited to but including those related to language and socioeconomic groupings in the ordination exams, and make recommendations to the Presbyteries Cooperative Committee on Examination of Candidates (PCCEC). Such recommendations will be identified by a prior study.

Rationale for Recommendation B.1.

Certain cultural assumptions exist within the ordination exams that cause unintentional but significant disadvantages to many Hispanic/Latino/a students. The PCCEC has known about these longstanding cultural challenges, and has sought to address them, but has not yet been able to adequately resolve them. With a better understanding of cultural assumptions and challenges, certain obstacles can be easily removed (i.e., versions of the Bible, translation issues, illustrations based on contexts not found in Hispanic/Latino/a congregations, etc.). Drawing from standardized exam studies (GRE, SAT, etc.), a comparative analysis can be conducted to discover the common cultural issues associated with the construction of public examinations. Theological schools need this study to inform their curricula in order to prepare students for exams.

2. Direct the COTE to partner with Presbyterian theological educators and PC(USA) seminary faculty and senior staff to identify funding and to participate in the Hispanic Summer Program’s “Through Hispanic Eyes.”

Rationale for Recommendation B.2.

The January 2012 research study found that the issue of cultural awareness and sensitivity merited important consideration, especially among those involved in the formation of Presbyterian inquirers and candidates for ministry. One model, the Hispanic Summer Program (an ecumenical program founded in 1988 and based in Chicago, Illinois), has proven to be especially successful in increasing the cultural awareness and sensitivity of its participants. Currently the program is accessible to seminary presidents and academic deans (registration fee required), though the program would be beneficial to a much wider audience of theological educators.

The Hispanic Summer Program supplements and enriches the theological and ministerial education offered in seminaries and universities, with academic courses and other activities directly addressing Hispanic/Latino/a history, ministry and theology. (See http://www.hispanicsummerprogram.org/.)

According to the January 2012 research study, Hispanic/Latino/a leaders indicated that PC(USA) seminary-sponsored programs/workshops designed specifically for Hispanic/Latino/as were more helpful than the programs/workshops of any other sponsoring entity. [Other entities listed included General Assembly/national church sponsorship, presbytery, synod, and non-PC(USA) sponsoring entities.]

3. Direct the COTE to collect and compile from PC(USA) seminaries data regarding the race, ethnicity, denominational affiliation, and gender composition of faculty, board members, and students and provide a comparative annual report to each seminary president and board.
A. Rationale for Recommendation B.3.

A decline from previous levels in recruitment and retention of Hispanic/Latino/a faculty, especially those who are Presbyterian, and the lack of success so far in building a sizable cohort is a matter of real concern. Appeals for inclusion have had limited impact. This recommendation wishes to try offering comparative figures so that particular schools can benchmark their success against others and thereby find an incentive for change.

B. Recommendations Regarding New Church Developments (NCDs)

The Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Encourage presbyteries to develop a vision and strategy and to prioritize and allocate resources for Hispanic/Latino/a NCDs, new worshiping communities, and other ministries; and encourage presbyteries to share these visions/strategies and to work in partnership with the Hispanic/Latino/a Congregational Support Office.

Rationale for Recommendation C.1.

Mid councils have a responsibility for developing new communities of faith to further the mission of Jesus Christ. In order to do so, a vision and strategy are needed, which should include a focus on the growing Hispanic/Latino/a population. Once a strategy has been developed, sharing this strategy with the Hispanic/Latino/a Congregational Support Office will foster communication and grow a connectional body among the communities and the PC(USA).

2. Encourage presbyteries, in partnership with PC(USA) seminaries, to identify Hispanic/Latino/a inquirers, candidates, and commissioned ruling elders who demonstrate leadership qualities appropriate for NCD ministry, and share this information with presbyteries and the Hispanic/Latino/a Congregational Support Office.

Rationale for Recommendation C.2.

Specific leadership skills are needed to initiate, implement, and sustain NCDs. Individuals possessing such skills should be availed various resources that will encourage and support the development of NCDs and other new worshiping communities.

3. Encourage presbyteries and GAMC ministry areas to provide resources for Hispanic/Latino/a commissioned ruling elders, seminary students, pastors, and other interested leadership to participate in local, regional, and national NCD events and services to foster enrichment and education of the NCD program.

Rationale for Recommendation C.3.

The January 2012 research study found that in addition to the primary importance of leadership development programs/workshops designed specifically for Hispanic/Latinos/as, survey participants also indicated “evangelism” (targeted toward Hispanic/Latinos/as) as a secondary area in need of additional resources and training. Some presbyteries are working intentionally to nurture Hispanic/Latino/a NCD leaders, but others where the Hispanic/Latino/a presence is growing are not acknowledging such growth or providing appropriate NCD support and training for Hispanic/Latino/a leaders. The Office of Evangelism and Church Growth of the GAMC has a program for the training of Hispanic/Latino/a NCD pastors through a coaching program. More programs such as this are needed at a local level.

C. Recommendations Regarding Youth and Young Adults

The Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Direct the Office of Hispanic/Latino/a Congregational Support and the Office of Resources and Relationships with Hispanic/Latino/a constituencies to convene a group of people (young adults and adults) to serve as a mentoring network for youth and young adults in the different regions where they are needed.

Rationale for Recommendation D.1.

Currently no systemic mentoring strategy designed for Hispanic/Latino/a youth and young adults exists. Such a mentoring process would provide youth and young adults with a trusting relationship with a caring leader who will help foster discipleship. The creation of this mentoring network will provide support and motivation for local leaders and help them inspire youth and young adults to a higher commitment to Jesus Christ, resulting in their involvement at all levels of the church’s mission.

According to the January 2012 Research Study commissioned by the Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group, the survey participants indicated that the Strategy for Ministry with the Hispanic/Latino/a constituencies in the PC(USA) [215th General Assembly (2003)] has been more effectively implemented nationally than regionally. However, the study also found that leadership initiatives and programs designed specifically for Hispanics/Latinos/as would be most effectively implemented at the regional level.

[The assembly approved Item 10-17, Recommendation D.2., with amendment. See pp. 61, 76.]

2. [Direct] [Encourage] the Office of Ministries with Youth and encourage other PC(USA) entities to incorporate cultural proficiency/sensitivity training in relation to Hispanic/Latino/a young people as a part of the training process for leadership of all events, gatherings, and resources (including providing interpreters for Spanish-speaking participants, bilingual worship, and multilingual promotional resources).

Rationale for Recommendation D.2.

Due to the changing nature of the church, events for youth and young adults should accurately reflect the diversity of the larger society. Young people should be able to connect their own lives and experiences to the contents presented through worship and faith encounters. The church as a whole can benefit from the rich diversity that already exists within it. All leadership should be aware of and include the gifts of all of God’s children.

[The assembly approved Item 10-17, Recommendation E. See pp. 61, 76.]

E. Other Recommendations

The Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) direct the Hispanic/Latino/a Congregational Support Office, in conversations with its constituencies, to effectively implement the PC(USA) Hispanic National Strategy [approved by the 215th General Assembly (2003); Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 531ff] into a strategic plan that will provide guidance to Hispanic/Latino/a communities and groups for partnering with the General Assembly, mid councils, and PCUSA) seminaries in addressing these matters. This should happen in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the National Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterian Caucus to monitor progress and report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Rationale for Recommendation E.

The January 2012 research study found widespread unfamiliarity about the 2003 Hispanic National Strategy among all groups surveyed. Specifically, nearly seven of 10 (68 percent) of Hispanic/Latino/a leaders indicated some degree of unfamiliarity with the 2003 strategy. Of those more familiar with the strategy, many indicated that it had not been implemented effectively, particularly at the regional level. This lack of awareness and lack of effective implementation can be attributed to the absence of a clear communication strategy, a centralized monitoring system, and well-defined evaluation mechanisms. These areas can be improved with the development of a well-designed strategic plan that includes, as measurable objectives, the recommendations of this report.

Overall Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2010 Referral: Item 15-09. On Convening a Conversation to Develop a Strategy for Addressing Hispanic/Latino Participation at All Levels of the Church (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1164).

The recommendation was as follows:

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) convene a conversation within the larger church to develop a comprehensive strategy for addressing the concern for Hispanic/Latino/a leadership at all levels of the church that would include and be led by no fewer than two representatives appointed or elected by each of the following groups: the PC(USA) Hispanic/Latina/o Caucus, the PC(USA) Office of Vocation, the Advisory Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns, the Committee on Theological Education, and the General Assembly Mission Council. Other groups and/or appropriate individuals may be invited into the conversations with all individually responsible for reporting to their respective groups and corporately back to the 220th General Assembly (2012). – COTE (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1164)

The Book of Order states, “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups … shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church” (Book of Order, G-4.0403). In an ever-increasing multicultural and multiethnic United States society, the statement above takes on new meaning and relevance.
The 2010 U.S. Census indicates that communities of European descent are a minority in many areas of the country. Certainly, by mid-century or even before, demographers predict, the racial-ethnic population “will outnumber whites throughout the nation.” Among these “emerging majorities,” Hispanics/Latinos/as constitute the fastest-growing ethno-cultural group, at over 55 million strong. Many consider this reality an opportunity to enhance their world view and to learn from others who hold different perspectives on life and faith. Unfortunately, many others react negatively to this projected increase in the Hispanic/Latino/a population. Racist attitudes have crystallized in anti-immigration laws in many parts of the country, especially in the South, with the overt intent of targeting Hispanics/Latinos/as. Even the church struggles to make the changes necessary to reflect these present dynamics and to prepare for what the future will bring. For the most part, strategies intended to make the church more ethnically inclusive lack both resources and full institutional support. In spite of many years of official efforts by the General Assembly Mission Council and the development of programs aimed to help the church become more ethnically inclusive, on the last count, the PC(USA) was still approximately 91 percent white. Even as the growth rate is more stable within racial ethnic communities, these figures reflect not so much the success of any effort to increase the ethnic diversity of the church as much as the rapid attrition of its white members. Thus the percentage of people of color in the PC(USA) is growing in large part because white communities are declining. While the United States moves toward an increasingly multiethnic and multicultural future, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) appears to move counterculturally, maintaining primarily a monocultural, ethnocentric church while, at the same time, declining in numbers.

God created a diverse world of forms, colors, languages, cultures, and peoples (ethne) and “saw everything that [God] had made, and indeed, it was very good” (Gen. 1:31a). In time, God’s own offspring—Jesus Christ—through the Incarnation, became a human being born as a Jew within the context of the Roman Empire. Raised in Galilee “of the nations,” his milieu included the cultural experience of Macedonians, Persians, Assyrians, Babylonians, Syrians, Romans and indigenous Canaanites. His genealogy included Canaanites and Moabites. He spoke Aramaic and Hebrew, perhaps even Greek. Jesus ministered to Samaritans and Roman citizens, as well as to his own Jewish people. The gospel gives witness to Jesus who, since birth, experienced outsider status and whose presence attracted those who felt marginalized by society. Jesus reached out to them and found them worthy of inclusion at the table of fellowship. Jesus died for the world (Jn. 3:16) and sent his followers to all nations (Mt. 28:19). He broke down societal, cultural, religious, and racial barriers by speaking to and accepting water from the woman at the well, an ethnic and social outcast (John 4). By the power of the Spirit, Jesus’ Word gave birth to the church on the day of Pentecost as a multilingual/multicultural community (Acts 2:1–13), a community that welcomed the diverse gifts of its members and lived in true solidarity by the sharing of common resources (Acts 2:43–47) and by accepting everyone as equal partners in ministry and mission despite differences in ethnicity or nationality (Acts 6 and 10ff).

If the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a predominantly white, English-speaking denomination, is going to thrive and have effective, faithful ministries in a multicultural and multiethnic society, then it must develop strategies to face the challenge of becoming a more intentional community of inclusion. The church must evolve from a model of diversity that seeks inclusion through mere representation and quotas toward a model of equality, hospitality, and justice, based on full partnership in mission, so that it can be a church in true solidarity with peoples from different cultures, ethnicities, and languages. The church that shares and welcomes the diverse gifts of its people, in service and leadership, becomes a first fruit of God’s Realm; a true house of prayer for all nations (Mk. 11:17).

Recent Actions

Specifically regarding the Hispanic/Latino/a constituency and the need to continue to improve outreach efforts to those constituents, in 2003 the General Assembly approved the Strategy for Ministry with the Hispanic-Latino Constituencies in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This comprehensive strategy’s purpose was to encourage and resource the entire church to engage in ministries with and outreach to the Latino communities throughout the country.

In late 2009, representatives of the Hispanic/Latino/a National Presbyterian Caucus met with the Committee on Theological Education in San Anselmo, California, to present their concerns about the recent loss of the only two Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterian professors in Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seminaries. The request included plans for intentional recruitment of Hispanic/Latino/a professors and students by PC(USA) seminaries as well as changes in the core curricula of these institutions to prepare students from all ethno-cultural backgrounds to minister effectively cross-culturally given the present and future dynamics.

This conversation led the COTE to direct an action to the 219th General Assembly (2010) that in essence asked the church to “convene a conversation within the larger church to develop a comprehensive strategy for addressing the concern for Hispanic/Latino/a leadership at all levels of the church.” The General Assembly approved this request.

The conversation group met via conference call as well as at one face-to-face meeting in June 2011. At the June meeting, the group realized that they needed more information about Hispanic/Latino/a ministries in the PC(USA). To this end, the group commissioned a national research study with the primary objective of cataloguing educational programs, workshops, and other initiatives designed specifically for Hispanics/Latinos/as and evaluating the impact of these programs/workshops on the ministries of the participants. A secondary goal of the research study was to evaluate the awareness and implementation of the National Hispanic Strategy approved by the 215th General Assembly (2003).
The group contracted with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s Research Services, who conducted this national study in January 2012. The overall sample of 266 participants contained 149 Hispanic/Latino/a leaders (ruling elders and teaching elders), 94 mid council executives, 12 leaders from PC(USA) seminaries, and 11 PC(USA) agency chairs and senior staff. The complete results of the study are included in Appendix A.

Conversation Group Members

Tony Aja, convener, and Sandra Luciano-Andujar (National Presbyterian Hispanic/Latino Caucus); Stephen C. Hsieh and Carmen Rosario (Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns); Iain Torrance and Mindy Douglas Adams (Committee on Theological Education); Martha Miller (Office of Vocations); Olanda Carr (General Assembly Mission Council); Daniel Beteta, Ruben Armendariz, and Jose’ Irizzary (invited partners-at-large).

Endnotes

1. Book of Order 2009–2011, before the changes that were approved in 2011.

2. Phillip Jenkins asserts that “The religious future of the Christian world is in the hands and under the influence of Global South Christians, most of them people of color with very different world views, culture and languages from the presently dominant white, Western church.” The Presbyterian national churches in Mexico and Guatemala together, for example, are more numerous than the PC(USA), with a combined membership of more than three million congregants. Many of these Presbyterian Christians from the “Global South” are also new immigrants who now reside in the United States.

3. More than half of the growth in the total U.S. population between 2000 and 2010 resulted from an increase of the Hispanic population. Between 2000 and 2010, the Hispanic population grew by 43 percent, rising from 35.3 million in 2000 to 50.5 million in 2010. The rise in the Hispanic population accounted for more than half of the 27.3 million increase in the total U.S. population. By 2010, Hispanics comprised 16 percent of the total U.S. population of 308.7 million (National Institute for Latino Policy and 2010 Census).

4. Jack Marcum, Ph.D., coordinator of Research Services, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), July 1, 2011. Dr. Marcum explained in a recent PowerPoint presentation at a national church gathering: “While the total number of PC(USA) congregations declined from 11,260 in 1998 to 10,657 in 2009, most of the churches that closed were white. In contrast, the growth that has occurred in the past decade has generally been among immigrant ethnic churches.”

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON 10-17

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-17—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 10-17 be answered by the advice and counsel of ACREC to Item 05-12 (Mid Council Commission Report of the General Assembly), which was to approve an alternate resolution to read as follows:

“2. Empower the appointed commission to develop strategies to address the questions raised in the reports noted above, and to be granted adequate budget for this work.

“3. Direct the commission, in consultation with representative groups, to develop strategies toward the path forward for the PC(USA)

“a. for the development and support of ministries and structures that support and grow established and emerging racial ethnic congregations;

“b. for the development and support of ministries and structures that support and grow multicultural congregations;
“c. for the development and support of ministries and structures that support new immigrant congregations;
“d. for the growth of understanding of the issues race, culture, and ethnicity raise within the Christian community, including development of churchwide strategies to raise consciousness of white privilege.

“5. Give representation on the commission to the following groups:
“a. racial ethnic caucuses
“b. new immigrant congregations and ministries
“c. racial ethnic congregations
“d. multicultural congregations
“e. Women of Color Joint Working Group
“f. mid council staff
“g. ACREC
“h. GACOR;

“and that all decisions would be made by consensus in order to ensure voice for all commission members.

“6. Direct the commission to consult with other groups as needed, both within and outside the PC(USA), to develop workable and sustainable strategies.

“7. Bring recommendations to the 221st General Assembly (2014).”

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns hears echoes of voices from across the church in the report’s Recommendation 8, which calls for the formation of a National Racial Ethnic Ministry Task Force. Specifically in reports to this General Assembly, calls have been made for

- a national consultation to develop strategies and collaborate on growing new and existing African American congregations and communities of faith in the PC(USA) (Item 16-03, African American Church Growth Strategy Report, Recommendation 1);
- the development of a national strategy for Hispanic/Latino Church Growth, and infrastructure built to support this new strategy (Item 10-17, Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group Report, Recommendation e.);
- a national consultation to develop strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA) (Special Task Force to Study Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth, Recommendations 1–6);
- recommendations to develop effective strategies for the development of racial ethnic and new immigrant worshipping communities; train seminary students in emerging cultural realities, and develop strategies within our seminaries to work toward curricular and faculty reform and change, that we might train racial ethnic and new immigrant leaders more effectively; develop multilingual resources and translation capacities to better witness within our increasingly diverse society; explore disparities in compensation between those of more and less represented groups in our church; develop resources to support the growth of new immigrant ministries and congregations, and increase the understanding among Presbyterians of white privilege that we might repent and be renewed and empowered for more faithful service (Item 16-07, Report of the Special Committee on the Nature of the Church in the 21st Century, Recommendations1.c., 3.a., d., e., 4., 5., 6.b., c., f., and 8, respectively, pages 1462ff).

These, in addition to the recommendation from the Mid Council Commission to develop a National Racial Ethnic Ministry Task Force, make it clear that while Presbyterians have been thinking about racial ethnic and new immigrant ministries for over a century—and while many faithful ministries have been launched in many contexts that have borne much fruit—we know and are voicing in many arenas our awareness that there is still much work to do. Race, culture, and language still divide us, marring the image of Christ we share with a world in need and blunting our witness to the good news. The current excitement about developing “1001 New Worshipping Communities” will not be realized without the engagement and investment of racial ethnic Presbyterians. To date, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has not addressed issues of race and culture sufficiently to ensure either that the needed engagement would happen, or that the voices of racial ethnic Presbyterians would be heard in the conversation.

Therefore, to faithfully steward the resources entrusted to us by taking a proactive approach to a number of overlapping initiatives and recommendations, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to answer all the recommendations noted above with the approval of this recommendation.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 10-17

Comment on Item 10-17—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises approval of Item 10-17, Recommendations A.1.–E.1., and offers the 220th General Assembly (2012) the following comment:

The Conversation Group has yielded abundant fruits that will nourish important ministries of the greater PC(USA) for years to come, especially if the assembly acts on the recommendations and assists council in implementation. This approach may also suggest a helpful model for future General Assembly actions that seek to bring reconciliation to hurting communities who have experienced systemic discriminatory practice and demonstrate disparities in achievement where inequity is entrenched.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 10-17

[Received June 29, 2012]

Comment on Item 10-17—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

1. GAMC Comment on Recommendation A.1.

The Office of Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support and the Office of Spanish Language Resources and Relationships currently has bilingual websites, in Spanish and English. The GAMC and OGA also provide the Book of Order, The Book of Confessions, the Presbyterian Hymnal, “Living the Vision” (Hispanic/Latino-a emphasis), “Living the Vision” (multicultural emphasis), the Hispanic/Latino-a Strategy, the Hispanic/Latino-a Strategy Manual for Implementation, Engage (an evangelism resource), and some Christian Education curriculum in the Spanish language. Presbyterian Women also provides some of its resources in Spanish for Latina Presbyterian Women and some Special Offerings resources are in Spanish.

[See Joint OGA/GAMC comment on Item 16-07, page 1483, for additional information regarding translation efforts and anticipated costs.]

2. GAMC Comment on Recommendation A.4.

The GAMC, through the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area, is engaged in the work of equipping, connecting, and inspiring Hispanic/Latino-a Presbyterians through its office of Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support.

The primary focus of the Office of Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support is to provide leadership to Hispanic/Latino-a Presbyterians and to partner with mid councils in the areas of evangelism and church growth, encouraging the development of new Hispanic/Latino-a worshipping communities and the transformation of existing congregations. Staff in this office provides assistance and support to the National Hispanic/Latino-a Presbyterian Caucus and its twelve regional caucuses, the National Hispanic Latina Presbyterian Women, the National Hispanic Latino Presbyterian Men, and the National Hispanic/Latino-a Youth and Young Adults group. We also provide a witness to the whole church by articulating the unique Hispanic/Latino-a Reformed cultural heritage and tradition.

In 2011, two Hispanic/Latino-a New Church Developments and eight new Bible Study groups were started, as well as one Spanish language regional commissioned ruling elder program. There are currently eleven Presbyterian commissioned ruling elder and leadership development programs established around the country. The office also provides resources in English and Spanish to Hispanic/Latino-a constituents in the church.

3. GAMC Comment on Recommendation C.3.

A Handbook for Hispanic/Latino New Church Development, a bilingual resource, was published a few years ago by the Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support office and Congregational Ministries Publishing. This bilingual handbook offers pastors, presbyteries and church leaders practical ways to build Hispanic/Latino-a new worshipping communities. The handbook is intended to inspire readers with stories of successful new church developments and to equip them with information on new models of ministry for Hispanic/Latino-a evangelism and church growth. More than 550 of these handbooks, as well as 1,055 Presbyterian Spanish language worship books (Libro de Adoracion, Geneva Press, published in 2009) and 9,306 Presbyterian Spanish language hymnbooks (El Himnario Presbiteriano, Westminster John Knox Press, published in 1999) were sold. Congregations and presbyteries are using these resources to help them as they grow new worshiping communities and also for bilingual and multicultural worship.

The Office of Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support held eleven regional church growth training events in locations in the United States and Puerto Rico, and 100 pastors and leaders attended a national continuing education practical theology event last year. Also, a national youth and young adult network was organized, and a national consultation on the future of Hispanic/Latino-a ministry will be held later this year in partnership with the Hispanic/Latino-a Caucus.

Hispanic/Latino-a ministry in the church is occurring and will continue to be the central focus of the GAMC’s Office of Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support. Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women is committed to growing new Hispanic/Latino-a worshiping communities in partnership with mid-councils and developing transformative racial ethnic and immigrant leaders as we strive to become a more diverse church.

4. GAMC Comment on Recommendation D.2.

The GAMC is pleased to present the following report of its work in the area of ministries with youth with special attention to cultural proficiency and Hispanic/Latino/a ministry. Because of its extensive work in this area and the ecumenical nature of some of our work, we would request that the Office of Ministries with Youth be “encouraged” rather than “directed” to incorporate this cultural proficiency/sensitivity training in relation to Hispanic/Latino/a young people as part of the training process for all of its events. This change would place the Office of Ministries with Youth on par with the encouragement given to every other PC(USA) entity, rather than singling it out as the only office to receive specific direction.

The area of Office of Ministries with Youth is pleased to examine how it might expand and deepen its ministries with Hispanic/Latino young people (12–18 years old) as well as work in partnership with other GAMC staff and programs to do the same. The national youth ministry program is aware and has been aware of the shifting demographics in the Hispanic/Latino culture, particularly as they relate to children, youth, and families of children and youth. In response to the future increase of Hispanic/Latino young people in churches, classrooms, and communities, the national youth ministry program and associated partnerships and ministries began considering, in 2010, how to adapt its current and future programs to connect with the needs of these youth and adult youth leaders (see “Current Steps” below). There is room to improve and an open-ness to examining current program goals in light of the information presented by this conversation group. There has always been a strong commitment to presenting leadership from a wide range of cultural, geographic, and theologically diverse Christian communities in national youth ministry endeavors. The Office of Ministries with Youth and its cosponsors in youth ministry intentionally include speakers, teachers, small group leaders, and pastoral care staff from Hispanic/Latino communities.

A number of programs and ministries desire to more deeply reflect, reach, and influence young people—adolescence/youth being a particular culture itself. The Office of Ministries with Youth receives requests and is pleased to examine ways and partnerships to include the suggestions and desires of programs seeking to deepen their accompaniment of young people. The priority for the Office of Ministry with Youth is to provide, as much as possible, given staff and budget realities, experiences, events and resources that connect deeply with young people and deeply connect them with Jesus Christ.

Current Programs and Initiatives

The Office of Ministries with Youth is currently in process of having all Quicksheets (online, youth ministry resources) translated linguistically and culturally into Spanish—with the goal to post the resources in spring/summer and fall 2013. It is imperative with resources created to connect with a specific demographic that they not only be translated into the respective language (Spanish) but that they are also accessible and relevant to the specific youth and youth workers of this community (Hispanic/Latino youth group or youth leader); ensuring that adolescent rites of passage, congregational celebrations, spiritual formation, youth/adult dynamics, and Presbyterian/Reformed theological tenets are well-attended. Quicksheets are, at this time, the primary print resource being published by the Office of Ministries with Youth. The Vision Statement for Youth in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is already translated and offered online with a Spanish option.

A new series of Youth Ministry articles is currently in conversation and in the early phase of design that focuses on youth ministry in a variety of Presbyterian church cultures and communities. These include: Hispanic/Latino Youth and Youth Ministry, Korean American Youth and Youth Ministry, Asian Pacific Youth and Youth Ministry, African American Youth and Youth Ministry, Small Church Youth Ministry, Urban Youth, New Immigrant Community Youth and Youth Ministry, Communities of Youth At Risk (Foster care, Residential Home, Low Income, etc.), and Native American and American Indian Youth. The series is in the first phase, authors are being invited, consultants researched and format designed. These will be pdf resources available online at pcusa.org/youth ministry. The GAMC staff related to Hispanic/Latino congregations and resources have been consulted and have been valuable advisors. Funding becomes available for these resources in winter 2014.

Presbyterian Youth Triennium

The Presbyterian Youth Triennium (PYT) included cultural sensitivity training for its primary group of volunteer leaders and community life staff during orientation and pre-event training. This segment of the training, while not being exclusively focused on Hispanic/Latino youth and culture, did indeed include Hispanic and Latino features, including information regarding positive growth in numbers of Hispanic/Latino youth at the Triennium and in Presbyterian churches, increased need for theological illustration including Hispanic/Latino people, and the need for increased sensitivity/awareness on the part of Triennium leadership to the particular needs of young people coming from predominantly Hispanic/Latino communities. *The Triennium community is still predominantly Caucasian, in registration, but has experienced a very steady growth in youth and adult leaders of backgrounds other than Caucasian, particularly growth in African American and Native American youth. During the 2010 Triennium a national Hispanic Presbyterian event was held very near to the time of the Triennium. This might have prohibited more Hispanic young people from attending the Triennium. Compared to 2004 and 2007—there were fewer Hispanic youth in attendance at the 2010 event. The 2013 Triennium staff has had conversation with GAMC colleagues responsible for Hispanic/Latino leader development and congregational ministry about ways in which to incorporate a possible pre-event for Hispanic/Latino youth and youth leaders that would allow these Triennium participants to gather and participate with both communities. This event would be funded by the Triennium budget. The Triennium is held for the purpose of connecting, inspiring, and instructing the full spectrum of Presbyterian youth, representing all cultures, zip codes, and stages of older adolescence.

The Office of Ministries with Youth sees great value in deepening the awareness of and sensitivity to Hispanic/Latino youth and church issues and needs. To this end, the Office of Ministries with Youth will work with colleagues to include training of the PYT staff and production team so that improvements and enhancements might be made in the foundational plans of Triennium activities. There are two major Triennium planning meetings left to complete; adding a cultural sensitivity component to the planning process has already been discussed and enthusiastically welcomed by the staff. Staff will work to secure leadership aware of both the needs of Hispanic/Latino youth and the way in which this sits within the larger youth community.

The Office of Ministries with Youth, in fall 2011, confirmed three prominent Hispanic Presbyterian leaders to be platform leaders at the 2013 Presbyterian Youth Triennium. The Triennium staff is pleased and excited to announce that the Reverend Dr. Claudio Carvalhaes will serve as a preacher during the event; the Reverend Jorge Gonzalez will serve as music leader; and Presbyterian youth worker, Omayra Gonzalez-Mendez, Guaynabo, Puerto Rico, will serve as a recreation leader.

The Triennium, and other previous national youth ministry events, offers translation, for all requested languages and for attendees who request translation. For some newer events, such as Faith in 3D and Pathways, there are plans to offer translation of workshop designs and/or language translation if requested.

In addition to the above plans for the Triennium, there will be, for the first time, a Youth Worker Track. The Youth Worker Track will focus on leader development/youth ministry training for adult youth workers. The Office of Ministries with Youth has worked with the Triennium staff to incorporate a special Hispanic/Latino Youth Leader training into the design. Presenters are being identified and invited.

Further Developments and Potential Programs

The Office of Ministries with Youth works in partnership with the Princeton Theological Seminary Institute for Youth Ministry. Currently, there are plans for a bilingual forum (focused on offering Hispanic/Latino or Spanish speaking youth workers training and enrichment) at an upcoming Princeton Youth Ministry Forum. Discussion about the need for this event began in spring 2011 and conversation/planning continues presently. Possible dates include fall 2013 or winter 2014. The IYM Forum for Youth Ministry is an annual continuing education event for youth ministry leaders (adults). The Office of Ministries with Youth will cosponsor this event.

- Pathways Youth Leader Seminars: Workshops could be translated. Events could be held in predominantly Hispanic/Latino churches and incorporate bilingual leadership/presentations.
- Presbyterian Youth Book Club: Spanish language versions of the featured books could be added to the links.
- Teen Suicide Prevention Resources: Spanish language version could be created and added.

Recommendation Pertaining to Budgetary and Financial Concerns of the Church

A. Relating to Budgets for General Assembly Mission Program

[The assembly approved Item 10-18, Recommendation A.1. See pp. 61, 74.]

1. Presbyterian Mission Program—General Assembly Mission Program Receipts and Expenditures Actual Compared to Budget for 2010 and 2011.

---
The display that is found in gamc-budget-charts-A-1.pdf, or pages 982–85, is the report of actual revenue and expenditures for the years 2010 and 2011.

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted Policy governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly Level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall:

1. Report to each General Assembly:

   a. Actual total financial resources used to support the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and the expenditures during the most recently completed year. (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 375)

   [The assembly approved Item 10-18, Recommendation A.2. See pp. 61, 74.]

   The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) receive the revised report of the 2012 General Assembly Mission Budget and Program in the total amount of $89,091,490.

   [The display that is found in gamc-budget-charts-A-2.pdf (also on pages 986–87) is the report of the 2012 General Assembly Mission Budget and Program.]

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted Policy governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly Level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall:

1. Report to each General Assembly:

   a. Actual total financial resources used to support the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and the expenditures during the most recently completed year. (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 375)

   b. adjustments, if any, approved by the General Assembly [Mission] Council for the current budget year.

2. adjust if necessary the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program as adopted by the General Assembly … (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 375)

   [The assembly approved Item 10-18, Recommendation A.3. See p. 74.]

   The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve the 2013 General Assembly Mission Budget and Program in the total amount of $81,576,103 and the 2014 General Assembly Mission Budget and Program in the total amount of $78,196,031.

   [The display that is found in gamc-budget-charts-A-3.pdf (see also pages 988–91) is the report of the 2013 General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and the 2014 General Assembly Mission Budget Program.]

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted Policy Governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly Level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall: …

3. recommend to the General Assembly the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program for the next succeeding budget cycle. Displayed in the recommendation shall be:

   a. all projected financial sources; and

The General Assembly Mission Council is required by the Constitution to prepare and submit a comprehensive budget to the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-3.0113).
B. Relating to Reserved or Committed Funds

[The assembly approved Item 10-18, Recommendation B.1. See pp. 61, 74.]

1. Unrestricted and Committed Funds

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) receive the report of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, regarding unrestricted and committed funds as of December 31, 2011.

Rationale

The report of the unrestricted funds is divided between uncommitted and committed funds. The display found in gamec-budget-charts-B.pdf (also pages 992–96) indicates those funds as well as the activity of those funds and the status of the total reserves as of closing December 31, 2011. The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted the following policy:

A. Presbyterian Mission Program Fund

1. A fund composed of all unrestricted and uncommitted receipts and assets intended for the support of the General Assembly mission program.

2. Sources to maintain this fund shall include all unified revenue available for the General Assembly Mission Program, including but not limited to:
   a. unified income including receipts from congregations, presbyteries, or individuals;
   b. unrestricted gifts, legacies, bequests
   c. unrestricted investment income;
   d. gift annuity excess reserves;
   e. such nonrecurring income as the General Assembly Council shall direct by general or specific policy statement; and
   f. under expenditure of the unified portion of the General Assembly Mission Budget.

3. The Uncommitted Funds portion of the Presbyterian Mission Program Fund at year end must be equal to at least 30% of the Unified portion and direct mission support of the General Assembly Mission Budget, which minimum provides for
   a. cash flow needed for mission purposes;
   b. guarantee of the current unified budget. (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 377)

C. Relating to Support for General Assembly Mission

[The assembly approved Item 10-18, Recommendation C.1. See pp. 61, 75.]

1. John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) allocate the annual income realized in 2011 and projected for 2012 from the John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds in support of the budget for the general mission work of the General Assembly.

Rationale

Current practice is to recommend to each General Assembly the allocation of annual income from these two funds in light of wording in the donors’ wills that requires this annual process.

Portion of the will of Edmund P. Dwight (May 23, 1903):

I will and bequeath to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America, to be used for the establishment of the Christian Religion, that the light of the gospel may be made to join more perfectly...

Portion of the will of John C. Lord (January 2, 1873):

… to the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., for religious and charitable uses, to be called the John C. Lord Fund, the annual interest of which is to be disposed of and distributed by the said General Assembly at each annual meeting for the furtherance of the Gospel of our Blessed Saviour, at home or abroad, as the Assembly may deem best. …

The applicable provisions of the two wills facilitate the annual income realized from these funds to be used in the General Assembly's General Mission Budget.
Income from these funds in 2011 were $27,597.60 and it is projected that the income from these funds in 2012 will be approximately $24,857.42.

[The assembly approved Item 10-18, Recommendation C.2. See pp. 61, 75.]

2. Special Offerings 2011

The General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) incorporate into its Minutes the following summary of receipts from Special Offerings for the years 2010 and 2011.

[The charts that are found in gamc-special-offerings-C-2.pdf (also page 997) show the summary of receipts for Special Offerings for the years 2010 and 2011.]

[D. 1. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council not to implement the 218th General Assembly (2008) action regarding cost allocation and recovery with respect to the Theological Education Fund in the 2013–2014 General Assembly Mission Budgets.]

2. Direct the Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012), in consultation with the Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010) and with the Committee on Theological Education (COTE), to appoint a special committee on the funding of theological institutions, with a charge to review the funding relationship of theological institutions to the General Assembly and the church, and to propose any needed changes, including a strengthened funding mechanism for the support of theological institutions by the church. The special committee should make its report to the 221st General Assembly (2014). The special committee should consist of thirteen members, all of whom should be persons who are especially knowledgeable about theological institutions. One member should be the director of COTE, and a second the director of the GAMC Theology, Worship and Education ministry area. The remaining eleven should include two elected members of COTE, five PC(USA) seminary presidents, and a GAMC member. Other members would likewise be persons with knowledge and experience in the field of theological education, one of whom should have expertise in fundraising. The special committee will hold up to three face-to-face meetings (an initial meeting for two days, and up to two additional one-day meetings). Conference calls and other technological resources would be used for other meetings in order to reduce costs.

Rationale

Special Offerings enable an important part of the General Assembly Mission Program. In 2010, income from these offerings totaled approximately 18 percent of total income for the mission program of the church and 27 percent of the mission gifts from congregations. In 2011, income from these offerings totaled approximately 23 percent of total income for the mission program of the church and 33 percent of the mission gifts from congregations.

Item 10-19

[The assembly answered Item 10-19 by the action taken on Item 10-14. See pp. 61, 77.]

On Restoring the Objectives of the One Great Hour of Sharing—From the Presbytery of Western North Carolina.

The Presbytery of Western North Carolina overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to amend the Special Offerings Advisory Task Force Report so as to

1. restore the objectives of the One Great Hour of Sharing to the three programs presently funded by OGHS: i.e., Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, Presbyterian Hunger Program, and Self-Development of Peoples;
2. maintain the already determined percentages for the distribution of the offering;
3. provide for a separate avenue for the funding of the Peacemaking Program.

Rationale

The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force (SOATF), in its report to the 220th General Assembly (2012), recommends that the Peacemaking Offering be added to the One Great Hour of Sharing (OGHS) offering, thus having the offering designated for four ministries (Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, Presbyterian Hunger Program, Self-Development of Peoples, and Peacemaking).

The SOATF proposed that the current fixed allocation for the OGHS offering be removed so that the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) would determine the allocation annually.
Including four ministries in OGHS, rather than the three ministries that are now included, will dilute the clear focus that OGHS now has on addressing critical human need around the world.

The One Great Hour of Sharing is the major avenue through which we participate in ecumenical relief and development ministries with other Protestant and Orthodox communions in the United States, as well as around the world.

Having a clear percentage for the distribution of the OGHS offering provides clarity for planning the future programs of those three ministries.

Annual decision-making by GAMC for OGHS distribution would work against the clarity that would stimulate giving, as well as mission planning and implementation in presbyteries and local congregations.

Interpretation of the OGHS in local congregations would be much more difficult.

Item 10-20

[The assembly approved Item 10-20. See pp. 61, 75.]

A Resolution to Recommit to Celebrating the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Call on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to recommit to honoring and celebrating women of color, extending the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God to 2022.

2. Direct the Moderator, Stated Clerk, and Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) to communicate by the end of 2012 with congregations, presbyteries and synods, seminaries, campus ministries, and conference centers asking them to recognize the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God and incorporate it in worship, conferences, training events, and other activities.

3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) to provide annual funding in the amount of $7,000 for the Joint Working Group (up to eight members) to meet independently of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns once each year, to be incorporated into the per capita budget every year.

4. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) to include the Joint Working Group in the planning of future Women of Color Consultations.

5. Direct General Assembly Mission Council (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) to lift up the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God in its web-based and print publications periodically throughout the decade.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 09-13. Report, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies, Recommendation 3. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) to Create a Permanent Joint Working Group on Women of Color in the Church, to Be Made Up of Two Members of ACREC and Two Members of ACWC, Appointed by the Leadership of Each Committee—From the Women of Color Consultation Task Force (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 964–77).

The Joint Working Group was formed as a permanent committee as a result of the recommendations that came from the Women of Color Consultation Task Force, which were approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 964–77). They had their first meeting in July of 2009 in conjunction with a joint meeting of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC). They met again in January 2010, doing the work of monitoring the church’s response to issues and concerns raised in the initial Women of Color Consultation. They brought to the attention of both advocacy committees a number of issues directly affecting women of color. The Joint Working Group has not met since, due to the inability of the group to currently function under the parameters originally established for them. The ACWC is recommending new provisions for the Joint Working Group in order that this permanent monitoring committee established by the 218th General Assembly (2008) can continue to carry out its mandated work.

As reported to the 219th General Assembly (2010), the Women of Color Joint Working Group along with ACWC and ACREC have been discouraged by the lack of or inadequate responses to their referral monitoring inquiries. By the 219th
In passing the recommendations from the Women of Color Consultation Task Force, the 219th General Assembly (2010) reaffirmed the commitment of the PC(USA) to be a community of “full participation and representation” of every member of the body of Christ (Book of Order, F-1.0403), while also acknowledging that this commitment still requires a tremendous amount of intentionality and work—especially when it comes to the genuine and equitable inclusion of women of color in the life and decision making of the church. Sadly, in 2012, three years after the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God was to have begun, very few people in the denomination know what it is.

Restructuring within the GAMC (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency) has also had a direct effect on the Joint Working Group. When the Joint Working Group was formed, the advocacy committee staffing situation was of a different model from what exists now. This has direct bearing on the Joint Working Group’s ability to come together to meet. When the Joint Working Group was formed, each advocacy committee had their own staff person to resource them with expertise in their particular area of advocacy and to assist them in completing their work. This allowed the two committees to meet once a year at the same time in the same place, where they would use a portion of their time to come together to share their work with one another and often work together on intersecting issues. Due to restructuring of the GAMC (soon to be Presbyterian Mission Agency), since 2010, the two advocacy committees have shared one staff person. Since one person cannot resource and assist two groups at one time, the advocacy committees can no longer meet simultaneously. The Joint Working Group (who also share the same staff person as the advocacy committees) is thus unable fulfill the directive from the 218th General Assembly (2008) to meet when the advocacy committees meet together.

When they were able to meet directly following those simultaneous advocacy committee meetings, the Joint Working Group (four of whose members are on the advocacy committees) was able to save tremendously on travel cost. Four of their (up to) eight members were able to have their travel covered by the advocacy committees, with whom those four were already meeting anyway. Neither advocacy committee incurred any extra cost, as this was one of their regularly scheduled meetings. The only travel cost the Joint Working Group had to pay was for their two to four at-large members. Given the structure of the current staffing situation, this scenario is no longer possible, meaning that in order for the Joint Working Group to continue to meet once a year as mandated by the 218th General Assembly (2008), their budget must be increased. They have to this point only been allotted only $3,060 a year, which cannot cover travel and meeting expenses for six to eight people.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) has the opportunity to recommit to our call to be a church that more faithfully and fairly reflects the diversity of the body of Christ. Given that the 218th General Assembly (2008) saw fit to create the permanent Joint Working Group, the church has a responsibility to continue to support this group. The booklet describing the history, context, and mandate of the Joint Working Group, called Hearing and Singing New Songs to God (http://www.pcUSA.org/media/uploads/acrec/pdf/wocctaskforcereport.pdf), is available online, so making this resource and the context of the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God known would cost little to nothing. To begin the Decade again would serve to show our willingness to admit that we haven’t yet done what we committed to do, but that from this point we will indeed lift new songs to God and in our actions reflect our commitment to celebrating the lives and gifts of women of color in this denomination.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 10-20

Comment on Item 10-20—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully offers this comment on Item 10-20 to the 220th General Assembly (2012):

The GACOR answered a referral (from 2010) related to the original report approved in 2008. The GACOR has distributed the report (in 2009) to all presbyteries and synods accompanied with a letter written by the Stated Clerk, recommending the report for study and use. In the Summer 2011, GACOR provided workshops at the Big Tent 2 meeting on the intersections of race and gender and incorporated an intersectional approach to its own Biennial Synod COR Training Events in Fall 2009 and 2011. We have seen tremendous value in the work and commend it to the larger church.
Item 10-21

[The assembly approved Item 10-21. See pp. 61, 75]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Promoting the Opportunity to Host Christmas International House.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) directs the Stated Clerk to do the following:

1. Communicate electronically (or using the most cost-effective method) the opportunity of hosting Christmas International House to our 173 presbyteries by August 1, 2012, asking that at least one church in each presbytery be a host this year from December 18 to January 2, 2013.

2. Ask each presbytery to communicate this vision of hospitality among each of their congregations for 2012 with a goal of 200 programs hosting at least two students each for this next Christmas. [This can be accomplished by contacting Lisa Majoros at www.cih.org or www.amis-inc.org.]

Rationale

God calls us to welcome the stranger in our land.

Paul, in Acts 17, says God has established the times and the boundaries of the peoples of the world that they might seek “God.”

In 1955, 35,000 international students and scholars from 120 nations studied in the United States.

In 2011, more than 600,000 international students from more than 200 nations studied in colleges and universities in the United States.

The U.S.A. educates more than a million international students and scholars every five-to-ten years with a BA, MA, PHD, and other graduate degrees.

These international students and scholars will be the future leaders of their nations in politics, economics, social life, and religion.

Presbyterians have been involved in global mission for more than 175 years in more than eighty nations.

Today these international students and scholars have brought the mission field to our doorsteps, as our congregations are located next to every college or university all over the U.S.A.

We call upon our congregations’ mission and peacemaking committees and Presbyterian Women to reach out to them year-round in a ministry of friendship and hospitality in the name of Jesus Christ. The Atlanta Ministry with International Students, Inc., is a proven model for international student outreach (http://www.amis-inc.org/); as well as PRISM (Pittsburgh Region International Student Ministries office@prismpgh.org) and ISI (International Student, Inc., www.isionline.org) will train churches across the country.

We call on our mission and peacemaking committees and Presbyterian Women to consider hosting Christmas International House, a ministry of hospitality during the Christmas Holiday from December 18 – January 2nd of each year. The international students are responsible for their transportation from their city to your city, but after they arrive your congregation or community will host these women and men in their homes, and they will learn about us and about our faith during the holy season of Christmas (http://www.christmasih.org/); and

This ministry of friendship and hospitality turns away international students every year because there is no room in the inn.

Nine of every ten international students in this country are never invited into an American family’s home much less a Christian home.

Through our PC(USA) congregations, let us open the doors to these international students and create a new room in the inn through the gift of friendship, hospitality, and the love of our members.

10-Info

As instructed by the 204th General Assembly (1992), the General Assembly Mission Council presents to the General Assembly annually, the work of all task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies established by the General Assembly Mission Council, its divisions, or other assembly entities (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 144, 147, 277–78).

All ministries and the Executive Director’s Office were requested to disclose information on how many task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies were currently at work in their entity. Of the entities responding, sixty-four such groups are currently operating. Fifty-three of the groups were reported as having ongoing responsibilities. The other eleven groups have set completion dates with a written report expected by the entity, the General Assembly Mission Council, or the General Assembly itself. Whenever it is possible, the General Assembly Council assigns tasks to an existing part of its structure. All persons serving on a board, committee, task force, or work group with an expected life of more than two years are selected through the General Assembly Nominating Committee process.

1. Evangelism & Church Growth

Ongoing responsibilities: Mission Development Resource Committee, Ghost Ranch Governing Board, Stony Point Center Governing Board, Mountain Retreat Association Board of Trustees of Stock (Montreat).

2. Compassion, Peace, & Justice

Ongoing responsibilities: Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), Presbyterian Hunger Program Advisory Committee, Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Advisory Committee, Presbyterian Committee on the Self Development of People, Jarvie Commonweal Service Committee.

3. Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

(1) Theology of Compensation—data and policy follow-up—Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012)

(2) Human Rights Update Team—Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012)

(3) Economic Crisis Resolution Team—Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012)

(4) Peace Discernment Steering Team—Interim Report to 220th General Assembly (2012) and then full report to 221st General Assembly (2014)

(5) Advisors for Unbound: An interactive journal of Christian Social Justice, both from the church more broadly and from staff in the building. Face-to-face meetings only at General Assembly and Big Tent.

4. Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women

5. Theology Worship & Education

Ongoing responsibilities: Committee on Theological Education.
6. World Mission

7. Vocation

Ongoing responsibility: Educator Certification Council.

8. Communications and Funds Development

9. Executive Director’s Office

Ongoing responsibility: The Mid Council Advisory Board is a representative group of mid council leaders who meet with GAMC staff leaders to discuss ways that the GAMC and the mid councils can work together in partnership. The Middle Governing Body Advisory Board helps plan a biennial gathering of mid council leaders and key GAMC staff.

10. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC):

2011 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Workforce Analysis

1. Overview

By action of the 197th General Assembly (1985), the General Assembly Mission Council is required to report annually the equal opportunity information of all PC(USA) agencies, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods.

At the request of the Office of Human Resources, Research Services handled the collection of data for the Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Workforce Analysis for 2011. Based on the success of Web-based data collection for previous years, we followed similar procedures for 2011.

The Web-based data collection instrument was developed, tested, and deployed by Research Services. A point of contact in each organization or entity was invited by email to provide data for the organization. (The original invitation is included here as Attachment A.) An initial email invitation was sent January 12, 2012. Three reminder emails were sent to all non-responding organizations on January 17, 2012, January 24, 2012, and February 1, 2012. Responses were accepted until February 13, 2012.

2. Invited Organizations

The following agencies and organizations were requested to provide their workforce analysis data: Board of Pensions; General Assembly Mission Council; Hubbard Press; Jarvie Commonweal Service; Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation; Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, Inc.; Presbyterian Publishing Corporation; Office of the General Assembly; and all conference centers, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods associated with the PC(USA).

3. Response Rate

Of 213 invited organizations, data were received from 154 organizations, for a response rate of 72 percent. (Two email invitations to presbyteries were returned as bad email addresses for which no other working email address could be found.) Attachment B shows organizations that provided their data. Of responding organizations, a majority (83 percent) used the Web form, and 17 percent (or 26) submitted hard copy by fax, email, or interoffice mail.

4. Results

Attachment C shows the results for responding organizations and presents the percentages of employees by gender and racial-ethnic category.

Table 1 (next page) summarizes this information and provides similar data for 2005 for comparison.
It is interesting that in all but one category covered by the report, the number of employees has decreased since 2005—in many cases a substantial reduction. The exception is the Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, which increased by one staff person between 2005 and 2011. In terms of the percentage of racial-ethnic staff (non-White) and women, there has been little change overall among all PC(USA) staff, but substantial changes within some categories.

*Numbers in parentheses show the number of organizations in the category that reported in 2005 and in 2011. Looking at change when the number of reporting entities has changed could lead to inaccurate conclusions and should be done cautiously.

5. Recommendations for the Future

The data collection process went smoothly again this year. Inquiries from organizational representatives focused primarily on two topics: (1) types of employees to include (e.g., should term employees, independent contractors, and staff who were there only part of the year be included) and (2) racial ethnic categories (e.g., how to report employees who have not specified their race/ethnicity and those who self-identify as Middle Eastern). Instructions for next year should include answers to such questions.
Requesting this information in January seems to be more effective than doing so in December. This year, we received far fewer complaints about being a bad time of year for this process.

Subj: Important 2011 EEO/AA Workforce Analysis Information Needed

We are compiling this information electronically again this year. Please follow the instructions below. We suggest downloading a copy of the form so you can gather the needed information before you access the survey on the Web. To view the survey (in Adobe Acrobat format) before you submit your answers, click on this link: http://gamc.pcusa.org/media/uploads/research/pdfs/2011eeoa_eoyform.pdf. Alternatively, send an email to research@pcusa.org requesting a copy of the form and we’ll send it as an attachment.

Please forward this information to the appropriate person in your organization if you are not the person responsible for your organization’s workforce analysis data.

• Go to the survey Web site at: http://surveys.pcusa.org/eeoa2011.aspx
• Enter the password XXXX assigned to your organization.
• Complete the workforce analysis form. (Definitions are provided below and on the downloadable form.)
• If you prefer, complete the downloadable form and fax it back (502-569-8736).

The deadline for your organization’s information is Tuesday, January 31, 2012. [Later extended to February 8, 2012.]

If you need additional information or have questions, please contact Lisa Robbins (800-728-7228, x 5710 or Lisa.Robbins@pcusa.org).

If you have trouble with the survey Web site, please contact Research Services (800-728-7228, x 2040 or research@pcusa.org).

Note: Sometimes an organization’s firewall prevents transmission of responses to the survey site. If the survey returns you to a page after you've entered your responses, please re-enter your responses. It should work on the second attempt. We apologize for this problem.

We appreciate your assistance and cooperation.

Human Resources Director
General Assembly Mission Council

Racial Ethnic Categories: These are current categories defined by the federal government for EEO AA reporting. Note that each employee can be counted in only one category.
• American Indian and/or Alaska Native (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of North and South America (including Central America), and who maintain tribal affiliation or community attachment.

• Asian (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of the Far East, Southeast Asia, or the Indian subcontinent, including, for example, Cambodia, China, India, Japan, Korea, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippine Islands, Thailand, and Vietnam.

• Black and/or African American (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the black racial groups of Africa.

• Hispanic and/or Latino: All persons of Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Central or South American, or other Spanish culture or origin, regardless of race.

• Native Hawaiian or Other Pacific Islander (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the peoples of Hawaii, Guam, Samoa, or other Pacific Islands.

• Two or More Races (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons who identify with more than one of the other racial categories.

• White (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of Europe, the Middle East, or North Africa.

Other Definitions:

• Exempt: Employees who are not entitled to overtime pay (i.e., professional staff including clergy).

• Non-exempt: Employees who are entitled to overtime pay (e.g., secretarial, clerical, and custodial staff).

• Full-time: Employees who work at least 30 hours weekly.

• Part-time: Employees who work fewer than 30 hours weekly.

EEO/AA End-of-Year 2011 Report

To be completed online at www.pcusa.org/eeoaareport (Definitions provided on next page.)

First, provide data about your organization’s exempt employees, those not eligible for overtime pay.

Q-1. Please report your total number of exempt male employees in each category below—regular full-time and regular part-time exempt employees. If you have no employees in a given category, enter “0” (zero).

2010 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action

Workforce Analysis

Overview

By action of the 197th General Assembly (1985), the General Assembly Mission Council is required to report annually the equal opportunity information of all PC(USA) agencies, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods.

At the request of the Office of Human Resources, Research Services handled the collection of data for the Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Workforce Analysis for 2010. Based on the success of Web-based data collection for previous years (2005 through 2009 were handled by Research Services), we followed similar procedures.

A Web-based data collection instrument was developed, tested, and deployed by Research Services. A point of contact in each organization or entity was invited by email to provide data for the organization. (The original invitation is included here as Attachment A.) Initial email invitations were sent January 24, 2011. Two reminders emails were sent to all non-responding organizations on February 2, 2011 and February 8, 2011. Responses were accepted until February 18, 2011.

Invited Organizations

The following agencies and organizations were requested to provide their workforce analysis data: Board of Pensions, General Assembly Council, Hubbard Press, Jarvie Commonweal Service, Presbyterian Church Foundation, Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, Office of the General Assembly, and all conference centers, theological institutions, presbyteries, and synods associated with the PC(USA).

Response Rate
Of 211 invited organizations, complete data were received from 168 organizations, for a response rate of 79 percent of all organizations. (No email invitations were returned as bad email addresses.) Attachment B shows organizations that provided complete data. Of responding organizations, a majority (86 percent) used the Web form, and 24 percent (or 41) submitted hard copy by fax, email, or interoffice mail.

Results

Attachment C shows the results for responding organizations and presents the percentages of employees by gender and racial-ethnic category.

Table 1 (next page) summarizes this information and provides similar data for 2005 for comparison.

It is interesting that in all but two categories covered by the report, the number of employees has decreased since 2005—in many cases a substantial reduction. The exceptions are the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program. Even in categories where more organizations reported in 2010 than in 2005 (presbyteries and theological institutions), the number of staff in the combined reporting organizations decreased.

Recommendations for the Future

The changes and improvements put in place in recent years limited many of the problems that occurred previously. This year we received few calls from organizational representatives asking questions about the terms used on the form. Further, the ability to bypass the Web-based survey and fax or email the required information was something that quite a number found helpful. The response rate increased from 69 percent last year to 79 percent this year.

Requesting this information in January seems to be more effective than doing so in December. This year, we received far fewer complaints about being a bad time of year for this process.

Subj: Important 2010 EEO/AA Workforce Analysis Information Needed

We are compiling this information electronically again this year. Please follow the instructions below. We suggest downloading a copy of the form so you can gather the needed information before you access the survey on the Web. To view the survey (in Adobe Acrobat format) before you submit your answers, click on this link: http://gamc.pcusa.org/media/uploads/research/pdfs/2010eeoa_eoyform.pdf. Alternately, send an email to research@pcusa.org requesting a copy of the form and we’ll send it as an attachment.

Please forward this information to the appropriate person in your organization if you are not the person responsible for your organization’s workforce analysis data.

- Enter the password XXXX assigned to your organization.
- Complete the workforce analysis form. (Definitions are provided below and on the downloadable form.)
- If you prefer, complete the downloadable form and fax it back (502-569-8736).

The deadline for your organization’s information is Friday, February 4, 2011. [Later extended to February 18.]

If you need additional information or have questions, please contact Lisa Robbins, (888-728-7228, x 5710 or Lisa.Robbins@pcusa.org).

If you have trouble with the survey Web site, please contact Research Services (888-728-7228, x 2040 or research@pcusa.org).

Note: Sometimes an organization’s firewall prevents transmission of responses to the survey site. If the survey returns you to a page after you’ve entered your responses, please re-enter your responses. It should work on the second attempt. We apologize for this problem.

We appreciate your assistance and cooperation.

Racial Ethnic Categories: These are current categories defined by the federal government for EEO AA reporting. Note that each employee can be counted in only one category.

- American Indian and/or Alaska Native (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of North and South America (including Central America), and who maintain tribal affiliation or community attachment.
- Asian (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of the Far East, Southeast Asia, or the Indian subcontinent, including, for example, Cambodia, China, India, Japan, Korea, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Phillipine Islands, Thailand, and Vietnam.
- Black and/or African American (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the black racial groups of Africa.
- Hispanic and/or Latino: All persons of Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Central or South American, or other Spanish culture or origin, regardless of race.
- Native Hawaiian or Other Pacific Islander (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the peoples of Hawaii, Guam, Samoa, or other Pacific Islands.
- Two or More Races (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons who identify with more than one of the other racial categories.
- White (not Hispanic and/or Latino): All persons having origins in any of the original peoples of Europe, the Middle East, or North Africa.

Other Definitions:
Exempt: Employees who are not entitled to overtime pay (i.e., professional staff including clergy).

Non-exempt: Employees who are entitled to overtime pay (e.g., secretarial, clerical, and custodial staff).

Full-time: Employees who work at least 30 hours weekly.

Part-time: Employees who work fewer than 30 hours weekly.

EEO/AA End-of-Year 2010 Report

To be completed online at www.pcusa.org/eeoaareport (Definitions provided on next page.)

First, provide data about your organization’s exempt employees, those not eligible for overtime pay.

For the 2010 EEO AA Staff Analysis, see gamc-2010-eeo-aa-staff-analysis-report.pdf (see also pages 1023–1026).

The 219th General Assembly directed that effective December 31, 2013, the National Mission Partnership Funds (NMPF) would come to an end. The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) established a Domestic Mission Task Force (DMTF) for the purpose of identifying, evaluating, and making recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012) regarding those ministries and that work now supported by the NMPF, including the ramifications of ending that support.

The DMTF has engaged in a constant process of outreach and listening since its first meeting in March 2010. Engaging the church in the conversation about changes to the NMPF and the broader question of “what is national mission?” was at the heart of its work.

The primary assumption of the DMTF is that we are in a powerful time of change and transition for both the church and our world. Our challenge is to understand where we have been as a church in doing mission and how we can transform ourselves in new ways of being church. Funding for the mission of the national church has been declining steadily for several years. All NMPF will cease at the end of 2013. While there are many reasons for this, we assume that, although patterns of mission funding are changing, the interest in and commitment to the church’s mission, especially through churches, is strengthening and being energized in new forms of being and doing.

In its work, the DMTF assumed that the congregation is the primary place of mission, but it is not of itself a sufficient form of the church (Book of Order, G-1.0101). The church is confronted with the unequivocal demand of the prophet Amos to do what it claims to be. We are called to a new openness in ways of being mission in the world. How we think about mission today is different from how we have thought about it in the past. During much of the last century, Presbyterian mission in the United States was understood to be primarily the responsibility of the General Assembly, with synods and presbyteries playing a secondary role. This is no longer the case.

The unified giving system (from which these funds came) is a relatively new phenomenon, beginning in the 1930s. In 1973, the General Assembly of the UPCUSA formed regional synods. As it did this, it shifted responsibility for oversight of former national mission ministries from the General Assembly to the middle governing bodies. Following reunion, the NMPF system was created in 1988 to replace the circulating funds system. Today, all sixteen synods are changing their patterns of funding the areas traditionally funded by the NMPF.

We recognize that we are in a time of major transition as a denomination. Based on the listening we have done, the conversations we have had, and the learnings we have gained, the Domestic Mission Task Force is making two recommendations to the General Assembly Mission Council that you will find in this report. We believe that the denomination in general, and the GAMC in particular, can be in partnership with congregations and mid councils, to find a new way forward together in mission. The ways that we are participating in the mission of God are changing. The ways that we are funding the mission of Christ are changing. But, the Holy Spirit will continue to lead us to be in mission, if we will listen and faithfully follow our Lord. We hope that this report will help stimulate our imagination and our conversations about how God might be calling us to do this.

A. Original Charge

In September 2009, the General Assembly Mission Council voted to approve the following recommendations of the Expanded National Mission Partnership Committee (ENMPC) report:
1. That the 219th General Assembly direct that effective December 31, 2013, Mission Partnership Funds, as we know them, shall come to an end. Synods currently allocated such funds may forego receiving those funds prior to the cessation of this system on December 31, 2013.

2. That the GAMC establish a task force for the purpose of identifying, evaluating and making recommendations to the 220th General Assembly regarding those ministries and that work now supported by Mission Partnership Funds (MPF), including the ramifications of ending that support and possible other avenues of support to all, some or none of those ministries and that work beyond December 31, 2013.

   a. Such committee to be comprised of 7 persons

      i. 2 appointed by the GAMC

      ii. 1 appointed by the current ENMPC from among those Synods currently receiving support from MPF.

      iii. 1 appointed by the current ENMPC from among those Synods not currently receiving support from MPF

      iv. 3 persons appointed by the moderator of the 218th General Assembly, one of whom shall be appointed as moderator of the task force.

   b. Such task force to be funded from a portion of the $100,000 set aside to fund ENMF and if not possible, allow the Chairperson of the ENMPC and the Chair of the GAMC to negotiate a shared funding for the process

3. That GAMC in partnership with the Middle Governing Bodies of the PCUSA, encourage, and to the extent possible, facilitate and support conversations throughout the church regarding the meaning and direction of National Mission.

B. Task Force Members

The task force members are: Elder Kristine Thompson, chair, Washington, D.C.; Elder Clarence Antioquia, GAMC, Anacortes, Wash.; the Reverend Clark Cowden, GAMC, San Diego, Calif.; the Reverend Jan DeVries, synod exec, Synod of the Southwest (until June 2011); the Reverend David Crittenden, co-synod exec, Lincoln Trails, Indianapolis (until December 2010); the Reverend Joyce Emery, synod presbyter, Alaska-Northwest, Seattle; Kathy Lee, Metairie, La.; the Reverend Carl Mazza, Chesapeake City, Md.; the Reverend Raafat Zaki, synod exec, Covenant (since Aug 2011); staff—the Reverend Roger Dermody and the Reverend Philip Lotspeich.

C. Our Process

The DMTF has engaged in a constant process of outreach and listening since its first meeting in March 2010. The team believes engaging the church in the conversation about changes to the NMP funding and the broader question of “what is national mission?” is at the heart of its work.

At the 219th General Assembly (2010), members of the team hosted meetings to gather input and listen to the concerns and ideas shared by leadership from presbyteries and synods. At its second meeting in August 2010, the team met in Albuquerque, New Mexico, with the intent of engaging with presbyteries that would be impacted by the loss of funds. A visit to the Menaul School reminded the team of historic Presbyterian missions in that region.

From August 2010 to August 2011, the DMTF actively engaged in conversation and listening opportunities with the Synod Forum, the General Assembly Mission Council, and participants at Big Tent.

In addition, Roger Dermody, GAMC Deputy Executive Director for Mission, visited the Synods of the Southwest, Alaska/Northwest, and had conversation with staff at Rocky Mountains.

In the Synod of the Southwest, Dermody traveled extensively throughout the synod with Synod Executive Conrad Rocha. In Arizona, he visited Native American tribal members of the Vahki Presbyterian Church in Batchule, the Sacaton Presbyterian Church in Sacaton, and the Northern congregational leaders in Ganado. In New Mexico, he met with indigenous Hispanic leadership from the Mora and Chacon Presbyterian churches, as well as the Jicarita Cluster leadership, and the regional presbyter of the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

In the Synod of Alaska/Northwest, synod presbyter, the Reverend, Joyce Emery, hosted his visit as he met with presbytery leadership from Alaska, Yukon, Olympia, and Central Washington. Conversations took place in Seattle and Spokane, looking at campus ministry, new church development, the CLP program at Whitworth University, and the wonderful model of shared leadership among the churches of the Nez Perce tribes.

In the Synod of the Rocky Mountains, Dermody had conversations with presbytery leadership in Billings, Montana. He engaged in discussions about how small, partnership-funded, rural presbyteries with small churches benefit from the presence of a general presbyter.

The fourth synod deemed to be most adversely affected by the elimination of the National Mission Partnership Funds was the Synod of Boriquen. The DMTF made several inquiries into the possibility of visiting with leadership from Puerto Rico. However, since there is an existing task force that is already in conversation with Puerto Rico, it was suggested that an additional visit by the DMTF would be both confusing and overly burdensome. However, the task force recommends further conversation with the Synod of Boriquen.

Meeting in Dallas, Texas, in August 2011, the DMTF compiled the information and ideas gathered to date. Desiring to hear even more voices, the team created a Facebook page and began engaging a wider audience in questions about national mission. The team also conducted additional outreach to the synods to hear specific concerns and needs that may still need to be addressed. Notes from these conversations and interactions can be found in Appendix I through Appendix III.

D. Assumptions

“Traveler, your footsteps are the road, and nothing more; Traveler, there is no road—the road ahead is made by walking” (Antonio Machado).

“I am about to do a new thing; now it springs forth, do you not perceive it? I will make a way in the wilderness and rivers in the desert” (Isa. 43:19).

Our primary assumption is that we are in a powerful time of change both for our world and for the church. Dynamic shifts in the way we work together have been developing within the church for a long time, and we are now in the midst of a transformation long overdue. We understood our task as not simply a matter of piecing things back together after the termination of National Mission Partnership Funding in 2013. Rather, our challenge is to understand where we have been as a church in doing mission, and how we can transform ourselves in new ways of being church. It is an energetic demand for us to look deeply into God’s call to “a new openness to God’s continuing reformation of the Church ecumenical, that it might be more effective in its mission” (Book of Order, F-1.0404)

We felt a sense of urgency in our deliberations, and assumed that the church is at a unique and critical crossroad in its history. Indeed we are convinced that our mission together is so important at this time that its vigor, relevance, and zeal will determine whether our church has a future.

Funding for the mission of the national church has been declining steadily for several years. All National Mission Partnership Funding will cease in 2013. While there are many reasons for this, we assume that, although patterns of mission funding are changing, the interest in and commitment to the church’s mission, especially through churches, is strengthening and being energized in new forms of being and doing.

We assumed that our mandate is not to dust off or try to revive worn constructs of doing mission, but to encourage the excitement of discovery through Spirit-inspired dreams and visions of new ways of being a connectional church in a rapidly changing world (Joel 2:28, Acts 2:17).

We assumed this is a time of waiting on God. We have discerned that the Spirit is already moving among us to send us into the world so we must not remain passive in the hope that a hurting world will somehow be attracted to us. We must be proactive. We assumed that God is, at this very moment, actively and earnestly engaged in mission to us and among us.

We assumed that the times call for radical and creative faith-in-action based on sanctified imagination beyond walls, boundaries, forms, and presuppositions with which we have become all too comfortable. We are called to be the active agents of change in the world.

Whereas the primary focus of mission was perceived to be the National Mission Agency, we assumed that the congregation is the primary place of mission. As our newly adopted Form of Government states, “The congregation is the church engaged in the mission of God in its particular context. The triune God gives to the congregation all the gifts of the gospel necessary to being the Church. The congregation is the basic form of the church, but it is not of itself a sufficient form of the church” (Book of Order, G-1.0101).

The church is called to undertake its mission “even at the risk of losing its life” (Book of Order, F-1.0301). Many of our present forms and structures are being pressed to change. Our life as a church will be transformed strikingly in ways that may well be unimaginable to us now. Our leading is by God’s Spirit and not reliance on human design. To better discern the Spirit’s work among us requires that we develop and encourage conversation and dialogue across the church so that we can live into the future that God is preparing for us.

There has perhaps never been a more demanding era for justice in a world increasingly beset with the growing evil of material greed and selfishness, degradation of the value of the individual, consignment of growing numbers of persons to poverty, wasteful depletion of our environment and the natural world, and simultaneous neglect and exploitation of the young. The church is confronted with the unequivocal demand of the prophet Amos to do what it claims to be. We are being called to a new openness in ways of being mission in the world. We are committed to new relationships and loving community with and among others, inviting diversity, and proclaiming the good news by who we are and what we do. (“Take away from me the noise of your songs; I will not listen to the melody of your harps. But let justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an everlasting stream” [Amos 5:23–24]).
E. Definition of National Mission

How we think about mission today is different from how we have thought about it in the past. In the past, we thought that

- mission was overseas;
- mission was done for us by others;
- national mission was limited to campus ministry, racial ethnic ministry, aid to field support (national funds to support pastor’s salaries), new church development, and presbytery and synod staff salary support.

As we move into the bright, new future that God has for us, we now describe national mission more in terms of

- moving back into our neighborhoods and serving with the most vulnerable there;
- discovering how God is at work in our nation and how Jesus the Christ is inviting us to join in the work the Spirit is doing;
- starting new churches and new communities of faith;
- transforming congregations into missional communities who follow Jesus into the places where we live, work, and play;
- focusing on local congregations, building new partnerships and a new connectionalism with other congregations and councils, that helps us participate more fully in the missio dei (the mission of God);
- being a tangible, concrete presence of the Body of Christ in the midst of national tragedies, crises, and emerging community opportunities.

F. A Theology of National Mission

The church participates in God’s mission in the world. “In a missional ecclesiology, the church is not a building or an institution but a community of witness, called into being and equipped by God, and sent into the world to testify to and participate in Christ’s work.” The local congregation of believers is the primary unit of witness. Disciples are called and trained and sent out. God provides people around us who have the gift of meeting us at the door and helping us move into a whole new context. Peter and Cornelius experienced that doorway.

In Acts 10, both Cornelius and Peter have a vision. The story is not just about what Peter can and cannot eat. The story is about a God-fearing gentile who pushes Peter and the early church out into the world. At first, Peter hesitates at the doorway, but must enter through it, into the home of the gentile Cornelius, to participate in the missio dei (mission of God). Jesus has come for the whole world and Peter is called to experience a whole new perspective.

The New Testament is peppered with these profound doorway conversations. The Philippian jailer; and one of the most life-changing doorways: the empty tomb where Mary Magdalene, Joanna, Mary the mother of James, and the other women find the tomb rolled away. They go in to find two men in dazzling clothes ready to tell them that Jesus is not there but risen. Jesus has gone on ahead of them.

At another level, much of Jesus’ teaching dealt with the reality of the Reign/Kingdom of God. Jesus seeks to open the eyes to the reality of the “now” and the “not yet.” We have glimpses of a whole new reality just across the threshold. William J. Abraham speaks of the nature of sin that mars the ability of human beings to pursue the will of God without claiming the salvific work of Jesus the Christ. He speaks of the ocus contemplatus that gives one the ability to see the work of God in the world and in personal lives. Divine revelation becomes a key concept. God intervenes or appears and gives a new understanding. One’s entire worldview can be altered. A group of believers begin watching for divine appointments.

We as a denomination currently have Cornelius’ and Peters’ ready to train each other and provide the skills for the church to enter a new context of ministry, or reclaim an old context. Cornelius was a centurion of the Italian Cohort. He understood the Roman/Italian culture and the military culture. He understood the categories of meaning in two very different cultures.

In short, we endeavor to communicate the love of God, which has been revealed to the world through the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth wherever we go. To state this clearly and succinctly is to reiterate the essential content of the historic church’s confession for two millennia. “In Christ God was reconciling the world to himself” (2 Cor. 5:19). God, through Christ, entered the doorway to human life and became God with us, so that by the power of the death and resurrection, the Body of Christ would be born to be God’s mission in the world.
With these dynamics in mind, can Presbyterians foster mutual dialogue at the threshold between the institutional church and the wider culture to which we are called? We believe that there are individuals who are specifically called and gifted to lead those conversations and help us in engaging specific cultures in every context with appropriate thoughtfulness. Together, we can support these efforts to move through the doorway as participants in the mission of God. What is our national mission as Presbyterians? It is participating in the reconciling work of God that is being discovered and formalized by congregations and regional bodies across the expanse of our nation, sovereign nations, and Puerto Rico.

G. Review of Where We’ve Been and How We Got Here

During much of the last century, Presbyterian mission in the United States was understood to be primarily the responsibility of the General Assembly, with synods and presbyteries playing a secondary role. The Board of Christian Education and Board of National Missions oversaw program in presbyteries and synods as deployed field staff.

The unified giving system (from which these funds came) is a relatively new phenomenon, beginning in the 1930s. Most giving prior to then was designated giving, and we are seeing our current reality return to that. Prior to the reorganization of 1972, it was not assumed that every presbytery would have paid, full-time staff people like executive presbyters.

In 1973, the General Assembly of the UPCUSA formed regional synods. As it did this, it shifted responsibility for oversight of former national mission ministries from General Assembly to middle governing bodies. Regional synods were created with the intention of one major metropolitan area in the bounds of each new synod, but some synods were grouped with the expectation that because of size and shape of the ministries, there would be ongoing funding for what have come to be called “historical ministries.” General Assembly continued, initially, to provide staffing for all middle governing bodies, which was coordinated through the oversight of the former Council on Administrative Services through a circulating funds system. The General Assembly received all funds and distributed them to presbyteries and synods as needed.

Synods and presbyteries that had received “oversight” of national mission ministries and properties began to seek some funding from General Assembly to sustain those ministries that had been “given” to middle governing bodies (MGBs), often with no commitment to sustained funding. As two denominations formed the PC(USA) in 1983 one very significant difference between the two was that the northern church (UPCUSA) had a number of synods and presbyteries with very large geography and very small numbers that made it difficult-to-impossible to support mission entirely from dollars generated within the region (Alaska, Arizona). The southern church (PCUS) had no such regions. Through a series of consultations held with synods in 1986 and 1987, Mission Partnership Funds (MPF) were allocated to replace the circulating funds system.

As MPF began, there were two similarities to the previous pattern:

1. Partnership funds for the first year (1988) would be exactly the same number of dollars as were distributed as circulating funds in 1987;
2. The causes to be supported by MPF—staff, campus ministry, aid-to-field (funding for local churches that could not support themselves), new church development, and racial ethnic ministries—were the same causes for which circulating funds had been negotiated.

There were important differences in the two systems:

- While everyone participated by sending dollars (basic mission support) to the General Assembly, synods had the option of a “revenue neutral” withdrawal from receiving partnership funds by reducing the amount of basic mission support they sent to General Assembly by the amount they would have received. There are seven non-receiving synods: Covenant, Lincoln Trails, Mid America, Mid Atlantic, Northeast, Sun, and Trinity.
- While the causes to be supported remained the same, MPF were recognized as block grants.
- The MPF allocation for each synod was determined through a consultation process involving the General Assembly Council (GAC) and all sixteen synods rather than one-on-one negotiations between a committee of the General Assembly and a particular synod.
- The total amount placed in the General Assembly budget for MPF is a percentage (10.447 percent) of the General Assembly’s total unrestricted revenue.

In August of 2008, the Mission Partnership Funds Group (synod representatives and GAC) agreed to adopt a five-year plan for elimination of the current funding method based on the same 10.447 percent, with each receiving synod receiving their current percentage of funds until the end of 2013 and appointed a writing team to write recommendations to the General Assembly Mission Council.
There have been several attempts at defining what will happen in 2014 to the mission and ministries funded by these funds. These attempts have included efforts to define the impact of eliminating them. The most recent attempt is included as an appendix to this report.

H. Observations

In response to our mandate to identify and evaluate, our task force makes the following observations:

1. Regardless of what is done with Mission Partnership Funds all sixteen synods are changing their patterns of funding the areas traditionally funded by MPF. All of the synods and most presbyteries have reduced staff and many have changed how they fund campus ministry and racial ethnic ministry or discontinued funding these ministries altogether. The ways that new church development has been funded have changed not only at the synod and presbytery level but also at the General Assembly level. The total amount of dollars received from all sources by middle governing bodies has steady declined in the past fifteen years. The funding experience of those synods receiving MPF does not seem to be significantly different than those who do not receive MPF.

2. It is difficult to identify the consequences of the loss of Mission Partnership Funds in presbyteries and synods. The MPF are block grants to synods that have had no formal evaluation or regular reporting process since their inception. While every synod and the General Assembly are accountable to each other by the MPF agreement, a formal accountability process or system was never instituted. It seems evident the four synods who have been dependent on the money from outside their synod will feel the most loss. The Synod of the Southwest has sent all of their money to their four presbyteries. It will be the presbyteries in the Synod of the Southwest that feel the loss of MPF. The Synods of Alaska Northwest and Rocky Mountains have made plans to function without MPF before the 2013 deadline. They have made plans to live beyond the decrease in funds. The Synod of Puerto Rico and its presbyteries are the subject of a governing body commission that involves funding. The effect of the decrease in funding due to the end of MPF will be a part of the work of that commission. As funding to the whole governing body system continues a steady decline it will be almost impossible to identify which reductions in mission and ministry are the direct result of the discontinuation of Mission Partnership Funds in any synod or presbytery.

3. Historically, “national mission” has been narrowly defined as: governing body staff, campus ministry, racial ethnic ministries, and new church development and church transformation (in place of aid to field). Defining “national mission” is broader and more difficult than it has been in the past and will require a broader conversation across our denomination. We are engaged in an ongoing journey to discover what God is up to and where we are being called to participate in that.

I. Recommendations to the General Assembly Mission Council

Based on the listening we have done, the conversations we have had, and the insights we have gained, our task force makes the following two recommendations to the General Assembly Mission Council:

1. That the General Assembly Mission Council approve the formation of a Mid Council Lead Team (appointed by the Domestic Mission Task Force) to work with the GAMC to initiate at least four annual regional gatherings in 2013 and 2014 (taking advantage of times when the church is already together, like General Assembly, Big Tent, synod and presbytery gatherings) to discuss and develop the following:

a. Listen to specific constituencies, such as, but not limited to:
   (1) rural, remote, and urban churches;
   (2) collegiate ministries;
   (3) Native American congregations;
   (4) racial ethnic/new immigrant;
   (5) emerging leadership models for mid councils that create safe space for innovation.

b. Discuss how to provide leadership development, resources, and accountability.

Rationale for Recommendation 1.

The General Assembly Mission Council, in conjunction with the mid councils, continues to have conversations about what NATIONAL MISSION is, how it is changing, what it might look like in the future, and the best ways to PARTNER together to carry it out.

We need to have more people in the conversation about what national mission is because the definition has changed over the years. For some, it doesn’t mean what it used to. Some don’t distinguish between national and global mission, simply emphasizing that congregations be involved in the mission of God wherever that may be. We are already modeling and ex-exploring new ways to partner together in mission across the denomination. Many want to continue exploring and discovering the best ways to partner together. Communication and dialogue are critical instruments for developing partnerships.

Just as each country is different and we approach mission with one another by listening to their priorities, each area of this country is different and we should listen to their priorities.

2. That these gatherings should be tied to specific outcomes that will be shared with congregations and mid councils across the country and serve as inspiration for potential ministry endeavors. These specific conversations could be centered on discussing and developing

- twenty-five ways rural, remote, and urban churches are doing mission in their context;
- twenty examples of thriving ministry to college campuses;
- fifteen diverse, recently formed worshipping communities that are on a path towards sustainability;
- twenty-five congregations that are effectively becoming more multi-ethnic in character;
- twenty places where ministry with particular racial ethnic populations are thriving; and
- ten presbyteries that are staffed or organized to be safe places.

3. We also recommend that the GAMC devote a percentage of the previous NMPF funds to facilitating these gatherings in 2013 and 2014.

Rationale for Recommendations 2.–4.

We are very cognizant that the United States is a mission field. It is the third largest mission field in the world. The population of our country is growing. However, the downturn in the economy in recent years has caused many churches to be nervous, anxious, and risk averse. We are in a time when we need our members, our congregations, and our presbyteries, to become much more innovative and entrepreneurial about starting new ministries than we have been. Jesus Christ is calling all of us to be missionaries. “As the Father has sent Me, so I send you” (Jn. 20:21).

As the chronological age and the average age of the congregations’ members increases, a corresponding decrease in creativity, risk-taking, and innovation naturally takes place. In a similar fashion, the longer one is a member of a congregation, the less likely that person is to challenge the “status quo” of the congregation. As we look at the landscape of our church, we see aging congregations, declining in membership and whose membership is primarily comprised of members who have been members at least five years or more and in some cases ten, or twenty years or more. This has created a church that is risk averse, seeking to maintain what it has or recoup what is has lost rather than taking a risk to find God’s preferred future for that congregation. In other words, we have more memories than we do dreams. We are suffering from a crisis of imagination. Whenever we think about ministry we could do in the future, our minds automatically go to what we have done in the past and repeating it or tweaking it to make it better. This is no longer sufficient.

We need dreamers. We need risk takers. We need pioneers and trailblazers. We need entrepreneurs. We need church planters. We need inventors. We need people who are not afraid to fail, and church cultures that will encourage people to fail in order to find new ways to succeed. When Peter was preaching on the Day of Pentecost, he quoted the prophet Joel when he said, “In the last days it will be, God declares, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams” (Acts 2:17). We want to encourage people to dream. We need this work of the Spirit in our lives today to overcome our crisis of imagination. We are living in the midst of a paradigm shift. We need to learn adaptive leadership skills to help move our congregations to a new place.

We believe that there is a sense of urgency to learn to do ministry and mission differently in a rapidly changing world. We want to encourage people to step across the thresholds of our church buildings and through the doorways of people’s homes, as Peter did with Cornelius in Acts 10. In engaging the stranger, the alien, and “the other” in our communities, we can discover how God is at work in the world, and how Christ is inviting us to join in the work the Spirit is doing. We believe the GAMC and Mid Council Lead Team can help to cultivate an environment of historical biblical grounding and missional experimentation that can propel us into the future. We believe the GAMC can help encourage people to come together in their local context as learning communities to figure out what the Holy Spirit is up to and how Jesus Christ is inviting us to participate in the missio dei (the mission of God) in our communities.
J. Suggestions

We imagine that one of the first questions raised would be about what kind of projects would be funded by a Developmental, Research, Experimental, Adaptive Mission (DREAM) fund? On one hand, we know this cannot be determined in a top-down fashion. It has to bubble up from the grass roots. We do not live in a “one size fits all” world anymore. Every local context is different from other local contexts. The Bible calls us to be incarnational where we live. “The Word became flesh and lived among us” (Jn. 1:14). On the other hand, we do have some suggestions of possible areas of ministry that we believe could receive stimulus monies from this fund. Some of them are

- new discipleship initiatives,
- missional experiments,
- new leadership training,
- new youth and young adult ministry initiatives,
- creative use of technology and social media for outreach (see feedback received in Appendix III),
- new ways to support historic commitments,
- encourage risk taking- churches try new things,
- prioritize adaptive change—living into paradigm shift.

This is only a starting point to give an idea of what could be funded by a DREAM fund. We hope that people will get more creative and come up with other exciting and innovative ministry ideas that we could help encourage.

K. How Would This Work?

Practically speaking, we envision a simple grant process that would be administered by the GAMC in consultation with the Mid Council Lead Team. Preference will be given to efforts targeting our historic commitments. Grants would originate in congregations, new church developments, worshipping fellowships, missional communities, presbyteries, etc. We would want people to commit to telling their stories and their learnings. Many of these learnings could be shared online through Facebook, SKYPE, video, and YouTube. We would also encourage face-to-face gatherings and events where people could learn from what others have started and build new networks and relationships. We are not looking for technical best practices or success stories, but stories of what people learned, what they will do differently next time, and how the rest of us can learn from what they tried, as we hope to become more and more of a learning community together.

We do not want the GAMC to be bound by the current and previous percentages of money that went into the National Mission Partnership Funds. We are not recommending a formula for how to come up with the amount of dollars that would initially go into this fund. We would recommend enough to get it started, but we also believe that there would likely be individual donors and congregations that would want to contribute to such a fund that was helping to encourage some exciting new ministries!

L. Conclusions

God always seems to be pushing the church out of its doors to share the good news of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In Acts 2:17, Peter reminded the people of the Prophet Joel’s words that “your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams”. Yet, even Peter in Acts 10 needed a dream from God to be pushed out of the door of his comfortable home and to enter through the doorway of Cornelius’ home, to learn what God was doing in that surprising place.

The Domestic Mission Task Force is reminding the PC(USA) that our current National Mission Partnership Funding system will cease to exist at the end of 2013. The denomination has struggled to find a good way to evaluate this system for many years and has been unable to do so. The GAMC continues to fund our historical national mission such as new church development, racial ethnic ministry, and campus ministry in many ways. Mid council leadership will be funded at the local level.

We are making four recommendations to the General Assembly Mission Council:

1. That the General Assembly Mission Council approve the formation of a Mid Council Lead Team (appointed by the Domestic Mission Task Force) to work with the GAMC to initiate at least four annual regional gatherings in 2013 and 2014 (taking advantage of times when the church is already together, like General Assembly, Big Tent, synod and presbytery gatherings) to discuss and develop the following:

   a. Listen to specific constituencies, such as, but not limited to:

      (1) rural, remote, and urban churches;
(2) collegiate ministries;
(3) Native American congregations;
(4) racial ethnic/new immigrant;
(5) emerging leadership models for mid councils that create safe space for innovation.

b. Discuss how to provide leadership development, resources, and accountability.

2. That these gatherings should be tied to specific outcomes that will be shared with congregations and mid councils across the country and serve as inspiration for potential ministry endeavors. These specific conversations could be centered on discussing and developing

- twenty-five ways rural, remote, and urban churches are doing mission in their context;
- twenty examples of thriving ministry to college campuses;
- fifteen diverse, recently formed worshipping communities that are on a path towards sustainability;
- twenty-five congregations that are effectively becoming more multi-ethnic in character;
- twenty places where ministry with particular racial ethnic populations are thriving; and
- ten presbyteries that are staffed or organized to be safe places.

3. We also recommend that the GAMC devote a percentage of the previous NMPF funds to facilitating these gatherings in 2013 and 2014.

We are in a time of transition as a denomination. We believe that the denomination in general and the GAMC in particular, can be in partnership with congregations and mid councils. We help by partnering to bring people together for crucial conversations and missional experiments, helping people to dream once again (Acts 2) and walk through new doorways of ministry (Acts 10).

Our theology tells us that God is up to something big in our world. The Spirit is alive and well, and the more we move back into our neighborhoods, the more we will discover what Christ is already doing. We are continually being invited to participate in the mission of God, to have new doorway conversations, and experiment with how to join the Trinity in the work of the kingdom.

We believe that the future is full of new possibilities for our denomination. These are exciting and challenging times that we live in. If we can cultivate the missional imagination of our people, if we really believe that the Spirit of God is among the people of God, if we mature in our faith and our discipleship in Jesus Christ, there is no telling what new trails God will lead us down next! “Now to Him who by the power at work within us is able to accomplish abundantly far more than all we can ask or imagine, to him be glory in the church and in Christ Jesus to all generations, forever and ever. Amen” (Eph. 3:20).

[Editor’s Note: The General Assembly Mission Council approved these recommendations at the February 2012 meeting.]

Endnotes

ii. Imagine opening the door to a brand new house. Or imagine climbing to the crest of a hill where at the top you engage a brand new vista. Divine revelation breaks into our lives and changes everything. William J. Abraham, through the lens of Canonical Theism, paints a broad enough picture that embraces the tradition, the Scriptures and the work of the Holy Spirit. Abraham wants to take us to the threshold where we continue to experience the profound, life-changing consciousness of the very knowledge of God. We join a grand historical march of this awakening of consciousness. Our ancestors have left us major gifts that must be treasured, for they give witness to constant awakenings.

iii. Abraham is the Albert Cook Outler Professor of Theology and Wesley Studies at the Perkins School of Theology, Southern Methodist University. He was born in 1947 in Ireland. William J. Abraham is credited with leading the effort to formulate a new systematic theology called “canonical theism.”

Stated simply, canonical theism believes that God is a powerful being at work bringing healing of the world. This “rich vision of God, creation, and redemption developed over time in the scriptures, articulated in the Nicene Creed, celebrated in the liturgy of the church, enacted in the lives of the saints, handed over and received in the sacraments, depicted in iconography, articulated by canonical teachers, mulled over in the Fathers, and treasured, preserved, and guarded by the episcopate, is a network of beliefs.” William J. iv. Milton J. Bennett, M.D., A Developmental Model of Intercultural Sensitivity. Cultures are meaning making machines. An ethnocentric worldview holds personal experience as the center of the universe. An ethnorelative worldview sees many varieties of culture as holding valid meaning. A person may need to change her or his behavior to be in a relationship. People who can bridge cultures and integrate meaning may be our “Partnership Facilitators.”

APPENDIX I

In 2009, the following report was compiled by Joy Kaufman, general presbyter of Huntingdon Presbytery and member of the writing team that reported to the General Assembly Mission Council from questionnaires submitted by all sixteen synods at the request of the writing team:

NMPF Synod Patterns Overview

Monday, June 15, 2009

Nine synods receive National Mission Partnership Funds (NMPF) gifts and seven do not. All 16 synods made reports to today’s group, either through printed text/numeric reports or, in one instance, through a verbal report from a representative of the synod. Most of the synods use the NMPF monies variously/give the monies out to their member presbyteries, which in turn use the monies variously. None-the-less, there were some themes and trends that emerged from the reports of the 16 synods.

Some of these are:

- By having these funds lodged as a “national ministry”, we have created a long-term ministry without meaningful, practical oversight.
- There is lack of clarity about the meaning of “connection”. For instance, in campus ministry, students come from all over the country to a particular college. The local congregation or even the presbytery may or may not feel connected. But at the college as an institution, there is no feeling of connection with others in the denomination.
- Neither donors nor recipients have a deep awareness of their connection through the NMPF gifts.
- Likewise, there is lack of clarity about the meaning of “national ministry”.
- In various settings across the face of the denomination, the political process was so great that the question about definition of regional mission and national mission was never successfully addressed.
- Other than the synod/presbytery execs/stated clerks/treasurers and financial staff persons, there is little to no awareness of the NMPF – what it is and what it is supposed to be. It’s viewed as “just another source of income in the synod/presbytery budget.”
- The functioning of the NMPF gifts has been to prolong our doing things the way we have done them for quite a while without evaluating them.
- A desire was expressed to talk across the levels of the church about funding in new ways that require something more than dependency upon judicatories with no evaluation. One good question to ask would be, “how does the use of such funds fit within the mission design of the presbytery/synod?”
- If funding of various ministries and missions becomes dependent upon designated giving rather than a unified system like NMPF, there will be various consequences; positive, negative and neutral. One of the consequences we foresee is that some projects will be attractive to donors, e.g., 25 small Native American congregations in the desert southwest, while other projects will be less attractive, e.g., “every presbytery should have an EP”.
- If mission funding partnerships were created synod to synod, as no two synods are alike, the partnerships developed would be, likewise, various.
- Ministry with/to immigrants is a thread of common intrigue in several of the synods. One of the emerging issues relative to immigrant ministry is how to weave immigrant leadership into national denominational conversation and national denominational leadership.
- Another cutting edge thread is how to develop ecumenical connections as we move forward in mission. Very few of our mission projects must be done only by Presbyterians absent ecumenical partners. Often ecumenical partners bring gifts to the table, as do we.
- In recent years, virtually all the 16 synods, those receiving these funds and those not, have experienced similar financial trends.
  1. All synods have maintained some of the original intentions of the NMPF gifts, e.g., Racial Ethnic ministry.
  2. All synods have experienced the shift toward more designated giving and less unified giving.
  3. All synods have experienced giving shortfalls, increasing over time, and in some cases this has been a dramatic decrease.
10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

• There are issues of “who is in charge and who makes decisions?” woven throughout conversation about mission funding in all the synods. Our process for mission funding consultations has been implemented and experienced in various ways, sometimes more as competitions than consultations. Consultations need to be collaborations, not just “nit-picking” sessions about one another’s budgets.

• The quality of the relationships between the synod execs and the presbytery execs can make a difference for good or ill in the NMPF process and any subsequent communication about NMPF or a successor system.

• Some synods now have a history of presbyteries making good choices and other synods have a history of presbyteries making less good choices. This has an effect on who trusts whom.

• Concern was expressed about what will connect us once this particular mission funding mechanism goes away. Intentionality about the “what next” would be very helpful to all synods and presbyteries. Relating to one another as disciples rather than as funding sources is seen as a positive possibility.

• There are correlative issues, such as whether or not it is a good thing or even a possibility, for synods to write covenants with the Presbyterian colleges within their bounds. The suspicion is that this too will vary, and appropriately so, from setting to setting.

• We need to stop fighting over the (fewer) dollars and focus on what is important for us to do in mission.

Memorandum to: Synod Executives, Stated Clerks and Moderators

Date: September 15, 2011

From: Elder Kris Thompson (National Capital) and the members of the Domestic (National) Mission Task Force [Elder Clarence Antioquia, GAMC; Rev. Clark Cowden, GMAC; Rev. Joyce Emery, Synod of Alaska-Northwest; Elder Kathy Lee, appointed by GA Moderator; Rev. Carl Mazza, appointed by GA Moderator; Rev. Raafat Zaki, Synod of the Covenant; Rev. Roger Dermody and Rev. Philip Lotspeich, GA Staff]

Re: Checking in: Is this what we have heard?

Our Task Force is preparing a proposal for the GAMC and the 220th General Assembly PCUSA that will mark the ending of NMPF funds and signal the beginning of a new way of thinking about national mission. Our report is due to be submitted in final form by the February 2012 meeting of the GAMC. We are grateful for the hearings, conversations, and visits that we have been able to host across the church, specifically with the nine receiving Synods. We want to be perfectly clear about the ramifications for the church on the frontlines of mission when the NMPF funds end. Each setting is different. Please contact the Moderator Kris Thompson of our Task Force and Joyce Emery with your response so that we can be clear in our report. Please review, rewrite, or enhance what we are proposing below to you. Please respond by October 28, 2011.

When the NMPF funding ends:

Alaska-Northwest

The annual mission budget of the Synod will all but disappear. (Local congregations give $50,000 to $80,000 to the Synod mission annually.) The largest hit entity will be higher education (ecumenical and congregationally based). Plans are in process to reform these ministries and reconnect them with presbyteries and congregations, but one cannot discount the end of an era. The funds that were sent to Alaska and Yukon Presbytery for Native village ministries and presbytery staff will end for Alaska in 2011 and ended for Yukon in the late 1990’s. The Synod has funded the salary ($70,000) of a pastor in Anaktuvuk Pass, Alaska (Yukon) for the past two years with NMPF Funds. An itineration of a Taiwanese mission partner in the Native villages during the last two months of 2011 yielded a realistic account of our ministries in the villages. It is a critical time to stay connected and support our brothers and sisters in Christ.

The Synod may move to a basic non-governing entity with a PJC and basic administrative services and possibly a continued grant process for ministry areas that have endowments. The growing technology ministry will need to be spun off to be self-supporting as a 501(c)3. There will no longer be a Presbyter to Synod or a Synod executive. The presbyteries will support (with per capita and mission gifts?) basic administrative services, and various shared ministry initiatives that they have endorsed by having “called one another to table.”

You would like the larger church to: consider joining your Presbytech Ministry (as the Synod of Living Waters has done); find a new way to support the coordination of Native ministries region by region – our region has a profound witness; watch our effort to train up new leaders/pastors, commissioned lay pastors, and new church development pastors and help us stay connected to the National efforts; provide a table for us to connect to Native ministries, small church ministries, which include rural and remote locations.

Lakes and Prairies

In 1999 the Synod decided to designate NMPF funds for the support of a “Comprehensive Presbytery Staff Support” which was defined as $40,000 to each presbytery with full time executive staff. Dakota Presbytery has not had staff in recent days and does not receive NMPF funds. They do receive mission support but from other funds.

The Synod has constituted two special task forces to consider implications and “exit strategies” with each of the presbytery councils. Presbyteries have explored alternative and cooperative staffing models, cooperative mission and program initiatives, and other means by which best use could be made of limited financial and human resources. Some conversations have gone well. Two of your presbyteries have made a decision to eliminate the position of Executive, pursuing different models for facilitating the work of the presbytery and congregations, staff may not necessarily serve full time. The Synod has also established a special review task force to consider the future of the Synod and alternatives for future purpose and structure. When the current Synod executive joined the Synod as an executive presbyter in 1984 there were over 20 people on the Synod staff. Now there are 7.

You would like the larger church to join you in prayer for the Dakota Presbytery. You do not believe that more money will necessarily aid in strengthening the witness of that Presbytery.

Living Waters

The Synod has historical used these funds to support executive staff, new church developments, racial ethnic ministries and campus ministries at the Presbytery level. “Aid to Field” was also a part of the mission strategy at previous points in history. One third of the money has been distributed to 12 of the presbyteries to be used by Campus Ministries. The rest of the money is distributed based on a formula that awards higher funding to presbyteries with many small churches. This has been done to maintain the original use of the funds. Most of these ministries have been cut by the presbyteries as the money has decreased. The Synod has been working to develop a “Funds Development” unit for Campus Ministry.

You would like your campus and racial ethnic/multicultural new church developments to continue to receive support from the whole PCUSA.

Pacific

The Synod directs all the NMPF funds directly to the eleven presbyteries via Synod Mission Partnership Grants. Each presbytery receives 1/11 of the total NMPF funds received. How the monies are used for program and ministries is determined by each individual presbytery according to their need. Because the small presbyteries have used these funds to support presbytery staff, presbyteries such as Eastern Oregon and Kendall do not have full-time staff support. These funds have helped the presbyteries survive. The presbyteries have been preparing for this.

Boriquen in Puerto Rico

The Synod has used these funds for the salaries of the Synod and Presbytery administrative staff, development of new churches and enrollment fees for candidates at the Evangelical Seminary. A consultation was held each year before 2007 with the presbyteries and a percentage was assigned for distribution. The Synod retained part of the funds. The last consultation was in 2008. The Synod now retains one half of the funds and the presbyteries receive the percentage proportion that was adopted in 2007.

The Synod has used most of its funds to help maintain students enrolled in the Evangelical Seminary and support new church developments.

The Synod has reorganized office space and decreased the working hours of personnel. Almost all of communication is done via the internet. Plans have been to construct a parking lots and office space to provide rental income.

You would like to see future funds allocated exclusively for the purpose of creating mission through the local congregations. You see your Synod providing great help across the denomination with ministry with Latins.

Rocky Mountains

The Synod provides grants to each of the six presbyteries. Denver and Plains & Peaks do not seek or receive grants.

The Synod has traditionally used these funds to support campus ministries, supplement executive salaries, and support new church developments and racial ethnic ministries. The end of these funds means that six of the eight presbyteries will be moving to part time staff. Support for campus ministries has just ended in 2011.

Racial ethnic strategies have had to become partnerships between presbyteries.

South Atlantic

The funds we receive go to the presbyteries to help with racial ethnic ministries and NCD work. The funds are distributed through grants. As the funds end, the presbytery’s programs with Hispanic, African, Korean and Portuguese constituents will change. All of our presbyteries are aware of this change.

You covet our prayers.

Southern California and Hawaii

You are no longer a programmatic or missional Synod. The money is now going to support administrative uses including the salaries of the 3.5 staff positions at the Synod level. Synod staff are distributing restricted and designated funds that support mission projects in your eight presbyteries. Without this funding you will be relying even more on your presbyteries’ mission pledges because you do not have other sources of income for supporting this work.
Southwest

The funds have been disbursed to each of the four presbyteries to support historical commitments. In all four of the presbyteries these funds have been used, at least in part, to supplement the salaries of executive leadership. Each of the presbyteries is looking at creative ways to live with less and to cooperate in new ways.

In the Presbytery of Grand Canyon a portion of these funds have been added to the mission gifts of Arizona Presbyterians and distributed as annual grants to the Native American Congregations based upon a distribution formula agreed upon by the council of each congregation and chapel. However, before the grants are distributed, and with the consent of the individual sessions, a portion is withheld to cover the costs of per capita and pay insurance premiums allocable to each congregation. The remainder of the grant has then been distributed to the Native congregations based on adopted criteria.

In addition, a portion of the NMP funds were designated by the Synod to be used by each presbytery in support of racial ethnic ministry. In Grand Canyon, its portion was simply added to the pool from which the above-mentioned grants were made.

The commitment to the Native congregations is tied to historical promises. When the federal government issued the patent, title, to the land in Ganado on the Navajo Reservation, it did so on behalf of the Native People with the understanding that the church would support the Native worshipping communities in perpetuity. Likewise, in all other Native Communities in Grand Canyon located on the Reservations the understanding was that though the PCUSA did not own the land, it did own the buildings and would be allowed to remain on the reservation as long as there is an active worshipping community. This historic pledge and promise provides a challenge to the PCUSA that cannot and should not be ignored.

This same promise/expectation also applies to the Native congregations located in the Presbyteries of de Cristo and Santa Fe. And, like Grand Canyon, NMP Funds have been used over the years to support pastoral leadership in those worshipping communities as well.

In any event, the challenge is to broaden the PCUSA’s awareness of our Native American people, our efforts to share the Good News and lead the way in developing new missional partnerships that empower and sustain Native American communities on their tribal lands.

Finally, in the Presbytery of Santa Fe, which has only one historic Native American congregation, besides providing support for pastoral leadership on the Laguna Reservation and support of funding for executive leadership of the Presbytery, NMP funds have been used to underwrite and support pastoral leadership in the historic, Hispanic, mission-field congregations principally located in northern New Mexico.

Appendix III

DMTF Social Media Summary

What is God up to in our neighborhoods here?

- Listening leads to discernment and relationships

How can we transform “mainline congregations” into missional communities following Jesus into the places where we work live and play in this new post Christian, post denominational time?

- Alpha in the Workplace
- Helping churches discover and live out their own missional calling
- Support what local churches are already doing
- National initiative to equip local churches to plant new churches
- Focus on congregations and how they are being led vs. focus on mission and how church participates in it
- Workshop on collaboration in community transformation

How would you define National Mission?

- the workplace
- starting local churches with diverse people
- Godofhope.net – sharing the story of Jesus through the Internet to reach the masses

Examples of new worshipping communities:

- Grace, Wicker Park, Broad Street Ministries
- Vision 360, global church plant movement

What are ways your congregation is in partnership with other congregations in mission and outreach?

- Alpha Course throughout SF Presbytery
• Presbytery of Santa Barbara sending folks to Haiti, short term and long term

• Bend Youth Collective

• Partnership between School of Christian Vocation and Mission of Princeton Theological Seminary and Presbytery Multicultural network to conduct regional “Multicultural Institutes” for the Mid-Atlantic region

How does your congregation approach developing outreach and mission opportunities to connect members to local communities? Any barriers?

• Thinking of setting up a “confession booth” like in Blue Like Jazz

• Started a “Missional Transition Team” to be creative and experiment with things until the Session was ready to discuss new ideas; now have extra Saturday morning meeting to dream, brainstorm, learn and pray together

• Circular chart of church: mission → education → outreach → visionaries → Congregational care → worship → music → repeat ; “passion” made too personal can destroy the church

D. Report of Changes to the Appendices of the GAMC Manual of Operations

The General Assembly Mission Council Manual of Operations states that, “The General Assembly Mission Council may change those appendices to the Manual of Operations that are within its purview following a first reading, which may be electronic, and adoption at a subsequent plenary session. First reading and action may take place during the same session of the General Assembly Mission Council. The General Assembly Mission Council Executive Committee shall submit a written report of changes to the appendixes to the next General Assembly.”

In accordance with the above, the General Assembly Mission Council Executive Committee reports the following changes to the Appendices of the Manual of Operations, as approved by the General Assembly Mission Council between the 219th General Assembly (2010) and the 220th General Assembly (2012):

• Added a new Appendix on a “Gift Acceptance Policy.”

• Replaced “Covenant Relationships” in Appendix 1, Section XI, with a new section on GAMC Missional Relationships.

• Replaced all references to the “General Assembly Mission Council” with “Presbyterian Mission Agency/Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.” [Pending approval of the new name for the GAMC by the 220th General Assembly (2012).]

• Moved “Open Meeting Policy” to Appendix 4.

• Streamlined the review process for the Executive Director into a single pattern for first- and third-year reviews, and another pattern for second- and fourth-year reviews in Appendix 8, “Comprehensive Performance Review Processes for the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council.”

The following is the General Assembly Council Manual of Operations Appendixes as they would appear with the changes:

Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

Manual of Operations

Appendix 1

Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly for six-year, non-renewable terms.

I. Responsibilities of Board

The responsibilities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board are listed in the Organization for Mission, and the Board.

II. Board Meetings

A. Meetings

1. Stated/Regular Meetings—Recommendations regarding the scheduling of meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be prepared by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee and brought to the Council for approval.
2. Special/Called Meetings—Upon the written request of at least ten (10) voting members of the Board, the chair shall call a meeting. Written notice of the meeting shall be provided, specifying the subject matter to be considered, to all members of the Board at least fifteen (15) calendar days in advance of the meeting date. All members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be notified of the resulting decisions as soon as possible after the meeting.

B. Quorum

The quorum for all Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Meetings and its committees shall be 40% of voting members.

C. Development of the Agenda

1. The Executive Director, in conjunction with the Board Chair, shall develop the agenda for meetings of the Board. Groups who wish to be placed on the agenda may communicate their requests to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board chair (or designee) or the Executive Director (or designee). Any member of the Board may propose an item for consideration prior to Board action to adopt the agenda.

2. Each agenda shall include an opportunity for members of the Board to renew their covenant with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, stating:

We, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, called to this ministry as disciples of Jesus Christ, covenant together to:

• Seek God’s will, remaining open to fresh movement of the Holy Spirit, acting boldly and creatively for the sake of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in ministry and mission.

• Relate to one another with honesty, trust, respect, openness, and kindness, proclaiming God’s graciousness by risking and daring transformation in our lives and work.

• Be faithful stewards, seeking to make wise decisions in partnership with the greater church, doing our homework, listening to all points of view, working for consensus, and faithfully supporting decisions we have made.

• Worship and pray with joy and appreciation for God’s guidance in doing this work.

D. Closed Meetings

Closed meetings shall be held in accordance with the General Assembly Open Meeting Policy (see Appendix 4. In closed meetings, only voting members of the Board, at-large members of Stewardship Committee, and Audit Committee, and other persons explicitly invited by the Board are to be present. The Board will determine, by majority vote, if its members wish to deliberate in a closed meeting. Minutes kept of a closed meeting may be approved only in a closed meeting. All present in a closed meeting are honor-bound to keep confidential all discussions occurring during the closed meeting. Ordinarily, when the use of a closed meeting can be anticipated, the Board chair or Executive Director will provide advance notice to the Board that a closed meeting is recommended and the reason for closing.

E. Recording Secretary

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, or designee, shall be the Recording Secretary of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

F. Absences

Ordinarily, one absence from regular meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board or its related committees without prior notification to the Office of the Executive Director shall be a basis for the Board chair to recommend to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly that the position be declared vacant

G. Resignation

A member of a General Assembly entity who finds it necessary to resign shall send his or her resignation to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, who shall notify the entity and the nominating committee or other body that originated the person’s nomination or election. When any member of an entity of the General Assembly shall resign or become unable to serve because of chronic or permanent physical or mental illness or disability, the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall declare the position vacant. (Organization for Mission, IV. B.2.o.)

Additionally, any Board member resigning shall send a copy of the resignation to the Office of the Executive Director.

III. Officers of the Board

A. Chair

The duties of the chair are to:

1. Preside at meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

2. Be a member of and chair the Executive Committee.

4. Appoint the chair and members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee’s Procedures Subcommittee.

5. Appoint four voting members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (one of who shall also be appointed as chair) and one co-opted member with special expertise, representing a presbytery or congregation, to the Restricted Funds Oversight Subcommittee. Members will serve two-year terms and be eligible for a second term.

6. Appoint members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee for two-year, non-renewable terms.

7. Appoint two Board voting members to the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee, for four-year non-renewable terms.

8. Appoint two current or previous Board elected members to four-year, non-renewable terms on the Jinishian Memorial Program Governance Commission. The two members will also serve as liaisons to the Jinishian Memorial Program U.S. Advisory Committee (USAC) with voice, but not vote.

9. Request and appoint a parliamentarian from the Office of the General Assembly to advise the chair and upon request of the chair to speak to the body.

10. Make appointments as necessary, with ratification by the Executive Committee.

11. Appoint committees of counsel as necessary. The committees shall have a maximum of three (3) members, but may have fewer as determined by the Board chair. The Legal Office shall serve as the primary staff support to Board committees of counsel. (Book of Order D-6.0302)

B. Vice-Chair

The duties of the vice-chair are to:

1. Assume the responsibilities of the chair when called upon or when the chair becomes vacant.

2. Serve as a member of the Executive Committee.

3. Lead the Executive Committee in all personnel matters as listed in Section IV.A.1.d.(15).

4. Serve as a corresponding member of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

C. Terms of Office

1. Chair

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall elect its chair at the first Board meeting of the calendar year in which there is a General Assembly from among its voting members. The chair-elect shall serve as a corresponding member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee (voice but not vote) until assuming office upon the adjournment of the assembly. The term shall be for two years without renewal. The chair-elect may continue to hold offices requiring election by the Board, with the exception of chair or vice-chair of any committee, if he or she was already serving in such positions upon his or her election. The chair may not be elected to an additional office by the Board during the term of office, but is eligible to serve in appointed positions and will serve in ex-officio positions as mandated by the Manual of Operations. During Board meeting dates, the chair serves as an ex-officio member of all Board Committees (except the Board Nominating Committee) with voice and no vote.

2. Vice-Chair

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall elect its vice-chair at the first Board meeting of the calendar year in which there is a General Assembly from among its voting members. The vice-chair elect shall serve as a corresponding member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee (voice but not vote) until assuming office upon the adjournment of the assembly. The term shall be for two years without renewal. The vice-chair elect may continue to hold offices requiring election by the Board, with the exception of chair or vice-chair of any committee, if he or she was already serving in such positions upon his or her election. The vice-chair may not be elected to an additional office by the Board during the term of office, but is eligible to serve in appointed positions and will serve in ex-officio positions as mandated by the Manual of Operations.

IV. Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Committees

A. Mission Administration Committees

1. Executive Committee

The basic operating principle guiding the work of the Executive Committee is that of resourcing and facilitating decision-making by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.
a. Membership

The Executive Committee shall be composed of members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, including the Board chair, Board vice-chair, chair of each of the Mission Committees, and two voting members elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. (See section VI. Election Procedures, D.2.). The Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director is an ex-officio member of the Executive Committee (voice, but without vote). The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee shall be chaired by the Board chair.

b. Scheduling of Meetings

(1) Stated/Regular Meetings—Recommendations regarding the scheduling of regular meetings of the Board Executive Committee shall be prepared by the Executive Director in conjunction with the Chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and brought to the Executive Committee for approval.

(2) Special/Called Meetings—Upon the written request of at least three (3) voting members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee, the chair shall call a meeting. Ordinarily, written notice of the meeting shall be provided specifying the subject matter to be considered in the meeting at least fifteen (15) calendar days in advance of the meeting date. All members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be notified of the resulting decisions as soon as possible following the meeting.

c. Quorum

A quorum (40%) must be present to conduct business for the called meeting (See Section II.B.).

d. Responsibilities

The responsibilities of the Executive Committee [shall include, but not necessarily be limited to]:

(1) Administer and coordinate the work of the Council by:
   (a) Planning and making arrangements for meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board,
   (b) Monitoring the budget for the work of the Council,
   (c) Coordinate the work of the Mission Committees,
   (d) Provide for ongoing planning and review of the Mission Committees.

(2) Assisting in the resolution of conflicts that may arise among Mission Committees, other Presbyterian Mission Agency Board committees, and work groups.]Lead the Board to cultivate and promote the spiritual welfare of the whole church.

(3) Facilitate effective communication within the Board and implement means of communicating the work of the Board to the church and the world-at-large.

(4) Appoint Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting members, which may include an at-large member of the Stewardship Committee, to serve at a called meeting of a Joint Budget Table for resolution of unresolved per capita budget matters. (See Appendix 10.)

(5) Review and act upon all requests to celebrate Communion.

(6) Ratify appointments made by the chair as authorized by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board; background information shall be provided.

(7) Act on behalf of the Board on those matters that require immediate action between meetings of the Board.

(8) Report at each meeting of the Board on all its work, which is subject to review of the Board, giving reasons for action.

(9) Recommend action by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board with data for informed decision-making.

(10) Provide the Board with an annual report of its “Ethics Policy” and interpretation as necessary. (See Appendix 6.)

(11) Nominate voting members for the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee for election by the Board at its fall meeting. (See Section VI.B.2.)

(12) Recommend biennially to the Board the corresponding members to General Assembly.

(13) Act as publisher of publications produced by the Presbyterian Mission Agency .[.]

(14) Act regarding personnel matters of the Presbyterian Mission Agency as follows:
(a) Advise and counsel the Executive Director in his or her responsibilities in “supporting the organizational health of the Board, the Ministries, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (Organization for Mission, V.G.1.b.) as well as in his or her responsibility of supervising the staff of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

(b) Conduct an annual performance review of the Executive Director. (See appendix 8)

(c) Conduct an exit interview of the Executive Director when needed (See appendices 7 and 8)

(d) Implement procedures to follow when a Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director vacancy occurs. (See appendix 7)

(f) Recommend for Presbyterian Mission Agency Board action:
   - Personnel policies and procedures for the Presbyterian Mission Agency staff.
   - Compensation guidelines within which salaries are administered.
   - Salary adjustments for the Executive Director
   - Other appropriate actions.

(15) Meet with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly at least biennially regarding mutual concerns, issues, and input to the deliberative process. (See Appendix 9 for Guidelines.)

(16) Coordinate the plan for Presbyterian Mission Agency Board resourcing at the General Assembly.

(17) Develop a process for orientation of new Board members.

(18) Provide for regular meetings with [Mid-Council] personnel.

e. Subcommittees of the Executive Committee

(1) Procedures Subcommittee

(a) Membership:

The Procedures Subcommittee shall consist of two voting members of the Executive Committee, one of whom shall be chair, and three voting members of the council not presently serving on the Executive Committee; to be appointed annually by the Board chair.

(b) Function:

(c) Responsibilities

Work of the subcommittee shall include but not necessarily be limited to:

i. Review of reports to General Assembly prepared by Presbyterian Mission Agency in the course of its regular work.

ii. Review of reports to General Assembly prepared by another General Assembly entity, task force or committee requiring joint action, concurrence, and/or comment by Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Such review shall ordinarily be in consultation with the appropriate offices of the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

iv. Review the minutes of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns annually for consistency with established guidelines and report findings to the Advocacy Committees and the Board Executive Committee.
10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

(2) Restricted Funds Oversight Subcommittee

(a) Membership:

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Restricted Funds Oversight Subcommittee shall be composed of four (4) voting members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and one co-opted member with special expertise, representing a presbytery or congregation. The council chair shall annually appoint a Board voting member of the committee as chair of the committee. Membership will be determined in the following ways:

i. The four voting members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be appointed by the Board chair and ratified by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee. The four members shall be arranged in classes representing two-year terms and eligible for a second term, so long as such person continues to serve as a member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

ii. The co-opted member representing a presbytery or congregation shall be appointed by the Board chair and ratified by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee. This member will serve a two-year term, be eligible for a second term, and may be a Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting member.

iii. All members shall have voice and vote.

(b) Function:

The Restricted Funds Oversight Subcommittee provides oversight and guidance of the process by which councils and General Assembly entities apply for the use of General Assembly Restricted Funds (See General Assembly Minutes, 1997, Part I, pp. 218-222.). The Restricted Funds Oversight Subcommittee reviews the applications, and makes funding recommendations to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board through the Board Executive Committee.

(c) Meetings:

The Restricted Funds Oversight Subcommittee meets immediately before the Fall Board meeting. Additional conference call meetings may be needed.

(d) Responsibilities:

i. Recommend policies and procedures for the process by which councils and General Assembly entities apply for the use of General Assembly Restricted Funds.

ii. Provide oversight and guidance for the Presbyterian Mission Agency staff with respect to the application process.

iii. Review the applications received and make funding recommendations to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, through the Board Executive Committee, taking into consideration the recommendations from any consultation among the applicants.

2. Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee

a. Membership:

Membership of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee shall consist of five voting members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board arranged in classes for one two-year term, including one man, one woman, and one racial ethnic person. Each member shall have at least one year of experience on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board before he or she serves on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee. Responsibilities:

(Note: When no current member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board has the gifts or abilities required to serve on particular boards or entities that require Board representation, the Board Nominating Committee may select nominees from past Board members. Ordinarily the term is for four years, non-renewable.)

(1) Nominate two voting Board members, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to one-year at-large terms on the Executive Committee. Those so elected shall begin their service at the end of the General Assembly, or in non-Assembly years, with the Executive Committee Retreat. Ordinarily, these at-large members shall serve no more than three years as at-large members. An annual election provides for continuity, balance, and fair representation.

(2) Nominate three voting Board members, for election by the General Assembly, to four-year non-renewable terms on the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. Those so elected shall assume their responsibilities at the end of the General Assembly.

(3) Nominate one Board voting member for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to a four-year non-renewable term on the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.
(4) Nominate one Board voting member for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to a four-year, non-renewable term on the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

(5) Nominate one Board voting member from the Stewardship Mission Committee for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to a four-year non-renewable term on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation.

(6) Nominate one Board voting member from the Stewardship Mission Committee, and one Board voting member from the Evangelism Mission Committee, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to a four-year non-renewable term on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.’s Board of Directors, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly.

(7) Nominate one Board voting member from the Stewardship Mission Committee, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to a four-year non-renewable term on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Board of Pensions.

(8) Nominate one Board voting member, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to any selection committee for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Board of Pensions’ President. (Organization for Mission, Appendix D, Section 7).

(9) Nominate one Board voting member, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to a four-year non-renewable term on the Presbyterian Council for Chaplains and Military Personnel.

(10) Nominate two Board voting members, with election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to four-year non-renewable terms on the Committee on Theological Education.

(11) Nominate one Board voting member for appointment by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to a four-year non-renewable term on the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations.

(12) Nominate two members, at least one of whom shall be a current Board voting member, to three-year terms with eligibility to one additional term, to the Mountain Retreat Association, Inc.’s Board of Directors for approval by the General Assembly.

(13) Nominate one Board voting member to the Stony Point Conference Center Board of Directors, and one Board voting member to Ghost Ranch Conference Center Board of Directors to a four-year non-renewable term, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

(14) Nominate for Presbyterian Mission Agency Board election, one Board voting member to the Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. Board of Directors for a three-year non-renewable term.

(15) Prepare and distribute biographical information for any nominee who is not a current member of the Board.

(16) Nominate for other positions as requested by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

(17) Work in consultation with the Committee on Representation to provide for inclusiveness to ensure fair and effective representation in the decision making of the church. (Book of Order, G-3.0103.)

(18) Coordinate the nomination and election process for chair and vice-chair.

(19) Nominate Board voting members, for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, to two-year terms on the Mission Committees, with eligibility for two additional terms. Those so elected shall assume their responsibilities at the beginning of the fall meeting.

b. Process:

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee shall consult with members, prior to nomination, in the following ways:

(1) All new members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be requested to list in writing all appropriate committees in order of preference for service. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee shall consider the preference ranking and committee needs in preparing nominations, with the understanding that a person must serve one year on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board before being elected to serve on the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee. Nominations shall be made without further consultation.

(2) All members, after completing two-year terms as committee members, shall list in writing all appropriate committee choices in order of preference for service. In preparing nominations, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee shall consider the preference ranking and the committee needs when the continuing member is assigned to a new committee.

(3) Election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall take place at the first Board meeting following General Assembly.
3. Audit Committee

a. Purpose:

The primary function of the Audit Committee is to assist the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in fulfilling its oversight responsibilities and duties as follows:

   (1) Monitor the integrity of the financial reporting process and system of Internal Control regarding finance, accounting, legal compliance and ethics that have been established.

   (2) Monitor the independence and performance of the Corporation’s external auditors, internal auditing unit and management.

   (3) Provide an avenue of communication among the external auditor, internal auditing unit, management and the Board.

   The Committee has the authority to conduct any investigation appropriate to fulfilling its responsibilities, and in this regard, it has direct access to the external auditors as well as anyone in the organization.

   b. Composition and Membership

The Committee is composed of six (6) voting members:

   • Three (3) are Board voting members.
   • One (1) member is appointed by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).
   • Two (2) are at-large members nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) for special expertise and elected by the General Assembly.

   Each member of the Committee shall be independent and may not accept directly or indirectly any consulting, advisory, or other compensatory fee from either the Presbyterian Mission Agency or Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

   All members of the Committee shall have a working familiarity with basic finance and accounting practices and the two at-large members of the Committee shall have accounting or related financial management expertise determined by the Stewardship Mission Committee and the Audit Committee Chairs.

   The Committee will meet in conjunction with the scheduled Board meetings or more frequently as circumstances may require. The Committee meets annually, usually in April, to review the audited financial statements. Also, if the Committee Chair is not present, the members of the Committee may designate a Chair by majority vote. (50% of the members shall constitute a quorum).

   The Committee may ask members of management or others to attend the meetings and provide pertinent information as necessary. The Committee shall meet periodically with management, the external auditors and Internal Audit in separate executive sessions.

   c. Duties and Responsibilities

The Committee is to assist the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in fulfilling its oversight responsibilities by reviewing and reporting on:

   The system of internal controls over financial reporting,

   The integrity of the financial statements,

   Processes to ensure compliance with legal and regulatory requirements, and

   Ethics Policy violation reports

   The Committee will provide input regarding the Internal Audit function. This input may include the qualifications, independence, performance and compensation of the Internal Audit staff.

   The Committee will pre-approve all auditing services and be directly responsible for the appointment, compensation, retention, dismissal and oversight of the work of any external auditing firm engaged. The Committee will resolve any disagreements between management and the auditor regarding financial reporting.

   The Committee shall be provided appropriate funding for payment of compensation to the external auditors and ordinary administrative expenses of the Committee. The Committee will carry out the following specific duties and responsibilities:

   (1) Internal Control

   (a) Review with management, internal auditors and external auditors the adequacy and effectiveness of policies for assessing and managing risk.
(b) Examine any findings of weaknesses and recommendations for the improvement of the internal controls. Monitor management’s response to and implementation of internal control recommendations.

(c) Review with management, internal auditors and external auditors the adequacy of computerized systems controls, the security of such, and the contingency plan for processing financial information in the event of a system breakdown.

(2) Financial Reporting

Review with management, the internal auditors and the external auditors:

(a) The interim and year-end financial statements and related footnotes considering their completeness, consistency, and reflection of appropriate accounting principles.

(b) The external auditors’ audit of the financial statements and their report thereon.

(c) Any significant changes in accounting principles, significant judgment areas and significant or complex transactions (including any off-balance sheet structures) that occurred and the external auditors’ judgments about the quality, not just the acceptability, of the accounting principles as applied in financial reporting.

(d) Management’s handling of proposed audit adjustments identified by the external auditors.

(e) Any significant changes required in the external auditors audit plan.

(f) All written communications between the external auditors and management, such as any management letters or schedule of unadjusted differences.

(g) Any serious difficulties or disputes between management and the external auditors.

(h) All matters required to be communicated to the Committee under generally accepted auditing standards (SAS-61).

(3) External Auditors

(a) Serve as the authority to which the external auditors report.

(b) Appoint the external auditors to be engaged, establish the audit fees of the external auditors, and pre-approve any non-audit services provided by the external auditors.

(c) Review the latest internal quality-control or peer review of the external auditors’ firm, any material issues raised, and the steps taken to resolve such.

(d) Review, at least annually, all relationships between external auditors and Presbyterian Mission Agency Board /Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and otherwise assess the independence of the external auditors and the turnover rates of the lead and concurring partners.

(e) Review and evaluate the performance of the external auditors and review with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board any proposed replacement of the external auditors.

(4) Internal Auditors

(a) Review the objectivity, effectiveness, budget and staffing of the Internal Audit Department.

(b) Receive information from the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director regarding the appointment, replacement, reassignment or dismissal of the Associate Director of Internal Audit.

(c) Review the Internal Audit Plan for the current year, the risk assessment procedures used to identify projects included in the plan and any changes required in its scope.

(d) Review the Internal Audit Policy and compliance with the Institute of Internal Auditors’ (IIA) Standards for the Professional Practice of Internal Auditing.

(e) Review with management and the internal auditors:

i. Significant findings on internal audits during the year and management’s responses thereto.

ii. Any difficulties the internal auditors have encountered in the course of their audits, including any restrictions on the scope of their work or access to required information.

iii. Any changes required in the scope of their internal audits.

(5) Ethics Policy Violation Reports
(a) The Audit Committee has duties under the “Ethics Policy for COGA and Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Members.” It also has duties under the “Ethics Policy for Presbyterian Mission Agency and Office of the General Assembly Employees”. These policies are attached as Appendix 6 and can be viewed at [http://www.pcusa.org/resource/ethics-policy-elected-and-appointed-members-genera/]

(b) The Audit Committee will fulfill its duties as set out in those Ethics Policies.

(6) General

(a) Review the Committee’s charter annually, reassess the adequacy of this charter and, considering any new laws or regulations, recommend any proposed changes to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

(b) Ensure that the Ethics Policies are formalized in writing, adequate and up-to-date. Review with legal counsel and the Associate Director of Internal Audit the processes for communicating the importance of the Ethics Policies, monitoring compliance therewith and any changes to or waivers of the Ethics Policies.

(c) Request the external auditors provide information on any legal and regulatory matters that may have an internal impact on the financial statements and the related compliance policies and procedures.

(d) Institute and oversee special investigations as needed.

(e) Perform other activities related to this charter as requested by the Board.

(f) Confirm annually that all responsibilities outlined in this charter have been carried out.

(g) Evaluate the performance of the Committee and its individual members on a regular basis.

B. Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Mission Committees

This section reflects the current Mission Work Plan

1. Evangelism

a. Membership

Seven Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting members and one Ecumenical Advisory Member.

b. Purpose

We are called to invite all people to faith, repentance, and the abundant life of God in Jesus Christ, to encourage congregations in joyfully sharing the Gospel, and through the power of the Holy Spirit to grow in membership and discipleship.

2. Vocation

a. Membership

Seven Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting members.

b. Purpose

We are called to lead by Jesus Christ's example, to identify spiritual gifts, and to equip and support people for faithful and effective servant leadership in all parts of the body of Christ.

3. Justice

a. Membership

Seven Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting members and one Ecumenical Advisory Member.

b. Purpose

We are called to address wrongs in every aspect of life and the whole of creation, intentionally working with and on behalf of poor, oppressed, and disadvantaged people as did Jesus Christ, even at risk to our corporate and personal lives.

4. Stewardship

a. Membership

Eight Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting members and two at-large members.
b. Purpose

We are called to support the mission and ministry of the mission committees through the application of broad-based services necessary to enable, equip, account and serve. We are the committee designated for Corporate, property, and legal matters for the PC(USA).

5. Discipleship

a. Membership

Seven Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting members.

b. Purpose

We are called to deeper discipleship through scripture, worship, prayer, study, stewardship and service, and to rely on the Holy Spirit to mold our lives more and more into the likeness of Jesus Christ.

V. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

By corporate action of the Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, the Executive Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is also the Executive Committee of the Corporation (GAMC, September 1997). A quorum of a majority of voting members is required to conduct business.

By corporate action of the Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, the Stewardship Committee, or its successor, is also the Property, Legal, and Finance Committee of the Corporation (Corporate Minutes, September 26, 1998). International property matters requiring approval by the PCUSA Board of Directors are referred to the board via action of the Evangelism Committee, or its successor. (Corporate Minutes, March 16, 2007).

VI. Election Procedures (Approved by GAMC September 2007)

A. Election Procedures for Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Chair and Vice-Chair (See Section III. Officers of the Board, C. Terms of Office, C., 1. 2.)

1. Only Presbyterian Mission Agency Board voting members who have served at least two years on the Board before taking office are eligible for election as chair or vice-chair.

2. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee will use a nominating process approved by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, as follows:

a. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee will compile a list of gifts, abilities, and skills that they believe will be needed by the Board leadership during the ensuing biennial period. It will also draft two or three questions to be answered by potential candidates for Board leadership. The questions will address the anticipated key challenges facing the Board during the ensuing biennial period.

b. Staff to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee will identify all Board members eligible for election to Board leadership and prepare for each of them a resume form that includes the person’s personal information from the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board biography form, a summary of their Board experience, and the questions drafted by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee. The letter will:

• Inform the Board member of his or her eligibility for Board leadership.
• Ask if the Board member feels called to be considered for nomination to a Board leadership position.
• If the response is affirmative, request that he or she verify the resume form information and answer the leadership questions, and
• Ask that the completed form be returned to Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee staff.

c. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee will review all the submitted forms and will also go through a discernment process as to whether or not eligible Board members who have not submitted forms have leadership gifts that justify an invitation to consider a call to candidacy for Board leadership. If so, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee will extend the invitation to submit a completed resume form and answers to the leadership questions.

d. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee will evaluate the final list of Board leadership candidates who have submitted resume forms and completed the questions to identify a candidate who it wishes to nominate for Board chair and a candidate it wishes to nominate for Board vice-chair for the ensuing biennial period. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee chair will notify the selected candidates that they are the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee’s nominees for the appropriate Board leadership positions.

e. The names of the nominees, along with their resumes and their responses to the questions, will be communicated to all Board members a minimum of three weeks prior to the winter/spring Board meeting.
f. The Board leadership election will be conducted during the winter/spring Board meeting. The Board vice-chair election will be held following the election of the Board chair. Nominations from the floor will be accepted for both elections. The elections will be by written ballot.

g. The two-year term of office will begin with the close of the upcoming General Assembly meeting and end with the close of the next General Assembly meeting.

3. In the event of vacancy during the term of the chair, the vice-chair assumes the chair. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee is empowered to appoint an interim vice-chair upon nominations by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee. Election to the position shall occur at the next full meeting of the Board.

B. Election Procedures for Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee Members

1. Each member shall be elected for a term of two years. (Also see Section IV.A.2a)

2. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee shall nominate members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee for election by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board at its fall meeting. (See Section IV.A.d.12.)

3. No person shall be eligible for reelection to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee.

4. Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee members shall elect their own chair.

5. Members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee are eligible to serve on other committees.

C. Election Procedures for Chairs of the Mission Committees, and Audit Committee

1. The committees shall nominate and elect their chairs, and may elect a vice-chair, during the first Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meeting in the calendar year and notify the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee.

2. The chairs shall begin their service at the end of the General Assembly, or in non-Assembly years, with the Executive Committee Retreat.

3. Committee chairs shall be elected for one-year terms, renewable for one additional term.

4. Board voting members completing at least two consecutive years on a committee are eligible for election as committee chair.

5. Ordinarily, committee chairs shall make appointments and assignments of committee members to work groups, task forces, and other subcommittees as necessary, giving consideration to experience, interest, and representation.

D. General Assembly Nominations

1. In keeping with the action of the 208th General Assembly (1996), (Recommendation G, Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 201), the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall:
   a. make use of the General Assembly Nominating Committee whenever possible;
   b. report annually to the General Assembly Nominating Committee records of attendance and participation of Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members;
   c. work through the General Assembly process in selecting persons to serve on boards, committees, task forces, work groups, and initiative teams to...“ensure fair and open access from all areas of our denomination and to ensure a valid and enriching diversity within all working groups”... (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 201, para. 15.113). This procedure applies to all working groups with a life span of more than two years.

VII. General Assembly Advisory and Advocacy Committees

The 205th General Assembly (1993) approved the creation of one advisory committee and two advocacy committees. They are:

Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns

Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns

An advisory committee is related to an entity or agency of the General Assembly that is formed for the purpose of providing advice, recommendations, resources, information, or counsel to its parent body.

An advocacy committee is related to an entity or agency of the General Assembly that is formed for the purpose of providing resources and support for a stated cause, constituency, policy, or defined interest through recommendations, advice, counsel, and efforts that endorse, define, or encourage. The committee reports regularly to its parent body and constituency.
The above named committees shall have members as detailed below; elected for four-year terms with a maximum of eight years. For those who continue from the similar committees, continuous service is counted.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee shall nominate the members, for election by the General Assembly, and shall monitor the rotation of committee members among the synods.

The chairs of the advisory committee and advocacy committees shall be elected in the same manner as the chairs of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Committees, i.e., elected by the members of the respective committees.

The funding for the meetings of these committees comes from the per capita budget and is the responsibility of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

Whenever the work of the committee takes the members beyond the audience of the PC(USA), nationally or internationally, there shall be intensive pre-trip briefing which shall include current church policy, political situations and possible conflicting ideologies and shall include training on dealing with people of differing cultures, faith and backgrounds. When statements to the media are necessary they shall ordinarily be made by the chair of the committee, based on the approved policies of the General Assembly.

A. Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

This advisory committee shall consist of three Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members and nine at-large members selected for special expertise and geographical diversity.

1. Accountability
   a. The committee shall be accountable to carry out the processes and procedures, and for the identification of financial implications, generally required by all entities for presentation of material to the General Assembly. However, it is understood that the nature of the committee’s work occasionally may create difficulties for all concerned in these areas.
   b. The committee shall be accountable for the content of its work to the General Assembly in accordance with the Manual of the General Assembly, pg. 77, Forming Social Policy, 2.a.: “The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy will be responsible for the process of developing and recommending social witness policy to the General Assembly. If any other entity is involved in processes of developing and recommending social witness policy, then appropriate consultation and linkage with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy shall be undertaken.”
   c. Staff responsible for the planning and coordination work of the committee shall be accountable to the Office of the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency through the Director, Compassion, Peace and Justice, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.
   d. During the employee review process of the Coordinator, input will be requested from the Committee.

2. Search Procedures
   a. When the coordinator position becomes vacant, a search committee of seven members shall be appointed by the Executive Director, with membership as follows:
      (1) In consultation with the chair of ACSWP, three shall be appointed from the Committee, one of whom shall be the chair of the Search Committee.
      (2) In consultation with the chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, three shall be appointed from the elected members of the Board.
      (3) The Director of Compassion, Peace and Justice shall provide staff services to the Search Committee and shall have voice but not vote.
      (4) The chair of the Search Committee shall communicate the Search Committee’s recommendation to the Director of Compassion, Peace and Justice.
   b. The Director of Compassion, Peace and Justice shall appoint and have supervision of the coordinator for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.
   c. The search and appointment shall be guided by, and in accordance with, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Employee Handbook.

3. Budget

The budget shall be displayed in the Office of the Director of the Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministry Area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency with the Deputy Executive Director for Mission signing off on matters requiring the signature of the Deputy Executive Director.

4. Staff Relationships

The Social Witness Policy Office and the Committee relate most closely to the Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministry Area in order to be a regular part of information channels, staff meetings, teams and discussions. Relationships with other ministries shall be developed through staff participation in ‘staff week’ meetings, staff teams and consultative processes.
5. Access

Access to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Leadership Team for planning and consultation shall be on invitation of the Executive Director or at the request of the coordinator for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. At least annually, there will be a meeting of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and representatives of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee for strategic reflection and anticipation regarding social witness policy concerns.

The committee shall submit its General Assembly report to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee’s Procedures Subcommittee for review and possible comments by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

6. Liaisons

A staff person shall be named from the Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministry as liaison to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

7. Relation to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

Access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be in the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, social involvement reports, Advice and Counsel Memoranda, a yearly narrative report, and other appropriate correspondence. Advice and Counsel Memoranda are to be developed cooperatively with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns as appropriate.

8. Assigned Functions

a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions study papers, social involvement reports, or Advice and Counsel Memoranda on the church’s social witness for study and recommendation to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or on its own initiative; seek concurrence of the council relative to financial implications on plans for studies.

b. Advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of social witness policy or strategy, including interim statements concerning pressing social issues, the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly. Facilitate two-way communication with all parties throughout policy development and advisory processes.

c. Prepare special studies at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or its Ministries on matters of social witness.

d. Work cooperatively with the Ministries and all councils in coordinating the interdependent process of social policy formation, implementation, and monitoring.

e. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its representative committees on overtures, commissioner resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that recommend policy direction or action on social witness.

f. Maintain an up-to-date and accurate Social Policy Compilation of General Assembly social witness policy and provide information to the church as requested.

g. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret the social witness policies of the General Assembly.

h. Identify facets of the church’s social witness that enable or obstruct effective action. Analyze, in cooperation with the General Assembly Ministries, the effectiveness of social witness in councils, institutions, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. After consulting entities that have primary ministry responsibility and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, report to the General Assembly on the advisory committee’s findings, together with recommendations for improving social witness.

i. Report directly to the General Assembly because of the need to maintain and advance a prophetic witness of the church.

B. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)

This advocacy committee shall consist of the following persons:

2 African American (*)
2 Asian American (*)
2 Hispanic (*)
2 Middle Eastern (*)
2 Native American (*)
1 at-large member elected with consideration for special expertise, fast-growing racial ethnic segments, geographic diversity and ethnic balance.

1 Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Member nominated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to serve a four-year non-renewable term. This voting member fulfills the responsibility of liaison between the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the advocacy committee.

• (*) Members of the five racial ethnic caucuses (African American, Asian American, Hispanic, Middle Eastern, and Native American) shall select one member from each caucus to be elected through the General Assembly Nominating process to serve a four year-term with eligibility for one additional term.

1. Accountability and Lodgment

Staff responsible for the planning and coordination work of the committee shall be appointed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director in consultation with the Advocacy Committee. The staff shall be lodged within the office of the Executive Director, unless the Advocacy Committee consents to staff being lodged outside that office. Such staff shall be accountable for the work of the committee to the Office of the General Assembly Mission Council Executive Director through the Executive Administrator.

2. Budget

Funding for the work of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns comes from the per capita budget except for the staffing costs which are accounted for in the budget of the office where the staff is lodged. The Advocacy Committee shall propose a yearly budget to the office of the Executive Administrator.

3. Access

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns shall have direct access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Access shall be in the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, racial involvement reports, a yearly narrative report, Advice and counsel Memoranda, and other appropriate correspondence. Advice and counsel Memoranda shall be developed in consultation with other advisory and advocacy committees as appropriate.

The committee shall submit its General Assembly report to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee’s Procedures Subcommittee for review and possible comments by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

4. Assigned Functions

a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and Advice and counsel memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or on its own initiative.

b. Advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of racial ethnic concerns including statements concerning pressing issues the Board may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

c. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of racial ethnic concern.

d. Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on racial ethnic concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

e. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.

f. Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies and programs relative to racial ethnic concerns.

g. Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concern.

C. Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)

This advocacy committee shall consist of:

2 clergy women

1 woman church lay employee

1 Presbyterian Women Churchwide Coordinating Team Vice Moderator for Justice and Peace

7 members at-large, chosen to balance the committee geographically, racially and ethnically, and with consideration to age and expertise.
1. Presbyterian Mission Agency Board nominated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to serve a four-year non-renewable term. This voting member fulfills the responsibility of liaison between the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the advocacy committee.

At least four members of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns shall be racial ethnic women. At least two members of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns will be men, but no more than three members may be men.

1. Accountability and Lodgment

Staff responsible for the planning and coordination work of the committee shall be appointed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director in consultation with the Advocacy Committee. The staff shall be lodged within the office of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director, unless the Advocacy Committee consents to staff being lodged outside that office. Such staff shall be accountable for the work of the committee to the office of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Director through the Executive Administrator.

2. Budget

Funding for the work of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns comes from the per capita budget except for the staffing costs which are accounted for in the budget of the office where the staff member is lodged. The Advocacy Committee shall propose a yearly budget to the office of the Executive Administrator.

3. Access

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns shall have direct access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Access shall be in the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, a yearly narrative report, Advice and counsel Memoranda. Advice and counsel Memoranda, and other appropriate correspondence shall be developed in consultation with other advisory and advocacy committees as appropriate.

The committee shall submit its General Assembly report to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee’s Procedures Subcommittee for review and possible comments by the General Assembly Mission Council.

4. Assigned Functions

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns shall assist the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4.0403. The committee shall monitor and evaluate policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church and the world; and shall advocate for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society.

a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and Advice and counsel memoranda on women’s concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, or on its own initiative.

b. Advise the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on matters of women’s concerns including statements concerning pressing issues the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

c. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women’s concerns.

d. Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on women’s concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

e. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on women’s concerns.

f. Monitor the implementation of women’s policies and programs relative to women’s concerns.

g. Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women’s concerns.

VIII. Committee on Theological Education

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) has direct access to the General Assembly and their work is coordinated through the Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry.

As constituted by the 198th General Assembly (1986) and reaffirmed by the 205th General Assembly (1993) the Committee on Theological Education has the following purposes: to further the cause of theological education in the church; to provide a vehicle through which the individual theological seminaries can coordinate their activities and report to the church; to provide for official communication from the church to the seminaries; to preserve the freedom of the seminaries for the benefit of the church; and to assure visible representation of theological education [at] the national level of the church’s organization.
1. Committee Membership

This committee of the General Assembly will consist of:

- One representative appointed by each of the ten PC(USA) seminaries;
- Eleven at-large members for special expertise and geographical diversity, who are elected through the General Assembly Nominating Committee process to serve four-year terms, with eligibility for one additional term;
- Two Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members nominated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee and elected by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to four-year non-renewable terms;
- Corresponding members representing seminaries that have renewable covenant relationships with the PC(USA);
- A corresponding member representing the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation; and up to three corresponding members representing non-Presbyterian seminaries as determined by annual vote of the Committee on Theological Education.

2. Staff Accountability and Lodgment

Staff responsible for planning and coordinating work of the committee shall be appointed by the Director of the Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry in consultation with the Committee on Theological Education. The staff shall be lodged within the Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry and be directly accountable to the Director of the Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry.

3. Budget

Funding for the work of the Committee on Theological Education, including related staffing costs and allocations to the seminaries on behalf of the denomination, shall be accounted for in the budget of the Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry.

4. Access

The Committee on Theological Education shall have direct access to the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Access shall be in the form of resolutions, a yearly narrative report, comments on issues before the Assembly, and other appropriate correspondence. The yearly narrative report shall be forwarded to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee for possible comment. Institutional representatives serving on the Committee on Theological Education will represent COTE on a rotating basis with corresponding member status at meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

5. Assigned Functions

a. To develop and maintain a comprehensive overview of theological education from the perspective of the whole church.

b. To identify, develop, and propose strategies for a systemic approach to theological education within the denomination.

c. To serve as an advocate before the whole church for theological education and to interpret the mission of the denomination’s seminaries to the whole church.

d. To provide a way for the church’s needs to be addressed to the denomination’s seminaries.

e. To review the effectiveness and stewardship of the seminaries on behalf of the church.

f. To encourage and enhance cooperation among the theological seminaries of the denomination.

g. To relate the governing bodies and agencies of the PC(USA), particularly those which have responsibilities for theology and worship, for education, for candidacy, and for leadership development for pastors and church members.

h. To maintain appropriate relationships with those responsible for theological education in other branches of the church catholic.

i. To receive and act upon requests and recommendations from the church.

j. To receive and review reports from the theological seminaries appropriate to the work of the committee;

k. To identify the issues, needs, and opportunities of the seminaries, individually and corporately, and, where appropriate, address these as requests and recommendations to the church;

l. To authorize use of Theological Education Fund monies, prepare an appropriate formula for disbursements to the theological seminaries of the PC(USA), and to advocate for financial support of the seminaries.

m. To maintain relations with educational and ecumenical associations which share common concerns with the committee.

n. To serve as an agency of the denomination for relating to theological seminaries other than those of the PC(USA).
IX. Other Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Related Committees

The following committees have reporting relationships established by the General Assembly or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. If the chairperson of one of these committees wishes to address a Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Committee, he or she may request time from the chair of the mission committee prior to the meeting. Ordinarily, such requests will be granted subject to available time on the docket, and the relevance of the request.

A. Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI)

The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) is responsible for implementing General Assembly policy related to mission responsibility through investment. MRTI assists the church at all levels to utilize its investments as key instruments to promote its mission goals in society. MRTI provides leadership for effective engagement of the private sector in partnership with ecumenical colleagues in the United States, and in collaboration with indigenous churches, ecumenical bodies and local groups in other nations. Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly, this committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Justice Mission Committee.

B. Mission Development Resources Committee (MDRC)

The Mission Development Resources Committee makes decisions on Church Loans, Walton Awards for New Church Development and Mission Program Grants (New Church Development, Congregational Transformation and Specialized Ministries). Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly, this committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Evangelism Mission Committee.

C. Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Advisory Committee (PDA)

The purpose of the Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Advisory Committee is to give policy advice, review the work, assist in setting strategic program direction and planning, and recommend an annual budget. This is a ministry of relief and response to national and international disasters, aid to refugees and displaced persons, refugee resettlement and efforts toward development. This ministry is carried out through ecumenical partnerships, related church agencies, middle governing bodies, and congregations. Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly, this committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Justice Mission Committee.

D. Presbyterian Hunger Program Advisory Committee (PHP)

The purpose of the Presbyterian Hunger Program Advisory Committee is to guide the church’s response to hunger and its underlying causes. The committee carries out the following tasks: 1) recommending Presbyterian Hunger Program operating guidelines, 2) making and reporting funding (grant) decisions within the approved guidelines; and 3) suggesting the development of programs and strategies for implementing the "Common Affirmation on Global Hunger," and other General Assembly policies related to hunger and poverty. Nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly, this committee reports to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Justice Mission Committee.

E. Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People (SDOP)

The National Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People provides the opportunity for the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and non-members to help establish partnerships with economically poor, oppressed, and disadvantaged people in the United States and around the world, which helps them to develop toward their own potential, self-determination, and human dignity. (People who are not Presbyterian may be nominated, elected, and serve). The National Committee shares this ministry with [ ] [Mid Council] committees, as the focal point of the Church's efforts to promote the self-development concept and cause.

F. Jinishian Memorial Program Governance Commission

The Jinishian Memorial Program (JMP) is an endowed ecumenical ministry of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and part of the World Mission ministry area, that supports ongoing programs benefitting Armenians in need in Armenia, Lebanon, Syria, Turkey, and Jerusalem. JMP has a U.S. Advisory Committee (USAC) composed of three individuals of Armenian descent, and two who are members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency staff. The Jinishian Memorial Program Governance Commission (JMPGC) acts on behalf of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in all matters that authorize and facilitate the implementation of JMP. The JMPGC is composed of the five voting members of the USAC, plus two current or previous Presbyterian Mission Agency Board elected members. The two elected Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members also serve as liaisons with the USAC with voice, but not vote.

X. Temporary Special Committees, Task Forces or Work Groups

If Mission Committees, Stewardship Committee, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee or two or more of these committees determine a need for a temporary special committee, task force or work group that will involve Presbyterian Mission Agency Board membership and/or non-Presbyterian Mission Agency Board membership, a proposal shall be submitted to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board through the Executive Committee for approval. All proposals for temporary special committees, task forces and work groups shall include the following information:
The General Assembly Mission Council is connected to a variety of organizations and networks that further its ministry with congregations. Among those are groups that have established formal linkages with the General Assembly Mission Council through Covenants of Agreement and are designated as Covenant Groups. The General Assembly Mission Council has a responsibility to review the work of each Covenant Group regularly and renew its covenant, when appropriate, as stated in the specific Covenant Agreement.

[Detailed information is available on the GAMC Website at http://gamc.pcusa.org/GAMC/covenants.]

XI. Missional Relationships

There are four categories of formal Presbyterian Mission Agency missional relationships:

- Institutional relationships
- Professional associations
- Missional Partnerships
  - GAMC organization wide
- Office partnerships

A. Institutional Relationships

Institutional Relationships are those between the General Assembly and another organization. In these cases, the Presbyterian Mission Agency is responsible for cultivating the relationship and requesting General Assembly approval, but the relationship isn’t limited in scope to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. There are relatively few of these relationships. A covenant between PC(USA) and the other organization will place the relationship in the context of the church’s missional directives, describe appropriate expectations for staff services and support, as well as note any special responsibilities granted as part of the relationship.

Approval: The General Assembly, upon recommendation by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

B. Professional Associations

Professional Associations are related organizations of church professionals within a given area of expertise. Professional associations also serve the missional purposes of the church, and in that context the Presbyterian Mission Agency role is one of recognizing and networking leaders. A relationship agreement between the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the other organization will place the relationship in the context of Presbyterian Mission Agency missional directives and describe appropriate expectations for Presbyterian Mission Agency staff services and support.

Approval: Executive Leadership Team, upon recommendation from the respective Deputy Executive Director’s leadership team, for a four year term

Notification: GAMC

C. Presbyterian Mission Agency organization wide Missional Partnerships

Presbyterian Mission Agency organization wide Missional Partnerships are groups whose relationship with the Presbyterian Mission Agency is not limited to a single ministry area, but extends across the work of the Agency. Because covenanted groups carry out specialized ministries on behalf of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, their covenant is not established with an office, but rather with the Agency as a whole. These organizations are linked by common cause and a specific relationship to the Presbyterian Mission Agency. There are relatively few of these organizations, as most of missional partnerships are with particular offices. A covenant between the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the other organization will place the relationship in the context of Presbyterian Mission Agency missional directives, describe appropriate expectations for Presbyterian Mission Agency staff services and support, as well as note any special responsibilities granted as part of the relationship.

Approval: Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, upon recommendation of the Executive Leadership Team, for a four year term.

Notification: The General Assembly.
D. Presbyterian Mission Agency Office Partnerships

Presbyterian Mission Agency Office Partnerships are relationships between a Presbyterian Mission Agency office or ministry area and another organization. These relationships are bound together by common cause and a specific relationship with another organization. An office partnership is typically limited in scope to a given office or ministry area. An office relationship document will place the relationship in the context of GAMC missional directives and describe appropriate expectations for Presbyterian Mission Agency staff services and support.

Approval: The Executive Leadership Team (ELT), upon recommendation from the Ministry Directors Team (MDT), for a term of four years.

Notification: GAMC

Presbyterian Mission Agency Staff Organization

I. Mission Administration

A. Office of the Executive Director

The primary purpose of the office is to provide overall leadership and support for the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) working with and through the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the General Assembly Ministries. The office is divided into mission administration areas, one of which is shared with the Office of the General Assembly:

1. Executive Administrator’s Office which includes, Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, and Human Resources.
2. Internal Audit
3. Legal & Risk Management

Shared with the Office of the General Assembly

4. Mid Council Relations

B. Deputy Executive Directors

The General Assembly Ministries are led by three Deputy Executive Directors reporting to the Executive Director.

1. Deputy Executive Director for Mission
   a. Evangelism and Church Growth
   b. Compassion, Peace and Justice
   c. Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women
   d. Theology, Worship and Education
   e. Vocation
   f. World Mission
   g. Research Services

2. Deputy Executive Director for Communications & Funds Development
   a. Creative Services
   b. Relationship and Development Operations
   c. Executive Office on Policy Communications
   d. Funds Development
   e. Mission Communications
   f. Mission Resources
   g. Presbyterian News Service
   h. Stewardship
3. Deputy Executive Director for Shared Services
   a. Finance and Accounting
   b. Information Technology
   c. Presbyterian Center Services
   d. Presbyterian Distribution Services

II. General Assembly Ministries

A. Mission Ministries:
   1. Evangelism and Church Growth
      The Evangelism and Church Growth Ministry equips, empowers, and inspires individuals, congregations and governing bodies to share their personal faith in Christ and to become connected to a community of faith. This work is done in partnership with synods and presbyteries. Work area offices carry out this ministry by coaching and training leaders to plant new churches, to transform existing congregations, and to effectively share and live out the Gospel in our increasingly multicultural world.
   2. Compassion, Peace and Justice
      The Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministry seeks to support, assist and involve congregations and mid councils in ministries of compassion, justice, and peacemaking. This ministry responds to disasters, provides support for sustainable community development, and works to alleviate hunger and poverty nationally and around the world. It also addresses injustice in all arenas of life and advocates for just and peaceful solutions to situations of violence, conflict and oppression. This work is done in collaboration with mid councils, partner churches, ecumenical partners and community-based organizations. Work areas and offices carry out this ministry in a variety of ways, providing resources, supporting networks, sponsoring events that equip congregations to witness to God’s healing and reconciling activity in the world.
   3. Racial Ethnic and Women Ministries/Presbyterian Women
      The Racial Ethnic and Women Ministries/Presbyterian Women Ministry seek to develop leaders, to work for racial and gender justice and equality, and to cultivate Presbyterian communities of faith that truly reflect the increasing multicultural makeup of our society. Work areas and offices carry out this ministry through networks, events, publications, communication, advocacy, and financial support.
   4. Theology, Worship, and Education
      The Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry assists the whole church in its common calling to explore the riches of the gospel, worship the one Triune God, and strengthen the ministries of the church. In partnership with congregations, presbyteries, and seminaries, Theology, Worship, and Education develops educational materials, worship resources, leader development programs, spiritual enrichment processes, and theological studies that support the church’s faith and life. This Ministry also bears responsibility for Faith and Order ecumenical work on behalf of the entire Presbyterian Mission Agency.
   5. Vocation
      The Office of Vocation is a shared ministry of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly. Its mission is to provide ecclesiastical and programming support related to vocation and leadership for Presbyterian individuals, congregations, mid councils, and other partners. Its ministry includes support for presbyteries and congregations in the nurture of Christian Vocation; the preparation, credentialing, and support of church professionals; and the PCUSA call system.
   6. World Mission
      The World Mission Ministry carries on the Presbyterian calling and tradition of sending missionaries, sharing and living out the gospel, and supporting partner Christian ministries around the globe. Work areas and offices in this ministry include supporting dozens of partner churches in many countries, working with international ecumenical bodies, and sending hundreds of full time, part time, and volunteer mission personnel to over 60 countries around the world. World Mission supports mission involvement throughout the PC(USA) by providing mission education, networking opportunities, opportunities to volunteer nationally, and leadership development for young adults serving nationally and internationally.

B. General Assembly Support Ministries
   1. Communications and Funds Development
      Communication and Funds Development Ministry communicates the mission and ministry of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the role and activities regarding mission in the PC(USA). Communication and Funds Development encourages, implements, and guides stewardship and giving to fund the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the mission and ministry of connectional entities and agencies of the PC(USA).
2. Shared Services

Shared Services Ministry faithfully receives, records, and reconciles contributions offered to the church from congregations and presbyteries. Shared Services assists the ministry areas in budgeting, disbursing, documenting, and financial reporting. Shared Services prints, packages, mails, and distributes denominational materials to congregations, mid councils, and to mission fields across the nation and the world. Shared Services also provides support for, information technology, property management, and Presbyterian Center operations.

Appendix 3

Public Statements by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

I. Statements on Public Issues by Entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

A. It is understood that duly constituted entities, boards, and councils may address statements or resolutions to the church or public officials, based on specified General Assembly actions, concerning matters clearly related to their assigned responsibilities. Such statements or resolutions may also be released to church and public news media.

B. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board has been assigned a particular responsibility by the General Assembly to act on behalf of the General Assembly according to previously enacted General Assembly policies [between meetings of the General Assembly], reporting fully to each subsequent General Assembly its actions.’ []. Since the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall, in effect, be acting on behalf of the General Assembly, clear procedure defining the occasions and process for preparing and approving interim statements addressed to the church or the public order on issues and events in the society are essential. While the procedure outlined below focuses on such interim statements, the interim actions of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall, of course, encompass a wider scope.

Procedures Governing Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Interim Statements on Public Issues:

1. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board policy on interim statements governs those occasions when the Board speaks to members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to public officials, or to other audiences on behalf of the General Assembly []. When the intent is to facilitate the church’s understanding of a General Assembly policy or to encourage general support of that policy, an interim statement shall be prepared.

2. An interim statement is a formal statement of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board [issued] between meetings of the General Assembly on an event or issue in the public order that merits immediate response by the church. An interim statement should not be confused with statements issued by the Stated Clerk in fulfillment of the responsibility to interpret and communicate General Assembly actions, nor with personal statements that may from time to time be made by church officials.

3. Interim statements should be reserved for significant occasions rather than viewed as a routine responsibility. The following questions shall be used to evaluate the need for such statements:
   a. Is this event or issue of sufficient gravity or moment to merit an interim statement by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board?
   b. Is such a statement by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board deemed appropriate, timely, and helpful?
   c. Are sufficient time and expertise available to prepare a credible and responsible interim statement on the matter?

4. Proposals for interim statements may be initiated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board itself or by any General Assembly entity, synod, or presbytery. Any proposals arising between meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be communicated to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director.

5. When the proposal is for an interim statement at a forthcoming regular meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board , the following procedures shall apply:
   a. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director shall refer the proposal to the appropriate person(s), depending on the subject, who shall prepare a recommendation concerning the need for an interim statement. If further action is appropriate, those persons in consultation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board chair, the Executive Director, and the Stated Clerk shall prepare a draft.
   b. The draft of any proposed interim statement shall be circulated to members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in advance if possible; otherwise, at the beginning of the meetings.
   c. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee shall review the proposed interim statement and recommend a method for considering it in the meeting.
   d. Ordinarily, no final vote on an interim statement shall be taken until at least twenty-four hours following the circulation of a draft.

6. When the proposal for an interim statement arises during a meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, the following procedures shall apply:
10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

a. The matter shall be referred immediately to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee which, in consultation with the persons named above in item “5.(a)” in attendance, shall report its recommendation to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board as to whether an interim statement is merited. The recommendation shall be based on consideration of the questions in section “3.” above.

b. If the proposal to issue an interim statement is approved, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board chair shall immediately appoint a small task group to prepare a draft, drawing upon particular competencies among the members and expertise of those present. They shall work in consultation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board chair, the Executive Director, and the Stated Clerk.

c. Consideration shall proceed as in items “5.c” and “5.d” above.

7. When the proposal is for an interim statement between meetings because of urgent need, the following procedures shall apply:

a. The chair and vice chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Moderator of the General Assembly, in consultation with the appropriate persons depending on the subject, the Executive Director and the Stated Clerk may jointly agree that an interim statement is merited and authorize the preparation of a draft.

b. On completion of a draft, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board chair shall call a meeting of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee, by telephone conference if necessary, to consider the proposed statement.

c. When the matter is of sufficient urgency in the judgment of those named in “[ ] 5.a” above, notification and the circulation of a draft here described can be compressed into one. In such case, the proposed statement shall be carefully read at the beginning of the special/called meeting, an explanation of the background circumstances shall be made, and the statement shall be read again before it is placed for debate.

d. All members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall ordinarily be notified of the proposed interim statement, and every attempt shall be made to circulate the draft in advance.

8. In all instances, a majority of those voting, provided a quorum is present, shall be sufficient to approve an interim statement.

II. Other Statements by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board

On other occasions, when the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is invited to endorse the statement of another recognized Presbyterian group or ecumenical partner, or when the council identifies an occasion when it wishes to speak on its own behalf, it may do so upon recommendation of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee. In no case shall such a statement be made in contradiction of General Assembly action.

Appendix 4

Open Meeting Policy

Approved by the 209th General Assembly (1997) – Amended by 218th General Assembly (2008)

1. The work of the church is strengthened when it is done in a spirit of openness and trust. Church members have a basic right to know about the work done and the decisions made by entities within the church. Church leaders have a basic responsibility to honor that right by conducting their business with a spirit of openness and vulnerability to public scrutiny. Therefore, open meetings shall be the norm for all such entities.

2. It is the policy of the General Assembly; the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the entities and work groups related to them, that their meetings shall be open to all interested persons. A separate policy exists for governing non-business gatherings. Documents being considered at such meetings shall be available to interested persons at the meeting.

3. In certain circumstances, when the confidentiality of the subject matter is impeding the open work of the group, its meetings may be closed. These requirements apply:

a. Subjects dealt with must be limited to property negotiation, personnel, civil and criminal litigation, including cases under the Rules of Discipline, or security.

b. Closed meetings may be authorized only after serious consideration and by a majority vote of the members present. Such closure must be limited in time and scope to matters in 3(a) above.

c. In closed meetings, only voting members and other persons invited by the group to serve it are to be present.

d. The reason(s) for closing must be announced before closure and also must be recorded in the minutes.

e. The decisions reached shall be recorded in the minutes, and shall be made public as soon as possible following the end of the closed meeting.

4. Since staff groups have neither authority nor responsibility for establishing policy; their meetings are not subject to these provisions. This does not preclude them from opening their meetings.
5. The provisions of this policy shall apply to visitors and to representatives of both church and public media, including print, electronic and photographic journalists.

6. All the provisions of this policy are to be applied equitably to all persons and groups.

7. The Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly is responsible for resolving questions relating to the application and interpretation of the open meeting policy.

A separate policy exists to govern non-business gatherings. Refer to Appendix 4A, Media and Visitor Policy for Non-business Gatherings.

Note: The 218th General Assembly (2008) directed the entities subject to the PC(USA) Open Meeting Policy to post the dates, times, and locations of their open meetings on the PC(USA) calendar Web page within a reasonable time of making such plans.

Appendix 4A

Media and Visitor Policy for Non-Business Gatherings

Approved by the 212th General Assembly (2000)

Representatives of the media and visitors are welcome at non-business gatherings of groups structurally related to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Many non-business gatherings are intended to provide participants with the opportunity to openly examine personal and corporate issues of faith and life. Media representatives and visitors are asked to honor this atmosphere of openness and acceptance. If there is a business session within a non-business gathering, the open meeting policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall apply during that session.

The following policy pertains to non-business gatherings of groups structurally related to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Media representatives will register as such, including the name of the publication or media outlet for which they are acting as a media representative. Media representatives and visitors should wear name tags identifying themselves as such during all portions of the gathering.

2. Media representatives will not be required to pay registration fees. They will be responsible for their own accommodations, meals, and transportation. Visitors will register and be required to pay appropriate fees.

3. Media representatives are observers and may not speak or actively participate in any portion of the gathering unless invited.

4. All plenary sessions are open.

5. All non-plenary sessions are also open. Media representatives and visitors are asked to identify themselves as such at the beginning of non-plenary sessions. In small groups whose purpose is the sharing of personal issues of faith and life, the discussion may be closed to media representatives and visitors at the choice of the small group participants.

6. The provisions of this policy shall apply to visitors and representatives of both church and public media, including print, electronic, and photographic journalists.

7. All the provisions of this policy are to be applied equitably to all persons and groups.

8. The Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly is responsible for resolving questions relating to the application and interpretation of this policy.

Appendix 5

Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Awards Policy

(Approved by the General Assembly Mission Council, September 1999, Revised September, 2007)

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, at various times and places, may present awards to honor persons or entities/organizations for outstanding achievements in relationship to the goals of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Listed below are guidelines to be followed for determining award recipients:

A. Appropriate staff will (re)formulate written policies and procedures in the selection process for each award to be submitted for approval by the appropriate Mission Committee. Each award is to have a one-sheet explanation including criteria and process for determining the selection with periodic review and/or approval of changes (possibly included in covenants).

B. Each selection committee will submit proposed recipients for each award to the appropriate Mission Committee along with the names of those serving on the selection committee and the written rationale for the proposed selection(s). This should be done prior to informing the proposed recipient(s) of their selection. The appropriate Mission Committee reviews the proposed recipient(s) in light of the ongoing commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to be reformed and always reforming according to the Word of God and the Call of the Spirit, as well as to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Constitutional standards and policies. This should be done before the selection goes forward.

C. All nominees should be submitted to the appropriate Mission Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (or its successors) for its review. If the nominees cannot be named at a Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meeting, the nominees will be sent to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee for its action.

D. The selection committees will report the results of their consideration of “Awards as issues to ponder” to the appropriate Mission Committee (see Appendix 5A and this response will be included in the minutes of the appropriate Mission Committee.

E. In the event the selection committee’s nominee is not accepted by the appropriate Mission Committee, the selection committee may appeal that decision to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Appeals are limited to questions pertaining to compliance with award criteria.

Appendix 5A

From the Report of the Awards Task Group to the Executive Committee of the General Assembly Mission Council, September 22, 1999:

Awards as issues to ponder:

… The work Group proposes that the following five items need to be pondered thoughtfully by the groups awarding and administering awards “within the scope of the work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.” [See recommendation D.]

1. Why give awards? The answer seems to be simply, “to honor the person.” While this is part of an answer, the questions also asks for honesty regarding the motivation of the group giving the award. Is there a strong element of advocacy for a cause? The work group is convinced that we must remember that it is the Church of Jesus Christ which is involved in such activities.

2. Develop an appropriate basis for each award.
   a. Scripture, particularly the Gospels, warn us about the dangers of seeking honor (Matthew 13:57 and parallels). “Honor” is most frequently used relating to reverence toward the Triune God.
   b. In the Book of Confessions, the emphasis on honor to God is continued. Appropriate to our present concern are passages such as C-5.026, 5.258 (regarding government in the light of Romans 13), and C-7.237, 239, and .241, where honor for others is discussed.
   c. The Directory for Worship offers what we found to be perhaps the most helpful comments regarding this situation in W-4.4-7001:

   “Service given to the community beyond the particular mission of the church may be appropriately recognized as an expression of Christian discipleship with prayer and thanksgiving at a suitable time in an occasion of worship. Significant accomplishments in the lives of Christians or honors and other forms of recognition received by them may also occasions for such celebration with the community of faith.” [Note how this compares with W-4.1001, .2004, .3003, and .5002].

3. How much staff time, money, and energy go into awards? Our investigation suggested that the “costs” of awards tend to be hidden. Some awards are supported by dedicated funds for cash awards. Our concern is not with these, but primarily with the “costs” in staff time and energy. Most of the actual costs are considered “Office Expense”, and appear to be relatively minor.

4. When and where should awards be given? The giving of awards at a special ceremony was not part of the 211th General Assembly. There continue to be numerous breakfasts where awards are conferred. However, reflection on W-4.7001 suggests that the question of the appropriate venue for giving awards can be a fruitful enterprise. For example, when the Restorative Justice Award was given at a presbytery meeting, the person was honored as the value and importance of this aspect of mission were highlighted. The effect of this change of venue suggests the wisdom of careful reflection on the appropriate venue in the light of the purpose of the award as a recognition of commitment to mission.

5. Can awards serve as models and/or inspiration? We believe that the answer to this question is, “Yes,” when there has been careful review and preparation for the way in which each award is conferred, as well as where that is most appropriately done.

Appendix 6

ETHICS POLICIES

(Replaces Conflict of Interest Policy)

Ethics Policy for Elected and Appointed Members of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
Introduction

This Ethics Policy for Elected and Appointed Members of the General Assembly Mission Council (“GAMC”) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (“COGA”) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“Ethics Policy”) addresses business ethics and does not include the other ethical values and policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“PCUSA”). The Ethics Policy applies to all elected and appointed members of the GAMC and COGA and members of their committees, task forces and workgroups in matters relating to the performance of their duties and responsibilities for the GAMC/COGA. Hereinafter the term “elected member” will be used to collectively refer to those individuals listed in Footnote 1 below. The term “GAMC/COGA” collectively refers to those two ecclesial bodies, their elected members, their respective staff members, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a Corporation, and all subparts thereof.

All funds and property received and administered by the GAMC/COGA are entrusted to the organization by God through the faithful financial support of PCUSA members and friends. The highest degree of stewardship and fiduciary responsibility is expected of all elected members, including the receiving, reporting, and use of funds, property, and time. Elected members are responsible for complying with laws, regulations, and GAMC/COGA and PCUSA policies and procedures.

As an elected member, what does this Ethics Policy require of me?

The required standards of this Ethics Policy are set out in 1-6 immediately below. The forms and processes are set out in the five attachments.

Standards of Ethical Conduct

1. Duty of Loyalty and Care. The duty of loyalty and care as well as the obligation of good stewardship requires all elected members to act first in the best interests of the GAMC/COGA rather than in the elected member’s own interests or the interests of another entity or person. All elected members shall exercise reasonable efforts to inform themselves of the mission and ministry of the GAMC/COGA. All elected members shall act as a reasonable elected member would act under the same or similar circumstances. These responsibilities are set forth below.

2. Conflicts of Interest. All elected members shall avoid conflicts of interest, potential conflicts of interest, and situations that give even the appearance of a conflict of interest.

a. Definition. “Conflict of interest” means any situation in which the elected member may be influenced or appear to be influenced in decision-making or business dealings by any motive or desire for personal advantage other than the success and well-being of the GAMC/COGA. Personal advantage means a financial interest or some other personal interest, whether present or potential, whether direct or indirect. This standard applies to both actual and contemplated transactions. When in doubt, the elected member is to assume there might be a conflict and should raise the question pursuant to this Ethics Policy.

b. Employment Ineligibility. No GAMC elected member shall be eligible to become an employee of GAMC or otherwise render compensable services to the GAMC for the duration of their term. For purposes of this paragraph, resignation does not result in the premature end of term. For example, an elected person who resigns with one year left in his/her term continues to be prohibited from becoming an employee until the expiration of that remaining year. No COGA elected member shall be eligible to become an employee of COGA or otherwise render compensable services to COGA for the duration of their term. This prohibition does not apply to a member serving as an ex officio member of the GAMC or COGA. For purposes of this paragraph, resignation does not result in the premature end of term. Exceptions, however, may be made under the following circumstances if the GAMC Executive Committee or COGA Coordinating Committee (as appropriate) votes by 2/3 to allow the exception:

- To facilitate development of specified projects through limited contracts of less than 18 months in duration. The elected member may be compensated under the contract.
- To fill an officer or employee position on an interim or acting basis for two years or less. The elected member may be compensated for such service. The elected member must resign his/her elected position.

c. Disclosure Deadlines. All present and potential conflicts of interest issues must be disclosed in writing annually (See Attachment 1) and thereafter as they arise. If the conflict is known in advance of any meeting, business transaction, contract, or other activity at which issues may be discussed or on which the issues may have a bearing on the elected member’s approach, whether directly or indirectly, it shall be disclosed ahead of time and the elected member shall abstain from any participation in the discussion or decision. If the conflict is not known in advance, it shall be disclosed when the actual or potential conflict becomes apparent. All disclosures are to be made promptly in writing to the chair/moderator of the body and to the General Counsel. (See Attachment 2). See Attachment 5 for procedures to follow at meetings of the elected body or its committees, task forces and workgroups to document disclosure and action by disinterested members.

d. Potential Conflicts of Interest. All elected members are likewise to disclose promptly, in writing, matters and relationships that have the potential for giving rise to the appearance of a conflict in business dealings with the GAMC/OGA. Examples include, but are not limited to, financial interests, leadership roles, or board membership with vendors and other organizations doing business with the GAMC/COGA. GAMC/COGA business dealings with an elected member’s friends and family are particularly sensitive and are to be disclosed and carefully evaluated because of the potential for inferences of tangible or intangible personal advantage and the appearance of impropriety. All disclosures are to be made promptly in writing to the chair/moderator of the body and to the General Counsel. (See Attachment 2).
c. Gifts and Relationship Building. To avoid appearances of impropriety, any gifts, gratuities, special favors, and hospitality to an elected member shall not be accepted by any elected member from any person or organization that sells, delivers, or receives any goods, materials, or services to or from the GAMC/OGA. This prohibition includes those persons or organizations that desire to enter into such relationships with GAMC/OGA. There are four exceptions to this rule:

(1) Gifts, meals, outings, and relationship-building activities provided by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) churches, middle governing bodies, partner churches or related organizations in connection with GAMC/OGA business. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

(2) Gifts that primarily benefit the GAMC/OGA and not an individual elected member, such as gifts of complimentary rooms given to the GAMC/OGA by hotels, conventions, and conferences in relation to official GAMC/OGA business. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

(3) Occasional small gifts (less than $50.00 in value), such as flowers or foodstuffs) to an individual elected member. Where gifts are shared with other elected members or GAMC/OGA staff (e.g., foodstuffs set out for all to partake), then the gift is not deemed to be to an individual elected member. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.

(4) Luncheons, dinners, outings, and relationship-building activities in connection with GAMC/OGA business may be received. If an activity permitted under this section #4 results in a value of over $100 to the elected member, the elected member shall promptly report this in writing to the chair of the body and to the General Counsel. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount. The written report will include a description of the activity, the dollar value, the name of the person/organization providing it, and the business that person/organization does with GAMC/OGA. The General Counsel shall maintain a log that includes all of the written reports submitted under this section #4. This log will be available at all times to the GAMC Chair, the GAMC Executive Director, the COGA Moderator, the Stated Clerk and the Chair of the Audit Committee.

f. Process and Resolution. All conflict of interest disclosures, reports, or questions are to be made promptly and in writing to the chair of the body and to the General Counsel. The General Counsel will consult with the chair of the body and the GAMC Executive Director or the Stated Clerk, as appropriate. After consultation, the General Counsel will make a recommendation to the GAMC Executive Committee or the COGA Coordinating Committee, as appropriate. Those bodies provide the final decision on any elected member conflict of interest matters.

3. Confidentiality of GAMC/COGA Information. Elected members shall not disclose information about the GAMC/COGA that is not known outside of the GAMC/COGA or is not known by public means. Of course, it is expected that elected members will share certain GAMC/COGA information with other parts of the PCUSA, related entities and the public when asked to do so by the GAMC/COGA. If questions arise, the elected member should inquire of the chair of the body. If the chair/moderator of the body needs assistance, the General Counsel should be consulted by the chair/moderator.

4. Transactions, Reporting, and Document Retention. Each elected member has a duty to prepare, process, maintain, and report complete, accurate, and timely records pertaining to their role, including, but not limited to, expense reports. This also includes safeguarding all personal, financial, informational, and other GAMC/COGA assets and records. Elected members shall comply with the Records Retention Schedule of the Office of the General Assembly’s Department of History and related schedules as part of the normal course of business and use the schedules in a consistent and accountable manner for both records retention and destruction purposes. See www.history.pcusa.org/national/schedules.html. See also the Electronic Records Policy for GAMC and OGA. Any document relevant to actual or anticipated internal investigations, legal proceedings or governmental investigations (civil or criminal) must not be destroyed and must be preserved in a manner that would ease accessibility and retrievability of the document. In addition, elected members shall not direct or participate in establishment or maintenance of undisclosed or unrecorded funds or assets, nor shall the elected member direct the making of any artificial or false entries in the financial or other records of the GAMC/COGA.

5. Duty to Disclose/Whistleblower Policy. Elected members have a duty to report violations of this Ethics Policy, whether the violation is by themselves or by another. This includes, but is not limited to, financial, accounting, or auditing irregularities. See Attachment 2 for Self-reports. See Attachment 3 for Whistleblower Reports concerning others. See Attachment 4 for Procedures for processing a Whistleblower Report. Likewise, concerns about the appearance or the possibility of violations should be reported. Care must always be taken to be factual and objective. Violations shall be reported promptly in writing to the General Counsel, and may be reported anonymously. Anonymous whistleblower reports can also be made by calling the hotline at (888) 236-6877 (operative May 2, 2007). An anonymous whistleblower report must include sufficient corroborating evidence to justify initiating an investigation. (If the alleged violation involves the General Counsel or one of his staff members, it should be reported to the Internal Auditor.)

(a) No Retaliation. There shall be no retaliation within GAMC/COGA for good faith complaints, reports, participation in an investigation or for providing truthful information relating to an alleged violation of this Ethics Policy. In addition, there will be no retaliation where an elected member makes a good faith report of the commission or possible commission of any criminal offense to a law enforcement officer. Elected members are protected even if the allegations are mistaken or unsubstantiated, as long as the elected member reasonably believes the reported conduct constitutes a violation of the Ethics Policy. One who makes a claim or report under this Whistleblower Policy in bad faith, or knows or has reason to know that such claim or report is false or materially inaccurate may be subject to disciplinary sanctions by the governing body with jurisdiction over the elected member.
Confidentiality of Investigation. Reports under this Whistleblower Policy will be treated confidentially with disclosures made on a need-to-know basis only to those directly involved in the investigation of the reported concern. To the extent possible within limitations of the law, policy and the need to conduct a competent investigation, confidentiality will be maintained.

6. Violations. Violation or noncompliance with this policy may result in discipline by the council with jurisdiction over the elected member.

7. Amendments. The Ethics Policy may be amended from time to time. In consultation with the General Counsel, the GAMC Executive Director and the Stated Clerk (as appropriate) are authorized to make reasonable and necessary changes to this Ethics Policy. Substantive changes must be reported back to the elected body approving this Ethics Policy. Editorial changes need not be reported back.

8. Designees. Where this Ethics Policy assigns a duty to a particular officer or staff position, that officer or staff position may use a designee to complete the duties.

9. No Waiver by GAMC/COGA. Nothing in this Ethics Policy shall be construed to waive any claim, assertion or defense of the GAMC/COGA to exemption or exclusion from applicability of a statute and/or regulation or lack of jurisdiction of a civil court or governmental agency.

10. Trainings. Trainings to familiarize the elected members with this Ethics Policy and its related forms and procedures will be conducted for GAMC/COGA elected members by the Legal Services Office as frequently as deemed necessary by the GAMC Chair and COGA Moderator, as appropriate.

Endnotes for Appendix 6
1. The term "elected members" collectively means elected and appointed members and members of their committees, task forces and workgroups.
2. For other policies, see the Standards of Ethical Conduct approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
3. Federal and state constitutional religious free exercise provisions, as well as laws and ordinances, exempt religious organizations from some laws. An elected member should consult with the General Counsel if such questions arise.
4. Personal investments with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., or employee benefits provided by the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are not considered a conflict of interest.
5. “Family” includes the elected member's spouse, parents, siblings, spouses of siblings, children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, the spouses of children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, any other blood relative, and individuals who live in the elected member's home.

ATTACHMENT 4

Procedures for processing a Whistleblower Report of possible Ethics Policy violation in regards to another elected member, an employee, or an organization

A. All reports under the Whistleblower Policy (See the Ethics Policy) shall be submitted in writing promptly to the General Counsel. Anonymous whistleblower reports may be made by calling the hotline at (888) 236-6877. An anonymous whistleblower report must include sufficient corroborating evidence to justify initiating an investigation. If the alleged violation involves the General Counsel or one of his staff members, it should be reported to the Internal Auditor. The General Counsel will decide if the reported activity, if confirmed, would be an Ethics Policy violation, a possible violation of a policy or procedure not covered by this Ethics Policy, or a matter to be processed through another avenue, typically supervisor review with a report to the General Counsel. If the General Counsel decide the report will not be processed under this Ethics Policy, the General Counsel will respond to the accuser unless the report was filed anonymously. The General Counsel shall keep a log of all reports received under the Whistleblower Policy. Whether or not an investigation was done, the log will include the resolution of all reports. The log will be available at all times to the Chair of GAMC, the Moderator of COGA, and the Chair of the Audit Committee. If the person reporting is simply confused about an issue and how it applies, then the General Counsel will ensure clarification is provided by the chair of the body or the General Counsel. If the chair of the body provides a written response to the elected member, a copy of the response will be provided to the General Counsel.

B. All other reports shall be initially reviewed by a three-person committee (Investigative Committee) comprised of the General Counsel, the Internal Auditor and a third person appointed by the GAMC Chair or COGA Moderator (as appropriate). The Investigative Committee will first determine whether or not an investigation is warranted. If it is not, the Investigative Committee shall so report. If an investigation is warranted, the Investigative Committee shall proceed as set forth below.

C. The following processes shall apply to an investigation conducted by the Investigative Committee:

1. If the report alleges a violation by a GAMC elected member, then the GAMC Chair and the GAMC Executive Director shall be notified an investigation has commenced. If the report alleges a violation by a COGA elected member, then the COGA Chair and the Stated Clerk shall be notified an investigation has commenced.

2. If the report alleges a violation by the GAMC Chair, then the vice-chair and the GAMC Executive Director shall be notified an investigation has commenced. If the report alleges a violation by the COGA Moderator, then the vice-chair and the Stated Clerk shall be notified an investigation has commenced.

3. The Investigative Committee shall be allowed to retain the services of experts it may need to conduct a reasonably thorough investigation.

4. The Investigative Committee may recommend administrative leave for any involved employees while the investigation is in process.

5. The Investigative Committee will promptly conduct its work. The typical investigation will include the following steps:

   a. Interview all parties involved with relevant knowledge, including but not limited to the accuser and the accused (if possible).

   b. Determine if there is a potential for risk to persons or property. If there is a potential risk, take reasonable measures as appropriate to protect those persons and property.

   Complete a written report of the findings and recommendations, (including discipline of the elected member). The Investigative Committee will provide a copy of its report (including all relevant documents) to the Audit Committee. At the same time the report is submitted to the Audit Committee, copies will be provided to the accused and the accuser. The chair/moderator of the body and the GAMC Executive Director or Stated Clerk (as appropriate) will also receive a copy. Generally, the accused and the accuser will have seven business days to submit written comments to the Audit Committee in response to the Investigative Committee’s written report. The Chair of the Audit Committee may extend this period if such an extension is reasonably necessary.

6. All elected members and employees are required to fully cooperate with these investigations, and shall not be retaliated against by supervisors or anyone for cooperating and participating in the investigation.

7. The Audit Committee shall consider all the submissions promptly and reach a conclusion. While the Audit Committee does not have the authority to discipline elected members of GAMC/COGA, its decision shall include any recommendations in that regard. GAMC or COGA, as appropriate, shall give great weight to the decision of the Audit Committee. The Audit Committee shall make a full report of the matter to the GAMC Executive Committee and the Executive Director or the COGA Coordinating Committee and the Stated Clerk (as appropriate). Thereafter, the GAMC Executive Committee or the COGA Coordinating Committee (as appropriate) will affirm, modify, or reverse the decision of the Audit Committee. In reaching its decision, the GAMC Executive Committee or the COGA Coordinating Committee (as appropriate) may also hear from any of the following as it deems fit: the accused, the accuser, the Investigative Committee, and others it deems relevant.

8. GAMC/COGA will ensure that whistleblower reports submitted under this Ethics Policy are dealt with impartially and confidentially. To that end, information will only be shared on a need-to-know basis so as to fulfill the process. Any elected member who violates the confidentiality of this process shall be subject to disciplinary action by the body with jurisdiction over the elected member.

9. GAMC/COGA prohibit retaliation, including but not limited to making any threatening communication by verbal, written, or electronic means, against anyone who reports in good faith or provides any information concerning violations of the Ethics Policy or applicable state or federal laws or who provides truthful information relating to the commission or possible commission of any criminal offense to a law enforcement officer. GAMC/COGA will not discipline any elected member where the elected member in good faith (or any person acting pursuant to the request of the elected member) reports, discloses, testifies, or otherwise informs GAMC/COGA, pursuant to this Ethics Policy, of a violation by an elected member, employee, or organization. Any elected member found engaging in retaliation will be subject to discipline by the body with jurisdiction over the elected member.

Meeting Procedure

Actions taken by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and COGA are recorded in minutes. If an employee, officer or elected member has a conflict of interest with regard to a proposed transaction under consideration at the meeting, that person shall leave the meeting and henceforth refrain from discussing or voting on the matter. The person with the conflict of interest may, however, respond to questions posed by an elected member. The minutes must reflect:

1. the date of the meeting;
2. the names of employees, officers and/or elected members with conflicts of interest regarding the proposed transaction;
3. the names of those who left the meeting;
4. the names of those members who voted on the matter;
5. description of data obtained and relied upon by the GAMC or COGA and how the data was obtained;
6. if the transaction is approved between Presbyterian Mission Agency Board /COGA and the person with a conflict of interest, the basis for the approval (include any difference in comparability data and value of transaction to Presbyterian Mission Agency Board /COGA and how that affected the approval); and
7. terms of the transaction as approved.

Appendix 7
Procedures to Follow When a Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director or Deputy Executive Director Vacancy Occurs

I. Executive Director, Presbyterian Mission Agency

When an Executive Director announces the intention to retire, resign, not be available for another term, or there is an unexpected vacancy, the following process shall be followed:

A. Resignation Procedures
   1. The chair of the council confers with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee regarding next steps.
   2. The decision is announced on a schedule agreed to by the Executive Director and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee.
   3. The Executive Committee, and other such persons as may be deemed necessary, shall conduct an exit interview with the Executive Director.

B. Unexpected Vacancy

The chair of the council contacts the Executive Committee and together they will take all steps deemed necessary in regard to temporary leadership of the [Presbyterian Mission Agency. These actions shall be binding until the next meeting of Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

C. Interim Procedures

1. The chair of the Board will meet with the staff of the Office of the Executive Director and the Executive Leadership Team to explain procedures, hear concerns, answer questions, and seek their suggestions.
2. The Executive Committee in consultation with appropriate persons, determines the need for an Interim Executive Director, begins the selection process if it is determined that an Interim Executive Director is needed, and recommends an Interim Executive Director to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee for appointment. An Interim Executive Director cannot be called to be the next Executive Director unless a full inclusive search was conducted for the interim.

D. Search Procedures

1. A search committee composed of seven members of the Board shall be elected by the council. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Nominating Committee shall nominate the membership of the committee, including a chair, representative of the diversity of the council.

2. In order for the General Assembly Committee on Representation to carry out its assigned functions, G-3.0103, a representative of the committee may participate in meetings of special committees elected by the General Assembly or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to select nominees for Executive Director during discussions of the position description, advertising, and interview procedures. Discussions of the qualifications of individual candidates and interviews of candidates shall be closed to members of the Committee on Representation unless invited as provided in section 3.(a & c) of the Open Meeting Policy (refer to Appendix 11).

3. When the candidate for Executive Director is being nominated to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for election, the Board shall be provided with the following:
   a. a brief biographical sketch;
   b. a personal statement of faith;
   c. reason(s) candidate is deemed to be suitable for the position;
   d. the candidate’s goals for the term of office.

4. The search, nomination, election, and confirmation proceeds as per the Organization for Mission: “the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency shall be elected by the Board, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly.” The search, nomination, election, and confirmation shall be guided by the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action. Upon election, the Executive Director serves with the full authority of the office until confirmed by the next General Assembly. (Organization for Mission, Section V.G.)

II. Deputy Executive Directors

A. Deputy Executive Directors are selected and hired by the Executive Director, using a search committee that includes elected members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and subject to a confirmation vote by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Deputy Executive Directors do not have a term.

B. When the Deputy Executive Director is being submitted to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for confirmation, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be provided with the following:
   • a brief biographical sketch;
   • a personal statement of faith;
   • reason(s) the individual is deemed to be suitable for the position;

C. If a vacancy in a Deputy Executive Director position occurs and the Executive Director desires to fill the position on an interim basis, the position will be filled subject to a confirmation vote by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee. An interim Deputy Executive Director cannot be hired to be the next Deputy Executive Director unless a full, inclusive search was conducted for the interim.

Appendix 8

Comprehensive Performance Review Processes for the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency

I. Introduction

The purpose of all performance reviews described in these processes is to discuss, share, and assess goals, performance, successes, and challenges related to the work of the Executive Director (“ED”). The Executive Committee will conduct the annual reviews of the ED described in these Processes during any four-year term of each ED. The Executive Committee may conduct these performance reviews or may appoint a subcommittee of its members. In either instance, the review shall be led in that process by the vice-chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. For purposes of these Processes, “EC” means either the Executive Committee or a subcommittee of the EC members, unless specified otherwise. Suggested deadlines for the Processes described below are attached in the Guidelines at Attachment A.

II. First and Third-Year Performance Reviews

A. Purpose of the Reviews

1. The purpose of a first-year performance review is to provide support for the newly elected or newly re-appointed ED, to correct any perceived missteps, to identify potential problems, to celebrate accomplishments, to listen to and identify potential issues, and to set goals for the second year of the term.
2. The purpose of the third-year performance review is to discuss and share successes and challenges, goals and performance related to the work of the ED. A particular goal of the third-year review is to evaluate the ED’s eligibility and willingness to serve for an additional four-year term.

B. These performance reviews shall be conducted as follows:

1. The ED will provide to the EC a self-evaluation at least forty-five (45) days prior to the date set for the EC to meet with the ED to discuss his/her annual evaluation.

2. In preparing the annual evaluation, the Executive Committee (EC) acting as the Personnel Committee will solicit comments and input from GAMC elected members, in addition to selected GAMC staff, Mid council executives and clerks, and chief administrative officers of other GA agencies and corporations. All input that is received prior to the announced deadline will be considered.

3. A confidential written summary of the evaluation with goals and objectives shall be prepared by the vice-chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, who will meet with the ED to discuss it. Both the vice-chair and the ED will sign the summary and it will be placed in the ED’s personnel file.

4. A summary of the evaluation shall be presented to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in closed session during the Board’s next regular meeting.

III. Second-Year and Fourth-Year Performance Reviews

A. Purpose of the Reviews

1. The purpose of the second-year performance review is to build on the previous year’s experience, to provide constructive support, to strengthen partnerships and to plan for the next two (2) years. This mid-term review provides an opportunity for selected individuals to comment on performance strengths and weaknesses, progress made in meeting goals, and any desirable mid-course corrections.

2. The purpose of the fourth-year review is to evaluate the performance of the entire four-year term and to prepare for the next term.

B. The performance review shall be conducted as follows:

1. The EC shall develop review instruments which shall contain questions and areas of inquiry targeted to each specific group identified in paragraph 2, below. The instruments shall be available to the ED and the EC three (3) months prior to the review date and before they are sent to those who are selected to respond to them. The EC may select a subcommittee chaired by the vice-chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to create the review instruments even if the full EC will conduct the annual review of the ED.

2. Participants in the review process shall include all Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and a random selection of persons in the following categories:
   a. Presbyterian Mission Agency staff (both exempt and nonexempt);
   b. Mid Council executives and clerks; and
   c. The chief administrative officers of the other General Assembly agencies and corporation.

3. Comments in response to the review instruments shall be shared in summary with the ED during the annual review meeting; however, the names of the persons making comments shall be held in confidence by the EC.

4. The ED shall submit to the EC a written self-evaluation at least forty-five (45) days prior to the EC’s final review meeting with the ED, noting the following:
   a. For the second-year review the self-evaluation shall include goals and objectives for the remaining two (2) years of the term.
   b. For the fourth-year review the evaluation shall include goals and objectives for the next four-year term, if appropriate and warranted.

5. The results of the second-year review shall be shared by the EC in a face-to-face interview with the ED at or before the summer EC retreat. A summary of the review shall be presented to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in closed session at the Board’s next regular meeting.

6. The results of the fourth-year review shall be shared by the EC in a face-to-face interview with the ED at or before the spring Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meeting. A summary of the review shall be presented to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board in closed session at the spring Board meeting. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board will vote whether or not to elect the ED to an additional four-year term and, if it votes in favor election, the Board will send the action forward to the General Assembly by or before the forty-five (45) day General Assembly Standing Rule deadline.
7. A confidential written summary of the review with goals and objectives shall be prepared by the vice-chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. Both the vice-chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the ED will sign the summary and it will be placed in the ED’s personnel file.

IV. Exit Interview

When an Executive Director leaves the position, the EC will conduct an exit interview. (Appendix 7)

Attachment A

The Executive Director’s Annual Review Process begins the year following the General Assembly and continues yearly through the four-year term. For example, following the 219th General Assembly (2010), the first annual review would take place in July 2011 at the Executive Committee Retreat; second year (or mid-term) review – July 2012; third year review – July 2013; and fourth year (or end-of-term) review – in time for the Spring meeting of the GAMC (May 2014).

Guidelines for Joint Meetings of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee

Scheduling and Format

1. The joint meeting shall be comprised of the members of the full Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Executive Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

2. The responsibility to schedule the date and prepare the agenda will be determined together by the COGA moderator, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board chair, the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Stated Clerk. They also shall determine which staff will be present.

3. The moderator of COGA and the chair of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board will co-moderate the meeting. The moderator of COGA will ensure that minutes are taken and distributed in a timely manner. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board shall be responsible for logistical details.

4. The meeting shall be held annually.

5. The need for additional meetings shall be determined and called as agreed upon by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board chair and the COGA moderator.
6. The joint meetings primarily should be a time of dialogue about mutual concerns and of input to the deliberative process.

7. Each meeting should begin with a time of “getting to know you” and community building; at the least, each meeting should include some time in a less formal setting, such as where people are NOT seated at tables.

Topics for Discussion

1. Emerging issues in the church and General Assembly
2. Significant work for the coming twelve months
3. Reflection and evaluation of the last General Assembly and early planning or brainstorming for the next General Assembly
4. Discussion of future themes for General Assembly
5. Progress reports and input on the work of any joint work groups

Approval

Once the guidelines have been approved by both the executive committees (at separate meetings), they shall be in effect until modified or rescinded. These guidelines shall be reported to the full GAMC and [ ] OGA and shall be placed in their respective manuals.

APPROVED COGA EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE 4 JAN. 1995 • PRESBYTERIAN MISSION AGENCY BOARD EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE 6 JANUARY 1995

Revised: September 2011

Appendix 10

General Assembly Per Capita Apportionment

Description of Per Capita

In order to give meaning to the interdependent nature of Presbyterian polity’, per capita is the responsible way of sharing the costs that equitably belong to the whole Presbyterian Church community expressing the essential unity of the church. The payment of per capita apportionment can be seen as a sign of healthy relationships within the church, giving tangible witness to the unity and wholeness promised to us in Jesus Christ.

The General Assembly per capita apportionment can be documented historically in the Presbyterian Church since the mid-1800s when a plan of mileage was adopted by the General Assembly in order to defray the expenses of commissioners attending meetings of the General Assembly. Over the ensuing years, per capita has been defined in various documents and reports as being used to fund ecclesiastical and administrative functions. The costs of these functions are appropriately shared by the whole church.

The chronology of per capita development in the twentieth century shows that General Assemblies took action to expand the spectrum of functions that the General Assembly per capita finances. Beginning in the early 1920s, the General Assembly voted to enlarge the office of the General Assembly to include various program departments that served the whole church. In the process, the General Assembly agreed to finance related administrative expenses through the General Assembly per capita apportionment. The planning, coordination, and review of mission were included in the former United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America in 1973, and this has been assembly policy for the reunited church since 1983.

Definition

Per capita is an opportunity for all communicant members of the Presbyterian Church through the governing bodies to participate equally, responsibly, and interdependently by sharing the cost of coordination and evaluation of mission as well as the cost of performing ecclesiastical, legislative, and judicial functions that identify a Reformed church, while at the same time strengthening the sense of community among all Presbyterians.

Procedures for Per Capita Budget

1. General Assembly Per Capita Budget
   a. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board have joint responsibility for submitting to the General Assembly a budget to be supported by per capita. They also will submit an analysis of income supporting the budget and will recommend a per capita rate. The analysis will include anticipated receipts from per capita, an itemized estimate of all revenues anticipated from other sources, and the type and amount of funds on hand.
   b. A Joint Budget Table will be convened on the call of either COGA or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to make recommendations on unresolved matters.

2. Provision for a Joint Budget Table
   a. The Joint Budget Table, consisting of equal representation from the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), will consider unresolved matters related to the per capita budgets and will recommend resolution to their respective bodies.
   b. When COGA and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board approve the budget and the per capita rate as recommended by the Joint Budget Table, COGA and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board will submit jointly the budget and apportionment rate to the General Assembly. If agreement is not reached on particular issues, the report to the General Assembly will articulate the respective position of the two bodies.
   c. When necessary, the Joint Budget Table may recommend revisions to the total approved per capita budget. Revisions must be approved by both bodies.
   d. Any revisions increasing the total budget funded by the per capita will be recommended by the Joint Budget Table to COGA and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for approval. This increase cannot exceed three (3) percent of the total budget.

Appendix 11

I. Purpose of this Policy
   The purpose of this policy is to provide for consistency among the manuals of the committees accountable to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and consistency of all manual of operations with the current Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Manual of Operations, the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and any other pertinent documents.

II. Policy and Procedures
   A. Individual Presbyterian Mission Agency Board members may submit proposed changes to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Manual of Operations in writing to the Executive Committee’s Procedures Subcommittee chair a minimum of one (1) month prior to a Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meeting.
   B. The Committee of the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) shall submit its substantial* proposed changes to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Manual of Operations through its own customary process.
   C. The Procedures Subcommittee shall respond to submissions a minimum of two (2) weeks prior to a Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meeting, and may recommend alterations to be made to the proposed changes to ensure consistency with existing Presbyterian Mission Agency Board documents.
   D. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), or the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), which are accountable to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, shall submit substantial* proposed changes to its manual of operations to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, through the Procedures Subcommittee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee, following customary procedures, for adoption or rejection.

III. Approval Process
   The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board may change those appendices to the Manual of Operations that are within its purview following a first reading, which may be electronic, [] [followed by] adoption at a subsequent plenary session. First reading and action may take place during the same session of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Executive Committee shall submit a written report of changes to the appendices to the next General Assembly.

Changes to the Manual of Operations, Sections I through VI, and appendix 4 require the approval of the General Assembly. Changes to Appendices 6, 9 and 10 require the approval of both the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and COGA.

* “Substantial” changes are defined as non-editorial changes that alter the organization or functioning of the named entity.

Gift Acceptance Policy
Presbyterian Mission Agency
Approved by Executive Leadership Team 1/9/2012

I. Mission of Organization – The Presbyterian Mission Agency is the body of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) which is responsible to lead and coordinate the total mission program of the General Assembly. The Presbyterian Mission Agency cultivates, attracts, receives and disburses funds from donors to serve Christ’s mission. Presbyterian Mission Agency core values are collaboration, accountability, responsiveness, and excellence. The Presbyterian Mission Agency operates through the General Assembly’s principal corporation, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (“PC(USA)”).

II. Purpose of Policy – The purpose of this gift acceptance policy (“Policy”) is to define and communicate with donors the types of gifts that the GAMC is able to accept and administer and to be transparent with donors regarding the uses of their gifts.

III. Donor’s use of legal counsel – PC(USA) does not provide personal legal, financial or other professional advice to donors or prospective donors (collectively referred to as “Donors”). Donors are strongly encouraged to seek the assistance of their own professional advisors in matters related to their gifts and the resulting tax and estate planning consequences.

IV. PC(USA) use of legal counsel – PC(USA) seeks the advice of outside legal counsel as its Office of Legal Services deems appropriate on matters relating to acceptance of gifts.

V. Gift Restrictions – Your gift will be used for the purpose presented by the Presbyterian Mission Agency unless the project becomes over-subscribed, impracticable, impossible, illegal or inappropriate to the mission of the Presbyterian Mission Agency. In those cases, your donation will be used to support a similar ministry or held to support the same ministry in a future year. This is done so that your donation will support ministry where it is needed most and your gift will have the biggest impact.

VI. Types and forms of gifts that the organization will accept – The GAMC is thankful for the many ways that donors give to support the work of Jesus Christ in this broken world.

Acceptable gifts include:

- Cash (Cash, Checks, Wire Transfers, and Credit Cards)
- Marketable Securities: Marketable securities will be sold as soon as possible after acceptance. The PC(USA) can receive securities, including mutual fund shares (1) in certificate form, (2) via direct transfer from brokerage accounts, or (3) from direct purchase stock plans.

In some circumstances, and only with pre-approval, the PC(USA) may also accept non-traditional assets. These assets can only be accepted if there is an expectation that they can be converted into cash within a reasonable amount of time. Gifts with inappropriate restrictions—those which are not in the best interest of the PC(USA)—shall not be accepted.

Gifts of non-traditional assets may be facilitated through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation. Acceptable non-traditional assets might include:

- Tangible Property (only if there is no storage or insurance cost and the property is easily liquidated)
- Real Estate (a review will be made of marketability, environmental risks and any limitations or encumbrances on the title. The costs associated with the conveyance and delivery of the gift, including, but not limited to recording fees, inspection fees, current survey, title insurance and/or an attorney’s title opinion, will be paid by the Donor or taken from the net proceeds of the sale.)
- Patents or Royalties All gifts must fall within ethical guidelines of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and meet all applicable local, state and federal laws and regulations.

VII. Reporting Requirements – Internally, individual program areas and partner agencies will receive a monthly report of receipts in order to recognize and thank Donor activity. Additional internal reports for goal-setting and management purposes will also be produced.

Externally, each Donor will receive an Internal Revenue Service compliant receipt acknowledging their gift. PC(USA) will comply with applicable federal, state, and local law with regard to reporting gifts.

In addition to periodic programmatic reports and the Annual Report, Donors can request detailed information on programmatic emphases supported by their gift.

VIII. Adherence to ethical standards – Presbyterian Mission Agency adheres to the Code of Ethics (http://www.afpnet.org/files/ContentDocuments/CodeofEthics.pdf) and Donor Bill of Rights.
IX. Gift Acceptance Committee – The Executive Leadership Team (“ELT”) of the Presbyterian Mission Agency shall serve as the Gift Acceptance Committee (“Committee”) for purposes related to this Policy. As such the Committee has the authority to handle inquiries, negotiate with donors, assemble documentation, and execute agreements on behalf of PC(USA). Such activities must follow approved procedures, and legal counsel must advise on exceptions to established practice. If these prerequisites are fulfilled, no further review or approval of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is required. The Committee may delegate any and all aspects of the Donor inquiry and agreement process to Presbyterian Mission Agency staff. The Committee shall review any and all proposed gifts which constitute an exception to the standards outlined in this Policy as well as all proposed gifts of non-traditional assets. The Committee shall also make recommendations to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board on gift acceptance issues when appropriate.

X. Annual review – This Policy will be reviewed annually by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Procedures Sub-committee, upon collecting feedback from Presbyterian Mission Agency Staff. Changes will be submitted to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for approval, through the Board’s Executive Committee.

GLOSSARY

Advisory Committee—A committee related to an entity or agency of the General Assembly that is formed for the purpose of providing advice, recommendations, information, or counsel to its parent body.

Advisory Member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board—Advisory members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board have voice, but not vote during the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board plenary. They are assigned to a mission committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and have both voice and vote in committee.

Advocacy Committee—A committee related to an entity or agency of the General Assembly that is formed for the purpose of providing and support for a stated cause, constituency, policy, or defined interest through recommendations, advice, counsel, and efforts that endorse, define, or encourage. The committee reports regularly to its parent body and constituency.

Agency—An organization, office, operation, or institution that performs or provides a service for the church or one or more of its governing bodies.

At-large Members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board’s Stewardship Committee and Audit Committee—Each of these committees have at-large members of the committee who are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee from the church-at-large for the purpose of providing appropriate expertise to the committee. They are elected to the committee by the General Assembly for a two-year term, with eligibility for two additional terms. While not members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, they are granted the privilege of the floor during the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board plenary on matters related to their particular expertise.

Committee—A group of persons, elected or appointed, with a specified responsibility.

Committee of Counsel—A committee proscribed by the Book of Order (see D-6.0302) which shall be designated by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, an entity of the General Assembly, or a council when it becomes either a complainant or a respondent to a remedial action in front of a Permanent Judicial Commission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). A Committee of Counsel shall consist of no more than three persons and shall represent that complainant or respondent in the case until final decision is reached in the highest council to which the case is appealed.

Corresponding Members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board—Corresponding members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board attend the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meetings at the expense of the agency they represent. They have voice but not vote in the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board plenary sessions and in committee. While not assigned to a committee, they may attend any committee meeting that is conducting business of interest to them.

Deliverance—The ecclesial action adopted by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assembly to create a corporation. A Deliverance is subordinate only to the PCUSA Constitution. Articles of incorporation and bylaws are the civil law documents related to a Deliverance.

Entity—An organized body within the structure of the church that is constituted for a specific purpose, function, or responsibility and that possesses an organizational structure and approved procedures for operation. These include a governing body, council, board, Ministries Division, committee, or commission.

General Assembly—The highest and most inclusive council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), representing the unity of the synod, presbyteries, sessions, and congregations. It is composed of equal numbers of elders and ministers elected from each presbytery in prescribed proportions, has elected officers, and convenes in a stated meeting at least biennially. Its structure and responsibilities are set forth in the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Council—A systematic, ordered, and representative gathering of presbyters in one of four levels in the structure and organization of the church that is graduated in authority and inclusiveness and that has specific rights, controls, and powers over either one or many churches. The four councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are the session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly.

Joint Budget Table—The Joint Budget Table is a decision-making body comprising an equal number from the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and COGA. This body is responsible for deliberating unresolved matters related to the per capita budgets and recommending resolution to their respective bodies. Meetings may be called by either COGA or the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.
Liaison—A person charged with the responsibility for maintaining communication, connection, relations, and linkage between two or more committees, other defined groups, institutions, or offices to promote understanding and ensure cooperation and concerted action.

Ministries—Ordering of Presbyterian Mission Agency Board staff responsible for the development, implementation and maintenance of particular mission ministries resulting from the goals and objectives of the current Mission Work Plan.

Mission Committee—Ordering of Presbyterian Mission Agency Board elected members for the development and implementation of the goals, objectives, and action plans of the current Mission Work Plan.

Monitoring—One of several processes used by the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in order to observe trends and issues and to gather data for the assessment, analysis, and evaluation of policies and issues prior to advising or advocating.

Observer—A delegate to a committee, other defined group, or office who observes for and reports to its parent body, but who does not participate officially in the activities or actions being observed.

Subcommittee—A group of people organized to accomplish specific ongoing work which reports regularly to a particular committee and is accountable to that committee.

Task Force—Another name for a Work Group.

Work Group—A group of persons elected or appointed to do a specific task in a designated time period.

Comparative Analysis and Findings of a survey conducted for the Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Group of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

Winter 2012

Introduction

Beginning in the fall of 2011, Research Services worked with the Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Group of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to conduct two surveys among church constituencies to learn more about leadership and education programs and workshops offered in the denomination for Hispanics/Latinos/as. This Leadership Group was created by action of the 219th General Assembly upon a recommendation from the Committee on Theological Education.

A preliminary survey was conducted in the fall of 2011 among a small number of Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterian leaders to provide information that would guide the development of the current survey, administered in January 2012 among four PC(USA) constituencies:

1. Hispanic/Latino/a leaders, including teaching elders and commissioned lay pastors, identified by the Leadership Group (hereafter referred to as “Hispanic leaders”).
2. Mid-council executives.
3. Presidents and academic deans at PC(USA)-affiliated seminaries (hereafter referred to as “seminary leaders”).
4. Chairs of the boards and chief executives of the six PC(USA) agencies, as well as selected senior staff in the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly (hereafter referred to as “agency leaders”).

More details on the sampling and methodology are found in the “Research Overview” section on p. 12. The narrative portion of this report is not a complete summary of results, but instead presents selected findings from the survey and other analyses that might be of particular interest or importance. An appendix follows with tables showing the percentage responses to each question on the survey.

Summary

Strategy for Ministry with Hispanic/Latino Constituencies. This strategy, approved in 2003 by the General Assembly, is not widely familiar to respondents, even among Hispanic leaders. Sizable minorities in every constituency indicate a complete lack of awareness of the strategy, and most of the rest report that they are “not too familiar” with it. Furthermore, more of those who have some degree of familiarity with the strategy describe its implementation as “fair” or “poor” than “excellent” or “good.”

Several factors are identified by majorities or near-majorities as helping or hindering implementation of the strategy in their ministry context. Helping factors include: commitment of financial resources; strong leadership; cultural and linguistic proficiency; and support of key groups. Hindering factors include: lack of financial resources; lack of leadership; cultural and linguistic barriers; and lack of support from mid-council staff.

Education and Leadership Programs/Workshops. Majorities of Hispanic and seminary leaders but many fewer mid-council executives and agency leaders have attended one or more education or leadership programs or workshops intentionally designed for Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterians. Most of these individuals had attended at least two such programs, with the most recent one typically taking place in the past three years. Where that most recent program took place varied by constituency and sponsor, but in general more were located in the South, the West, and Puerto Rico, and fewer in the Northeast and Midwest. The focus of the program was often Christian education, leadership development, evangelism, or cultural awareness and diversity, and most programs included among their attendees pastors, other teaching elders, commissioned lay pastors, ruling elders, seminary students, and mid-council leaders. Large majorities report that the most recent program or workshop they attended was bilingual, at least in part, and the content was helpful for their ministry.

Future Workshops and Programs. Majorities believe that future programs and workshops for Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterians should be bilingual, though there is less consensus on what entity would be the most appropriate sponsor. Opinions of respondents are largely split among presbyteries, synods, and national entities, however, indicating that even if there isn’t agreement on which specific council would be best, at least there is a broad sense that church councils are the most appropriate sponsors. Of 14 possible topics for future programs and workshops, large majorities of Hispanic leaders view every one as helpful. Other constituencies are more divided. Combined, responses suggest that the most helpful to the broadest set of respondents would be programs on leadership development; cultural awareness and diversity; community service, social work or action; and evangelism.

Note: Fewer than ten seminary leaders and agency leaders responded to most questions. Consequently, the results for these two constituencies should be viewed cautiously.¹

¹ With so few cases, the effect of any one response on the overall outcome is large. For example, when there are eight respondents, each one represents 12.5% of the total. So a small error—such as a respondent accidentally checking “fair”
Results

Strategy for Hispanic/Latino/a Ministry

In 2003, the 215th General Assembly approved a “Strategy for Ministry with Hispanic/Latino Constituencies.” Asked their familiarity with this strategy, a third of Hispanic leaders (32%), two in ten mid-council executives (20%) and agency leaders (18%), and 8% of seminary leaders responded “very familiar” or “familiar.” Similar or greater numbers responded “not at all familiar” (28%, 38%, 18%, and 42%, respectively). The most frequent response in all four constituencies is “not too familiar” (40%, 42%, 64%, and 50%). Only those expressing some degree of familiarity were asked subsequent questions about the strategy.

Across the board, relatively few respondents rate the implementation of the strategy as “excellent” or “good,” whether in their local context or more broadly. In only one of the four constituencies, seminary leaders, and then only for two of four contexts, “in your presbytery/local area” and “in your synod/region of the country,” do as many respondents rate the strategy’s implementation as “excellent” or “good” (14% for each context) as rate it “fair” or “poor” (14% for each context). In all of the other ratings—14 in total—the percentage responding “fair” or “poor” is considerably greater than the percentage responding “excellent” or “good.” (See Table 1.) There are also sizable percentages—sometimes a majority—responding “not sure/not applicable.”

Seven factors from a list of 11 are cited by a majority of respondents in one or more constituencies as helping to making the implementation of the strategy for Hispanic/Latino ministry more successful. However, as Table 2 shows, there is considerable variability from one constituency to another in the percentage choosing each of these seven factors. Only two are chosen by a majority in three constituencies: presence of Hispanics/Latinos/as in key decision-making groups and strong leadership. (See Table 2.)

2 These results provide a good illustration of the problems associated with having only a handful of respondents in a particular constituency. While 14% may seem like a sizable share of responses, it represents only one case.
The other four factors—the ones that only half or fewer in all constituencies chose as helping to making the implementation successful—are: availability of educational resources; practical steps by which to implement the strategy; abundance of interest in its implementation; and good promotion of strategy.

Four factors (from a list of nine) are cited by a majority in at least one constituency as hindering the successful implementation of the strategy. Only one of these is so designated by majorities in three constituencies: lack of financial resources. (See Table 3.)

†Only those familiar with the strategy were asked this question

The first three of the four hindering factors listed in Table 3 are the mirror image of three identified by many as helping the implementation, indicating that funds, leadership, and cultural/linguistic circumstances are perceived as key axes for successful implementation. Nevertheless, there are curious differences in some constituencies as to the helping and hindering effects of these three dimensions. For example, while most mid-council executives (60%) view “lack of financial resources” as a hindrance, only about half as many (32%) view “commitment of financial resources” as helping implementation. And while two-thirds of agency leaders (67%) indicate that “cultural and linguistic proficiency” is helpful, only 17% indicate that “cultural and linguistic barriers” are a hindrance.

Almost all respondents believe that the implementation of the strategy in their ministry context is either “very important” or “important,” “given recent demographic changes in the United States.” Among Hispanic leaders, 94% so respond; among seminary leaders, 100%; among mid-council executives, 88%; and among agency leaders, 100%.

Leadership and Education Programs and Workshops

A series of questions asked respondents about their participation in “leadership or education conferences, courses, programs, workshops, etc. [that] have been intentionally designed for Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterians in the PC(USA).” Respondents were asked, in turn, about participation in leadership or education conferences, courses, programs, or workshops that had been sponsored by each of six types of entities: national entities of the PC(USA); synods; presbyteries; PC(USA) seminaries; other PC(USA) entities; and non-PC(USA) entities. When respondents indicated that they had attended at least one conference, course, program, or workshop in a particular category, they were asked additional questions about the most recent (or only) time they had attended.

For convenience, the phrase “program/workshop” will be used in this section to refer to “conferences, courses, programs, workshops, etc. intentionally designed for Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterians in the PC(USA).”

Number of participating respondents. A greater share of Hispanic leaders than of any other constituency report attending at least one leadership or education program/workshop sponsored by each type of entity. Among this constituency, 48% report attending one or more programs/workshops sponsored by a national PC(USA) entity, followed by 40% who have attended a presbytery-sponsored and 38% a synod-sponsored event. The lowest share of participation among Hispanic leaders in any of the six categories is 25%, for programs sponsored by some other PC(USA) entity. (See Table 4.)

Seminary leaders have the second-highest share of participation in five of the six categories. The exception is for national entity-sponsored programs/workshops, reported by only 8% of seminary leaders but 14% of mid-council executives and 22% of agency leaders. No more than 21% of mid-council executives report attending a program/workshop in any one category (the 21% is for presbytery-sponsored ones), followed by those sponsored by a national entity (14%) and a synod (13%). Agency leaders report participation in only two categories: programs/workshops sponsored by a national entity (22%) and by some other PC(USA) entity (11%). This last outcome is hardly surprising: the survey asked about programs/workshops intentionally designed for Hispanics/Latinos/as, and none of the agency leaders describe themselves thusly (see demographic characteristics, p. 11).

Overall, three-fourths of Hispanic leaders (74%) have attended at least one leadership or education program, as have two-thirds of seminary leaders (67%). In contrast, only a third of mid-council executives (34%) and 18% of agency leaders have done so.

Number of programs attended. Among those who report having participated in at least one program/workshop sponsored by each type of entity, most report attending more than one. The median frequency is typically two or three, but ranges as high as five (among Hispanic leaders for programs/workshops sponsored by a national entity, and among agency leaders for programs/workshops sponsored by some other PC(USA) entity) and six (among mid-council executives for programs/workshops sponsored by some other PC(USA) entity). (See Table 5.)

Overall, Hispanic leaders have been to more programs/workshops (a median of seven). The next highest median is 5.5, among agency leaders (but that represents only two individuals). Seminary leaders have attended a median of 3.5 programs and mid-council executives, 2.5.

Locations of Programs/Workshops. The most recent programs/workshops in which Hispanic leaders and mid-council executives had participated were scattered in various parts of the United States and even in other countries. (Only the responses of these two constituencies are discussed in this and the next four subsections, because almost no respondents in the other two categories had attended any program/workshop.) The region with the largest single share of programs/workshops tends to be the South, though it varies somewhat by sponsor. In particular, relatively more of the respondents who attended seminary-sponsored programs/workshops did so in the Northeast than in any other single region. Very few programs/workshops of any type were in the Midwest. Relatively few respondents attended programs/workshops outside the United States, with the exception of those sponsored by a national entity. A few Hispanic leaders attended programs/workshops in Puerto Rico that were sponsored by each of the six types of entities, including 31% who attended one there sponsored by a synod and 27% who attended one there sponsored by a presbytery. However, no mid-council executive reported attending any program in Puerto Rico. (See Table 7, p. 5.)

Program/Workshop Topics. When asked to describe the “nature or focus” of the most recent program/workshop they had attended, only five of 14 possible options were chosen by as many as 40% of Hispanic leaders or mid-council executives in any of the six sponsorship categories. “Leadership development” was chosen by a majority of Hispanic leaders for programs/workshops sponsored by five of six entity categories (the only exception, at 47%, is for non-PC(USA)-sponsored programs) and by a majority of mid-council executives for all six sponsors. The next largest response share is for “Christian education.” While not chosen by a majority, it was chosen by 40% or more in five of the six categories among Hispanic leaders (non-PC(USA)-sponsored programs the exception, at 26%) and two of the six among mid-council executives. (See Table 8, p. 6.)

These results should not be surprising, since the questions asked about participation in “leadership and education conferences, courses, programs, workshops, etc.” By definition, we would expect respondents to indicate that most programs they attended focused on education or leadership.

Characteristics of Program/Workshop Attendees. Hispanic leaders and mid-council executives report that participants in the most recent program they attended in each sponsorship category represented a variety of church roles. In all instances, a majority report pastors in attendance. Among the 12 response groupings (six sponsor categories for each of Hispanic leaders and mid-council executives), majorities report the participation of ruling elders in eight; of other teaching elders other than pastors in seven; of commissioned lay pastors in six; of presbytery or synod leaders in six; and of seminary students or candidates for ministry in two. (See Table 9, p. 6.)

Language of Program/Workshop. Most programs/workshops that Hispanic leaders had attended were either partially or entirely bilingual. The bilingual share ranges from 35% among synod-sponsored programs to 61% among seminary-sponsored programs. The same pattern holds among mid-council executives, with a range from 40% for other PC(USA) entity-sponsored programs to 91% for synod-sponsored programs. (See Table 10.)

Helpfulness of Program/Workshops for Ministry. Among Hispanic leaders and mid-council executives, majorities respond “very helpful” or “helpful” when asked to rate the helpfulness for their ministry of the most recent program/workshop they had attended that was sponsored by each entity. The combined “very helpful” and “helpful” responses range from 61% (among mid-council executives regarding the most recent national entity-sponsored program they had attended) to 89% (among Hispanic leaders regarding the most recent seminary-sponsored program they had attended). No more than 8% in either constituency responded “not helpful” concerning the most recent program they had attended in each of the six sponsorship categories, and for two of the six categories among Hispanic leaders and five of the six among mid-council executives, no one responded “not helpful.” (See Table 11.)

Future Workshops and Programs

Concerning possible future programs/workshops, the survey asked about “the most appropriate [entity] to sponsor leadership and education conferences, courses, programs, workshops, etc., for your ministry context.” In general, the most respondents in each group chose the presbytery, synod, or national entities of the PC(USA):

- Hispanic leaders: presbytery, 44%; synod, 11%; national PC(USA) entity, 14% (total: 69%)
- Seminary leaders: 56%; 0%; 11% (67%)
- Mid-council executives: 30%; 31%; 18% (79%)
- Agency leaders: 38%; 0%; 38% (76%)

In addition, 22% of seminary and 10% of Hispanic leaders chose a PC(USA) seminary as the most appropriate sponsor, and 12% of Hispanic leaders and 6% of mid-council executives chose the congregation.

Large majorities in each constituency report that “the best language arrangement” at future programs/workshops would be bilingual: Hispanic leaders, 65%; seminary leaders, 100%; mid-council executives, 79%; and agency leaders, 88%.

Respondents were asked to rate how helpful a conference, course, program, or workshop for Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterians on each of 14 topics would be for their ministry context. Large majorities of Hispanic leaders rated every one of the topics as “very helpful” or “helpful,” ranging from 91% for leadership development to 70% for preaching. Other constituencies provide more varied responses. A majority of seminary leaders rate only four as “very helpful” or “helpful”: cultural awareness and diversity (75%); Christian education (63%); leadership development (55%); and discipleship (55%). Among mid-council executives, only one is rated “very helpful” or “helpful” by a majority: leadership development (52%). Among agency leaders, four are so rated: leadership development (83%); cultural awareness and diversity (72%); community services, social work, or action (67%); and evangelism (57%). (See Table 12.)

*Order of topics reflects responses of Hispanic leaders
— = no cases

Combined, these results reveal that any of the 14 topics would be helpful for Hispanic leaders in their ministry context. Topics that are viewed as helpful for ministry more broadly include leadership development (rated “very helpful” or “helpful” by a majority in every constituency), cultural awareness and diversity (so rated by a majority in three constituencies), evangelism (so rated by a majority in two constituencies and by half of another), and discipleship (also so rated by a majority in two constituencies and by half of another).

Demographics of Respondents

Not surprisingly, a large majority of Hispanic leaders identify themselves as “Hispanic/Latino/a”: 89%. So do a third of seminary leaders (33%), and 6% of mid-council executives. No agency leaders describe themselves as Hispanic/Latino/a.

Most Hispanic leaders are teaching elders (81%), including 60% who are pastors. An overlapping 47% also serve in some capacity with a mid-council or a national entity of the PC(USA). Respondents in the other three constituencies reflect their selection criteria: 100% of seminary leaders are either seminary faculty, staff, or board members; 98% of mid-council executives are executives, clerks, or other staff of a mid-council or national entity of the church; and 62% of agency leaders are executives, clerks, or other staff of a mid-council or national entity of the church. (One would have expected the remaining 38% of agency leaders to have checked “elected board member of national PC(USA) agency,” but curiously, none did.)
Four in ten Hispanic leaders live in the South (41%), followed by two in ten in Puerto Rico (21%), 16% in the Northeast, and 14% in the West. Only 6% live in the West. The remaining 2% live outside the United States. Seminary leaders live in three regions: South, 44%; Northeast, 44%; and West, 11%. Mid-council executives are somewhat evenly split across the four U.S. regions: South, 34%; Midwest, 25%; Northeast, 21%; and West, 20%. Most agency leaders live in the South (62%), followed by 25% in the Northeast and 12% in the West.

Research Overview

The questions were constructed by Research Services with input from the Leadership Group provided by its staff liaison, Rob Fohr, a staff member of the Committee on Theological Education. Once final content was agreed upon, staff in Research Services programmed the questions for Web completion. On January 12, 2012, Research Services sent to all persons in each of the four constituencies an email invitation to complete the survey. The email came from Reverend Tony Aja, convener of the Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Group, and provided a link to the survey.

Email reminders from Tony Aja were sent to all non-respondents on January 17, 20, and 23. Returns were accepted through noon on January 25, 2012.

The invitation, reminders, and survey were all translated into Spanish. Separate links to the English and the Spanish versions of the survey were provided in the initial invitation and the reminders. The invitation and the reminders themselves consisted of English text followed by a Spanish translation, with a sentence in Spanish at the beginning of the English text indicating that a Spanish version followed.

The percentages in each constituency who responded in Spanish are: Hispanic leaders, 55%; seminary leaders, 25%; mid-council executives, 1%; and agency leaders, 0%.

In all four constituencies, the population was surveyed; that is, there was no sampling. Every individual identified in each constituency was invited to participate. Details about the constituencies and response rates are shown in Table 13.

Leadership and Education Ministries

A variety of leadership or education conferences, courses, programs, workshops, etc., have been intentionally designed for Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterians in the PC(USA). Please try to recall as many of these as courses/workshops that you attended, going back to 1970. We are only asking about leadership and education conferences, courses, programs, workshops, etc., that were designed exclusively for Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterians. Do not respond regarding events (such as the Racial Ethnic Convocation) that included Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterians along with Presbyterians from one or more other racial-ethnic groups.
National Entity-Sponsored leadership and education conferences, courses, programs, workshops, etc.

Q-6. Have you attended any exclusively Hispanic/Latino/a leadership or education conferences, courses, programs, workshops, etc., that were sponsored by a national entity of the PC(USA)? National entities include: The General Assembly, General Assembly Mission Council, Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, Board of Pensions, and the Presbyterian Foundation.

A ministry of the General Assembly Mission Council
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
A. Leadership Development

1. Recommendation: Encourage presbyteries and direct the six agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to develop and maintain web sites and publications in the Spanish language in addition to the English language so that Spanish speakers might have full access to information regarding the work and ministry of the church.

   1. Recomendación: Animar a los presbiterios y encargar a las seis agencias de la Iglesia Presbiteriana (EEUUA) que desarrollen y mantengan páginas web y publicaciones en español en adición a las que están en inglés para que las personas que hablan en español puedan tener total acceso a la información relacionada al trabajo y ministerio de la iglesia.

Rationale

In spite of the multilingual presence in our church, currently only a few selected PC(USA) resources and statements are translated into languages other than English. Presently, callers to the Presbyterian Center who do not speak English are faced with difficulties in getting the information they need. The PC(USA) website is predominantly in the English language. Thus many current and prospective church members cannot read or hear information in their own languages, preventing them from full participation in the connectional church. As we look toward the future of the church, we can make the ministry of the PC(USA) accessible to those who do not speak English.

The January 2012 Research Study commissioned by the Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group was conducted by Research Services; at the request of the group, Research Services prepared a version of the survey in Spanish. Of the total 266 persons surveyed, 142 (53 percent) self-identified as Hispanic/Latino/a. Of those who identified as Hispanic/Latino/a, 86 (61 percent) took the Spanish version of the survey. This fact indicates a preference and a need to have Spanish-language materials available especially with respect to official denominational communications and resources.

Fundamento

A pesar de la presencia multilingüe en nuestra iglesia, actualmente solo unos pocos recursos y declaraciones selectas de la IP (EEUUA) están traducidas a idiomas aparte del inglés. Actualmente, las personas que llaman al Centro Presbiteriano se encuentran con dificultades para conseguir la información que necesitan porque son enviadas a otras que hablan su mismo idioma pero que no necesariamente tienen la información que necesitan. El sitio de Internet de la IP(EEUUA) está predominantemente en el idioma inglés. De este modo, mucha de la membresía actual y posible de la iglesia no puede leer o escuchar información en su propio idioma, impidiendo su plena participación en la iglesia conexional. A medida que miramos hacia el futuro de la iglesia, podemos hacer que el ministerio de la IP(EEUUA) sea accesible para aquellas personas que no hablan inglés.

El estudio de investigación en enero 2012, comisionado por el Grupo de diálogo acerca del liderato hispano/latino fue llevado a cabo por el Servicio de investigación. El Servicio de investigación preparó una versión del estudio en español, a petición del grupo. Del total de 266 personas entrevistadas, 142 (ó 53%) se identificaron a sí mismas como hispanas/latinas. De esas que se identificaron como hispanas/latinas, 86 (ó 61%) tomó la versión del estudio en español. Este hecho indica una preferencia y una necesidad de contar con materiales en el idioma español disponibles especialmente con respecto a recursos y comunicaciones oficiales de la denominación.

2. Encourage presbyteries to create staff positions, cross-cultural commissions, and/or committees of sufficiently qualified people that will resource congregations to explore and carry out new ways of ministering with Hispanic/Latino/a communities. These could include, but are not limited to, developing new churches, organizing Bible study fellowships, providing English for Speakers of Other Languages (ESOL) classes as well as Spanish classes, engaging in/promoting social action and ministry, and supporting the development of “nesting” and cross-cultural congregations.

2. Recomendación: Alentar a los presbiterios a crear puestos de personal, comisiones interculturales, y/o comités de personas que estén suficientemente capacitadas, que puedan servir de recursos para las congregaciones para que estas exploren y puedan llevar a cabo nuevas maneras de ministrar con las comunidades hispanas/latinas. Estas pueden incluir, pero no limitarse a, desarrollar nuevas iglesias, organizar grupos de estudios bíblicos, proveer clases de inglés para quienes hablan otros idiomas (ESOL), así como también clases de español, dedicarse/promover la acción social y el ministerio y apoyar el desarrollo de congregaciones en iglesias anfitrionas y congregaciones interculturales.

Rationale for Recommendation A.2.

Knowledge of cultural, linguistic, social, and other characteristics of a certain community is paramount to inform and determine how strategies intended to reach out to those communities will be shaped and carried out. Staff and/or committees that understand the Hispanic/Latino/a realities in the United States are necessary in order to develop effective, faithful ministries with Hispanics/Latinos/as as well as to serve as “bridge builders” among all churches in the presbytery.

The January 2012 Research Study found that the Hispanic/Latino/a leaders surveyed indicated a preference for presbyteries to sponsor programs and initiatives designed specifically for Hispanic/Latinos/as. Furthermore, the study also found that the “presence of La comunidad hispana/latina en los Estados Unidos vienen de más de veinte países. Aunque estos países comparten un idioma en común, cada uno tiene características lingüísticas y culturales únicas. Estas características únicas en muchas ocasiones diferencias políticas, socioeconómicas e historias que en ocasiones pueden crear divisiones entre las comunidades hispano/latinas. Estos variados grupos hispano/latinos, necesitan involucrarse en un diálogo intencional y constante sobre cómo pueden trabajar en conjunto y de ese modo impactar más efectivamente a la iglesia.

B. Theological Education
B. Educación Teológica

1. Request the Committee on Theological Education (COTE) to revisit underlying cultural assumptions not limited to but including those related to language and socioeconomic groupings in the ordination exams, and make recommendations to the Presbyteries Cooperative Committee on Examination of Candidates (PCCEC). Such recommendations will be identified by a prior study.
1. Recomendación: Solicitar a COTE (Comité sobre la educación teológica) que examine nuevamente los supuestos culturales subyacentes no limitándose a, sino incluyendo aquellos relacionados al idioma y a los grupos socioeconómicos en los exámenes de ordenación, y que haga recomendaciones al PCCEC (Comité Cooperativo de los Presbiterios sobre Exámenes para Candidatos/as). Tales recomendaciones serán identificadas por un estudio previo.

Rationale for Recommendation B.1.

Certain cultural assumptions exist within the ordination exams that cause unintentional but significant disadvantages to many Hispanic/Latino/a students. The PCCEC has known about these longstanding cultural challenges, and has sought to address them, but has not yet been able to adequately resolve them. With a better understanding of cultural assumptions and challenges, certain obstacles can be easily removed (i.e., versions of the Bible, translation issues, illustrations based on contexts not found in Hispanic/Latino/a congregations, etc.). Drawing from standardized exam studies (GRE, SAT, etc.), a comparative analysis can be conducted to discover the common cultural issues associated with the construction of public examinations. Theological schools need this study to inform their curricula in order to prepare students for exams.

Fundamento

Existen algunos supuestos culturales dentro de los exámenes de ordenación que causan desventajas involuntarias pero significativas a muchos/as estudiantes hispanos/latinos. El PCCEC ha tenido conocimiento de estos perjudiciales retos culturales y ha buscado maneras de trabajar con ellos, pero todavía no ha podido resolverlos adecuadamente. Ciertos obstáculos pueden ser fácilmente removidos (p.ej. versiones de la Biblia, asuntos de traducción, ilustraciones basadas en contextos que no se encuentran en congregaciones hispano/latinas, etc.) con un mejor entendimiento de supuestos y retos culturales. Al partir de estudios acerca de exámenes estandarizados (GRE, SAT, etc.) se puede llevar a cabo un análisis comparativo para descubrir asuntos culturales comunes asociados con la construcción de exámenes públicos. Las escuelas teológicas necesitan este estudio para informar sus currículos para así poder preparar a sus estudiantes para los exámenes.

2. Direct the COTE to partner with Presbyterian theological educators and PC(USA) seminary faculty and senior staff to identify funding and to participate in the Hispanic Summer Program’s “Through Hispanic Eyes.”

2. Recomendación: Indicar al COTE que colabore con los/as educadores/as teológicos/as presbiterianos/as, la facultad y los directivos de los seminarios de la Iglesia Presbiteriana (EEUUA) para identificar fondos y participar en la clase «Through Hispanic Eyes» (A través de ojos hispanos) del Programa Hispano de Verano.

Rationale for Recommendation B.2.

The January 2012 research study found that the issue of cultural awareness and sensitivity merited important consideration, especially among those involved in the formation of Presbyterian inquirers and candidates for ministry. One model, the Hispanic Summer Program (an ecumenical program founded in 1988 and based in Chicago, Illinois), has proven to be especially successful in increasing the cultural awareness and sensitivity of its participants. Currently the program is accessible to seminary presidents and academic deans (registration fee required), though the program would be beneficial to a much wider audience of theological educators.

The Hispanic Summer Program supplements and enriches the theological and ministerial education offered in seminaries and universities, with academic courses and other activities directly addressing Hispanic/Latino/a history, ministry and theology. (See http://www.hispanicsummerprogram.org/)

According to the January 2012 research study, Hispanic/Latino/a leaders indicated that PC(USA) seminary-sponsored programs/workshops designed specifically for Hispanic/Latino/a were more helpful than the programs/workshops of any other sponsoring entity. [Other entities listed included General Assembly/national church sponsorship, presbytery, synod, and non-PC(USA) sponsoring entities.]

Fundamento

El estudio de investigación de enero de 2012 encontró que el asunto de la conciencia y la sensibilidad cultural merecían consideración importante, especialmente entre aquellas personas involucradas en la formación de precandidatos/as y candidatos/as presbiterianos al ministerio. Un modelo, el Programa Hispano de Verano (un programa ecuménico fundado en el 1988 y basado en Chicago, Illinois), ha probado ser especialmente exitoso en aumentar la conciencia y la sensibilidad cultural de sus participantes. Actualmente, el programa está accesible a los/as presidentes/as de seminario y decanos académicos (se requiere una cuota de matrícula), aunque el programa sería beneficioso para una audiencia más amplia de educadores/as teológicos/as.

El Programa Hispano de Verano complementa y enriquece la educación teológica y ministerial ofrecida por los seminarios y universidades, con cursos académicos y otras actividades que tratan directamente con la historia, ministerio y teología hispana/latina. [http://www.hispanicsummerprogram.org/]

De acuerdo al estudio de investigación de enero 2012, el liderazgo hispano/latino de la IP (EEUUA) indicó que los programas/talleres específicamente diseñados para la comunidad hispana/latina y auspiciados por seminarios fueron más útiles que los programas/talleres auspiciados por alguna otra entidad auspiciadora (otras entidades en la lista incluyen a la Asamblea General /iglesia nacional como auspiciadora, presbiterio, sinodo, y entidades auspiciadoras no presbiterianas).

3. Direct the COTE to collect and compile from PC(USA) seminaries data regarding the race, ethnicity, denominational affiliation, and gender composition of faculty, board members, and students and provide a comparative annual report to each seminary president and board.

3. Recomendación: Indicar al COTE que recopile la composición racional, étnica, denominacional, y sexual de la facultad, de la membresía de las juntas, y de los estudiantes/as y que provea un informe comparativo anual a cada presidente/a y junta de los seminarios.
A decline from previous levels in recruitment and retention of Hispanic/Latino/a faculty, especially those who are Presbyterian, and the lack of success so far in building a sizable cohort is a matter of real concern. Appeals for inclusion have had limited impact. This recommendation wishes to try offering comparative figures so that particular schools can benchmark their success against others and thereby find an incentive for change.

Rationale for Recommendation B.3.

The January 2012 research study found that in addition to the primary importance of leadership development programs/workshops designed specifically for Hispanic/Latinos/as, survey participants also indicated “evangelism” (targeted toward Hispanic/Latinos/as) as a secondary area in need of additional resources and training. Some presbyteries are working intentionally to nurture Hispanic/Latino/a NCD leaders, but others where the Hispanic/Latino/a presence is growing are not acknowledging such growth or providing appropriate NCD support and training for Hispanic/Latino/a leaders. The Office of Evangelism and Church Growth of the GAMC has a program for the training of Hispanic/Latino/a NCD pastors through a coaching program. More programs such as this are needed at a local level.
El estudio de investigación de enero del 2012 encontró que, en adición a la importancia primaria de programas/talleres de desarrollo de liderazgo diseñados específicamente para hispanos/latinos, las personas que participaron de la encuesta también indicaron que el “evangelismo” (dirigido a la comunidad hispana/latina) es la segunda área en necesidad de recursos adicionales y entrenamiento. Algunos presbíteros están trabajando intencionalmente en nutrir a líderes hispanos/latinos de desarrollo de nuevas iglesias, pero hay otros en donde la presencia hispana/latina está creciendo, que no están reconociendo tal crecimiento o proveyendo el apoyo apropiado a los desarrollos de nuevas iglesias y entrenamiento para el liderato hispano/latino. La Oficina de evangelismo y crecimiento de la Iglesia Presbiteriana tiene un programa de entrenamiento de pastores/as hispanos/latinos a través de un programa de entrenamiento. Se necesitan más programas como estos al nivel local.

D. Jóvenes y Adultos/as Jóvenes:

1. Direct the Office of Hispanic/Latino/a Congregational Support and the Office of Resources and Relationships with Hispanic/Latino/a constituencies to convene a group of people (young adults and adults) to serve as a mentoring network for youth and young adults in the different regions where they are needed.

1. Recomendación: Indicar a la Oficina de Apoyo Congregacional Hispana/Latina y a la Oficina de Recursos y Relaciones con las constituyentes hispanas/latinas a que convoque a un grupo de personas (jóvenes y adultos/as jóvenes) para servir como una red de mentores/as para los/as jóvenes y adultos/as jóvenes en diferentes regiones donde sean necesarios/as.

Rationale for Recommendation D.1.

Currently no systemic mentoring strategy designed for Hispanic/Latino/a youth and young adults exists. Such a mentoring process would provide youth and young adults with a trusting relationship with a caring leader who will help foster discipleship. The creation of this mentoring network will provide support and motivation for local leaders and help them inspire youth and young adults to a higher commitment to Jesus Christ, resulting in their involvement at all levels of the church’s mission.

According to the January 2012 Research Study commissioned by the Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group, the survey participants indicated that the Strategy for Ministry with the Hispanic/Latino/a constituencies in the PC(USA) [215th General Assembly (2003)] has been more effectively implemented nationally than regionally. However, the study also found that leadership initiatives and programs designed specifically for Hispanics/Latinos/as would be most effectively implemented at the regional level.

Fundamento

En este momento no existe una estrategia de capacitación sistemática a través de mentores/as diseñada para jóvenes y adultos/as jóvenes hispano/latino/as. Un proceso de mentores proveería a los/as jóvenes y adultos/as jóvenes con una relación de confianza con un/a líder comprensivo/a que le ayudar a fomentar el discipulado. La creación de esta red de mentores/as proveerá el apoyo y la motivación para líderes locales y les ayudará a inspirar a jóvenes y a adultos/as jóvenes a tener un compromiso más fuerte con Jesucristo, resultando esto en un envolvimiento en todos los niveles de la misión de la iglesia.

De acuerdo al estudio de investigación de enero de 2012 comisionado por el Grupo de diálogo acerca del liderato hispano/latino, las personas que participaron de la encuesta indicaron que la Estrategia para el Ministerio con Grupos Hispanos/Latinos en la Iglesia Presbiteriana E.U.A. (Asamblea General 215, 2003) ha sido más efectivamente implementada a nivel nacional que regional. Sin embargo, el estudio también encontró que las iniciativas de liderazgo y programas diseñados específicamente para la comunidad hispana/latina serían más efectivamente implementados a nivel regional.

2. Direct the Office of Ministries with Youth and encourage other PC(USA) entities to incorporate cultural proficiency/sensitivity training in relation to Hispanic/Latino/a young people as a part of the training process for leadership of all events, gatherings, and resources (including providing interpreters for Spanish-speaking participants, bilingual worship, and multilingual promotional resources).

2. Recomendación: Indicar a la Oficina de Ministerios con la Juventud y animar a otras entidades de la IP (EEUUA) a incorporar el entrenamiento sobre sensibilidad/competencia cultural en relación a la gente hispana/latina joven como parte del proceso de entrenamiento para el liderazgo de todos los eventos, encuentros y recursos (incluyendo el proveer traductores/as para participantes de habla hispana, adoración bilingüe y recursos promocionales multilingües).

Rationale for Recommendation D.2.

Due to the changing nature of the church, events for youth and young adults should accurately reflect the diversity of the larger society. Young people should be able to connect their own lives and experiences to the contents presented through worship and faith encounters. The church as a whole can benefit from the rich diversity that already exists within it. All leadership should be aware of and include the gifts of all of God’s children.

Fundamento

Debido a la naturaleza cambiante de la iglesia, los eventos para jóvenes y adultos/as jóvenes deben reflejar fielmente la diversidad de la sociedad en general. Los/as jóvenes deben poder conectar sus propias vidas y experiencias con los contenidos presentados a través de la adoración y de los encuentros de fe. La iglesia como un todo se puede beneficiar de la rica diversidad que ya existe dentro de ella. Todo el liderazgo debe estar consciente de e incluir los dones de todos los hijos e hijas de Dios.

E. Other

E. Otros
The Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) direct the Hispanic/Latino/a Congregational Support Office, in conversations with its constituencies, to effectively implement the PC(USA) Hispanic National Strategy [approved by the 215th General Assembly (2003); Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 531ff] into a strategic plan that will provide guidance to Hispanic/Latino/a communities and groups for partnering with the General Assembly, mid councils, and PCUSA seminaries in addressing these matters. This should happen in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the National Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterian Caucus to monitor progress and report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Indicar a la Oficina de Apoyo Congregacional Hispano/Latina, en conversación con sus constituyentes, que implemente efectivamente la Estrategia Hispana Nacional de la IP (EEUUA) (adoptada por la Asamblea General 215 en el 2003) a través de un plan estratégico que proverá dirección a las comunidades y grupos hispanos/latinos, colaborando con la Asamblea General, con los concilios medios y con los seminarios de la IP (EEUUA) en trabajar con estos asuntos. Esto debe suceder en consulta con el Comité de defensa de las preocupaciones étnico raciales y el Caucus Nacional Presbiteriano Hispano/Latino para monitorear el progreso e informar a la Asamblea General 221.

Rationale for Recommendation E.

The January 2012 research study found widespread unfamiliarity about the 2003 Hispanic National Strategy among all groups surveyed. Specifically, nearly seven of 10 (68 percent) of Hispanic/Latino/a leaders indicated some degree of unfamiliarity with the 2003 strategy. Of those more familiar with the strategy, many indicated that it had not been implemented effectively, particularly at the regional level. This lack of awareness and lack of effective implementation can be attributed to the absence of a clear communication strategy, a centralized monitoring system, and well-defined evaluation mechanisms. These areas can be improved with the development of a well-designed strategic plan that includes, as measurable objectives, the recommendations of this report.

Fundamento

El estudio de investigación de enero de 2012 reveló una falta de conocimiento acerca de la Estrategia Nacional Hispana entre todos los grupos encuestados. En concreto, casi siete de cada diez (68%) del liderazgo hispano/latino indicó algún grado de desconocimiento de la Estrategia de 2003. De las personas más familiarizadas con la estrategia, muchas indicaron que no había sido implementada efectivamente, particularmente en el nivel regional. Esta falta de conocimiento y falta de implementación efectiva puede ser atribuida a la ausencia de una estrategia clara de comunicación, un sistema centralizado de monitoreo, y unos mecanismos de evaluación bien definidos. Estas áreas pueden mejorarse con el desarrollo de un plan estratégico bien diseñado, que incluya, como objetivos medibles, las recomendaciones de este informe.

Overall Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2010 Referral: Item 15-09. On Convening a Conversation to Develop a Strategy for Addressing Hispanic/Latino Participation at All Levels of the Church (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p.1164).

Referencia 2010: Artículo 15-09. Sobre convocar a un diálogo para desarrollar una estrategia para trabajar con la participación hispana/latina a todos los niveles de la iglesia:

The recommendation was as follows:

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) convene a conversation within the larger church to develop a comprehensive strategy for addressing the concern for Hispanic/Latino/a leadership at all levels of the church that would include and be led by no fewer than two representatives appointed or elected by each of the following groups: the PC(USA) Hispanic/Latino/a Caucus, the PC(USA) Office of Vocation, the Advisory Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns, the Committee on Theological Education, and the General Assembly Mission Council. Other groups and/or appropriate individuals may be invited into the conversations with all individually responsible for reporting to their respective groups and corporately back to the 220th General Assembly (2012). – COTE (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1164)

El Comité de educación teológica (COTE) recomienda que la Asamblea General 219 (2010) convoque a un diálogo dentro de la iglesia extendida para desarrollar una estrategia exhaustiva para trabajar con la inquietud sobre el asunto del liderazgo hispano/latino en los niveles de la iglesia que incluiría y sería dirigida por no menos de dos representantes seleccionados o elegidos por cada uno de los siguientes grupos: el Caucus Nacional Presbiteriano Hispano Latino, la Oficina de Vocaciones de la IP (EEUUA), el Comité de defensa de las preocupaciones étnico raciales, el Comité de educación teológica, y el Concilio de misión de la Asamblea General. Otros grupos y/o personas apropiadas pueden ser invitadas al diálogo, y todas ellas individualmente tendrán la responsabilidad de informar a sus grupos respectivos y corporativamente a la Asamblea Genera 220 (2012)—COTE (Minutas, 2010, p.10).

The Book of Order states, “The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups … shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church” (Book of Order, G-4.0403). In an ever-increasing multicultural and multiethnic United States society, the statement above takes on new meaning and relevance.

The 2010 U.S. Census indicates that communities of European descent are a minority in many areas of the country. Certainly, by mid-century or even before, demographers predict, the racial-ethnic population “will outnumber whites throughout the nation.” Among these “emerging majorities,” Hispanics/Latinos/as constitute the fastest-growing ethno-cultural group, at over 55 million. Many consider this reality an opportunity to enhance their world view and to learn from others who hold different perspectives on life and faith. Unfortunately, many others react negatively to this projected increase in the Hispanic/Latino/a population. Racist attitudes have crystallized in anti-immigration laws in many parts of the country, especially in the South, with the overt intent of targeting Hispanics/Latinos/as. Even the church struggles to make the changes necessary to reflect these present dynamics and to prepare for what the future will bring. For the most part, strategies intended to make the church more ethnically inclusive lack both resources and full institutional support. In spite of many years of official efforts by the General Assembly Mission Council and the development of programs aimed to help the church become more
Si la Iglesia Presbiteriana (EEUU), una denominación predominante blanca y anglofona, va a prosperar y a tener ministerios efectivos y fieles en una sociedad multicultural y multietnica, entonces tiene que desarrollar estrategias para enfrentar el reto de convertirse en una comunidad de inclusión más intencional. La iglesia tiene que evolucionar de un modelo de diversidad que busca la inclusión meramente a través de la representación y las cuotas, hacia un modelo de igualdad, hospitalidad, y justicia, basado en una colaboración completa en la misión, para que así pueda ser una iglesia de verdadera solidaridad con los pueblos de diferentes culturas, étnicas, e idiomáticas. La iglesia que comparte y da la bienvenida a los diversos dones de sus gentes, en servicio y liderazgo, se convierte en el primer fruto del reino de Dios; un verdadero centro de oración para todas las naciones (Marcos 11:17)
Specifically regarding the Hispanic/Latino/a constituency and the need to continue to improve outreach efforts to those constituents, in 2003 the General Assembly approved the Strategy for Ministry with the Hispanic-Latino Constituencies in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This comprehensive strategy’s purpose was to encourage and resource the entire church to engage in ministries with and outreach to the Latino communities throughout the country.

In late 2009, representatives of the Hispanic/Latino/a National Presbyterian Caucus met with the Committee on Theological Education in San Anselmo, California, to present their concerns about the recent loss of the only two Hispanic/Latino/a Presbyterian professors in Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seminaries. The request included plans for intentional recruitment of Hispanic/Latino/a professors and students by PC(USA) seminaries as well as changes in the core curricula of these institutions to prepare students from all ethno-cultural backgrounds to minister effectively cross-culturally given the present and future dynamics.

This conversation led the COTE to direct an action to the 219th General Assembly (2010) that in essence asked the church to “convene a conversation within the larger church to develop a comprehensive strategy for addressing the concern for Hispanic/Latino/a leadership at all levels of the church.” The General Assembly approved this request.

The conversation group met via conference call as well as at one face-to-face meeting in June 2011. At the June meeting, the group realized that they needed more information about Hispanic/Latino/a ministries in the PC(USA). To this end, the group commissioned a national research study with the primary objective of cataloguing educational programs, workshops, and other initiatives designed specifically for Hispanics/Latinos/as and evaluating the impact of these programs/workshops on the ministries of the participants. A secondary goal of the research study was to evaluate the awareness and implementation of the National Hispanic Strategy approved by the 215th General Assembly (2003).

The group contracted with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s Research Services, who conducted this national study in January 2012. The overall sample of 266 participants contained 149 Hispanic/Latino/a leaders (ruling elders and teaching elders), 94 mid council executives, 12 leaders from PC(USA) seminaries, and 11 PC(USA) agency chairs and senior staff. The complete results of the study are included in Appendix A.

En lo que se refiere específicamente a la constituyente hispana/latina y a la necesidad de continuar mejorando los esfuerzos para alcanzarla, la Asamblea General en el año 2003 adoptó la «Estrategia para el Ministerio con Grupos Hispánicos/Latinos en la Iglesia Presbiteriana E.U.A.». El propósito de esta estrategia exhaustiva fue el motivar y proveer recursos a toda la iglesia para que se involucrara en los ministerios con y alcance a las comunidades latinas en todo el país.

A finales de 2009, representantes del Caucus Nacional Presbiteriano Hispano/Latino se reunieron con el Comité de Educación Teológica (COTE) en San Anselmo, CA, para presentar sus preocupaciones acerca de la pérdida reciente de los únicos dos profesores presbiterianos latinos/as en seminarios presbiterianos (EEUUA). La solicitud incluyó planes para el reclutamiento intencional de profesores/as y estudiantes hispanos/latinos/as en los seminarios de la IP (EEUUA) como cambios en el currículo básico de estas instituciones para preparar a sus estudiantes de todo trasfondo étnico cultural para efectivamente ministrar interculturalmente dadas las dinámicas actuales y futuras.

Esta conversación llevó a COTE a dirigir una acción a la Asamblea General 219 (2010) que en esencia pidió a la iglesia a que « convoque a un diálogo dentro de la iglesia extendida para desarrollar una estrategia exhaustiva para trabajar con la inquietud sobre el asunto del liderazgo hispano/latino en todos los niveles de la iglesia». La Asamblea General aprobó esta petición.

Este grupo de diálogo se reunió a través de conferencia telefónica, así como en una reunión cara a cara en junio de 2011. En la reunión de junio, el grupo se dio cuenta de que necesitaba más información sobre los ministerios hispano/latinos/as de la IP (EEUUA). Con este fin, el grupo comisionó un estudio nacional de investigación con el objetivo principal de catalogar los programas educacionales, talleres, y otras iniciativas diseñadas específicamente para la comunidad hispana/latina y evaluar el impacto de estos programas/talleres en los ministerios de quienes participaron. Un objetivo secundario de la investigación fue el evaluar el conocimiento y la aplicación de la Estrategia Nacional Presbiteriana adoptada por la Asamblea General 215 en el 2003.

El grupo contrató a la oficina de Servicios de investigación de la Iglesia Presbiteriana (EEUUA) quien llevó a cabo este estudio nacional en enero de 2012. La muestra general de 266 participantes contenía 149 líderes hispanos/latinos/as de concilios medios, 12 líderes de los seminarios de la IP (EEUUA), y 11 moderadores/as y altos/as funcionarios/as de las agencias de la IP (EEUUA). Los resultados completos del estudio están incluidos en el apéndice A.

Endnotes

2. Phillip Jenkins afirma que “El futuro religioso del mundo cristiano está en las manos y bajo la influencia de Global South Christians, most of them people of color with very different world views, culture and languages from the presently dominant white, Western church.” The Presbyterian national churches in Mexico and Guatemala together, for example, are more numerous than the PC(USA), with a combined membership of more than three million congregants. Many of these Presbyterian Christians from the “Global South” are also new immigrants who now reside in the United States.
3. More than half of the growth in the total U.S. population between 2000 and 2010 resulted from an increase of the Hispanic population. Between 2000 and 2010, the Hispanic population grew by 43 percent, rising from 35.3 million in 2000 to 50.5 million in 2010. The rise in the Hispanic population accounted for more than half of the 27.3 million increase in the total U.S. population. By 2010, Hispanics comprised 16 percent of the total U.S. population.
3. Más de la mitad del crecimiento en la población de los EEUUA entre el año 2000 y el 2010 resultó de un incremento de la población hispana. Entre el 2000 y el 2010, la población hispana aumentó un 43 por ciento, creciendo de 35.3 millones en el 2000 a 50.5 millones en el 2010. El aumento en la población hispana representó más de la mitad del aumento de 27.3 millones de personas en la población total de los EEUUA. Para el año 2010, la comunidad hispana constituía el 16 por ciento de la población total de los EEUUA de 308.7 millones (Instituto Nacional de Política Latina, y el Censo de 2010).

4. Jack Marcum, Ph.D., coordinator of Research Services, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), July 1, 2011. Dr. Marcum explained in a recent PowerPoint presentation at a national church gathering: “While the total number of PC(USA) congregations declined from 11,260 in 1998 to 10,657 in 2009, most of the churches that closed were white. In contrast, the growth that has occurred in the past decade has generally been among immigrant ethnic churches.”

4. Marcum, Jack, Dr. Coordinador de los Servicios de Investigación, Iglesia Presbiteriana (EEUUA), 1 de julio de, 2011. Jack explicó en una reciente presentación visual en un encuentro de la iglesia nacional que: «Mientras el número total de las congregaciones de la IP (EEUUA) declinaba de 11,260 en 1998 a 10,657 en el 2009, la mayoría de las iglesias que cerraron eran blancas. En contraste, el crecimiento que ha ocurrido en la última década ha sido generalmente entre las iglesias inmigrantes étnicas.”

REPORT OF INDEPENDENT AUDITORS

The Board of Directors
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation
Louisville, Kentucky

We have audited the accompanying consolidated statement of financial position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (the “Organization”) as of December 31, 2011 and the related statements of activities and changes in net assets and cash flows for the year then ended. These financial statements are the responsibility of the Organization’s management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these consolidated financial statements based on our audit.

We conducted our audit in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audit provides a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the consolidated financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the consolidated financial position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation as of December 31, 2011 and the changes in its net assets and its cash flows for the year then ended, in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.

NOTE 1 – ORGANIZATION AND NATURE OF OPERATIONS

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), (“PCUSA”) is an unincorporated body of Reformed Christians, who have agreed to conduct worship and other religious activities in conformity with the then current version of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Constitution, which contains among other things, in its Book of Order, a Form of Government setting forth a detailed formal structure of the Church. As an ecclesiastical organization, PCUSA does not exist under any federal law. Central to the structure of PCUSA is the concept of governing bodies. At the national level, the governing body is the General Assembly. The ecclesiastical work of the PCUSA at the General Assembly level is carried out by a number of ministry units and related agencies.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (“PCUSA, A Corporation”) is a corporate entity of the General Assembly of PCUSA, and is the principal corporation of the General Assembly. All voting members of the General Assembly Mission Council are members of the Board of Directors of PCUSA, A Corporation. PCUSA, A Corporation receives and holds title to property and income at the General Assembly level related to activities; generally maintains and manages all real and tangible property, including the insuring of such property; effects short-term investment of funds prior to either their disbursement or transfer to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (the “Foundation”) for longer-term investment; acts as the disbursing agent for all funds held for the General Assembly and for other governing bodies and entities upon their request; and provides accounting, reporting and other financial and related services as the General Assembly or General Assembly Mission Council may direct or approve.

PCUSA, A Corporation is a tax-exempt religious corporation under Internal Revenue Code Section 501(c)(3).

NOTE 2 – BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

Basis of Presentation: The accompanying consolidated financial statements reflect the consolidated operations of PCUSA, A Corporation and its constituent corporations, which are presented on the accrual basis of accounting in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America. The constituent corporations of PCUSA, A Corporation are the following: General Assembly Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); The Historical Foundation of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, Inc.; The Hubbard Press; Pedco, Inc.; The Presbyterian Historical Society, Inc.; Presbyterian Life, Inc.; Presbyterian Publishing House of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc.; The Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (formerly known as Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America), a New York corporation; Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and The Woman’s Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a New York nonprofit corporation. All intercompany transactions have been eliminated in consolidation. The current financial statements are presented as single year statements due to a change in the method of allocating program expenses during 2011 which would not allow for comparability to the 2010 presentation.

In order to ensure the observance of limitations and restrictions placed on the use of available resources, PCUSA, A Corporation maintains its financial accounts in accordance with the principles and practices of fund accounting. This is the procedure by which resources for various purposes are classified for accounting purposes into funds established in accordance with their nature or purpose.

For external reporting purposes, however, PCUSA, A Corporation’s financial statements have been prepared to focus on the organization as a whole and to present balances and transactions classified in accordance with the existence or absence of donor-imposed restrictions. Net assets and related activity are classified as unrestricted, temporarily restricted and permanently restricted as follows:

- Unrestricted Undesignated - net assets that are not subject to donor-imposed restrictions. Unrestricted undesignated net assets consist of the accumulation of certain contributions, gifts, bequests, and related income thereon, which are available for general church purposes.

- Unrestricted Designated - net assets that are not subject to donor-imposed restrictions. Unrestricted designated net assets consist of the accumulation of certain contributions, gifts, bequests, and related income thereon that have been designated for specific purposes by the General Assembly Mission Council of the General Assembly.

- Temporarily Restricted - net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions that may or will be met either by actions of PCUSA, A Corporation or the passage of time. Temporarily restricted net assets primarily consist of contributions and related investment income.

- Permanently Restricted - net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions to be maintained permanently by PCUSA, A Corporation. Generally, the donors of these assets permit PCUSA, A Corporation to use all or part of the income earned on related investments for general or specific purposes. Permanently restricted net assets consist primarily of endowment funds and revolving loan funds.

Cash Equivalents: For purposes of reporting cash flows, PCUSA, A Corporation considers investments with an original maturity of three months or less when purchased to be cash equivalents.

Investments: Investments are recorded at fair value. Investment transactions are recorded on a trade-date basis. Realized gains and losses are recorded using the specific identification of securities sold on funds held by the Foundation and using the historical cost of securities sold on funds held by other investment managers.

The trustee believes that the carrying amount of its alternative investments is a reasonable estimate of fair value as of December 31, 2011. Since alternative investments are not readily marketable, the estimated value is subject to uncertainty and, therefore, may differ from the value that would have been used had a ready market for the investments existed and such differences could be material.

Long-term investments held by the Foundation represent General Assembly endowment funds, which are generally not available for immediate use.
NOTE 2 – BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES (Continued)

As noted in Note 6, PCUSA, A Corporation adopted The Uniform Prudent Management of Institutional Funds Act (“UPMIFA”) in 2010. Under UPMIFA, net appreciation on endowment fund investments, whose income is otherwise unrestricted as to use, is reported as temporarily restricted net assets until appropriated for expenditure by PCUSA, A Corporation, unless the donor has permanently restricted such net appreciation. In cases where the donor has placed temporary restrictions on the use of the income from endowed gifts, related net appreciation is subject to those restrictions and is reported as a part of temporarily restricted net assets until the restriction has been met. Prior to adoption, PCUSA, A Corporation followed the Uniform Management of Institutional Funds Act (“UMIFA”). PCUSA, A Corporation interpreted UMIFA as requiring the preservation of the fair value of the original gift as of the gift date of the donor-restricted endowment funds absent explicit donor stipulations to the contrary. The portion of the donor-restricted endowment fund that was not classified in permanently restricted net assets were previously classified as unrestricted net assets.

Contributions from Congregations: Contributions from congregations include amounts in-transit at year-end.

Allowance for Loan Losses: The allowance for loan losses is maintained at a level considered by management to be adequate to provide for loan losses inherent in the loan portfolio. Management determines the adequacy of the allowance based upon reviews of payment history, recent loss experience, current economic conditions, the risk characteristics of the various categories of loans and such other factors, which in management’s judgment deserve current recognition in estimating loan losses. The allowance for loan losses is increased by the provision for loan losses and reduced by net loan charge-offs.

Annuity and Life Income Funds: PCUSA, A Corporation is an income beneficiary of trust funds held by the Foundation. In accordance with current accounting standards, PCUSA, A Corporation has recorded as an asset the net present value of the future income to be received from the funds.

Inventories: Inventories represent books, periodicals, and curriculum produced by PCUSA, A Corporation for distribution. These items are stated at average cost.

Property and Equipment: Property and equipment consists principally of the PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment, and domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land and property held for disposition.

The PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment are stated at cost, or fair value at the date of donation, if donated. The domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, racial ethnic schools, undeveloped land and other properties are recorded based on fair value at the date of donation, appraisal value or replacement cost. Expenditures of greater than $5,000 which increase values or extend the useful lives of the respective assets are capitalized. Depreciation is computed using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the assets.

PCUSA, A Corporation holds title to various other foreign properties. Such properties include properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land and property held for disposition. Shared Services has administrative responsibility for property taxes, insurance, maintenance and improvements for these properties. Generally, it is PCUSA, A Corporation’s policy to exclude the cost or donated value of foreign properties from its financial records.

PCUSA, A Corporation reviews for the impairment of long-lived assets subject to depreciation and amortization, including property and equipment, whenever events or changes in circumstances indicate that the carrying amount of these assets may not be recoverable in accordance with ASC 350 and ASC 360. If this review were to result in the conclusion that the carrying value of long-lived assets would not be recoverable, then a write down of the assets would be recorded through a charge to earnings equal to the difference in the fair market value of the assets and their carrying value. No such impairment losses were recognized for the year ended December 31, 2011.

Deferred Revenue: PCUSA, A Corporation holds special events each year. Monies received to support future special events are recorded as deferred revenue.

Collections: PCUSA, A Corporation’s collections consist of works of art, ecclesiastical objects and papers, historical treasures, scientific specimens and other assets. The collections, which were acquired through purchases and contributions since PCUSA, A Corporation’s inception, are not recognized as assets on the consolidated statements of financial position. Purchases of collection items are recorded as decreases in unrestricted net assets in the year in which the items are acquired, or as temporarily or permanently restricted net assets if the assets used to purchase the items are restricted by donors. Contributed collection items are not reflected on the consolidated financial statements. Proceeds from deaccessions or insurance recoveries are reflected as increases in the appropriate net asset classes.

Use of Estimates: The preparation of financial statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements. Estimates also affect the reported amounts of revenue and expenses during the reporting period. The more significant estimates made relate to the valuation of mortgages, loans, and contributions receivable and valuation of investments. Actual results could differ from those estimates.

Income Taxes: The Internal Revenue Service has determined that PCUSA, A Corporation is exempt from income taxes under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. However, PCUSA, A Corporation is subject to federal income tax on any unrelated business taxable income.

Accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America prescribe recognition thresholds and measurement attributes for the financial statement recognition and measurement of a tax position taken or expected to be taken in a tax return. Tax benefits or liabilities will be recognized only if the tax position would “more-likely-than-not” be sustained in a tax examination, with a tax examination being presumed to occur. The amount recognized will be the largest amount of tax benefit or liability that is greater than 50% likely of being realized on examination. For tax positions not meeting the more-likely-than-not test, no tax benefit or liability will be recorded. Management has concluded that they are unaware of any tax benefits or liabilities to be recognized at December 31, 2011 and does not expect this to change in the next 12 months.

PCUSA, A Corporation would recognize interest and penalties related to uncertain tax positions in interest and income tax expense, respectively. PCUSA, A Corporation has no amounts accrued for interest or penalties as of December 31, 2011. PCUSA, A Corporation is no longer subject to examination by taxing authorities for the years before December 31, 2008.
NOTE 2 – BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES (Continued)

Subsequent Events: Management has performed an analysis of the activities and transactions subsequent to December 31, 2011 to determine the need for any adjustments to and/or disclosures within the audited financial statements for the year ended December 31, 2011. Management has performed their analysis through May 8, 2012, which is the date the financial statements were available to be issued.

Income received by PCUSA, A Corporation from the Foundation is net of outside investment managers, custodian and Foundation administrative fees.

NOTE 5 – FUNDS HELD IN TRUST BY OTHERS

Funds held in trust by others represent resources neither in the possession nor under the control of PCUSA, A Corporation, but held and administered by outside trustees, with PCUSA, A Corporation deriving only income from such funds. Such investments are recorded in the consolidated statement of financial position at the fair value of the principal amounts, which represents the estimated present value of the expected future cash flows, and the income, including fair value adjustments, is recorded in the consolidated statement of activities and changes in net assets.
NOTE 6 – ENDOWMENT COMPOSITION

Interpretation of Relevant Law:  UPMIFA was adopted by the Commonwealth of Kentucky in March 2010 and is effective July 2010. The Organization interprets UPMIFA as requiring the preservation of the fair value of the original gift as of the gift date of the donor-restricted endowment funds absent explicit donor stipulations to the contrary. As a result of this interpretation, the Organization classes as permanently restricted net assets (a) the original value of gifts donated to the permanent endowment, (b) the original value of subsequent gifts to the permanent endowment and (c) accumulations to the permanent endowment made in accordance with the direction of the applicable donor gift instrument at the time the accumulation is added to the fund. The remaining portion of the donor-restricted endowment fund that is not classified in permanently restricted net assets is classified as temporarily restricted net assets until those amounts are appropriated for expenditure by the Organization in a manner consistent with the standard of prudence prescribed by UPMIFA.

In accordance with UPMIFA, the Organization considers the following factors in making a determination to appropriate or accumulate donor-restricted endowment funds:

(1) The duration and preservation of the fund
(2) The purposes of the donor-restricted endowment fund
(3) General economic conditions
(4) The possible effect of inflation and deflation
(5) The expected total return from income and the appreciation of investments
(6) Other resources of the Organization
(7) The investment policies of the Organization.

Appropriation of Endowment Assets:  PCUSA, A Corporation has a spending formula agreement with the Foundation whereby PCUSA, A Corporation receives investment income from unrestricted and restricted endowments held by the Foundation on behalf of the General Assembly for mission use.

Starting with calendar year 2011, spending is 90% of the prior year’s spending amount in dollar terms. This adjusted policy will continue until the standard spending formula (5% of the five year average asset value, calculated using an 18 month lag) results in a spending amount that is less than 5% of the current asset value, at which time the standard policy will again be used to determine the spending level. It is anticipated that payments will approximate the estimated sustainable rates of total return (income and capital appreciation) after inflation. The spending formula will be monitored to determine the effects of changing return and inflation expectations on the preservation of purchasing power and the generation of appropriate levels of spendable income.

Investment Policies: The Trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation are charged with the responsibility of managing the endowment assets of the Church. The overall goal in management of these funds is to generate a long-term total rate of return that provides sustainable distributions to support the mission within reasonable levels of risk.

The Trustees adhere to modern portfolio theory, which has as its basis risk reduction through diversification. Diversification is obtained through the use of multiple asset classes as well as multiple investments within these asset classes. Asset classes that may be used include (but are not limited to) domestic and international stocks and bonds, hedge funds, private equity (venture capital and corporate finance), and real property (real estate, minerals, and timber). The investment strategy is implemented through the selection of external advisors and managers with expertise and successful histories in the management of specific asset classes.

The Trustees believe their role is one of setting and reviewing policy; and retaining, monitoring, and evaluating advisors and investment managers. It is the Trustees’ desire to find ways to invest these funds in accordance with the social witness principles of the PCUSA. The Trustees will review the investment policy statement at least annually.

The primary financial objectives of the investment funds (“Fund”) are to (1) provide a stream of relatively stable and constant earnings in support of annual budgetary needs and (2) to preserve and enhance the real (inflation-adjusted) purchasing power of the Fund.

The long-term investment objective of the Fund is to attain a real total annualized return of at least 5%. The calculation of real total return includes all realized and unrealized capital changes plus all interest, rent, dividend, and other income earned by the portfolio, adjusted for inflation, during a year, net of investment expenses, on average, over a five to seven year period. Secondary objectives are to (1) outperform the Fund’s custom benchmark, a weighted average return based on the target asset allocation and index returns and (2) to outperform the median return of a pool of endowment funds with broadly similar investment objectives and policies. The Fund’s objective is to attain estimated nominal compound return of 7.8% with a standard deviation of 10.9% of the current portfolio.

NOTE 7 – MORTGAGES AND LOANS ON CHURCHES AND MANSES (Continued)

The ability of each borrower congregation to pay PCUSA, A Corporation for the loan(s) made to the congregation may depend on the contributions the congregation receives from its members. Therefore, payments to PCUSA, A Corporation may depend on the continued growth in membership of the borrower congregations, and on the maintenance of adequate contributions by individual members to their congregations, as well as on prudent management by those congregations of their finances. The following is a summary of the gross loan balances for each Synod at December 31, 2011:

NOTE 11 – BENEFITS DATA

As explained below, PCUSA, A Corporation offers a multi-employer defined benefit plan, a major medical plan and a retirement savings plan to eligible employees.

Substantially all employees of PCUSA, A Corporation participate in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Benefits Plan”) which is administered by the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Board of Pensions”). The Benefits Plan is a comprehensive benefits program, which provides a defined benefit pension plan, a long-term disability plan, a death benefits plan and a major medical plan. The assets of the Benefits Plan are commingled for investment purposes; however, accounting for each plan is separately maintained.

The defined benefit pension plan’s total net assets available for benefits, as reported by the Board of Pensions, were approximately $6,185,456,000 at December 31, 2011. The defined benefit pension plan’s total Accumulated Plan Benefit Obligations, as reported by the Board of Pensions, were approximately $5,754,912,000 at December 31, 2011. Since the Benefits Plan is a Church Plan under the Internal Revenue Code, PCUSA, A Corporation has no financial interest in the Benefits Plan assets nor does it have any liability for benefits payable, contingent or otherwise, under the Benefits Plan or its components.

PCUSA, A Corporation pays the entire cost associated with the major medical plan. Employees have the option to purchase additional coverage such as dental, long-term care, and life insurance.

In addition, PCUSA, A Corporation sponsors a retirement savings plan, which is a tax-deferred annuity plan. The employer contribution is designed to provide equalization of the impact of tax differences between clergy and lay personnel. All exempt lay employees are eligible to participate in the employer portion of the plan. PCUSA, A Corporation pays an amount based upon a calculation of tax differences. Substantially all employees may make voluntary contributions to the plan.

PCUSA, A Corporation’s expenses for the year ended December 31, 2011 were as follows:

Administered by Board of Pensions
- Pension plan $3,611,201
- Major medical plan 6,162,724
  $9,733,925

Administered by others - retirement savings plan 321,082

$10,095,007

NOTE 12 – CONCENTRATION OF RISKS

Revenue Risk: PCUSA, A Corporation’s primary source of revenue is contributions from Congregations, Presbyteries, Synods and individuals. The majority of these contributions are transmitted via the Presbyteries that are grouped into 16 Synods comprised of a total of 173 Presbyteries. The following is a summary of the contributions by each of the Synods during the year ended December 31, 2011:

Credit Risk: PCUSA, A Corporation maintains cash and cash equivalents with various financial institutions. At times, such cash and cash equivalents may be in excess of the FDIC insurance level.

At December 31, 2011, approximately 0.7% of total short-term investments and long-term investments held by the Foundation were held in one common stock, The Proctor & Gamble Company.
NOTE 13 – FAIR VALUE

Accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America define fair value as the price that would be received for an asset or paid to transfer a liability (an exit price) in PCUSA, A Corporation’s principal or most advantageous market for the asset or liability in an orderly transaction between market participants on the measurement date and establish a fair value hierarchy which requires an entity to maximize the use of observable inputs and minimize the use of unobservable inputs when measuring fair value. The three levels of inputs that may be used to measure fair value are described below:

Level 1: Quoted prices (unadjusted) for identical assets or liabilities in active markets that the entity has the ability to access as of the measurement date.

Level 2: Significant other observable inputs other than Level 1 prices such as quoted prices for similar assets or liabilities; quoted prices in markets that are not active; or other inputs that are observable or can be corroborated by observable market data.

Level 3: Significant unobservable inputs that reflect a reporting entity’s own assumptions about the assumptions that market participants would use in pricing an asset or liability.

In many cases, a valuation technique used to measure fair value includes inputs from multiple levels of the fair value hierarchy. The lowest level of significant input determines the placement of the entire fair value measurement in the hierarchy.

Treasury bonds are valued at the closing price reported in the active market in which the bonds are traded (Level 1 inputs). Corporate bonds and agency bonds are valued at quoted process for identical or similar assets in non-active markets since these bonds trade infrequently (Level 2 inputs - market). Mortgages are valued using matrix pricing, which is a mathematical technique widely used to value debt securities without relying exclusively on quoted prices for the specific securities, but rather by relying on the securities’ relationship to other benchmark quoted securities (Level 2 inputs - market).

The fair value of the certificates of deposit, equity investments and Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program denominational accounts were recalculated by applying the interest rate to the initial investments and no discount for credit quality or liquidity were determined to be applicable (Level 2 inputs).

PCUSA’s beneficial interest in investments held by the Foundation includes cash and cash equivalents, common stocks, fixed income and equity mutual funds, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program denominational accounts, other investments and alternative investments. PCUSA has the ability to redeem the investments within 60 days; therefore, these investments have been reported as Level 2 inputs. The information that follows is related to PCUSA’s beneficial interest in the Foundation investments.

The carrying amounts for cash and cash equivalents included in investments and as reported in the consolidated statements of financial position approximate their fair value.

The fair values of common stocks are determined by obtaining quoted prices on nationally recognized securities exchanges. These stocks are part of PCUSA, A Corporation’s beneficial interest in the common stocks held at the Foundation (Level 2 inputs - market).

The fixed income and equity mutual funds invest in publicly traded securities and bonds with quoted market prices. PCUSA, A Corporation has full transparency to the holdings of the mutual funds, and the fair value of these investments has been determined by the Fund managers based on the market prices of the underlying holdings. As part of its beneficial interest in these investments at the Foundation, PCUSA, A Corporation has the ability to redeem these investments within 60 days (Level 2 inputs - market).

The fair value of the beneficial interests in the perpetual trust assets (life income funds and funds held in trust by others) is based on a valuation model that calculates the present value of estimated distributed income. The valuation model incorporates the fair value of investment holdings which are readily marketable securities valued at quoted prices and incorporates assumptions that market participants would use in estimating future distributed income. PCUSA, A Corporation is able to compare the valuation model inputs and results to widely available published industry data for reasonableness. PCUSA does not have the ability to redeem the investment within 90 days (Level 3 inputs - market).

As of December 31, 2011, the PCUSA, A Corporation’s alternative investments consist of hedge funds, private equity funds and real estate within the beneficial interest in investments held by the Foundation. The initial fair value of each of the funds investment is initially based on valuations determined by the investment manager using audited net asset values (“NAVs”), as of their most recent statements, adjusted for cash receipts, cash disbursements, and other anticipated income or loss through December 31. The NAV of the fund of funds is determined on the accrual basis of accounting in conformity with U.S. GAAP; in certain instances, secondary investments require reporting other than U.S. GAAP such as International Financial Reporting Standards or Tax Basis accounting, in which case the investment managers adjust values to more accurately comply with U.S. GAAP. The manager utilizes standard valuation procedures and policies to assess the fair value of the underlying investment holdings to derive NAV. For holdings in marketable securities listed on national security exchanges, the values represent the publicly traded values and holdings in private securities are generally valued using the mark-to-market method, which attempts to apply a fair value standard by referring to meaningful third-party transactions, comparable to public market valuations, appraisals and/or the income approach. As part of its beneficial interest in the investments at the Foundation, PCUSA, A Corporation has the ability to redeem the investment at the NAV within 60 days (Level 2 inputs - market and income).

The PCUSA, A Corporation’s management has determined that NAV is a reasonable and prudent estimate of valuations reported by the investment manager of the alternative investments. However, alternative investments are not readily marketable and their estimated value is subject to uncertainty. Therefore, there may be a material difference between their estimated value and the value that would have been used had a readily determinable fair value for such investments existed.

Description of Alternative Investments Strategy for Its Beneficial Interest in Foundation Investments

Hedge Funds
Hedge funds are distinguished by: (1) investment flexibility provided to the manager and (2) the investment objective to earn absolute returns in up and down markets. The flexibility to short securities and use leverage are generally cited as defining characteristics of hedge funds. Equally important is the hedge fund manager’s flexibility to invest in non-traditional securities or employ non-traditional strategies. Investments may be made in the U.S. and abroad. The common performance objective is to earn a return comparable to stocks with volatility between stocks and bonds that result in an attractive return/risk ratio. Investments in hedge funds generally require a lock-up period of one to two years. From the end of the lock-up period, there can be additional limitations (e.g. gates) on the liquidity of limited partner capital.

Private Equity
Private equity funds make investments in private companies in the U.S. and abroad or take public companies private. Investment strategies include venture capital, distressed debt and buyouts. At the company level, private equity capital funds new technologies, expands working capital, funds acquisitions, or strengthens a company balance sheet. Private equity investing can require long holding periods and thus fund partnership terms require long lock-up periods for investor committed capital. Given higher levels of risk and illiquidity than the public markets, private equity funds are expected to achieve a long term investment return of public equities, plus a return premium. Investments in private equity do not allow for withdrawals from the partnership until the partnership is dissolved, unless special approval is awarded by the general partner. In nearly all of the partnerships, there are special provisions that allow for the life of the entity to be extended beyond the original dissolution date, typically two to four years.

Real Estate
Private real estate funds make investments in commercial real estate properties in the U.S. and abroad. Primary property types include office, multi-family, retail, hotel, industrial and undeveloped land. Investment strategies include value-added initiatives such as lease-up, renovations and repositioning of existing property and more opportunistic initiatives such as development and redevelopment. Private real estate investing can require long holding periods and thus fund partnership terms require long lock-up periods for investor committed capital. Given higher levels of risk and illiquidity than the public real estate market (e.g. REITs), private real estate funds are expected to achieve a long term investment return of REITs, plus a return premium. Investments in private real estate do not allow for withdrawals from the partnership until the partnership is dissolved, unless special approval is awarded by the general partner. In nearly all of the partnerships, there are special provisions that allow for the life of the entity to be extended beyond the original dissolution date, typically two to four years.

NOTE 15 – COMMITMENTS AND CONTINGENCIES

PCUSA, A Corporation holds and participates in an insurance fund (the “Fund”) that exists to provide a source of funds for that portion of certain losses not covered by commercial insurance to cover deductibles on commercial insurance and for certain classes of uninsured losses. Various General Assembly-level agencies and corporations are included in the Fund. The largest possible loss to be assumed in any one event or occurrence is $250,000, with $1,000,000 as the largest potential aggregate of all claims in a single calendar year.

The minimum balance of the self-insurance fund shall not fall below $5,000,000 as a result of claims paid. In the event this happens, an assessment will be made to the insured entities to return the fund to the $5,000,000 minimum balance. The assessment will be based on each insured entity’s 5-year loss ratio. A 1% minimum assessment will be made by the entities that have not experienced any losses in the 5-year period. The balance of the Fund held by PCUSA, A Corporation was $5,212,977 at December 31, 2011.

Additionally, PCUSA, A Corporation has excess insurance coverage for certain losses covered by commercial insurance up to $25 million per occurrence on a policy that sits over the general liability and auto liability policies.

During the ordinary course of business, PCUSA, A Corporation is subject to pending and threatened legal actions. Management of PCUSA, A Corporation does not believe that any of these actions will have a material adverse effect on PCUSA, A Corporation’s consolidated financial position or change in net assets.

NOTE 16 – RELATED PARTY TRANSACTIONS

The Foundation provides certain investment, custodial and deferred giving services to PCUSA, A Corporation. The Foundation recoups the cost of those services not covered from the income of its own endowment funds and the annual grant from the General Assembly by quarterly charges against the investment pools in which the funds administered by the Foundation are invested. These charges were recovered equally from the principal and income of these pools. Such costs consist of salary and benefits (50% of the Foundation’s operating expenses), outside investment services (23% of the Foundation’s operating expenses) and other operating expenses (27% of the Foundation’s operating expenses).

The income received by PCUSA, A Corporation from the Foundation is net of outside investment managers, custodial and Foundation administrative fees as described previously. PCUSA, A Corporation’s investments and unrestricted and restricted endowment funds held by the Foundation on behalf of the General Assembly at December 31, 2011, totaled approximately $364 million.

The Foundation’s custodial cost recovery and investment management fees are assessed daily based on the prior day’s market value against the total fund.

There are certain church loan funds whereby the fiduciary ownership belongs to the Board of National Missions, a constituent corporation of the Foundation. Accordingly, these funds are not reflected in the consolidated financial statements but are administered by PCUSA, A Corporation. These loan funds were approximately $207 million at December 31, 2011.

PCUSA, A Corporation served as a receiving agent for funds designated for the Board of Pensions. PCUSA, A Corporation received $1,834,980 for the year ended December 31, 2011, of which $574,026 was yet to be remitted to the Board of Pensions.

PCUSA, A Corporation leases office space and provides administrative support to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (“PILP”) by contract. For the year ended December 31, 2011, administrative support charged to PILP was $13,5438. Office space charged to PILP was $54,615 for 2011.

On June 29, 2000, PCUSA, A Corporation entered into an operating agreement with PILP under which PILP will provide administrative services (e.g., origination and loan servicing) for PCUSA, A Corporation’s church loan program at cost in an effort to streamline the coordination process between PCUSA, A Corporation’s church loan program and PILP’s loan program. PCUSA, A Corporation reimbursed PILP $284,601 for the actual costs of such services during 2011.

PCUSA, A Corporation and PILP have issued joint loans through a participation arrangement. For the year ended December 31, 2011, total loans outstanding were $37,032,384 under this participation arrangement.

The current commitment, effective May 1, 2010, to PILP is a five-year commitment to invest up to $5,000,000 in short and intermediate term deposit accounts. As of December 31, 2011, investments with PILP were $9,436,185. At December 31, 2011, fixed interest rates ranged from 1.09% to 2.27% and the adjustable rate ranged from 1.00% to 1.39%. For the year ended December 31, 2011, the Foundation did not invest with PILP from PCUSA, A Corporation’s unrestricted endowment funds.

PCUSA, A Corporation leases office space to Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (“PPC”) under an operating lease. For the year ended December 31, 2011, rental income was $199,494. Future minimum rental income under the operating lease, which expires in December 2014 with an option to renew, is $428,323 annually.

Other related expenses charged to PPC for telephone, postage and copy services were $85,478 in 2011. Also, a new phone system and a new computer were purchased during 2011 at a total cost of $17,272 charged to PPC.

PPC pays PCUSA for supplemental warehousing and distribution services. Fees paid by PPC under this agreement in 2011 were $17,770 for fulfillment fees and $124,024 for freight.

PPC publishes various pamphlets, magazines, and books for PCUSA, A Corporation during the year on a project-by-project basis. There were no expenses related to this type of work in 2011. PPC also pays PCUSA, A Corporation for advertising space in various church publications. Advertising expense under such arrangements was $1,796 in 2011.

PCUSA, A Corporation participates in commercial insurance programs, whereby premiums are negotiated and paid by PCUSA, A Corporation. The Board of Pensions, Foundation, PILP and PPC reimburse PCUSA, A Corporation for expenses paid on their behalf. Expenses incurred for commercial insurance paid by PCUSA, A Corporation for December 31, 2011:
