MEMORIAL MOMENT FOR SILAS KESSLER, MODERATOR OF THE 175TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (1963), UPCUSA

Bob Houser presented a memorial moment for former Moderator Silas Kessler:

The Reverend Silas G. Kessler, the senior former General Assembly Moderator of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), died November 15 at the age of 100 in Hastings, Nebraska. Kessler was Moderator of the 1963 General Assembly of the former United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA). Born in St. Louis, Missouri, on August 29, 1911, Dr. Kessler followed his father into the ministry, earning his Doctor of Divinity from the University of Dubuque (Iowa) in 1934. Kessler graduated from the University of Dubuque and the University of Dubuque Theological Seminary. He served pastorates in Farmington, Iowa, and Fullerton, Nebraska, and then in 1940 was called to be pastor of First Presbyterian Church of Hastings, where he served until his retirement in 1976. After retiring in 1976, Silas went on to serve as an interim pastor for fifteen additional churches. During his tenure in Hastings, Kessler also served as president of the Nebraska Council of Churches, as a member of the board of trustees at Hastings College for fifty years, as a member of the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation Board, and as the first elected moderator of the Synod of Lakes and Prairies. For his remarkable service to the college, he was inducted into the Pro Rege Society in 1997 and received the President’s Award in 1998. But it was his humble spirit and inspired preaching that left the strongest impressions on current First Presbyterian pastor William Nottage-Tacey. When one thinks of Silas Kessler words like integrity, scholar, statesmanship, wit and wisdom, faithfulness, dignity, humility, warmth, compassion, pastoral professionalism, immediately come to mind. Some time ago a phrase from a Eugene Petersen book seemed to me so apt in summing up Si’s life “… a long obedience in the same direction.”

Taking his service to the community and the larger world, Silas was also a member of the Kiwanis for more than thirty-five years, a member of the Salvation Army board, and a member of the board for the Hastings Literacy Program. Taking his ministry into the world, Silas preached an inaugural sermon for the establishment of Presbyterian Church of Chili, led a conference of Coptic pastors for a week in Egypt, and attended a summer institute at Mansfield, Oxford, and St. Andrews, Scotland. One of the most memorable experiences for Silas was participating as guest minister for two Sundays in a church in Beruit and spending a week in the Holy Land.

Consent Agenda

Financial Implications

There are no recommendations contained in this report that have financial implications.

I. For Plenary Action

The Assembly Committee on Review of General Assembly Permanent Committees:

1. Commends the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) for its work, accomplishments, and insights gained in providing a self-study.

2. Recommends that the following report on the Review of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution be received.

Report on the Review of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC)

Introduction: The review of General Assembly permanent committees was conducted according to the provisions in the Standing Rules and the standards in the Manual of the General Assembly.

Mission: Created with the reunion of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America and the Presbyterian Church in the United States in 1983, the ACC serves and supports the church’s mission by providing the General Assembly advice in matters of interpretation and amendment of the Constitution of the PC(USA) and assisting the General Assembly to make choices about the interpretation and amendment of the Constitution, and more particularly, the Book of Order, with an understanding of the context of their choices and the consequences of proposed actions. To perform this function, the ACC prepares advice to commissioners at each assembly as to each item of business seeking an interpretation or amendment of the Book of Order.

Membership: The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) is composed of nine voting members, who are required by the current Manual of the General Assembly to be stated clerks or former stated clerks of synods or presbyteries, former members of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly, polity professors, or other qualified persons with knowledge of and experience with the Constitution and polity of the church. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly is a member ex officio without vote.

Process: The Advisory Committee on the Constitution provided a self-study based on their work for the years 2005–2011. The General Assembly Committee to Review Permanent Committees reviewed the self-study, examined the survey results, and interviewed members of the ACC.

Findings:

A. Fidelity to Mission and Partnership

1. Does the ACC, as it was created by the church, serve and support the church’s mission in a particular area? Does the ACC demonstrate a constant faithfulness to and fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA)?

The ACC counsel to the General Assembly is expressed in a manner that is clear and understandable to the General Assembly commissioners and any audience present at the General Assembly committee meeting. Most importantly, the ACC strives to be neutral in political tone and does not advocate a position of any entity or group of the PC(USA). The ACC recognizes that its neutrality may be misinterpreted as advocacy in some cases.

2. Does the basic process of the ACC demonstrate fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its establishing deliverance, charter, or mandate from the assembly? Does the ACC exhibit leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources in which the ACC acts?

The ACC is faithful to its mission as set forth in its mandate from the assembly. There is an obvious connection between the quality and credentials of the persons selected for service in the ACC and the nature and degree of steadfast personal dedication of the ACC’s membership.

3. Does the ACC exhibit practical cooperation with the other agencies or committees of the church in areas of overlapping responsibility and opportunity?

The work of the ACC is narrowly focused and advisory in nature and does not overlap the work of other committees or agencies of the General Assembly.
4. Does the ACC provide timely responses to directives and requests from the General Assembly?

Yes. The 120-day deadline for new business before the General Assembly prompts a timely but thorough and comprehensive response.

B. Effectiveness of Service

1. Does the ACC have a defined and consistent process for completing its work?

Yes. They have a very detailed and sufficient manual.

2. Does the ACC have a regular process of self-evaluation of its services?

Yes. The ACC goes through biennial self-evaluations. Accountability and communication issues are being investigated by the ACC. The structure of how the ACC performs is a subject for periodic review.

3. Does the ACC employ a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large?

The ACC’s advice is evident in most pieces of business brought before the General Assembly. The communication of the advice of the ACC is the responsibility of the Office of the General Assembly.

4. Does the ACC utilize current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission?

Yes. The recommendations of the ACC to the various General Assemblies regarding overtures, requests, and referrals continue to be read. The ACC offers a website, www.pcusa.org/acc.

5. Does the ACC have a developed vision and plan for its work in light of its historic mandate and the emerging issues before and context of the PC(USA)?

The ACC consistently evaluates constitutional matters before the General Assembly with neutrality. It takes great pains to give careful and constructive critique to proposals.

Report 2: Report on Review of the Advisory Committee on Litigation [See p. 1617.]

The Committee on the Review of GA Permanent Committees:

1. Commends the Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL) for its work and accomplishments, and for the very interesting report to our committee.

2. Recommends that the following report on the Review of the Advisory Committee on Litigation is received.

Report on the Review of the Advisory Committee on Litigation

Introduction: The review of General Assembly permanent committees was conducted according to the provisions in the Standing Rules and the standards in the Manual of the Assembly.

Mission: The mission of the Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL) is to advise the Stated Clerk regarding participation in litigation related to matters of civil and religious liberty, relations between church and state, and any other matters related to the mission and interest of the church.

Membership: The Advisory Committee on Litigation is made up of six elected persons who are members of a PC(USA) council. Ordinarily attorneys-at-law, these persons are experienced in legal fields that relate to issues that may be the subject of legal proceedings in which the church is, or may become, interested.

Process: The ACL provided a self-study and summary based on their work since 2008. The General Assembly Committee to Review Permanent Committees reviewed the self-study (which includes an evaluation by the ACL’s only “client,” the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA)) and interviewed the moderator of the ACL.

Findings:

A. Fidelity to Mission and Partnership

1. Does the ACL serve and support the church’s mission in a particular area? Does the ACL exhibit a constant faithfulness to and in fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA)?

The ACL serves to advise the Stated Clerk on the complicated connection between the social witness of the General Assembly and the secular judicial process. The committee has fulfilled their charge faithfully and has carried it out well in their detailed and nuanced advice to the Stated Clerk.
2. Does the basic process of the ACL demonstrate fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its establishing deliverance, charter, or mandate from the assembly. Does the ACL exhibit leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources in which the ACL acts?

The ACL has consistently advised the Stated Clerk based on the seventeen criteria in the Criteria for Evaluation established by the General Assembly. The members of the committee are ready at a moment’s notice to review complicated cases, briefs, and social policy within a relatively short time frame and honestly discuss the effects of any particular amicus witness.

3. Does the ACL exhibit practical cooperation with the other agencies or committees of the church in areas of overlapping responsibility and opportunity?

The ACL has received for its review several potential amicus opportunities for social witness from other agencies or committees of the PC(USA) and seems to take seriously the difficult work of other agencies and committees.

4. Does the ACL provide timely responses to directives and requests from the General Assembly?

The assembly has not issued directives or requests to the ACL. The committee uses all of the social policy given by the General Assembly in its evaluation of potential amicus briefs in particular cases.

B. Effectiveness of Services

1. Does the ACL have a defined and consistent process for completing its work?

The committee has followed its established criteria and has always been available to advise the Stated Clerk either by e-mail, conference call, or face-to-face meeting, often evaluating highly complicated issues. These evaluations often happen with little advance notice and the Stated Clerk is grateful to the members of the committee for their attention to highly complex issues within a short time frame.

2. Does the ACL have a regular process of self-evaluation of its services?

The committee gives to the assembly a regular assessment of the judicial cases in which the amicus briefs were filed.

3. Does the ACL employ a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large?

The committee’s primary role is to advise the Stated Clerk only, so the committee itself does not have a major interpretive role to the church. However, the Office of the General Assembly has established a website so that the church can be aware of the committee’s procedures and the briefs filed by the Stated Clerk.

4. Does the ACL utilize current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission?

The ACL makes regular and effective use of technology in its work.

5. Has the ACL developed a vision and plans for its work in light of its historic mandate and the emerging issues before and context of the PC(USA)?

The committee holds a face-to-face meeting every two to three years in which it reviews the General Assembly social witness and current issues before the judicial system to advise the Stated Clerk on opportunities to judicially make witness. This has led to giving priority in briefs to issues of First Amendment Establishment and Free Exercise clause interpretations, human rights, and justice for immigrants.

The Committee on the Review of General Assembly Permanent Committees recommends that the following report on the Review of the General Assembly Committee on Representation is received.

Report on the Review of the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR)

Introduction: The review of General Assembly permanent committees was conducted according to the provisions in the Standing Rules and the standards in the Manual of the Assembly.

Mission: The mission of the GACOR is to promote and review the PC(USA)’s commitment to inclusiveness; and advocate for full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life for all persons or groups within its membership, as outlined in F-1.0403. The GACOR continues to assist the church, with particular concern at the national level, to seek new openness, to unity in diversity, through the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Membership: Serving on the GACOR at the time of the report are fourteen elected persons from the sixteen synods.
Process: The GACOR provided a self-study based on their work for the past three years as well as a thorough powerpoint presentation. The General Assembly Committee to Review Permanent Committees thoroughly reviewed the self-study and interviewed several members along with the Reverend Molly Casteel who staffs the GACOR.

Findings:

A.  Fidelity to Mission and Partnership

1. Does the GACOR, as it was created by the church, serve and support the church’s mission in a particular area?

   Yes. The GACOR serves and supports the church’s mission in conformity with its mandate. We want to encourage GACOR to continue and expand communications of their valuable work. We also encourage them to continue exploring how to define theological diversity. Given the Book of Order and the GACOR mandate, we would like clear communication on how they interpret that mandate to a greater level of specificity.

2. Does GACOR exhibit a constant faithfulness to and in fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA)?

   Yes. The GACOR does exhibit a constant faithfulness to and fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA) in conformity with its mandate. We especially appreciate their work in diversity employment as well as committee appointments. We concur with their goal of better interaction and cooperation with the General Assembly Nominating Committee.

3. Does the basic process of the GACOR demonstrate fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in the Book of Order?

   Yes, but clearer and measurable goals for their work would be valuable.

4. Does the GACOR exhibit leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources in which GACOR acts?

   Yes. The work with the General Assembly and synods has been useful and needs to be continued. We hope that their work with synods will help the synods raise diversity awareness and implementation at the presbytery level.

B. Effectiveness of Services

1. Does the GACOR have a defined and consistent process for completing its work?

   Yes. The GACOR is hard at work defining a process for completing its expanded diversity criteria, specifically in the area of theological expression and other developing areas of inclusion needs.

Memorial Moment for William Lytle, Moderator of the 190th General Assembly (1978), UPCUSA

Moderator Presa recognized Vice-Moderator Tom Trinidad to assume the chair. Vice-Moderator Trinidad recognized Teaching Elder Dan Fultz, from the Presbytery of Mission, for a memorial moment for Bill Lytle:

The Reverend Dr. William P. Lytle
July 3, 1923–May 27, 2011
Moderator of the General Assembly of the former United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America
(the “northern stream”) in 1978.

William P. “Bill” Lytle was a man in whom there was no guile. He was the same, robed for preaching, holding the hand of a mourning friend, watching a tense ballgame, on the racquetball court (Bill was just a little bit competitive) or fiercely, but gently, advocating for unpopular justice issues. He wore the mantle of office as preacher, teacher, church leader, and moderator with grace and dignity, never abusing the powers of the office. He tackled the toughest issues of his day, never engaging in attacks against any person, while challenging each in regard to their positions or actions. After a particularly disappointing effort, Bill was asked how he managed to deal with the frustration. He replied, “My job is to keep the faith, not to be successful.”

He was a child of the manse, raised in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Lytle attended the College of Wooster and Princeton Seminary, and was ordained as minister of the Word and Sacrament in 1947. For fourteen years, he was a circuit preacher for Presbyterian Home Missions in rural areas of New Mexico. Lytle fondly referred to this formative ministry as the “Cowboy Campfire Church.”

Lytle then directed the Ozarks Area Missions at the University of the Ozarks in Clarksville, Ark., for eleven years. He served on the Arkansas State Prison Board during his time in the state and was instrumental in improvements to what was a then a draconian prison system.

After itinerating in Mexico, Bill was called as pastor of Madison Square Presbyterian Church in San Antonio, Texas, a congregation with a history of involvement in the greater community. He pastored there for seventeen years until his “retirement.”

Bill and his late wife, Faith, are credited with founding the first local affiliate of Habitat for Humanity within the United States. Habitat for Humanity in San Antonio released a statement upon his death, which credited the Lytle’s with the 700 homes it had built so far. “Along with his wife, Faith, Bill brought the idea of partnership housing to San Antonio,” it said. “There are more than 700 hardworking families in need who owe their lives in their Habitat homes not only to the volunteers and supporters who helped build them, but to the Lytle’s for putting their faith into action.” Their model for fair, affordable housing has been adopted by hundreds of Habitat for Humanity affiliates across the nation.

Bill’s service to the Presbyterian Church (USA) and its predecessors was wide and constant. He served on the Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations (COEMAR) for sixteen years, chaired the GAMC and the Administrative Commission on Cuba. Bill was a counselor to numerous missionaries and mentored many pastors. His wisdom was often sought when a reconciling influence was needed in times of crisis or strife. He was a strong advocate for reunion of the PCUS and the UPCUSA. Bill was awarded honorary doctoral degrees from Wooster College, Ohio, Tusculum College, Tennessee, and the University of the Ozarks, Arkansas.

His vision went far beyond the walls of the Presbyterian church. He spelled out his credo late in life, when, in unpublished notes he said, “Maybe the time has come for religious people to use this more inclusive term [People of the Way]. We still can declare and be proud of our roots, Jewish, Muslim, Christian, Buddhist, Sikh, Hindu, but at the same time we can declare our oneness in God’s family. ‘People of the Way’ is a term big enough to include every religion and no religion. It could well be the unifying term that the world needs.”

Bill never took the easy road, but when one was led to follow him into the briar patch, he always made the journey an adventure of grace—enjoyable and worthwhile. His engagement of injustice was many-faceted.
On the one hand, he and others trained at the Saul Alinsky Institute, and, aligned with the San Antonio Archdiocese and other community organizations, organized Communities for Public Service, to confront the established city government over the lack of infrastructure in the poorer sections of the city.

On the other hand, learning from his Mennonite brethren, he was an active member and advocate for the Fellowship of Reconciliation from 1969 until his death. Those who were blessed to know and serve in ministry with Bill will always remember him as one of the most kind, caring, humble and sincere persons they have known. Bill was preceded in death by his wife of 58 years, Faith Williamson Lytle. He is survived by his beloved wife, Renate Frick Lytle, two sons, Paul and David, and two daughters, Ruth and Aimee, and numerous grandchildren.

MEMORIAL MINUTE FOR HOWARD RICE,
MODERATOR OF THE 191ST GENERAL ASSEMBLY (1979), UPCUSA

Moderator Presa recognized Kathy Runyeon, Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of San Francisco, to deliver a memorial for Howard Rice, Moderator of the 191st General Assembly.

Howard Leland Rice Jr.—1931–2010

A Wisconsin native and graduate of Carroll College, Howard attended McCormick Theological Seminary, and found a passion for urban ministry. In 1956, he was ordained by Winnebago Presbytery and called first to serve in Minneapolis then later re-called to Chicago, a city he loved. There he served three small struggling congregations, successfully merging them into one multiracial, bilingual congregation and with that work he established his understanding of ministry to and for all of God’s people.

In 1968, Howard was called to San Francisco Theological Seminary (SFTS) as professor of ministry, and in 1981 he added responsibility as chaplain of the seminary. Howard remained at SFTS until his retirement in 1997.

Howard made the move west, not because he had lost love for the life of a congregation, but because of declining health and loss of physical energy. He was told he had multiple sclerosis; that diagnosis was later, much later, corrected to spinal cord damage. Howard spent the rest of his life and ministry on crutches and then in a wheelchair—but his physical condition did not dampen his spirit, feistiness, or zest for service.

Howard said of himself that he was something of a bulldog. Sister Elizabeth Liebert, dean at SFTS, said in his eulogy that “Howard had a huge heart for people, for ministry, and for the church that he served so long and well. Always standing with the underdog, he was persistent to the point of stubbornness in defending them.”

While at SFTS, Howard taught Presbyterian History and Polity and he instilled in his students a genuine love for how our polity is a living out of our faith. Howard taught polity as a tool to aid in God’s work to church bodies what God intends for Christ’s body.

Howard was elected Moderator of the 191st General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of the U.S.A. in 1979. We were moving toward reunion of the UPCUSA and the PCUS and it was fitting for Howard to be an agent for reconciliation.

One mark of that year was the growing awareness of accessibility, or too often the lack thereof, of our churches’ facilities. On his tours as Moderator, when Howard came to visit in his wheelchair, churches had to retrofit to be able to welcome him. It was apt that he forced us to face the ways we may keep some people out of our sanctuaries.

In the early 1970s, Howard’s emphases in ministry had turned to recognition of the need to feed both mind and soul. He began a series of spiritual retreats for pastors in the San Francisco Bay Area and for the next twenty plus years he helped Presbyterians and other Protestants discover spirituality in the Reformed tradition and he assisted as SFTS developed a pioneering program in Christian Spirituality. Another mark of his year as Moderator was Howard’s organization of spiritual retreats in three parts of the country and his urging each presbytery to send a delegate.

Howard’s publications included Reformed Spirituality: An Introduction for Believers; The Pastor as Spiritual Guide, and other texts exploring prayer, worship, Presbyterian history in the western United States, and a study of our ordination questions.

Over the years, Howard was recognized and honored in many ways, as a recipient of the McCormick Distinguished Alumnus Award and with honorary doctorates from Carroll College and from Whitworth College in Spokane. Upon retirement in 1997, Howard was named professor of ministry emeritus by SFTS and was paid tribute in the U.S. Congress for his work as a scholarly and spiritual leader.

Even after retirement, Howard remained in service to the church, including service as interim president of Cook College and Theological School in Tempe Arizona.
In his final years, Howard grieved mightily the 2004 death from a brain tumor of his oldest daughter, Wendy, who was also a minister of the PC(USA). Howard is survived by his wife, Nancy, their second daughter Amanda and both daughters’ children. He is also survived by many generations of students.

Again from Liebert’s eulogy for Howard: “He is beloved by hundreds of students, pastors, and church folks, whose hopes and struggles he held dear. We mourn the loss of mentor, colleague, spiritual advisor, friend, and consummate pastor.”

Let us thank God for the life and ministry of Howard Rice.

“The Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to urge General Assembly agencies, presbyteries, congregations, and individual Presbyterians to [do the following:] [take actions concerning the place and plight of immigrant people, regardless of status, in our neighborhoods and communities of faith.]

“The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a resolution calling for comprehensive legislation for immigrants living and working in the United States. The conditions that brought about that resolution have not improved; therefore, we ask the General Assembly, the presbyteries, the congregations, and individual Presbyterians and their families to do the following:

1. Affirm the scriptural call to provide hospitality to and advocate [for] justice for immigrants regardless of status.

2. Encourage presbyteries to [create] [build bridges by creating] cross-cultural ministry teams and immigration issues task forces (or their equivalent) that will:

   a. identify and become acquainted with immigrant people in their communities;

   b. encourage and support pastors and congregations whose memberships and ministries are directly impacted by the immigration crisis;

   c. encourage and financially support the education of immigrant people in a holistic way—for example through English as Second Language programs, after-school programs for young children, and scholarships for college and graduate studies; [and]

   d. provide opportunities to celebrate and learn from the culture and languages of the immigrants’ homelands while helping the immigrants to navigate within the culture and language of their new home.[,][2]

   [e. resist the temptation to let language and culture be a barrier in our call to meet new people; and]

   [f. lift up the gifts immigrant people bring to the Church by sharing stories of joy and challenge while experiencing mutual transformation.]

3. Educate and advocate in partnership with religious, business, community, and law-enforcement leaders for [legislative] reform and action [at the national, state, and local level] by:

   [a. continuing to advocate on behalf of Comprehensive Immigration Reform, especially the DREAM Act (Development, Relief and Education for Alien Minors)];

   [b.] [a.] offering legal assistance to immigrants applying for [resident alien] [lawful permanent resident] status or other immigration status;

   [c. advocating for employers’ rights to employ workers, provide safe and reasonable work conditions, and assist employees in the payment of taxes];

   [d.] [b.] focusing law enforcement on the [elimination of criminal behavior without creating an environment of harassment for immigrant people]; [maintenance of community safety and fostering the growth of positive relationships and confidence between law enforcement and immigrant populations; and]

   [e. establishing minimum standards of care for detainees that includes legal representation; and]

   [f] [c.] encouraging all church councils to meet with their state’s Access to Justice Commission (or equivalent) and to encourage their work in honoring principles and values that respect and value immigrants.

4. Partner with religious, business, community, and law-enforcement leaders for legislative reform at the federal level on the following:

   [a. continuing to advocate on behalf of Comprehensive Immigration Reform as outlined in the resource guide published by the American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA). Specifically, it must simultaneously create legal avenues for people to enter the U.S.; allow people already here to earn the opportunity to adjust their status; address the multyear backlogs in family and employment based immigration; and create and implement a smart border security and enforcement regime that respects core principles of due process;]

   [b. actively advocating for legislation such as the DREAM Act (Development, Relief and Education for Alien Minors) that offers hope for young immigrants by providing a pathway to citizenship;]
“[c. advocating against mandatory participation in the E-verify system, in the absence of comprehensive immigration reform, for as long as the E-verify system continues to have a higher than necessary incidence of inaccuracy; and]

“(d. establishing minimum standards of care for detainees that include legal representation.]”

Item 12-04. On Advocating for Comprehensive Immigration Reform—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

That the recommendation is approved with amendment. [See pp. 1142–44.]

Amend the recommendation section of Item 12-04 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Santa Fe overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

“[1. Urge all congregations to consider the biblical mandate to love the stranger among us and to see Jesus in his or her face. To this end we urge congregations to]

“[a. reexamine reasons behind the fears that jobs will be taken away by immigrants in our communities;]

“[b. support denominational goals toward diversity and make efforts toward a better understanding of immigrant sisters and brothers’ language and culture;]

“[c. practice biblical hospitality to immigrant groups, particularly those formed for religious or self-help purposes.]”

“[1.][2.] Urge all councils within the church to join with other faith communities, business organizations, law-enforcement entities, and other civil society groups to educate and advocate for comprehensive immigration reform at the [national, state, and local][federal] level[s]. Elements of such reform, from our perspective, must include:

“a. Making family unity a priority by avoiding separation of families, revising visa preferences and caps, and eliminating visa backlogs;

“b. Providing a reasonable and inclusive path for undocumented migrants presently living in the United States to eventually gain citizenship without imposing punitive costs, wait times, or other irksome conditions;

“c. Facilitating integration of immigrants into their communities by celebrating the culture and languages of their homelands, by providing civics education and legal assistance to regularize their status, and by providing access to all social services;

“d. Requiring humane enforcement procedures that develop measures to reduce human smuggling and migrant deaths, and that aim to eliminate human and civil rights abuses [stemming from indiscriminate raids on homes and workplaces]; abolishing enforcement programs such as Operation Streamline and arrangements that involve local agencies in the enforcement of immigration laws, such as “287(g)” Agreements and the Secure Communities Program;

Comment: The 220th General Assembly (2012) expresses its appreciation to the Presbytery of Albany for raising this matter in such a thorough and compassionate manner.

Item 21-04. Commissioners’ Resolution. On Compassionate Treatment of Veterans Suffering from PTSD, TBI, and/or Other Mental Afflictions Rising from Military Service.

That the recommendation is approved with amendment. [See pp. 1701–1702.]

Approve the recommendation section of Item 20-04 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

1.“Instructs the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to urge that all presbyteries [provide] [offer] training to [facilitate] ministers [of their respective] [and] churches [to identify active or veteran military members of their churches who are at risk due to disorders resulting from injuries, visible and invisible, including Post-Traumatic Stress (PTS) or Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI)] [to recognize and intervene pastorally in instances of veteran military-related Post-Traumatic Stress (PTS)/Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI)], and to be informed about [community and Veterans Administration] resources that are available to help these members and to urge all ministers of particular churches to participate in this training. [To urge presbyteries to draw upon the resources of the Presbyterian Council on Military Chaplains in the provision of training to presbyteries, pastors, and particular churches.]

2. Urges that in this training, pastors be instructed to reach out, not only to the members who are at risk, but to the family members as well as they are also greatly at risk to violence, mood swings, depression, and other symptoms of these combat-induced illnesses.

3. Asks that the OGA instruct both the Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C., and presbyteries to advocate for rights for veterans returning from Iraq/Afghanistan in their respective states. Specific advocacy should include but not be limited to “[* Judicial/Legal Structures]

“[•]—establishing veterans courts in the various jurisdictions throughout the country;

“[•]—mandating sentencing guidelines requiring judges to incorporate treatment as part of the sentencing for veterans that suffer from these disabilities;

“[* Psychiatric/Mental Health Structures]

“[•]—requesting that military and veterans receive [early intervention] treatment for mental afflictions [at the earliest possible time] since it will be most effective if done early and not delayed; “[•]—holistic early intervention strategies that include veterans’ families;

“[•]—strengthening PTSDF/TBI-related transitional care military-to-civilian and hospital-to-community structures.

[* Retraining/Employment Transitional Structures

“[•]—increasing funding for work programs to retrain vets as many of them are trained in skills that don’t readily translate into a civilian workforce.

“[•]—increase funding for retraining and employment transitional counseling structures.

“With these items we hope to promote a welcoming home of our wounded veterans, helping them to connect or reunite with their families, adapting to their challenges through prayer, pastoral counseling, and church support; and to help them reintegrate as happy members of church life and society.”
Item 21-05. Commissioners’ Resolution. On Funding for Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN) for AIDS Competency Training.

Amend Recommendation 3 by striking the existing text and inserting new text to read as follows:

“3. [Provides $25,000 to the Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN) to be utilized to support the development of and expand participation in certification of AIDS competent church and church leaders programs.] [Create an Extra Commitment Opportunity Account to support the AIDS ministry, to be utilized to support the development of and expand participation in certification of AIDS competent church and church leaders programs and distribute information to the mid councils and congregations that better educate the church to the existence of this opportunity.]

Item 21-06. Commissioners’ Resolution. On Calling the Church to a New Way Forward on the Issue of Pregnancies and Abortion.

That the recommendation is disapproved with comment. [See pp. 1705–1706.]

Comment: Item 21-06 calls for “A New Way forward on the issue of pregnancies and abortion.” Considering this resolution invited the committee to consider the 1992 report of the Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion. This noteworthy study brought twenty years of relative peace on a matter that has been a source of intense conflict in the PC(USA) for many years prior to the study. The study accomplished no mean feat in setting forth common ground that Presbyterian can gather around; common ground that eschews partisanship on either side of the cultural divide. We found insight and guidance in this document that was both eloquent and relevant to our work; therefore we do not see the need for a new study but rather commend the existing study to our church.

BUSINESS MEETING XII

The 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Neal Presa, Moderator, 220th General Assembly (2012), in Hall A of the David L. Lawrence Convention Center, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Joan Fong, ruling elder commissioner from the Presbytery of San Francisco, led the assembly in the convening prayer.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Moderator Presa recognized Eustacia Marshall, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, for a report from the committee.

It was announced that minutes of business meetings from Friday and Saturday morning would be approved by a subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

Protests found to be in decorous language are recorded in the Minutes as follows:

Protest on the resignation of the Vice-Moderator—From Jerry Ganfield, commissioner from the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area: “My belief in the meaning of love, grace, liberty and freedom that is embodied in this very day of ‘Freedom,’ July 4, 2012 has been diminished by the ability of unknown individuals or groups causing division, making threats of action after a duly constituted body has elected by 62% a Vice-moderator. I protest the meek and mild leadership that acquiesces to such against the ruling of the body.”

Protest on assembly action in disapproval of a motion for a speak-out and disapproval of a motion to amend the docket for time where commissioners would be told the facts that caused Rev. McCabe to resign—From Marilyn S. Daniel, commissioner from the Presbytery of Transylvania: “I voted in favor of both motions. The disapproval of these motions, particularly #2, deprived me of my right to follow church polity. Based on the little information we were given, I have reason to believe that one or more commissioners violated his/her ordination vows. Without names and facts I cannot proceed to file a disciplinary action.
under D-10. F 3.0205 recognizes that a majority vote determines a decision. Rev. McCabe was confirmed as vice-moderator by 60% of the vote. G 3.0105 provides those in the minority with the proper response. I did not know Rev. McCabe until Sat., during ‘Meet the Moderator Candidates’ time. She was completely open about her role in a same-sex marriage. To the best of my knowledge no one filed a disciplinary action against her as a result; under church polity that would have been the process to follow. To the best of my knowledge, there was no barrier to her election. Therefore, any commissioner who failed to be ‘... governed by the church’s polity … ’ (W-4.4003(e)) would be subject to disciplinary action. Additional violations would involve would be failure to ‘... be a friend of your colleagues in ministry ...,’ failure to ‘... further the peace, unity and purity of the church,’ (W-4.4003(g)) and failure to ‘... fulfill your ministry ... under the authority of Scripture ...’ (W-4.4003(d)) Paul addressed the dangers of gossip—long before social media. We have deeply hurt a life-long young Presbyterian pastor—all of which would have been avoided by following church polity. We failed to name this: injustice. And the bottom line: There will be no woman in top leadership of this church for the next two years.”

Protest on the resignation of the Vice-Moderator—From Paul Harkess, commissioner from the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area: “I protest the action of the 220th General Assembly which gave power to bullies and ignored the assembly’s clear mandate of electing and confirming Tara McCabe as Vice-Moderator. We teach our children that bullying is wrong. What we witnessed at the opening of the plenary today, 7-4-12, was bullying on a personal as well as institutional level. Tara Spuhler McCabe was the target of hate speech and bullying. I am disappointed that she was compelled to resign due to the hate speech contained in blogs and the electronic media. I am also disappointed and distressed by the manner in which this was managed and handled by the Moderator. Capitulating to bullies leads to reduced confidence in his leadership. I am saddened by the divisive and unpleasant tactics which have invaded our plenary at the very point in which we should be seeking the will of God. These tactics should not have been permitted to prevail. These actions threaten the peace, unity and purity of our church, which is a deep violation of the very promises and covenants we made together when we were commissioned for this service.”

Protest on advocacy after the question was called—From Timothy D. Thomas, commissioner from the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley: “After the question was called, a commissioner requested a person to speak for ‘information’ purposes. The person who spoke advocated for the motion and did not answer questions. After the advocacy a vote was taken and the motion passed. I think the vote passed as a result of the vice-moderator’s ineffectiveness to stop the person who was questioned (advocating). I respectfully oppose this action.”

Protest on the resignation of the Vice-Moderator—From Joann Lee, commissioner from the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area: “I protest the action of the 220th General Assembly to allow a small, mean-spirited minority to trump the will of the majority who voted for Tara Spuhler McCabe as Vice-Moderator of the 220th GA. Vice-Moderator Tara Spuhler McCabe received a larger margin of the majority than did the Moderator. Her election was decently and in order and the work of the Holy Spirit in our midst. To allow people outside of or a minority of this assembly to threaten to hijack our process constitutes bullying. And what happened to Vice-Moderator Tara Spuhler McCabe on blogs and the internet also constitutes bullying. To succumb to bullies acts out of fear and we as an assembly are called to be better than that. I protest our failure to stand behind a duly elected vice-moderator.”

Protest on the resignation of the Vice-Moderator—From Kitty Martin, commissioner from the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area: “I am deeply distressed and saddened by the vicious attacks on Tara Spuhler McCabe that led her to resign as Vice-Moderator of this 220th Assembly. I was shocked to hear her address the Assembly, telling us what was happening, and thus resigning to ensure the Assembly could move forward and not be hindered in doing its business. I believe she was bullied—and bullying is wrong in every way. The actions of the attacking people do not preserve the peace, unity, and purity of the church—which we as ruling elders and teaching elders vow to do.”

Protest on the action of choosing the Thursday preacher—From Gregory Roth, commissioner from the Presbytery of San Francisco: “I protest the Thursday Preacher Tony De La Rosa as a choice of the Moderator, as his is in a same sex relationship, which he introduced in his sermon. It points to the ongoing advocacy to violate the constitution. This was inappropriate right before we discussed the subject of same-sex marriage.”

Protest on the actions of a group of commissioners during the report of Committee 13—From Kitty Martin, commissioner from the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area: “Yesterday afternoon and last night, during Committee 13’s (Civil Unions) report to plenary, I observed a small group of commissioners whose movements to get their views expressed on the floor were carefully orchestrated by their ‘floor manager’ commissioner. They were dispersed by this ‘floor manager’ to particular microphones. Now, I realize in itself this is a strategy often used by supporters of particular viewpoints/beliefs on issues before the GA to get certain resolutions approved or not approved. However, this group I observed in action yesterday, I believe acted inappropriately in several ways. Please see bullet points below. This group of commissioners gathered on plenary floor in the back of the commissioner area by my presbytery’s seats. My seat is P60, and I clearly could see these persons—the group remained stationed there throughout Committee 13’s report. Each time Comm. 13’s recommended resolutions were defeated, I watched these commissioners celebrate the defeat—granted the ‘celebration’ was not blatant jumping up and down, but their clustered groups joyful reaction seemed to me to be very disrespectful of those of the commissioners who were hurt—specifically LGBT persons and their friends and supporters. One commissioner, Jodi Craiglow, who appeared to be one of the strategic ‘floor managers’ actually spoke twice on two (2) different recommended resolutions—speaking from different microphones on the same resolution. Both times—she was recognized by the moderator who allowed her to speak twice on the same resolution. I watched her speak from Mike 7 and shortly afterwards she moved to Mike 8 and again was recognized by the moderator on the same resolution. This was repeated on another resolution—2 different microphones, and once again recognized by the moderator.”

Protest of assembly action on Item 13-NB—From Jerry Egger, commissioner from the Presbytery of Wabash Valley: “The Assembly’s vote on Item 13-NB was out of order. The motion before the assembly was to answer all remaining items of Committee 13 by action on 13-NB. When moderator called for a vote, he stated that it was to act on 13-NB in substance [re a period of discernment on marriage]. What the Assembly should have voted on was the procedure of linking other items to 13-NB. I cast my vote (in the positive) assuming I could then vote on the substance of 13-NB in the negative.”

Protest of the Moderator’s failure after vote on Item 13-NB—From Barbara Lutter, commissioner from the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area: “I protest the failure of the Moderator from admonishing the commissioners and delegates’ inappropriate and intimidating conduct on the floor of the plenary immediately following the body’s vote on Item 13-NB. A number of commissioners gathered behind microphone #7, and celebrated in a loud and obvious manner, high-fiving, clapping, and one woman jumping up and down. This indecorous conduct should not have been tolerated and I am profoundly saddened that the leadership did not recognize me to ask that the conduct be admonished. I am profoundly saddened and disappointed that those on the ‘prevailing’ side of this action were so insensitive and inappropriate, and certainly did not create a gracious and loving community.”

Protest of lack of decorum during and after debate on Item 13-NB—From Stan Martin, commissioner from the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area: “It is with displeasure that I submit a protest for lack of decorum and respect allowed during and after debate/discussion on Item 13-NB. I witnessed acts that could be seen as influencing voters and/or intimidation of the speakers to those standing in line waiting to speak. Examples include servicing drinks to those waiting in line to speak on this item, moving speakers to different microphones to seemingly engage in moving the speakers to more favorable microphones, and the appearance of using electronic media to communicate on this item while on the floor. While this may or may not have been the intention, the perception remains. I also witnessed disrespectful acts of self-congratulations following the final vote that disrespected those who may have been hurt by the vote. I respectfully submit this protest and ask the leadership of the General Assembly to remind commissioners to act in respectful, ethical, and proper decorum while in session.”

Protest on assembly action on Item 15-11—From Annie Rawlings, commissioner from the Presbytery of New York City: “The TSAD from the Presbytery of New York City was the second person in line—from the start of consideration of Item 15-11. She was pre-empted repeatedly by people asking questions. The questions had the effect of depriving her voice. This is not decent and in order. This is unfair. People are using questions to shut down debate. She was a microphone #2. Also, the Moderator erred in first saying we would hear from all who had lined up to speak, and then prematurely letting the vote proceed on the substitute motion. He suggested that voting on the substitute motion would not impede debate. However it did cut off debate on divestment. I protest this occurrence in the strongest of terms.”

Protest on the advice of the Stated Clerk on a substitute motion for Item 15-02—From Joanne Hardy, commissioner from the Presbytery of Northern New England: “I submitted a substitute motion for 15-02 which included a clause to divest from Caterpillar. The Stated Clerk ruled it was out of order because he stated that issue had already been answered by 15-11. The original 15-11 motion had included divestment—but the substitute motion which closely resembled 15-10 did not mention divestment. Thus we had no opportunity to vote for or against divestment. PC(USA) could both invest and divest as the committee had intended by recommending both 5-10 and 5-11. Thus I respectfully protest the ruling by the Stated Clerk which did not allow us to vote on divestment.”

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THE REVIEW OF BIENNIAL ASSEMBLIES

Moderator Presa recognized Joan Fong, moderator of the Assembly Committee on the Review of Biennial Assemblies, for a report from the committee.

Item 04-01, Recommendation 3, was approved with amendment. Item 04-01, Recommendation 8 was approved with amendment. Item 04-01, Recommendation 5, was disapproved with comment and with floor amendment to the comment: insert as the first line: [To direct the Stated Clerk to communicate with the presbyteries the need to prioritize sending young adult commissioners under the age of thirty-six to the General Assembly.]

view Biennial Assemblies: [See p. 243.]

Comment: [To direct the Stated Clerk to communicate with the presbyteries the need to prioritize sending young adult commissioners under the age of thirty-six to the General Assembly.] The young adult demographic has been and continues to be an underrepresented group as commissioners to General Assembly. The assembly suggests the com-

In Response to Item 10-03, the 220th General Assembly (2012) approved the following alternate resolution: [See p. 797.]

“In recognition of the new directional goal of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) regarding young adults, which includes reducing the funding responsibilities for individual young adult volunteers, the 220th General Assembly (2012) directs the GAMC to increase promotion of this vital and dynamic program to mid councils while encouraging mid councils to increase their mission funding by 10.01 percent beyond the Pentecost offering over the next five years, dedicated to inspiring, equipping, and connecting with young adults to further enable their ability to serve nationally and internationally in the name of Jesus Christ.”

That the recommendation is approved. [See p. 873.]

That the recommendation is disapproved. [See pp. 838–39.]

Item 10-16. Women of Color Consultation Committee Report—GAMC.

That the recommendation is approved with the following comment: [See pp. 854–55.]

“Even though the overall 2011 consultation was beneficial and sought to do what it was tasked to do according to the 2008 report, Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, we acknowledge that there were painful events that transpired during the consultation for many of its participants. Specifically, generational conflicts, issues of internalized oppression, intersections of race, gender, and class and white and male privilege occurred. These were moments of learning opportunities that were missed. The 2008 report, “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies,” continues to address the problems and issues raised at the 2011 Women of Color Consultation.”

Item 10-01. On Recognizing Bloomfield College as a Racial Ethnic College—From the Presbytery of Newark.

That the recommendation is disapproved with the following comment: [See p. 793.]

Comment: In Sections 8.3 and 8.4 of the 1983 Articles of Agreement between the PCUS and the UPCUSA, a commitment was made to support those schools and institutions “that historically have served Black Americans and those serving other racial ethnic groups.” The General Assembly Mission Council was asked to propose ways in which this responsibility could be fulfilled. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) related schools currently listed as racial ethnic include Barber Scotia, Cook Native American Ministries, Johnson C. Smith University, Knoxville College, Menaual School, Presbyterian Pan American School, and Stillman College. The Christmas Joy Offering was established and has for many years been divided between recognized racial ethnic schools and retired church workers with underfunded pensions.

Many colleges and secondary schools within the United States today accept racial ethnic students and some, like Bloomfield, have a majority of racial ethnic students. While Bloomfield’s recruitment and admission policies should be acknowledged and applauded, the specific nurturing and confidence-building environments provided by the currently recognized racial ethnic schools to their students do not appear to have the same curricular focus in schools such as Bloomfield.

We advise that the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) be asked to develop a brief strategy report that articulates those elements in racial ethnic schools that have effectively generated new and positive racial ethnic leadership within our church and our communities. Bloomfield College should be encouraged to reapply if they feel they meet the criteria once those attributes have been more clearly defined.

Report of the Stated Clerk Nominating Committee 2012

The Stated Clerk Nominating Committee unanimously and enthusiastically recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve that the Reverend Gradye Parsons be elected to a second term as the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Rationale

Gradye Parsons has served faithfully and effectively as Stated Clerk of the General Assembly for the past four years, leading by word and example from a deep, centered spirituality based on his love for Jesus Christ and his church, engaging countless dialogue partners from across the geographic and theological spectrum in the ongoing conversation that is the essence of Presbyterian polity and mission.

Leaders from the six agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) gave independent but highly consistent positive reviews of their experience with Gradye Parsons, citing his calm, clear-eyed, well-grounded approach to myriad aspects of the church’s life and witness. His references, including mid council leaders, pastors, and long-time colleagues, as well as the end-of-term review conducted by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, indicate that he is genuinely called to this ministry as a demonstration of his love of God and neighbor.

During his tenure, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), while undergoing profound and ongoing change, has benefited greatly from having, as its ecclesiastical “Head of Communion,” a person who teaches an adult Sunday school class in his local congregation and insists that “dangerous elders” are the key to the future of the church. His ministry is consistent with the Mission Statement of the Office of the General Assembly, a statement shaped by his vision: “Empowered by the Holy Spirit, the Office of the General Assembly will encourage the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to be a people of hope—seeking together the mind of Christ; working for justice and mercy in the world; and participating in God’s continual reformation of the church.”

The Stated Clerk Nominating Committee believes that Gradye Parsons has fulfilled his ordination vow “to serve the people with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love,” as well as modesty and a pervasive, warm sense of humor. As one reference put it: “He is called to it. He loves the church we are and he believes in the church God wants us to be.”

The members of the committee count it a privilege and a joy to recommend to you the Reverend Gradye Parsons as our nominee for Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

1. Background

The Stated Clerk Nominating Committee was elected by the 219th General Assembly (2010). The nine members include four past General Assembly commissioners. The members are:

Ruling Elders: Reid Beveridge (Wilmington, Delaware); Melissa Kirkpatrick (Gainesville, Virginia).

Teaching Elders: Dan Krebill (Bozeman, Montana); Judith Wellington (Albuquerque, New Mexico).

Three Persons from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly: Dennis Hughes, teaching elder, (Seattle, Washington); Eileen Lindner, teaching elder, (Tenafly, New Jersey); Vincent Thomas, ruling elder, (Minneapolis, Minnesota).

One Person from the General Assembly Mission Council: Matthew Schramm, teaching elder, (Bay City, Michigan).

Mid Council Staff Representative: Terry Epling, teaching elder, (St. Louis, Missouri).

Committee Assistant: Barbara Murphy, ruling elder, (Orange, California).

The committee’s work was governed by the section in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly related to the election of the Stated Clerk: H.2.b.(3)and(4). The process was carried out in three segments: a churchwide application process (May–December 2011), a review and interview process (January–Mid-March, 2012), and a selection and announcement process (mid-March–May 2012).

The committee met face-to-face June 28–30, 2011, and March 13–14, 2012, and held several telephone conference call meetings.
2. Application Process

The committee developed an application packet that included an application form, a request for biographical information, including ecclesiastical standing, work history, and other information, along with supplemental questions. The availability of the application packets was announced at the Fall 2011 Polity Conference and through print and electronic media. Applications were due January 1, 2012, but the date was extended to January 3 because of the Sunday date and a postal holiday.

The committee received five requests for application packets. Because of the postal holiday, those who had requested packets were informed in late December of the extended deadline. The committee received one application, that of Gradye Parsons.

3. Review and Interview Process

The committee found itself in an almost unprecedented situation, having only one application. The committee felt a responsibility to conduct a thorough and careful interview, despite having only the incumbent’s application, and did so in March 2012. A list of a dozen further questions was created for the oral interview. All committee members were present, and the committee spent several hours interviewing Gradye Parsons, using both the prepared questions and follow-up questions generated by the discussion.

4. Selection and Announcement Process

It became very clear to the committee that Gradye Parsons is called to the ministry in which he has served as Stated Clerk of the General Assembly for the past four years. His deep Christian faith, formed in family and church from his childhood on, his wide-ranging intelligence, and his warm, collegial style were evident to all, along with his joy for the work. At the conclusion of the interview, the committee was pleased to nominate Gradye Parsons by unanimous vote for a second term as Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The committee has prepared an information packet for the commissioners of the 220th General Assembly (2012), including biographical information, a personal statement, and answers to four questions, prepared by the Stated Clerk Nominating Committee.

The committee will present its report and its nominee, the Reverend Gradye Parsons, during the Sunday, July 1, afternoon plenary of the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Interim Report: Due to budgetary constraints, a Presbyterian Green Energy Fund has yet to be established, though there is a great interest in doing so. While conversations are underway to explore creation of such a fund, Environmental Ministries provides information to churches on how to lower their energy usage and take steps to become carbon neutral. In conjunction with the Presbyterian Hunger Program and other programs, a webpage devoted to climate change issues, including reducing energy in churches, was created in the fall of 2009 at http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/environment/. Environmental Ministries also directs churches interested in making large energy updates to loans available through the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

18. 2010 Referral: Item 14-08. Breaking Down the Walls. Recommendation 3.e. Urges a Visit to Israel/Palestine by a High-Level Joint Delegation of Presbyterians (Including Representatives from the Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Foundation, and the General Assembly Mission Council) and Appropriate Counterparts in the American Ecumenical, Jewish, and Muslim Communities, with Costs Shared Among the Participating Faith Groups, for the Purpose of Identifying Opportunities for Positive Investment, with a Report Back to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Middle East Study Committee (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 50, 52, 1021–1119).

Interim Report: Preliminary conversations regarding positive investment in the West Bank and Gaza were held with representatives of the Presbyterian Foundation, related institutions, and a few congregations who expressed interest. A Compassion Peace & Justice Ministry Area trip to Israel and Palestine during November of 2011 also explored options. Further research and evaluation of the investment options will continue, with a final report being made to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Interim Report: In response to this referral an interim report has been prepared that contains recommendations. It is Item 14-05, “Encountering the Gospel of Peace Anew: An Invitation to Discernment and Witness, an Interim Report.”

The Presbyterian Peacemaking Program and Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy sought nominations throughout the church, consulted on priorities and prospectus developed in response to this action, and appointed a team of six persons, emphasizing relative youth and substantial international experience. The resulting group of four women and two men, (one Asian American, one African American, and four Caucasian Americans, two in their twenties, two in their thirties, and two in their fifties) has met several times and is presenting the interim report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) with final report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

II. FINAL RESPONSES TO REFERRALS

A. Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns Final Responses to Referrals

1. 2004 Referral: Item 05-03. Recommendation 4. That the General Assembly Request the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, Following Review of Resources Currently Available to Meet the Needs of Clergywomen in the Call Process and in Pastorates, to Make Recommendations That Contribute to a Pro-active, Health-giving, Ministry to and Relationship with Our Clergywomen—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 77, 389–90).

Response: This referral is answered by Item 11-12, “A Resolution to Continue the Work of Deborah’s Daughters,” being presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

220TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2012) 105
Response: This referral is answered by Item 11-13, “A Resolution to Recommit to Celebrating the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God,” being presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

B. Board of Pensions Final Responses to Referrals

Response: In part, the Board of Pensions Policy on Divestment and Affirmative Investment reads: “Affirmative Investment—The duties of care and loyalty apply equally as limitations on the purchase of securities. In addition, the separation of roles and responsibilities between the Board and our investment managers is breached when we begin telling our investment managers to actively purchase specific securities. At that point we become portfolio managers ourselves, and to date that is not a responsibility we have undertaken because it would impose additional regulatory burdens and administrative expenses on the Plan that we have chosen to avoid.”

With that policy in mind, a trip to the Middle East as contemplated in Recommendation 3.e. would be poor stewardship. The full Board of Pensions Policy on Divestment and Affirmative Investment is available on request from the corporate secretary of the Board of Pensions.

2. 2010 Referral. Item 18-12. Recommendation that the Board of Pensions Develop a Plan to Ensure That Funds from Any Relief of Conscience Churches Do Not Go to Fund Abortions Through Any Avenue (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1313 of the electronic version). [This referral was removed from the consent agenda and was sent to 20. Assembly Committee on Board of Pensions, Foundations, and Presbyterian Publishing Company as Item 20-13.]

Response: The scope of such a plan would be far beyond the reach of the Board of Pensions. As contemplated by the 219th General Assembly (2010), such a plan would require that any dollar that passed through a Relief of Conscience employing organization be insulated from paying for an abortion at any time in the future.

While the Board of Pensions is vigilant to ensure that claims that may be for the elective termination of a pregnancy are not paid from the dues remitted by Relief of Conscience employing organizations to the Board of Pensions, the Board of Pensions has no control over funds expended by Relief of Conscience employing organizations for anything other than those dues. Dollars spent by Relief of Conscience employing organizations to purchase goods and services as varied as insurance, utilities, music, and communion supplies may be expended by their next holder for any legal purpose. The Board of Pensions has no means to control these many avenues through which funds from Relief of Conscience employing organizations may go to fund abortions.

Response: The Board of Pensions’ policies on sexual and other misconduct were reviewed in 2010 and 2011 as part of the annual process of reviewing all employment policies, and it follows the intent of the Sexual Misconduct Manual published by the Office of the General Assembly.

Response: Internal Revenue Service guidelines determine the maximum pension accrual amount permitted under law, and the current pension dues of 11 percent of effective salary are already calculated up to that amount.

5. 2010 Referral. Item 10-10, Recommendation 2.d. Requested the Leadership of the Board of Pensions (BOP), the Presbyterian Foundation (FDN), the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC), as well as the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, to Join in the Interagency Consultation of Recommendation 2.c. Above, and to Consider the Assembly’s Action on Compensation Within Their Own Boards, Reporting on Such Consideration in Their Agency Reports to the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 742 of the electronic version).
Response: The president and chief executive officer of the Board of Pensions participated in the interagency consultation requested in this referral. The Executive Committee of the Board of Pensions, which carries responsibility for the management of executive compensation, considered this item at its December 2010 meeting as requested by the assembly. The committee determined that the current compensation practices of the Board of Pensions to be appropriate.

The board notes that the last independent review committee of the Board of Pensions, elected by the 216th General Assembly (2004), included in its report a section on compensation that began by saying, “The Review Committee found that the BOP is honoring the General Assembly’s compensation guidelines and that compensation philosophy and administrative procedures are appropriate” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 1339).

Response: The Board of Pensions actively supports the ministry of MRTI. Additionally, the Proxy Voting Guidelines of the Board of Pensions include a guideline to vote for proposals to review with respect to practices commonly deemed to be predatory, company credit card marketing, lending and collection practices, and the impact these practices have on borrowers, as long as such reports omit proprietary information and are prepared at reasonable cost. This guideline will be used to vote all proxies that have resolutions on lending practices.

Response: The Board of Pensions is and continues to be committed to a diverse workplace where staff of all backgrounds can feel comfortable and be effective in serving the church. The Board of Pensions is supportive of the principles of cultural proficiency, although our operating model is slightly different: Since the inception of the cultural proficiency initiative, the Board of Pensions

- incorporated the principles into its Mission Statement, Values, and Personnel Policies and Procedures;
- created and maintains a Learning Center that provides equal opportunity for professional development to all employees;
- has a talent development program, extensively used by its diverse population;
- offers tuition reimbursement, the amount of which was increased for 2012;
- performs an anonymous, biennial employee opinion survey last conducted in 2011, the results of which continue to point out that the staff feel that the board has done a good job in being sensitive to cultural issues;
- has employee demographics that indicate a strong representation by both females and minorities in its work population; and
- maintains an annual compliance education calendar that includes diversity training.

In discussing its approach with respective church committees, their responses have been favorable to the board’s efforts to model the values of cultural proficiency.

Response: The Board of Pensions has actively supported the development of the National Persons of Color Network database.

Response: The Board of Pensions does not track expenditures by minority vendor status and notes that discretionary purchasing is a de minimus part of its budget. The Board of Pensions does, however, seek vendors that are equal opportunity employers and encourages the use of vendors that are owned by women and minorities. The Board of Pensions has shared related data in an alternate format with various constituent groups when requested.
10. 2010 Referral. Item 11-09. Recommendation 7. Direct Each Entity to Demonstrate Affirmative Efforts to Increase Racial Ethnic and Female Employee Representation in the Senior Management Categories. When Filling Vacancies at This Level, There Must Be a Racial Ethnic Person and a Female Among the Final Candidates. If They Are Not Among the Final Candidates, the Entity Must Explain Why They Were Not Considered (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 858 of the electronic version).

Response: The Board of Pensions continues to support diverse representation at all levels of its staff and management. To that end, these guidelines have been included in the board’s recruiting efforts, both directly and through search firms.

11. 2010 Referral. Item 11-11, Directed the PC(USA) to Refrain from Holding National Meetings at Hotels in Those States Where Travel by Immigrant Presbyterians or Presbyterians of Color or Hispanic Ancestry Might Subject Them to Harassment Due to Legislation Similar to Arizona Law SB 1070/HB2162 (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 879 of the electronic version).

Response: The Board of Pensions monitors the database maintained by the Office of Constitutional Services on the status of immigration legislation in the United States and uses that information when considering meeting locations.

Response: The Mental Health Parity Act of 2008 provides for parity in the application of aggregate lifetime and annual dollar limits on mental health benefits with dollar limits on medical/surgical benefits. A plan that does not impose an annual or lifetime dollar limit on medical and surgical benefits may not impose such a dollar limit on mental health benefits offered under the plan.

The Medical Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) complies in every way with the Mental Health Parity Act.

Response: In the fall of 2008, following General Assembly, a taskforce was assembled to study the implications of expanded coverage for children with certain developmental disabilities. In addition to Board of Pensions staff members, the task force included the oversight advocate, two physicians, and an outside attorney, all three with expertise in the field of developmental disabilities, the board’s attorney, and the board’s actuary. The range of experiences and professional credentials represented by the task force members was designed to ensure that the Board of Pensions looked at this coverage issue through the eyes of parents, educators, lawyers, clinicians, policymakers, and actuaries. The scope of work undertaken by this group early in 2009 included research and analysis that would provide a framework for determining: (1) which developmental disabilities should be covered; (2) the conditions under which medical coverage should be provided; and, (3) the amount of coverage that should be provided, including appropriate annual or lifetime maximums.

Published resources that guided some of this work included the early intervention guidelines under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), the criterion used to establish disability under the Social Security Act, and various state statutes dealing with coverage for children with autism. It was particularly helpful that Highmark, the Board of Pensions’ third-party claims processor, was concurrently involved in recasting coverage for many of their fully insured clients in order that they be in full compliance with a Pennsylvania statute mandating coverage for autistic children. Our actuary used both Board of Pensions specific data and more general statistical data on incidence rates and associated treatment cost to forecast the financial impact of expanded coverage to the Medical Plan.

The collaborative and committed work of the task force resulted in the presentation and subsequent approval by the Board of Pensions of a coverage proposal detailing the specific conditions covered and the coverage parameters. The expanded benefits became effective on January 1, 2010. Most affirming to the work of the task force and the resulting Plan changes was the unqualified support of the oversight advocate and an unsolicited endorsement by Presbyterian for Disabilities Concerns with concurrence from the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association.

Managing and coordinating the care provided to children diagnosed with these developmental disabilities is a key component of the expanded coverage and has been addressed by ActiveHealth Management (AHM), the Board of Pensions’ new health management vendor. The AHM is designing a program specific to the Board of Pensions that has as its focus coordinating and integrating all available services, both community- and school-based, in a way that is completely child-centered.

14. 2008 Referral. Item 15-02, Recommendation 1–3. Directed the Board of Pensions to Provide Annually a Relief of Conscience Plan Report, and to Confirm Annually with Particular Churches Their Participation in the Relief of Conscience Plan; Beginning No Later Than June 2009, Provide an Annual Relief of Conscience Plan Report; Include This Relief of Con-

The Board of Pensions confirmed with particular churches their participation in the Relief of Conscience Plan in a letter dated June 5, 2009. The letter, sent to pastors and clerks of session, confirmed that the Board of Pensions had record of an action taken by the presbytery of jurisdiction to grant relief of conscience to that particular church.

C. Committee on the Office of the General Assembly Final Responses to Referrals.

Response: A review of the last five years (2007–2011) of the Presbyterian Historical Society (PHS) per capita budget and spending indicates that actual per capita spending has been reduced by about 6.8 percent between 2007 and 2011. This is a result of a plan PHS has had in place involving effective cost control measures and supplementary funds development efforts. During those five years, the approved PHS Per Capita budget has decreased about 6.4 percent and PHS has under spent its approved annual per capita budget by an average of about 4 percent per year.

The plan will remain in place to assist PHS to continue to reduce its annual per capita spending and under spend its annual per capita budget as allocated through the present per capita budgeting process of the Office of the General Assembly.

Rationale: The mission of the Presbyterian Historical Society of PC(USA) is to collect, preserve, and share the Presbyterian history in the United States. It is part of the Office of General Assembly organization and is funded primarily out of the per capita budget of PC(USA). In 2011, the total PHS budget of $2.3 million comprised $1.9 million from per capita and $0.4 million from other sources (annual fund, grants, endowments, bequests). The breakdown of the total PHS budget by mission function is 15 percent for collect, 35 percent for preserve, and 50 percent for share.

As reflected in the large portion of the budget for the share function, the PHS collection is a very active archive with more than 3,500 formal requests for records information each year. In addition, there are on-line “self service” inquiries via our web site and e-mail. We expect more than 60,000 web site visits in 2012 and more than 100,000 visits by 2014 as we add more access and documents online. The collection is large (more than 28,000 cubic feet) and growing 10 percent every five years. It comprises 85 percent council (church, presbytery, and synod), General Assembly and General Assembly entity records; 10 percent ecumenical body records; and 5 percent personal papers.

Over the last five years (2007–2011), PHS per capita spending has decreased about 6.8 percent—this in the midst of a growing archive, increased number and type of services, and about a 6.4 percent decrease in per capita budget. See chart below. Also see graph (in thousands of dollars) at coga-final-response-to-referral-phs-actual-expenses.pdf (see also p. 152).

How has this been accomplished?

a. Investment (through per capita reserve funds) in cost-saving changes to the physical plant, e.g. movable shelving, energy efficient windows, new roof. Also new cost controls and renegotiation of service contracts and vendor agreements.

b. Use of new technology to enhance “self service,” e.g. on-line catalog, future placement of documents on-line.

c. Effective Records Management program—preserve what is called for in the Records Retention schedule.

d. Some reduced staffing (per capita funded staff down 10 percent [two full-time employees—FTEs] from 2007 level) and staff reorganization to carry out the mission of PHS more efficiently.

e. Modest success in raising designated and undesignated gifts through PHS funds development efforts.

220TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2012) 109
In using these “tools,” PHS has already developed a plan that reduced its per capita spending over the last five years by about 6.8 percent and under spent its annual budget by an average of about 4 percent per year. The plan will continue to be used to assist PHS to reduce its per capita spending and under spend its annual per capita budget as allocated through the present per capita budgeting process of the Office of the General Assembly.

   Response: For response to this item, see Item 03-03, COGA recommendation to amend the Organization for Mission to clarify the roles of the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council.

   Response: For response to this item, see Item 04-01, Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies recommendations.

D. General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations Final Responses to Referrals

1. 2010 Referral: Item 08-01. Recommendation to refer the Covenant to Adopt and Implement the “Lund Principle” and Codicil to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations, requesting a report with recommendations by the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Synod of the Northeast.

   Response: For response to this item, see Item 09-07, Recommendations Regarding Covenant to Adopt the Lund Principle.

   Response: In response to this referral, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations appointed an implementation team to meet with the representatives from the Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad (KPCA). The joint implementation team, upon the advice and counsel of Vocation staff of the PC(USA), adapted the existing Orderly Exchange of Ministers document currently developed under the Lutheran Reformed Formula of Agreement. Meetings were also held with the Board of Pensions and the KPCA general secretary to address issues related to participation in the Board of Pensions. Upon the advice and counsel of the Constitutional Services staff, processes for transfer of churches were developed. The joint implementation committee finalized the orderly exchange processes for ministers and congregations in December 2011, and the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations approved the processes and forwarded to the 220th General Assembly (2012) for information. [For text of the Orderly Exchange of Ministers document, see 01-02-gaceir-orderly-exchange-of-ministers.pdf; see also pages 153–64.]

E. General Assembly Committee on Representation Final Responses to Referrals

   Response: The General Assembly Committee on Representation studied the matter and does not suggest further action. The ways that programmatic offices (mission and ministries) use age group designations vary according to their need. For example, the Youth Ministry office in the General Assembly Mission Council, describes categories of its constituencies by a number of different means: by school classification (elementary, middle, high and/or grade levels), by specific ages (chronological and developmental), and groupings thereof. Their usage bears almost no connection to the ways demographic data is reported by the assembly. When Research Services report survey data, the age groups used in reporting out are grouped in response to the data itself (using date of birth from respondents to assign to categories) and what is considered to be “useful and detailed enough” for the content of the survey. If the assembly were to direct offices to use one definitive set of age categories for all Presbyterian documents, it would put an artificial and constraining structure on a dynamic expression of mission and ministry. In addition, the financial implications could be sizable if updated materials were required.

2. 2010 Referral: Item 10-07. A Resolution to Explore the Intersection of Gender and Race—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns. Direct the Office of General Assembly to Request That Presbyteries Explore Local Resources and Conduct Training in Cultural Proficiency on the Intersection of Race with Gender, Using as a Resource the...

Response: The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) studied the intersections of race and gender and sponsored a workshop on the topic for mid council leaders at the Big Tent 2 meeting in Indianapolis, Indiana, on July 1, 2011. The committee included intersectional content in its Biennial Synod COR Training Event, October 13–15, 2011. At the request of the GACOR, in December 2009, the report was distributed to all presbyteries and synods accompanied by a letter from the Stated Clerk commending it for study and highlighting its intersectional approach. In their normal functions, GACOR seeks to be a continuing resource to councils (above session) and in doing so, encourages training at every council level to encourage diverse and inclusive leadership and equip the body for full participation. The intersections of race and gender are one of the areas that GACOR has particular interest in, as evidenced by their efforts to report data measures in disaggregated forms to make the effects of these intersections more visible.

F. General Assembly Mission Council (Communications and Funds Development Final Responses to Referrals)

Response: The Special Offerings Advisory Task Force has completed its work and is bringing a final report with recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012) as Item 10-14 being presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Response: The 2012 Presbyterian Mission Yearbook for Prayer & Study will encourage readers to pray for the ministry of WCRC/CANAAC by taking the following actions:

- Page 18 will feature a minute for mission on Christian Unity lifting up the ministry of organizations such as WCRC/CANAAC that promote ecumenism and the ministry of the whole church.
- The “Let us Pray” column on that page will list the Web site and staff of WCRC/CANAAC and encourage readers to also pray for member churches.

Response: An ECO account, E052108, was established for PHEWA. Initial approaches considered as a fund raising strategy for PHEWA:

- survey of congregations by research services,
- feasibility study, and
- “direct market” approach.

“Direct market” approach was recommended as the most cost effective way to quickly identity the interest level and capacity of potential donors to PHEWA. This recommendation was presented and approved by PHEWA board of directors. Several interpretive efforts for PHEWA work were launched.

Despite the efforts, the results of the “direct market” mailing were disappointing. The mailing went out on March 28, 2011, and by June 6, 2011—$10,220, and by December 31, 2011—$11,820 in donations could be directly attributed to the direct mail campaign. Anecdotal evidence would indicate however, that the mailing did raise awareness of the organization among many congregations, making future fundraising efforts more productive.

The results were discussed at length during PHEWA’s Annual Meeting in 2011. Several observations were made:
• Fundraising for PHEWA must be done in person by people who embrace the mission and have a heart for the ministry. Due to the specialized nature of this ministry, it is the living example of a PHEWA supporter that best communicates the story.

• The PHEWA is a kind of ministry that many individuals will say they support, especially when in group settings. However, for some reason, those public affirmations do not always result in private financial support. The PHEWA may need to be rebranded in order to better communicate the compelling witness of these ministries for individual donors.

• To be successful with potential donors, PHEWA interpreters must be able to communicate stories of transformational impact.

At this time, it seems counterproductive to continue utilizing direct response as a means to raise funds for PHEWA.

The GAMC Communications and Funds Development, PHEWA Executive Director, and PHEWA board members agreed that for the organization to be financially viable and sustainable that it will need to consider the following:

• Increase awareness for the mission and ministry of PHEWA,
• Raising funds will require a targeted and personal approach.

The following efforts have been identified as recommended for the PHEWA 2012 fund raising action plan.

• Follow up with individual board members who made pledges to the effort during the annual meeting in June 2011 to convert pledges to gifts.
• Create marketing materials, including a DVD and a new website.
• Develop referral sources to expand membership and increase donor prospects.

Response: “Criminal Justice Sunday” has been reinstated in the Presbyterian Planning Calendar. It falls on Sunday, January 29, 2012; Sunday, January 27, 2013; and will fall on the last Sunday of January in future years. Worship resources for observing Criminal Justice Sunday are being provided electronically.

Response: The advisory and advocacy committees have been assigned a staff member from Communications and Funds Development (CFD) to assist with the dissemination of General Assembly policies and studies developed by these committees as part of CFD’s support for the Executive Director’s Office.

Response: “Public Education Sunday” has been added to the Presbyterian Planning Calendar starting with Sunday, August 25, 2013. Worship resources for observing a special Sunday emphasis on public education, including a hymn, litany, and prayers, are being made available electronically by the Office of Child Advocacy and Networking (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/publiceducation/).

Response: A web appeal and e-appeal are scheduled for April 2012. A designated-giving account has also been established and is promoted online and in print materials.

8. 2010 Referral: Item 13-12. Commissioners’ Resolution. On the Restoration of Sustainable Agriculture in Haiti. Recommendation 3. Request the Executive Director of the GAMC to Solicit Supplemental Funds to Complement Emergency Assistance by Supporting Medium and Long-Term Development Efforts to Strengthen Haitian Nongovernmental Organizations (NGOs) and Grassroots Farmers’ Groups so That They Can Implement and Manage Rehabilitation Programs of Their Own Conception and Design. Including Small Scale, Sustainable Agricultural Activities, and to Provide Them with Short- and Long-Term Technical Assistance to Help Them Upon Request (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 65, 69–70, 973–76).

Response: Several pre-existing designated-giving accounts managed by the Presbyterian Hunger Program are achieving this objective. These accounts are H000014, H003215, H000020, and H000007.

Response: “Health Awareness Day and Prayer for Healing” has been added to the Presbyterian Planning Calendar. It falls on Sunday, February 19, 2012; Sunday, February 17, 2013; and will fall on a Sunday in mid-February in future years. The Presbyterian Health Network, a volunteer ministry network of the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA), provides prayer and worship resources as a part of its annual Health Awareness Sunday packet, available electronically (http://www.pcusa.org/media/uploads/phewa/pdfs/health-awareness-sunday-2011.pdf).

G. General Assembly Mission Council, Executive Director’s Office

Response: This referral is answered by “Gender Pay Equity Study,” below.

The General Assembly Mission Council’s Human Resources Department and the offices of Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women conducted a pay equity study covering the employees of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns was consulted during the process.

General Assembly Mission Council, Gender Pay Equity Study Executive Summary, November 30, 2011

A. Overview

In 2010 the following referral of action was submitted from the 219th General Assembly (2010) for action by the Executive Director’s Office of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC):

At the direction of the Executive Director’s Office of the GAMC, the Human Resources Department of the GAMC conducted a Gender Pay Equity Study using the following methodology:

- Data used was as of August 31, 2011.
- Data used included Louisville-based employees (including deployed staff) for GAMC in regular full-time and part-time positions.
- Part-time employee salaries were adjusted to full-time equivalent.
- Data cuts compared pay of racial ethnic females on both the basis of salary grades and Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) classification, as follows:
  - Pay by EEO of females to males;
  - Pay by EEO classification of racial ethnic females compared to non-racial ethnic females;
  - Pay by EEO classification of racial ethnic females compared to racial ethnic males;
  - Pay by EEO classification of racial ethnic females to non-racial ethnic males;
  - Pay by EEO classification of racial ethnic females to all males;
  - Pay by salary grade of females to males;
  - Pay by salary grade of racial ethnic females compared to non-racial ethnic females;
  - Pay by salary grade of racial ethnic females compared to racial ethnic males;
  - Pay by salary grade of racial ethnic females compared to non-racial ethnic males;
A detailed analysis of the data cuts revealed the following:

B. EEO Classifications

1. In the GAMC, females comprised 60 percent of the workforce as of August 31, 2011. There were a total of 232 females, sixty-seven of whom were racial ethnic females in the seven EEO classifications used by GAMC, as follows:

2. Pay by EEO of Females to Males: In this report, the pay of 232 females was compared to that of 105 males in all seven EEO classifications. Overall, the pay was 5.03 percent higher for females than males. The Professional classification was the only one in which pay was lower for females, and in this classification pay for females, on average, was less than that for males by 5.23 percent. Pay for females was 18.59 percent higher than for males in the Administrative Support Workers classification; 1.78 percent higher in the First/Mid-Level O&M classification, and 4.96 percent higher in the Executive/Senior-Level O&M classification. The overall average years of service was approximately eleven years for females and approximately eight years for males. There are many factors that could influence a 5.23 percent higher rate of pay for males with less overall years of service in the Professional classification, which only a review of files and work history could provide.

3. Pay by EEO of Racial Ethnic Females to Non-Racial Ethnic Females: The sixty-seven racial ethnic females were compared in this report to 165 non-racial ethnic females. Overall, the pay for racial ethnic females in all EEO classifications was 99.41 percent of that for non-racial ethnic females. Pay for racial ethnic females was higher in all three classifications than that for non-racial ethnic females, except for the First/Mid-Level O & M classification where pay for a racial ethnic female was 94.89 percent of that for non-racial ethnic females (5.11 percent less). Further analysis of this job group revealed that the average length of service for racial ethnic females was nine years, compared to over twelve years of service, on average, for the non-racial ethnic females. This could account for the 5.11 percent difference in pay.

4. Pay by EEO of Racial Ethnic Females to Racial Ethnic Males: The sixty-seven racial ethnic females were compared in this report to twenty-one racial ethnic males. Overall, the pay for racial ethnic females was 3.31 percent higher than that for racial ethnic males. In the individual categories, pay for racial ethnic females was 24.72 percent higher than that for racial ethnic males in the Administrative Support Workers category; 7.93 percent less than that for racial ethnic males in the Professionals category, and 6.85 percent less than that for racial ethnic males in the First/Mid-Level O & M category. The average length of service for racial ethnic females in the Professionals classification was approximately twenty one years, compared to approximately nine years for racial ethnic males. The average years of service for racial ethnic females in the First/Mid-Level O&M classification was nine years, compared to approximately seven years for racial ethnic males. A more in-depth review of files and work history would be required to analyze the differences further.

5. Pay by EEO of Racial Ethnic Females to Non-Racial Ethnic Males: The sixty-seven racial ethnic females were compared in this report to eighty-four non-racial ethnic males. Overall, the pay for racial ethnic females was 3.54 percent higher than that for non-racial ethnic males. In the category of Administrative Support Workers, pay for racial ethnic females was 16.14 percent higher than that of non-racial ethnic males; 3.75 percent less than that for non-racial ethnic males in the Professionals category, and 1.77 percent less than that for non-racial ethnic males in the First/Mid-Level O & M category.

6. Pay by EEO of Racial Ethnic Females to All Males: The sixty-seven racial ethnic females were compared in this report to 105 total males. Overall, the pay for racial ethnic females was 3.43 percent higher than that for all males. In the category of Administrative Support Workers, pay for racial ethnic females was 20.43 percent higher than that for all males; 5.84 percent less than that for all males in the Professionals category, and 4.31 percent less than that for all males in the First/Mid-Level O & M category.

C. Salary Grade Levels

The GAMC has twenty-three salary grade levels, “CH – Z”. The following analyzes pay by these levels as follows:

1. Pay by Salary Grade of Females to Males: Out of the nineteen grade levels where there were both females and males, eleven of those levels show females paid at a higher salary, on average, than their male counterparts. The highest of these was salary level “GH” where females were paid 11.32 percent higher than males. Of the eight remaining salary levels, males were paid higher than females, on average. In three of those that difference was 5 percent or higher. Further analysis of these three is as follows:

   a. Salary Level CH: Four males in this salary level are paid, on average, 6.88 percent higher than the one female. The length of service for two of the four males is less than six months. The average tenure of the other two is about fifteen years, which is higher than the twelve years of service for the one female. This could account for the 6.88 percent differential overall.

   b. Salary Level EH: There were seven employees in this salary level—four females and three males. Females are paid 5.79 percent less than their male counterparts, on average. Only one female and one male have been employed for more than six months. The female has been employed twenty years and the male for eleven years. A more detailed review of the files and work history would be needed to explain the salary difference overall.

   c. Salary Level O: There were twenty-eight females and twelve males in this salary level. On average, females were paid 5.38 percent less than their male counterparts. The average length of service for females was approximately nine years and for males was approximately nine years. A more detailed review of files and work history would be needed to explain the salary difference overall.

2. Pay by Salary Grade of Racial Ethnic Females to Non-Racial Ethnic Females: There were no racial ethnic females in eight of these salary grade levels (“EH”, “N” and “U” through “Z”) as of August 31, 2011. There were non-racial ethnic females in all salary grade levels except for “CH”. Of the fourteen salary grade levels where there were both racial and non-racial ethnic females, racial ethnic females overall were paid 1.67 percent higher, on average, than non-racial ethnic females. In ten out of fourteen salary grade levels, racial ethnic females were paid higher, on average, than non-racial ethnic females, and salary grade level “Q” is the only one of the remaining four levels where female minorities were paid less than non-racial ethnic females by 5 percent or more (5.91 percent). Further analysis of salary grade level “Q” revealed that the average length of service for racial ethnic females was eleven years compared to approximately fourteen years of service, on average, for the non-racial ethnic female group. This, plus the fact that one of the two racial ethnic females had been employed less than one year, could explain the difference in pay.

3. Pay by Salary Grade of Racial Ethnic Females to Racial Ethnic Males: There are twenty-one racial ethnic males in eleven of the twenty-three salary grade levels. Of the nine salary grade levels where there are both racial ethnic males and racial ethnic females, racial ethnic females overall are paid 2.13 percent higher, on average than racial ethnic males. In five of the nine salary grade levels, racial ethnic females are paid higher, on average, than racial ethnic males. In salary grade level “GH” racial ethnic females are paid 19.14 percent higher than racial ethnic males. In salary grade levels “CH” and “O” racial ethnic females are paid 6.56 percent and 10.04 percent less, respectively, than racial ethnic males. Further analysis of these two salary grade levels revealed the following:

   a. Salary Level “CH”: There is one racial ethnic female with twelve years of service in this level and one racial ethnic male with thirteen years of service. A more detailed review of the files and work history is required to determine the reasons for the pay differential between the two.

   b. Salary Level “O”: There were seven racial ethnic females with an average length of service of approximately seven years in this level, and five racial ethnic males with an average length of service of approximately nine years. Further review of files and work history is required to understand the reasons behind the 10.04 percent difference.

4. Pay by Salary Grade of Racial Ethnic Females to Non-Racial Ethnic Males: There are eighty-four non-racial ethnic males in nineteen of the twenty-three salary grade levels. Of the fourteen salary grade levels where there are both racial ethnic females and non-racial ethnic males, racial ethnic females overall are paid 3.29 percent higher than non-racial ethnic males. In eight of the fourteen salary grade levels, racial ethnic females are paid higher, on average, than non-racial ethnic males. In salary grade levels “GH” and “LLH” racial ethnic females are paid 21.47 percent and 11.65 percent, respectively, more than non-racial ethnic males. Salary grade level “CH” is the only one of the remaining levels where female minorities are paid less than non-racial ethnic males by 5 percent or more (6.99 percent). Further review of files and work history is required to understand the difference.
5. Pay by Salary Grade of Racial Ethnic Females to All Males: There are 105 total males in nineteen of the twenty-three salary grade levels. Of the fourteen salary grade levels where there are both racial ethnic females and total males, racial ethnic females overall are paid 2.73 percent higher than their male counterparts. In seven of the fourteen salary grade levels, racial ethnic females are paid higher, on average, than all males. In salary grade levels “GH” and “LLH” racial ethnic females are paid 20.3 percent and 11.65 percent higher, respectively, than all males. In salary grade levels “CH” and “O” racial ethnic females are, on average, paid 6.78 percent and 7.06 percent less, respectively, than all males. Further analysis revealed that:

   a. Salary Level “CH”: See comments above in section C.1.a “Pay by Salary Grade of Females to Males.”

   b. Salary Level “O”: The average length of service for racial ethnic females in this level is approximately seven compared to approximately nine years of service for all males in this level. The higher length of service for males could explain the salary difference between the two demographic groups.

D. Summary

Overall, the comparisons of pay for females in all EEO classifications and salary grades shows positive positioning. In many comparisons average pay for females was greater than that of their counterparts. In those comparisons where their average pay was less, average length of service could be the factor accounting for the difference in some cases. There are several factors other than length of service which could account for pay differences, such as:

- Recent promotions,
- Long tenure in position(s) with lower pay range,
- Performance,
- Overall work history,
- Pay movement which lagged growth in market, etc.

Where differences in pay could not be fully explained through the above analysis, additional reviews of personnel files and work histories should be conducted.

Office of the General Assembly Gender Pay Equity Study, Executive Summary, November 30, 2011.

A. Overview

In 2010 the following referral of action was submitted from the 219th General Assembly (2010) for action by the Executive Director’s Office of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC):

2008 Referral: Item 09-08. Report, God’s Work in Women’s Hands: Pay Equity and Just Compensation, Recommendation 2.j. That the Human Resources Department and the Offices of Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, in Consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, and Other Appropriate Entities, Participate in the PC(USA)’s Goal of Assuring Gender Pay Equity by Conducting a Pay Equity Study Covering the Employees of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly and Report Results to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 897–923).

At the direction of the Executive Director’s Office of the GAMC, the Human Resources Department of the GAMC conducted a Gender Pay Equity Study on behalf of the Office of the General Assembly (“OGA”) using the following methodology:

- Data used was as of August 31, 2011.
- Data used included Louisville-based employees (including deployed staff) for OGA in regular full-time and part-time positions.
- Part-time employee salaries were adjusted to full-time equivalent.
- Data cuts compared pay of Racial Ethnic females on both the basis of salary grades and Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) classification, as follows:
  - Pay by EEO of females to males;
  - Pay by EEO classification of racial ethnic females compared to non-racial ethnic females;
  - Pay by EEO classification of racial ethnic females compared to racial ethnic males;
  - Pay by EEO classification of racial ethnic females to non-racial ethnic males;
  - Pay by EEO classification of racial ethnic females to all males;
  - Pay by salary grade of females to males;
  - Pay by salary grade of racial ethnic females compared to non-racial ethnic females;
  - Pay by salary grade of racial ethnic females compared to racial ethnic males;
  - Pay by salary grade of racial ethnic females compared to non-racial ethnic males;
  - Pay by salary grade of racial ethnic females compared to all males.
A detailed analysis of the data cuts revealed the following:

B. EEO Classifications:

1. In the OGA, females comprised 73 percent of the workforce as of August 31, 2011. There were a total of forty-nine females, fifteen of whom were racial ethnic females in the five EEO classifications used by OGA, as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Females</th>
<th>Racial Ethnic Females</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Administrative Support Workers</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professionals</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laborers &amp; Helpers</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>First/Mid-Level Officials &amp; Managers</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Executive/Senior-Level Officials &amp; Managers</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>

2. Pay by EEO of Females to Males: In this report, the pay of forty-nine females was compared to that of eighteen males in all five EEO classifications. Overall, the pay was 4.08 percent higher for females than males. There were two classifications in which the average pay for females was less than that of males—Professionals (-1.42 percent) and Executive/Senior Level O & M (-17.5 percent). Pay for females was 30.57 percent higher than for males in the Administrative Support Workers classification, and 4.68 percent higher in the First/Mid-Level O&M classification. In the Executive/Senior Level O & M classification, the overall average years of service was approximately eleven years for females and approximately fifteen years for males. The higher average tenure of males in this classification could influence the higher rate of pay for males in this classification, but a more thorough review of files and work history would be required to understand all factors supporting the difference.

3. Pay by EEO of Racial Ethnic Females to Non-Racial Ethnic Females: The fifteen racial ethnic females were compared in this report to thirty-four non-racial ethnic females. Overall, the pay for racial ethnic females in all EEO classifications was 4.03 percent higher than that for non-racial ethnic females. Pay for racial ethnic females was particularly higher (31.61 percent) in the Professionals classification. In the Administrative Support Workers classification racial ethnic females were paid less than non-racial ethnic females by 5.71 percent and racial ethnic females were paid 13.49 percent less than non-racial ethnic females in the First/Mid-Level O & M classification. Further analysis of the Administrative Support Workers group revealed that the average length of service for racial ethnic females was fourteen years while tenure for non-racial ethnic females was approximately fifteen years. This difference may account for the pay difference between these two groups. Further analysis of the First/Mid-Level O & M classification revealed that the average length of service for racial ethnic females was approximately fourteen years, compared to eight years of service, on average, for the non-racial ethnic females. Further analysis will also be needed to understand the pay differential in this classification.

4. Pay by EEO of Racial Ethnic Females to Racial Ethnic Males: The fifteen racial ethnic females were compared in this report to five racial ethnic males. Overall, the pay for racial ethnic females was 4.06 percent higher than that for racial ethnic males. Pay was also higher for racial ethnic females in all individual categories, with the highest positive difference (12.39 percent) in the First/Mid-Level O & M classification.

5. Pay by EEO of Racial Ethnic Females to Non-Racial Ethnic Males: The fifteen racial ethnic females were compared in this report to thirteen non-racial ethnic males. Overall, the pay for racial ethnic females was 7.5 percent higher than that for non-racial ethnic males. In the category of Administrative Support Workers, pay for racial ethnic females was 26.20 percent higher than that of non-racial ethnic males and 41.45 percent higher than non-racial ethnic males in the Professionals classification. On the other hand, average pay for racial ethnic females was 21.65 percent less than non-racial ethnic males in the First/Mid-Level O & M classification, and 16 percent less than non-racial ethnic males in the Executive/Senior Level O & M classification. The average years of service is about three years for both racial ethnic females and non-racial ethnic males in the First/Mid-Level O & M classification. The average years of service is approximately fourteen for racial ethnic females in the Executive/Senior Level O & M classification and approximately fifteen for non-racial ethnic males. A further review of files and work history is needed to understand the pay differences in both these classifications.
6. Pay by EEO of Racial Ethnic Females to All Males: The fifteen racial ethnic females were compared in this report to eighteen total males. Overall, the pay for racial ethnic females was 6.04 percent higher than that for all males. In the category of Administrative Support Workers, pay for racial ethnic females was 26.20 percent higher than that for all males, and 18.59 percent higher for females than all males in the Professionals classification. The same pay differential exists in the Executive/Senior Level O & M classification as identified in B-5 above.

C. Salary Grade Levels

   The OGA has ten salary grade levels, “13–22”. The following analyzes pay by these levels as follows:

   1. Pay by Salary Grade of Females to Males: Overall average pay for females was .60 percent less than that for males. Out of the eight grade levels where there were both females and males, four of those levels show females paid at a higher salary, on average, than their male counterparts. The highest of these was salary level “16” where females were paid 12.07 percent higher than males. Of the four remaining salary levels, males were paid higher than females, on average. In two of those that difference was 5 percent or higher. Further analysis of these two is as follows:

   a. Salary Level “19”: In this salary range, one male is paid 8.61 percent higher, on average, than nine females. The male’s average length of service is three years compared to the approximately nine years of tenure for the females. A further review of files and work history is needed to understand this pay difference.

   b. Salary Level “21”: There were two males and two females in this salary grade level and the females are paid, on average, 10.94 percent less than their male counterparts. Only one female and one male have been employed for more than six months. The other female has a slightly longer tenure (eleven years) compared to that of the male (approximately ten years). A more detailed review of the files and work history is needed to explain the difference in average pay.

   2. Pay by Salary Grade of Racial Ethnic Females to Non-Racial Ethnic Females: There were two males and two females in this salary grade level and the females are paid, on average, 10.94 percent less than their male counterparts. Only one female and one male have been employed for more than six months. The other female has a slightly longer tenure (eleven years) compared to that of the male (approximately ten years). A more detailed review of the files and work history is needed to explain the difference in average pay.

   3. Pay by Salary Grade of Racial Ethnic Females to Racial Ethnic Males: There are five racial ethnic males in three of these salary grade levels (“11,” “16” and “22”) as of August 31, 2011. There were no racial ethnic females in all salary grade levels. Of the seven salary grade levels where there were both racial and non-racial ethnic females, racial ethnic females overall were paid 2.47 percent higher, on average, than non-racial ethnic females. In two of the seven salary grade levels racial ethnic and non-racial ethnic females are paid at par (100 percent), and in four of the seven levels, racial ethnic females were paid higher, on average, than non-racial ethnic females. In only one salary grade level (“14”) were racial ethnic females paid less (by 10.79 percent) than non-racial ethnic females. Further analysis of this grade level revealed that the average years of service for racial ethnic females was fifteen, compared to an average tenure of twenty-three years for the non-racial ethnic female group. This difference in tenure could account for the average pay differential.

   4. Pay by Salary Grade of Racial Ethnic Females to Non-Racial Ethnic Males: There were thirteen non-racial ethnic males in three of these salary grade levels. Of the two salary grade levels where there were both racial ethnic females and racial ethnic males, racial ethnic females overall were paid 3.42 percent lower, on average than racial ethnic males. In salary grade level “15” that differential is 10.81 percent lower average pay for racial ethnic females compared to racial ethnic males. Further analysis of salary grade level “15” revealed that the average tenure for racial ethnic females was approximately fourteen years, compared to less than eight years for the one racial ethnic male in this level. An additional review of files and work history is required to understand the difference.

   5. Pay by Salary Grade of Racial Ethnic Females to All Males: There is a total of eighteen males in nine of the ten salary grade levels. Of the seven salary grade levels where there are both racial ethnic females and racial ethnic males, racial ethnic females overall were paid 12.88 percent higher than non-racial ethnic males. In salary level “15” the difference was as great as 23.42 percent in favor of the racial ethnic females. In salary level “18” that difference in favor of the racial ethnic females was as high as 53.84 percent. There were three grade levels where pay was on par (100 percent) and there were no levels where racial ethnic females were paid less on average than their non-racial ethnic male counterparts.

   5. Pay by Salary Grade of Racial Ethnic Females to All Males: There is a total of eighteen males in nine of the ten salary grade levels. Of the seven salary grade levels where there are both racial ethnic females and racial ethnic males, racial ethnic females overall are paid 5.21 percent higher than all males. In four of the salary grade levels, males are paid on par (100 percent) with racial ethnic females, and in no grade levels were males paid higher than racial ethnic females. In salary grade level “18” racial ethnic females were paid 24.93 percent higher than the all-male group.

D. Summary:

   Overall, the comparisons of pay for females in all EEO classifications and salary grades show positive positioning. In many comparisons average pay for females was on par or greater than that of their counterparts. In those comparisons where their average pay was less, average length of service could be the factor accounting for the difference in some cases. There are several factors other than length of service which could account for pay differences, such as:

- Recent promotions,
- Long tenure in position(s) with lower pay range,
- Performance,
- Overall work history,
- Pay movement which lagged growth in market, etc.

Where differences in pay could not be fully explained through the above analysis, additional reviews of personnel files and work histories should be conducted.

2. 2008 Referral: Item 09-12. Resolution to Explore the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the PC(USA), Recommendation 1. Create a Task Force to Design a Mechanism for the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the Church That Will (a) Assess the Presence, Participation, and Effectiveness of Women at All Levels of the PC(USA), Both Elected and Employed, (b) Explore and Analyze Attitudes About Women in Leadership, and (c) Describe the Treatment of Women in Leadership Positions, Including How They Are Compensated as Compared with Men—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 961–64).

Response: This referral is answered by Item 10-15, “Design for a Study of the Status of Women in the PC(USA),” being presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

The Status of Women Task Force was created in 2009 and held its first meeting in 2010. The task force has designed a mechanism for studying the presence, participation, and effectiveness of women at all levels of the PC(USA). The study proposed will analyze the attitudes of women in leadership, describe their treatment, and explore how they are compensated as compared to men.

Response: The Moderator, the Stated Clerk, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council have invited congregations, presbyteries, mid councils, seminaries, and leaders and members across the church to recognize the “Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God.”

4. 2010 Referral: Item 09-19. Recommendation 2. Instruct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), in Formal Consultation with Each of the Two Advocacy Committees, to Review and Revise the Scope of Responsibilities of Each of the Advocacy Committees, and on This Basis Consider How Best to Provide Staff Services—From the Advocacy and Advisory Review Committee (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 72, 84, 682–91).

Response: The executive administrator in the General Assembly Mission Council’s Executive Director’s Office held one consultation each with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns to discuss the scope of responsibilities for the committees and the associate for advocacy support and the needs of the committees. The committees indicated that their work had increased in recent years. The executive administrator reported that funding additional staff positions to support the committees would not be possible due to the challenges facing the mission and per capita budgets. Although the two committees now share an associate for advocacy support and an administrative assistant, the committees expressed satisfaction with the performance of the staff and agreed to continue with the current staffing.

5. 2010 Referral: Item 09-19. Recommendation 3. Direct That a Formal Consultation Process Be Used in the Hiring of the Associate(s) for the Advocacy Committees Similar to the Search Process Used for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s (ACSWP’s) Coordinator—From the Advocacy and Advisory Review Committee (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 72, 84, 682–91).

Response: The executive administrator consulted with members of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) throughout the process used to hire the associate for advocacy support, including the development of the position description. One representative from each of the advocacy committees served on the interview team. The team reviewed application materials from individuals, conducted interviews, and made a recommendation to the executive administrator for consideration.
The process used to hire the associate for advocacy support is similar to the one used to hire the coordinator for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and was consistent with the GAMC Manual of Operations and the GAMC Employee Handbook.

Each agency shared aspects of its compensation programs, the fourteen principles, and how they have been applied in practice. The consensus was that the principles provide good, biblically, theologically, and ethically based guidance and at the same time appropriate human resource standards that have enabled the agencies to attract, retain, and fairly compensate qualified talent for the work of each agency in service to the church.

The leaders of the six General Assembly agencies also discussed possible ratios for compensation. The proposal to set ratios has been studied by task forces, committees, and boards and has been rejected by the General Assembly. The consensus was that setting ratios would be ill-advised and not in the best interest of the mission of the church. Compensation, to be fair and effective, is much more complex than a single ratio. Leadership of the six agencies agreed that the fourteen principles are a more comprehensive and sound approach to setting compensation rates and policies than setting ratios.

The GAMC’s current compensation practices are designed to align with the fourteen current principles of compensation and to provide good stewardship of the church’s financial resources that reward and fairly compensate staff at all levels.

The GAMC has developed a new compensation program for implementation in 2013 and the program is in compliance with the fourteen principles. The GAMC applies principles of economic justice in the way it administers salaries and benefits to all of its employees.

Response: The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) demonstrated affirmative efforts to increase racial ethnic and female employee representation in senior management categories. The GAMC filled two senior management positions in 2010–2011. Female and racial ethnic candidates were considered for both positions. An African American male was hired for one of these two positions.

The search and appointment process for the two senior management positions was guided by, and in accordance with, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s General Assembly Mission Council Employee Handbook.

Response: The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) responded to this in II.C.2. above, which referred to Item 03-03, COGA recommendation to amend the Organization for Mission to clarify the roles of the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council.

H. General Assembly Mission Council (Mission Ministry) Final Responses to Referrals

1. 2003 Referral: Item 10-06. Recommendation 4. That the General Assembly Urge the General Assembly Mission Council, Congregational Ministries Division, to Develop and Produce Processes and Materials for the Incorporation and Response: This is proceeding through revitalized efforts on adult catechumenate. The following website contains information and event registration: http://game.pcusa.org/ministries/worship/whatwedo-catechumenate/

Response: The Office of Ministries with Youth, GAMC, is working to highlight the issues surrounding teen suicide and self-injury and provide assistance to congregations, youth workers, parents, teaching elders and others closely connected to young people by:

a. Promoting, on the Ministries with Youth website, www.pcusa.org/youthministry, a permanent link to a new teen suicide prevention resource. The direct link to this new resource is http://www.pcusa.org/resource/teen-suicide-practicing-prevention-and-pastoral-ca/. Contained within this new resource are the following:
   —An article titled “Teen Suicide: Practicing Prevention and Pastoral Care as the Body Of Christ” which features suggestions for congregations, pastors, youth workers and those caring for young people who have attempted suicide, are dealing with the realities of suicide, or who are actively working to prevent teen suicide in their faith community.
   —A document titled “Teen Suicide and Self-Injury: Recommended Resources and Agencies to Provide Information, Assistance, and Education.”
   —A document titled “Adolescent Suicide Quick Reference Resource” outlining the issues, statistics, and situations surrounding teen suicide and self-injury, as they are related to the lives of young people and their families.

b. Highlighting World Suicide Prevention Month annually, in August (one month before the actual World Suicide Awareness date of September 10) annually, on the Ministries with Youth website, www.pcusa.org/youthministry, and Facebook Group page, a featured article and updated resources listing (see above) to assist congregations and youth workers with preparing lessons, educational opportunities, and awareness rituals appropriate to their individual setting.

c. Providing, at national youth events sponsored by the Office of Ministries with Youth (and recommended to all national GAMC/OGA agencies, networks, or offices sponsoring a national youth event or gathering) educational and pastoral resources aimed at the prevention of suicide, self-injury, depression and serious mental illness, and mental health care for adolescents, and their youth workers. To be launched at the 2013 Presbyterian Youth Triennium through the Community Life ministry team.

Working with the Presbyterian Youth Workers’ Association, through their website and monthly e-newsletter, to circulate the above resources related to teen suicide and self-injury.

Response: Presbyterian Mission staff and staff of the Moravian Church are in conversation about ways to work together to strengthen mission partnerships and to share resources in ways that will further evangelism efforts and create a stronger partnership in the future.

Response: In 2009, staff from Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW helped plan the women’s pre-council event of the 2010 Uniting General Council meeting of the World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC) (formerly the World Alliance of Reformed Churches). In 2010, Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW staff participated in the WCRC meeting held in Grand Rapids, Michigan. A statement addressing gender, leadership, and power issues in North America was written and presented to the General Council. In April 2011, the PC(USA) hosted the WCRC Justice Reading of Grand Rapids Consultation in Fort Meyers, Florida. Representatives from WCRC member communions reviewed information from the 2010 WCRC General Council meeting from a justice perspective. Five representatives from the PC(USA) participated in developing justice priorities to forward to the WCRC Strategy Planning Task Force. The PC(USA) leaders made recommendations to ensure that the WCRC Strategy Planning Task Force’s report included language on the intersectionality of gender, power, and race in leadership in the church. The GAMC will continue its collaboration with the new organization, as it engages in strategic planning and in its study of gender, leadership, and power in the church.

Response: Just Purchasing Guide was created and distributed to congregations and presbyteries that provided the rationale and advocacy steps for state and local governments to join the Sweatfree Consortium http://www.pcusa.org/resource/just-purchasing-practicing-our-faith-market.

Response: This referral is answered by Item 10-16, the Women of Color Consultation Committee report, “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies.” The Women of Color Consultation Committee, which included representatives from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, and Presbyterian Women, submitted this report following the Women of Color Consultation, which was held in Charlotte, North Carolina, on October 20–23, 2011.

Response: Resources to provide tools to conduct gender equity audits were developed in the Office of Gender and Racial Justice in the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW ministry area. Two resources were developed, one for congregations and another for mid councils and the General Assembly. These resources are available online at http://garec.pcusa.org/ministries/gender-justice-ministries/. Congregations, mid councils, and the larger church are encouraged to use these resources in prayerful discernment and to conduct gender equity audits to assess the status of women in different organizations and entities of the church. These resources include discussion questions for next steps to assist organizations as they implement policies and strategies to achieve gender and racial equality, with the aim of creating a denomination that fully values the gifts of all its members, regardless of gender or racial ethnicity.

8. 2008 Referral: Item 09-13. Report, “Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies.” Recommendation 10. Direct the General Assembly Council, in Consultation with Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, to Expand on the Basic Antiracism Training to Include Modules on the Intersectionality of Race, Gender, and Class, and Provide Focused Training on Internalized Oppression and Privilege with a Timeline as Follows: (a) the Intersections of Race, Gender, and Class by 2010; (b) Internalized Oppression (Race & Gender) by 2012; and (c) White Privilege and Male Privilege by 2014—From the Women of Color Consultation Task Force (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 964–77).

Response: The antiracism training material has been expanded. A new module on the intersectionality of race, gender, and class was completed in 2010, and a new module on Internalized Oppression (Race & Gender) was completed in 2011. A module on White Privilege and Male Privilege will be completed in 2014.

Response: Thanks to good stewardship by the Presbyterian Association for Community Transformation (PACT) Seminar Funding Screening Committee and partnership with respected organizations in the field of Single Payer Universal Healthcare Reform, PACT and Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare were able to facilitate twelve events from this funding, with a thirteenth and final event under consideration. Significant positive media coverage was obtained for these events and the feedback on immediate and future impact was very positive.

The Human Trafficking Roundtable is comprised of staff from Compassion, Peace and Justice, Presbyterian Women, The Advocacy Committees on Racial Ethnic and Women’s Concerns, World Mission, and the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, as well as the volunteer for Presbyterian Men and a member of the Presbyterian Women Against Domestic Violence Network Leadership Team (a ministry network of the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association). Members of the Roundtable have presented a number of keynotes and workshops, making Presbyterians aware of laws in place in their states to combat trafficking and advocating for strengthening them where necessary. The roundtable is also monitoring the reauthorization of the federal legislation, the Trafficking Victims Protection Act. Information on state and local laws, and how to get involved in local advocacy efforts, can be found on the Roundtable’s website, http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/human-trafficking/.

The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations (PMUN) is a member of the NGO Working Group on Human Trafficking at the United Nations that addresses international efforts to address trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children. The PMUN, in partnership with the Office of Child Advocacy and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, encourages Presbyterian participation in the Red Hands campaign that seeks international support for the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. This protocol establishes international law that addresses the trafficking of children in relation to armed conflict.

The PC(USA) World Mission has appointed a mission co-worker to serve with The Uniting Presbyterian Church in Southern Africa—Zimbabwe Presbytery. The Reverend Derek Forbes, a member of the Presbytery of Denver, began service in July 2011 in the position of consultant for effective administration. He is working to enhance the presbytery’s accountability, transparency, efficiency, and recordkeeping. This appointment has greatly strengthened the PC(USA)’s ability to support the work of Zimbabwe Presbytery. Regular partnership activities, including visits with The Uniting Presbyterian Church of Southern Africa leadership as well as the Presbytery of Zimbabwe, have continued.

The World Mission’s Ministry Area is keeping the whole church informed through mission personnel letters, reports from Presbyterians’ trips, and reports from our partners in Colombia. See http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/global/columbia/; http://calledtocolumbia.org/; and http://us1.campaign-archive1.com/?u=0659f5174d3f0135f20d929f2&id=e5d8e8974f.

Response: World Mission has revised the process of preparing and deploying mission personnel to allow mission workers to be deployed as quickly as possible. This new process includes the use of Webinars to begin orientation earlier and an increased number of interview cycles. Additional segments have been added to orientation to specifically address issues of poverty and hunger. World Mission is also preparing resource materials around the critical global issue of poverty, including the root causes of hunger, which will help make Presbyterian networks, congregations, presbyteries and individuals aware of best practices in addressing this issue in ways that will not create new dependencies nor have adverse effects on local economies or social structures.

Response: This referral is answered by Item 16-03, the “African American Church Growth Strategy Task Force Report.” The task force, appointed by the Office of African American Congregational Support, as directed by the 218th General Assembly (2008), collaborated with the Church Growth Strategy Implementation Team of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus. These teams have studied, reviewed, and submitted this report on the implementation of strategies for African American church growth.

Response: The curriculum will launch at APCE in February 2012. Five studies are already available online with the full curriculum to come in February. The web address is: http://www.informedteens.org/INformed/index2.html.

Response: World Mission has placed a regional liaison to cover the Caribbean countries. The Reverend Jo Ella Holman lives in the Dominican Republic and serves the countries in which we have WCRC/CANAAC and WCRC/AIPRAL partnerships. World Mission Ministry will give as much priority in mission co-workers placements in countries in which we have WCRC/CANAAC partnerships as its strategic direction permits, and will acknowledge these relationships.

Response: The Office of Theology and Worship put resources for worship and other celebrations on its website at http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/worship/worship-reformationsunday/.

Response: World Mission has placed a regional liaison to cover the Caribbean countries. The Reverend Jo Ella Holman lives in the Dominican Republic and serves the countries in which we have WCRC/CANAAC and WCRC/AIPRAL partnerships. World Mission Ministry will give as much priority in mission co-workers placements in countries in which we have WCRC/CANAAC partnerships as its strategic direction permits, and will acknowledge these relationships.

Response: World Mission has partnered with the General Assembly Mission Council Funds Development Ministry Team to reach out to presbyteries and congregations to share in the support of mission personnel sent by the General Assembly Mission Council. World Mission is sharing the stories of our mission personnel in new ways, making use of video, email blasts, and e-newsletters to share the good work that our mission workers are doing around the world. An annual “Mission Connections Live!” effort allows for a focused itineration of mission personnel to presbyteries and congregations around the country. Many mission workers are making use of Skype to interact with congregational Bible studies or with a congregation during worship. World Mission and the Funds Development Ministry Team are also working with individual presbyteries and congregations to help them connect to our mission personnel using their own initiatives. This has produced unique and creative initiatives that can then be shared with other presbyteries. Some presbyteries have created initiatives to increase participation within their presbytery and are receiving logistical help from the Funds Development Ministry Team. Others have “adopted” a specific mission worker and are urging congregations within the presbytery to participate in that worker’s support. In 2010, a total of 163 presbyteries either participated themselves or had a member congregation that participated in this effort.

21. 2010 Referral: Item 09-06. On Reestablishing an Office of Collegiate Ministries as a Vital Part of Ministry and Mission. Recommendation. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to Reestablish an Office of Collegiate Ministries in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a Vital and Integral Part of the Ministry and Mission of the Church and Direct That Office to Prepare a Strategy for Mission in Higher Education in Concert with Middle Governing Bodies, Congregations, and, Where Possible, Ecumenical Partners, to Be Presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Presbytery of North Central Iowa (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 72, 81, 658–60). [This referral was removed from the consent agenda and was sent to 16. Assembly Committee on Church Growth and PILP as Item 16-10.]

Collegiate Ministries Task Force Report

As of January 1, 2011, the Office of Collegiate Ministries was established and staffed with a full-time associate position and a half-time administrative assistant position. The Collegiate Ministries Task Force was formed and prepared the following Strategy for Mission.

VISION STATEMENT

“Where there is no vision the people perish.” For decades there hasn’t been a cohesive vision or identity for PCUSA collegiate ministry. A vision statement is the first and significant step to developing and regaining a semblance of organization within and importance to church for collegiate ministries. This simple statement has elements of evangelism, compassion and education—all hallmarks of reformed ministry.

WORSHIPPING COMMUNITIES

This recommendation could have been a directive, but instead was listed as an encouragement with anticipation that it would be given the weight of a directive by the Office of Collegiate Ministry. The intention is that Collegiate Ministries would be engaged in the 1,001 New Worshipping Communities endeavor. As details become available with the 1,001 Worshipping Communities program, Collegiate Ministries would incorporate the details of the program while developing new worshipping communities near campuses that have no PC(USA) presence and transforming existing worshipping communities near college campuses that are currently underserved by the PC(USA).

REGIONAL OFFICES

Ministry is contextual. For local collegiate ministries to receive the most excellent and relevant help, the staff members that work with these ministries need to be familiar with their context. Also, with the 101 new ministries being established and renewed, there will hopefully be more ministries established. With the increase in ministry locations, collaboration with and support from regional entities and agencies (mid councils, related schools, camps and conference centers) is essential. The staff will need to be more aware and acquainted with the agencies in the region. For this new model, more centralized staff is not the answer; a regional staff will be more responsive.
SUSTAINABLE FUNDING

It is no secret that many of the traditional funding streams are drying up or being redirected. Many offices are dealing with a reduction in funding; the uniqueness of Collegiate Ministries is the highly restrictive nature of the overall budget. The level of restriction on the budget does not lend itself to creatively moving a program forward. In anticipation of further declines and reductions, the task force recommends that, with the help of Communications and Funds Development, a capital campaign be established to fund the important and ongoing work of the Office of Collegiate Ministries in perpetuity. For the Office of Collegiate Ministry to be able to respond to ministry needs timely and appropriately, both now and in the future, an innovative and productive fundraising effort is essential.

Response: Extra Commitment Opportunity Account #E052108-PHEWA Faith-Based Community Organizer Position (http://gamc.pcusa.org/give/E052108/) was created in August 2010.

23. 2010 Referral: Item 09-08. On Supporting Mission and Ministry in North Korea. Recommendation 3. Instruct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to: a. Develop and Publicize a Mission Strategy to Proclaim and Demonstrate the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Love of God, and the PC(USA)’s Commitment to Caring for the Vulnerable Population in North Korea ... and Thereby Open Up the Way to Reach the People in North Korea with the Gospel of Jesus Christ in the Future; and b. Use PC(USA) Mission Resources in South Korea to Further Promote Partnership with the Presbyterian Church of Korea (PCK) and other Ecumenical Partners to Collaborate on This Mission to North Korea; and c.

Response: Funds in the amount of approximately $28,000 were collected and sent to our ministry partner, the Presbyterian Church in Korea (PCK), for the purpose of purchasing food to be sent to North Korea.

The 2012 Mission Yearbook will lift up the mission and ministry in North Korea. Congregations and individuals will be asked to pray for and support these efforts.

Extra Commitment Opportunity (ECO) accounts have been set up to receive mission giving for projects in North Korea http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/global/north-korea. Funds have been received and some have been sent to their intended destination. At the same time, government sanctions restricted monies from being sent into North Korea so that there are funds currently being held until the way has been cleared.

In planning for future mission efforts into North Korea, World Mission validated and prioritized a mission coworker three-year teaching position at Pyongyang University of Science and technology (PUST). Pending an approved candidate, this will be the first official, full-time mission assignment for reaching the people of North Korea. Financial support of this position will follow the approved pattern for all mission personnel sent by the PC(USA). As this particular assignment proves successful additional personnel may also be recruited.

Response: World Mission staff members have held meetings with and communications are ongoing with the Presbyterian Church of Korea (PCK) to collaborate on this mission. Since citizens of South Korea are not permitted travel into North Korea, efforts fall more heavily upon General Assembly staff. A mission co-worker completed an exploratory visit to Pyongyang University of Science and Technology (PUST) during July 2011 and a teaching assignment in December 2011. Costs related to these assignments were born by the Korea Mission of the Presbyterian Church (KMPC) office.

In planning for future mission efforts into North Korea, World Mission validated and prioritized a mission coworker three-year teaching position at PUST. Pending an approved candidate, this will be the first official, full-time mission assignment for reaching the people of North Korea. Financial support of this position will follow the approved pattern for all mission personnel sent by the PC(USA). As this particular assignment proves successful additional personnel may also be recruited.

25. 2010 Referral: Item 09-20. On Supporting Young Adults in Mission and Leadership Development in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Recommendation. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to Provide Budgetary Support in the Amount of $100,000 ($50,000 for 2011 and $50,000 for 2012) for Scholarships for Young Adult Volunteers, Above and Beyond Currently Budgeted Support for the Young Adult Volunteer (YAV) Program, for the Costs of Their Service Internationally and Nationally Through the Young Adult Volunteer Program (YAV) of the World Mission Office. These Funds Would Help Cover the Cost of Living Expenses for YAVs, Which Include Housing and Utilities, Health Insurance, and Stipends for Food and Local Transportation. (YAVs Would Continue to Raise Support for Their Year of Service at a Lesser, More Attainable Amount.)—From the Presbytery De Cristo (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 72, 84–85, 691–93).

Response: All young adult volunteers are required to raise funds to offset cost-of-living expenses such as housing, utilities, health insurance, transportation, food, and stipends. Scholarships are provided to young adult volunteers in order to make the amount of fundraising required more attainable for those who would otherwise be unable to participate in the program. In 2011, scholarship assistance totaling $50,000 was provided to seventeen young adult volunteers, nine volunteers serving internationally and eight serving nationally. Scholarship amounts ranged from $700–$6,000. An additional $50,000 of scholarship assistance will be provided in 2012. The Young Adult Volunteer (YAV) program and other programs within World Mission have examined multiple means of treating national YAV site coordinators as mission co-workers in order to implement a pattern of service that fits the specific context of national YAV sites. In cooperation with staff from Communications and Funds Development, World Mission has promoted the financial support of national YAV site coordinators with individuals, congregations, and presbyteries.

26. 2010 Referral: Alternate Resolution to Item 10-01. On Protesting the Blatant Disregard for the Sanctity of Our Lord’s Name in Motion Pictures and Public Broadcasting. Recommendation. The General Assembly Strongly Condemns the Gratuitous Trivialization of the Use of the Name of the Lord in the Media and Directs MRTI to Communicate This Condemnation to Any Companies in Which It Owns Stock That Own Media Content or Media Distribution Companies and Asks the Appropriate Office of the General Assembly to Make Available Materials for Use by Local Congregations for Conversations...

Response: Communications were sent to major media companies and associations by the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI). Educational materials for use by local congregations on the effects of media content on the lives of children, youth, and adults are posted on the Office of Child Advocacy web site (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/child). The Office of Child Advocacy also did workshops on the subject at church gatherings.

27. 2010 Referral: Item 10-03. On Urging the United States Congress to Cap Interest Rates on Credit Card Lending. Recommendation. The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Urges the United States Congress to Enact Legislation to Cap Consumer Credit Interest Rates Governing Credit Cards, Payday Loans, Auto Title Loans, Home Equity Loans and Other Frequently Usurious Practices, to Support a Consumer Finance Protection Agency Independent of Banks and Other Financially Interested Parties to Ensure That Such Legislation Is Implemented, and to Encourage Publicly-Owned Banks and Credit Unions to Provide More Consumer Choice and More Regional and Local Investment, and to Direct the Stated Clerk and Appropriate General Assembly Mission Council Offices to Communicate This Action to the President of the United States, the U.S. Congress, and State Governors and State Banking Commissions—From the Presbytery of Salem (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 34, 37, 727–29).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) collaborated with the Office of the Stated Clerk and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to communicate the full content of this overture to national decision-makers. In addition, the OPW joined efforts in late 2010 to support sections of the financial services reform bill, which created a federal consumer finance protection agency.

29. 2010 Referral: Item 10-06. Report, “Violence Against Women on the Mexico-U.S. Border.” Recommendation 1. A Resolution to Study Violence Against Women and Children on the Mexico-U.S. Border: 1) Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to create a study group to examine the issue of violence against women and children along the United States-Mexico border, and in particular the circumstances in Ciudad Juarez, Chihuahua, Mexico, in consultation with Presbyterian Border Ministry, the National Presbyterian Church of Mexico, the Hispanic-Latino National Presbyterian Caucus, Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support Office, Presbyterian Women, ACWC, and presbyteries along the border, seeking concrete actions that the PCUSA, its agencies, congregations and partners, both in the U.S. and in Mexico, can implement to effectively impact this tragic issue within our own church and culture, as well as our neighbors, in a timely manner.”

Response: A study group was formed and included persons from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), the National Hispanic-Latino Presbyterian Caucus, Presbyterian Border Ministry, Pasos de Fe, Tres Rios Presbytery, and staff from the Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support Office, the Women’s Leadership Development Office and Presbyterian Women. The National Presbyterian Church of Mexico was also contacted and the team visited with people in El Paso, Texas, Ciudad Juarez, and Chihuahua, Mexico, including the staff of Casa Amiga, a women’s shelter in Ciudad Juarez. Concrete actions to effectively impact this issue within the church and culture were included in bilingual study materials which were created in response to Recommendation 2 and can be found online at http://game.pcusa.org/ministries/hispanic and http://www.pcusa.org/women.

Response: The Hispanic/Latino-a Congregational Support Office of the General Assembly Mission Council, in consultation with the National Hispanic-Latino Presbyterian Caucus, created bilingual study materials directly dealing with violence against women and children. Four videos and a study guide with questions for conversation and suggested actions for congregations and individuals have been created and are posted on the PC(USA)’s website at http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/hispanic and http://www.pcusa.org/women.

Response: The GAMC continues its work on the Mexico-U.S. border, despite the National Presbyterian Church of Mexico’s decision to break ties with the PC(USA), and we denounce violence against women and children on the border and around the world. Over the years, Presbyterian Border Ministry has assisted visiting mission teams up and down the border region, helping them to become more aware of the causes of violence against women, children, and the citizens of Mexico, particularly those in Cuidad Juarez. This has led to advocacy on the part of some groups to appeal to the U.S. government to take responsibility for arms trafficking and pressure the Mexican government to take responsibility for violence against women, particularly in Juarez. Churches on both sides of the border at Juarez, Mexico, and in El Paso, Texas, continue to pressure local and state authorities to investigate cases of violence against women and children and to utilize radio, correspondence, and rallies to highlight this important issue. A study group supported by staff in Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW met in El Paso, Texas, in 2011, examined issues of violence against women and children along the United States-Mexico Border, and created bilingual resources containing suggestions for action and encouragement for the church to continue a vigilant witness against violence on the Mexico-U.S. border. Resources are available on the PC(USA)’s website at http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/hispanic and http://pcusa.org/women.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been working with local presbyteries partners to empower advocacy on these public education issues at the state and local level. In particular, the OPW has been working with staff from the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy, where they are actively working on state-level public education advocacy.

Response: A four-session study guide for the policy paper was developed by the Office of Child Advocacy and Networking and is included in both print and online versions of the paper (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/publiceducation). It is designed to introduce participants to the policy, with the intended outcome of moving Presbyterians to take action to improve access to a quality education for all children.

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been actively involved in ecumenical efforts to lift up the issues of justice and equity in public education. In summer 2010, the OPW signed onto the National Council of Churches’ “Joint Organizational Statement on the No Child Left Behind Act.” In May 2011, the OPW endorsed The Student Bill of Rights Act, introduced by Representative Chaka Fattah (Pa.). In addition, the OPW has participated in meetings with the U.S. Department of Education to push the principles contained in the “Loving Our Neighbor” Report, and to challenge President Obama’s Race to the Top programs.

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations (PMUN) submitted a written statement to the United Nations Economic and Social Council for the 2011 Annual Ministerial Review “Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to education.” This statement affirmed the PC(USA) commitment to education as a basic human right. It was distributed to United Nations (UN) member states through the UN secretariat. The PMUN facilitated the Presbyterian presence at the 2011 Commission on the Status of Women that focused on access to for women and girls. Presbyterian participants affirmed to the commission the PC(USA) commitment to education as a basic human right.

Response: Letters have been sent to the president and Senate calling for the ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women.

Response: World Mission and Presbyterian Women were sponsors of the 2011 Presbyterian/Reformed African Women Leaders Gathering, Tumekutana, held from October 15–19 in Kigali, Rwanda. The event focused on the theme of “Women as Agents of Peace, Healing and Reconciliation”. The women looked at violence within all levels of society: violence in the home, violence in the community, inter-ethnic violence as well as violence experienced within the church. At this meeting a pledge to uphold the WCRC policy statements to ensure equal participation of women was made to encourage equal participation of both men and women in ministry and leadership. The following commitments were among those made by the women in the conference testament:

“We commit ourselves:

a. To set up strategies for mobilizing women to cooperate with, support each other and speak out with a common voice against all forms of injustices so that as women, we can reclaim our God given place in creation.

b. To urge our Churches to ensure gender equality in theological education and ordination, and to implement the guidelines on gender-justice of the World Communion of Reformed Churches.

c. To develop a process of bringing concerns to the attention of the Tumekutana Executive Committee to allow for concerted support including prayers and advocacy.” [The process for advocacy set up by the committee was to inform the women’s desk of the WCRC and ask for support in dealing with the concerns.]

World Mission has communicated to all African partner churches and organizations that PC(USA) World Mission affirms both the testament of the Tumekutana women and the statements on gender of the WCRC.

Response: Theology, Worship, and Education produces materials using such language and has promoted the use of “Well-Chosen Words” in its materials devoted to teaching people about worship and writing liturgy at http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/worship/worship-education-materials/.

Response: The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), in conjunction with ecumenical partners, has engaged several major financial institutions regarding community reinvestment, mortgage lending for multifamily and single family housing, mortgage servicing and foreclosure avoidance, credit and debit cards, payday lending, and rapid tax refunds. In addition to on-going dialogues, shareholder resolutions were filed, and proxies were voted in favor of other resolutions addressing these subjects. At this time, the corporate engagement process is productive enough that no recommendation on severing financial ties to particular financial institutions is being made.

Response: The Office of Environmental Ministries has posted on its web site basic information on the loss of coastal wetlands (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/environment/).

Response: The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) engaged two major oil corporations, Exxon Mobil and ConocoPhillips, in conjunction with the Episcopal Church through dialogue, proxy voting, and shareholder resolutions. This engagement is ongoing.

Response: In numerous letters and advocacy visits with decision-makers, frequently in the context of broader Gulf Coast restoration and recovery, the Office of Public Witness has urged federal investments wetlands restoration and wetlands reservation.

Response: Evangelism and Church Growth ministry area continues to partner with various areas of the church to encourage educational events on gun violence and its prevention in order to raise awareness in the church and call it to informed action. Due to the lack of funding for this project, regular events could not be guaranteed but only encouraged. Various events have been offered to all ages and the promotion of the event encouraged to our academic institutions. This has been accomplished in the following ways:

a. Encouraged students to attend the Big Tent 2 workshop and pre-conference event held in Indianapolis in June 2011.

b. Utilized Facebook and other social media to promote the online resources and events offered elsewhere in this referral.

c. Promoted online resources through our various collegiate networks.

d. Worked with Association of Presbyterian Colleges and Universities in its promotion of resources to the college community.

e. Worked with Committee On Theological Education and its promotion to our seminaries.

Response: Guided by policies of the PC(USA) General Assemblies, the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations is working with the World Council of Churches and other faith-based organizations to advocate on the international arms trade treaty that will address issues related to arms transfers.

Response: The Office of Public Witness is presently advocating against the passage of The National Right-to-Carry Reciprocity Act, H.R. 822, which is the first major gun bill taken up and passed by the House since the January 8, 2011, Tucson shootings and would force states to allow dangerous, violent, and untrained gun owners from out-of-state to carry loaded, hidden guns in virtually every state. This bill is significant in that it would potentially expand already weakened state laws to remove guns from situations of domestic violence, as well as from people whose adjudicated mental illness, drug use, or previous criminal record suggest the possibility of violence.

Response: The investing agencies of the PC(USA) represented on the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) are the Presbyterian Foundation, New Covenant Funds, and the Board of Pensions. None held stock in gun manufacturers during the past two years.

Response: The Presbyterian Peacemaking Program has partnered with “Heeding God’s Call,” a faith-based movement that was started by members of Bryn Mawr Presbyterian Church in Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, to prevent gun violence. There are “Heeding God’s Call” chapters in Baltimore, Md., Harrisburg, Pa., Philadelphia, Pa., and Greater Washington, D.C., and new chapters being proposed in a number of cities. Together we are building public awareness of gun violence and helping local faith communities take action to prevent it. The Presbyterian Peacemaking Program sponsored a day-long seminar at the 2011 Big Tent entitle “Gun Violence, Gospel Values: Mobilizing in Response to God’s Call.” In addition, the 2011 Peacemaking Offering bulletin insert and DVD featured the topic of gun violence prevention. A Gun Violence Prevention Congregational Toolkit has been produced and is downloadable on the Peacemaking website (http://gpc.pcusa.org/ministries/peacemaking/). In addition, Presbyterian Disaster Assistance is producing an hour-long video addressing the aftermath of gun violence following the January 8, 2011 mass shooting in Tucson, Arizona.

Response: The Office of Public Witness is working in collaboration with the Office of Immigration Issues and the Interreligious community on Capitol Hill to vigorously advocate for Immigration Reform. We have signed on to letters pressing for the passage of the DREAM Act and engaged in congressional visits to advocate for comprehensive immigration reform.

Response: The Compassion, Peace and Justice offices of Environmental Ministries, Office of Public Witness, Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, Environmental Ministries, Self-Development of People, and Presbyterian Hunger Program have maintained contact with communities impacted by the Deep Water Horizon Oil Disaster, and continue to evaluate strategies for long-term response. A special appeal on the second anniversary of this tragic event is anticipated. The income will be used to fund the feasible elements of this referral.

Response: The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) communicated by letter with oil corporations engaged in offshore exploration, drilling, and production about their safety and environmental practices in the wake of the Deep Water Horizon oil disaster.

51. 2010 Referral: Item 11-NB. Recommendations Regarding Deep Water Horizon Oil Disaster. Recommendation 6. Direct the Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C., to (a) Communicate with Congress and the Executive Branch the Need to Reconstitute a Robust Program of Oversight and Compliance to Ensure That Health, Safety, and Environmental Standards Are Followed to Protect Workers, Communities, and the Environment, and (b) Urge Congress and the Executive Branch to Hold BP and Other Responsible Parties Morally and Financially Accountable for This Disaster and for the Socio-economic and Environmental Recovery (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 43–44, 881).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been active in ecumenical and coalitional efforts to make the federal government respond adequately and responsibly to the Deep Water Horizon Oil spill. From July 2010 to December 2010, the OPW signed six letters to Congress and/or the Administration encouraging such action, including the establishment of a Citizen’s Advisory Council. Staff of OPW have also participated in meetings with decision-makers on this topic. An ecumenical effort to bring clergy in to D.C. to lobby their own members of Congress resulted in bringing a PC(USA) pastor from the Gulf Coast to meet with her members of Congress on these issues.

Response: In response to the three referrals above, letters were sent to the president and Congress urging them to take these steps. The Office of Public Witness (OPW) joined the Faith Roundtable on Afghanistan. Through this group, OPW worked in collaboration with other denominations as well as organizations such as Sojourners and Network to call for aid, not war, in Afghanistan. The group strategized on best advocacy messages, shared information from on the ground as well as current work.

Response: Letters were sent to the president and Congress urging them to take these steps.

Response: Resources related to the effects of the war in Afghanistan and possible non-combative actions that the United States might take were distributed electronically by various programs in Compassion, Peace and Justice (http://www.pcusa.org/blogs/swords-plowshares/topic/afghanistan/).

Response: The Africa Office of World Mission sent letters inviting those presbyteries that had hosted International Peacemakers from Sudan, as well as the “home” presbyteries of PC(USA) mission coworkers serving in Sudan, to initiate covenant-based partnerships with presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church of Sudan or the Sudan Presbyterian Evangelical Church. In addition, as congregations and presbyteries have expressed interest in supporting PC(USA) mission efforts in Sudan, the Africa Office has responded with encouragement and offers of assistance to initiate presbytery partnerships with these Sudanese denominations.

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations (PMUN) participates in the Non-governmental Organizations Working Group on Religious Freedom at the United Nations. The PMUN has engaged in advocacy with representatives of specific member states and has established a relationship with the office of the U.S. ambassador at large for religious freedom. Opportunities for individuals and groups to advocate for the creation of a special envoy to promote religious freedom in parts of the Middle East and South Asia were provided.

Response: The base agreement is unimplemented due to a ruling in late 2010 by the Colombian Constitutional Court. With the assistance of the Colombia Accompaniment Program and our ecumenical partners, the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, and the Office of Public Witness has monitored developments since this ruling. Updates have been shared through presentations made by visitors from our partner, the Presbyterian Church in Colombia, and in electronic communication tools (http://www.pcusa.org/blogs/swords-plowshares/topic/colombia/).

Have Adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” in Order to Serve Them in Their Peacemaking Efforts, Requests That a Report Be Made to the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Number of Sessions That Have Adopted the Commitment to Peacemaking—From the General Assembly Mission Council (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 65, 965–66).

Response: The Commitment to Peacemaking has been adopted by 4,361 sessions as of November 23, 2011.

Response: A letter from the Stated Clerk and Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council was sent to the administrator of USAID to convey the reservations of Presbyterians regarding USAID’s strategy in Haiti. The letter requested that USAID involve Haitian horticultural students, Haitian Farmers and Small Farmer Associations in the planning of local agricultural projects and that USAID prioritize support to grassroots farmers’ associations, including women’s associations, to establish sustainable small farm agriculture in preference to the introduction of commercial and/or industrial farming practices.

Response: A letter from the Stated Clerk and Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council was sent to Former President Bill Clinton and the prime minister of Haiti to request that the Interim Commission for the Reconstruction of Haiti (IRH) adopt more transparent processes and greater accountability to the people of Haiti, including systematic consultation with the Haitian people regarding development plans that will affect their lives and the future of their country.

Response: Wide education of Presbyterians continues about GMO (genetically modified seeds)/hybrid seeds and the potential negative impact of industrial agriculture initiatives on Haitian land, including Presbyterian Hunger Program Bible study (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/hunger/presbyterian-hunger-program-bible-study), the development of a Food Sovereignty page on the Presbyterian Hunger Program website (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/joininghands), the development of a video in cooperation with Agricultural Missions, and Mission Co-worker Mark Hare’s blogs and videos. Jean-Baptiste Chavannes (Haiti mission partner), Mark Hare (mission co-worker), and Presbyterian Hunger Program visited numerous Presbyterian congregations and presbyteries to do presentations on this issue. This education has resulted in hunger networks and congregations writing to USAID and to Former President Bill Clinton protesting the importation of hybrid seeds into Haiti that undercut the cost of local seed and violate the goals of the Haitian farming movement to build a strong, local food economy.

62. 2010 Referral: Item 13-12. Commissioners’ Resolution. On the Restoration of Sustainable Agriculture in Haiti. Recommendation 4. Direct the PC(USA) to Work Collaboratively with Other Denominations and Ecumenical Institutions to Ensure That (a) Haiti Is Increasingly Able to Feed Itself; (b) the Value of Reinstating Tariffs as Transitional Protection for Recovering Local Agriculture Is Given Due Consideration; (c) Exports Are Secondary to Creating Viable Food Economies for Haitians; (d) Emergency Food Aid to Haiti Is Monitored and Managed in Such a Way That It Provides Incentives (and Not Disincentives) for Local Food Production; (e) Mechanisms Are Created for Haitian Farmers to Make Their Voices Heard as They Advocate for Themselves to the Haitian Government, the ICRH, USAID, and Other International Organizations That Are Directly Involved in the Haitian Reconstruction (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 65, 69–70, 973–76).

Response: General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) staff worked with Agricultural Missions and the Inter-Faith Working Group on Trade and Investment to promote policies that ensure that Haiti’s agricultural production is food-focused for Haitians, including trade policies. The GAMC staff has worked to strengthen Haitian farmers’ organizations in advocacy, education, and funding, both through FONDAMA and the Peasant Movement of Paypay (MPP) (PC(USA) partners). Funds were raised to support the purchase of tools and indigenous seeds in order to avoid dependence on a foreign seed supplier and to enable farmers to feed refugees fleeing into the region. During reconstruction phase, funds were used to support eco-village construction to provide housing and livelihood to landless families. Two presbyteries, Scioto Valley and Peaks, are weighing the creation of partner-networks to work with Haitian farmers on advocacy issues tied to agro-business initiatives and the protection of indigenous seeds in the United States and in Haiti.

The GAMC staff accompanied Chavannes Jean-Baptiste, the director of the Haiti’s largest farmers’ organization, MPP, in meetings with USAID, members of the Black Caucus, and other congressional leaders to oppose the donation of hybrid seeds to Haiti and the implementation of industrial agriculture, including the cultivation of jatropha, an indigenous hardy plant found in Haiti. Mark Hare, mission co-worker, and recruitment for a Joining Hands new mission position in Haiti provide more opportunities to deepen the work to address these root causes of hunger in Haiti.

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations facilitated a meeting between PC(USA) mission co-workers related to Madagascar and staff of the U.S. Mission to the United Nations. The ministry also provided opportunities for Presbyterian to engage in advocacy on behalf of democracy in Madagascar.

The Office of Public Witness (OPW) facilitated numerous meetings with Congress and the administration on Madagascar. The OPW arranged for a meeting with Senator Chris Coons, chair of the Africa Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and colleagues in World Mission. Madagascar and the issues involving the coup were highlighted as one of our main concerns. Communication has continued with Senator Coons’ office. Letters outlining the concerns stated in the resolution have been sent. Request for a Senate and a House hearing have also been made. The OPW arranged for the Reverend Hubert Rakotoarivony, a minister ordained in the Church of Jesus Christ in Madagascar (FJKM), and Dan Turk, mission co-worker serving in Madagascar, to meet with the offices of the chairs and ranking members of both the house and senate Africa Subcommittees. The OPW also arranged for a meeting with relevant staff at the State Department. An action alert was sent out to PC(USA) members on the situation in Madagascar.

The Office of Public Witness (OPW) facilitated numerous meetings with Congress and the administration on Madagascar. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to Empower and Equip Presbyteries and Congregations as They Respond to the Spiritual and Material Needs of Iraqi Refugees Arriving in the United States, Including Increased Collaboration Between Presbyterian Disaster Assistance and the Office of Middle Eastern Congregational Support to Provide a Holistic Approach to This Outreach Ministry; and Also Direct the GAMC to Work Proactively with Our Regional Partners as They Respond to the Ongoing Needs of Iraqi Refugees in the Host Countries in the Middle East—From the Presbytery of Providence (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 50, 51–52, 1018–21).

Response: Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) has been increasing its support to refugees across the U.S., including increasing its budgeted support and the number of services it has been providing. In partnership with Office of the General Assembly’s Office of Immigration Issues (OGA), PDA is working with its network of Asylum Support Agencies and aiding new agencies with their assistance to asylum seekers, including a new emphasis in finding safe, secure shelter for recently released detainees. In addition, for the first time, PDA has partnered with OGA’s Office of Immigration Issues, the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women and World Mission to organize a consultation among congregations that assist with refugee resettlement, new immigrant congregations, their host congregations and their presbyteries, including significant representation from the Iraqi refugee community, focused on the needs of newly arrived and resettled refugees and sharing information and resources in reaching those involved in this vital ministry. The PDA has been active in attending meetings with the Iraq Partnership Network and that network was represented at the refugee resettlement consultation.

This booklet has been publicized for World AIDS Day and at several PC(USA) events, and can be downloaded on-line (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/becoming-an-hiv-and-aids-competent-church).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) brought in a 2011 Summer Fellow who worked exclusively on HIV/AIDS issues. He represented the OPW at numerous briefings and congressional hearings. The OPW also collaborated with the Office of the Stated Clerk and the International Health and Development Office in World Mission to write a letter to members of Congress and the Administration on this topic.

Response: In March 2011, the Office of Public Witness (OPW) hosted its first annual Compassion, Peace and Justice Training Day, at which it offered a panel discussion and briefing for a grassroots audience on “the Changing Face of HIV and AIDS in the U.S.” Panel participants included a local service provider, a representative of a national minority AIDS advocacy organization, local pastors at churches that are engaged in robust HIV/AIDS ministries, and a pastor whose focus is on the occurrence and response to disease in U.S. correctional facilities.

The OPW also brought in a 2011 Summer Fellow, who focused exclusively on HIV/AIDS. He developed two plans for ongoing outreach and ministry. The first was a plan for developing a resource for ministers engaged in prison ministries so that they will have more information about some of the issues facing inmates with whom they come in contact. In addition, the Fellow proposed a plan to work with the Presbyterian AIDS Network to develop a resource on these issues geared toward youth.

The OPW also collaborated with the Office of the Stated Clerk to write a letter to all state governors urging comprehensive HIV treatment services in correctional facilities.

I. General Assembly Mission Council Shared Services Final Response to Referral Response: The General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) gathers data annually from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) year-end financials to confirm ongoing compliance with the church’s Minority Vendor Policy.

J. Office of the General Assembly Final Responses to Referrals

Response: The Office of the General Assembly assembled and distributed a per capita brochure in early 2011 to mid councils and congregations. It was designed so that mid councils could add interpretive materials to the brochure. The brochure was updated in January 2012 and is currently in use for the purpose of interpreting the uses of per capita throughout the system.

Response: The reporting of “inactive members” was removed from the form. The inclusion of “Other Participants” will appear on the 2012 report form.

Response: This referral is answered by Item 05-13, Recommendation to Amend Sections G-3.0109, G-3.0404, D-5.0101, D-5.0106, D-5.0203, D-5.0206, D-6.0101, and D-6.0202 of the Book of Order,” being presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Response: The Office of Vocation, directing presbytery and synod leaders to the report, invited leaders to engage in presbytery- and/or synod-wide planning to consider just models of compensation for pastoral ministry in small and struggling congregations and to include congregations with the smallest budgets, tent-making pastors, and underemployed teaching elders in such planning. Leaders were also invited to discuss ways synods, presbyteries, and congregations can include solidarity concerns regarding just compensation in the ministry of current congregations as well as in new ministries and congregations and to share those insights with other presbyteries and synods through on-line communities.

K. Office of Vocation Final Response to referral with Recommendations

Response: This referral is answered by Item 07-19, Report of the Office of Vocation on the Process to Evaluate the Current Call System being presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

L. Presbyterian Publishing Corporation Final Responses to referrals

Response: This referral is answered by Item 20-09, Recommendation Regarding New Presbyterian Hymnal, being presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Each agency shared aspects of its compensation programs, the fourteen principles, and how they have been applied in practice. The consensus was that the principles provide good, biblically, theologically, and ethically based guidance and at the same time appropriate human resource standards that have enabled the agencies to attract, retain, and fairly compensate qualified talent for the work of each agency in service to the church.

The leaders of the six General Assembly agencies also discussed possible ratios for compensation. The proposal to set ratios has been studied by task forces, committees, and boards and has been rejected by the General Assembly. The consensus was that setting ratios would be ill-advised and not in the best interest of the mission of the church. Compensation, to be fair and effective, is much more complex than a single ratio. Leadership of the six agencies agreed that the fourteen principles are a more comprehensive and sound approach to setting compensation rates and policies than setting ratios.

The PPC’s current compensation practices are designed to align with the fourteen current principles of compensation and to provide good stewardship of the church’s financial resources that reward and fairly compensate staff at all levels.

3. 2010 Referral: Item 11-09: A Review of Efforts Regarding Cultural Proficiency and Creating a Climate for Change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Recommendation 7. Each Entity Must Demonstrate Affirmative Efforts to Increase Racial Ethnic and Female Employee Representation in the Senior Management Categories. When Filling Vacancies at This Level, There Must Be a Racial Ethnic Person and a Female Among the Final Candidates; if They Are Not Among the Final Candidates, the Entity Must Explain Why They Were Not Considered – From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 39, 42, 857–78)

The PPC has practiced affirmative efforts to increase racial ethnic and female employee representation at every occurrence of recruitment and hiring of a new external candidate for employment hired at PPC during the last two years. This was further reported to the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns committee in 2011 and during PPC’s General Assembly review process. Since PPC’s staff has decreased in size over the last several years there have been few opportunities to add additional staff to increase diversity. The PPC lost a racial ethnic member of senior staff and has not replaced that person yet but intends to do that as financial circumstances allow.

The PPC also recruits through the Robert Bohl racial ethnic intern program. A racial ethnic woman was active in this program in 2011. She has been offered permanent employment as an acquisitions editor with PPC and is currently considering that opportunity in a favorable light. She is completing her Ph.D. and is expected to decide whether to accept PPC’s offer of employment no later than January 2013, and perhaps sooner.

The PPC and its board of directors have instructed our investment advisers to practice responsibly social investing in all instances.

THE COVENANT RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE KOREAN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN AMERICA
AND
THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)

“I therefore, the prisoner in the Lord, beg you to lead a life worthy of the calling to which you have been called, with all humility and gentleness, with patience, bearing with one another in love, making every effort to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body and one Spirit, just as you were called to the one hope of your calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all and through all and in all.” Ephesians 4:1–6 (NRSV)
I. History of Relationship

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [PC(USA)] and the Korean Presbyterian Church in America (KPCA) are denominations with common roots and commitments in the Reformed tradition. The emotional ties are the legacy of their mission history. Protestant Christianity in Korea began through the sending of U.S. Presbyterian missionaries to Korea in 1885. Over the past century, Presbyterians in Korea have demonstrated phenomenal growth despite their difficult experiences of suffering. They have become genuine partners in mission and ecumenical engagement not only in Korea and Asia, but also throughout the world.

In the middle of the 1960s, the U.S. immigration law changed, opening the doors for many Koreans to immigrate to the United States. This started a new page in the history of Korean Presbyterians. Unfortunately, the PC(USA) was unprepared to welcome and accept the large number of Korean Presbyterians into its life. While some Koreans joined the PC(USA), some felt the need to establish an independent Korean Presbyterian Church in the United States. Each of these organized groupings of Korean American Presbyterian churches has contributed to the growth and development of the Presbyterian witness in the United States through its unique gifts and calling.

After many years of informal cooperation between leadership of the two churches, the 204th General Assembly (1992) of the PC(USA) and the 17th General Assembly (1992) of the KPCA authorized the establishment of the Joint Committee on Presbyterian Cooperation Between the PC(USA) and the KPCA. Over the past thirty years, the joint committee has focused its work in the areas of ministries and education, global mission, peace, justice, reconciliation, and church polity. Of particular note is the opportunity that Korean Americans born and raised in the United States present for our churches to move from immigrant-focused ministries to ministries directed toward future generations. The work of the joint committee has been important in shaping the relationship between the PC(USA) and the KPCA. The joint committee believes that God is calling us to move to a deeper relationship between the KPCA and the PC(USA) and to request our General Assemblies to declare covenant relationship between the two churches. Covenant relationship establishes a formal mutual commitment in our ecclesial and missional life together. The nature of covenant relationship is a call to mutuality based upon core theological principles.

II. Mutual Recognition and Reconciliation

A. As churches within the Reformed tradition, each holding membership in the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, we recognize each other as churches in which the gospel is preached, sacraments are rightly administered according to the Word of God, and the mission of Jesus Christ is lived out.

B. Baptism marks us as belonging to Christ and Christ’s church. According to Scripture, there is “one Lord, one faith, one baptism” (Eph. 4:5). To that end, we recognize the baptism of each of our churches and welcome one another’s members as brothers and sisters in Christ. We recognize that it is Christ that has showed us the way of self sacrificing love and given to us the Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper to remember this love and to be fed with the bread of life and the cup of salvation. We encourage the sharing in the Lord’s Supper together in all arenas of the church.

C. Christ has entrusted the ministry of the gospel to all of his disciples, calling us to follow him in the way of love, righteousness, peace, and justice. Ordination is the act by which men and women are set aside for particular ministries of the Church. We identify and name these ministries as deacon, elder, and minister of the Word and Sacrament. We recognize that the calling and setting aside of persons for service in the church and the world is for the sake of the mission of Christ. We recognize the authenticity of one another’s ordination of ministers, elders, and deacons.

D. The church lives to fulfill the mission of God in the world. The church does not live for its own sake, but seeks to witness to the saving work of Jesus Christ, the transformative power of the gospel, justice and reconciliation in all areas of its life and witness. God’s gift of unity strengthens the witness of the church. While divisions within the church cannot destroy the mission of the church, they do serve as distractions to the message and the mission of the church. We recognize that the mission of our churches is strengthened by commitment to work cooperatively in the areas of congregational support, resource and leadership development, national and global mission.

III. Covenant Commitments

A. We covenant to support one another through prayer, dialogue, and continued cooperative work. Through mutual affirmation and admonition, we covenant to an honest relationship in which our joys are celebrated, our trials are shared, and disagreements are addressed with the goal of strengthening this covenant. We will seek to affirm the witness of our churches and when necessary speak loving words of correction for the edification of the body of Christ.

B. While we recognize each other’s ministries as authentic, we covenant to develop a process of orderly exchange of ministers. This provision will be governed by the principle that the presbyteries decide who shall be members and approve calls for service in churches. This process will allow for ministers to share in the ministry of each other’s churches, identify processes for transferring ministers, and the procedures for ministers to be dually affiliated. This process will only apply to ministers who are in good standing and include processes for discipline in accordance with our individual polities.

C. We recognize that we are one family and our congregations have common roots. Many Koreans within the PC(USA) and in the KPCA have shared roots in Korea. We covenant to develop a process of orderly transfer of congregations. This process will encourage, where feasible, congregations to share together in ministry and to be dually affiliated. We covenant to develop a process that seeks to strengthen the witness of our churches and not to contribute to divisions within the body of Christ. This process will be developed in a way that respects our individual polities.

D. We recognize that there is much we share in mission together. We covenant to continue to work together in the following areas of mission and pray that other areas may also emerge—curriculum development; second generation and youth and young adult ministry; congregational support and leadership development; women’s leadership and resource development; global mission and justice and reconciliation in the world.

IV. Enabling Acts

A. This covenant will be forwarded to our General Assemblies through the appropriate channels in each of our churches for action by 2008. Ecumenical Statement Approved by the PC(USA) 218th General Assembly in 2008 and the KPCA 33rd General Assembly in 2008.

B. Our assemblies will be asked to enter into covenant relationship, make the necessary constitutional amendments to enable this covenant, and to forward it to presbyteries for ratification. Approved by Majority Vote of PC(USA) and KPCA presbyteries, effective June 28, 2009.

C. Upon the ratification by presbyteries, covenant relationship will be established and a service of worship celebrating and formally entering into covenant relationship will be held by 2010.

D. A covenant implementation committee will be established to shape and support the covenanting process and to make recommendations that enable us to live fully into this covenant.

V. Prayer for the Future

We offer thanksgiving to you O God, Creator of the Universe, Lord of all peoples. You sent the gospel to Korea through the work of Presbyterian missionaries. Through the power of the Holy Spirit, you have nurtured the faith of Koreans in the midst of difficult sufferings and we witnessed the growth of the church in Korea and amongst Korean Presbyterians in the United States. We recognize that while there has been a separation because of human limitations, you have continued to work in and through each of our churches. You have taken our differences in culture, custom, and language and made us one family in Christ. We are grateful that you are bringing us to this time of deeper relationship and seek your guidance and blessing as we make this covenant between the Korean Presbyterian Church in America and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for now and generations to come. Amen

“Now to him who by the power at work at within us is able to accomplish abundantly far more than all we can ask or imagine, to him be glory in the church and in Christ Jesus to all generations, forever and ever. Amen.” Ephesians 3: 20–21 (NRSV)
The following document is the result of collaborative work done by the denominations participating in the Covenant Agreement. It is intended both for those interested in serving in a congregation of a covenant partner denomination as well as judicatory leaders seeking guidance in the implementation of such service.

The Orderly Exchange of Ordained Ministers of the Word and Sacrament (Teaching Elders)

Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad

and

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

Background and Affirmations

Through adoption of the Covenant Agreement, the Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad (KPCA) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [PC(USA)], entered into a covenant relationship. Among other things, this agreement means that the denominations recognize each other’s ministries as authentic and make provision for the orderly exchange of ordained ministers of the Word and Sacrament.

Orderly exchange (provisions for availability) of ordained ministers is for the sake of participation by both denominations in the mission of God, and can be an important sign of our unity in Christ. This particular provision seeks to allow and encourage the more effective use and deployment of ordained leaders in order to enhance our shared ministry and mission. It encourages those in our denominations who are responsible for the deployment of ordained ministers to draw on the available ministers of the other denomination to meet mission needs.

Ordained ministers in one denomination may be invited or may express their desire to serve in the other denomination; they do not have a right to serve in the other denomination. The orderly exchange of ordained ministers is understood to be at the invitation of the receiving denomination and subject to that denomination’s polity and procedures.

Orderly exchange is extended service in ministries in the covenant partner denomination while membership remains constant in a minister’s own denomination. The policies and procedures described here are developed by the two denominations for orderly exchange.

The transfer of ministerial membership is a permanent movement of membership from one denomination to another. A minister seeking to transfer membership must meet the requirements of the denomination to which he or she seeks to belong.

Under orderly exchange, the existing polity of each denomination continues to be respected. It is important, however, that provisions parallel each other as much as possible and that each denomination be familiar with and conversant about the provisions of the other. The denominations will need to nurture both national and regional relationships in order to enhance the orderly exchange of ministers and to find ways to celebrate visibly our covenant.
Principles of Agreement

Seeking to promote greater understanding between the covenant partners, representatives of the two denominations offer the following principles to guide implementation efforts.

1. An ordained minister of a one partner denomination may be eligible to engage in extended service in any position open to a minister in the other covenant denomination except as noted otherwise in the polity of either denomination.

2. Orderly exchange involves an “inviting” presbytery and a “sending presbytery”. It is very important that both presbyteries be involved from the beginning of the orderly exchange process to access the suitability of a minister for particular service and to establish a relationship of accountability and support which will foster effective ministry for Christ.

3. In evaluating the suitability of ordained ministers for service, sending presbyteries will do so in accordance with the stated intentions in the Covenant and the mission needs of the inviting presbytery.

4. Inviting presbyteries shall approve service only in consultation with, and with the concurrence of, the sending presbytery. When granting concurrence for an ordained minister to serve in the partner denomination, the sending presbytery will do so in accordance with the stated intentions in the Covenant.

5. It is important to the faithful and orderly exchange of ordained ministers between the denominations that one who would serve in a congregation of another denomination first be formed and educated for ministry in one's own denomination, and have experience in serving in that denomination's ordained ministry. Such experience and grounding in one's own denomination are seen to be essential prior to serving in a setting of another denomination; therefore, such service is not intended for a first call.

6. To be eligible to serve in the partner denomination, an ordained minister will demonstrate to the inviting presbytery knowledge of and an appreciation for the history, polity, practices of ministry, and discipline of that denomination.

7. Placement, supervision, and evaluation procedures of the inviting presbytery shall be observed. All parties will respect the authority of the inviting presbytery and its responsibility for the ministry of its congregations.

8. The minister remains accountable to the sending presbytery for continuation of ministerial status. All parties will respect the authority of the sending presbytery and its responsibility for the ministry of its minister members.

9. Responsibility for pastoral care of ordained ministers is shared by the inviting and sending presbyteries.

10. In a disciplinary review or judicial process, the ordained minister remains under the jurisdiction of the sending presbytery, but the inviting presbytery may be asked to participate as appropriate.

11. Each denomination will develop a provision whereby an ordained minister may be granted full participation in the inviting presbytery, which may include privilege of voice and vote. If service is in a local congregation, this would include moderating the session. We encourage presbyteries to grant such privileges in order to enhance the ministry.

12. An ordained minister serving the partner denomination will continue to participate in the pension and benefits program of their denomination of membership.
For those who seek to serve there are four basic steps to follow:

1) Read the “Principles for the Orderly Exchange of Ordained Ministers of Word and Sacrament” carefully.

2) Contact your presbytery for authorization to make yourself available for service under the process.

3) After you have been authorized by your presbytery for service under orderly exchange and presbytery to presbytery contact has been made, contact a leader of the partner presbytery in the region you wish to serve and follow that denomination’s procedure.

4) Contact a congregation directly only after being directed to by the appropriate person from that congregation’s presbytery. That contact may include a PC(USA) Personal Information Form or resume. (Sample PIF and Stated Clerk attestation form to be attached.)

As the “Principles for the Orderly Exchange of Ordained Ministers of the Word and Sacrament” makes clear, the process is for the sake of the mission of God. It is not for the convenience of those who may wish to serve in another denomination. It is always to be understood to be at the invitation of the inviting denomination.

THE PROCESS OF DENOMINATIONAL TRANSFER

The purpose of the covenant agreement is not to encourage ministers to transfer their membership from one partner to another, but rather to share leadership for a time of service in order to strengthen the ministry of Christ. That process is one of lending and borrowing leadership.

However, we recognize that some ministers will seek to transfer membership and presbyteries will need information in order to guide that process in a way that respects the integrity of each denomination and the partnership of our covenant. For that reason, information about transfer procedures is given here.

When a minister seeks to transfer from one denomination to another, a written letter of standing will be provided by the sending presbytery to the receiving presbytery. When such a letter is not provided, the transfer will not occur. Additional consultation may occur between the sending and receiving presbyteries.

Transfer of a KPCA minister into the PC(USA)

Ministers of the KPCA will have to meet the requirements of the PC(USA) Form of Government G-2.0505. Essentially these requirements will be the same as those for ministers of other denominations, but the process does allow for an exception to the examination requirements if the minister has been ordained more than five years.

Transfer of a minister member of the PC(USA) to the KPCA

A PCUSA minister may transfer ministerial membership to the KPCA under the PC(USA) Form of Government provisions of G-2.0509. A minister may not be transferred if any disciplinary matter is pending.

Transfer of a PC(USA) ministers into the KPCA

Ministers of the PC(USA) will have to meet the requirements of the KPCA Constitution Chapter 5, Article 29 on “Calling of a Pastor of other Denominations.” These requirements are essentially the same as those for ministers of other denominations.

Transfer of a minister member of the KPCA to the PC(USA)

A minister may request transfer of ministerial membership to the PC(USA) under the KPCA Constitution Chapter 5, Article 32 on “Transferring of Pastors.” Such a minister will remain on the rolls and under the authority of his/her presbytery until notice is received from the receiving presbytery that the minister has been enrolled. A minister may not be transferred if any disciplinary matter is pending.

The following document is the result of over 30 years of dialogue between the Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The goal of this agreement is to lead our denominations and congregations towards closer, healthier relationships that strengthen and further the mission of Jesus Christ. This agreement is not to be used for the purposes of separation based upon dissent.

ORDERLY EXCHANGE OF CONGREGATIONS

1. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Receiving Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad Churches

The process for receiving a KPCA congregation is found in G-3.0205, “The presbytery is responsible for the government of the church throughout its district. The presbytery has the responsibility and power to a. provide that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard. This responsibility shall include organizing, receiving, merging, dismissing, and dissolving congregations in consultation with their members…” The process for dismissal from the KPCA is found in Art. 67, par. 7 “The duties of the Presbytery are as follows…To establish local churches, to divide or merge them, or to dissolve them if necessary, to organize the Session, to approve the calls of the Pastors, and to supervise evangelical and educational work and financial management.”

   a. Prior to consulting with a KPCA congregation, the PCUSA presbytery should consult with the KPCA presbytery of membership to assure that the KPCA congregation has been in conversation with the KPCA regarding the congregation’s desire to join a PCUSA presbytery.

   b. Such consultation between the presbyteries shall include at least:

      1. The determination of a plan for the pastor to transfer membership (KPCA, Art. 32; PCUSA G-2.0505 see also p. 8 of Orderly Exchange document)

      2. An agreement about what will happen to the real property. Since the KPCA Book of Order contains no explicit trust clause, agreements will have to be reached about any reversionary interest the KPCA presbytery may retain in property.

      3. A timeline for such transfer and reception of the congregation.

      4. A plan for the congregation’s integration into the PCUSA presbytery.

2. Korean Presbyterian Church Abroad Receiving Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Churches

The process for dismissing a PCUSA congregation to a KPCA presbytery is found in G-3.0205 “The presbytery is responsible for the government of the church throughout its district. The presbytery has the responsibility and power to: a. provide that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard. This responsibility shall include organizing, receiving, merging, dismissing, and dissolving congregations in consultation with their members…” The process for receiving such congregations is found in Article 67, paragraph 7 “The duties of the Presbytery are as follows…To establish local churches, to divide or merge them, or to dissolve them if necessary, to organize the Session, to approve the calls of the Pastors, and to supervise evangelical and educational work and financial management.”

   a. Prior to consulting with the KPCA presbytery, the congregation shall consult with the PCUSA presbytery of membership regarding the congregation’s desire to join a KPCA presbytery.

   b. Such consultation shall include at least:

      1. The determination of a plan for the pastor to transfer membership (PCUSA G-2.0509. When a teaching elder accepts or continues membership of any character in another denomination, except as provided in this Constitution, the presbytery shall record the face and delete the teaching elder’s name from the roll.” KPCA, Art. 29 see also p. 8 of Orderly Exchange document)

General Assembly Minutes

The minutes of the 220th General Assembly (2012) for Saturday, June 30, 2012, through Tuesday, July 3, 2012, have been reviewed and found to be in order. These minutes are posted on PC-Biz under the business for Committee 2 (Bills and Overtures) and two copies are posted on the bulletin boards across from the registration booths.

[The assembly approved Item 03-01 with amendment. See pp. 10, 78–79.]

On Amending Standing Rule F.6.c. Regarding Nominations from the Floor—From the Presbytery of Boston.

The Presbytery of Boston respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to amend General Assembly Standing Rules F.6.c.(2) and F.6.c (3)(d) on the procedures for nominations from the floor of the assembly as follows:

1. Amend F.6.c.(2) as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“(2) When any nomination for service on a General Assembly committee, council, or board comes from the floor of the assembly, the commissioner making the nomination will provide the General Assembly Nominating Committee, no later than 48 hours after the convening of the General Assembly with pertinent information about the person whose name is being presented [and stating the person’s reason for challenging the nomination presented by the nominating committee], as well as the name of the particular person nominated by the nominating committee whose nomination is being challenged. Such information shall be provided on the “Nomination by Commissioner Form” provided for use at the assembly and available from the Stated Clerk. The availability of the pertinent information provided by the person challenging the nominating committee’s nominee shall be announced to the assembly at least twenty-four hours in advance of the nomination being made from the floor.”

2. Amend F.6.c.(3)(d) as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“(d) The election shall take place no earlier than twenty-four hours following the nominating speeches. Without further discussion or debate, the General Assembly will move to vote.”

Rationale

The election of church members to service on the constituent bodies of the General Assembly is one of the most important functions of the General Assembly, one which can shape the actions and direction of our church for many years after the assembly has adjourned. For this reason, the procedures of the General Assembly Nominating Committee are quite thorough, and ensure that those whose names ultimately are presented to the assembly are among those best suited to the various tasks, with due concern for talents, experience and considerations of broad inclusivity. The General Assembly Nominating Committee’s process provides for the gathering of information from a variety of sources, including personal statements and the confidential appraisals of three references.

In addition to the names submitted for election by the General Assembly Nominating Committee, the Standing Rules of the General Assembly also provide for procedures by which a commissioner may offer a nomination from the floor of the assembly as an alternative to any particular nomination from the committee. This process is an appropriate expression of good Reformed polity, and an implementation of the principle that “the election of … persons to the exercise of … authority” is in the “society” (i.e., the voting body) (F-3.0106).

While affirming the importance of floor nominations in the life of the church, it is also important to note that such nominations come to the assembly without benefit of the scrutiny that is given to those whose names are brought by the General Assembly Nominating Committee. Congregations and lower councils are often able to consider nominations with the benefit of significant knowledge of the individuals involved, but in a body as large as the General Assembly it is probable that few if any of the voting commissioners will be personally familiar with those for whom they are voting. For this reason, the vast disparity in the information available about the two candidates becomes significant.

Any attempt to subject a floor nominee to a vetting process similar to that used for those nominated by the committee would be violative of the principle of free election. There are, however, other measures that can be implemented to encourage full, thoughtful, and informed decisions by all commissioners. Those presented in this overture seek to accomplish these ends:

1. Notify commissioners in a timely fashion that a contested vote is pending.

2. Gather additional information for the voting commissioners’ use, in particular a statement from the commissioner making a floor nomination of the reason for challenging the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s nominee.

3. Extend the time available to commissioners during the assembly to reflect on the nominating speeches and to gather additional information that they feel they need prior to voting.

[The assembly disapproved Item 03-02 with comment. See pp. 10, 79.]

On Amending G-3.0106 to Allow Presbyteries to Forward Only Per Capita Funds Received to Their Synods and the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of Detroit.

The Presbytery of Detroit overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall the last paragraph of G-3.0106 be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“Each council above the session shall prepare a budget for its operating expenses, including administrative personnel, and may fund it with a per capita apportionment among the particular congregations within its bounds. Presbyteries are responsible for raising their own funds and for raising and timely transmission of per capita funds received to their respective synods and the General Assembly. Presbyteries may direct per capita apportionments to sessions within their bounds, but in no case shall the authority of the session to direct its benevolences be compromised.”

Comment: That the recommendation be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) for deliberate consideration and recommendation to the 221st General Assembly (2014) with comment. Comment: The 220th General Assembly (2012) makes this referral because the difficulty of presbyteries raising and transmitting per capita funds goes beyond the scope of the original overture.

Rationale

Per capita apportionments are a traditional means of funding General Assemblies, and have evolved over the years into a method for supporting various ecclesiastical and administrative expenses of presbyteries and synods. The term per capita refers to the fact that the amount apportioned is based on the membership of the presbytery.

Some presbyteries have funded their own ecclesiastical and administrative expenses by apportioning per capita to their congregations, to which they add the apportionments from their synod and the General Assembly. Other presbyteries pay all of these expenses from their general mission budget.

Since The Presbytery of Detroit v. Westminster Church Port Huron in 1976, presbyteries have been forbidden from punishing churches for their failure to pay per capita apportionments. The matter has been addressed and litigated many times over the years, and the prohibition has never been removed, so that a presbytery has no way to require its churches to pay when they refuse as a means of objection to grievances. The position has been taken that per capita apportionments are benevolences, and presbyteries do not have the authority to require a session to pay any benevolence (Minihan, et al., v. Presbytery of Scioto Valley, Remedial Case 216-1, Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 348).

The wording of the per capita provision has always required presbyteries to pay the apportionments to their synods and the General Assembly regardless of whether it has been received by the congregations. Some presbyteries have recently decided to submit only per capita funds received to their synod and the General Assembly. Other presbyteries have continued to pay these apportionments whether or not received by their churches.

In recent years increasing numbers of congregations have declined to pay per capita apportionments as a way of expressing dissatisfaction with actions of the church, frequently for actions of the General Assembly. Since presbyteries are required to pay the full apportionment to higher governing bodies from its mission budget when not received, the effect is to reduce the amount available for the mission of the presbyteries to their own regions. In effect, it forces presbyteries to pay from what may be benevolence monies (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 701) to their synods and the General Assembly. In those cases where the presbytery’s per capita has also been withheld, the effect is to double the cost to the presbytery.

In these days where budgets are very constrained at all levels, and where presbyteries under the new Form of Government are called to support their congregations, the effect of the requirement to pay per capita apportionments for the ecclesiastical expenses of their synods and the General Assembly is to reduce their ability to support their congregations. The result is that the General Assembly, which is the often source of the disaffection, is unaffected while the presbyteries are placed under severe pressure. The intention that the presbyteries play important parts in generating missional congregations is damaged.

Since some presbyteries are already paying only what they have received, the effect is that those presbyteries that are loyal to the rules of our polity are penalized. To remove the penalty for faithfulness seems equitable. Moreover, where it is forbidden for presbyteries to require the payment of benevolences, it also should be forbidden for higher governing bodies to require presbyteries to pay from their benevolences.
Advice on Item 03-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 03-02.

Rationale

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that Item 03-02 is ambiguous and unclear and will cause confusion in the church. By proposing the insertion of the word “received” to modify “per capita funds” it appears to make the erroneous assumption that presbyteries use uniform procedures to raise funds to meet their per capita responsibilities. The lack of uniformity in presbytery methods for raising per capita means that for some presbyteries the insertion is meaningless or would create no change, but for others it would create the misperception that a presbytery’s responsibility is limited to a single stream of income that it calls “per capita,” such as the designated gifts sent in response to the presbytery’s statement to the churches of the amounts of per capita needed.

A presbytery may use unrestricted funds to meet its responsibility to raise the per capita funds requested by the synod and General Assembly (Request 99-1, Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 107). It should be obvious that all restricted or unrestricted funds that a presbytery possesses are or were received at some time. It is not clear how this amendment would identify the per capita funds received. If it is a mere bookkeeping decision of how much of the undesignated receipts of the presbytery are to be allocated to per capita, without regard for the amounts requested by the General Assembly and synod, the presbytery would be acting in disregard of the unity and interdependence of the councils of the church.

... These councils are sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly. All councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution. The councils are distinct, but have such mutual relations that the act of one of them is the act of the whole church performed by it through the appropriate council. The larger part of the church, or a representation thereof, shall govern the smaller. (Book of Order, F-3.0203)

The administration of mission demonstrates the unity and interdependence of the church, in that councils share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers (F-3.0203). Through their members and elected commissioners, lower councils participate in planning and administration of the work of higher councils, and in consultation between bodies concerning mission, budget, staffing and fair employment practices, and matters of equitable compensation.

The funding of mission similarly demonstrates the unity and interdependence of the church. The failure of any part of the church to participate in the stewardship of the mission of the whole church diminishes that unity and interdependence. All mission funding should enable the church to give effective witness in the world to God’s new creation in Jesus Christ, and should strengthen the church’s witness to the mission of God. (Book of Order, G-3.0106)

This item is very similar to an overture the General Assembly received in 2004 (Item 03-17). At that time the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) reminded the assembly of the relevant authoritative interpretations concerning per capita, pointed out that the overture erroneously assumed that presbyteries used identical practices in raising per capita funds, and identified the options available to the assembly. The options the ACC identified at that time were: to disapprove the overture (which was the ACC’s recommendation at that time); to approve the overture; to propose a constitutional amendment that would give the presbyteries the power to require the sessions to pay per capita (and that would necessarily limit the authority of the session to determine the distribution of the church's benevolences); to remind presbyteries of the flexibility available under the 1999 authoritative interpretation and to remind sessions of their respective covenantal responsibilities; or to direct that a comprehensive study be conducted of the funding system at work in the denomination.

The same options are available to the 220th General Assembly (2012), with the sole exception that no item of business before this assembly proposes a constitutional amendment giving presbyteries the power to require sessions to pay per capita.

COGA Comment on Item 03-02

Comment on Item 03-02—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 03-02.

Rationale

The earliest reference to per capita in our North American tradition comes from a 1734 statement to ministers:

…tis unanimously [sic] agreed by all the members of ye Synod, yt every Ministr. Shall either seasonally propose the affair, and read the Synod's Lettr. To their respective Congregations and appoint a Day for a publick Collection, if there be occasion for such a Step to carry on ye Design, or oblige themselves to pay out of their own propr Estate ten shillings into the Fund; and yt every Presbry take Care yt their respective members observe an ord. Made in ye year 1736....
In the nearly 300 years since that statement, the Presbyterian church has reiterated a stewardship of responsibility and community that involved per capita.

Per Capita is a fundamental way in which all of the nearly 11,000 congregations and governing bodies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are connected through their participation in the work of the wider church. The Book of Order (G-3.0106) says of per capita that it “demonstrates the unity and interdependence of the church. The failure of any part of the church to participate in the stewardship of the mission of the whole church diminishes that unity and interdependence.”

There have been many challenges over the years to the notion of per capita and the role of the presbytery in its collection (GAPJC decisions in 1976, 1986, 1992, 2002, 2003, and 2004 and General Assembly actions in 1998, 1999, and 2002). In that 1999 action, the General Assembly determined:

> [A] presbytery has the responsibility to remit per capita allocations to synod and General Assembly, even though a congregation does not pay the per capita allocated to it by the presbytery…. as long as funds are available within the presbytery. (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 107)

The 218th General Assembly (2008) affirmed that per capita exists to allow the whole church to share equitably in those things that make us Presbyterian: our theological identity, our connectedness, our system of governing bodies that allow elders and ministers together to discern the mind of Christ, our ecumenical connections that make us part of the church universal, and our core structures that keep us together as a church. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 165).

As these statements points out, in addition to the General Assembly, per capita is also a stewardship tool for synods and many presbyteries.

Key to understanding per capita is a fundamental knowledge that the presbytery is the only direct link between the stewardship decisions of a session and the General Assembly and synod. The General Assembly is neither equipped nor authorized to solicit per capita directly from congregations whose membership is in presbyteries.

Removing the responsibility for per capita collection from the duties of a presbytery irrevocably breaks that link between the General Assembly and the session. A presbytery could neglect the promotion of per capita, or even counsel, without consequences, that each session withhold its per capita.

While our mid councils have to balance support for congregations with support for the larger church, and we understand that this is a tough position, nevertheless one necessary for the financial stability of our presbyteries since per capita is the primary means of funding for the ministry of many of our presbyteries.

The theological essence of per capita gets lost when the link that the presbytery provides between the General Assembly and the congregation becomes an arbitrary function of pass-through accounting instead of covenantal responsibility.

Further, the COGA concurs with the advice written by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC).

[The assembly approved Item 03-03. See pp. 10, 79.]

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) amend the Organization for Mission to clarify the roles of the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council as follows:

1. Amend Section IV.B.2. by adding a new section, “p.,” to the list of Stated Clerk functions to read as follows:

   “p. Serve as primary spokesperson for General Assembly actions, unless the General Assembly has directed otherwise.”

2. Amend Section V.G.1. by adding a new section, “j.,” to the list of Executive Director responsibilities to read as follows:

   “j. Serve as primary spokesperson for General Assembly Mission Council policies and programs.”

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: Item 18-08: Approve and Delegate to the Appropriate Body a Review of and Possible Revisions to the Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with Attention Specifically Given to the Roles and Responsibilities of the General Assembly Mission Council and Its Executive Director, and the Office of the General Assembly and the Stated Clerk—From the Committee on Review of the PC(USA) (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 394–95 of the printed version, pp. 1309–10 of the electronic version).
The 219th General Assembly (2010) directed that the Organization for Mission be reviewed with attention to the roles and responsibilities of the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council. The 219th General Assembly (2010) felt that unclear roles were an impediment to collaboration, and sought this review in order to eliminate confusion.

A review has been conducted, and there is very little overlap. These two amendments will make the role of each office clearer, in accordance with the request of the 219th General Assembly (2010). The specific focus of the request was to state that it is the role of the Stated Clerk to speak with one voice for the General Assembly. This recommendation achieves that purpose, while also noting that it is the function of the GAMC Executive Director to speak on behalf of GAMC policies and programs.

[The assembly approved Item 03-04. See pp. 10, 79.]

Rationale

Standing Rule I.1.d. gives instructions for rotating the place of the meetings of the General Assembly between four areas of the United States. Under the plan assemblies are scheduled for Pittsburgh (2012—Area D), Detroit (2014—Area C), Portland, Oregon (2016—Area A). This rotation places the 223rd General Assembly in Area B, which includes the Synods of the Sun, Lakes and Prairies, and Mid-America. Possible convention cities were identified in this area and the presbyteries represented by those cities were contacted about invitations.

The Department of General Assembly Meeting Services then sent requests for proposals to the convention bureaus of those cities whose presbyteries also offered invitations. After review, three cities provided opportunities worth further investigation: St. Louis, Kansas City, and Milwaukee. All three cities offered very attractive possibilities.

After site visits were made, ten criteria for evaluation were developed, including financial commitments, ease of facility use, hotel convenience, and the spiritual and emotional impact of a particular site on commissioners and advisory delegates.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly heard a recommendation from GAMS and is excited to recommend St. Louis for much that it offers. The convention center has ample space on two levels for the plenary sessions, worship, committee meetings, exhibit hall, group meals, offices, and other functions of the assembly. Participants will find it easy to navigate the building. The center is currently completing work to upgrade the meeting space and public areas.

The Renaissance Hotel, a historic renovation, is located across the street, offering 800 rooms in the assembly block (almost half of the total number needed), and ample space for most of the sponsored meals and other optional activities that make up the assembly schedule. Several other hotels are located within walking distance of the convention center; hotel shuttles will not be needed.

Washington Ave. west of the convention center is an up-and-coming area, with a variety of locally owned restaurants and shops. Other downtown attractions include the Gateway Arch, World Series Championship baseball, a Blues museum (under construction), a one-of-a-kind City Museum, and parks for General Assembly participants when they have free time.

St. Louis is centrally located with good access by interstate and rail. The airport is located thirteen miles from downtown, with light rail service to downtown ($3.75 one-way). Southwest is the major airline for St. Louis, keeping fares the lowest of the three cities considered.

The assembly last met in St. Louis in 1988. The dates will conflict with Father’s Day (June 17), but miss Pentecost (May 20) and the July 4th weekend.

Overall we believe that St. Louis and the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy offer the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) an outstanding location for holding a General Assembly and that commissioners, advisory delegates, staff, and visitors will be excited to be in St. Louis.

[The assembly approved Item 03-05. See pp. 10, 79.]

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) amend Section IV.C.2. of the Organization for Mission by inserting new text as “19.” to read as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“19. On behalf of the General Assembly, bring forward according to G-6.02 any such questions requiring an interpretation of the Constitution that may arise from the work of the General Assembly.”

Rationale

The Book of Order, G-6.02, outlines the process for interpreting the Constitution. The third paragraph of G-6.02 states “All questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order arising from councils of the church shall be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk ….” [emphasis added]. The new language in the Organization for Mission would give the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly the authority to bring on behalf of the General Assembly any questions for interpretation that arise from the work of the assembly.

Without this authority to fulfill the deliberative process outlined in G-6.02, questions arising from the work of the assembly itself would have to be brought before one assembly for referral by that assembly to the following assembly. With this authorization, COGA can bring to the next assembly at the request of any of the six agencies, permanent committees, and special task forces of the church such concerns as they encounter in fulfilling their mission.

[The assembly approved Item 03-06. See pp. 10, 79.]

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in concurrence with the General Assembly Committee on Representation, recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) amend Section IV.C. of the Organization for Mission by inserting a new Section “5.” and re-numbering current Sections “5.–7.” as “6.–8.” as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“5. General Assembly Committee on Representation

“a. As provided for in the Book of Order, G-3.0103, council above the session shall establish committees on representation to fulfill the following function: to advise the council regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, to advocate for diversity in leadership, and to consult with the council on the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403.

“b. The committee shall

“(1) Advise the assembly and all entities created by and accountable to the General Assembly with regard to diversity and inclusiveness in its elected and employed leadership.

“(2) Reflect in its membership the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403.

“(3) Assist the Moderator regarding the appointment of a commissioner to be the moderator of each assembly committee and a commissioner to serve as vice moderator of each assembly committee (see Standing Rule C.1.c).

“(4) Evaluate each General Assembly session and share that evaluation with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

“(5) Participate in any review and/or revision of the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action.

“(6) Make recommendations to the assembly regarding inclusion of leaders for emerging communities and concerns as well as methods of decision-making that increase participation and representation, in accordance with the principles of unity and diversity in F-1.0403.

“(7) Review the work and impact of committees on representation at councils below the General Assembly in accordance with the functions and commitments assigned in the Book of Order, G-3.0103.

“(8) Assist the church to build an ethos of inclusion and involvement of all persons in the decision-making, sharing power across differences.
“5. 6. General Assembly Nominating Committee [Text remains unchanged in this section.]

“7. 8. Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations [Text remains unchanged in this section.]

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) is an advisor to the General Assembly and its leadership with regard to the representation and participation of its bodies. The GACOR has an official advising role to Moderators in the selection of General Assembly committee leadership and would like the Standing Rules to reflect that same consideration and access for Moderator appointments. This addition would allow GACOR to faithfully execute its constitutional mandate “to advise the council regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, [and] to advocate for diversity in leadership…in accordance with …F-1.0403” (Book of Order, G-3.0103). The General Assembly Committee on Representation routinely consults with the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) about its processes, slates of nominees, and contacts and recruits persons from underrepresented groups, seeking more diverse pools of qualified candidates. But those activities do not yet include consultation on the appointment process for special committees and commissions. Moderator appointments are becoming a more frequently used means for leadership selection. Rather than be negotiated with each Moderator, GACOR would like to formalize the consulting process by making this Standing Rule change. It would help all involved be able to plan for cooperation and collaboration.

[The assembly approved Item 03-07. See pp. 10, 79.]

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve the following amendment to Section IV.C.5. of the Organization for Mission so that it will be in accordance with current Book of Order provisions and Standing Rule K.1.c. The text shall read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“5. General Assembly Nominating Committee

“The There shall be a General Assembly Nominating Committee responsible for nominating persons to serve in positions requiring election by the General Assembly. The Moderator of the General Assembly, in collaboration with the General Assembly Nominating Committee, shall appoint persons to serve on special commissions and special committees. These nominations and/or appointments shall be made in accordance with the shall be composed as provided for in Book of Order, G-13.0111 G-3.0111 and F-1.0403.”

Rationale

Current language: “The General Assembly Nominating Committee shall be composed as provided for in Book of Order, G-13.0111.”

The Organization for Mission refers to prior Book of Order provisions. This amendment corrects the Organization for Mission to be in accordance with current Book of Order provisions as well as with the appropriate Standing Rule K.1.c.

[The assembly approved Item 03-08. See pp. 10, 79.]

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, with the concurrence of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Elect the Reverend Andrew Black to a first, four-year term as Associate Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

2. Elect the Reverend Jill Hudson and the Reverend Marcia Myers to a second, four-year term as Associate Stated Clerks of the General Assembly.

Rationale

The Standing Rules of the General Assembly at H.2.d. states the following:
The General Assembly may elect one or more Associate Stated Clerks as the General Assembly shall determine. The Stated Clerk shall nominate persons to fill each such office after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The terms of office shall be four years, subject to reelection at the pleasure of the General Assembly. (Manual of the General Assembly, Standing Rule H.2.d., p. 40)

These three people give exemplary service as leaders of the major departments of the General Assembly, are in good standing as teaching elders, and are faithful Christian leaders who serve the church with “energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.” The Stated Clerk enthusiastically nominates these three persons for election as Associate Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

[The assembly approved Item 03-09. See pp. 10, 79.]

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in concurrence with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) amend Section IV.C.3.a. of the Organization for Mission as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. The members of this committee shall be composed as provided for in The Book of Order, G-13.0112a G-6.02, provides for the establishment of an Advisory Committee on the Constitution. The committee is composed of nine (9) voting members who shall be stated clerks or former stated clerks of synods or presbyteries, former members of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly, polity professors, or other qualified persons with knowledge of and experience with the Constitution and polity of the church.”

Rationale

The Book of Order, G-6.02, states that “… The General Assembly shall provide by its own rule for the qualifications of members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.” Prior to the adoption of a new Book of Order, the qualifications of members were described at G-13.0112a. This amendment places the description of qualifications in the Organization for Mission, which is approved by the General Assembly.

Item 03-10

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in concurrence with the General Assembly Committee on Representation, recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) amend Standing Rule K.1.c. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“c. Any commission or special committee authorized by the General Assembly, unless otherwise designated, shall be appointed by the Moderator in collaboration with the General Assembly Nominating Committee and the General Assembly Committee on Representation. The Moderator is also authorized to fill by appointment any vacancies that may occur in any such commissions or committees. No teaching elder, ruling elder, or other person shall be appointed to serve on more than one such commission or committee except by consent of the General Assembly.”

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) is an advisor to the General Assembly and its leadership with regard to the representation and participation of its bodies. The GACOR has an official advising role to Moderators in the selection of General Assembly committee leadership and would like the Standing Rules to reflect that same consideration and access for Moderator appointments. This addition would allow GACOR to faithfully execute its constitutional mandate “… to advise the council regarding the implementation of principles of unity and diversity, [and] to advocate for diversity in leadership … in accordance with … F-1.0403” (Book of Order, G-3.0103). The General Assembly Committee on Representation routinely consults with the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) about its processes, slates of nominees and contacts, and recruits persons from underrepresented groups, seeking more diverse pools of qualified candidates. However, those activities do not yet include consultation on the appointment process for special committees and commissions. Moderator appointments are becoming a more frequently used means for leadership selection. Rather than be negotiated with each Moderator, GACOR would like to formalize the consulting process by making this Standing Rule change. It would help all involved be able to plan for cooperation and collaboration.
Item 03-11

[The assembly approved Item 03-11. See pp. 10, 79.]

Louis Weeks, Williamsburg, Virginia—2nd term

Item 03-12

Joint COGA/GAMC Budget Proposals

[The assembly approved Item 03-12, Recommendation 1. See pp. 10, 79.]

1. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) recommend that the 220th General Assembly (2012) incorporate into the Minutes the 2010 and 2011 Per Capita Apportionment Budget and Statement of Activities.

2. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) recommend that the 220th General Assembly (2012)

   [The assembly approved Item 03-12, Recommendation 2.a. See pp. 10, 79.]
   a. Approve the Revised 2012 Budget totaling $13,626,330.

   [The assembly approved Item 03-12, Recommendation 2.b., with amendment. See pp. 78, 79–80.]
   b. Approve the total Expenditure Budget for 2013 totaling $14,199,728 and for 2014 totaling $13,871,111.

   3. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) recommend that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve that an amount of $1,384,030 be designated from the 2013 per capita budget (about half the cost of the General Assembly meeting), and be reserved for use in the year of the General Assembly meeting (2014).

   [The assembly approved Item 03-12, Recommendation 4., with amendment. See pp. 78, 80.]
   4. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), recommend that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve a per capita apportionment rate of $6.80 per active member for 2013, and a rate of $6.87 to be effective for 2014.
      [See Attachment B1, which can be found at coga-game-budget_financials_attachment_b1 (or page 196).]
Rationale for Recommendations 1.–4.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) continue to be grateful to the whole church for their faithfulness in meeting their per capita obligations (about 94 percent collection rates). We believe that these funds have enabled the General Assembly to carry out its core ecclesial functions so that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can carry out its ministry in faithfulness to Scripture and our Constitution.

Building the Per Capita Budgets for 2013 and 2014 continues to be a challenge. The total revenue level is impacted by variables as diverse as a slow-moving economy, stock market fluctuations, value of assets held, levels of membership loss, and the ability of presbyteries to fully meet their per capita obligations. Most of these factors impact the overall per capita budget negatively. On the expenditure side, challenges include added costs due to increase in number of commissioners to the General Assembly since 2010, as well as added costs to carry out an assembly at different locations.

Given these dynamics, both GAMC and OGA faced the reality that major reductions would be necessary unless there was to be a very substantial increase in the per capita rate, which we determined would create a real hardship in the church. In order to hold to a minimal increase in the per capita rate, hard choices had to be made relative to staffing levels, the consolidation of expenses, and limiting merit increases to staff compensation. In fact, the OGA and GAMC made several adjustments reducing the previously approved budget for 2010 by almost $816,000, and are now proposing a revised budget for 2012 with a net reduction of almost $440,000 (before allocating $200,000 for outstanding per capita). We are also proposing an increase in the per capita rate of 17 cents for 2013, and 18 cents for 2014, keeping the increase below the inflation rate of 3 percent each year. We have budgeted to utilize reasonable amount of reserves each year and estimated under-expenditures, in order to keep per capita rate increases to the minimum.

The details behind these calculations can be found on the attached sheets. We believe that such restraint in the increase in the per capita rate and the expenditure level are necessary for the well-being of the church and the fiscal integrity of the Per Capita budget. We would encourage a similar spirit of restraint by commissioners as you consider other proposals that might have financial implications at the 220th General Assembly (2012).

5. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) recommend that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve the attached allocation of designated funds for OGA, and GAMC task forces, totaling $1,654,035 for 2012, $1,418,223 for 2013, and $1,609,961 for 2014.

[See Attachment C, which can be found at coga-game-budget_financials_attachment_c (or page 206).]

Rationale for Recommendation 5.

The allocation of designated funds are reserved for specified expenditure planned to augment the per capita budget so that steep increases to the per capita apportionment rate may be cushioned. The primary items include part of the Presbyterian Historical Society operations, General Assembly session, Ordination Examinations, the production and distribution of OGA publications, and OGA/GAMC task forces. The sources of these funds are mostly from independently generated revenue, including gifts and endowments. Some meetings and conferences generate revenue for expenses independent of the per capita budget and are accounted through the designated funds.

Item 03-13

A Review of Efforts Regarding Cultural Proficiency and Creating a Climate for Change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

[The assembly approved Item 03-13, Recommendation 1. See pp. 10, 80.]

1. Direct the six PC(USA) agencies to submit their six-year cultural proficiency plans to the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) no later than December 31, 2012, if they have not done so already.

[The assembly approved Item 03-13, Recommendation 2., with amendment. See pp. 10, 80.]

2. Direct the [associate for organizational diversity, education, and recruitment (ODER)] [General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), Human Resources Department.] to assist the six agencies in developing their six-year plans, in consultation with ACREC and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).
3. Direct the [Office of General Assembly (OGA) staff for the agency review committees] committee on review of the General Assembly agencies to provide for meaningful participation by ACREC in the six-year agency review committees, including providing timely notice of meetings and communicating with ACREC staff.

4. Direct that cultural proficiency and antiracism training be mandatory for all employees of all six agencies, and provide periodic or continuing education courses or training in this area, which will be monitored by ACREC.

5. Direct that the cultural proficiency standard and assessment procedures be included in the OGA’s Agency Review Manual.

Rationale

I. Introduction and Overview

In the context of a global Christian church that is more multiethnic and multicultural than ever before, it is imperative that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) not only stand firm in its commitment to “give full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment,” but also take definitive action to transform its denomination into one that reflects the cultural vibrancy that exists on God’s earth (Book of Order, G-3.0103; see also F-1.0403).

The denomination years ago made a pledge to live into these commitments by creating a climate of cultural proficiency within its structure. Cultural proficiency (CP) provides standards to assess healthy and nonproductive policies, practices, and behaviors, and is a catalyst for ultimately changing attitudes about true diversity and inclusiveness. With that as a framework, the PC(USA)’s General Assembly has been instructing the denomination’s six main agencies to acknowledge the need for cultural proficiency and to incorporate its tenets into their day-to-day operations.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) report Creating a Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004), directed the six corporate agencies related to the General Assembly to utilize the tools of cultural proficiency, or other comparable processes, to develop and sustain healthy organizational cultures that support diverse workforces. The benchmarks used are (1) employment of a workforce that is at least 20 percent racial ethnic and 40 percent women, established in the 1985 Church wide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action, and (2) the 1984 Minority Vendor Policy, which established that church agencies purchase at least 10 percent of goods and services from businesses owned by persons of color and by women. Subsequent reports have sought to further strengthen that GA mandate and in 2010, the 219th General Assembly approved the following:

In order to ensure significant change in the area of Cultural Proficiency (CP), and to continue consultations between the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the executive officers of the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly (GA)—General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), formerly known as General Assembly Council (GAC); Office the General Assembly (OGA); Presbyterian Board of Pensions (BOP); Presbyterian Foundation (FDN); Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., (PILP); and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC)—the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) approve the following actions:

1. Continue to support the work of the Climate for Change Task Force as it examines and moves toward formulating final recommendations for the 220th General Assembly (2012) for the church’s Affirmative Action/Equal Employment Opportunity, Cultural Proficiency, and minority vendor policies.

2. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) to revise the cultural proficiency assessment tool, with consultation from human resource directors of each entity and from the associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment (formerly the associate for Cultural Proficiency).

3. Direct that the “Standards for Review of General Assembly Agencies” include the preparation, review, and evaluation of a written, six-year plan for the implementation of cultural proficiency or comparable approach to organizational change with each of the six entities of the General Assembly.

   a. The ACREC will write the portion of the Agency Review Manual dealing with the assessment and review of cultural proficiency or a comparable approach of the six agencies.

   b. The six-year plan pertaining to cultural proficiency or a comparable approach and its implementation will be reviewed and monitored by ACREC on an ongoing basis, with statistical results and updates from each agency reviewed by ACREC biennially.

   c. At the first meeting of each of the agency review committees, a member of ACREC will be invited to brief the committee on the importance of “Creating a Climate for Change” and cultural proficiency. In addition, each agency review committee will consult with ACREC, through the participation of an ACREC member, regarding the six-year plan for cultural proficiency for each agency under review. Greater participation by ACREC on the agency review committee will be permitted if needed or requested.

4. Request that the six entities of the General Assembly work with the associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment in developing their six-year plan, to help implement cultural proficiency policy at all levels, and to develop training and cultural-sensitivity programs. This six-year plan should include:
a. commitment to Book of Order, G-4.0403: The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its merging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition, as well as different marital conditions (married, single, widowed, or divorced) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church.

b. a stated policy for increasing diversity, which should be developed in consultation with the Cultural Proficiency Task Force to ensure consistency with the task force’s final recommendations;

c. measurable targets and goals that integrate cultural proficiency policy, training and cultural sensitivity programs in areas of education for purposes of mobility and advancement, performance, recruitment, hiring, mentoring, and retention;

d. production of biennial reports giving employment profile (salaries, occupations, separations, new hires, promotions, in terms of race, ethnicity, gender, and disabilities).

5. Encourage the entities to support and utilize the National Persons of Color Network database, to strengthen and make it effective.

6. Direct all entities to keep annual statistics demonstrating compliance with the church’s Minority Vendor Policy.

7. Direct each entity to demonstrate affirmative efforts to increase racial ethnic and female employee representation in the senior management categories. When filling vacancies at this level, there must be a racial ethnic person and a female among the final candidates. If they are not among the final candidates, the entity must explain why they were not considered. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 336–37)

II. Summary of Findings

In response to 2010 recommendations

- ACREC learned from the PC(USA) attorney and others that it is illegal to collect data pertaining to the employment of the disabled and data identifying employees or vendors as Middle Eastern. More discussion is needed as to how the church can address the concerns of the General Assembly to include and accommodate the disabled in the workplace as part of the “diversity of the church’s membership,” and the concerns of the Middle Eastern Caucus for full participation of Middle Easterners in PC(USA).

- Additional time is needed in drafting the six-year plan and the cultural proficiency tool.

- The new Book of Order does not change the church’s commitment to diversity and to full participation of the church’s membership. The six-year plans need to reflect the language of the new Book of Order. See specifically G-3.0103 and F-1.0403.

- The ACREC supports and adopts the recommendations and rationale of the 2012 Climate for Change Task Force report, which will be filed by the task force. The recommendations and rationale are incorporated in this report for reference.

- The cultural proficiency standard and the assessment and review process (attached to this report as Appendices A and B) are to be included in the Office of the General Assembly’s Agency Review Manual, as revised July 2010, for the six PC(USA) agencies.

General Findings

- The agencies were more sensitive to cultural proficiency requirements in this cycle of review. Some agencies made intentional efforts to seek racial ethnic candidates to fill vacancies in upper management positions, and at least one used the Diversity in Leadership Network (formerly the National Persons of Color Network database) to look for candidates.

- Greater attention is needed to incorporate accountability measures pertaining to implementing cultural proficiency programs and fostering diversity for management.

- Greater priority by all agencies, particularly GAMC and OGA, should be given to the integration of cultural proficiency standards and process into the institutional church-wide review process.

- Antiracism (AR) and cultural proficiency (CP) training are offered in all agencies, but in many cases this training is optional. Making AR and CP training mandatory demonstrates that this is a priority in the agency and the church.

- Some agencies do not understand the idea of cultural proficiency and seemed confused as to how to establish measurements. Establishing a church-wide understanding of cultural proficiency and periodic training to all employees, including upper management, will help alleviate this problem.

- The agencies could benefit greatly by human resources directors meeting together to discuss best practices, which could also lead to a church-wide approach to diversity. The associate ODER could be the person to bring the six agencies together.

- The Diversity in Leadership Network appears to be underutilized. All six agencies should promote the database and encourage members of the PC(USA) to submit their names and/or resumes.
This review process cycle started out slow and included new elements that were not included in previous review cycles. All of the agencies provided statistical reports, but many provided them later than in previous years. Consequently, the follow-up, in-person interviews took place in the fall of 2011 instead of the late spring/early summer of 2011. The new elements this year included (1) the request for statistical employment data for the disabled and for Middle Easterners, (2) revising the cultural proficiency tool, (3) the development of a six-year plan on assessing cultural proficiency by all six agencies, (4) the drafting of a cultural proficiency standard to be included in the Office of General Assembly’s Agency Review Manual, and (5) ACREC’s participation in the initial meetings of the Office of General Assembly (OGA) review committees for the PPC and PILP.

New Data Categories: Regarding the request for employment data for the disabled and Middle Easterners, ACREC was advised by some agencies that the PC(USA) attorney had advised that it was against federal law to collect this data. As a result, some agencies did not provide information in these areas. During the follow-up interviews, some agencies did discuss whether they had hired Middle Easterners or the disabled and whether they purchased goods and services from Middle Easterners. In light of the legal impediment, further discussion is needed as to how to address the true concern at issue, i.e., whether the PC(USA) is being inclusive by hiring the disabled and Middle Easterners.

Cultural Proficiency Tool and the Six-Year Plans: Revising the cultural proficiency tool and development of the six-year plans for implementing and assessing cultural proficiency required consultation by ACREC with the six agencies and with the associate for ODER. The ACREC members consulted with the agencies in the fall 2011 about revisions to the cultural proficiency tool. The ACREC was unable, however, to consult fully with the associate for ODER, who is considered the church’s resource on cultural proficiency. It is anticipated that the cultural proficiency tool will be revised before the 220th General Assembly (2012). The tool serves an interim function. Its purpose is to gather information for assessment until the six-year plans are in place. The associate for ODER has begun consultations with the agencies regarding the development of the six-year plans and advises that at least two agencies are in the process of drafting their plans. It is anticipated that the six-year plans will be completed also before the 220th General Assembly (2012).

OGA Review Committee Standards and ACREC Participation in Review Committee Meetings: After numerous attempts by ACREC and/or ACREC’s staff to contact the OGA director of operations, ACREC was unable to participate in the first meetings of the OGA Review Committees for PPC and PILP, the agencies that were being reviewed in the church’s six-year review cycle. The ACREC eventually was told about later meeting dates, but the review committees were well into their evaluation process. The ability for ACREC to effectively consult with these review committees, which had been initially suggested by OGA staff, was severely hampered. It is hoped that there will be greater cooperation and higher priority given to ACREC’s participation in the other review committees in the next assessment cycle. The ACREC also had hoped to have the benefit of consulting with OGA’s director of operations and with the review committees to better understand the review process before drafting the cultural proficiency standard and developing the assessment and review process of the six-year plan for the OGA’s Agency Review Manual. In response to the directive in the 2010 report, however, ACREC is providing the proposed cultural proficiency standard and the assessment and review process in Appendixes A and B.

In assessing the employment data for the assessment cycle 2008 to 2010, most agencies experienced little change from the earlier two-year assessment cycle. In general, the agencies are meeting the church-wide employment goals of 20 percent racial ethnic and 40 percent female employees. These goals, however, are not being reached in the upper management category. Several agencies are intentionally considering qualified persons of color when a vacancy occurs or are using internal promotion and education tracks. The Diversity Leadership Network appears to be underutilized, however, and a suggestion was made that more persons needed to be included in the database. Regarding the implementation of the 10 percent minority vendor policy, the failure to accurately track purchases still persists: only two agencies track this data (GAMC and the Foundation), several agencies (OGA, PILP, and PPC) rely upon another agency (GAMC) to make their purchases, but that agency does not delineate the purchases by agency, and one only keeps track of administrative or miscellaneous purchases, which is a very small percentage of their overall expenditures regarding vendors (BOP). All agencies appear to understand the general concept of cultural proficiency, but not all are clear on how cultural proficiency is to be measured or achieved. Cultural proficiency training is being provided by all of the agencies, but the training is not mandatory. Cultural proficiency needs to be elevated as a priority in the work place by providing greater education opportunities and mandatory training for all employees, and by incorporating accountability measures such as in performance work plans and evaluations. Finally, all agencies can benefit by collaborating with each other and by discussing best practices that exist among the agencies.

A. General Assembly Mission Council

1. Cultural Proficiency

The General Assembly Mission Council continues to work on cultural proficiency (CP) and its related areas. It has focused particularly on The Diversity Leadership Network, which has among its goals to develop a recruiting network and an active database of racial ethnic candidates for leadership positions within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Efforts to support the network include creating relevant resource materials, providing staffing, and conducting seminars. A workshop for sixteen African American women specifically served to encourage, nurture, and develop the skills needed to apply for positions in the church. The GAMC also has helped advertise the network at the church-wide Big Tent event and provided educational resources to help grow specific leaders.

On a broader scale the GAMC maintains a cultural proficiency statement in its employee handbook and staff is encouraged to incorporate CP standards into their work. The agency’s performance assessment tool also has a category to measure cultural proficiency, although the measures are all subjective. Officials in GAMC indicate future work is planned to set specific goals and directions that can be more objectively measured. Among other things, impact and accountability as they relate to creating a climate of CP within the agency have yet to be defined.

2. Employment Profile

As of Dec. 31, 2010, GAMC had 464 employees, 145 of whom (31 percent) were racial ethnic persons and 315 (68 percent) were women. In the senior management category there were six employees, 50 percent of whom were female and 20 percent of whom were racial ethnic individuals. Staffing patterns are essentially the same as the review in 2008 both in terms of actual numbers and categories.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

The GAMC has exceeded its goal related to minority vending as a result of its vendor who handles agency travel. On a whole, however, the agency has generally maintained the same percentage of business/purchase of services from minority vendors. Because of combined minority vendor management handled by the GAMC, it continues to be difficult to break out the specific amount of minority vendor business done by the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation.

B. Office of the General Assembly

1. Cultural Proficiency

Change has occurred since the 2008 report, and there remains an overall sense of openness to accepting and advancing cultural proficiency within the agency, and intentionality as it relates to classes, workshops, and resources. The OGA primarily support the aims of CP through continuing education. Training and continuing education are encouraged in the agency personnel manual, and OGA’s budget continues to include tuition reimbursement and continuing education. Cultural proficiency training is done as a part of Education Day, which includes instruction on various issues and is required for new employees. Agency officials admit training is not enough and seek guidance from ACREC on other steps to take. Outside of training and continuing education, another area to highlight for OGA is its work to communicate in different languages. Work to translate materials into Korean and Spanish have specifically led to teamwork with people from those cultural backgrounds.

2. Employment Profile

The OGA’s employment statistics have not veered much since the 2008 report. As of December 31, 2010, OGA had 72 employees, 53 of whom were women (74 percent), and 21 of whom were racial ethnic persons (29 percent). The three executive/senior level managers are all white males. The Staff Coordinating Committee, however, which consists of nine persons including the senior level managers, consists of four women (44 percent) and two persons of color (11 percent). Turnover remains low, which agency officials attribute to the respectful working environment and the open door policy.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

The OGA continues to rely on the GAMC as the main source for many of its vendors. As such, it is difficult to gain accurate vendor figures specifically related to OGA. There have been no discussions with the GAMC about how to resolve this situation or about where the GAMC stands in terms of its responsibility toward minority vendors. Furthermore, it was pointed out that OGA’s hands are tied at many of its meeting sites with regard to conference center vendors due to union rules. There is more flexibility when meetings are held in Louisville and more care can be given to locations that are more culturally friendly.

C. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

1. Cultural Proficiency

There is a strong indication of good progress in the area of cultural proficiency by the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. Among its most notable efforts has been to hold workshops and presentations on race and gender issues that were initiated by top leadership.
Following the hiring of an African American person and a woman, PILP took the opportunity to enhance learning about diversity and strengthen its ministry. The agency continues to facilitate conversations in order to generate positive outcomes.

2. Employment Profile

The PILP had 14 employees as of December 31, 2010. Three (2 percent) of those were racial ethnic persons and 10 (71 percent) of those were women. Turnover continues to be very small for the agency. Since the 2008 report there has been one retirement, but that position was filled by an African American person. The staff size remains the same, and PILP continues to be committed to seeking racial ethnic people whenever an opening exists. The PILP officials have indicated that at least three employees will be nearing retirement in the next few years and that diversity will be the focus of finding replacements.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

Just as in 2008, there is little to report in terms of minority vendors for PILP. Purchases continue to be done through the GAMC. Agency officials did indicate, however, that PILP’s lawyer is a racial ethnic person, and there was acknowledgement that the agency could be more mindful to seek minority vendor opportunities when staff travels.

D. Presbyterian Publishing Corporation

1. Cultural Proficiency

It is unclear what, if any, changes have been made in the area of cultural proficiency for the PPC since 2008. Agency officials indicate that there is an awareness of the importance of CP, yet the PPC has no self-evaluation form or other mechanism in place for ensuring it takes place. The one primary event lifted up as an example of what the PPC does was a mandatory Staff Development Day, which included a course on antiracism. An agency official also pointed out that two members of the PPC board of directors are racial ethnic persons.

From a broader standpoint, the PPC has written a resource book entitled 2010 Self Study of the Presbyterian Publishing Company, a six-year study of the organization called for by the Review Committee of General Assembly. The PPC will complete another one in 2016.

2. Employment Profile

At one time the Presbyterian Publishing Company had 38 staff members, but that has now slimmed down to 26.5. Of those 26.5, which were reported on staff as of December 31, 2010, six (23 percent) were racial ethnic persons and 13.5 (51 percent) were women. The PPC has five top positions, one of which is open. The agency is working to fill that slot with a racial ethnic person. The PPC also has hired two customer service employees who are bilingual, and it continues to utilize the Robert Bohl internship to seek out racial ethnic people. The latest intern, an African American female, has been offered a job once she completes doctoral work she is currently engaged in. The PPC leadership cited the U.S. economic situation as one of the obstacles to recruiting racial ethnic persons.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

The PPC contracts with companies to print, publish, and distribute its books and periodicals according to the lowest bid that is provided by potential vendors. If the bids are equal and one of the potential vendors is a racial ethnic company, then PPC will select the racial ethnic company.

E. Presbyterian Board of Pensions

1. Cultural Proficiency

The Board of Pensions continues to be a leader among the six agencies in the area of cultural proficiency. Officials with the agency indicate that its training “goes way beyond” what is required by the agencies in Louisville. At the same time, however, funds for CP efforts by the BOP are perhaps greater than they are with the other agencies. The BOP has focused not just on numbers and statistics, but also on the culture of the agency.

Among other things, the BOP recently hired The Greenleaf Center for Servant Leadership to conduct training and assessment on how they are “helping the constituencies they serve.” They are working with a six-year plan to grow into servant leadership. The plan is to build a foundation for the concept of serving others.

2. Employment Profile

In 2010 the BOP reported 186 total staff members. Of those 60 (32 percent) were racial ethnic employees and 123 (66 percent) were women. Of its executive senior officers, two are white males and two are white females. The agency also reported that in 2010 there were 11 new hires, two of which were racial ethnic persons; and six promotions, two of which were of racial ethnic persons.
3. Minority Vendor Policy

The Board of Pensions maintains little statistical data on its vendors. It does report, however, that out of its “administrative and other expenditures” category, which totals $45.5 million a year, $500,000 goes toward discretionary spending (printing, office supplies, catering, etc.). And, in 2009, 41 percent of the vendors used in this budget area were minority or women-owned.

F. Presbyterian Foundation

1. Cultural Proficiency

   The Presbyterian Foundation addresses cultural proficiency through an employee evaluation tool called Core Values, of which there are ten. The core value of Respect/Equality particularly addresses CP, and is defined as “recognizing and appreciating different perspectives; listening and seeking to understand others before acting; treating everyone with respect; and creating a discrimination-free environment.”

   The agency’s employee handbook also outlines an EEO policy that all employees are expected to comply with. Overall performance of managers and supervisors is evaluated according to this policy. Other efforts that fall in line with cultural proficiency include annual staff training sessions on topics such as sexual harassment and nondiscrimination. All employees, including the president, take this interactive training.

2. Employment Profile

   The Foundation had 68 employees on December 31, 2010, which is down from a high at one point of 73. Of that 68, 16 (24 percent) were racial ethnic persons and 42 (62 percent) were women. All 10 of its senior management staff were white. Recruiting includes both internal and external searches, although sometimes employees are groomed to take over a job. Efforts are made to include racial ethnic candidates in the process. High retention rates make it difficult to change the racial ethnic makeup of the organization, although there is a desire. The Foundation also indicated that it is difficult to employ racial ethnic persons because the nature of the work.

   Foundation senior management previously included one African American person, but that employee retired. A female filled that position. Officials indicated an open interim vice president position is being filled via an internal promotion. The Diversity Leadership Network was consulted for that vice president’s position but no candidates matched the skills required. Officials indicated a racial ethnic person is being considered as a potential senior staffer, although the actual position was not identified.

   Of the 19 members of the Foundation’s board of trustees, four are racial ethnic persons, eight are females, and five are clergy.

3. Minority Vendor Policy

   In 2008 approximately 6 percent of the Foundation’s vendors were African American and Asian/Pacific Islander. In 2009 the number increased to 39 percent, and in 2010 the agency reported that figure at 31 percent, which only represented African American vendors. The agency’s percentage of women vendors went from 14.9 percent in 2008 to 11 percent in 2009 and 14 percent in 2010.

IV. Conclusion

There is noticeable movement by the six agencies in their journey—our journey—toward cultural proficiency. The idea of cultural proficiency is no longer an unfamiliar word. Employees now are being trained and educated on how to function in a diverse workplace, which benefits all. Management also is beginning to recognize the importance of its role and its responsibility in creating an atmosphere that welcomes and embraces diversity. We now are embarking on a process that seeks to integrate cultural proficiency into the institutional fabric of our church, which presents an even greater challenge. There is still much work to be done that will require diligence on the part of us all. As our society is becoming more diverse, so is our church family. Paraphrasing Paul from his letter to the Galatians, as many of us were baptized into Christ, we are now one in Christ. Let us get to work toward becoming that beloved community.

APPENDIX A

Standards for Review of PC(USA) Agencies—Cultural Proficiency Standard

Review Committee Manual of Operations—Standard for Cultural Proficiency:

Short Definition:

Cultural Proficiency: The policies and practices of an organization, and the values and behaviors of individuals, that enables an organization or person to interact effectively in a culturally diverse environment. Cultural proficiency defines diversity as a strength rather than a problem in organizations. It is a process for strategic, intentional organizational transformation that addresses culture, commitments, practices and skills.
Cultural Proficiency is an approach to building organizational capacity to thrive on the strengths of diversity, a process for intentional systemic change. It encompasses a set of tools for change and a vision of community that nurtures the diverse gifts of all its members. Implementing cultural proficiency incorporates both:

- Policies and practices within organizations, and
- Values and behaviors of individuals.

As a transformational tool, cultural proficiency is an inside-out process that builds on the core values, norms and traditions within the existing organizational structure to equip the organization to live out its vision with integrity. This approach creates a platform for creative, innovative leadership for change.

The Tools of Cultural Proficiency are not strategies or techniques. They provide a framework for assessing organizational practices and individual behaviors with an eye to giving direction to change and setting parameters for developing strategies for change within an organization.

- The Continuum: Language for describing both healthy and non-productive policies, practices and individual behaviors.
- The Essential Elements: Behavioral standards for measuring, and planning for, growth toward cultural proficiency.
- The Barriers: Caveats that assist in responding effectively to resistance to change.
- The Guiding Principles: Underlying values of the approach.

The Continuum recognizes that change processes are fluid and do not happen uniformly. There are six points along the cultural proficiency continuum that indicate various ways of perceiving and responding to differences. They provide a vocabulary for assessing policies, practices and behaviors. Organizations and individuals may have practices at multiple points on the continuum at any time.

- Cultural destructiveness works to eliminate any vestige of culture or difference defined as “other,” practices exclusion or segregation.
- Cultural incapacity works to define culture or difference defined as “other” to be wrong, requires assimilation to the normative culture.
- Cultural indifference refuses to acknowledge the culture of others, treats difference as insignificant, and of no value to the organization.
- Cultural pre-competence accepts difference as normal, reflects an initial awareness of the need to adapt in order to incorporate diversity in a constructive manner in an organization and work effectively as an individual in a diverse environment.
- Cultural competence works to build individual skills and organizational capacity to incorporate cultural diversity in an interactive manner, creates a culture that welcomes cultural difference.
- Cultural proficiency values difference, works to learn from the “other,” nurtures full participation and contributions of diverse cultural and social groups.

The Essential Elements of cultural proficiency provide the standards for building individual competencies and organizational practices. Organizational change begins with individual actions.

- Assessing Cultural Knowledge: Aware of one’s own cultural identity and organizational norms, aware of what you know about other’s cultures, about how you react to difference and what you need to do to be effective in cross-cultural situations.
- Valuing Diversity: Makes intentional effort and adaptation to be inclusive of people whose cultural perspectives and experiences are different from yours or the normative culture of the organization, in order to enrich the conversation, decision-making and problem-solving processes.
- Managing the Dynamics of Difference: develops problem-solving and conflict resolutions strategies that are accessible to everyone and attend to cultural differences as normal processes within the organizational culture.
- Adapting to Diversity: Develops habits and ways of being within the organization that facilitate learning about differences of experience and cultural perspectives as normative practices.
- Institutionalizing Cultural Knowledge: Learning about cultural differences, developing skills for cross-cultural communication and problem-solving become integral to the organizational culture and standards for professional excellence.

The Barriers to cultural proficiency area present in varying degree in any organization. Effective strategies for change will be cognizant of the need to educate and motivate employees to gain support for change. The barriers also point to the importance that each individual plays in effecting change within an organization.

- Unawareness of the need to adapt (resistance to change): Persons who are served well by the existing organizational culture may see the pressure to change as unnecessary and respond with indifference or see it as threatening. Resistance can create adversarial relationships within an organization if not addressed.
- Systems of oppression: Racism, sexism, classism, heterosexism, etc. are historically embedded in the internal cultures of organizations and the external culture of society. Systems of oppression create barriers for members of non-dominant groups and extend unearned privilege to the members of the dominant group. Being able to recognize these systemic patterns apart from individual behavior is critical to effecting change within an organization, just as recognizing ways that the organization is impacted by external systems is important.

- The presumption of privilege and entitlement: When one group is defined as marginal and denied access to rights and privileges within a system, those same rights and privileges accrue to those who are by definition members of the dominant group, through no effort of their own. Failure to recognize this impact of systemic oppression leads to the presumption of privilege and entitlement as normative. This skewed sense of reality can lead to negative perceptions of persons in marginalized groups and undermines the moral force for organizational transformation.

The Guiding Principles provide the core values and assumptions on which cultural proficiency is built. They reflect the significant role of culture in perpetuating systems of oppression, the complexity of attempting deep systemic change, and the potential for culture to be an instrument of change and transformation.

- Culture is a predominant force in people’s lives and in organization’s lives. Within an organization, you cannot NOT participate or be influenced by the organizational culture.
  - People are served in varying degrees by the dominant culture.
  - Acknowledge group identities. People have group identities and personal identities. The group identities that an individual participates in are important to that person as an individual.
  - Diversity within cultures is important. Cultural groups are neither homogenous nor monolithic. Persons within a cultural group are unique individuals.
  - Respect unique cultural needs. Culture shapes every aspect of life. Members of different cultures bring different needs to organizational life. In a culturally proficient organization, the dominant culture is attentive to the needs of non-dominant groups.

APPENDIX B

Standards for Review of PC(USA) Agencies–Cultural Proficiency Assessment

Assessment and Review of Cultural Proficiency or a Comparable Approach of the Six Agencies

The six-year plan drafted by each agency for the implementation of cultural proficiency becomes the document by which an agency is assessed.

The six-year plan shall come into effect once approved by the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREJC), who will consult with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) before it is approved.

The affirmative action goals for employment and purchasing are established by the 1985 Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action and the 1984 Minority Vendor Policy. These are the church’s policy goals until they are reviewed and/or revised by GACOR in 2014.

The six-year plan shall include:

1. Expression of the commitment of top management, evidenced through:
   a. A mission and/or vision statement (see Book of Order, G-3.0103, F-1.0403),
   b. Regular discussion in management meetings,
   c. Training to develop management skills in support of cultural proficiency goals,
   d. Evaluation of management performance in support of cultural proficiency goals.

2. Training and education strategies to promote employee support for cultural proficiency goals and provide opportunities to enhance skills.

3. A communication strategy to ensure employee awareness and promote the transformation of organizational culture to support the goals of cultural proficiency.

4. Recruitment, training, promotion, and retention strategies to achieve affirmative action employment goals at all levels of the organization, including senior management.

5. Employee education programs to promote employee compliance and support for minority vendor policy and/or supplier diversity goals.

6. Strategies to promote the employment and create a supportive working environment for persons with disabilities.
The six-year plan shall have measurable targets and goals set out in three, two-year cycles.

Each agency is to submit to GACOR biennial reports giving employment data (e.g., salaries, occupations, separations, new hires, promotions, in terms of race, ethnicity, and gender). The GACOR will share this data with ACREC and ACWC for purposes of monitoring and assessing cultural proficiency.

Every two years (consistent with the meeting cycle of the General Assembly), ACREC will monitor each agency to determine if it is meeting the church-wide benchmarks and to discuss the status of the cultural proficiency goals, allowing for adjustments as appropriate.

The ACREC will conduct its detailed assessment of each agency simultaneously with the six-year agency review conducted by the OGA agency review committee.

The ACREC will consult with each OGA agency review committee in the early stages of the review process.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 03-13
[Received June 29, 2012]

Comment on Item 03-13—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The GAMC is grateful for ACREC’s review of GAMC efforts in the areas of cultural proficiency and creating a climate for change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). These initiatives are important ones for the church as it seeks to be faithful to Christ’s work to create an inclusive church and for the church’s own commitment to justice.

The GAMC embraces ACREC’s recommendation that cultural proficiency and antiracism training be mandatory for its employees. The GAMC also continues to be willing to make its staff member (the associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruiting) available for the important work of helping the other General Assembly agencies prepare their six-year cultural proficiency plans.

At the same time, the GAMC feels that several clarifications should be made to the ACREC report, so that the General Assembly has a proper assessment of these issues.

1. “Summary of Findings” first item in the list and Section III, “New Data Categories”—The summary of findings says, “ACREC learned from the PC(USA) attorney and others that it is illegal to collect data pertaining to the employment of the disabled and data identifying employees or vendors as Middle Eastern.” Similar language appears in the “New Data Categories” paragraph. As currently written, the statement is incorrect. The permanent record should reflect that (1) employers are barred by the Americans with Disabilities Act from inquiring of employees about disabilities before and after hire, except in very limited circumstances; and (2) collection of data on persons having origins in the original peoples of the Middle East is inconsistent with the published data collection instructions of the EEOC.

2. Section III, last paragraph, and Section III.A.2. last sentence—these sections describe staffing patterns as reflecting “little change” or being “essentially the same” when comparing 2008 figures to 2010. While correct on a percentage basis, the analysis does not take into account the impact of reduced staff size. See the table of comparisons between 2008 and 2010:

The most obvious difference in these two presentations is the size of the staff. Maintaining a consistent ratio in staffing patterns, while experiencing a decrease in staff size, requires careful attention to the existing ratios. So, while our ratios have not substantially changed, it should be noted that GAMC has kept them in compliance with the General Assembly directives, even as headcount has decreased by 130 employees over a seven-year period, with a net decrease of 1.3 percent and 2.1 percent racial ethnic and women’s representation respectively.

3. Section III, A.1. Cultural Proficiency—the “workshop” described in the ACREC report is actually a major effort of the GAMC to host leadership institutes. The GAMC has held the Racial Ethnic Clergywomen’s Leadership Institute, the Clergywomen’s/Young Women’s Leadership Development Institute, and the African American Executive Leadership Seminar, in addition to leading workshops on cultural proficiency. The GAMC will hold a New Immigrant Young Adult Leadership Institute in the fall of 2012 and plans to hold three racial ethnic leadership institutes each year. Each of these institutes is designed to prepare participants for leadership positions in congregations, mid councils, and General Assembly agencies.

4. Section III, A.1. Cultural Proficiency—The ACREC report indicates that GAMC “helped advertise” the Diversity in Leadership Network at the Big Tent in 2011. In actuality, the GAMC created and launched the Diversity in Leadership Network, carrying the major role for intra-agency collaboration in the effort. The network and database were launched at the Big Tent in 2011, and the GAMC continues to provide the primary support for its promotion and utilization.

5. Section III, A.3. Minority Vendor Policy—The ACREC report correctly indicates that GAMC has “generally maintained the same percentage of business/purchase of services from minority vendors,” but does not indicate that it has done this within the context of a declining budget. In 2008, the GAMC budget totaled $94M. By 2011, the budget was $77M. As with staffing percentages, as indicated above, it is increasingly difficult to continue exceeding the goal as the overall numbers decrease. Meeting the goal isn’t simply a matter of choosing minority vendors for new projects, rather as budgets decrease, majority vendors must be eliminated at a greater rate than minority vendors in order to keep pace with the decline.

The GAMC has also had difficulty finding vendors who provide sweat-free materials, while also meeting the terms of the minority vendor policy.

In the midst of these two factors, the GAMC’s ability to exceed the minority vendor goals is noteworthy.

With respect to the report as a whole, insufficient attention was given to GAMC involvement in the cultural proficiency training that is provided to other agencies. While not having direct responsibility for the other agencies, GAMC continues to invite the other agencies to attend its training sessions, to travel to other agency sites to provide training, and, in fact, to provide cultural proficiency for ACREC. While the other agencies received recognition for training their employees, it was not recognized that this training was actually provided by the GAMC, as part of GAMC’s commitment to cultural proficiency.

[The assembly approved Item 03-14. See pp. 10, 80.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Establishing a Code of Ethics for Elected Commissioners and Elected/Appointed Advisory Delegates to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A).

The 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) directs the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in consultation with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, to develop and bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) a Code of Ethics Policy for all commissioners and advisory delegates that reflects the intent and content of the Ethics Policy for Elected and Appointed Members of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that was approved in 2009.

Rationale:

There is a significant difference between the process of seeking to offer educational information, background material, and advocacy recommendations to commissioners and advisory delegates and the attempt to influence the actions and vote of commissioners and advisory delegates through the offer and acceptance of expensive gifts or experiences. In our post-Citizens United world there is a growing culture of expending money in order to influence voters on many different issues and levels. Super pacs are now a way of life, even in the church context.

Many corporations, governmental units (e.g. the U.S. Congress), boards, and nonprofit organizations provide specific guidelines for how any kind of gift may or may not be accepted, as well as the process by which reporting both the giver and the receiver of such gifts takes place. This commissioners’ resolution seeks to bring into line with existing policies of the PC(USA) such standards of ethical behavior for General Assembly commissioners and advisory delegates as already apply to the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-14

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-14—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 03-14 be approved. The assembly should consider this item with the following addition to the rationale section:

Additional Rationale

The current ethics policy applies to elected and appointed members of the General Assembly Mission Council ("GAMC") and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly ("COGA") of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ("Ethics Policy") and addresses the business ethics of governance of the PC(USA) (excluding other ethical values and policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ("PC(USA)"). As commissioners and advisory delegates likewise participate in the conduct of the business of the denomination it is just and reasonable to develop and extend an ethics policy to these persons.

Historically, the General Assembly has addressed the nature and influence of organizations of its members by requiring or requesting voluntary disclosure of information by those organizations or affinity groups. This request suggests that the church needs to address the role of non-PC(USA) groups seeking to influence commissioners specifically, and would make explicit a responsibility upon each commissioner to help safeguard the integrity of the General Assembly as a place where all commissioners are open to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. The General Assembly has addressed the role of money in politics in other social witness policy statements, most recently Lift Every Voice (2008). Thus the extension of ethics policy to commissioners seems aware of both the individual challenges and the problem of appearances of undue influence for the body as a whole.

The section on principles in the Book of Order continues the Presbyterian understanding of the Third Use of the Law as a “guide to the elect,” regulating primarily by informing and encouraging mutual accountability. The core, of course, is our historic respect for the Christian conscience of each member.

F-3.0101 God Is Lord of the Conscience

a. That “God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men which are in anything contrary to his Word, or beside it, in matters of faith or worship.”

While this refers to the exercise of conscience before God and the “rights of private judgment in relation to all matters with respect to religion” it implicitly extends to the exercise of one’s commissioner vote as a matter of obedience to God’s guidance, uninfluenced by gifts or benefits intended to persuade one’s vote.
Item 03-15

[The assembly approved Item 03-15 with comment. See pp. 10, 80.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. Designating as an Honored Name, the Reverend Elijah Parish Lovejoy.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) designates as an honored name, the Reverend Elijah Parish Lovejoy, whose death had been a witness of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; and that his name, along with that of the Reverend Dr. Donald McClure, whose ministry was recognized by the 199th General Assembly (1987), be sent to the Presbyterian Historical Society for recognition so their ministries and the sacrifices they endured may be remembered by the church at large.

Comment: Grant the Presbyterian Historical Society discretion for the people to be included on the list in the future.

Rationale

The church as an entire body does not choose to emphasize the way one dies over against the way one lives.

There have been many Presbyterians whose death has been a witness of their faith in their Lord Jesus Christ.

The 199th General Assembly (1987), meeting in Biloxi, Mississippi, affirmed those Presbyterians whose death has been a witness to their faith.

One of the earliest to give their life for the abolitionist cause was Elijah Parish Lovejoy, who came to St. Louis as a newspaper writer and in 1832, at the age of thirty, he entered the ministry completing the Princeton Seminary three year course in fourteen months.

Upon his return to St. Louis, Lovejoy served as pastor of Des Peres Presbyterian Church and editor of the religious paper, The St. Louis Observer; later as the pastor of the Upper Alton Presbyterian Church, now College Avenue Presbyterian Church and stated clerk of the Presbytery of Alton.

Upon Lovejoy’s return from the General Assembly meeting in Pittsburgh in 1836, Elijah found his press damaged because of his controversial editorial about slavery, which aroused passions on both sides, resulting in vandals successfully wrecking his printing press several times.

Lovejoy moved his paper to Alton, Illinois, a free state, but opposition followed and he was killed (175 years ago) on November 7, 1837, by a mob while trying to protect his fourteenth press.

Lovejoy became a national symbol for the abolitionist movement and is remembered today not only in the history books but with a large monument in Alton that overlooks the city and in the name of the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy from the merger of the Elijah Parish Lovejoy Presbytery and the Presbytery of Southeast Missouri on January 3, 1985.

[I have talked with Frederick Heuser of the Presbyterian Historical Society. He agrees that there will be no cost involved in the implementing of this resolution.]

A. General Assembly Nominating Committee Agency Summary

The first ministers were the twelve disciples. There is no evidence that Jesus chose them because they were brighter or nicer than other people. … Their sole qualification seems to have been their initial willingness to rise to their feet when Jesus said, “Follow me.” (Frederick Buechner, Wishful Thinking)

The Form of Government stipulates that “All councils higher than the session shall have a process for nominating persons to serve in positions requiring election by the council. The process shall ensure that nominations are made by an entity broadly representative of the constituency of the council, and in conformity with the church’s commitment to unity in diversity” (Book of Order, G-3.0111).

As a council of the church, the General Assembly fulfills this mandate through the sixteen-member General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC). The GANC is composed of teaching and ruling elders drawn from the sixteen synods and in accord with the church’s commitment to the rich diversity of the church’s membership (Book of Order, F-1.0403). Through the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s comprehensive nominations process, the General Assembly is afforded the opportunity to select, from the varied gifts and services of Presbyterians, the most qualified persons to serve on General Assembly entities with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee makes nominations to more than thirty entities. In the course of its work, the GANC:

1. presents to the General Assembly for election, nominees for at-large vacancies on General Assembly entities;

2. submits to the General Assembly for election, nominees from persons proposed by synods and presbyteries in consultation with the General Assembly Nominating Committee for rotation vacancies or for middle governing body representation on General Assembly entities; and

3. transmits to the General Assembly the names of persons from General Assembly entities for their representatives (linkages) to other General Assembly entities.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee works continuously to broaden and deepen the pool of persons interested in and capable of serving General Assembly entities. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is blessed with a wealth of faithful disciples of Christ. However, changing cultural patterns in American society have affected the ability and disposition of Presbyterians to commit themselves to multiple years of continuous service on ongoing governance entities.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks “a new openness in its own membership, becoming in fact as well as in faith a community of women and men of all ages, races, ethnicities, and worldly conditions, made one in Christ by the power of the Spirit, as a visible sign of the new humanity” (Book of Order, F-1.0404). In its ongoing efforts to broaden and deepen the pool of persons for nomination, the GANC encounters barriers to service: young adults whose pattern of service centers on short-term, results-oriented engagement; working parents of young children who cannot be away from home for extended periods; persons whose employment does not allow the opportunity for extended absences; and persons whose service to church and community is already broad. These factors do not limit the GANC’s commitment to “a new openness,” but lead instead both to more intensive efforts to attract persons to service on General Assembly entities, and to conversations with the entities about ways they can adjust to emerging cultural realities.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee works in concert with the General Assembly Committee on Representation to ensure that membership on all General Assembly entities is broadly representative of the membership of the whole church.

In its continuous effort to enhance cultural competence and proficiency, the GANC enlisted the services of two consultants in the areas of servant leadership and theological diversity. In response to both Book of Order mandates and input from the church, the GANC also sought to refine its ability to discern “theological diversity” in its consideration of possible nominees. The committee invited Dr. John Burgess, professor of systematic theology at Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, to provide a framework for understanding more fully the need for theological diversity. He deepened our understanding that it is only through hearing the full range of voices within the church that we have any hope of discerning the voice of God. Growing from this productive consultation, the GANC added the following question to its nomination form: “To assist the General Assembly Nominating Committee in addressing the Presbyterian Church’s commitment to theological diversity, please briefly describe your theological perspective.”

While not quantifiable as are other representational categories, such as gender, race, and ethnicity, the answers to the new question enabled the GANC to be more informed and intentional in ensuring that the theological diversity of nominees is “broadly representative of the constituency” of the PC(USA).

1. Accomplishments in 2010–2012

The GANC continues to connect with Presbyterians—through meetings of presbytery and synod nominating committee, participation and attendance at national and regional conferences, engagement and correspondence with leaders at all governing body levels of the church—in order to inform Presbyterians of the many and diverse opportunities for service. In addition to face-to-face engagements, individuals, congregations, presbyteries, and synods can find a listing of positions open for election on the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s website www.pcusa.org/nominations. The website provides information on the General Assembly nominations process and descriptions of each entity to which the committee makes nominations. These descriptions are written by each entity and contain information on the purpose of the entity, skill sets and expertise needed, and time requirements for service. They are a useful tool for helping potential candidates determine whether or not their particular gifts and abilities are a match with the identified needs of a specific entity at this particular time.

In 2010–2012, in addition to providing information about the nominations process on its website, and in response to calls to do so, the General Assembly Nominating Committee returned to its practice of publishing a nominations booklet containing information of the nomination process, entity descriptions, skills and expertise needed, time requirements, and the names and contact information for members of the GANC. The booklet is offered at no cost upon request to the General Assembly nominations office in Louisville and disseminated to all mid councils.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee solicits applications for nomination to at-large positions from all councils, other official Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) groups, and individual Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) members. Presbyteries and synods provide the names of persons to be considered for nomination to designated mid council positions on the various committees, boards, and commissions where such membership is mandated.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee encourages those wishing to be considered for service on a General Assembly level committee to apply online via its website. The online application is easy to use, safe and secure, and relatively fast way to file. While this is the preferred way to apply, women and men who find that they are not able to use this method are able to obtain either an electronic or paper version of the application form for their use.

Through participation at conferences, conversations and engagement with the General Assembly Committee on Representation, racial ethnic caucuses, affinity groups, individual contact at all mid council levels as well as with pastors and ruling elders across the denomination, the General Assembly Nominating Committee strives to increase the number of racial ethnic persons and persons with differing theological perspectives in its pool of applicants.

Most persons serving on General Assembly agencies, committees, or entities are members of a congregation or a presbytery of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Several committees include within their membership persons who are not Presbyterian: the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations, the National Committee on the Self-Development of People, and the Review Committees on General Assembly Agencies.

About a year before it meets to make nominations, the GANC publishes on its website and mails to each presbytery and synod a list of vacancies to be filled. Additionally, the GANC website provides instructions, committee descriptions, and information about the nominations process.

Persons interested in being considered for service on a General Assembly level committee and persons who wish to suggest persons for consideration may do so by submitting an application for nomination form either online at the GANC’s website, electronically via an email version of the application form, or by completing and returning a printed version of the form. As of February 1, 2012, approximately 200 applications were received for about 75 at-large vacancies. Applications remain active for two General Assembly cycles.

The application process requires that applicants ask three appraisers to complete a reference form regarding the applicant’s abilities, gifts, and experience. A reference is also solicited from the council for each applicant. The references are treated in confidence and are critical in the discernment process the members of the GANC use. All application forms are shared with each General Assembly Nominating Committee member. Each member of the General Assembly Nominating Committee has access to the confidential appraisal materials for all applicants.

The nominating committee maintains a rotation system by which synods and/or presbyteries nominate persons to serve on the Mission Development Resources Committee, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and the National Committee on the Self-Development of People, as well as a rotation system for presbytery representation on the General Assembly Mission Council, as outlined in the Organization for Mission. It is important to remember that nominations for these mid council positions are made from proposals received from presbyteries or synods—through their regular nominating process.

Members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee relate actively to mid councils and General Assembly entities throughout the year. Each General Assembly Nominating Committee member serves as a liaison to the nominating committee of the synod in which the member resides. Each member attends at least one synod or synod nominating committee meeting every other year to explain the nominations process.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee invites all General Assembly entities to send a written report biennially concerning the specific needs of the entity regarding nominees presented to the General Assembly. In addition, the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s liaison member is available to meet with the entity or be in contact by telephone or mail at the entity’s invitation, so that the nominating process may be explained and that the skills and expertise needed by the entity are identified. This information, along with advice and counsel received from the General Assembly Committee on Representation, assists the General Assembly Nominating Committee in its work.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee continues to be concerned about the needs of persons with disabilities, persons with children and/or other dependents, and youth and young adults on entities of the General Assembly. The General Assembly Nominating Committee and the General Assembly Committee on Representation are committed to working together to discover persons with disabilities, youth, and young adults who are willing to be considered for service on General Assembly committees and agencies. The General Assembly Nominating Committee notes that many applicants do not identify themselves as persons with disabilities even when a disability does exist. Thus, we believe that the number of persons with disabilities serving the church on committees at the General Assembly level is actually higher than reported. The General Assembly Nominating Committee will continue to seek ways to encourage persons living with disabilities to make this information available.
The General Assembly Nominating Committee shared with the past General Assemblies its concern that there was an increase in the number of persons who have resigned from elected service because of a variety of obstacles. Resignations continue to increase as many demands, including pressures of family and work life, affect the ability of members to continue to serve at the General Assembly level.

The Organization for Mission provides that terms for most agencies, committees, or entities are four years, with eligibility to serve an additional four-year term. Re-nomination to a second term is not automatic. In fact, the 219th General Assembly (2010) urged “General Assembly entities to consider re-nominations as the exception, rather than the rule and applied only to those members whose continued service is clearly beneficial to on-going or projected work in order to assist the GANC in making its careful nominations” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 12). The GANC uses several factors in determining whether or not to re-nominate a person. Key in this discernment process is an evaluation instrument completed by the agency, committee, or entity on which the member serves, diversity issues, special skills and expertise needed by the agency, committee, or entity to respond to assigned mandates.

Since the 219th General Assembly (2010), there have been four meetings of the nominating committee: January 2011 in New Orleans, Louisiana; November 2011 via video conference call; March 2012 in Dallas, Texas; and April 2012 video conference call. New members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee participated in an intensive orientation meeting in San Antonio in September, 2010.

2. Membership

There are sixteen members on the General Assembly Nominating Committee—one member residing in each of the sixteen synods. The General Assembly, upon the nomination of the General Assembly moderator, elects the members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee; members serve a six-year term. The following officers were elected and served from July 2010 to July 2012: Catherine Purves, teaching elder, Synod of the Trinity, moderator; Warner Durnell, teaching elder, Synod of Living Waters, vice-moderator; Cindy Edwards, church member, Synod of Alaska-Northwest, secretary. The other members of the committee are: Joan Carpenter, ruling elder, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii; Frank Deming, teaching elder, Synod of Mid-Atlantic; Tully Fletcher, teaching elder, Synod of the Southwest; Carnell Hampton, teaching elder, Synod of the South Atlantic, Roger Howell, ruling elder, Synod of the Covenant; Jack Jenkins, ruling elder, Synod of the Northeast; Amy Kim Kyrems-Parks, church member, Synod of the Rocky Mountains; Emily McGinley, teaching elder; Synod of Lincoln Trails; Judy North, ruling elder, Synod of Lakes and Prairies; Mike Reyes, ruling elder, Synod of the Pacific; Bob Riggs, ruling elder, Synod of Mid-America; Lita Simpson, ruling elder, Synod of the Sun; and Jose Torres Hernandez, ruling elder, Sinodo Presbiteriano Boriquen en Puerto Rico.

The office of the General Assembly Nominating Committee is located in the Office of the General Assembly, 100 Witherspoon Street, Louisville, KY 40202-1396. Assistant Stated Clerk Valerie Kiriishi Small, ruling elder, serves as the manager for General Assembly Nominations.

We, though many, are one body in Christ, and individually members of one another. Having gifts that differ according to the grace given to us, let us use them. (Rom. 12:5–6 [RSV])

B. General Assembly Per Capita Payments by Presbytery

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) is grateful to the presbyteries for their continued level of faithfulness in the payment of per capita apportionments, although there have been many challenges in recent years due to the economy and issues in the church. During the year 2008, the percentage of total per capita paid to the General Assembly was about 95 percent; during 2009, about 93.4 percent; and during 2010, about 92.8 percent. Improvement of the level of giving is encouraged in the current and future years.

“Per capita is an opportunity for all communicant members of the Presbyterian church through the governing bodies to participate equally, responsibly, and interdependently by sharing the cost of coordination and evaluation of mission; and of performing ecclesiastical, legislative, and judicial functions that identify a Reformed Church, while at the same time strengthening the sense of community among all Presbyterians” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, p. 301).

Full participation in per capita giving preserves the connectional nature of our Presbyterian system and provides a strong witness to the faithfulness of our covenantal community as believers of the Reformed Theology, based on the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. It also helps us to function as a whole while coordinating between congregations and mid councils, and preserve the identity of our mission and ministry globally through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

See 5-year-per-capita-2006-2010.pdf (or pages 231–36) for pages that contain a statement of all per capita payments to the General Assembly for the last five years (2006–2010) by presbytery, indicating the total annual per capita apportionment, the amount paid, and the outstanding balance. The Office of the General Assembly (OGA) will continue to receive per capita contributions for 2011 from presbyteries during the year 2012.
We are grateful that the vast majority of our congregations continue to be faithful and support our denomination by participating in per-capita giving even when they may have disagreements with some decisions made by elected commissioners to the General Assembly by the discernment of the Holy Spirit. Each member’s share of the General Assembly per capita costs for the year (2012) is $6.63.

Minority Vendor Report
As of 12/31/10

This report is provided in a more narrative format which seemed useful to report our performance.

As a self-sustaining entity, PPC conducts all purchasing for outside services based on a cost related bid/quote system. We do not currently have any vendors who are in the not-for-profit category. While we are always looking for and open to new vendors, because of the specialties of work in publishing there is a smaller universe of possibilities than some other fields. We do ask our vendors to respond about whether their ownership includes minority or women. We do attempt to find and encourage bids from women and minority vendors; however, the vendor that is most likely chosen is either the low cost bidder or an equal cost bidder. We purchase services in the following categories:

- Printing – We have found only one minority-owned book printer in Lowell Massachusetts however their printing bids consistently range 25 to 40% higher than other bids. We do use one employee owned printer with many of their employees being women and minorities. Overall annual purchases amount to approximately $1.8 million

- Proofreading, Copyediting and indexing - We use 18 persons, twelve of which are female and 2 of which are minority (African American and African American-Hispanic) Overall annual purchases amount to approximately $90,000

- Typesetting – We use three small companies, one is a Caucasian woman, one is a Caucasian male and the other includes two Caucasian women. Overall annual purchases are approximately $105,000.

- eBook technical conversion – We use one company whose employees are Middle-Eastern. Overall annual purchases are approximately $10,000.

PPC does not specifically track financial payments to vendors by ethnicity, gender or disability.

PPC does purchase office supplies, printing, editorial services, production services, marketing products, and marketing services from a variety of minority vendors. A sampling of our providers is as follows:

- Niche Marketing for marketing products (lanyards, mouse pads, coasters, and other promotional pieces).
- Ermins Catering.
- Tiffany Taylor for Packaging/Copyediting.

Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012)

The Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

[The assembly approved Item 04-01, Recommendation 1. See pp. 69, 72.]

1. Regarding the Plenary Sessions of the General Assembly

Direct the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to structure the docket of each biennial meeting of the General Assembly to contain plenary sessions focused on prayer, Bible study, and community building.

Rationale for Recommendation 1.

Since the General Assembly convenes to lead the whole church in becoming “a community of faith, hope, love, and witness” (Book of Order, G-3.0501), we recommend the assembly spend significant time during its plenary sessions in prayer, Bible study, and community building. As we gather as God’s people, we do so as those forgiven, redeemed, and called to discover and embrace God’s will for us. Therefore, we will intentionally construct our time together around practices unique to the church such as prayer, singing, and Scripture reading. As we draw closer to God through these practices of faith, we seek greater spiritual wisdom to discern God’s will and the courage to act on the call of Christ.

[The assembly approved Item 04-01, Recommendation 2. See pp. 69, 72.]

2. Regarding the Framework for Plenary Sessions of the Next Three General Assemblies

Direct the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to construct the dockets for the next three successive General Assemblies (2014, 2016, 2018) around the Great Ends of the Church, the Marks of the Church, and the Notes of the Church. (cf. G 3.0501: “... As it leads and guides the witness of the whole church, [the General Assembly] shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).”)

Rationale for Recommendation 2.

In light of G 3.0501, we believe such a framework for the assembly will provide a form for the week and a context for its work while encouraging the assembly to center its work in worship, study, witness, and decision making.

[The assembly approved Item 04-01, Recommendation 3, with amendment. See pp. 72–73.]

3. Regarding Concurrences for Overtures and Commissioners’ Resolutions

That in order to improve collaboration among presbyteries, assure that the business before it is both of common concern to the mission of the church (G-3.0302(d)) and about key issues facing the church and society, and to encourage well-considered, significant overtures and resolutions of church-wide significance:

a. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

   Shall [G-3.0502] [G-3.0302d] be amended [by adding a new section “f.”] to read as follows: [(Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.)]

   [“f. present to meetings of the General Assembly such overtures from presbyteries and synods that have received concurrence from at least 10 percent of the presbyteries or, in the case of overtures from a synod, concurrence by 10 percent of the synods.”]

   [“d. propose to synod or General Assembly such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the church, and proposing to General Assembly overtures that have received a concurrence from at least one other presbytery.”]

b. Amend Standing Rule A.3.(e)6 so that it reads as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

   “(6) In the event that the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly receives an overture similar to one already proposed (excluding the rationale), she or he shall inquire of the presbytery or synod in question whether it would be willing to concur with that existing overture or desires to withdraw the overture. A presbytery or synod concurring with an overture may submit additional rationale for its action, provided that it does not duplicate the rationale provided...” by the overturning body. The concurrence and any additional rationale will be printed with the original overture in the Reports to the General Assembly. Concurrences to any overture shall be received up to 45 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly. Concurrences to any overture with constitutional implications shall be received up to 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly.”

   c. Amend Standing Rule A.8.a as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “a. Any two commissioners may propose an item of new business, known as a commissioners’ resolution, for assembly consideration by delivering it in writing to the Stated Clerk or the Stated Clerk’s designee. No commissioner may sign more than two resolutions. An item of new business, in the form of a commissioners’ resolution, must be signed by commissioners representing [40 percent of the presbyteries] [at least one other presbytery]. Such resolutions must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk or the Stated Clerk’s designee. No commissioner may sign more than two such resolutions.”

Rationale for Recommendation 3.

   A consistent theme of the reflection and feedback we received is the need to focus the business considered by an assembly. Overtures from presbyteries represent a significant source of assembly business. At the 219th General Assembly (2010) 124 overtures were received from presbyteries; only 25 percent of these overtures had concurrences from other presbyteries.

   The intent of this recommendation is not to control the business of the General Assembly; it is to help focus the business coming to any meeting of the General Assembly. Requiring the concurrence of at least 10 percent of presbyteries with any overture—and that commissioners’ resolutions require signatures from at least 10 percent of the presbyteries—will indicate that the significance of and interest in a particular issue have been tested across the church. Such concurrences will encourage and increase collaboration, education, and conversation within and among presbyteries about key issues.

[The assembly approved Item 04-01, Recommendation 4. See pp. 69, 73.]

4. Regarding the Assembly’s Plenary Consent Agenda

   Amend Standing Rule F.5(b) as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “b.(1) The General Assembly shall ordinarily decide questions by electronic voting. The Moderator may also call for unanimous consent by voice vote or show of hands. Assembly committees may recommend the use of a consent agenda for portions of their reports. In all cases, the right of any commissioner to call for one of the other forms of voting or to remove any item from the consent agenda shall be preserved. All decisions made by assembly standing committees by a three-quarters (supermajority) vote shall be placed on the assembly plenary consent agenda to be considered as the first order of plenary business following committee meetings. Any actions requesting constitutional change must be considered in plenary.

   “(2) In addition to all consent items from assembly committees, the following items shall be placed on the assembly plenary consent agenda:

   “(a) All unchallenged nominations from the General Assembly Nominating Committee.

   “(b) Unanimous recommendations from assembly agencies and entities for confirmations of those offices that, according to the Manual of the General Assembly, require General Assembly confirmation.

   “(3) In all cases, the right of any commissioner to remove any item from the plenary consent agenda or to call for one of the other forms of voting shall be preserved.”

Rationale for Recommendation 4.

   Much of the reflection and responses we received involved the overwhelming amount of business considered in plenary sessions of the assembly. We believe General Assembly committees should be empowered to place on the Plenary consent agenda all recommendations, except constitutional changes, made by supermajority (three-quarters) vote of the committee.
5. Regarding Young Adult Commissioners

Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-3.0501 be amended by adding a new paragraph after the formula for the number of commissioners to read as follows:

“...48,001 or more: 7 ruling elders and 7 teaching elders

“The presbyteries within the geographical boundaries of each synod shall elect, according to a rotation system agreed upon by the presbyteries, one young adult teaching elder commissioner and one young adult ruling elder commissioner, age 36 or younger at the time of the convening of the General Assembly to which they are commissioned.”

Rationale for Recommendation 5.

Feedback provided us indicates both strong encouragement for and a desire for younger commissioners to be involved in the proceedings of the General Assembly. In consultation across the PC(USA), we received strong affirmation about this recommendation.

Recognizing that a body maintains the right to determine its own election procedure, it is not our desire to impose structures on presbyteries regarding the individuals they choose to elect as commissioners. We recommend the creation of young adult commissioners (YACs) in order to facilitate the participation of gifted, younger adults throughout the church. These commissioners will be elected by the presbyteries within a synod’s geographical bounds using processes and criteria determined by those presbyteries.

At the assembly meeting, YACs will not be differentiated from “regular” commissioners in any way (i.e., they will be seated as commissioners in the same manner as others, will have full rights and privileges, etc.) and will be identified as ruling elder commissioners or teaching elder commissioners as appropriate.

Under current mid-council structure, this recommendation would result in thirty-two additional commissioners to the General Assembly, as there are sixteen synods. In the event of synod realignment or restructuring, it is recommended that the current geographical boundaries be used for this purpose until specifically addressed in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly and the Book of Order.

Comment: [To direct the Stated Clerk to communicate with the presbyteries the need to prioritize sending young adult commissioners under the age of thirty-six to the General Assembly.] The young adult demographic has been and continues to be an underrepresented group as commissioners to General Assembly. The assembly suggests the committee discover other ways to increase young adult representation.

[The assembly approved Item 04-01, Recommendation 6, with amendment. See pp. 69, 72.]

6. Regarding Moderatorial Pre-election Activities

   a. Amend Standing Rule H.1.b.3(c) follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “(c) Distribution of written [campaign] materials at General Assembly outside of the candidate’s room shall be limited to printed materials placed in mailboxes in the public distribution area.”

   b. Amend Standing Rule H.1.b.3(d) as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “(d) On the day of the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall provide a room for each candidate where commissioners and advisory delegates may meet and talk with the candidate. Candidates are encouraged to meet and make themselves available for conversation with commissioners and advisory delegates within the scope of these [campaign] procedures.”

Rationale for Recommendation 6.

Commissioners and advisory delegates are frequently unable to visit the booths/rooms because of other pre-assembly activities. We believe that providing booths for moderatorial candidates is not the best use of resources. We request the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, within the scope of the outlined campaign procedures, to facilitate opportunities for conversation between moderatorial candidates and commissioners and advisory delegates.
7. Regarding Removal of Nominating Speeches for the Office of Moderator

   a. Amend Standing Rule H.1.b.4(a) as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “(a) When the General Assembly is ready to elect its Moderator, only one speech shall be made placing in nomination the name of each nominee. The speech shall be made by a commissioner to the General Assembly. Such speech shall not exceed five minutes in length. There shall be no speeches seconding the nomination of any nominee. The order of speaking shall be determined by lot, the drawing conducted by the most recent Moderator attending the General Assembly. Each candidate shall be nominated by a commissioner to the assembly in the following manner: the commissioners making nominations shall be recognized at microphones on the assembly floor. Upon recognition by the assembly Moderator, the nominator shall say, “Moderator, I place in nomination for the office of Moderator of the ___ General Assembly Ruling/Teaching Elder _____ from the Presbytery of ______.” The nominator shall then return to his/her seat on the plenary floor. No seconds to nominations are required.”

   b. Amend Standing Rule H.1.b.4(b) as follows:

   “(b) After nominations are closed, each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to address the General Assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the concerns that nominee feels to be the most important for the church. The nominees shall speak in the same order as the presentation of nominating speeches. The order of speaking shall be determined by lot, the drawing conducted by the most recent Moderator attending the General Assembly.”

   Rationale for Recommendation 7.

   This practice offers to the General Assembly the powerful symbol that all candidates for Moderator come from within the body of the assembly. It will also streamline the current election procedure by eliminating nominating speeches.

8. Regarding Extending the Timeframe for the Work of the Biennial Review Committee

   The 220th General Assembly (2012) instructs the Committee to Review Biennial General Assemblies to continue its work to the 221st General Assembly (2014) in order that all matters related to the form and function of the meeting of the General Assembly may be explored, developed, and discerned, and additional recommendations brought to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly for the 221st General Assembly (2014). [Three new committee members will be appointed by the Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012) from among the commissioners to the 220th General Assembly (2012).]

   ![Financial Implications: 04-01, Recommendation 8: 2013: $27,230; 2014: $11,495 (Per Capita—OGA)]

   Rationale for Recommendation 8.

   We have only been able to respond in part to our mandate “to include all matters related to the form and function of the meeting of the General Assembly.” We believe it is vital at this time in the life of the church for us to explore the possibilities of different ways of presenting issues, seeking God’s discernment, and making decisions. Our own work as a committee has convicted us of the importance of caring community, genuine collaboration, and generous conversation.

   We believe the church is weary of a win/lose method of dealing with difficult and controversial issues and that the church in our 21st century context yearns for a way for those who make decisions on behalf of the church to do so in an environment that enables a greater awareness of the guidance of the Holy Spirit. As the council of the whole church, “The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness.” (G-3.0501). For a community of faith, hope, love, and witness, the means by which the church searches for a common mind will be as important as the decisions that are reached.

   We seek to study other resources in greater depth including materials from the Uniting Church in Australia, and the significant contributions of the Task Force on the Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Church. We believe both, as well as other resources, should be explored in greater depth.

   Our goal in continuing our work would be to explore alternate processes for presentation and discussion of issues, to invite several mid-councils to work with us to assess the effectiveness of these processes, and to propose to the 221st General Assembly (2014) alternative ways of doing the work of the assembly.
INTRODUCTION

These recommendations are in response to the following referrals:

The Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies was established by action of two previous assemblies. The 214th General Assembly (2002), in recommending biennial General Assemblies to the PC(USA), requested a review of the biennial concept following the 219th General Assembly (2010). A committee was to be appointed by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council. Overture 049 (Item 03-18) to the 219th General Assembly (2010) from the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy requested an expansion of the scope of the review committee to include all matters related to the form and function of the meeting of the General Assembly.

The following persons were named to the committee: Glen Bell, Indianapolis, Ind.; Theresa Cho, San Francisco, Calif.; Thomas Evans, Atlanta, Ga.; Glen Alberto Guenther, Denver, Colo.; Marcus Lambright, Princeton, N.J.; Kathy Lueckert, Seattle, Wash.; Carol McDonald, Indianapolis, Ind.; Matthew Schramm, Bay City, Mich.; David Van Dyke, St. Paul, Minn.. Carol McDonald serves as Moderator. The committee is staffed by Thomas Hay from the Office of the General Assembly.

The committee began its work in January 2011. From the beginning, the committee has kept before it these words: “The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness” (Book of Order, G-3.0501).

Our research and evaluation involved two surveys—one of open-ended and one of specifically focused questions. Approximately 125 persons responded to the open-ended questions and almost 900 persons responded to the specific-question survey. In addition, we interviewed the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council, and members of the GAMC executive staff. We requested and received input from each of the other four entities of the General Assembly: Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. We staffed a table at the Big Tent and engaged in conversation with many event attendees. The committee has held three face-to-face gatherings and has met multiple times by conference call.

The way we have worked together reflects our hope for future meetings of the General Assembly. We built community and have engaged in worshipful collaboration. Spirited and faithful conversation led, again and again, to decisions made by strong consensus. We offer this report with grateful hearts—thankful for one another and thankful for the One who called us together to do this work.

CONTEXT

We are a church with a newly adopted Form of Government (FOG)—one being explored and embraced by councils at all levels. The new FOG invites us to move from governance as we have always known it into new and flexible ways of being church. We are a church living in and through a time of dramatic change; transition is the norm. We are a church yearning for new and different ways of discussing and discerning God’s call around difficult and controversial issues. We seek to be faithful to the One who has called us into being and who is calling us to be the church in a new way.

VALUES

—That the common life of the whole church, as reflected in the meetings of the General Assembly, will reflect the mind of Christ as described by the Apostle Paul in Philippians 2.

—That our mode of engaging one another in the work of the whole church will reflect the image of the body of Christ described by the Apostle Paul in Romans 12 and in 1 Corinthians 12.

—That everything we say and do, as the council of the whole church, will allow us to engage with one another in love, humility, grace, and servanthood.

220TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2012)

Overall Rationale

2. Ibid.
—That the council of the whole church will be an integrated community of worship, study, witness, discernment, and decision-making.

—That collaboration will be increased among all the councils of the church.

—That processes for discussion and deliberation will be fair and open and honest.

—That the work and business of each meeting of the General Assembly will be focused so as to encourage full and prayerful participation of those seeking the mind of Christ for the whole church.

AFFIRMATION

We affirm the pattern of biennial General Assembly meetings. Our research, conversations, and discernment indicate this pattern is helpful to the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) We heard no strong support either to return to annual assemblies or to lengthen time between assemblies. Biennial assemblies are wise stewardship of both human and financial resources. They permit the church to deliberate and discuss important issues facing church and society, and offer councils necessary time to consider and live into suggested actions. Biennial assemblies provide for the whole church opportunities for worship, Bible study, fellowship, collaboration, and spiritual reflection.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 04-01

Advice on Item 04-01 —From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Recommendation 3.a. from the Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Recommendation 5 from the Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies raises constitutional issues that the assembly should consider.

Rationale

Two recommendations from the Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies propose amendments to the Form of Government, and require the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC). The ACC responds to each recommendation under separate headings.

1. Recommendation 3.a.

Recommendation 3.a. proposes that a new section “f” be added to G-3.0502, reading as follows:

“f. present to meetings of the General Assembly such overtures from presbyteries and synods that have received concurrences from at least 10 percent of the presbyteries or, in the case of overtures from a synod, concurrence by 10 percent of the synods.”

Recommendation 3.a. proposes that a new section “f”’ be added to G-3.0502. Section G-3.0502 currently consists of a series of lettered sentence fragments, each completing a sentence that begins, “The General Assembly has responsibility to maintain relationships with presbyteries and synods by….”

The meaning of existing sections a. through e. is clear in the context of the entire paragraph. The proposed addition of section f. would have a different structure and would read as follows:

“The General Assembly has responsibility to maintain relationships with presbyteries and synods by present [sic] to meetings of the General Assembly such overtures from presbyteries and synods that have received concurrences from at least 10 percent of the presbyteries or, in the case of overtures from a synod, concurrence by 10 percent of the synods.”

The meaning of this sentence is not obvious, and a reasonable reader might ask whether the new section f. was intended to complete a different sentence, perhaps in a different constitutional provision, or even in the Standing Rules. Even if the grammar is corrected, the sentence would still present the reader with a provision in which the subject (“The General Assembly”) is also the indirect object of “present” or “presenting.”

Lacking clarity as to the precise text and intention of the proposed constitutional amendment, the ACC advises the assembly that the rationale for the proposed amendment raises constitutional issues.

a. Right of Appeal

It appears that the amendment is aimed at limiting the business before the assembly. This could be seen as limiting the historic right of appeal, which is restated in F-3.02 (see footnote 6), and specifically implied in F-3.0206.
Other constitutional provisions address this issue. Each of the councils of the church has a responsibility to maintain relation with the other councils. “It is of particular importance that sessions … propose to the presbytery, or through it to the synod and General Assembly, such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the church” (Book of Order, G-3.0202e). “The presbytery has a responsibility to maintain regular and continuing relationship to synod and General Assembly by … proposing to synod or General Assembly such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the church” (Book of Order, G-3.0302d). “The synod has responsibility to maintain regular and continuing relationship with the General Assembly … by proposing to the General Assembly such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the whole church” (Book of Order, G-3.0402). These responsibilities in the session, presbytery, and synod presume a corresponding responsibility of the General Assembly to receive and consider the communications from them.

b. Business That Possibly Should Not Require Many Concurrences

There are many types of business that may not require substantial debate, but that are important to a small number of presbyteries. One example would be transferring a congregation from one presbytery to another. This is a matter typically brought to the assembly by overture from one presbytery with a concurrence from the other presbytery. For reasons we state in other advice before this assembly, the whole church does have a stake in such business, but it is difficult to explain why the two presbyteries at the heart of the matter would need to lobby sixteen other presbyteries for concurrence.

c. Shifting of Power

A restriction on the handling of overtures from presbyteries and synods would work against the ability of those councils to place business before the assembly, while leaving untouched the ability of entities of the General Assembly to present business. This shift could disturb the relationships expressed in G-3.0101:

> ... All councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution. The councils are distinct, but have such mutual relations that the act of one of them is the act of the whole church. The jurisdiction of each council is limited by the express provisions of the Constitution, with the acts of each subject to review by the next higher council.

d. Creation of Parties

The emphasis on synods and presbyteries collaborating on overtures could have the effect of fragmenting the church by privileging conversations between the like-minded over the broad discernment and conversations that are intended to take place in the council of the whole church—the General Assembly.

The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of the whole church, it shall keep before it the Marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the Notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303), and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).

e. The Protection of Minority Voices

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) protects the voice of the one from being silenced by the many. Our church protects the rights of dissent and protest for those who disagree with decisions made in councils (Book of Order, G-3.0105).

Even as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms the principle that a majority shall govern (F-3.0205), it also “seeks a new openness to the sovereign activity of God, … in its own membership, … to see both the possibilities and perils of its institutional forms, … to God’s continuing reformation of the Church ecumenical” (Book of Order, F-1.0404). Frequently, the possibility of this new openness is carried by the same prophetic voices who are repeatedly outvoted in meetings of our councils.

f. Other Options

The assembly has a number of other options available to focus its discernment on which matters are important enough to warrant sustained consideration.

A restriction such as proposed in Recommendation 3 might more appropriately be stated within the Manual of the General Assembly than in a constitutional amendment, so long as the assembly approves its policy consistent with its constitutional role and obligations, described above.

The assembly, being required to operate in accord with Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised (see G-3.0105), can control the best use of its time by its response to motions to approve the docket, by motions to limit debate, by motions to refer worthy but ill-prepared ideas for further study, or to disapprove business that does not convince the assembly of its merits. In addition, our parliamentary standard approves of the use of various additional tools of discernment and ways of crystallizing opinion.

The ACC advises the assembly that the above tools may be more helpful than merely counting concurrences, to the commissioners’ efforts to seek to find and represent the will of Christ (Book of Order, F-3.0204).
Recommendation 5.

Recommendation 5 proposes that G-3.0501 be amended by adding a new paragraph after the formula for the number of commissioners to read as follows:

“The presbyteries within the geographical boundaries of each synod shall elect, according to a rotation system agreed upon by the presbyteries, one young adult teaching elder commissioner and one young adult ruling elder commissioner, age 36 or younger at the time of the convening of the General Assembly to which they are commissioned.”

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) considers young adults as an important constituency of the church. The church has provided an opportunity for the voice and influence of youth and young adults to be expressed at General Assemblies dating back to 1970. One mechanism that has been used over the last several assemblies is representation of youth as youth advisory delegates (YADs) which have had a voice but no vote on the floor of the assembly (see 1970 G-13.0100(1), UPC, 1969, 771, 65, Ref. 18; cf. PCUS, 1979, 123, 178; 1970, 94, 102; UPC, 1973, 466, 64; 1970, 100, 1005; 1969, 771, 65). The participation of advisory delegates (including youth advisory delegates—now “young adult advisory delegates”) is provided for in the Standing Rules of the assembly.

Several issues are raised by the proposed recommendation that would amend G-3.0501 to allow one young adult teaching elder commissioner and one young adult ruling elder commissioner, from each synod through the presbyteries of that synod. The proposed amendment would significantly alter the process by which commissioners are allocated and selected, and the process by which underrepresented voices are included at the assembly.

Section G-3.0501 of the Form of Government provides in part:

The election of commissioners by presbyteries has been a right afforded to the presbyteries under the Constitution, with the manner of election left to the discretion of the presbyteries (former G-13.0102b). Historically there has not been a constraint regarding whom the presbyteries could elect other than the requirement that the delegation consist of equal numbers of ruling elders and teaching elders. Under the current Form of Government there is an explicit requirement that the delegation “[reflect] … the diversity [of the] bounds” (G-3.0501). This introduces the potential for a number of competing interests that must be taken into consideration with regard to diversity, of which age—in this case, youth—may be one. Other areas of diversity may include race, ethnicity, disability, and gender. To require the election of two youth representatives from each of the synods would elevate the importance of youth over other underrepresented groups such as racial minorities and women. The ability to elect young adults from presbyteries now exists and well may be required under the revised G-3.0501. The implementation and enforcement of Section G-3.0501 are issues that transcend the issue of young adult commissioners. Is the assembly now required to evaluate each delegation with respect to its compliance with this provision? Do underrepresented groups have the right to raise challenges to delegations that fail to comply with this section? It is noteworthy that no form of enhanced representation or quota has ever been accorded to other underrepresented constituencies of the church, despite the church’s historic and deeply held commitment to diversity and representation. The right to determine the persons and qualifications to serve as a commissioner has always been the prerogative of the electing presbyteries.

Another issue regarding the amendment of G-3.0501 is the possible involvement of synods in the election by presbyteries of young adult commissioners to the General Assembly, a right afforded exclusively to presbyteries. By providing for the election of commissioners by allocation to synods, and according to a method developed by synods, the presbytery-elected young adult commissioners may arguably be more accurately characterized as synod commissioners than presbytery commissioners.

Finally, the proposed amendment states that the mechanism by which such a process of rotation would be implemented is to be “agreed upon by the presbyteries.” The meaning of this is unclear, and presumably would need to be articulated by the synod and incorporated as a change to its standing rules.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

Item 04-01, Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies report, proposes eight recommendations to change the structure of the General Assembly so that more time will be devoted to prayer, Bible study, and community building; that time will be spent in those activities unique to the church: prayer, singing and Scripture reading; and that the business of the assembly be more focused through greater collaboration among presbyteries and synods.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 04-01 be approved with the following amendments. [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

1. Amend Recommendation #1 as follows:

   “1. Regarding the Plenary Sessions of the General Assembly

   “Direct the Committee on the Office of General Assembly to structure the docket of each biennial meeting of the General Assembly to contain plenary sessions focused on prayer, Bible study, and community building[^not to exceed 10 percent of total plenary time in addition to daily worship services].”

2. Amend Recommendation 3.a. as follows:

   “a. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

      “Shall G-3.0502 be amended by adding a new section “f” to read as follows:

      “f. present to meetings of the General Assembly such overtures from presbyteries and synods that have received concurrences from at least [10 percent] [two] of the presbyteries or, in the case of overtures from a synod, concurrence by 10 percent of the synods.”

3. Amend Recommendation 3.c. as follows:

   “c. Amend Standing Rule A.8.a as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

      “a. Any two commissioners may propose an item of new business, known as a commissioners’ resolution, for assembly consideration by delivering it in writing to the Stated Clerk or the Stated Clerk’s designee. No commissioner may sign more than two resolutions. An item of new business, in the form of a commissioners’ resolution, must be signed by commissioners representing [10 percent] [three] of the presbyteries. Such resolutions must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk or the Stated Clerk’s designee. No commissioner may sign more than two such resolutions.”

4. Add a new Recommendation 9. to read as follows:

   “9. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to prepare a concise statement for the General Assembly Mission Council (or Presbyterian Mission Agency) for the year between assemblies, to be presented at “Big Tent” or other similar events, addressing timely matters of social witness based on existing policy, on the model of the Church of Scotland’s annual “Address to the Nation.”

Rationale

The ACSWP appreciates the work of the Committee to Review Biennial Assemblies and the careful analysis it presents. The following considerations we raise arise out of the great value we place on the General Assembly. The assembly is a faith-strengthening experience as emphasized in this item. However, it is also a decision-making body whose deliberative process addresses internal church policy and structures as well as the church’s relationships to local and global society. Through its deliberative process, the assembly carries out the prophetic responsibility of the church to challenge the world with values arising from its biblical faith. With that goal in mind, we present the following considerations.

1. We are concerned that adding more worship and study experiences may constrict the time necessary for good participatory decision-making that can inspire, challenge, and educate both the church and world. This time often includes careful presentations, reflection on submitted documents, and in-depth debate. We absolutely affirm the daily worship of the assembly, which often addresses topics of the day. Thus, we suggest that Recommendation 1 be amended with a way to protect the time needed to communally process significant and complex issues and to reach decisions that enable the church to carry out its historic role of speaking God’s truth to the world as well as to the church. We are also not clear who has the responsibility to provide the additional conference programming sought.

2. We believe that imposing a 10 percent concurrence rule for overtures would have a seriously negative impact. The quality of overtures simply does not correspond to the number of concurrences. Concern for the prophetic imagination makes the ability of a single presbytery to overture the whole assembly seem an important virtue of our democratic system. Requiring one or two concurrences would seem sufficient to ensure broader importance while encouraging the church’s creativity. The process of seeking concurrences through collaboration, however, requires mechanisms and resources for consultation among presbyteries that they may not have and do not have equally. This could result in more “politicicking” and “lobbying” by special-interest groups. Such processes are not necessarily bad, provided self-reporting General Assembly rules still apply to the special-interest “affinity” groups often involved. A further concern is diversity; seeking concurrence has the danger of “diluting” distinctive concerns of presbyteries facing particular issues. Due to the likely reduced number or eliminated role of synods, we do not see a necessary need for concurrence for any synod overtures.

3. We are more inclined to accept a bit more restriction on commissioners’ resolutions. However, while the proposed rule would require more consultation among commissioners, the process of submitting commissioners’ resolutions, the requirement that signers represent 10 percent of presbyteries has some of the dangers described above. As proposed, this requirement would reduce not only the capacity of individual commissioners but restrict the assembly’s ability to receive new business addressing new developments in church and society.

4. From the standpoint of the public witness of the General Assembly, biennial assemblies affect the timeliness of the church’s voice on critical social issues. One strategy to overcome the problems of timelines would be to enhance the connection and visibility of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) or the Presbyterian Mission Agency to the church between assemblies. The proposal here would be received or approved by the GAMC/PMA in an appropriate manner and reported to the following year’s General Assembly and would be a condensed social witness statement to the church, on the lines of the Scottish General Assembly’s annual “Address to the Nation,” which seeks an evangelical concern for the welfare of the whole nation.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 04-01

Comment on Item 04-01—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

1. Comment on Item 04-01, Recommendation 1

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 04-01, Recommendation 1, and offers the following comment:

Regarding the Plenary Sessions of the General Assembly, recommendation affects the inclusion of prayer, Bible study, and community building within sessions of the plenary. It is important to GACOR that the assembly and COGA remain alert and take into consideration that worship and community building needs to be inclusive and accessible, and that these sessions will be designed to take representation issues into concern. For example, recent assemblies have chosen means of communicating worship materials that are not accessible to all. Using projected screens alone for liturgy or music when persons are standing, moving, or sitting in rows that are not ranked to allow for height differences, or have other challenges to see the screens means fewer are participating in worship. The GACOR encourages planners to include participation and access issues into the process with the committee on local arrangements, facilities, and partners.

2. Comment on Item 04-01, Recommendation 3

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 04-01, Recommendation 3, and offers the following comment:

Regarding Concurrences for Overtures and Commissioners’ Resolutions, Recommendation 3 would dramatically increase the barriers to submitting items of business (overtures and commissioners resolutions) to an assembly. Commissioners have rarely had difficulty in discerning what are the weighty matters before them and what items require less of their time. The proposed changes would prevent all items of business from being heard at the 220th General Assembly (2012) as no overture has reached the level of having 10 percent of presbyteries (or synods) concurring—for presbyteries it would require 18. The most concurrences received, as of May 15, according to PC-biz.org, was four presbyteries on a single overture (while related families of overtures do garner a few more, none receive 18 with agreement on an issue). The GACOR views this recommendation as absolutely contrary to the principles of representation and participation in the PC(USA). A great strength of Presbyterian polity is allowing space for the Holy Spirit to move within a congregation who may take it to larger councils for further discernment. It provides for voices of dissent to be heard and access for commissioners in the minority on issues of concern to raise questions for the consideration of the wider church. Requiring this level of concurrences goes against the experience of inclusiveness and representation and promotes greater politicization of the assembly meeting, encouraging the stronger lobbying activities of affinity and advocacy groups within our communion in order to get concerns raised for consideration. No longer would the single congregation be able to suggest an issue of discussion, having been heard and approved by its presbytery. This recommendation would significantly alter access and provide a significant barrier to congregations wishing to bring concerns before the body for discussion and discernment of the will of God for the Church. Participation would be diminished in drastic ways.

3. Comment on Item 04-01, Recommendation 4

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully offers the following comment on Item 04-01, Recommendation 4:
Regarding the Assembly’s Plenary Consent Agenda, Recommendation 4 will mandate the use of consent agendas in the business meeting of the assembly. Constituencies that GACOR advocate for are wary of “omnibus motions” and consent agendas as experience has demonstrated that these means are ways the majorities may violate the rights of marginalized groups. If the assembly goes forward with this recommendation, GACOR would caution that every effort be made to give notice and allow access for commissioners who wish to pull items from the consent agenda for discussion. The ability for all commissioners and advisory delegates to participate in decision-making and in the discernment of the Spirit’s will for the church may be adversely affected by these time-saving changes. Protecting the rights and privileges of commissioners and advisory delegates who find themselves in the minority is an essential identifying aspect of what it means to be Presbyterian.

4. Comment on Item 04-01, Recommendation 5

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully offers the following comment on Item 04-01, Recommendation 5:

Regarding Young Adult Commissioners, Recommendation 5 suggests the creation of thirty-two young adult commissioners (who would be persons under the age of 36 at the time of the assembly). The GACOR commends the committee for considering options for including more young people in the decision-making process of General Assembly with voice and vote. Having evaluated the pools of persons selected by their presbyteries to serve as commissioners, the GACOR recognizes how very many ways commissioners are selected and lifts up for your consideration the reality that it is very rare (sometimes one per assembly out of nearly 700) for commissioners to be elected who are under the age of 25 and not too much more frequent when commissioners are selected who are under the age of 35. This reality may be a negative consequence of the young adult advisory delegate positions each presbytery has (aged 17–24, many are ordained ruling elders and some have been teaching elders). While we appreciate the creative thinking the special committee did to encourage greater participation of young adults as commissioners, the proposed recommendation leaves much to be desired.

The GACOR met with the special committee and challenged them to be bold. After ten years of analyzing commissioner selection trends in presbyteries, GACOR encouraged the special committee to consider eliminating the young adult advisory delegate designation and replace that position with young adult commissioners (with voice and vote), one per presbytery (just as YAADs are distributed now). With slight adjustments of the age categories (we proposed 18–30 years of age), this would have a profound influence on the age distribution of commissioners, give greater responsibility and access to young adults, while not increasing the cost of the assembly and increasing the minimum number of commissioners per presbytery from two to three. If it be the will of commissioners to approve 04-01, Recommendation 5, there will be increased costs added to each General Assembly, while it does not significantly increase the number of persons under the age of 35 serving as commissioners and complicates the selection process of these commissioners by giving to presbyteries within geographic bounds of synods, (which may or may not be councils after the action of this assembly and the majority vote of presbyteries), the burden of working out how they will distribute the opportunity for these two additional commissioners each assembly. The reality is that most synods (exceptions are Puerto Rico and Southwest) have more than ten presbyteries within their bounds. That means if this opportunity rotates to each presbytery, that council does not get to select the additional two young adult commissioners again for a minimum of twenty years.

5. Comment on Item 04-01, Recommendations 6 and 7

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advise the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 04-01, Recommendations 6 and 7, and offers the following comment:

The GACOR concurs that Recommendation 6 does not hinder the election process, nor is it expected to affect representation, participation, or inclusiveness. Regarding the removal of nominating speeches for the Office of Moderator (Recommendation 7), we concur with the recommendation and rationale and see no affect on representation and participation.

6. Comment on Item 04-01, Recommendation 8

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully offers the 220th General Assembly the following comment on Item 04-01, Recommendation 8:

Recent assembly action opened up the possibility of using means of discernment other than Robert’s Rules of Order for decision-making and deliberation in assembly committees. In the wake of that change, the GACOR has been curious about what impact new processes may have on participation. In 2010, GACOR began an experiment using a new tool to discover if there is a relationship between the process used and any resulting patterns of participation. For the second time, GACOR is gathering data through “process observation” of what happens and who participates in the decision-making processes within committees during the 220th General Assembly (2012). We will provide a report to the Stated Clerk about any patterns that may emerge and the impact different means of deliberation had on participation. The GACOR will be able to expand this work to include evaluating and recommending alternate processes to the assembly with encouragement and support. Assisting in investigating new means for decision-making processes and making recommendation to the Stated Clerk and assemblies is a continuation of their advising role.
If it be the will of commissioners and the assembly to approve Recommendation 8, GACOR respectfully requests that the Biennial Review Group be directed to work with GACOR in this task. As GACOR refines ways to measure the impact choices among decision-making processes has, they can be a helpful partner in the work. For now we are recruiting multiple observers widely from diverse communities within the PC(USA), for each assembly, and working on improving the data collected and its quality. We are excited to be doing a second round of this work at the 220th General Assembly (2012) and are eager to learn more about the ways in which “how we decide” impacts “who decides.”

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).
Item 05-01

[The assembly disapproved Item 05-01. See pp. 20, 21.]

On Amending G-3.0301, G-3.0403c., and G-3.0502e. to Enable Flexible Boundaries within or Beyond the Bounds of an Existing Presbytery—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

1. Shall the first paragraph of G-3.0301 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strikethrough; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   "The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders which compose that presbytery. The presbytery shall adopt and communicate to the sessions a plan for determining how many ruling elders each session should elect as commissioners to presbytery, with a goal of numerical parity of teaching elders and ruling elders. This plan shall require each session to elect at least one commissioner and shall take into consideration the size of congregations as well as a method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. Ruling elders elected as officers of the presbytery shall be enrolled as members during the period of their service. A presbytery may provide by its own rule for the enrollment of ruling elders serving as moderators of committees or commissions."

2. Shall G-3.0403c be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strikethrough; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   "c. organizing new presbyteries, dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining presbyteries or portions of presbyteries previously existing, and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, creating non-geographic presbyteries, subject to the approval of the General Assembly, or taking other such actions as may be deemed necessary in order to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-3.0301 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created."

3. Strike the text of G-3.0502e:

   "e. approving the acts of synods to organize, divide, unite, or combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries."

Rationale

The purpose of striking this language is to provide flexibility to meet the changing needs of diverse presbyteries by expanding the use of alternate presbytery structures beyond the exclusive use of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations to foster innovation across the church.

It allows synods flexibility to assist presbyteries to respond to rapidly changing regional dynamics that might allow for mission outreach and church planting restricted by the current method of defining boundaries of a presbytery.

It supports the context and spirit of the new Form of Government, which attempts to provide a more flexible framework for the future work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

It allows for more innovative structures in mission, staff procurement, and relationship building, opening possibilities for presbyteries to work in creative, innovative ways.

It provides an opportunity to promote discussion about the unity and diversity of the work of presbyteries.

The purpose of striking General Assembly approval in G-30502e is to streamline the launching of new initiatives, as current biennial assemblies may delay any initiatives for more than two years.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-01

Advice on Item 05-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 05-01.

Rationale

Item 05-01 would change the G-3.0301 definition of presbyteries by removing their geographical bounds (“The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district …”) and substituting a non-geographic description of each presbytery as being “the communities engaged by the congregations and teaching elders which compose that presbytery.”

Additionally, Item 05-01 would amend G-3.0403c to permit synods to create non-geographic presbyteries for missional purposes other than to meet the needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations without requiring General Assembly approval, and would amend G-3.0502 by deleting the General Assembly charge to approve “the acts of synods to organize, divide, unite, or combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries” (Book of Order, G-2.0502e).

The purpose of Item 05-01 is to provide flexibility for diverse presbyteries by means of a faster and more local determination of presbytery boundaries so as to allow for “more innovative structures in mission, staff procurement, and relationship building.” The means to do this proposed by Item 05-01 raises several constitutional issues.

An historic and foundational understanding of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is that the church is called into being as a community whose true unity is in Jesus Christ (Book of Order, F-1.0302a). The missional diversity of congregations within a presbytery cannot negate that unity but is expressive of this church as a missional body within the whole Church as it seeks to be united with Christ in the power of the Spirit (Book of Order, F-1.0401). The presbyteries are assigned responsibility and power to develop strategy for the mission of the church in their geographical districts (Book of Order, G-3.0303a), with each congregation in those strategies and any mission partnerships to be “engaged in the mission of God in its particular context” (Book of Order, G-1.0101). Through its synods, the church exercises its responsibilities and powers for the presbyteries active in mission in geographic proximity to one another and “… assisting congregations in developing mission and participating in the mission of the whole church …” (Book of Order, G-3.0301c).

While the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has provided for non-geographic presbyteries, that has been approved only within the limited framework of the mission needs of racial ethnic and immigrant congregations (Book of Order, G-3.0403c), and then only following review of how language and culture so define the particular context in which the racial ethnic and immigrant congregations are engaged in mission that there is missional need to include them in less geographically bounded presbyteries. It is finally the whole church, through the action of the General Assembly, which must approve a synod’s creation of a non-geographic presbytery; this is not a regional decision alone.

In defining a presbytery as “the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within the communities engaged by the congregations and teaching elders which compose that presbytery,” Item 05-01 provides for the possibility that presbyteries could overlap because they would be bounded by their congregations’ and teaching elders’ missional spheres of “engagement” rather than by geographic lines. This would result in a potential for confusion or at least reduced clarity about responsibilities and accountability in the church’s mission. Approving a presbytery’s boundaries as being in accordance with its mission program could also provide for gaps in the church’s jurisdiction in a given region.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that ecclesiastical relocation of one or more congregations from one presbytery to another necessarily must have an impact on the fellowship, order, and mission commitments of the congregations of both the original presbytery and also the new presbytery of membership. Item 05-01 does not provide for the participation of those fellow congregations in evaluating the need for the ecclesiastical relocation of a congregation that is otherwise remaining in place, for reviewing a congregation’s request for membership, or for a consistent set of standards for synod consideration of that impact.

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) wishes to accomplish the stated intent of Item05-01, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the assembly instead answer with its response to Recommendations 6a and 6b of the Report of the Mid Council Commission (Rec-004), and refers the assembly to the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on that recommendation.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 05-01.

Rationale

Non-geographic presbyteries have been formed when language, culture, or a sure loss of representation in a context of segregation have moved the church to just decisions to form spaces and structures that assured representation and voice for a variety of racial ethnic constituencies. The church’s awareness of the power of racism, and/or the inability of the church when these presbyteries were formed to accommodate and hear the voices of ruling and teaching elders who were fluent primarily or solely in a language other than English, put in motion the processes that resulted in the formation of a variety of nongeographic presbyteries, starting in the 19th century and continuing to our time.
At the time of reunion, it was assumed that all nongeographic presbyteries would soon be realigned (see The Articles of Agreement 7.6–7.7). Many nongeographic presbyteries have realigned. Those that did not were permitted to continue as nongeographic presbyteries, either because of a continuing situation of racial and cultural tension or because of language barriers that were hard to meaningfully transcend. Today, there are five nongeographic presbyteries in the PC(USA)—Dakota, Hanmi, Midwest Hanmi, Eastern Korean, and Atlantic Korean-American. A move to form another nongeographic Korean-language presbytery that came to the 219th General Assembly (2010) was approved in committee and came to the floor, but failed when commissioners both Korean American and non-Korean American rose to speak to the primacy of the historic Presbyterian value of diversity, even in cases where continuing language barriers make communication and representation difficult.

It is clear from this history, then, that the formation of nongeographic presbyteries has occurred when barriers of language or racism have rendered life and ministry together so difficult that the church in its wisdom has allowed what has always been an extraordinary circumstance to take place.

Now, there is a new call to form nongeographic presbyteries. This new call does not arise from barriers of language and racism that are difficult to transcend, but because people who agree with each other on issues of theology or polity find it so difficult to be a friend to their colleagues in ministry with whom they disagree that they are moved to sever relationships of proximity and form new relationships based on like-mindedness and affinity.

While our history does provide a framework for the formation of nongeographic presbyteries, there is no historical precedent for forming nongeographic governing bodies that gather teaching elders, ruling elders, and congregations on the sole basis of agreement. The argument that our unity will be strengthened by not having to work or meet together cannot be sustained on the basis of history, theology, or Scripture. Making a value of positivity cannot outweigh that which is lost in a diversity of perspectives called together by God to help in the often-difficult process of discerning the Spirit’s leading. The hope for greater flexibility, innovation, and creativity in mission and ministry cannot find strong foundation in our inability to work together and find ways to serve together despite our differences. We can find no basis on which the arguments put forward for allowing the formation of nongeographic presbyteries based on affinity of position can be sustained.

Item 05-02

[The assembly answered Item 05-02 by the action taken on Item 05-12, Recommendations 1.–4. See pp. 20, 21.]

On Creating a Committee on Synod Boundaries—From the Presbytery of St. Andrew.

The Presbytery of St. Andrew overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to dismiss the Commission on Middle Governing Bodies with thanks for its members’ faithful service and work, and create a Committee on Synod Boundaries composed of one teaching elder and one ruling elder appointed by each existing synod (to be initially convened by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and then to elect its own moderator) that is directed to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) a recommendation for new synod boundaries replacing the current sixteen synods with six to eight synods.

Rationale

A. Regional Mission and Witness

The first duty of all councils of our church is to participate in God’s “mission for the transformation of creation and humanity” (F-1.01); furthermore, “councils of the church exist to help congregations and the church as a whole to be more faithful participants in the mission of Christ” (G-3.0101).

Because synods provide a broader base for mission than is usually available to individual presbyteries, synods have historically seized opportunities to plan, promote, and perform regionally based mission that would not be possible without the pooled energy, resources, and oversight of a larger body than a single presbytery.

The Synod of Living Waters, for example, developed its global mission project—Living Waters for the World—more than fifteen years ago to train, equip, and support congregations and presbyteries in the Deep South for taking small-scale, community sized clean water systems to communities in need. This project has enhanced the mission of many congregations and presbyteries and created the opportunity for them to send teams throughout the world. This mission training project has now expanded far beyond the boundaries of the Synod of Living Waters, empowering many congregations—both Presbyterian and non-Presbyterian—to bring Good News and clean water into twenty-three countries, to date.

Significantly, the training and equipping model developed by Living Waters for the World has now been adopted by the Synod of the Sun, which has developed its Solar Under the Sun program for training and equipping congregations to bring affordable solar power to those in need.
While it is certainly possible for these and other such programs to continue if their sponsoring synods are no longer councils of our church, there will be no future regionally mandated missional conversation as now exists by the requirement for synods to meet at least biennially, and therefore the likelihood of the development of any new regional mission programs such as these examples is highly unlikely. The reality is that without the broad base of support a synod provides, these successful mission projects would not have taken root and grown.

Synods have the opportunity to design and delve into ministry and mission endeavors specific to the demographics and demonstrated needs of their particular regions. Early historic examples of such ministries in our country include the establishment of hospitals and schools, as well as mission efforts with and for racial ethnic and immigrant groups within a region. In the latter case, it has been the existence of a “critical mass” of population at the synod level that has facilitated an efficient and effective witness that would simply not have been possible within the bounds of one or two presbyteries. Synods have been and continue to be that council of the church especially tailored for the conducting of advocacy and justice ministries for ethnic minority groups within the church, as well as for championing and coordinating the church’s witness in higher education among PC(USA)-related schools and colleges and on public university and college campuses.

Another very important role of synods has been supporting presbyteries in the transformation of congregations. The health of congregations is key to the health of the entire denomination. Synods can and have worked directly with presbyteries in their efforts to strengthen the mission and ministry of their congregations. In this way, presbyteries in less populated, more rural areas, have opportunities to participate more directly in ministry efforts to immigrant fellowships in urban areas within their synod’s bounds—while large, urban presbyteries have opportunities to participate more directly in ministries of compassion, justice, and transformation in rural and economically challenged regions of their synod.

B. Mutual Accountability for Regional Adaptive Work

Rather than viewing the practice of the Christian faith as a purely individual matter, Reformed Christians practice their faith together, in community. A significant historic role of church councils in the Reformed tradition is to provide the accountability that is necessary in a large, diverse Christian community like the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

At the same time, as distinct from forms of church government in which authority is exercised downward from the few to the many, the Presbyterian form of government assumes that accountability is exercised with mutuality—government by those who are governed (or their chosen representatives).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is simply too large geographically to exist without some form of regional governing presence. And the proposal to create that presence by means of regional administrative commissions (of the General Assembly), while economically enticing, creates a situation in which the governed are no longer the ones who choose those to whom they are immediately accountable—since the regional commissions will necessarily be elected by the full General Assembly, rather than by those from within the regions over which their authority will be exercised.

In this time of enormous change in the life of our church, we are working at every level of organization to do the absolutely essential adaptive work that will result in a healthy and vital 21st century church. In the last century, it was determined that our church’s mission demanded the formation of non-geographic presbyteries to help welcome certain immigrant and racial ethnic groups into our denomination. Today, some are suggesting that the road to renewed vitality and health will require us to think differently about geographic boundaries and jurisdictions of our presbyteries generally. Such conversations and explorations will be infinitely more difficult without the existence of synods as councils—and again, will place the decisions about approving any proposed realignments (not to mention the work of strategizing about the merits and viability of such proposals) in the hands of commissions not elected by those directly affected, and not directly affected by the decisions they make.

While we do not know fully what our church will look like in the decades ahead or how it will be organized, if it is to be a Reformed church, then it must continue to faithfully embody the essentials of not only Reformed faith, but also Reformed polity. Simply put, we believe that removing our church’s regional councils, while retaining its national council, gives the General Assembly too much authority, and removes governance too far from those who are governed.

C. Conclusion

Without question, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a denominational structure that was designed for a church that no longer exists. But we believe that a better approach would be to retain our current—and historic—structure of four councils, while reducing the number of synod councils, creating a sustainable regional structure for the decades ahead because roughly twice as many presbyteries would be able to pool their resources to fund each synod’s structure—which could, in fact, be quite minimal. We further believe that such a structure and issues related to funding it should be addressed by a gathering of presbyters elected directly from the existing synods, and that their goal should be to design a structure that reduces the number of synods by at least one-half.

Advice on Item 05-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that there are no constitutional issues at stake in the formation of a committee or commission by the General Assembly. The assembly is empowered to do so by G-3.0109.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution draws attention to the fact that a committee’s actions are reported to the council that created it, and its recommendations shall require approval of that council.

The requirement of the present overture that any recommendation of the committee be brought back to the 221st General Assembly (2014) is consistent with the requirement of G-3.0502d that the General Assembly is given responsibility for “organizing new synods, or dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining previously existing synods or portions of synods.”

The committee further notes that this matter is closely related to issues being addressed in the report of the General Assembly Commission on Mid Councils, and the General Assembly’s response to this overture should be consistent with its response to that report and its recommendations.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-02

Advice and Counsel on item 05-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 05-02.

Rationale

The item seeks a middle ground, between the elimination of synods suggested by the Mid Council Commissions Report and retaining the current structure and number of synods. Retaining synods would assist with the retention of racial ethnic ministry structures, many of which have traditionally been stronger at the synod than at the presbytery level. Additionally, the argument made in the overture regarding innovative mission projects that are made possible by presbyteries working together is compelling.

On Amending G-5.05a Regarding a Session’s Right to Decide Between Conflicting Mandates—From the Presbytery of Stockton.

The Presbytery of Stockton overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-5.05a be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Such joint witnesses shall be subject to the constitution of each denomination involved. Wherever the constitutions of the denominations differ, the mandatory provisions of one shall apply in all cases when the others are permissive. Wherever there are conflicting mandatory provisions, the congregational council shall petition the next higher councils or governing bodies to resolve the conflict. In instances in which the constitutions of the denominations involved contain mandatory yet conflicting provisions, the individual congregation shall retain the express right to determine, through its session, which one of these will be the authoritative ruling standard for that congregation.”

Rationale

The existing wording of G-5.05a mandates a process that provides little chance of success in resolving conflicting mandatory provisions between constitutional standards held by union congregations. In reality, current practice is simplistic, unrealistic, and inadequate: it assumes easy, rapid resolution to conflicts, yet provides no viable way of resolving conflicting decisions that emanate from higher governing bodies/councils.

While the simplistic wording in G-5.05a might be interpreted as implying that conflicts between mandatory provisions within constitutions may be quickly and easily resolved through referral to the next higher council, in fact this is very unlikely. A more plausible scenario is that each of the next higher councils simply would declare only their own particular constitutional standard to be binding, thus affording an inquiring union congregation neither resolution nor further recourse or appeal. Furthermore, such deliberations could take extended periods of time, potentially locking the individual congregation in a state of ambiguity, frustration, and inaction that might hinder or cause irreparable damage to its unity and witness.

Throughout its entire history, the Presbyterian church has displayed strong, genuine, and justified confidence in its member congregations’ ability to faithfully follow God’s call to new life and anointed mission. The church has frequently declared and affirmed the Spirit’s leading in the course of making decisions and shaping its life and mission. If such declarations are more than empty boasts—if they in fact truly reflect genuine faith and deep confidence—there should be little concern or problem in granting union congregations the express right to choose between conflicting provisions. Indeed the strongest, clearest testimony to the church’s trust in the Holy Spirit and confidence in its congregations might well be granting to each union congregation the freedom and right to determine, for and by itself, the appropriate and fitting constitutional standard that best reflects its faith and aids its mission to glorify God and expand the kingdom of Christ Jesus.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-03

Advice on Item 05-03—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 05-03.

Rationale

Item 05-03 would amend G-5.05a on resolving conflict between mandatory provisions of the denominational standards governing congregations in joint witness (formerly, “union” or “federated” churches).

In that the Christian witness of two or more congregations of different denominations serving jointly in mission is by its nature informed and ordered by two or more constitutions or sets of standards, there is the potential for those constitutions to differ on one or more points. When such differences involve mandatory provisions, the Form of Government requires the governing council of the congregation to petition the higher councils of each denomination to review and resolve those differences:

Such joint witnesses shall be subject to the constitution of each denomination involved. Wherever the constitutions of the denominations differ, the mandatory provisions of one shall apply in all cases when the others are permissive. Wherever there are conflicting mandatory provisions, the congregational council shall petition the next higher councils or governing bodies to resolve the conflict. (Book of Order, G-5.05a)

This gradated jurisdiction expresses the historic principles of church government central to presbyterian polity that were adopted by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America in 1797:

> That the several different congregations of believers, taken collectively, constitute one Church of Christ, called emphatically the Church; that a larger part of the Church, or a representation of it, should govern a smaller, or determine matters of controversy which arise therein; that, in like manner, a representation of the whole should govern and determine in regard to every part, and to all the parts united: that is, that a majority shall govern; and consequently that appeals may be carried from lower to higher governing bodies [councils], till they be finally decided by the collected wisdom and united voice of the whole Church. For these principles and this procedure the example of the apostles and the practice of the primitive Church are considered as authority. (See Book of Order, footnote at F-3.02, Principles of Presbyterian Government.)

These principles together demonstrate that the church is one body, having both unity and diversity within and among its parts. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds these principles to be foundational for its organization; it derives and restates from them the basic provisions of order in F-3.0201 through F-3.0209 to articulate the connectionalism of the interdependent structures of the PC(USA).

As described in the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government adopted by the 195th General Assembly (1983):

Presbyterian polity seeks to express the wholeness and unity of the church by insisting upon the interrelatedness of all the parts. Each congregation, for example, is but one part of the whole. The limited vision and often quite homogeneous composition of any single congregation needs the balance of perspective and broader inclusion of the other governing bodies. Particular congregations are a necessity for the function of the whole church but they are to be understood “as a local expression of the universal church.” (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153)

If a congregation in joint witness has conflicting constitutional mandates, the historic principle that the next larger body of the church should resolve the conflict continues to apply, with the efforts of the denominations informed by the same ecumenical respect for each other’s constitutional order that suggested and permitted the original agreement to enter into joint witness.

That Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) commitment to ecumenicity is specifically affirmed in G-5.0101, which states that this church “at all levels seeks to manifest more visibly the unity of the body of Christ and will be open to opportunities for conversation, cooperation, and action with other ecclesiastical groups. It will seek to initiate, maintain, and strengthen relations with other Reformed and Christian entities.” Councils of this church are not independent in their ecumenical relations but participate in them on behalf of the whole church. A congregation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) “… is not of itself
Item 05-03 is presented to the 220th General Assembly (2012) as an amendment to permit congregations in joint witness the “express right to determine, through their session(s)” which denominational standard should be followed by that congregation when mandatory provisions of their applicable constitutions conflict. Such amendment would permit a session to exempt its congregation from a mandatory provision in the absence of language in that mandatory provision expressly permitting a process for such an exemption. That this action would be specifically “for that congregation” and be intended to support and serve only its joint mission would not change the fact that a congregation would be empowered to depart from the Constitution independently of the whole church. Given that the “express right” would be exercised at the discretion of the session whenever it would determine that there were conflicting mandatory provisions of the constitutions of the partners in joint witness, there could be multiple local departures from the PC(USA) Constitution.

Item 05-03 is proposed as a means to improve upon G-5.0505a by making the resolution of conflicting mandatory constitutional provisions something that could be accomplished with more efficiency. This indicates an assumption that the next higher councils or governing bodies of churches in joint witness must necessarily take such time in their ecumenical responsibility that the congregation’s unity and witness in mission would be damaged by the due process of G-5.0505a. The church has addressed such a concern about its constitutional procedures for resolving differences more generally, with acknowledgment of the perspective of those who feel that the resolution they seek can and should be arrived at promptly:

The church follows the intention of its own polity, with careful study of Scripture and a sincere desire to be obedient to its Lord. As Presbyterians, we believe that taking seriously our own “Form of Government” and applying it to particular situations with integrity and caution is the best way to assure that God’s will for us will be discerned.

The imperfections and errors of the church are usually quite clear to those within who are impatient with the slow processes by which the church rectifies past mistakes or with the reluctance of the church to take a particular action. Such concern and impatience are signs of passionate conviction.

Yet the careful and sometimes tedious processes of our polity have been designed out of the historical experience of the church as it has sought to deal with conflict. (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 152, report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government)

When the church through a presbytery approves “creation of a joint witness between congregations of this denomination and congregations of other Christian churches that recognize Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, accept the authority of Scripture, and observe the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord’s Supper” (Book of Order, G-5.05), it does so prayerfully and with a constitutional responsibility for resolving conflict of contradictory constitutional mandates. Failure of the immediate next level of the church to fulfill that responsibility adequately in terms of the joint witness of a congregation can be addressed by such existing constitutional means as special administrative review or remedial judicial process.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-03

Comment on Item 05-03—From the Office of the General Assembly.

The Office of the General Assembly advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 05-03 presents the following issue that the assembly should consider:

A joint congregational witness between a PC(USA) congregation and one or more Christian churches is created when the mission strategy of a presbytery requires it (Book of Order, G-5.05). So while a congregation can express a desire to be part of a joint congregational witness, presbytery action, in light of a presbytery’s strategy for mission, is necessary for its creation. Item 05-03 would give a congregation, through its session, “the express right to determine” which one of the denominations’ constitutional provisions “will be the authoritative ruling standard for that congregation” when there are conflicting mandatory provisions. This would prevent each of the denominations’ next higher councils or governing bodies, including the presbytery whose strategy for mission led to the creation of the joint congregational witness, from exercising their current authority to resolve the conflict.

The Book of Order, F-3.0206, states, “a higher council shall have the right of review and control over a lower one and shall have power to determine matters of controversy upon reference, complaint, or appeal.” Further, F-3.0203 notes, “all councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution.” Indeed, our polity envisions a system of unity, mutuality, and accountability where councils communicate, collaborate, and work together to make important decisions impacting the faith and mission of the church. Our polity presupposes a fellowship of love and trust that is lived out in shared relationship with one another and where important constitutional matters are not decided unilaterally, but where lower councils work with higher councils to prayerfully discern the mind of Christ together, communicating with them and helping them understand how conflicting constitutional provisions may impact their congregation’s faith and mission in a given context, as well as the mission of the presbytery. It is through dialogue and working together through such difficult decisions that congregations and their presbyteries can help the whole... church understand more fully what it means for us to be a community of faith, hope, love, and witness (F-1.0301). Accordingly, commissioners are encouraged to consider whether such action in Item 05-03 is a departure from and contrary to the Historic Principles of Presbyterian Government including F-3.0206 and the principal where “the larger part of the church, or a representation thereof, shall govern the smaller” (F-3.0203).

On Amending G-5.0401 Regarding a Union Presbytery’s Right to Decide Between Conflicting Mandates—From the Presbytery of Stockton.

The Presbytery of Stockton overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-5.0401 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

"The union presbytery shall be subject to the constitution of each denomination represented in the union. Wherever the constitutions of the denominations differ, any mandatory provisions of one shall apply in all cases where the others are permissive. Where there are conflicting mandatory provisions, the union presbytery shall overture the highest council or governing body of the denominations involved to resolve the conflict either by authoritative interpretation or by constitutional amendment. In instances in which the constitutions of the denominations involved contain mandatory yet conflicting provisions, the union presbytery shall retain the express right to determine, for and by itself, which one of these will be the authoritative ruling standard for that presbytery.”

Rationale

The existing wording in G-5.0401 mandates a process that provides little chance of success in resolving conflicting mandatory provisions between constitutional standards held by union presbyteries. In reality, current practice is simplistic, unrealistic, and inadequate: it assumes easy, rapid resolution to conflicts, yet provides no viable way of resolving conflicting decisions that emanate from higher governing bodies/councils.

While the simplistic wording in G-5.0401 might be interpreted as implying that conflicts between mandatory provisions within constitutions may be quickly and easily resolved through referral to the next higher council, in fact this is very unlikely. A more plausible scenario is that each of the next higher councils simply would declare only their own particular constitutional standard to be binding, thus affording an inquiring union presbytery neither resolution nor further recourse or appeal. Furthermore, such deliberations could take extended periods of time, potentially locking the individual presbytery in ambiguity that may hinder and even damage its unity and witness.

Throughout its entire history, the Presbyterian church has displayed strong, genuine, and justified confidence in its member councils’ ability to faithfully follow God’s call to new life and anointed mission. The church has frequently declared and affirmed the Spirit’s leading as it makes decisions and shapes its life and mission. If such declarations are more than empty boasts—if they in fact truly reflect genuine faith and deep confidence—there should be little concern or problem in granting union presbyteries the express right to choose between conflicting provisions. Indeed the strongest, clearest testimony to the church’s trust in the Holy Spirit and confidence in its congregations might well be granting to each union presbytery/council the freedom and right to determine, for and by itself, the appropriate and fitting constitutional standard that best reflects its faith and aids its mission to glorify God and expand the kingdom of Christ Jesus.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-04

Advice on Item 05-04—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 05-04.

Rationale

Item 05-04 would amend G-5.0401 on resolving conflict between mandatory provisions of the denominational standards governing union presbyteries. It proposes that “[i]n instances in which the constitutions of the denominations involved contain mandatory yet conflicting provisions, the union presbytery shall retain the express right to determine, for and by itself, which one of these will be the authoritative ruling standard for that presbytery.”
In allowing a union presbytery to determine for itself which denomination’s constitutional provision should apply when mandatory standards conflict, this amendment would violate the Historic Principles of Church Government adopted by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America in 1797:

That the several different congregations of believers, taken collectively, constitute one Church of Christ, called emphatically the Church; that a larger part of the Church, or a representation of it, should govern a smaller, or determine matters of controversy which arise therein; that, in like manner, a representation of the whole should govern and determine in regard to every part, and to all the parts united: that is, that a majority shall govern; and consequently that appeals may be carried from lower to higher governing bodies [councils], till they be finally decided by the collected wisdom and united voice of the whole Church. For these principles and this procedure the example of the apostles and the practice of the primitive Church are considered as authority. (See Book of Order, footnote at F-3.02, Principles of Presbyterian Government.)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds these principles to be foundational for its organization, and has restated them as basic provisions of order in F-3.0201 through F-3.0209 to articulate the connectionalism of the interdependent structures of this church. To be a council of the PC(USA) is to participate in its life within this constitutional gradation that includes all sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly.

If a presbytery becomes a union presbytery, as a council of the PC(USA) it does so in expression of the constitutional provisions for its embodiment of the church’s commitment to ecumenicity:

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels seeks to manifest more visibly the unity of the body of Christ and will be open to opportunities for conversation, cooperation, and action with other ecclesiastical groups. It will seek to initiate, maintain, and strengthen relations with other Reformed and Christian entities. (Book of Order, G-5.0101)

However, when a plan of union for a presbytery and a comparable council or governing body of another Reformed body is approved by the presbytery’s synod and by the General Assembly, the presbytery remains an integral part of the PC(USA). The union presbytery is not separated out from the church and relegated to connection in name only; rather, through it the church develops a new relationship within the whole body of Christ. With its new ecumenical character the presbytery continues in its mission as a council governed by specific constitutional procedures such as the conflict-resolution provision in G-5.0401 and also by the historic foundational principles of order and governance in F-3.0201 through F-3.0209.

Item 05-04, favoring efficiency, proposes to improve upon the procedure in G-5.0401 for resolving conflict between mandatory constitutional provisions by leaving the wider church and the partner denomination(s) out of the review and approval processes for amending the union presbytery’s constitutional governance. Such constitutional independence in resolving conflicts is inconsistent with Presbyterian order.

The Form of Government does assist potential union presbyteries in preparing to meet potential constitutional conflicts in that it requires that there be “adoption of a plan of union by two-thirds vote of each presbytery or governing body that is party to the union. The synod and/or governing body having jurisdiction over each of the uniting bodies shall approve the plan of union” (Book of Order, G-5.0402) as well as approval by the General Assembly (G-3.0502e). A presbytery contemplating mission as a union presbytery has an opportunity to enhance the efficiency of the resolution of possible future constitutional conflicts when it prepares for synod approval, with its potential partner(s), a plan of union developed out of faithful and objective discussion of the two or more constitutions under which the union presbytery is to function. Experience in communication between the would-be partners and mutual knowledge of each other’s order and mission, including exploration of any areas of acknowledged differences, are one means provided for in the Form of Government for helping prevent or resolve constitutional conflicts. Additionally, a failure of the immediate next level of the church to fulfill that responsibility adequately in support of the union presbytery’s life and mission can be addressed by such existing constitutional means as special administrative review or remedial judicial process.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-04

Comment on Item 05-04—From the Office of the General Assembly.

The Office of the General Assembly advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 05-04 presents the following issue that the assembly should consider:

Currently, a “… presbytery of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may unite to form a union presbytery with one or more comparable councils or governing bodies, each of which is a member of another Reformed body, with the approval of the synod …” (G-5.04). Item 05-04 holds when there are conflicting mandatory provisions between the union presbytery’s denominations’ constitutions, this overture would give to the presbytery “the express right to determine, for and by itself, which one of these will be the authoritative ruling standard for that presbytery.” It would remove from each of the denominations’ highest council or governing body their current authority to resolve the conflict.

The Book of Order, F-3.0206, states, “a higher council shall have the right of review and control over a lower one and shall have power to determine matters of controversy upon reference, complaint, or appeal.” Further, F-3.0203 notes, “all councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution.” Indeed, our polity envisions a system of unity, mutuality, and accountability where councils communicate, collaborate, and work together to make important decisions impacting the faith and mission of the church. Our polity presupposes a fellowship of love and trust that is lived out in shared relationship with one another and where important constitutional matters are not decided unilaterally, but where lower councils work with higher counsels to prayerfully discern the mind of Christ together, communicating with them and helping them understand how conflicting constitutional provisions may impact their faith and mission in a given context. It is through dialogue and working together through such difficult decisions that presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly can help the whole church understand more fully what it means for us to be a community of faith, hope, love, and witness (F-1.0301). Accordingly, commissioners are encouraged to consider whether such action in Item 05-04 is a departure from and contrary to the Historic Principles of Presbyterian government including F-3.0206 and the principal where “the larger part of the church, or a representation thereof, shall govern the smaller” (Book of Order, F-3.0203).

On Adding G-3.0301d to Clarify the Right of Freedom of Conscience for Individual Congregations—From the Presbytery of Santa Barbara.

The Presbytery of Santa Barbara overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-3.0301 be amended by inserting a new section “d.” in order to clarify the right to freedom of conscience for individual congregations. The new section “d.” shall read as follows:

“d. A presbytery may receive congregations as member churches any congregation that petitions for membership regardless of whether or not that congregation lies within the geographical boundaries of the presbytery. A congregation may petition a presbytery to join it upon a two-thirds vote of those members attending at a regularly called congregational meeting. The presbytery shall vote to receive the congregation at its next regularly scheduled meeting by a majority vote of those attending.”

Rationale

1. The Amendment Is Needed

This amendment, which allows for porous boundaries of a presbytery, is needed to continue and deepen our connectional heritage. Our denomination is struggling in its communal life, theological understanding, and missional and social witness. While there are disagreements over cause, reasons, and severity, we are losing members and are increasingly torn by controversy and deep disagreement. We struggle to maintain and advance our mission, while embroiled in internal issues. Debates over ordination standards, authority of Scripture, the person of Christ, and the nature and limits of salvation (to name just a few) have all but completely occupied our attention for decades. These debates, often bitter and rancorous, have damaged our unity and troubled our peace. We are not only losing members but whole congregations who feel they no longer belong in the communion, hold its values, or share its language even when the words are the same.

Our experience, and the experience of the churches that desire to unite with the Presbytery of Santa Barbara, is that in spite of some shared theological language and vocabulary, there is a vast and growing divide within the PC(USA). There can be no denying that members of the PC(USA) on both sides of the debates perceive and believe that those “across the aisle” are speaking a very different language of faith and community.

The effect of all this is that the church is moving rapidly from diversity to division. What was a tendency five years ago has become a trend. More churches are withdrawing, some informally, some formally. Increasingly per capita contributions to governing bodies are being withheld or redirected. Mission funds, special offerings, and contributions are being diverted outside the PC(USA) at a heightened rate.

It is a challenge to maintain union with those who are headed toward disunion. How do we retain and maintain a viable communion among disaffected congregations? How can we remain together in ministry and mission in an age where locale no longer dictates our connection? The culture of the church is no longer defined by regional allegiance. Something broader and better must take its place.

With our recent votes on changes to the Book of Order and ordination standards, a new wave of congregations is now considering leaving the PC(USA). We view this as a tragedy that can be avoided. We seek to permit porous presbyteries where neighboring churches can transfer their membership.
The Presbytery of Santa Barbara, through this amendment, seeks to retain as many churches as possible by providing a way of living together in peace, unity, and purity. We also hope to reclaim some congregations that have previously united with the Evangelical Presbyterian Church. Some of these churches are reportedly less than satisfied with that decision because they have a commitment to greater connectionalism and the full inclusion of women.

2. The Amendment Is Missional

It is essential that any presbytery be focused on a positive vision of mission. Therefore, establishing porous presbyteries that will then consist of congregations and leaders who commit to:

- Following Christ in mission, cultivating fellowships that wish to start new churches, innovative ministries and leadership development that will result in healthy and reproducing churches.
- Planting churches and fostering new initiatives to reach the un-churched and de-churched populations of our area.
- Intentionally develop leadership for Hispanic, Asian, and other racial ethnic communities.
- Providing support for international movements with a common goal of reaching the lost.

3. Objections and Responses

Objection: This action will take churches and mission support from other presbyteries.

Response: The reality is that churches are looking to leave in any case and would take their mission support with them. With the repeal of G-6.0106b, this is becoming a mass movement. It is better to provide a structure to allow these churches and their mission support to stay within the PC(USA) instead of being lost to the PC(USA) altogether.

Objection: This will not be enough. There are disaffected churches all across the country.

Response: We see these porous presbyteries as providing hope and an effective model.

Objection: There are congregations within the current boundaries of the one presbytery that would not want to be a part of a self-described evangelical presbytery.

Response: If this were approved we recognize that there are churches within the current geographic boundaries of one presbytery that might prefer to align with another presbytery. We recognize that it would be appropriate for another presbytery to accept into its membership and for those churches to unite with that presbytery upon a 2/3 vote of their congregation and reception by that presbytery. While we do not desire to disassociate with any of the churches in a presbytery, we recognize that their sense of integrity and mission might lead them to that step. We would continue to honor their ministries in friendship and collegiality.

Objection: Isn’t this just laying the groundwork for eventual disunion?

Response: The purpose of this proposal is for us to continue to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, to continue disaffected congregations as member churches of the PC(USA), and, if possible, to reclaim some congregations for the PC(USA) that have already left. We are committed to this!

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-05

Advice on Item 05-05—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 05-05.

Rationale

Item 05-05 would add to G-3.0301 as a fourth “responsibility and power” of presbyteries:

d. A presbytery may receive congregations as member churches any congregation that petitions for membership regardless of whether or not that congregation lies within the geographical boundaries of the presbytery. A congregation may petition a presbytery to join it upon a two-thirds vote of those members attending at a regularly called congregational meeting. The presbytery shall vote to receive the congregation at its next regularly scheduled meeting by a majority vote of those attending.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the responsibilities and powers of the presbytery, like those of the session, synod, and General Assembly, are grounded in the notes of the Church (F-1.0303, G-3.0101): providing that the Word of God is truly preached and heard, the Sacraments rightly administered, and a covenant community of disciples of Christ is nurtured. These three notes are grounded in our confessional heritage (see The Book of Confession, 3.18) as characteristic of the work of the whole church, and were not created as an arbitrary list of powers peculiar to one or another of its councils. Inserting in the powers of the presbytery a fourth responsibility and power that is not grounded in the church’s confessional heritage both disturbs the basic structure of Chapter Three and suggests that the presbytery’s power to dismiss and receive congregations is a power on the order of the notes themselves. If the General Assembly agrees with the intent of this overture, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the appropriate place to insert it would be as a subparagraph “g” in G-3.0303.

1. Constitutional Issues of Connectional Accountability

Constitutional procedures for a determining presbytery membership and boundaries are developed within a system of accountability based on the foundational principles and standards of the Constitution. At the heart of presbyterian structure are the principles of organic unity, connectional discernment, and hierarchical order, which are expressed and demonstrated through the interdependence of sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly as gradated councils, each having responsibilities and powers affecting those next higher and those next lower. These principles of governance, restated in the Book of Order in F-3.02, were adopted by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America in 1797:

That the several different congregations of believers, taken collectively, constitute one Church of Christ, called emphatically the Church; that a larger part of the Church, or a representation of it, should govern a smaller, or determine matters of controversy which arise therein; that, in like manner, a representation of the whole should govern and determine in regard to every part, and to all the parts united: that is, that a majority shall govern; and consequently that appeals may be carried from lower to higher governing bodies [councils], till they be finally decided by the collected wisdom and united voice of the whole Church. For these principles and this procedure the example of the apostles and the practice of the primitive Church are considered as authority. (See footnote at F-3.02, Principles of Presbyterian Government)

In keeping with these historical principles, the Form of Government specifies numerous responsibilities of presbyteries for their member churches (e.g., “organizing, receiving, merging, dismissing, and dissolving congregations in consultation with their members; overseeing congregations without pastors; establishing pastoral relationships and dissolving them ...” G-3.0301a). These are powers of the presbytery to be exercised in consultation with its congregations, rather than powers to be exercised by the congregations themselves.

Similarly the Constitution does not give to presbyteries the power to reconfigure themselves but charges the synod as the next higher council with responsibility for:

- c. organizing new presbyteries, dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining presbyteries or portions of presbyteries previously existing, and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, creating non-geographic presbyteries, subject to the approval of the General Assembly, or taking other such actions as may be deemed necessary in order to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-3.0301 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created. (Book of Order, G-3.0403c)

In exercising this power synods are to consider the faithful concerns and mission interests of their presbyteries’ congregations before presenting for General Assembly approval a proposal to reshape the mission relationships of the congregations in those presbyteries. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that Item 05-05 seeks to allow for the possibility of the creation of non-geographic presbyteries but does not address or render without effect G-3.0403c as it restricts synods’ creation of such presbyteries to those the church deems “necessary in order to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations.”

2. Constitutional Issues of Geographical Accountability

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the Constitution defines a presbytery as “the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district” (G-3.0301). The geographic nature of a presbytery, as it corporately expresses the mission and ministry of at least ten duly constituted sessions and ten teaching elders (G-3.0301), facilitates and significantly informs its capacity for participating in its mandated relationships of accountability and review with its member congregations and its teaching elders, as well as with its synod. The geographic nature of a presbytery is not solely related to the G-3.0403c restriction on synod creation and General Assembly approval of non-geographic presbyteries.

The responsibility of a larger or higher council for the smaller or lower councils within its jurisdiction is finally one belonging to the whole church, fulfilled through the General Assembly as the council charged with “approving the acts of synods to organize, divide, unite, or combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries” (Book of Order, G-3.0502e). Underlying the role of the General Assembly in the moving of a congregation from one presbytery to another is its responsibility as the council of the church that “constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness” (Book of Order, G-3.0501).

Furthermore the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that by allowing for reshaping councils apart from the foundational principles of our polity the proposed changes would have a potential impact not only on governance but also on the legal implications of our polity in the secular courts, including with regard to the trust clause in G-4.0203 as it specifies that all church property is held in trust for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
In addition to concerns about Item 05-05’s inconsistency with constitutional principles, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that specific procedures sought by Item 05-05 are inconsistent with current related provisions left unaddressed by the proposed addition of G-3.0301d:

First, Item 05-05 emphasizes the independent role of a congregation in petitioning “upon a two-thirds vote of those members attending at a regularly called congregational meeting” another presbytery to “join” it, when the business to be transacted at congregational meetings does not include such petitioning or consideration of and action upon a proposal to depart from the presbytery (G-1.0503).

Second, as a process parallel to the moving of membership of a teaching elder of the presbytery to the roll of another presbytery, this change is constitutionally understood as “dismissal” by one presbytery to another presbytery (G-3.0307). It is the presbytery that dismisses one of its members, rather than a congregation that by its own action can require consideration of such a change in its original and in any intended next presbytery, reconfiguring both and doing so without review by the synod and approval of the General Assembly. Item 05-05 would permit a congregation to bypass its presbytery’s constitutional role as the council authorized to dismiss a congregation.

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) wishes to accomplish the stated intent of Item 05-05, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the assembly instead answer with its response to Recommendation 6.b. of the Mid Council Commission (Item 05-12), and refers the assembly to the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on that recommendation.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly disapprove Item 05-05.

Rationale

Non-geographic presbyteries have been formed when language, culture, or a sure loss of representation in a context of segregation have moved the church to just decisions to form spaces and structures that assured representation and voice for a variety of racial ethnic constituencies. The church’s awareness of the power of racism, and/or the inability of the church when these presbyteries were formed to accommodate and hear the voices of ruling and teaching elders who were fluent primarily or solely in a language other than English, put in motion the processes that resulted in the formation of a variety of non-geographic presbyteries, starting in the 19th century and continuing to our time.

At the time of reunion, it was assumed that all non-geographic presbyteries would soon be realigned (see The Articles of Agreement 7.6-7.7). Many non-geographic presbyteries have realigned. Those that did not were permitted to continue as non-geographic presbyteries, either because of a continuing situation of racial and cultural tension or because of language barriers that were hard to meaningfully transcend. Today, there are five non-geographic presbyteries in the PCUSA—Dakota, Hanmi, Midwest Hanmi, Eastern Korean, and Atlantic Korean American. A move to form another non-geographic Korean-language presbytery that came to the 219th General Assembly (2010) was approved in committee and came to the floor, but failed when commissioners both Korean American and non-Korean American rose to speak to the primacy of the historic Presbyterian value of diversity, even in cases where continuing language barriers make communication and representation difficult.

It is clear from this history, then, that the formation of non-geographic presbyteries has occurred when barriers of language or racism have rendered life and ministry together so difficult that the church in its wisdom has allowed what has always been an extraordinary circumstance to take place.

Now, there is a new call to form non-geographic presbyteries. This new call does not arise from barriers of language and racism that are difficult to transcend, but because people who agree with each other on issues of theology or polity find it so difficult to be a friend to their colleagues in ministry with whom they disagree that they are moved to sever relationships of proximity and form new relationships based on like-mindedness and affinity.

While our history does provide a framework for the formation of non-geographic presbyteries, there is no historical precedent for forming non-geographic governing bodies that gather teaching elders, ruling elders, and congregations on the sole basis of agreement. The argument that our unity will be strengthened by not having to work or meet together cannot be sustained on the basis of history, theology, nor Scripture. Making a value of positivity cannot outweigh that which is lost in a diversity of perspectives called together by God to help in the often-difficult process of discerning the Spirit’s leading. The hope for greater flexibility, innovation, and creativity in mission and ministry cannot find strong foundation in our inability to work together and find ways to serve together despite our differences. We can find no basis on which the arguments put forward for allowing the formation of non-geographic presbyteries based on affinity of position can be sustained.
Item 05-06

[The assembly disapproved Item 05-06. See pp. 20, 21.]

On Amending G-5.05a, Joint Congregational Witness—From the Presbytery of Santa Barbara.

The Presbytery of Santa Barbara overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-5.05a be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“a. Such joint witnesses shall be subject to the constitution of each denomination involved. Wherever the constitutions of the denominations differ, the mandatory provisions of one shall apply in all cases when the others are permissive. Wherever there are conflicting mandatory provisions, the congregational council shall petition the next higher councils or governing bodies to resolve the conflict. Wherever the constitutions of the denominations hold conflicting mandatory provisions, it remains the express right of the congregation to determine, through its session, which one of these provisions will be held to be the authoritative and ruling standard for that congregation.”

Rationale

The current wording in G-5.05a requires a process that provides little chance of success in resolving conflicting mandatory provisions between the constitutional standards held by union congregations. The current procedure is simplistic, unrealistic, and inadequate, as it assumes easy and rapid resolution to conflicts and provides no way to resolve conflicting decisions from higher governing bodies/councils.

While the simplistic wording in G-5.05a might imply that conflicts between mandatory provisions within constitutions may be quickly and easily resolved through referral to the next higher council, this is, in fact, very unlikely. It is far more likely that the next higher councils will only declare their particular constitutional standard as binding leaving inquiring congregations without resolution and with no further recourse or appeal. Furthermore, such deliberations could take extended periods of time, locking the congregation in ambiguity that may hinder and even damage its unity and witness.

The Presbyterian church has through the whole of its history displayed a vibrant confidence in the ability of its member congregations to faithfully follow God’s call to new life and anointed mission. The church has frequently declared and affirmed the Spirit’s leading as it makes decisions and shapes its life and mission. If such declarations are more than empty boasts but actually reflect a genuine faith and deep confidence, there should be little concern or problem in granting union congregations the express right to choose between conflicting provisions. Indeed, there may be no better or clearer evidence of the church’s trust in the Holy Spirit and confidence in its congregations than declaring the right and granting the freedom to union congregations to decide for themselves the appropriate and fitting constitutional standard that best reflects its faith and aids its mission to glorify God and expand the kingdom of Christ Jesus.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-06

Advice on Item 05-06—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) answer Item 05-06 with its response to Item 05-03.

Rationale

Item 05-06 to amend G-5.05a as written is nearly identical to Item 05-03. Such variation as exists is minor and does not alter their common intent as expressed in the rationales. It is the determination of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution that the constitutional issues presented are the same.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-06

Comment on Item 05-06—From the Office of the General Assembly.

The Office of the General Assembly advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 05-06 presents the following issue that the assembly should consider:

A joint congregational witness between a PC(USA) congregation and one or more Christian churches is created when the mission strategy of a presbytery requires it (Book of Order, G-5.05). So while a congregation can express a desire to be part of a joint congregational witness, presbytery action, in light of a presbytery’s strategy for mission, is necessary for its creation. Item 05-06 would give a congregation, through its session, “the express right” to determine which one of the denominations’ constitutional provisions “will be held to be the authoritative and ruling standard for that congregation” when there are conflicting mandatory provisions. This would prevent each of the denominations’ next higher councils or governing bodies, including the presbytery whose strategy for mission led to the creation of the joint congregational witness, from exercising their current authority to resolve the conflict.

The Book of Order, F-3.0206, states, “a higher council shall have the right of review and control over a lower one and shall have power to determine matters of controversy upon reference, complaint, or appeal.” Further, F-3.0203 notes, “all councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution.” Indeed, our polity envisions a system of unity, mutuality, and accountability where councils communicate, collaborate, and work together to make important decisions impacting the faith and mission of the church. Our polity presupposes a fellowship of love and trust that is lived out in shared relationship with one another and where important constitutional matters are not decided unilaterally, but where lower councils work with higher councils to prayerfully discern the mind of Christ together, communicating with them and helping them understand how conflicting constitutional provisions may impact their faith and mission in a given context. It is through dialogue and working together through such difficult decisions that presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly can help the whole church understand more fully what it means for us to be a community of faith, hope, love, and witness (F-1.0301). Accordingly, commissioners are encouraged to consider whether such action in Item 05-06 is a departure from and contrary to the Historic Principles of Presbyterian government including F-3.0206 and the principal where “the larger part of the church, or a representation thereof, shall govern the smaller” (F-3.0203).

[The assembly disapproved Item 05-07. See pp. 20, 21.]

On Amending G-5.0401, Conflicting Mandatory Provisions Between Constitutional Standards of Union Presbyteries—From the Presbytery of Santa Barbara.

The Presbytery of Santa Barbara overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-5.0401 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The union presbytery shall be subject to the constitution of each denomination represented in the union. Wherever the constitutions of the denominations differ, any mandatory provisions of one shall apply in all cases where the others are permissive. Where there are conflicting mandatory provisions, the union presbytery shall overture the highest council or governing body of the denominations involved to resolve the conflict either by authoritative interpretation or by constitutional amendment. Wherever the constitutions of the denominations involved hold conflicting mandatory provisions, it remains the express right of the union presbytery to determine for itself which one of these provisions will be held to be the authoritative and ruling standard for that presbytery.”

Rationale

The current wording in G-5.0401 requires a process that provides little chance of success in resolving conflicting mandatory provisions between the constitutional standards held by union presbyteries. The current procedure is simplistic, unrealistic, and inadequate, as it assumes easy and rapid resolution to conflicts and provides no way to resolve conflicting decisions from higher governing bodies/councils.

While the simplistic wording in G-5.0401 might imply that conflicts between mandatory provisions within constitutions may be quickly and easily resolved through referral to the highest council, this is, in fact very unlikely. It is far more likely that the respective councils will only declare their particular constitutional standard as binding leaving inquiring presbytery without resolution and with no further recourse or appeal. Furthermore, such deliberations could literally take years locking the presbytery in ambiguity that may hinder and even damage its unity and witness.

The Presbyterian church has, through the whole of its history, displayed a vibrant confidence in the ability of its councils to faithfully follow God’s call to new life and anointed mission. The church has frequently declared and affirmed the Spirit’s leading as it makes decisions and shapes its life and mission. If such declarations are more than empty boasts but actually reflect a genuine faith and deep confidence, there should be little concern or problem in granting union presbyteries the express right to choose between conflicting provisions. Indeed, there may be no better or clearer evidence of the church’s trust in the Holy Spirit and confidence in its councils than declaring the right and granting the freedom to union presbyteries/councils to decide for themselves the appropriate and fitting constitutional standard that best reflects its faith and aids its mission to glorify God and expand the kingdom of Christ Jesus.
Advice on Item 05-07—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 05-07.

Rationale

Item 05-07 to amend G-5.0401 as written is nearly identical to Item 05-04, and includes an almost identical rationale. It is the determination of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution that the constitutional issues presented are the same.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-07

Comment on Item 05-07—From the Office of the General Assembly.

The Office of the General Assembly advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 05-07 presents the following issue that the assembly should consider:

Currently, a “… presbytery of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may unite to form a union presbytery with one or more comparable councils or governing bodies, each of which is a member of another Reformed body, with the approval of the synod…” (G-5.04). Item 05-04 would vest the power to form a union presbytery with the presbytery itself, without the approval of synod. Further, when there are conflicting mandatory provisions between the union presbytery’s denominations’ constitutions, this overture would give to the presbytery “the express right to determine, for and by itself, which one of these will be the authoritative ruling standard for that presbytery.” It would remove from each of the denominations’ highest council or governing body their current authority to resolve the conflict.

The Book of Order, F-3.0206, states, “a higher council shall have the right of review and control over a lower one and shall have power to determine matters of controversy upon reference, complaint, or appeal.” Further, F-3.0203 notes, “all councils of the church are united by the nature of the church and share with one another responsibilities, rights, and powers as provided in this Constitution.” Indeed, our polity envisions a system of unity, mutuality, and accountability where councils communicate, collaborate, and work together to make important decisions impacting the faith and mission of the church. Our polity presupposes a fellowship of love and trust that is lived out in shared relationship with one another and where important constitutional matters are not decided unilaterally, but where lower councils work with higher counsels to prayerfully discern the mind of Christ together, communicating with them and helping them understand how conflicting constitutional provisions may impact their faith and mission in a given context. It is through dialogue and working together through such difficult decisions that presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly can help the whole church understand more fully what it means for us to be a community of faith, hope, love, and witness (F-1.0301). Accordingly, commissioners are encouraged to consider whether such action in Item 05-07 is a departure from and contrary to the Historic Principles of Presbyterian government including F-3.0206 and the principal where “the larger part of the church, or a representation thereof, shall govern the smaller” (Book of Order, F-3.0203).

[The assembly disapproved Item 05-08. See pp. 20, 21.]

On Amending G-3.0403c. and G-3.0502e. to Bring Flexibility to the Ways Presbyteries Relate to Each Other—From the Presbytery of Mississippi.

The Presbytery of Mississippi overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

1. Shall G-3.0403c be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through.]
   “c. organizing new presbyteries, dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining presbyteries or portions of presbyteries previously existing, and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, creating non-geographic presbyteries, subject to the approval of the General Assembly, or taking other such actions as may be deemed necessary in order to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-3.0301 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created.”

2. Amend G-3.0502 by deleting “e.” as follows:
   “e. approving the acts of synods to organize, divide, unite, or combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries.”
The Mid Council Commission (MCC) is recommending to the General Assembly that synods be discontinued as councils and their ecclesiastical functions be vested in “five regional administrative commissions” of the General Assembly. The MCC is also recommending that the General Assembly begin the process of creating “regional judicial commissions, rooted in various regions, to serve as courts of appeal to decisions of presbytery PJCs and as courts of original jurisdiction in remedial cases against presbyteries, or upon reference from presbytery PJCs.”

It is unnecessary to discontinue synods as councils in order to bring more flexibility to the way that presbyteries relate to one another. The Form of Government already allows synods to decide to reduce their function, retaining only “judicial process and administrative review,” the same two functions that would be retained under the MCC’s proposal (G-3.0404). Administrative and judicial review of presbyteries will thus go on under the current system or under the MCC’s suggestion, with the only difference being the number of bodies that will be doing this work. Having only five regional commissions verses the current system of sixteen synods could save some funds, but in having three times as much work to do, and in having much larger distances to cover, each commission might very well incur greater administrative costs than would synods that chose to reduce their function under the current Form of Government.

The MCC also recommends that the General Assembly’s authority “to approve the organization, division, uniting, or combining of presbyteries or portions of presbyteries” be eventually transferred to the newly created regional administrative commissions.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) entrusted the MCC with the authority that is now described in G-3.0502d and e—the authority to restructure synods and to approve synods’ restructuring of presbyteries. If the General Assembly desires to devolve these authorities to regional bodies, it would be just as effective to remove the indicated portions of G-3.0403c and G-3.0502e. Under such a system, synods alone would have the authority to permit presbytery realignments within their bounds, and such changes could be made in a more expeditious way. The General Assembly would appropriately retain the authority to approve the restructuring of synods.

A principal reason for retaining the current system of synods rather than moving to a system of regional commissions of the General Assembly has to do with representation. The commissioners to synod are chosen by their constituent presbyteries and each presbytery is guaranteed at least one teaching elder and one ruling elder to represent it (G-3.0401). In contrast, five regional commissions would of necessity oversee a larger number of presbyteries than the sixteen synods do. Unless these new commissions were so large as to be unwieldy, they would be unable to include even one representative from each presbytery.

The MCC states that it seeks to promote “the full expression of rich diversity in membership, participation, and decision-making.” It would be a pity if the presbyteries themselves were to lose representation in the bodies entrusted with their oversight, only in the pursuit of flexibility that our current system already allows or in the pursuit of financial savings that may or may not materialize.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-08

Advice on Item 05-08—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove Item 05-08.

Rationale

The stated intent of Item 05-08 is to bring more flexibility to presbyters’ interrelationships by removing the requirement of General Assembly approval of synod actions to organize, divide, unite, or otherwise combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries or to create non-geographic presbyteries.

Item 05-08 first seeks deletion of “subject to the approval of the General Assembly” from the charge to synods in G-3.0403c regarding their responsibilities for supporting the work of presbyteries in their bounds:

c. organizing new presbyteries, dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining presbyteries or portions of presbyteries previously existing, and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, creating non-geographic presbyteries, subject to the approval of the General Assembly, or taking other such actions as may be deemed necessary in order to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-3.0301 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created.

The second proposed action in Item 05-08 is parallel to and completes the first, deleting G-3.0502e so as to remove from the General Assembly its responsibility for “approving the acts of synods to organize, divide, united, or combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries.”

In the Form of Government, G-3.0403c and G-3.0502e state and also limit the responsibilities of synods for presbytery boundaries, in keeping with the basic principles of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that its presbyters (ruling elders and teaching elders) “shall come together in councils in regular gradation” as sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly (F-3.0203), and that “[a] higher council shall have the right of review and control over a lower one…” (F-3.0206).

These constitutional principles are derived from and restate the Historic Principles of Church Government adopted in 1797:

That the several different congregations of believers, taken collectively, constitute one Church of Christ, called emphatically the Church; that a larger part of the Church, or a representation of it, should govern a smaller, or determine matters of controversy which arise therein; that, in like manner, a representation of the whole should govern and determine in regard to every part, and to all the parts united: that is, that a majority shall govern; and consequently that appeals may be carried from lower to higher governing bodies [councils], till they be finally decided by the collected wisdom and united voice of the whole Church. For these principles and this procedure the example of the apostles and the practice of the primitive Church are considered as authority. (See Book of Order, footnote at F-3.02, Principles of Presbyterian Government)

With this presbyterian understanding of the interdependent responsibilities of councils, the General Assembly, being made up of elected commissioners from all of the presbyteries and constituting “the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils” (Book of Order, G-3.0501), is also organically connected with the whole church through the synods.

The Constitution provides in G-3.0403c and in G-3.0502c for that continuity in the oversight of the boundary definitions of presbyteries; there is an organic connection between a synod as one region of the church encompassing a limited number of presbyteries and the General Assembly representing all the presbyteries of the church. The initiative of one or more presbyteries for revising their boundaries and jurisdiction, and of the synod having jurisdiction of those presbyteries, is received for review and approval in accord with the “collected wisdom and united voice of the whole Church” expressed through the General Assembly.

The existing requirement that the General Assembly approve changes in the boundaries of presbyteries is not in place so as to restrict synods in the exercise of their charge in G-3.0403c, but is one means by which the mission of the church in a particular region is appropriately overseen and coordinated with that of other regions and the church as a whole. No region of the church, no synod, exists independent of the life of the whole church.

The rationale for the overture suggests that the amendments would increase the “flexibility” in which presbyteries would relate to each other in support of their congregations’ mission. This would come from reducing the amount of time, open interpretation, and representative review in the context of the wider mission of the church that is now necessary for securing General Assembly approval for basic changes in presbyteries’ jurisdiction. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes, however, that merely removing the requirement of General Assembly approval would not eliminate the role of the assembly in exercising oversight and review of the work of synods (G-3.0502b,c), which would include their actions related to organizing, dividing, uniting, or combining presbyteries or portions of presbyteries. It would only eliminate the need for prior approval.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that removing the phrase from G-3.0403c would not in and of itself permit the formation of non-geographic presbyteries for purposes other than meeting the needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations. The benefits identified in the rationale would have only limited impact apart from the approval of additional amendments creating greater flexibility in presbytery composition.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises that the approval of this amendment, together with another amendment eliminating synods as ecclesiastical councils, could have the effect of permitting presbyteries to organize and/or create new presbyteries without any required approval from higher councils of the church (under the “reserved powers” clause in F-3.0209).

Requiring General Assembly approval of regional actions that increase or diminish the representative presbytery membership of the General Assembly is consistent with the principles of connectionalism presented in the Foundations and developed in the Form of Government; the changes proposed in Item 05-08 are inconsistent with F-3.0203 in particular.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 05-08.

Rationale

Non-geographic presbyteries have been formed when language, culture, or a sure loss of representation in a context of segregation have moved the church to just decisions to form spaces and structures that assured representation and voice for a variety of racial ethnic constituencies. The church’s awareness of the power of racism, and/or the inability of the church when these presbyteries were formed to accommodate and hear the voices of ruling and teaching elders who were fluent primarily or solely in a language other than English, put in motion the processes that resulted in the formation of a variety of non-geographic presbyteries, starting in the 19th century and continuing to our time.

At the time of reunion, it was assumed that all non-geographic presbyteries would soon be realigned (see The Articles of Agreement 7.6-7.7). Many non-geographic presbyteries have realigned. Those that did not were permitted to continue as non-geographic presbyteries, either because of a continuing situation of racial and cultural tension or because of language barriers that were hard to meaningfully transcend. Today, there are five non-geographic presbyteries in the PCUSA—Dakota, Hanmi, Midwest Hanmi, Eastern Korean, and Atlantic Korean American. A move to form another non-geographic Korean-language presbytery that came to the 219th General Assembly (2010) was approved in committee and came to the floor, but failed when commissioners both Korean American and non-Korean American rose to speak to the primacy of the historic Presbyterian value of diversity, even in cases where continuing language barriers make communication and representation difficult.

It is clear from this history, then, that the formation of non-geographic presbyteries has occurred when barriers of language or racism have rendered life and ministry together so difficult that the church in its wisdom has allowed what has always been an extraordinary circumstance to take place.

Now, there is a new call to form non-geographic presbyteries. This new call does not arise from barriers of language and racism that are difficult to transcend, but because people who agree with each other on issues of theology or polity find it so difficult to be a friend to their colleagues in ministry with whom they disagree that they are moved to sever relationships of proximity and form new relationships based on like-mindedness and affinity.

While our history does provide a framework for the formation of non-geographic presbyteries, there is no historical precedent for forming non-geographic governing bodies that gather teaching elders, ruling elders, and congregations on the sole basis of agreement. The argument that our unity will be strengthened by not having to work or meet together cannot be sustained on the basis of history, theology, nor Scripture. Making a value of positivity cannot outweigh that which is lost in a diversity of perspectives called together by God to help in the often-difficult process of discerning the Spirit’s leading. The hope for greater flexibility, innovation, and creativity in mission and ministry cannot find strong foundation in our inability to work together and find ways to serve together despite our differences. We can find no basis on which the arguments put forward for allowing the formation of non-geographic presbyteries based on affinity of position can be sustained.

Item 05-09

[The assembly disapproved Item 05-09. See pp. 20, 21.]

On Extending the Mid Council Commission or Establishing a Successor Administrative Commission—From the Presbytery of San Diego.

The Presbytery of San Diego overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to do the following:

1. Extend the commission for the Mid-Council Commission or establish a successor administrative commission for the purpose of continuing the charge to

   a. act upon requests of presbyteries and synods, with the authority of the General Assembly to approve “the acts of synods to organize, divide, unite, or combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries” according to G-3.0502e.;

   b. continue consulting with sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the wider church on the mission and function of higher councils;

   c. develop models that reflect the roles of higher councils in our polity and the changing context of our witness in the United States and their relationships with other councils;

   d. implement, within the powers granted it, any decisions forwarded from the 220th General Assembly (2012) and approved by presbyteries regarding the form and function of higher councils with a report to the 221st General Assembly (2014); and

   e. report back to the 221st General Assembly (2014) of its findings and any recommended Book of Order changes.

2. Approve the following experiment for 2012-2014: with the approval of the effected presbyteries and under the oversight of the Mid-Council Commission or a successor administrative commission established for this purpose

   a. allow congregations to become AFFILIATE members of their GEOGRAPHIC presbyteries,
b. allow these congregations to become MEMBERS of other presbyteries within their geographic regions for ecclesiastical oversight, COM, and CPM authority, and spiritual/missional/relational support, under the following stipulations:

(1) congregations would be responsible for creating a plan to intentionally connect for shared ministry within the GEOGRAPHIC presbytery with which they are affiliated,

(2) congregations would have voice but not vote in the GEOGRAPHIC presbytery with which they are affiliated,

(3) the GEOGRAPHIC presbytery would have to approve release of the church’s property to another Reformed body if the congregation decides to leave the PC(USA),

(4) congregations would have full rights, voice, and vote in their presbytery of MEMBERSHIP within their region,

(5) congregations would split their per capita giving between the two presbyteries,

(6) if the experiment does not work, congregations would be allowed to return to their GEOGRAPHIC presbytery. If the experiment does work, the congregation and the presbyteries are empowered to make the experiment official.

Rationale

The Mid Council Commission (formerly Middle Governing Bodies Commission) has been extremely helpful in developing models consistent with the new Form of Government’s stated goal of being more missional and flexible. Recognizing that the original time commitment for those serving on the Mid-Council Commission expires at the convening of the 220th General Assembly (2012), we believe it is important to recognize their contribution and to offer them the opportunity to continue the work they have begun. Alternatively, establishing a successor administrative commission with the authority paralleling the existing commission is imperative to providing a means by which the General Assembly may continue supporting the development of models of healthy councils between biennial assemblies.

The experiment proposed in this overture was developed by the following executive presbyters from eight synods:

Executive Presbyter, Presbytery, Synod
Ken Baker, Presbytery of San Fernando, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii
Wendy Bailey, Presbytery of Monmouth &Presbytery of New Brunswick, Synod of the Northeast
Mike Cole, Presbytery of New Covenant, Synod of the Sun
Rich Cooper, Presbytery of Western Kentucky, Synod of Living Waters
Clark Cowden, Presbytery of San Diego, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii
David Dawson, Presbytery of Shenango, Synod of the Trinity David Dobler, Presbytery of Alaska, Synod of Alaska-Northwest
Tom Evans, Presbytery of Greater Atlanta, Synod of South Atlantic
Julia Leeth, Presbytery of Stockton, Synod of the Pacific
Marianne Rhebergen, Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse, Synod of the Northeast
Cory Schlosser-Hall, Presbytery of North Puget Sound, Synod of Alaska-Northwest
In Yang, Hanmi Presbytery, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii
Kevin Yoho, Presbytery of Newark, Synod of the Northeast

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-09

Advice on Item 05-09—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

Item 05-09 proposes two separate actions, the first of which proposes the extension of the charge to continue the work of the present Mid Council Commission, with some amendment of the charge, or to establish a new commission with the amended charge; and the second of which proposes an experiment by which congregations be permitted to be dismissed to membership in another presbytery while maintaining an affiliate relationship with its presbytery of origin. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the two action items be divided and addressed separately.

Regarding proposed action 1, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution offers the following advice:
The first action item does not require constitutional interpretation. The actions proposed fall within the power of the General Assembly to form an administrative commission and to delegate powers to it, under G-3.0109. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes, however, that it is similar in intent to Recommendation 5 of the Mid Council Commission report. It also notes that should the assembly approve this overture in place of Recommendation 5 that a possible conflict of roles between the Commission and the Regional Administrative Commissions envisioned in Recommendation 4 of the Mid Council Commission report could arise.

Regarding proposed action 2, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to disapprove the proposed action. The second action item addresses matters that require constitutional interpretation. The item proposes creation of an experimental period during which actions not currently permitted in the Constitution could be performed. Item 05-09 would call for these actions to be “under the oversight” of the proposed commission; however there is no constitutional mechanism by which such transfers could be accomplished. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the assembly cannot approve or delegate powers that are contrary to the Constitution, or which override the constitutional powers and responsibilities of other councils. In particular, the overture would contradict constitutional provisions regarding the composition of presbyteries (G-3.0201) and the formation of non-geographic presbyteries (G-3.0403c), and (potentially) the power of presbytery regarding “organizing, receiving, merging, dismissing, and dissolving congregations” (G-3.0301a), and of synods and the General Assembly to concur in such transfers (G-3.0403c; G-3.0502). In order to grant such powers the Constitution must first be amended through the process contained in G-6.04. The proposal is similar to Recommendation 6.b. of the Mid Council Commission report, which does propose specific constitutional amendments to accomplish such transfers of congregations. The present item lacks a request to amend the Constitution to provide for such actions.

If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of action item 2, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the assembly answer this overture with its response to Recommendation 6.b. of the Mid Council Commission report, and refers the assembly to the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on that recommendation.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly disapprove Item 05-09.

Rationale

The overture suggests a half measure, somewhere between approving the Mid Council Commission Report and disapproving it. The experiment with the formation of nongeographic presbyteries, which ACREC does not support, would be difficult to undo if the church discerned that this was not wise in two years. Being affiliated with one presbytery while having voice and vote in another would produce confusion and not move the church to a better place.

Item 05-10

[The assembly answered Item 05-10 by the action taken on Item 05-12, Recommendation 6. See pp. 20, 21.]

On Delaying Actions Regarding the Creation of Non-Geographic Presbyteries Until at Least 2016—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Thank the General Assembly Mid-Councils Commission for its work.
2. Delay actions regarding the creation of non-geographical presbyteries until at least 2016.

Rationale

While added flexibility in enabling the mission of the church is to be applauded, the impact of implementing all the recommended changes immediately would be too great for the system to accommodate at one time.

This proposal for non-geographic presbyteries undermines the historic understanding that God speaks through the voice of the people because it decreases the breadth of voices involved in discerning the will of God. We will be less likely to benefit from the voice of those who differ from us. And it will increase polarization within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a whole.

The possibility of non-geographic presbyteries will actually distract us once more from attending to the mission of God in the world through Christ’s church as we focus on institutional reorganization.
Non-geographic presbyteries will further dissipate the voice and presence of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), making the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) even more irrelevant in the United States.

Non-geographic presbyteries will result in a greater disparity between poorly resourced and richly resourced presbyteries.

Non-geographic presbyteries will create a fundamentally different church that will bear little connection with its historic nature.

The desire to create new missional partnership can be and is already being done within and between current geographic presbyteries.

Geographic proximity is a value. When times are tough we need to sit beside each other in the flesh and not entrust our communication to the easily combustible mediums of email, Twitter, and Facebook.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-10

Advice on Item 05-10—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that Item 05-10 presents no new issues requiring constitutional advice. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution refers the assembly to its advice on Recommendation 6 of the report of the Mid Council Commission (Item 05-12).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 05-10.

Rationale

Item 05-10 suggests positive and faithful ministry partnerships are already being formed in creative ways in a number of places, and points out some of the problems that may well result from allowing the formation of nongeographic presbyteries based on affinity. Waiting would allow the church more time to discern the Spirit’s leading on this significant change in our polity and our understanding of the church.

On Transferring the First Presbyterian Church of Ithaca, New York, from the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley to the Presbytery of Geneva—From the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley.

The Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve the dismissal of the First Presbyterian Church of Ithaca, New York, from the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley and the transfer of the church membership to the Presbytery of Geneva [and to instruct and authorize the OGA to make the appropriate boundary adjustments in consultation with the synod.]

Rationale

The congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Ithaca, New York, unanimously approved the requested transfer of membership at its annual congregational meeting on January 29, 2012. The Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley approved the transfer of the church to the Presbytery of Geneva at its stated meeting of March 3, 2012. The Presbytery of Geneva plans to approve the admission of the First Presbyterian Church of Ithaca, New York, at its stated meeting on March 20, 2012.

Mid Council Report to the 220th General Assembly—From the General Assembly Commission on Mid Councils.

The General Assembly Commission on Mid Councils recommends that the 212th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

[The assembly referred Item 05-12, Recommendations 1.–4. to a task force. See pp. 20, 21–22.]

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the Book of Order to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes to take effect at the close of the 222nd General Assembly (2016):

b. Shall G-3.03, The Presbytery, be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“G-3.03 THE PRESBYTERY

“G-3.0301 Composition and Responsibilities

“The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district. The presbytery shall adopt and communicate to the sessions a plan for determining how many ruling elders each session should elect as commissioners to presbytery, with a goal of numerical parity of teaching elders and ruling elders. This plan shall require each session to elect at least one commissioner and shall take into consideration the size of congregations as well as a method to fulfill the principles of participation and representation found in F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. Ruling elders elected as officers of the presbytery shall be enrolled as members during the period of their service. A presbytery may provide by its own rule for the enrollment of ruling elders serving as moderators of committees or commissions.

“The minimum composition of a presbytery is ten duly constituted sessions and ten teaching elders.

“The presbytery is responsible for the life, ministry, and government of the church throughout its district, and for assisting and supporting the witness of congregations to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that all congregations throughout its region become communities of faith, hope, love, and witness. As it leads and guides the witness of its congregations, the presbytery shall keep before it the marks of the Church (F-1.0302), the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history (F-1.0303) and the six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304).

“[The remainder of this section to remain the same.]

“G-3.0302 Relations with Synod and General Assembly, the Church

“The presbytery has a responsibility to maintain regular and continuing relationship to synod and with other presbyteries and to the General Assembly by:

“a. consulting with other presbyteries in their region about creating regional mission partnerships for racial ethnic advocacy and support, mission, and ministry projects, and other programs of shared life, diversity, and connection to the larger church

“a. b. electing commissioners to synod and General Assembly and receiving their reports;

“a. c. electing ruling and teaching elders to be readers of standard ordination examinations;

“c. d. seeing that the guidance and communication of synod and General Assembly are considered and that any binding actions are observed and carried out;

“d. e. proposing to synod or General Assembly such measures as may be of common concern to the mission of the church; and

“e. f. sending annually to synod and General Assembly statistical and other information according to the requirements of those bodies. [The remainder of G-3.03, G-3.0303–.0307 to remain the same.]”

2. Instruct the synods, in consultation with their constituent presbyteries, to develop and bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) plans to transfer assets, funds, projects, and programs to the appropriate trusts, foundations, or entities of their choice for implementation by the synods by the close of the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

3. Instruct the Moderator to appoint a committee to work in consultation with the Stated Clerk and to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014):

a. Recommendations, including any necessary changes in the Manual of the General Assembly, for the appointment of five regional administrative commissions to facilitate churches and presbyteries to fulfill their missional objectives when realignment is necessary and also to support the presbyteries and regions in promoting the full expression of rich diversity in membership, participation, and decision-making (Book of Order, G-3.0103);

b. Recommendations, including any necessary changes in the Book of Order and the Manual of the General Assembly, in order to continue to facilitate and support the racial ethnic ministries that have historically been supported by the synods.
c. Any additional editorial changes to the Book of Order that will be made necessary by the action of Recommendation 1.

4. Instruct the Moderator to appoint a committee to work in consultation with the Stated Clerk and to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) recommendations, including any necessary changes in the Book of Order and the Manual of the General Assembly, to create the necessary number of regional judicial commissions, rooted in the various regions, to serve as courts of appeal to decisions of presbytery permanent judicial commissions (PJC’s) and as courts of original jurisdiction in remedial cases against presbyteries or upon reference from presbytery PJC’s.

   [The assembly approved Item 05-12, Recommendation 5. with amendment. See pp. 20, 22.]

5. Instruct the Moderator to appoint a committee to work in consultation with the Stated Clerk to do the following:

   a. By direction of the 220th General Assembly (2012), or upon a majority affirmative vote of the affected presbytery or presbyteries or a majority affirmative vote of the presbyteries in the affected synod or synods, the commission is authorized to act [and work in cooperation with the Committee on Synod Boundaries] as the General Assembly to

      i. organize new synods and to divide, unite, or otherwise combine synods or portions of synods previously existing; and

      ii. approve the organization, division, uniting, or combining of presbyteries or portions of presbyteries by synods.

   b. Report to the 221st General Assembly (2014) [and to the 222nd General Assembly (2016)] all actions taken on its behalf.

   [The assembly disapproved Item 05-12, Recommendation 6. with comment. See pp. 20, 22.]

6. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the Book of Order to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

   a. Shall G-3.0403 be amended by adding a new section “d.” to read as follows:

      “d. approving the formation of provisional nongeographic presbyteries for particular missional purposes, upon petition of ten or more congregations and ten or more teaching elders within its bounds, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries. The petition shall include a plan outlining the missional purposes of the proposed presbytery and continuing covenant relationships with existing presbyteries. Such presbyteries shall have all the rights and powers of presbyteries, except that they shall not have the authority to dissolve, disband, divide, or reallocate property or to approve the sale, mortgage, lease, or transfer of the real property of its constituent congregations without the consent of the congregation’s presbytery of origin. This provision shall expire December 31, 2021, at which time all presbyteries formed under this provision shall be dissolved and their congregations and teaching elder members dismissed to their presbyteries of origin.”

   b. Shall G-3.0303 be amended by adding a new section “g.” to read as follows:

      “g. approve the temporary dismissal of congregations, for particular missional purposes, to another presbytery within the synod or to another geographically contiguous synod, subject to G-3.0403c and G-3.0502e, with the following conditions: (1) the congregation shall continue to affiliate with the presbytery of origin for the purpose of mutual blessing, and shall have voice at presbytery meetings, except in matters related to conditions (2) and (3) in which they shall have voice and vote; (2) the congregation may not sell, mortgage, transfer, or lease its real property without the consent of the presbytery of origin; (3) the congregation may not be dissolved, divided, or dismissed without the concurrence of the presbytery of origin; (4) distribution of per capita or mission funds remitted may be divided according to a covenant between the presbytery of membership and the presbytery of origin; (5) all relationships established under this provision shall be rescinded December 31, 2021, and may be rescinded at any time by vote of either presbytery in consultation with the congregation.”

   [Comment: That the commission be thanked and commended for its work on the report. That the congregations be encouraged to engage in collaborative missional endeavors, irrespective of their locations within particular presbytery geographic boundaries.]
7. [Establish] [Direct the Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to appoint] a task force to review the nature and function of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly, specifically with respect to their relationship with and support of mid councils as they serve the vitality and mission of congregations in our changing context [to report back to the 221st General Assembly]. [We commend the narrative of the Mid Council Commission report to the church and ask that a study guide be created for that purpose.]

The assembly approved Item 05-12, Recommendation 8. with amendment. See pp. 20, 22–23.

8. In light of what we have heard in our conversation with the church identifying a critical condition concerning lack of confidence in the substance and direction of racial ethnic ministry, we recommend

   a. [that] [Instructing] the Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012) [be empowered] to appoint a National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force exclusively to review, assess, and explore the call to, responsibility in, and vision for racial ethnic ministry within the PC(USA), reporting its findings for implementation to the 221st General Assembly (2014); and

   b. that this task force be comprised of representatives from —racial ethnic church leadership;
      —racial ethnic caucus leadership;
      —the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC); —presbytery leadership; and —the General Assembly Committee on Representation;
   c. [that this task force be independent from the OGA task force in Recommendation 3. above; and]
   d. that this task force be charged specifically to address the issue [and the lack] of language access, sensitivity, and resourcing (particularly as relates to the Spanish and Korean languages) within the existing frame of council operation, as well as within the context of any [regional administrative structure that might emerge as a result of the repurposing of synods] [any councils].

   [Note: Furthermore, in our conversations with the church we found significant interest in developing a new mechanism (1) to review the models in mid councils and congregations of racial ethnic ministry that are operating successfully in the denomination with particular focus on, but not limited to, those noted in the Report of the Racial Ethnic Strategy Task Force; and (2) to explore the viability of a nationally organized racial ethnic ministry advocacy model on the local and/or cluster congregation level. While it is not within our charge formally to recommend so, the assembly may nevertheless wish to consider assigning these additional responsibilities to the National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force recommended above.]

Rationale

“How are those governing bodies best organized to be responsive both to the Spirit of Christ and the changing opportunities for discipleship? Are [the structures of history] the best platforms for carrying our mission into the future?” (From the Rationale of the charge to the General Assembly Commission on Middle Governing Bodies, Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 275)

Our Charge

The Assembly Committee on Middle Governing Body Issues recommends that the 219th General Assembly (2010) direct the Moderators of the 218th and 219th General Assemblies (2008 and 2010), in consultation with the General Assembly Nominating Committee, to appoint twenty-one persons to a General Assembly Commission on Middle Governing Bodies with the understanding that the Moderators, as they make their appointments, shall make an intentional effort for theological diversity. The commission shall have the following focus and powers:

1. The commission will consult with sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the wider church on the mission and function of middle governing bodies. Such a process should include:
   a. current diversity in the role and functions of middle governing bodies.
   b. demographics and financial realities that affect the role and function of synods and presbyteries.
The role of each governing body in its oversight role—presbyteries of congregations, synods of presbyteries, and General Assembly of synods—both historically and in present experience.

2. The commission will develop models that reflect the roles of middle governing bodies in our polity and the changing context of our witness in the United States and their relationships with other governing bodies.

3. The commission will prepare a report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) of its findings and any recommended Book of Order changes. Recommendation for future roles and responsibilities will also be made to the 220th General Assembly about changes in middle governing bodies that may best serve the in the 21st century.

4. The commission will implement, within the powers granted it, any decisions forwarded from the 219th General Assembly (2010) and approved by presbyteries regarding the form and function of middle governing bodies with a report to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

5. By direction of the 219th General Assembly (2010), or upon a majority affirmative vote of the affected presbytery or presbyteries or a majority affirmative vote of the presbyteries in the affected synod or synods, the commission is authorized to act as the General Assembly according to

6. The commission will supervise the Special Administrative Review Committee on Puerto Rico and act on any recommendations they may make within the powers given to the commission.

7. The actions of the commission shall require a two-thirds majority for approval. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 274–75)

Rationale: An Executive Summary

A Season of Experimentation for Adapting to a Rapidly Changing World

The changing cultural context, the shifts that middle governing bodies are themselves already making, and a new domestic mission frontier all make this the right time, God’s time for us to examine the role, function and form of presbyteries and synods. (From the rationale of the charge to the General Assembly Commission on Middle Governing Bodies, Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 275)

At the heart of the eight formal recommendations the Mid Council Commission* has offered to the General Assembly is a twofold proposal that necessitates the constitutional changes suggested above:

1. The flattening of denominational hierarchy and bureaucracy by repurposing synods as Multi-Presbytery Missional Partnerships. This will be accomplished by eliminating the ecclesiastical responsibilities of synods as councils of the church, referring permanent judicial commission functions to another created structure, and creating regional administrative commissions of the General Assembly to offer ecclesiastical accountability for boundary decisions between presbyteries and to facilitate the church’s commitment to diversity.

2. The reinvigorating of presbyteries as the locus of support for missional congregations by allowing more flexibility in the formation of connectional relationships. In order to do this, we call the church to engage in a designated Season of Reflective Experimentation that will last until December 31, 2021. Among the possibilities to be explored during this season of experimentation are the creation of provisional nongeographic presbyteries and provisional presbytery realignments for specific missional purposes.

We live in a rapidly changing world and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is not the same denomination it was sixty or thirty years ago, when the structural framework of our current version of Presbyterianism was developed and implemented. As we have envisioned what the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) of our post-Christendom world may look like, our Commission has assumed the role of those who prepare the space, invite the artists, and affirm the creativity that already resides in our mid council system.

Based on a deep examination of our rapidly changing contexts for mission in the world, our recommendations create the conditions for adaptive change with a clear focus: “The stimulation of creative collaboration within and among presbyteries to strengthen the vitality of missional congregations in a post-Christendom world.”

The foundational ecclesiological principle behind our recommendations is articulated in our new Form of Government: the congregation—in covenant relationships called presbyteries—is the ‘basic form’ of the mission of God to the world.

In order to develop our recommendations:

* All key terms appear the first time with an underline and are featured in the glossary in the appendix.
• We listened deeply to the church by means of surveys, conference calls with key constituents, and numerous conversations in every synod, at every major gathering of the church, and with key leaders in every level of the church’s life. (See the report, “Listening [and Looking] Deeply: Data and Discussions”)

• We learned from experts in theology, history, and sociology, as well as from the most respected leaders in our current system about the urgency, necessity, and process of deep transformation. (See the section, “Changing Contexts and Adaptive Change”)

• We initiated a transparent and public conversation using social media, blogs, articles, and conversations about our recommendations while they were still in “draft” stages.

• We developed a set of Guiding Principles that reaffirm the recently adopted new Form of Government, setting us on our way to more missional and contextual decision making, and more flexibility and freedom to experiment. (See the report in Appendix 1, “Guiding Principles”)

Our recommendations were not developed in a vacuum. Throughout our process of listening, we discovered a variety of mid councils that are already producing new and creative expressions of connectional mission. To document these findings, our full report lifts up models of exemplary mid councils and suggests key attributes embodied in healthy councils. (See the report, “The Colors of Vitality: Models and Attributes of Healthy Presbyteries”)

We bring our recommendations with confidence that there is already significant capacity for transformation within our system that only needs to be shared and harnessed for creative change.

Repurposing Synods

Our first recommendation is to flatten the hierarchy and bureaucracy of our church by eliminating one level of ecclesiastical structure. We seek to stimulate structural change from the ground up. In doing so, we affirm and support multi-presbytery missional projects and programs that have been the traditional jewels of our synods and call for a commitment to reaffirm the longstanding tradition of mid council partnership for Racial Ethnic Ministries.

We have recommended regional administrative commissions as organizational “safe holding environments” for experimentation and collaboration that ensure wise, constitutionally consistent decision making in a larger geographic area. These administrative commissions will have the authority of the General Assembly in regards to boundary issues within and between presbyteries and to facilitate the church’s commitment to diversity.

The recommendation to repurpose the synods into multi-presbytery partnerships (and remove ecclesiastical status) responds to what we heard from the church: a call for structures that prioritize the vitality and mission of congregations. This recommendation separates out the three traditional functions of a synod—ecclesiastical oversight of presbytery boundaries, judicial appeal, and shared ministry and mission—into three different arenas:

• Ecclesiastical oversight will now be accomplished through five regional administrative commissions of the General Assembly whereby representatives of the constitutive presbyteries within a region will gather as needed and have the authority necessary for responding quickly and constitutionally to petitions to change presbytery boundaries and transfer of churches. These commissions will also have the responsibility to ensure our church’s commitment to diversity within each region.

• A committee will work with the Office of the General Assembly to discern a more effective “appellate court” system that is separate from these regional administrative commissions.

• Relationships and programs for shared ministry and mission across greater regions can continue or be developed through the initiative of the presbyteries within those regions. The works of ministry that have been supported by the mission giving of a synod can be retained in whatever forms the affected presbyteries determine will most effectively support their mission.

These multi-presbytery missional partnerships will become arenas for more connectional life as congregations and presbyteries decide to support and engage in relationships that are the most fruitful expressions of congregations in mission. This proposal to repurpose synods is the larger canvas in a secure constitutional frame that is meant to stimulate widespread collaborative creativity for the sake of the mission of Jesus Christ.

A Season of Reflective Experimentation

We propose a designated season of reflective experimentation with new models of missional governance, through the adoption of two significant temporary changes in our polity:

• We propose that the church amend the Constitution to permit synods to organize provisional nongeographic missional presbyteries, upon petition of sessions and teaching elders, with the concurrence of affected councils.

• We further propose that during this season of reflective experimentation presbyteries may dismiss congregations, with the concurrence of all affected councils, to another presbytery (either provisional or currently constituted). We propose that this season of reflective experimentation expire December 31, 2021, and recommend that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) be charged with designing and making provision for the evaluation of the season of experimentation.

These proposals are intended to entrust presbyteries with the flexibility and responsibility of working together to discern and create mid council structures and relationships that will enable their missional congregations to thrive and adapt.

We envision this season of reflective experimentation to stimulate engagement, learning, and missional collaboration within every context of the broader church. We envision churches that are given—within the proper relational and constitutional bounds—the flexibility and freedom to create new presbyteries or to become members of existing presbyteries within their larger region for achieving specific missional purposes. We envision presbyteries being formed through shared calling, shared commitments, and with a shared conviction to continue to build relationships, partnerships, and understanding both within and among various presbyteries. This will naturally require more cooperation, more collaboration, and more trust (of which we will have more to say later in this report).

We envision churches in conversations within their presbyteries of origin creating covenants of shared life and “mutual blessing” even while they create new provisional presbyteries or provisionally become members of other presbyteries.

We envision churches being committed to both their local neighborhoods and to a growing network of relationships and missional opportunities in a world where communication allows more creativity and opportunity for change.

We envision possibilities like those of the City Classis of the Reformed Church of America\(^4\) that has created a mid council for the express purpose of planting new urban congregations and developing urban church planting leaders. We envision possibilities like the Fresh Expressions of the United Kingdom that has called for both “neighborhood” and “network” church structures.\(^5\) We envision the potential for much deeper engagement by the emerging leaders of our church as a new generation that is fluent in the language and mores of our flat and networked world are given the trust and freedom to create and share in the accountability and oversight of new forms of ministry and covenanted life.

We dream of the creation of provisional presbyteries formed to express different deeply held missional callings of congregations and their leaders.

We envision different presbyteries in the same larger geographic area (perhaps even sharing the same staff) that come together with a special call for urban ministry, suburban ministry, rural ministry, reconciliation ministry, revitalizing congregations, or planting new congregations.

We envision churches free to move from one presbytery to another in a particular region in order to better live out their calling. We envision that some will want to be in smaller, more localized presbyteries; while others will want larger, more programmatic presbyteries; still others will choose to be part of “virtual” presbyteries that are spread across larger geographic areas.

Mostly, we envision a new generation of emerging leaders—who are most at home in what Doug Pagitt calls the Inventive Age—to become more personally involved in the reinvention of missional congregations supported by thriving, focused presbyteries in a denomination that is fully embracing the challenges of our rapidly changing world.

We offer these recommendations in the hope that they will energize the whole church to a season of more engaged partnership, collaboration, and creativity for bringing the mission of the God’s kingdom into diverse and rapidly changing local contexts.

These proposals shift the focus of our connectional structures to presbyteries and congregations; refocus the church on mission, discipleship, and shared covenants; and train our focus on the post-Christendom cultural landscape, the future before us, and a new generation of leadership that is already emerging.

Further Work

From the beginning of our work, the commission understood that our charge was limited to mid councils. However, our data collection, which was one of the largest listening projects ever conducted in the PC(USA), provided a broad and deep look at the perspectives of session members, presbytery and synod leaders, focus groups of racial ethnic constituencies, young pastors, large and small presbytery moderators and executive staffs, and a substantial “at large” representation of Presbyterians, all of whom rated and commented on our ecclesial structures. After a sustained and thorough time of listening to the church, it became clear to us that at least two issues beyond our focus on mid councils need to be lifted up for further work, expressed in Recommendations 7 and 8.

Our data clearly shows that many Presbyterians are calling for a shift from the top-down model of our current structure to a model that is characterized by a church-wide commitment to build up and support local congregations. Generally, congregations do not feel well supported by General Assembly agencies. Only 26 percent of session-level respondents rated the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) “excellent” or “very good” and only 33 percent gave those ratings to General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). There is a significant disconnect between local congregations and the agencies of the General Assembly. We therefore call for the creation of a task force to review the nature and function of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly, specifically with respect to their relationship with and support of mid councils as they serve the vitality and mission of congregations in our changing context.

The response throughout the church to our recommended change in the ecclesiastical status of synods heightened our awareness that there is need for a longer, more thorough examination of the conditions and possibilities of racial ethnic ministry in the context of changing ecclesial structures. The commission created its own task force to consult with leadership across the church and offers a report of its findings (see Report from the Racial Ethnic Strategy Task Force). In response to these concerns, we recommend the creation of a National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force to ensure that the advocacy for racial ethnic ministries, which has been traditionally located in synods, continue in the new ecclesial structures that emerge in the PC(USA).

Lastly, we offer the church some observations of underlying issues identified in our research that go beyond structural concerns of mid councils but are vital to the health and transformation of the PC(USA).

Conclusion

Our report and recommendations invite the church to live into what has been called the “adjacent possible.” It invites us to be a people who together take wise, deliberate, and provisional steps; who experiment with ways of being together; who “try on” relationships; who make temporary covenants without fully leaving behind the historical and geographical connections that have shaped our denomination to date.

Our proposal does not require change at the congregational or presbytery level, but allows for flexibility, freedom, and authority for those who endeavor to work out our connectional convictions in developing strategies, creating structures, initiating ministries, and sharing projects, all while being protected by the constitutional oversight of a regional administrative commission and a clear expiration date for what—God willing—will be a bold season of experimentation for a changing church in a changing world.

Changing Contexts and Adaptive Change

“How can we have enough freedom to imagine and articulate a real historical newness in our situation?”

Walter Brueggemann

Our Vision

We envision a larger geographic canvas, a secure frame of constitutional accountability, and creative, collaborative leaders experimenting in creating missional communities for sending disciples into the world with the gospel of Jesus Christ.

We envision elders and congregations in thoughtful, bold experiments within and across presbyteries having as much flexibility as they need to create new models of “covenant communities of missional congregations.”

We envision presbyteries as “learning communities” committed to a constant process of examining what works and adapting the organization to meet ever-changing needs.

We envision a growing commitment to cultural proficiency, enriching and expanding each others’ cultural experiences, and demonstrating the gospel of Christ, which calls us all to be participants.

We envision innovative, practical expressions of parity between teaching and ruling elders, a cornerstone of Reformed polity, by encouraging experiments where churches and elders willingly take the steps necessary to discover what elder-led councils look like in a world full of demands.

We envision a growing number of specific, covenanted communities made up of churches that are uniquely called to the risks, experimentation, and leadership capacity that will be required to develop new churches and “worshipping communities” and support young congregational experiments.

We envision even more established congregations who join together either permanently or provisionally for a season of time to fulfill a call to nurture small or struggling congregations in bold and generous acts of partnership.

We envision “network” presbyteries existing alongside “neighborhood” presbyteries that better express and respond to the multiple ways that we live and build relationships in our world today.

We understand that one commission cannot possibly envision all the ways that Presbyterian connectionalism can be expressed in intentional, covenantal life together.

We believe that the church is longing...
• for a revitalization of healthy missional congregations;
• to see more diverse, gifted, passionate, and engaged leadership collaborating for the mission of Jesus Christ;
• to stimulate the creation of new worshipping communities to live out the gospel to a world in need;
• to strengthen the bonds of congregational covenants;
• to exercise creativity for developing new models of a shared life of discipleship in a post-Christendom context;
• to trust one another more.

Toward a Vibrant Picture of Post-Christendom Presbyterianism

We want to catalyze the church to see with new eyes. We want to encourage faithful ruling and teaching elders to engage in collaborative works of missional artistry. We call upon the Spirit to inspire new visions of vibrant missional congregational life that faithfully witnesses to the gospel of Jesus Christ in a post-Christendom world. We invite ruling and teaching elders to converse and experiment around two pivotal questions of our time:

• What does a vital missional congregation in a post-Christendom context really look like?
• What leadership, structures, and covenant relationships will enable those missional congregations to flourish?

In this report, we see ourselves as “stretching a larger canvas,” creating a “strong frame” of constitutional oversight, and inviting congregations and presbyteries to engage in collaborative, contextual, and provisional creative experimentation. In addition, we have provided the “colors” of vibrancy that are already being used in the church—models that have been given generously to all of us from different places where experimentation is already occurring and have drawn attention to the spaces in the canvas where more work is needed.

We have listened to the church. We have learned from experts. We have talked and prayed long. We have discovered much to share. In addition to two significant recommendations, we offer reports, raise issues, and make five additional recommendations to further the peace, unity, and purity of the church in a world that is rapidly changing—which is where we begin.

The changing cultural context, the shifts that middle governing bodies are themselves already making, and a new domestic mission frontier all make this the right time, God’s time for us to examine the role, function and form of presbyteries and synods. (From the rationale of the charge to the General Assembly Commission on Middle Governing Bodies, Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 275)

In such a situation of profound change, it is no surprise that the ecclesial structures developed for Christendom appear to have less relevance after Christendom. Darrell Guder

Like all mainline Protestant denominations in the United States, the PC(USA) feels like a church in crisis. For at least four decades our numbers have diminished at a steady rate. We desperately hold on to dying congregations and yet fail to see the imperative need to plant new communities of faith. What we now call mid councils—presbyteries and synods—feel like relics of the past. Created for a different time, we are incapable of supporting their lumbering bureaucracies today. Our biennial General Assemblies are locked in endless battles over regulations and persist in making social proclamations to which no one seems to pay much attention. We wonder if it is possible to maintain unity in the midst of great diversity, and we have no clear sense of what that unity might actually look like.

Christianity is like a river with many branches. Like others before it, the Presbyterian stream could run its course. It could disperse into nothing. Its water could run dry. But, it is just as likely that this stream will experience a resurgence of living water. For many, this is a time of hope and new life. It is a time of emergence and the birthing of new ways of being Christian—perhaps even new ways of being Presbyterian.

A Denomination in Decline

It is well known that practically every mainline Protestant denomination—and increasingly, many of the evangelical denominations—has experienced a significant decline in membership and overall strength since the middle of the 20th century. The experience of the PC(USA) is consistent with this overall trend. The membership of the PC(USA) is now half of what its predecessor denominations were in 1965, a loss of more than 2,000,000 members.

In 2008, as the PC(USA) celebrated the 25th anniversary of Reunion, the denomination had experienced a net loss of almost 1,000,000 members since the 1983 merger, from 3,131,228 to 2,140,165. By 2010, our membership had further dropped to 2,016,091—a decrease of almost 36 percent over the course of twenty-seven years. Though the rate of decline is less severe, the number of PC(USA) congregations has also dropped from 11,662 in 1983 to 10,560 in 2010, a loss of nearly 9.5 percent. In every year since Reunion, we have lost more congregations than we have gained.\textsuperscript{11}

For the congregations that remain, the situation is often dire. We are an increasingly aging denomination, with a median age of 61. The average size of PC(USA) congregations has been significantly reduced over the past quarter century. It is now the case that half of all congregations have a membership of 100 or less.\textsuperscript{12} During this same time, average worship attendance has also dropped significantly.\textsuperscript{13} The percentage of these shrinking congregations that can afford to employ an installed pastor has decreased dramatically. In 2010, 44 percent of PC(USA) congregations had no installed pastor.\textsuperscript{14}

The reasons for this overall decline in church membership are often debated. Though a widespread assumption persists that denominational controversies cause people to leave their local congregations, research has long demonstrated that this is not the case.\textsuperscript{15} Membership losses among all mainline Protestant denominations have been steady and consistent for half a century, regardless of particular leaders or particular controversies.

Presbyterian statistician Jack Marcum has suggested a variety of explanations for the decline of the PC(USA), all of which ultimately come down to the fact that every year we lose more members than we gain. Low birth rates are a significant cause.\textsuperscript{16} It is also the case that we lose more members to transfers than we attract.\textsuperscript{17}

Most significantly, however, is the reality that we are not reaching out to newcomers or investing in new church development.\textsuperscript{18} As a denomination, across all geographic areas, we are not planting enough new faith communities. Between 2000 and 2010, only 226 new churches were chartered.\textsuperscript{19} This is simply not sustainable. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) of the 21st century must be a denomination that encourages and nurtures new church development.

Diminishing Resources

What the membership decline of our denomination means for mid councils is clear. Though individual financial giving to congregations has steadily increased since Reunion,\textsuperscript{20} the sharp decline in membership has created significant funding problems for presbyteries and synods. For years, we have depended on human and financial resources from local congregations to fund and provide leadership for these middle judicatories. As both types of resources are increasingly strained at the local level, it is obvious that there is less and less available to sustain the older bureaucratic models of church governance.

Unsustainable Bureaucracies

The evolution of presbyteries as the characteristic feature of Presbyterian polity in the United States is an important element of our contextual understanding. Presbyteries as we know them today developed from ecclesial institutions \textsuperscript{21} in Calvin’s Geneva that were responsible for church order, discipline, ordination of ministers, continuing education, mutual encouragement, and missionary work. Joseph Small notes that while order, discipline, ordination, and mission have prevailed as the major responsibilities of presbyteries, theology and mutual encouragement are no longer central. “Without the corporate engagement of pastors and elders in biblical, theological, and ecclesiological inquiry, ecclesial order is easily bureaucratized while discipline is either ignored or factionalized.”\textsuperscript{22}

Small goes on to describe how church judicatories became governing bodies, which were quickly bureaucratized in parallel with the bureaucratization of American society in the middle of the 20th century.\textsuperscript{23} In the 1970s, presbyteries were further transformed into mission agencies and were expected to carry out mission of their own, rather than function primarily as support for the mission of local congregations. Over time these bodies became complex and cumbersome bureaucracies.\textsuperscript{24} Synods became equally bureaucratized and program driven. At both levels, the demand for professional staff—predominantly drawn from teaching elders—contributed to the gradual clericalization of the church as the role of teaching elder eclipsed the role of ruling elder.

This approach to mid councils made sense and actually worked quite well for an American society that valued bureaucracy and the organizational models of the corporate business world. At the time of these developments, the church had enough members to sustain such complex structures. But in today’s globalized world of flatter organizational structures, and with the realities of a much smaller and less resourced church, these bureaucratic and program driven mid council models are anachronistic, burdensome, and unsustainable. In response, most mainline Protestant denominations are moving away from centralized bureaucracies to flatter, more fluid structures.\textsuperscript{25}

The Quest for True Parity

A central element of John Calvin’s ecclesiology was the rejection of clericalism. By instituting the ecclesial offices of elder and deacon, Calvin broke down the distinction between “clergy” and “laity.”\textsuperscript{26} It follows, then, that the basic structure and polity of Presbyterianism in the United States demands parity between what have traditionally been called teaching elders and ruling elders. At the time of Reunion, these traditional titles were changed to minister of the Word and Sacrament and elder. This change in language, along with the gradual bureaucratization of middle governing bodies, led to the very kind of clericalism that Calvin intended to avoid—pastors were considered true ministers and elders were relegated to supporting roles.\textsuperscript{27}
The return to the traditional titles of teaching elder and ruling elder in the new Form of Government represents a desire within the church to reverse this clericalizing trend. However, without accompanying structural changes to bureaucratic mid councils, the idealism of parity between teaching elders and ruling elders will remain impractical.

Ruling elders must balance their ecclesial commitments with the demands of their careers and the general busyness of contemporary life. Many functions of mid councils are being carried out by volunteers instead of paid staff because of diminishing resources and budget cuts. This means longer and more frequent meetings in already tight schedules. Additionally, taking time off from work for church meetings is much less acceptable in today’s culture than it was in the past. Does true parity exist when participation in mid councils is understood as part of the job description of teaching elders but ruling elders are forced to either take time off from work or not participate at all? Are we able to ensure representation from younger professionals, hourly wage workers, and single parents?

As we will see, parity between teaching elders and ruling elder is consistent with the values of emerging generations. Can we develop structures and practices that move this parity from a professed ideal to a lived reality?

_Differences, Divisions, and Conflicts_

As we have already noted, research demonstrates that denominational controversies are not, as many often assume, the primary cause for membership losses in mainline Protestant denominations like the PC(USA). Nonetheless, we must consider the realities of the “_post-10-A_” world in which we now live. After decades of conflict, congregations dissatisfied with recent changes in ordination standards are leaving the denomination and/or considering the creation of new Reformed bodies.

When the process of Reunion formally concluded in 1991, rumblings of discontent were quick to surface when a seventeen-member Special Committee on Human Sexuality produced a controversial report called “Keeping Body and Soul Together: Sexuality, Spirituality, and Social Justice.” Although the General Assembly did not approve this report, its reverberations were felt across the denomination. While this was not the first time human sexuality was addressed by the General Assembly, it did mark the beginning of a long and sustained season of open conflict about the issue. Six years later, when the “fidelity and chastity” clause was added to the _Book of Order_, the matter was far from settled. Division and dissension increased with every subsequent debate and vote on ordination standards, leading up to and including the 2010 General Assembly approval of Amendment 10-A, which replaced the “fidelity and chastity” clause, and its eventual ratification by a majority of presbyteries in 2011.

Two realities of this twenty-year period of conflict and constitutional maneuvering need to be reckoned with. First, while faithful Presbyterians were engaged in meaningful mission and ministry to a broken and hurting world, the success of these endeavors was often overshadowed by persistent denominational controversies. Second, as our denomination experienced significant declines in membership, it has been difficult to address new ways of approaching ministry in a rapidly changing world while being continually engaged in internal theological conflict. As a result, polarized factions within the church are now ill-equipped to work together as an effective church for the 21st century.

Our biblical and theological traditions exhort us to dwell together in Christian unity. This unity should serve as a witness to the world, pointing people to Christ’s vision of God’s kingdom. Unfortunately, discord and disunity are more typical characteristics of our public witness. Though our theology and polity encourage unity, we are increasingly incapable of sustaining significant relationships across party lines.

Nonetheless, it may be that our discord more accurately reflects _failed institutional practices_ than a disregard for Christian unity. Our polity is guided by parliamentary procedure and the processes of constitutional emendation, both of which rely on divisive debates and polarizing votes. This approach assumes that it is possible and desirable for the church to arrive at a single conclusion that will resolve a given conflict. We have relied on _conflict resolution_ rather than _polarity management._

This method has not served us well. Resolving differences on important, complex, and controversial matters is not accomplished through parliamentary procedures. Biblical and theological discernment has become a competitive and political process in which there are always winners and losers.

Denominational structures and practices aimed at achieving a singular stance on a controversial issue is a remarkably mono-cultural approach during an era marked by commitments to multiculturalism, diversity, and pluralism. Is it possible for a multiplicity of Christian perspectives on controversial issues to exist within a single church? Is it possible to develop structures and practices that allow Presbyterians to express with integrity diverse biblical and theological commitments?

When it comes to theological differences within our denomination, human sexuality is only the tip of the iceberg. Some have even argued that these differences constitute distinct religious traditions and cultures that cannot be reconciled. Whether that is true or not, without creative and flexible structures and practices, we will continue to wage battles designed to decide winners and losers. In the end, we will all lose.

_Multiculturalism and Racial Ethnic Representation_

Diversity and multiculturalism are professed values of the PC(USA), but it is clear that this is still not our reality. Even though, in relative terms, racial ethnic minorities are growing while the white majority is decreasing, we are still an overwhelmingly white church in terms of membership and culture. In this respect, the church is not keeping up with demographic and cultural shifts within the wider American society. Census Bureau projections indicate that by 2050 current minorities will become the majority in the United States.21

Is our church capable of adapting to this new reality? How can we be intentional in the development of ministries that reflect the multiethnic and multicultural composition of the United States? What kinds of structural models can be developed in order to ensure the full participation of racial ethnic constituencies in all the councils of the church? How can we grow as a multicultural church that ministers effectively to and with first generation immigrants as well as second and third generations whose language, cultural characteristics, and worldviews are becoming different from their predecessors?

Beyond racial diversity, religious diversity is also becoming more and more pronounced in American society. Yet Robert Wuthnow has exposed how poorly American Christians are doing at engaging this growing pluralism.21 At macro-levels of Christian theology and in local expressions of Christian communities, it seems that interreligious dialogue and cooperation have been more idealistic than experienced in reality. While our laws protect against religious discrimination and promote religious freedom, our cultural engagement with diversity has been superficial at best and mired in ignorance at worst. Christian leaders and congregation members have survived, in part, by burying their heads in the sand and ignoring the diversity that is growing around them. Yet this is becoming less and less possible as populations of non-Christians grow ever more numerous and involved in public discourse. Wuthnow challenges religious leaders, especially those in the dwindling Christian majority, to develop more effective and meaningful ways of interacting with the religious diversity of our culture.

Expanding our focus to global realities, Philip Jenkins has chronicled how the historical locus of Western Christianity in Europe and North America is being supplanted by the exponential rise of Christianity in the global South, especially in Africa, Latin America, and Asia.22 The long-held dominance of Europeans and North Americans in global Christianity is a thing of the past and, given trends in both the Western world (in which Christianity is waning) and the developing world (in which Christianity is flourishing), this seems unlikely to change in the future. The post-Christendom reality of Christianity in the United States, about which we will say more below, is no longer simply a matter of the disestablishment of mainline Protestantism and the dwindling sense of influence and relevancy the church has in public discourse. Rather, our post-Christendom status has been reduced even further. Not only has mainline Protestantism lost its place in American culture, we have lost our dominance in Christianity around the world. A telling reality check in this regard is the 2011 vote of the National Presbyterian Church of Mexico to end its 139-year mission relationship with the PC(USA).23

In addition to getting its own house in order, the PC(USA) needs to figure out its identity as a minority communion within the wider body of global Christianity.

Living in the “Posts”

Human beings have a tendency to view our history chronologically. More specifically, we tend to think of history diachronically (that is, through time) rather than synchronically (one period at a time) or synoptically (all at once). We most often consider our present with respect to our immediate past. We outline history as a succession of periods, realizing, of course, that the boundaries between periods are often fuzzy. Living in the midst of massive cultural change, it is now common to understand ourselves as living in a variety of “posts.”

Post-Christendom

For centuries, Christian religion and culture dominated the Western world. This was especially true in American culture up through the middle of the 20th century. But this is no longer the case. Christianity in general—and, for Americans, Protestantism in particular—is no longer the definitive center and shaper of culture. “Christendom”—the triumphal reign of Christianity in Western culture—is over.

Theologian Douglas John Hall provides a concise summary of cultural shifts that help us understand this development.

Many influences have brought about this historiographic change: the decline of Christianity in the West; the decline of the West itself; the failure of the modern vision; the new consciousness of their own worth on the part of non-European people; a critical perception of the technological society on the part of many who have experienced its most advanced forms; the impact of religious and cultural pluralism, especially perhaps in North America; and (not least of all) the self-criticism of serious Christianity, its recognition of its own questionable triumphalism, of patriarchalism, of the equation of the Christian mission with Euro-American imperialism and so forth.24

For mainline Protestant churches like the PC(USA), this means that we are no longer part of the cultural “establishment.” We must struggle for visibility and battle numerous competing institutions and elements of popular culture for the interest, time, and resources we used to take for granted in our membership. Sunday morning is no longer sacred time in American society. Across the country, Presbyterians rarely represent a significant percentage of local populations.25 Our influence in the public square is greatly diminished. When our General Assemblies make bold public statements about social issues, we wonder if anyone is paying attention.

Missional theologian Darrell Guder helps us understand the structural implications of these shifts for a denomination like the PC(USA).
In such a situation of profound change, it is no surprise that the ecclesial structures developed for Christendom appear to have less relevance after Christendom. Whereas at one time it was the task of presbyteries, as one expression of a Christendom structure, to ensure that the church carried out all its duties in a region, there may now be better ways of doing that.

Like all mainline Protestant denominations, the PC(USA) must come to terms with what it means to be a post-establishment, post-Christendom church in the 21st century.

Post-Denominational

At the same time as Protestantism in general has lost its cultural cachet, the appreciation of distinct denominational identities has become less critical to the average American Protestant. The great variety of Protestant denominations in the United States is the result of both theological and ethnic differentiation among European peoples who settled on this continent. As these groups continued to develop with time, as cultures mixed, as people moved throughout the country, and as populations shifted from the relative isolation of rural communities to highly concentrated urban centers, denominational identity has become less and less important. In the contemporary marketplace of religious options, in which there are negligible costs—financial or cultural—for switching between congregations and faith communities, denominational affiliation is no longer the primary reason people choose a particular church. “Brand loyalty” is no longer a compelling factor in the growth or success of a congregation.

In his compelling essay on the theology of denominations, Barry Ensign-George reminds us that denomination is a “middle term between congregation and church” that “binds congregations together in formal patterns of mutual life.” Ensign-George defines denomination as “a contingent, intermediary, partial and permeable embodiment of the church which binds together multiple congregations in a shared commitment to live together in a particular pattern of common life which is built on shared decisions about theological adiaphora and essentials.” While previous generations may have balked at words like “contingent” and “permeable,” it is exactly this more fluid understanding of larger church life that must be at the center of any discussion about the PC(USA)’s self-understanding as a denomination in a changing world.

What does it mean to be a Presbyterian denomination in this larger post-denominational cultural context? Are there in fact distinctive features of our form of Christianity that will— or should— persist in this era? How much can we change and adapt before we stop being Presbyterian? Does that even matter anymore?

Postmodern

Perhaps the most misunderstood “post” in which we find ourselves is the radical shift from modernism to postmodernism that characterized the 20th century and continues to shape the 21st. In fact, this monumental “post” is at least in part responsible for the other “posts” we have considered. In the postmodern era, the multifaceted ways in which Western culture was transformed by the Renaissance, Reformation, and Enlightenment have been called into question. New ways of perceiving the world and our place in it have taken root. As a waning fixture of a Western culture that is being dramatically reshaped, the church must come to terms with what postmodernism means for our expression of the gospel.

Embracing the Pathos of Our Situation

Having surveyed a variety of ways in which the context of mission and ministry is rapidly changing, we must recognize that this is a kairotic moment for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Walter Brueggemann, who has suggested that exile is a fitting metaphor for the situation in which the U.S. church now finds itself, describes the embrace of pathos as a critical moment in the exercise of prophetic imagination. “How,” asks Brueggemann, “can we have enough freedom to imagine and articulate a real historical newness in our situation?” His answer lies in the embrace of pathos and the willingness to engage the very real possibility of our own demise.

Brueggemann notes that we have a remarkable propensity for numbness about death. Apathy—the absence of pathos—characterizes our attitude toward the institutions that we rely on for order, security, and meaning. We refuse to recognize failure. We cling to familiar patterns and structures. We want to pacify our grief and reassure ourselves that everything is going to be okay.

Prophetic imagination cuts through these tendencies and brings us face-to-face with the realities of our situation. In order to move us into a place where we can envision new realities, we must first confront the sobering realization that our current trajectory is leading us to death.

When some in our church suggested that our denomination is “deathly ill,” many reacted with defensive protests that there is still plenty of life and vitality in the PC(USA). Anecdotal evidence, drawn from positive experiences in thriving congregations and with faithful people, is offered as a counter-narrative to the “deathly ill” diagnosis. We hold fast to evidence that God is doing good things in our midst.

But we cannot let these legitimate signs of God’s Spirit moving throughout our church obscure the equally evident reality of our slow but steady demise—a “doomsday scenario” based on a statistical projection suggests that our membership could shrink to zero in just twenty years. We must hold these realities together in creative tension. For all of our genuine vitality, there are also critical indications of death. Our declining numbers, aging congregations, diminished resources, and debilitating conflicts cannot be ignored any longer. We must not move too quickly to obscure the grief of our situation with comfort or hope, as important as these are. We must embrace the pathos associated with admitting that what we are doing is not working.

More bluntly, we must admit that we are dying in order to experience rebirth.

A New World

As it turns out, observers of both culture and religion have been eagerly reporting that now is in fact an era of change, rebirth, and emergence throughout Western and global culture.

Change is happening to us, whether we initiate or not. The multifaceted impact of globalization has flattened our world in a way unprecedented in human history. Networks of innovation and adaptation we cannot see enmesh us in complex connections through such systems as stock markets, gas prices, and global disease. The human condition cannot be understood locally or nationally, but only globally. Web 2.0 and wiki culture have changed the way we collaborate and innovate across the globe. Hierarchies and bureaucracies are being eclipsed by flat, decentralized, and egalitarian organizational models. Within these emerging networks of relationships and collaboration, imagination and experimentation drive innovation in new and exciting ways.

Various suggestions have been made for how we might understand the intersection of these cultural revolutions and the church. In a recent analysis of American Christianity over the past 200 years—a relatively short period of time that has seen remarkably quick and far-reaching change—Doug Pagitt divides our history into four successive periods: the Agrarian Age, the Industrial Age, the Information Age, and what he calls the Inventive Age. Most pertinent to our discussion is the transition from the Information Age to the Inventive Age, which Pagitt describes as a shift from being consumers of information to producers and participants. If the Information Age was characterized by television and the mass consumption of information on the internet, the Inventive Age is typified by Web 2.0, wiki culture, and social networking. “The Inventive Age is one in which inclusion, participation, collaboration, and beauty are essential values. It is the age of ownership and customization and user-created content.”

Phyllis Tickle has developed an influential stratigraphy of Christian history which suggests that every 500 years the church engages in a cultural and ecclesiastical “rummage sale” that sifts through the dead and dying elements of the past en route to a new expression of life and faith. The latest of these, in the midst of which we currently find ourselves, Tickle labels the Great Emergence.

As Tickle narrates it, the Great Emergence began in the 20th century with the publication of Albert Einstein’s “Special Theory of Relativity,” followed by Heisenberg’s “Uncertainty Principle.” These revolutionary concepts changed the way we think about the world by pointing out that the very act of observation changes the object being observed. An analogous development in literary studies called deconstruction suggested that truth is also relative and dependent on the act of interpretation. All the while, rapidly accelerating technological advances and unprecedented changes in family structures and gender roles were radically changing American culture. In some respects, the hierarchal and centralized structures of midcentury Protestant denominations grew in response to this destabilization of traditional American life. But as these denominations experienced post-Christendom disestablishment, traditional religion was greatly challenged. “Spiritual but not religious” became a popular alternative, an alternative that Reformation Christianity was not prepared to engage.

Emerging Church Responses to Our Changing World

In some cases, the church has reacted to these shifts in defensive or fundamentalist ways. In other cases, the church has tried to change and adapt along with the rest of the world, recognizing that these changes are not threatening or challenging, but liberating and life-giving.

Hierarchal and bureaucratic forms of ecclesial structures are giving way to network theory and crowd sourcing. Bounded-set understandings of church membership are being replaced with center-set approaches. Philosophically and theologically, narrative is taking priority over logic. All of these can be understood as Christian adaptations to the changing contexts of our flat, networked, postmodern, post-Christendom world.

Theologian Tony Jones suggests a variety of ways in which the still developing emerging church movement is reconciling Christian faith and practice with the changing world. In descriptive statements that Jones calls “dispatches from the emergent frontier,” one can recognize specific reflections, responses, and adaptations to the changing contexts of our world. Here are some of the dispatches most pertinent to our inquiry, paired with concepts from the changing contexts we have discussed.

What can Presbyterians learn from these innovations? To be sure, in pockets of the PC(USA) the emerging church movement has already taken root and is yielding creative new ways of being church. But how might this movement inform our project of reimagining the structure of our denomination at the mid council level?

Geography Isn’t What It Used To Be

In our flat and networked world, geography does not mean the same thing it once did. Transportation, information, and communication technologies have redefined how we answer the timeless question, “Who is my neighbor?”

As we consider what it means to be Presbyterian in a flat, networked, post-Christendom world, we must be open to expressions of connectionalism that neither Calvin nor the founders of American Presbyterianism could have possibly imagined.

Theologian and historian Craig Van Gelder addresses how this changing reality intersects with Presbyterian polity.

“A key turn in the missional church conversation has been its shift toward focusing mission on every congregation’s immediate context rather than on some distant community. This remains a pivotal impulse. Yet the geographical focus of the missional church on particular places in which churches are located must be complemented by consideration of the non-geographical character of community life today. The question, who is my neighbor? is now much more complex. It is not enough merely to focus on an immediate geographic neighborhood. If one does, one will likely discover that the neighbors’ tightest relational networks may span hundreds of thousands of miles. Building relationships with neighbors and participating in their lives and living spaces must engage virtual, as well as physical forms of community. … The classic Christendom pattern of the geographical parish must be rethought for churches in the west that are inheritors of the state church traditions from Europe (Roman Catholic and mainline denominations in particular). One the one hand, the parish concept points toward a particular locale as a focus for missional participation … On the other hand, the natural flows of community life are often no longer primarily neighborhood based.”

According to Van Gelder, our polity must take into consideration the changing nature of our relationships. What was once assumed—that neighbor meant proximity—is much more complex in a flat and networked world. People of all generations now maintain relationships across vast distances. Churches develop meaningful partnerships in countries around the globe.
the world. As the world becomes at once more connected and more distant, the church needs to live into and help shape this reality for the cause of Christ.

From Changing Contexts to New Models

This section of our report has attempted to summarize as succinctly as possible the incredible ways in which the contexts for mission and ministry in which we find ourselves are rapidly changing. Perhaps never in the history of the PC(USA) or its predecessor denominations has so much changed so rapidly, demanding new forms and methods of being church. As we move on from our assessment of changing contexts to new models, we suggest the following questions as guides and evaluative tools.

- Will our models help us reach emerging generations?
- Will our models support new church development?
- Will our models help us manage the polarity of our church?
- Will our models help us become a truly multicultural church?
- Will our models ensure representation and support of racial ethnic minorities?
- Will our models be flexible enough to adapt (reform) in anticipation of continuing, rapid change?
- Will our models nurture connectionalism and relationships in a flat, networked world?
- Will our models enhance true parity between ruling and teaching elders?
- Do our models reflect a missional ecclesiology?
- Will our models enable participation, creativity, and innovation?

Our commission offers a response to these questions arising from this changing context.

A Church (and a Commission) in a Rapidly Changing World

The American Protestant church is in a wholesale struggle about what it means to be a denominated group of Christian believers … Doing traditional functions in new ways is likely inadequate. Eileen Lindner

Beyond the congregation, however, mainline Protestant institutions are in a state of deep crisis and desperately in need of renewal. After this journey, I am more convinced than ever that if American religious institutions are to regain their spiritual grounding, they will need to listen to and learn from the spiritual practices of local congregations. Diana Butler Bass

How does the church truly regain its understanding of itself as called and sent, remembering that the term mission means, in fact, ‘sending’ (see John 20:21)? How does the church move beyond the idea that Christian identity is basically a geographical or cultural or organizational concept? Darrell Guder

If western societies have become post-Christian mission fields, how can traditional churches become then missionary churches? Lesslie Newbigin

As we have already demonstrated, we are living in a moment of rapid, intense, global and cultural change. Every sector of public and private life—every institution, every organization and, for our purposes, every church—is facing a moment of intense transition. (Indeed, even our commission was renamed in the middle of our work because the denomination adopted a new Form of Government.) In this report, the Mid Council Commission of the 219th General Assembly (2010) sought to answer one looming question that was at the heart of our very formation: “How are governing bodies best organized to be responsive both to the Spirit of Christ and changing opportunities for discipleship?”

To answer this question, the Mid Council Commission offers two bold recommendations that will require the engagement and assent of the whole church and changes to our Constitution. This is not a quick fix. Nor is it anything near a final or perfect answer. But these recommendations alter the way we address our deepest challenges and engage the church in processes of learning and reinvention that could shape the church for decades to come.

From our conversations, readings, and reflections, we offer a variety of perspectives and recommendations for creating the conditions that will equip the whole church to create councils and support congregations who winsomely proclaim and demonstrate the gospel and mission of Jesus Christ in the world.

The rationale for the creation of our commission also asked a second question that guided us in our pursuit of an answer to the first: “Are the structures of history the best platforms for carrying our mission into the future?”

Our response is a clear “Yes and No.”
Yes, the theological, ecclesiological, missional, and relational structures that make up our Presbyterian tradition and ethos are exactly the platforms we need for carrying our mission into the future. Our commitment to the mission of Jesus Christ, our passion for collaborative and relational connectionalism, our rich theological history, our hard-won wisdom for including all voices and perspectives are the cultural and identity structures that indeed provide the foundation for our mission.

No, after extensive listening to the church, consulting with experts from the fields of theology, history, polity, and sociology, after reading both deep and wide in the lessons of change that are coming out of every institution in the world today, and after considering the changing contexts in which we live, we can say clearly that the structures of mid councils (formerly middle governing bodies) and the institutional mental models that they have been based upon (especially in the regulatory and institutional era of the just past century) are not adequate for the “changing opportunities for discipleship” that engage and challenge us today.

We believe that the changing cultural contexts of our day require deep adaptation as opposed to anxious striving for simple solutions. Our proposal creates the conditions for adaptive change at the mid council level—change that is consistent with our theological values and for the express purpose of revitalizing missional congregations in a post-Christendom world.

Scholars and practitioners of adaptive change call for an approach that has large-scale, group learning as the core practice. As disciples (literally, “learners”) of Jesus Christ, this is an expression of our most treasured identity. Adaptive change requires creating organizational “safe holding environments” where experimentation and risk taking can take place. As members of communities founded on the grace and forgiveness of God, this is familiar terrain. Adaptive change requires group transformation in order to address our greatest challenges. It addresses underlying and competing values, and especially “giving the work back to the people who are most affected” to experiment with new approaches for addressing their biggest challenges.

If we can recapture our own conviction that, as theologian Emil Brunner stated, the essence of the congregation is the fellowship of believers who are joined in love for the mission of God in its local context, then the essence of the presbytery is the covenant relationship of those congregations, (which Darrell Guder helpfully defines—and will become our working definition—as “Covenant Communities of Missional Congregations”).

Further, if the essence of the presbytery IS the covenant relationship of the churches that are joined together for missional ends, then exploring and experimenting with the practices and possibilities that arise from this understanding will be at the heart of any faithful and lasting adaptation.

In Jesus Christ, who is Lord of all creation, the Church seeks a new openness to God’s mission in the world...As it participates in God’s mission, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) seeks...a new openness to see both the possibilities and perils of its institutional forms in order to ensure the faithfulness and usefulness of these forms to God’s activity in the world (F-1.0404)

As we have listened to the church, we heard considerable yearning in every layer of the church’s life, from ordained officers to frustrated folk in the pews, to see these deeply shared biblical convictions flourish once again:

- To discover practices and ways of being church in a post-Christendom context.
- To engage in evangelism that sees people come to faith and be baptized as followers of Jesus Christ.
- To experience more relational and less regulatory ways of being connectional.
- To focus on mission to the world not denominational fights.
- To plant new congregations, to birth new worshipping communities.

We believe this is the voice of the Spirit in the church and we contend that if every structure of our church is committed to the health and vitality of local congregations as the locus of God’s mission in the world, then these convictions will become the practices that bring revitalization.

So instead of affirming structures that only protect us from the dysfunction of a few, we offer a proposal for the “maturing, motivated, and the missional”; that is, those who are willing to work together to draw upon the historic values of our past and faithfully reinterpret them to engage a far different world than any of our forbearers imagined.

Maturing

By this we mean that we need structures for lifetime learners, for continually adapting disciples, for those who are restless to keep pressing on, growing, discerning, surrendering, and humbly staying open to the word of God and the voice of the Spirit. We need structures that give freedom to fail and encourage self and communal expression. We need structures that will call us to live in mutual submission and growing trust as we grow in wisdom, understanding, faithfulness, and fruitfulness. We need structures that adapt to and accommodate those who are committed to building trust through transparency, accountability, and congruence of belief and life. We need structures that allow for both clearly communicated convictions and the patience to respectfully be with others who we believe are in error. We envision many more structures where the system honors, values, rewards, invests in, and even adapts to those who are willing to take responsibility for shaping the healthy and the good; permission-giving structures that are built around shared agreements, covenants, values, and convictions rather than around top-down enforced alignment.

Motivated

Creative people in presbyteries all over the country are experimenting and innovating—aligning around shared missional passions and faith convictions—giving a fresh expression to their deepest beliefs. We are constitutionally called to be an elder-led, context specific, collaborative church. While we need regulations that enable us to fulfill our fiduciary responsibilities, provide accountability, and ensure that all decisions that are made are consistent with our theology and polity. We also need room to try new things, to affirm risk-taking, and to give space for discernment. We need structures that reward passion and motivation; that generously celebrate innovation; that respectfully collaborate in one creative leap of faith after another; that encourage big risks, big failures, and the deep learning that comes from them.

Missional

Missional congregations are those where the central organizing principle is personal and communal participation in the mission of God in Jesus Christ to redeem and heal all of creation. To be a missional congregation means that the discerned calling of a community of believers to serve in the world as Christ’s witness is the result of their gathering, worship, and sending. To be a missional PC(USA) means that we live in the conviction that every structure beyond the congregation exists so that congregations can fulfill their mission.

In today’s culture, many are weighed down by endless debates, issue politics, and suspicion of other’s motivation. The church is hindered from being missional within this environment. As a result, many congregations and councils are not thriving because they have turned inward, focusing on survival.

If there is one clear missional conviction that is growing into a chorus of shared enthusiasm throughout many diverse contexts in the church, it is making a fundamental priority of new church development. A church-wide initiative envisions 1,001 new worshipping communities. We contend that number is way too low. Can we imagine mid councils that would enable us to conceive birth, nurture, and mature new generations of missional worshipping communities? How would seminaries and other entities charged with the development of leaders support this conviction?

At the heart of adaptive change is the requirement to “give work back to the people most affected.” We believe that the constitutional changes we propose are an expression of the conviction that health and vitality, faithfulness, and fidelity will only come about through more congregational engagement, more personal responsibility-taking, more passionate convictions, more freedom and creativity within safe, clear shared boundaries than ever before. We must have structures that encourage adaptation toward health and missional faithfulness, toward those who are willing to keep maturing, who are motivated to take on the mantle of calling and personal responsibility by continually re-engaging and re-committing to each other, and who are from start to finish utterly committed to the missional principle of the local congregation as the primary locus for participating in the mission of Jesus Christ in every context.

To that end we offer these questions to encourage this larger conversation:

- What if presbyteries were formed and shaped by diverse and multi-dimensional relationships and missional convictions with the purpose of serving missional congregations?
- What would it look like, what would change, how would we reconfigure our presbytery life if the very essence of it was relational, communal, and covenantal?
- What if the only purpose of regulations (which are indeed necessary) was to safeguard those defining values?
- What would it look like if we had structures that encouraged each congregation to discern whatever configuration of presbytery would nurture its unique and shared missional calling as it lives its life in mutual submission to other congregations?
- What would be the possibilities for presbyteries shaped around specific callings, including birthing new missional communities, the unique challenges of a particular context, or shared partnership in specific mission endeavors?
- What if we allowed change for our denomination to come NOT only from a centralized strategy of a General Assembly Commission, but instead from every locale of the missional frontier, the congregations and presbyteries that are actively engaged in the mission of God in particular contexts?
In To Change the World, University of Virginia sociologist, James Davison Hunter, wrote, Change is often initiated outside of the centermost positions. When change is initiated in the center, then it typically comes from outside of the center’s nucleus. Wherever innovation begins, it comes as a challenge to the dominant ideas and moral systems defined by the elites who possess the highest levels of symbolic capital.

For true lasting change to occur (even within an institution) those in the “center” and those “outside of the center” must be engaged in the conversation.28 It is the interaction of the margins and the center that creates the new possibilities. And it is exactly that interaction—and the lively experiments that would come from it—that we recommend become the primary work of the church for the next season.

For a generation of Presbyterians who were reared on political, regulatory, and institutional approaches to problem solving, this recommendation will stretch us tremendously. We will need to develop the capacity to learn from our rich diversity; to have hard conversations about competing values and often unspoken issues that keep us from health and growth; and mostly to trust each other enough to attempt innovative experiments—many of which will likely fail—in order to find successful adaptations that will take us into our future together.

Historian and President Emeritus of Union Theological Seminary, Louis Weeks said, “No group of Christians has adaptation more in their DNA than Presbyterians.” We concur. A tradition that reconceived a communal function for what had been “bishops”; that adapted its polity from the European church-state models to a completely new context in a then new country; and rethought and reproduced its core values in numerous diverse contexts worldwide through its mission endeavors, has the capacity to revitalize itself for a post-Christendom and increasingly post-denominational context.

In his book on “the natural history of innovation,” Steven Johnson writes about the “adjacent possible.”29 The “adjacent possible” is the new innovation, the new discovery, that is only possible by first taking one step, or making one decision. The only way to get from the phonograph to the iPod is through a series of steps. Innovation does not come through giant leaps, but through one trial-and-error attempt at a time.29 That first step leads to more possibilities that could not otherwise happen, like how opening one door into a hallway offers more doors that could not be seen from the previous room. The “adjacent possible” also always allows for the possibility of returning back through the one door we have passed through and trying a different option.

Our proposal invites the church to live into the “adjacent possible.”30 It invites us to be a people who together take wise, deliberate “provisional” steps; who experiment with ways of being together, who “try on” relationships, who make temporary covenants without fully leaving behind the historical, geographical connections that have shaped our polity to date.

Steven Johnson’s contention is that all innovation is “the story of a gradual but relentless probing” of what could come next given the pieces and parts at our disposal. We advance, he writes, “by taking available resources and cobbling them together to create new uses.” So, while the condition we find ourselves in is dire, our capacity for change has never been greater. As we will show you, not only is our situation urgently in need of all the wise creativity we can express, but the “available resources” available to us are significant, indeed.

Becoming a Community of Missional Artists, Architects, and Collaborative Designers

Perhaps the greatest capacity for transformation is our people. Our proposal soberly affirms and joyfully celebrates that the most important work necessary to reinvent the church for a post-Christendom context will not be found in our structures. It is sobering to know that we cannot make the transition to a fully engaged, contextually effective, faithfully missional, post-Christendom church through an act of a commission or even a General Assembly. Transformation requires large numbers of people to begin to act differently.

We have been privileged to be in a long, passionate, and expanding conversation with Presbyterians across the geographic, cultural, and theological spectrum. We joyfully contend that there is a holy restlessness throughout the church—indeed a growing frustration—to embrace the challenge of our changing context of our world as the calling of our generation. We believe that restlessness and frustration is the work of the Spirit that is calling forth “missional artists, architects, and collaborative designers” to work together to re-create the church for the next generation.

To that end we offer these suggestions discerned from our commission conversation with a restless church.

Reengage the Pew in Presbyterian Shared Life, Mission, and Governance

Can we envision a day when a presbytery gathering might be the most valuable and anticipated meeting in the life of a congregation? Can we envision what it would take for Presbyterians to so personally experience the depth, vibrancy, and community of shared life with other congregations in a presbytery that the most engaged, committed, and creative elders would lobby to be in presbytery leadership? Can we envision a time when the jokes about “committees” will fade into the background and Presbyterians will be known for our commitment to a shared life that wisely combines mission, governance, and community in effective and edifying ways?
We believe that we have the potential to see this kind of life and vitality if mid council leaders would truly embrace, listen deeply, and reorganize their life together for a clear purpose: to reengage “the pew” in the shared life, mission, and governance (in that order!) that is the Presbyterian tradition.

Since most presbyteries are served and supported by an older generation of elders and pastors who understand a shared obligation to “connectionalism,” there is indeed a crisis of leadership and participation in many presbyteries across the country. Stories of the difficulties of finding people to serve on committees, garnering volunteers to serve as representatives to General Assembly, and “recruiting” younger elders and pastors to take on any role beyond the congregation are legion. For a generation of Presbyterians who have used per capita, mandatory meetings with roll call attendance, and mandated terms of committee service to “fuel” the structures of mid councils, it will take significant amounts of creativity and persistence to reinvent presbyteries as communities and gatherings that are valued for what they bring to the congregation and how they stretch all of us to see beyond ourselves.

We need presbytery life that offers both the wise fiduciary and ecclesiastical accountability we require (and value the most according to our data!), as well as being “balconies” offering those “on the ground” a greater perspective of Christ’s work in the world than any one congregation can provide. Presbyteries need to be understood and experienced as a “covenant community” that shares the mission of mutually strengthening missional congregations. Presbyteries need to reconsider every program, every project, and every asset with one clear mandate: Does it engage, equip, and serve the congregation as the expression of the mission of God in its local context?

We have long celebrated the beauty of shared leadership between “elders” and “ministers”. With the adoption of the new Form of Government, the primacy of “elders”—both ruling and teaching—as a genuinely collaborative and complementary form of shared leadership has been reaffirmed. We concur wholeheartedly and believe that if presbyteries were to develop practices, styles, and leadership functions that are shaped demonstrably and witness completely to our deeply held value of shared rule by both teaching and ruling elders (indeed, we long for the day when we will only speak of “elders” without having to distinguish between the two!), we will see not only the development of wise structures of presbyteries but also revitalized missional congregations.

In addition, even the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council need to be reviewed as to how their practices serve presbyteries in their mission to serve congregations. Over and again, stories were told about the pervasive distrust of General Assembly, about the amount of resources that go into our six-part structure, the lack of an effective and clear national strategy toward immigrant populations, and the ways in which the GAMC “competes” with presbyteries and synods for giving dollars. A flatter hierarchy with a focus on the congregation as the center of the mission of the church will not be complete until the church reconsiders the bureaucratic structures of GAMC and eliminates any competition for power or resources between the GAMC and OGA. These conditions foster a bureaucratic mentality at a time when we need to do get back to mission and ministry, doing “whatever it takes” to revitalize local congregations. It is not within the purview of commission to make such recommendations, so we call on the 220th General Assembly(2012) to establish a task force to review the nature and functions of the General Assembly offices and departments in light of the charge given to us.

Growing in Cultural Proficiency to Engage an Increasingly Multicultural Context

… As it participates in God’s mission, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) seeks … a new openness in its own membership, becoming in fact as well as in faith a community of women and men of all ages, races, ethnicities, and worldly conditions, made one in Christ by the power of the Spirit, as a visible sign of the new humanity... (Book of Order, F-1.0404)

Perhaps the greatest potential for church-wide transformation beyond a Christendom context is the deep commitment to valuing the rich diversity of the church. Diversity is our strength. We can and must develop and deploy this strength with wisdom and ability. Our proposal calls for deliberate decision making about structures that will ensure that our commitment to racial ethnic advocacy and inclusion is strengthened in a less structured, less regulated era. In addition, we call on the church to develop our “cultural proficiency” (a process that focuses on organizational transformation and individual transformation) in every level of the church’s life.

Cultural Proficiency derives from the work of Terry Cross, a First Nation clinical social worker, who observed that European American clinicians in the center where he worked were not providing competent care to their Eskimo and First Nation clients because they were not taking into account the cultural perspectives and experience of the people they were working with. As a result, Cross developed a set of tools to help people understand and respond more effectively to the differences between them, and some of those tools for understanding Cultural Proficiency are in Appendix 3.

Thus, Cultural Proficiency is about valuing diversity in people for the gifts they bring to the culture of an organization and the interactions between individuals. The tools of cultural proficiency work towards better self-awareness, clear articulation of core values, and a process that results in positive, effective interactions among the people and the systems of a diverse environment.
Cultural Proficiency acknowledges that patterns of oppression are embedded in the structures of organizations. Without direct intervention and intentional efforts to change, organizational cultures perpetuate systemic patterns of oppression, even where individuals within the organization do not intend to discriminate or marginalize those who do not belong or participate in the dominant culture.

Cultural Proficiency also acknowledges that change does not happen overnight, that people and organizations move on a continuum from highly exclusive and oppressive organizations and behaviors to highly inclusive organizations and behaviors. It is built on a foundation that aligns the principles of inclusivity in diversity with the core values and mission of the organization. It also acknowledges that organizations are resistant to change and that the causes of resistance must be taken into account and addressed openly in order to bring about cultural transformation within an organization.

The goal of Cultural Proficiency Initiative is to transform the organizational culture integrating the best of organizational practices and church values so that it becomes and serves as a model for a healthy church.

As we grow in cultural proficiency, we envision that without exception, all of God’s children will be able to contribute their given gifts and talents thus leading to healthier, more faithful expressions of the gospel of Christ in and through our congregations.

We envision that our facility to engage new immigrant communities and those communities who have long been marginalized will be strengthened. We believe that we will better discern practices and approaches to ministry and structures of governance, accountability, and support that will enable us to engage an ever expanding mission field of possibilities.

We charge all sectors of the church to a commitment to grow in Cultural Proficiency to engage a rapidly multicultural world into enriching and expanding each others’ cultural experience. As a result we shall be able to better express the beauty of the gospel of Christ which calls all of us to be participants.

Develop Capacity to Lead Congregational Transformation

Perhaps the most crucial element to reinventing the church for a post-Christendom age is the lack of transformational leadership capacity within the church as a whole. Over and over again, the single biggest factor cited both positively and negatively focused around the ability and strength (or lack) of leadership in local leaders. Most of us have been trained for stewardship of Christendom congregations, but the changing conditions of the day require different leadership capacities. The church needs to work with seminaries, committees on preparation for ministry, and General Assembly entities to transition the processes for leadership preparation from a Christendom stewardship model to a post-Christendom leadership-as-transformation model. Executive presbyters (EPs) need to become mentors in change leadership. Ruling and teaching elders with gifts in congregational transformation need to be identified and called into roles as EPs, mentors, and advisors. We need to avail ourselves of and learn from those in other fields who are already in the middle of organizational transformation. We believe that this next season of experimentation will serve to develop the transformational leadership gifts of a whole new generation of church leaders. Different contexts challenge us all to learn how to lead differently.

Rebuild Trust

“Regulation cannot do what the loss of trust has undone.” Cynthia Bolbach, Moderator of the 219th General Assembly (2010)

Of all the “non-structural issues” that we have identified, perhaps the single greatest gift that this commission can raise up for the church is to say as loudly and as clearly as we possibly can that there is a crisis of trust in our denomination and that it, more than anything else, is the single greatest threat to the vitality and future existence of the church.

Congregational leaders don’t trust presbyteries. Presbyteries don’t trust synods. Synod leaders see themselves as the “breakwater” protecting the church from the General Assembly (which might be the least trusted system of all.) As the report from our commission’s Racial Ethnic Strategy Task Force states, “Also prominent in the commission’s polling of the church were the expressions of deep and abiding mistrust–fueled by a general absence of meaningful connection to the national, regional and even local judicatories.”

We do not believe that this is due to any individual persons acting in any particularly egregious and untrustworthy ways. Indeed, we believe that the great majority of General Assembly, presbytery, and synod staff members and leaders are trustworthy people. But the system itself fosters mistrust.

Generations of attempting to solve problems by constitutional fiat have left us without the ability to build relationships with those who deeply disagree with us. We have trusted that our membership in presbyteries and synods, and our participation in council deliberative processes and committee assignments, would be context enough to build trust. Once again, a reliance on compliance with regulation has not only sapped our creativity, it has made it impossible for us to give ourselves enough “room” to trust each other again. Indeed, at the center of the commission’s own work of deliberation was a commitment to transparency through our entire process. We have used media, including social media, to engage in a conversation with the entire church. We have traveled many miles, engaged in numerous conversations, and listened deeply to people who disagree with each other (and often ourselves!) about the causes of concern and the potential future of the church. We have engaged people from across various spectrums in a conversation with full disclosure, even taking our most provocative proposals to the church before the final report was finished to allow input. Within the commission itself, we have come to realize that, for the sake of the mission, nothing can substitute for taking the time to build relationships, work through conflicts, and get beyond the stereotypes that we each bring into any circumstance. Indeed, we needed to learn to trust each other enough to become comfortable with discussing, debating, and finally deciding to bring even these proposals to the church.

Perhaps the greatest effect of our proposals is that it will by necessity bring the church closer. Now, for congregations to have more flexibility they will necessarily practice discernment within both presbytery and General Assembly processes. While the flexibility to experiment comes with built-in mechanisms to ensure relational and constitutional fidelity, the true test of our trust will come as we allow room for others to create presbyteries that are different than our preferences and maybe even contradictory to our convictions.

Barry Ensign-George offers “theological friendship” as a different possibility for nurturing the rebuilding of trust. Theological friendship is based on the conviction that in conversations both about and with the Triune God, we are brought closer to each other through transformation. This is not the result of regulation or polity, but intentional spiritual practice. Trust, like friendship, takes time to cultivate and flourishes in the “space between created differences.” Ensign-George encourages us to hold on to the values, and live in the relational realities of both diversity and compatibility as an opportunity for continued transformation as a spiritual practice to which we willingly and, yes, voluntarily enter in. “Communities of theological friendship flourish through diversity and a wise attention to compatibility … Communities of theological friendship recognize the need for diversity that genuinely stretches and the importance of willingness to join in a shared journey with a particular group of people.”

As Ensign-George reminds us, this very practice of trust-building through friendship could become an act of witness to a deeply divided world. “Theological friendship, which is to say, incorporation into friendship with Jesus Christ, is what we are empowered to offer to a world rife with disconnection’s long and deadly reach (even in our world that prides itself on being connected!).”

The Confession of 1967 has this poignant line: “The quality of their relation with other persons is the measure of the church’s fidelity.” Trust is the life blood of a community. Without rebuilding trust we will never have the quality of relationships that we desire. We are under no illusions about the sorry state of trust in our denomination and know that our proposals will not pass through the assembly without it. We also believe that if we engage in this provisional presbytery experiment, we will need to trust each other more than some of us think possible. We hope that even the conversations about our recommendations will be a spur for rebuilding the trust to truly enable us to be a dynamic missional denomination again.

The Reports

Our Process

Our commission convened via conference call on October 14, 2010, to inaugurate our oversight of the Special Committee of Administrative Review, Boriquen (SCARB) and to give a brief orientation for the commissioners. Our first official commission meeting was on November 4–6, 2010, in Baltimore, Maryland. At that meeting we agreed that our commitment to the church would be:

- To be a listening commission…
- To be an experimenting commission…
- To be a discerning commission…
- To be a transparent commission

Over the next fifteen months we convened meetings in Orlando, Seattle, Indianapolis, and Dallas; we learned from church experts on demographics, history, polity, and theology; we invited executive and general presbyters from around the country to offer us perspective; and we engaged some of the most creative leaders in the church to share their observations and learning with us.

In order to listen to the broader church, we contracted with Presbyterian Research Services to conduct surveys and gather data from a wide swath of the church; we conducted focus groups in every synod, at every large denominational event, and in consultations with group of executive presbyters, synod executives, the GAMC, and the OGA Executive Team. In addition, we had smaller group consultations with representatives from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, the General Assembly Committee on Representation, and a host of conference calls with specific focus group constituents. (See the next section for more details.)
From the very beginning, our commission endeavored to create a transparent conversation with the entire church. We used social media and blog postings to reflect back to the church our observations, we traveled extensively throughout the country to engage in discussions, and we called upon church leaders, theologians, and historians to help us gain perspective. In addition, we looked at models in other denominations, consulting especially with the City Classis of the Reformed Church of America, and invited two mid council leaders who had recently led reorganization teams in their respective mid councils to share their insights.

For the better part of a year, we listened. Consultations were held in every synod. A survey was developed and phone consultations with diverse demographic groups were provided by Presbyterian Research Services. Additional consultations, conversations, and presentations were conducted by commission members for Big Tent, NEXT Church Conference, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the Executive Committee of the General Assembly Mission Council, The Association of Executive Presbyters, The Clerks Conference, The Moderators’ Conference, the Synod Executive Forum (twice) as well as consultations with representatives from Synod of the Pacific, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii, Synod of the Northeast, and a number of individual conversations with presbytery and synod leadership.

A summary of the data collected from these listening sessions is provided in next section and the full data reports are in Appendix 4. At the same time, we charged a group with doing even more research into the changing context of our world. Both brought substantive reports to our Indianapolis commission meeting.

At our final two commission meetings, in response to these reports, and in the interim between, with considerable discussion, debate, and time for discernment between commission members and with leaders in the larger church, the recommendations that are included here took shape.

Looking (and Listening) Deeply: Data and Discussions

The mandate from the 219th General Assembly (2010) required the administrative commission to:

…consult with sessions, presbyteries, synods, and the wider church on the mission and function of middle governing bodies. Such a process should include

a. current diversity in the role and functions of middle governing bodies,

b. demographics and financial realities that affect the role and function of synods and presbyteries.

c. the role of each governing body in its oversight role—presbyteries of congregations, synods of presbyteries, and General Assembly of synods—both historically and in present experience.

d. relationships with General Assembly agencies in role and function.” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 212 of printed copy, pp. 274–75 of the electronic version)

In order to fulfill this mandate, the commission contracted with Presbyterian Research Services (PRS) to conduct surveys of session, presbytery, and synod leaders, and to gather data from focus groups including leaders of large and small presbyteries, young pastors, African American, Hispanic/Latino, American Indian, Middle Eastern, and Asian American church leaders. The data design also included an “open invitation” survey for individuals from all over the denomination to provide input for administrative commissioners to consider.

In addition to these formal research activities, a team of two commission members met in consultation with each of the sixteen synods, and members of the commission personally interviewed participants at the following events: The Big Tent, two Board of Pensions regional meetings, the General Assembly Mission Council, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and the Coordinating Council of Korean American presbyteries.

All of these data were provided to all commission members, and a summary report was presented to the commission prior to their consideration of proposed models or changes in the constitution. The data collected in this process is voluminous, and summaries of the data are contained in Appendix 4. In response to the mandate from the 219th General Assembly (2010), this report will summarize the data reported in the four mandated categories.

Current Diversity in the Role and Functions of Middle Governing Bodies

The PRS survey assumed that diversity meant demographic diversity, when the intent of the General Assembly was diversity in role and function, not demographics. Nonetheless, the Models subgroup gathered a significant amount of data as to how presbyteries and synods are currently operating in the current context. These data are more helpful to this mandate (please see the following report, “The Colors of Vitality: Trends and Attributes in Transformational Presbyteries”). It may be helpful for this report to note that while presbyteries and synods operate in vastly different ways depending on whether they are highly urban, highly rural, small or large, the differences relate primarily to form, not function. All presbyteries and synods seem to retain the same functions and roles, in keeping with the Book of Order, but how those functions are carried out varies widely throughout the denomination.
Demographics and Financial Realities That Affect the Role and Function of Synods and Presbyteries

When session members were asked to rate their presbytery membership and leadership for how well it represented the racial ethnic, age, economic, rural/urban, size, and theological diversity demographics of their churches, most participants responded that the representation was “effective.” When asked to assess the size of their presbyteries, 58 percent of respondents reported that their geographic size was “about right” and 64 percent reported that the number of congregations was “about right.” Size and demographic realities of either presbytery or synod did not seem to be big issues among the participants in the various surveys and focus groups.

In contrast, financial realities were a significant issue. Seventy-two percent of presbytery leaders reported that their finances have decreased in the past five years, and more than half of presbyteries predict continued reduction in revenue, programs, membership, and attendance in the next five years. Insufficient funding and lack of support from congregations were listed by presbytery leaders as two major obstacles to accomplishing their mission. Sixty-eight percent reported that worship attendance had decreased in the past five years. Two-thirds of synod leaders believe that presbytery giving to synods will decrease in the next five years, and only one-third of presbytery leaders report that their relationship to the synod was “excellent” or “very good.” About half of synod and presbytery leaders are familiar with their council’s budget, but 77 percent of presbytery AND synod leaders feel that less per capita should go to synods.

The PRS survey asked presbytery leaders whether congregation support was an obstacle, but in our consultations we heard very clearly that the question that most needs to be asked is: How does the presbytery support the congregation?

The Role of Each Governing Body in Its Oversight Role—Presbyteries of Congregations, Synods of Presbyteries, and General Assembly of Synods—Both Historically and in Present Experience

When asked how supportive presbyteries have been to congregations, only 30 percent of session members responded “very” or “a little supportive,” suggesting that most session members do not see presbytery as highly supportive of their congregation. The highest scores in this arena were for support when congregations are in crisis (40 percent either “very” or “a little” supportive). This would suggest that when congregations need an outside influence, presbytery is there and is generally supportive. Otherwise, presbytery plays a very minor role in the life of the congregation.

When survey participants were asked what roles or functions their presbytery carried out most effectively they (very generally) rated fairly high the ecclesiastical responsibilities such as review of records, ordaining and receiving ministers, electing commissioners, working with candidates, and having a nominating committee (40–45 percent). They are less positive about presbytery’s role in initiating new programs, visiting with sessions, and providing a strong vision for area Presbyterians.

Only about one-third of sessions provided an opinion on the question, “which term best summarizes your congregation’s relationship with the synod” over the past two years? Indeed, more than half responded “not enough contact on which to base an opinion” (52 percent; another 12 percent are “not sure”). Of those with an opinion—36 percent of the total—only 21 percent responded either “excellent” or “very good.” One of the clear themes of the conversation data (synod consultations and conversations at other “events”) was that although connectionalism is highly valued, there is also a sense that the communication between the governing bodies is a major problem. The governance structure is seen as a hindrance, and participants longed for more focus on mission; less on rules. When participants were asked, “What is working well in middle governing bodies?”, the most common response was “no response.” Of those who did respond, there was clear support for racial ethnic ministries and the programs and processes that support pastors, both in the call process and in their ministry. The comment, “We’re better at closing churches than at planting them,” seemed to sum up the frustration with rule-based processes vs. the messy work of evangelism and relationships. There is frustration with presbyteries that care more about their projects than they do their congregations.

No empirical data were collected related to the historical roles of each governing body. Members of the commission perceived that one of the changing contexts in which the church is living is the notion that congregations should support a large bureaucracy. In today’s world, congregations are more inclined to wonder how their per capita dollars support their own ministries, not the larger bureaucracy of which they are a part.

Relationships with General Assembly Agencies in Role and Functions

In multiple conversations with synod executives, the lack of trust and consternation with the General Assembly organization and structure was repeatedly articulated. Indeed, some synod executives believed that one of the primary roles of synods was to be a “buffer” between presbyteries and a meddlesome and unhelpful General Assembly structure.

From the PRS report:

Majorities of sessions and leaders report that [they]… had related in some way with three of the six General Assembly agencies in the past two years: the General Assembly Mission Council, the Board of Pensions, and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation.
Almost all leaders (96%) also report relating with the Office of the General Assembly, though only 35% of sessions do so.

A majority of sessions report an “excellent” or “very good” relationship with only one agency, the Board of Pensions (60%). The next highest “excellent”?/“very good” total is 44%, for the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. At the low end, with 26%, is the Office of the General Assembly. …

Many more presbytery and synod leaders than session members used “excellent” or “very good” to describe the relationship between their entity and each General Assembly agency.

The concern about these data is that the questions were answered in ways that assumed the role and function and focused on the quantity and quality of the relationship (e.g., “Has your synod/presbytery/session related to the Board of Pensions in any of the following ways in the last year?” and “Which term best summarizes your relationship with the agency?”). The issue of role and function was not addressed.

Data Informing Commission Decisions

As will become evident, clearly, the data that most impacted the decisions of the commission were those that relate to the synod as a council. The data from the consultations with the synods showed that the number one change desired by respondents was to either re-define or eliminate the synod as a “governing body.” Of sixteen synod reports, nine listed “change or eliminate synod” as a primary theme in the responses of the attendees. This refrain was also heard from the Big Tent event, Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, General Assembly Mission Council, and Board of Pensions meetings. Combined with data from PRS that indicated synods should receive less per capita and that the average session member has had no connection to synod, the commission felt that there was a clear mandate from the denomination to reconsider the role that synods play.

A second area where the data led to commission action was the role of synods related to racial ethnic ministries. When asked what is working with middle governing bodies, the most common response was either a blank or “nothing.” Nonetheless, of those who responded positively, most reported that the work of racial ethnic ministry was a positive aspect of synods. The commission recommendation regarding racial ethnic ministry is a direct result of these data.

To a lesser but not unsubstantial degree, the recommendations regarding presbyteries were also influenced by the data. The data showed that few session members saw the presbytery as a partner in their ministry. Presbyteries were generally seen as regulatory agencies. Many participants in the consultations made comments about inverting the pyramid and calling for all church councils to focus their energy and resources on the vitality of local congregations. By allowing churches some choice in their connectional relationships, one hopeful outcome is more accountability on the part of presbyteries to the health and satisfaction of their member churches.

Finally, the commission’s recommendation regarding a review of General Assembly agencies came very directly from the data that show a serious disconnect between session members and the GAMC or OGA. It was also heavily influenced by the synod executives’ comments about playing the role of “buffer” between presbyteries and the General Assembly.

The Colors of Vitality: Trends and Attributes in Transformational Presbyteries

The Mid Council Commission mandate includes developing “models that reflect the roles of middle governing bodies in our polity and the changing context of our witness.” Initially the commission endeavored to learn about emerging models in presbyteries and synods with a track record of success that could be recommended to the whole church. Members researched a variety of councils both within the PC(USA) and in a few international bodies. It quickly became apparent that there are considerable experimentation across the church, however with the pace of change many of these endeavors are so new that they are just coming off the drawing board and others are continuing to adapt. While the commission had some thought that it would be possible to develop models for different sizes or types of presbyteries or synods, it became clear from conversations with mid council leaders and from data gathered that councils that reflect emerging trends were very conscious of their particular context, culture, function and need for discernment about how God might be at work in their midst.

The very concept of “models” is problematic because it suggests that a presbytery or synod could simply copy a standard form and succeed in meeting the needs of a changing society and church. Steve Yamaguchi, presbytery pastor in Los Ranchos Presbytery, spoke to the commission about the importance of councils “learning to learn” so that they are continually exploring new paths and adapting to a rapidly changing environment. The commission has concluded that the desire for “models” is an expression of the desire for technical solutions, for generic answers to challenges the church faces, when such solutions do not exist. This is not to say that councils cannot learn from one another’s experience. On the contrary, the commission wants to lift up emerging trends, celebrate the creativity of many mid councils, and offer these many good models as ‘tools’ for other’s creative use, and encourage all councils to reflect on how they can engage in adaptive conversations reflecting on their particular circumstances, calling, challenges and possibilities.

Consequently the commission first calls the church’s attention to the following trends in healthy presbyteries and synods:
Emerging Trends

- The number one shift in presbyteries is to a new focus on support of congregations as the primary agents of mission in the world—that is, instead of seeing themselves as "doing mission" and supporting mission programs, they are putting most of their energies and dollars into supporting congregations as they seek to engage in God’s mission. By the same token, the number one shift in synods is to support presbyteries.

- Presbyteries are intent on building relationships and developing a sense of community in the presbytery while a similar trend can be seen in some synods.

- There is a renewed emphasis on deepening the spiritual life of presbyteries and encouraging spiritual practices in congregations.

Related to the focus on serving congregations is a demand for excellence in ruling and teaching elders—for lifting up the spiritual leadership role of ruling elders, encouraging pastors to participate in ongoing spiritual formation and learning new skills in congregational transformation.

- Presbyteries and synods are experimenting with structures and patterns of decision-making—from down-sizing committees and staffing to using discernment practices or new technologies to connect people for meetings. Some presbyteries took a “sabbatical” for a time from all but Book of Order committee functions to see what emerged as important to renew or begin.

- As giving patterns in our culture have changed mid councils are seeking ways to respond—with different ways of cultivating generous stewards and/or encouraging people to give to their passions. They are attending to their fiduciary responsibilities while looking for new funding streams.

- Cultural shifts and in many cases declining financial support also push mid councils as organizations to let go of some ways of doing things—no longer offering a range of programs or providing staff to do the work of numerous committees or funding local social service agencies.

- Changing demographics are leading some mid councils to risk doing ministry in new ways to reach out to new immigrant communities and/or younger generations—new church developments, fellowships, and emergent worshipping communities may take different forms and use bi-vocational pastors, Commissioned ruling elders, or full-time organizing pastors. Presbyteries and congregations are conscious of the nature of their “mission field” and recognize that traditional forms of new church development may not be appropriate. The best efforts include developing “cultural proficiency” among present members of the presbytery so that they learn how “to interact effectively with people who differ from them” (“Cultural Proficiency: What Is It?” The Cultural Proficiency Group, Beverly Hills, Calif., 2003, p. 1).

The Tools for Creating Adaptive Mid Councils

As a commission, our deep desire is to see the whole church engaged in a wholesale process of reinvigorating congregations through reinventing presbyteries. In many places around the church today this process has already begun. The commission is convinced that what works in one presbytery (or synod) will not work in all their counterparts. There is no magic bullet, no “one size fits all” model, or even models that work for similar size mid councils. Just as congregations are unique, so are presbyteries and synods. There are a variety of factors that come into play for councils as they clarify their purpose and discover new patterns for engaging in ministry: context, size, culture, resources, leadership, etc. Instead of developing “models” that will not fit all situations or survive the test of changing times, the commission has identified components of models, an artist’s palette of primary colors that adaptive mid councils seem to take into account in shaping and painting the picture of their life. Each of these components of what might be a “model” is illustrated with a range of examples in the hope that presbyteries might use them as a palette of colors in a collaborative development of their own approach to mid council ministry.

Focus

In the changing context of the church and world, each presbytery needs to engage in a process of discernment, seeking clarity about its calling for this particular time. Mid councils are at different stages of this process, with some clearly recognizing that the effort to maintain comprehensive programs and mission can no longer be supported by diminishing resources and trends in voluntarism that value short-term, hands-on involvement over general giving. The commission’s research supports the conclusion in the new Constitution, that in addition to governance, the presbytery’s primary role is “assisting and supporting the witness of congregations” (Book of Order, G-3.0301). The missional character of presbyteries may look different as each one determines what is most important given its context, culture, and size. Presbyteries will each have a unique focus for their life—such as a guiding biblical narrative or image, an emphasis on spiritual formation, equipping healthy congregations, prioritizing missional theology, fostering community and accountability, promoting collaboration and partnership, and/or developing a virtual organization. The synods that are vital are recognizing new trends in the church and see their role as supporting presbyteries, focusing their energies and resources to that end.
The Presbytery of Hudson River developed its own discernment process beginning with a leadership retreat in which they learned about how the church and the world were changing. One of the questions they considered in small groups was what metaphors or biblical stories came to mind to explain their situation. The image of “dying and rising to new life” which surfaced that day has given them energy and focus for guiding their future. As a presbytery they now declare that they are “practicing resurrection with passion and partnership, in a changing world.” (In his book Holy Conversations, Gil Rendle provides a similar exercise congregations and presbyteries can use).

Lehigh Presbytery began work during an interim period clarifying their purpose and core values. Their explicit focus is on nurturing congregations, with the presbytery gathering as “communities for worship, spiritual renewal and Christian fellowship.” They called a teaching presbyter gifted in developing spiritual practices.

St. Augustine Presbytery recognized that it had to ask “who are we?” and “what are we to do?” before they could ask “how do we structure ourselves”; it was a shift from asking organizational to theological questions. The result is a commitment to strengthening missional congregations, developing new missional communities, and forming missional leaders, tasks identified by Darrell L. Guder, Henry Winters Luce Professor of Missional and Ecumenical Theology at Princeton Theological Seminary, in his writings about missional ecclesiology. The presbytery tries to live out three virtues: humility, reconciliation, and trust.

San Diego Presbytery has discerned that it has a “missional calling,” rooted in the experience of the early church sending people into the mission field (Acts 13:1–3). The presbytery went through a three-stage process that included working with a missional church consultant, Alan Roxburgh. It sees itself today as a learning community that is shaped by spiritual, missional, and relational factors. It chooses to take a permission-giving stance and cultivates missional imagination, innovation, creativity, and thinking outside the box. Reflection on Jesus’ words in John 20:21: “As the Father has sent me, so I send you,” is leading them to explore how to move back into the neighborhood, how to discern what the Spirit is up to, and how to participate in the mission of God today.

Context

The commission defines context as “who we are in relation to where we are.” Mid councils need to ask questions about where God has placed us and recognize the characteristics of our environment and times as relevant factors in shaping a presbytery or synod’s life and calling. What are the characteristics of the geography, how do natural boundaries divide or impact travel and relationships, how dense and diverse is the population, are there a variety of people groups or is it a fairly homogeneous region? How do economic factors shape life, is the economy stable, are there a variety of lifestyles and resources represented? How are societal changes impacting the nature of life in our communities and congregations? How is the presbytery or synod taking these factors into account, not as problems to be solved but as ways to discover the opportunities and possibilities for discerning identity and engaging in God’s mission?

Palisades Presbytery in northern New Jersey is in the midst of a rapidly changing context, with the growth of Asian and Hispanic/Latino populations in a three county area with 2 million residents in northern New Jersey. The presbytery reflects the multi-ethnic character of the region with twelve racial-ethnic congregations out of forty-nine, plus a Korean new church development, and four immigrant fellowships. For the past few years the presbytery has had a unique staffing pattern with three, part-time presbyters; one of the three is a multicultural presbyter to resource these congregations and to assist others to transform into multicultural places of worship. With increased financial pressures, the presbytery is now re-visiting the staffing plan.

Glacier Presbytery in Montana, by contrast, has 3,000 members in nineteen congregations across a broad geographic region. Members may drive eight to nine hours from its eastern to western borders making connections between congregations and members challenging. The presbytery has begun rotating committee and presbytery meetings between four clusters and holding meetings by teleconference on alternate months.

Baltimore Presbytery with 16,000 members in its large metropolitan context has become conscious of how its congregations have become disconnected from their neighborhoods so one of its new emphases is on reconciling with the community in ways that advance God’s reign.

Pacific Presbytery has long been conscious of its multicultural context and the realities of a changing world. It is intentionally seeking to encourage and promote younger leaders. The presbytery is using a two year stimulus grant from its synod to encourage young congregational leaders with ideas to revitalize their congregations.

Size

What is the “right” size for a presbytery or synod? Is it large enough to sustain mission but small enough to foster community and expect accountability? A majority of those surveyed believe their presbytery is the right size, yet the commission also heard concerns across the country about financial viability on the one hand and the importance of building relationships, on the other. Larger membership presbyteries often have the advantage of greater resources but need to consider how they establish community between congregations, and between teaching and ruling elders. Small presbyteries may experience community naturally but often struggle with how to support ministry with minimal finances. Size by itself is an insufficient means of evaluating a presbytery’s health or identity but it is a reality that needs to be addressed as presbyteries look to the future and consider emerging trends.

National Capitol Presbytery with its 108 churches and 32,000 members identifies itself as “Missional, Pastoral and Prophetic.” While it is addressing some financial challenges it continues to have resources for multiple staff and ministries. As part of its concern for pastoral well-being and a concern to build community, the presbytery requires pastors to be in a support/accountability group and name who “their own pastor” will be. Presbytery meetings are organized to promote conversation “with one another and the Holy One.” The emphasis is relational, focused on “the Lord’s Table not the Clerk’s table.” The committee on ministry hosts a dinner two to three times a year with the moderators of pastor nominating committees and new pastors where brief faith journeys are shared.

Santa Fe and Sierra Blanca Presbyteries together cover 90 percent of the state of New Mexico, with approximately 8,000 members in sixty-three congregations and two Hispanic new church developments. For a few years the two presbyteries explored how they might share leadership without merging. Together they called a regional presbyter to serve both presbyteries while each continues to have its own associate stated clerk. After experiencing this pattern for more than a year, when they began talking about the future, someone suggested that they create a new presbytery—not as a merger but by exploring what it would look like to start from scratch. A joint presbytery task force was appointed in 2011 with key leaders from each presbytery. A vision and values conversation at a joint presbytery meeting provided an opportunity for feedback and encouragement to continue the conversation, fleshing out more details. The process will continue into the spring of 2012 before the two presbyteries will consider voting on a proposal. While the process was initiated due to financial pressures and grief over losing some congregations, there is new energy and excitement as people sense that God is at work.

Cayuga-Syracuse Presbytery in upstate New York, by contrast, covers four counties with 5,323 members in forty congregations within about ninety minutes of one another. The presbytery engaged in a three-year process to look at the realities and possibilities of their decreasing size, human and financial resources. They decided to hire a transitional presbyter who has consulting experience to help the presbytery with the next phase of their vision and planning. The transition process is leading them to identify ways to rebuild community and become less staff dependent. A “Creation Team” appointed by the presbytery, evaluated policies, standing rules, and bylaws in order to develop and propose recommendations for how to carry out presbytery-directives. Over the next year the presbytery will move to a new leadership pattern with fifteen council members directing the work of presbytery, overseeing fiduciary responsibilities and Book of Order requirements, organized in a variety of ways. By the end of 2012 they will have a virtual office and the only staff position will be a combined stated clerk and web spinner. The transitional presbyter will oversee and resource the council as they move into this new way of being and then will step aside.

Culture

According to the handbook, Studying Congregations, edited by Nancy T. Ammerman, Jackson W. Carroll, Carl S. Dudley, and William McKinney, “Culture is who we are and the world we have created to live in. It is the predictable patterns of who does what and habitual strategies for telling the world about the things held most dear.” Students of culture look for patterns of life that give a community, a congregation, a presbytery, or a synod its identity. The handbook further explains that culture is not “who we always will be nor who we ought to be. It is who we are and all the ways in which we reinforce and recreate who we are.” Culture includes style, attitude, emotional climate, the gifts and passions of the people and congregations. The culture of a presbytery or synod should foster trust, build community among congregations, be conscious of and ready to adapt to a changing world and the needs of younger generations and new populations. In his article “The Travail of the Presbytery,” Joseph D. Small, recently retired director of Theology and Worship for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), argues for the importance of developing presbytery culture that is more relational and able to hold pastors and congregations accountable to one another. Some mid councils are working on developing a “virtual culture” that relies heavily on social networking and Go To Meeting types of technology, in order to be good stewards of time and resources, while still attending to relationships. Other councils emphasize a “sending culture,” to nurture, guide, and strengthen congregations for witness and service in their particular context, as described by writers such as Princeton University professor, Darrell L. Guder, and Paul Hooker, executive presbyter and stated clerk of the Presbytery of St. Augustine.

The Presbytery of Los Ranchos in Southern California is moving from a culture of “command and control” to one of “collaborating and connecting,” of recognizing the importance of being a missional learning community that is always “learning to learn.” The presbytery created an “Odyssey” group to define the purpose and function of the presbytery that resulted in “flipping the presbytery,” from expecting congregations to support the presbytery to a presbytery serving congregations. The process identified that the most vibrant conversations going on at presbytery meetings were happening in the narthex, so the Odyssey group asked what would happen if those conversations became the meeting. Now “open space” time during “presbytery gatherings” provide opportunity for people in the presbytery to offer a variety of voluntary learning and discussion forums open to all and organized by those who are present.
The Presbytery of Western North Carolina has a strong commitment to international and local mission through congregational partnerships. The region has a long history of supporting missionaries and is the home of Montreat Conference Center. The presbytery encourages congregational initiatives, assists with networking, and promotes projects. The presbytery’s stated focus is on congregational transformation, but it sees “strengthening churches to be faithful and vital witnesses to Jesus Christ” growing through mission partnerships and exposure to the lives of others. The presbytery’s history and culture of mission partnership supports the focus on congregational transformation which in turn generates greater vitality and mission.

The Presbytery of the Western Reserve values relationships between congregations and between members. For over a decade an email prayer chain has built community; cluster session visits and congregational partnerships are promoted; and, while imperfectly practiced, an attitude of “walking with” congregations is being encouraged, especially through its committee on ministry. As presbytery leaders began looking at how to implement a new focus on equipping congregations, a subtle but significant change came from reflection on Jesus’ words to his disciples about recognizing what they had and going into the crowd and feed the people. After years of seeing struggling congregations as “problems to be solved,” the presbytery has embraced as a core assumption, that “God has given each congregation a gift for ministry,” beginning a new approach to supporting vital congregations and being in community.

Function

In the new Form of Government presbyteries continue to have a number of important responsibilities. The focus groups conducted by Presbyterian Research Services for the commission identified support for congregations as the most valued function of presbyteries. Secondly, people cited the importance of pastoral care and accountability for teaching elders. The synod consultations and focus group respondents value and would not want to lose networking and collaboration. Rule-oriented administrative processes were least valued by respondents from various settings. Sessions gave high ratings for presbytery processes in orienting new pastors, review of records, and pastor accountability, but were less complimentary about missional aspects of their presbyteries. Nonetheless, two-thirds reported the presbytery had been supportive of their congregation in the last two years.

While all presbyteries have fiduciary functions, some approach those responsibilities by targeting the support of congregational vitality as their goal. This represents a shift from monitoring the life of congregations through the lens of rules and regulations to one that seeks to build healthy relationships both internally within congregations and between the presbytery and the congregation. As noted above, some presbyteries are making concerted efforts to develop spiritual practices, encourage excellence in ruling and teaching elders, and foster community, particularly among teaching elders. Several presbyteries are experimenting with patterns of decision-making, particularly to reconsider the purpose and format of presbytery meetings, reducing time spent on “business” in favor of worship, spiritual formation, theological reflection, or generative conversations. Two synods have moved toward more virtual practices of decision-making while focusing resources on presbytery needs.

Charlotte Presbytery sees empowering the transformation of congregations as its most important function and has attempted to direct its staffing, structure, and resources to that end. The presbytery is clear that all congregations need to be going through transformation and is intentional about supporting multicultural learning and new church plants with most new immigrants. The third largest presbytery in the PC(USA) with 130 congregations and 39,900 members, Charlotte addresses the challenge of developing relationships by organizing five regional committee on ministry cluster teams (COM cluster team) to serve all its congregations. Each COM cluster team has co-moderators and seven to ten members. Most committee on ministry responsibilities reside with the cluster. The Church Development, Leadership Development, and Mission and Justice committees actively work through the cluster teams to offer support and deliver resources. This system is designed to bring the presbytery to the pastors and congregations as well as encourage regional identity.

The Presbytery of Los Ranchos declares that “the presbytery is wherever two or three congregations are gathered to partner in mission.” It encourages the initiative of congregations and people with passion partnering for mission, instead of trying to maintain its own mission and program functions. The new format of presbytery gatherings compresses business to one hour and allows for people with common interests to network during the “open space” time. The presbytery council coordinates three teams: Administrative (resources and assets), Strategic (how to do mission), and Generative (which views the presbytery from “the balcony” raising challenges and opportunities). The Presbytery pastor moderates the council which acts as the steward.
Lehigh Presbytery, with its thirty-six worshipping communities, also places emphasis on strengthening and supporting congregations, but as a smaller presbytery it functions very differently with minimal staff leadership and resources. With some assistance from the synod, it supports a multiyear contract with missional church consultants working with clusters of congregations. Among the presbytery’s core values are affirming collaboration and partnerships; pursuing openness to new ideas and risk-taking; challenging individuals to discover their gifts. It models discernment and spiritual development through its gatherings. Each presbytery meeting begins with twenty minutes of Dwelling in the Word, a Bible reflection on the same Scripture passage for the whole year, which is also used by committees and congregations. They spend up to an hour in worship, an hour for education, and an hour for business. In 2011, the presbytery is engaged in studying Peter Block’s book, Community: The Structure of Belonging. Members of congregations who are not commissioners to presbytery are recruited to serve as “presence keepers,” to pray for the community as it meets, pay attention to dynamics and have a gong to call attention to something the body may be missing whether it is less appropriate behavior or pointing out something worthy of praise. They are intentional about hospitality and frame presbytery service in terms of “calling.”

The Presbytery of St. Augustine, covering nineteen counties in north Florida, reduced its committee structure by roughly 50 percent and reconceived the function of committees to exist as resources for ministries, not as ends in themselves. The presbytery council is empowered to carry out functions once done by separate committees: personnel, bills and overtures, review and evaluation, and worship planning. The presbytery assembly meets three times per year and includes worship with a guest preacher from outside the presbytery and a block of time for theological reflection with the business agenda at the end.

The five presbyteries of South Carolina hold one joint meeting each year and their presbytery executives meet monthly to nurture relationships across presbytery lines but within a geographic area that is less than one-third the size of their synod.

Structure

The new Form of Government recognizes the diverse contexts and needs facing mid councils. It identifies the basic responsibilities of a council yet gives permission for them to adapt their organizational design to fit particular circumstances. Emerging models are already moving toward alternative ways of making decisions and seeking ways to “flatten” or decentralize the organization. Presbyteries and synods are experimenting with different structures to fit their needs. Given cultural shifts in how people make time commitments today, many have reduced the number and size of committees, with some only having Book of Order mandated committees. Instead, some encourage mission initiatives through congregational partnerships, short-term ministry teams or networks of people with a common passion, networks, and more decision-making delegated to committees, commissions, or clusters of congregations.

Palisades Presbytery has gone through a major restructuring of committees and staff that “flattens” the organization and allows for broader participation. The presbytery formerly had divisions to provide programs to congregations and now has three roundtables:

Resources: assisting congregations with property issues, development, and funding;

Evangelism and Community Outreach;

Discipleship: includes Christian Education, spiritual development, youth ministry, training, and development.

Each roundtable includes three ruling and three teaching elders who are elected, yet all meetings of roundtables are “open” so anyone can attend. Agendas for roundtables are widely publicized. Each roundtable intentionally supports parity with co-moderators, a ruling and a teaching elder. The structure is designed to shift from a few people developing ideas for programs to an open opportunity for developing ways to resource actual needs in congregations.

Pueblo Presbytery in Southern Colorado has organized itself into four clusters of congregations across its 35,000 square miles as a way of building on the connectional, relational values they lift up in their mission statement. The clusters enable them to “learn to live together, live to love each other, and love to serve God.” All mission grants are determined by the local church clusters with each cluster sending advocates to the budget meeting. Through the clusters, the presbytery also developed peer learning groups for pastors using recommended books to help them grow as missional leaders. Accountability is taken seriously as the presbytery learns from the work of Paul Borden, author of Hitting the Bullseye and Direct Hit. The presbytery has developed a covenant process for congregations and pastors willing to commit to significant learning time and risk reorienting change; it has provided weekend consultations, workshops, and coaching.

Baltimore Presbytery has taken intentional steps to decentralize decision-making and encourage community among its seventy-two congregations and 16,000 members. A recent reorganization provides for three commissions to make decisions for the presbytery: Thriving and Reconciling Congregations, Spiritual Leader Development, and Presbytery Administration and Shared Witness. The presbytery council’s role is to oversee implementation of presbytery decisions and hold commissions and staff accountable. The Commission on Thriving and Reconciling Congregations will work through six ministry groups with twelve congregations each, enabling congregations and leaders to learn from and with one another and have a greater role in decision-making. Each group will be provided with $25,000 and one day a week of a presbytery staff member’s time. The committee on ministry will continue to carry out the examination and reception of incoming ministers on behalf of the presbytery.

_The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta_ engaged in a major re-visioning, restructuring process to address declining vitality and church membership. The process has resulted in an effort to move from an emphasis on gate-keeping and maintenance of a large structure towards a more permission-giving culture, focused on equipping healthy, growing congregations. The decision to shift the primary function and culture was tied to a dramatic reorganization. For years the flow of energy and effort was from congregations toward programs of the presbytery and higher governing bodies. The relatively new plan calls for staff consultants to work directly with congregations, ends the maintenance of myriad committees, eliminates staff support for committees other than _Book of Order_ units. The expectation is that networks of churches and people with passion for particular ministries will continue some work once done by committees and develop new initiatives.

Leadership

All presbyteries need effective leadership whether paid or unpaid. Good leadership is inspirational but is expressed in a variety of styles. In an era that calls for adaptive change, it is not resident “experts” who are needed, but leaders who can help the organization continually ask the questions that lead to vision, focus, and hope. We believe that the church will need to rely more heavily than ever on real parity of ruling and teaching elders, not as a matter of technical balance but as spiritual leaders with particular gifts, functions, and responsibilities. Efforts to identify, prepare, and support younger, multicultural leaders is a sign of a vital presbytery attending to contextual and cultural shifts. Trends in leadership development in emerging models point to the importance of framing service in terms of “calling” and willingness to pursue excellence. Presbyteries promote opportunities for spiritual formation, coaching, intentional exposure to new ideas and best practices, and the creation of learning communities that encourage mutual teaching and learning.

New patterns for staffing are evolving with economic pressures and the movement to prioritize support for congregations. Larger membership presbyteries continue to have multiple staff but may deploy them differently while medium and small presbyteries are looking for creative ways to function with fewer or minimal paid staff. Thoughtful councils, experimenting with greater use of part-time or contract staff, are trying to balance reduced personnel costs with concerns about how to reduce staff responsibilities and the ethics of providing adequate benefits and support for staff. Titles and roles of presbytery staff leaders also vary from presbytery to presbytery: presbytery pastor, connectional presbyter, transformational presbyter, presbytery leader or, more commonly, general presbyter or executive presbyter. The Presbytery of Southern New England recently changed the position description and title of its full-time executive presbyter to presbyter to the spiritual community. The position is described with the images of Sentinel, Midwife, and Tender of the New Vineyards.

_Cimarron Presbytery_ in Oklahoma has a ruling elder who has served for several years as a “dollar-a-year” executive presbyter as well as volunteer stated clerk and treasurer. They have minimal structure with a council and task forces. Their aim is to be responsive to what comes from the individual congregations. _South Dakota Presbytery_ has a similar pattern with a “retired” ruling elder serving as Presbytery administrator.

_The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta_, with more than 44,000 members in 108 congregations in urban, suburban, and rural counties, has redirected staff roles, replacing three full-time associate executive positions with two full-time and two part-time congregation consultants. In addition, several ruling elders are being trained as additional consultant/mentors. While eliminating some positions, the presbytery added a communications/technology position.

_Muskingham Valley Presbytery’s_ transformation includes implementing a nominating process with clear criteria, communication of high expectations, and consideration of spiritual gifts for people serving presbytery committees and ministries. A number of ruling and teaching elders have received training in specific congregational processes so that they can serve as consultants.

_The Presbytery of Great Rivers_ in Illinois encourages internal leadership rather than “outside experts.” Great Rivers has a pool of funds to enable ruling and teaching elders to provide particular services to congregations such as ways to “go green” or assist with writing church information forms.

Several presbyteries, among them: Giddings-Lovejoy, Genesee Valley, Eastminster, Western Reserve, and Philadelphia have recruited and trained coaches to work with pastors seeking to improve their resilience and creativity for ministry or with congregational groups in the midst of transformation. _Detroit Presbytery_ has trained leaders to serve as “healthy congregations” coaches.

Not all models are successful. _The Presbytery of Northern New York_ experimented with dividing the presbytery into three geographic deaneries. The design called for each deanery to elect an elder or minister of Word and Sacrament from within the deanery to serve as dean for a term of three years. The purpose of the deanery and the mission of the dean was to help churches thrive by identifying resources to solve problems, celebrating individual congregations’ identity and contribution, and further relationships. The deans were not to do the work but to help congregations and pastors to do the work to which God called them.
The deans were accountable to a council of deans including two members each appointed annually by the committee on ministry and presbytery council. An annual covenant agreement between the deans, the council of deans, and the presbytery set the year’s responsibilities and compensation. Although this model has not continued in this particular presbytery, a variation of it might work in another setting and so it’s worth applauding and sharing their effort to be creative.

Financial Viability:

How much money is enough? How much do you need “to run” a mid council? In the present economic climate and given declining membership in many congregations, mid councils are looking at what kind of financial assets they have, how to allocate them and expand their revenue streams. Financial challenges are creating a sense of urgency and openness to change, prompting mid councils to seek ways of being more effective with less, building a better stewardship environment and a theology of abundance. Some are discovering that limited resources can foster innovation and drive opportunities for partnering with other presbyteries or organizations. Size, context, functions, leadership needs, and realities are part of the process of determining priorities and looking for synchronicity and “the possible.” While some presbyteries are reducing paid staff or experimenting with leadership models that address their context, others are deploying staff to work out of coffee shops, copy centers, and cars rather than maintaining office space. A number of presbyteries report dealing with significant financial challenges in supporting camp and conference ministry: a few presbyteries partner to support a camp and conference center, others have turned their camps into separate 501c3 entities responsible for their own management, and some have sold their camping facilities setting aside funds to use for outdoor ministry. Long-standing programs, camp maintenance, and aid to agencies and congregations are being reconsidered as presbyteries focus increasingly on equipping missionally and congregational mission partnerships. There are a number of experiments underway as mid councils clarify their focus, set priorities, and consider options.

Mid Kentucky Presbytery has focused on developing new faith communities, immigrant ministries, and deepening the presbytery’s prayer life. To address financial realities the presbytery is reducing its office space to enough for one administrative assistant, with the expectation that continuing staff will work from home or coffee shops, to prioritize resources for outreach to new populations.

The Monmouth and New Brunswick Presbyteries in New Jersey are beginning a shared leadership model by calling a regional presbyter. The new partnership will reduce overhead to enable mission. They continue to be two presbyteries, each retaining its own stated clerk, distinct culture, functions, and structure. In the process of working together on the position description for the shared regional presbyter they recognized that they did not want an administrator but someone who could assist them with vision and equipping leaders.

Three presbyteries in New York—Utica, Susquehanna, and Cayuga-Syracuse—share bookkeeping and financial services; those three presbyteries and Albany Presbytery share some staff. In northeast Ohio, two associations of the United Church of Christ share one office for communications, financial, and other administrative services while Regional ministers (similar to executive and associate executive presbyters) work from home or a small shared satellite office.

Charlotte Presbytery seeks to be effective stewards of its resources. Numerous educational efforts have been attempted to raise awareness of the importance of the presbytery’s mission and ministry. Appreciation of the presbytery’s work has been regularly documented, yet income from local churches has continued to decline. By policy, revenue from closed churches has become immediately available for church development. This revenue source, carefully utilized and managed, has permitted the presbytery to avoid untenable financial crisis. At the same time the presbytery continues to make strategic decisions about expenditures and priorities, including plans to move to smaller office space when the current lease expires.

Pacific Presbytery has determined to lease property from closed congregations for ten years and then evaluate needs. Some other presbyteries specify that assets from closed congregations be dedicated to supporting urban churches or new church development.

National Capital Presbytery encouraged stewardship education in a presbytery meeting using a speed-dating format: people were divided into small groups and attended a dozen presentations of five to ten minutes as they rotated around the fellowship hall. Participants were energized by learning from one another, gathering ideas and handouts, and experiencing presbytery as equipping leaders.

Each of these “colors” of healthy, adaptive mid councils that exhibit emerging trends, are founded on basic foundational assumptions that

- Presbyteries have important fiduciary, governance responsibilities that need to be carried out well;
- Presbyteries recognize that their role is to “assist and support the witness of congregations”; while they
In these changing times, each council will need to continually seek to discern God’s call to them in their context, given their culture, size, gifts, and challenges. Each council will need to learn some new behaviors, to engage in being a community that is continually “learning to learn.” As Gil Rendle notes in his book, Journey in the Wilderness: New Life for Mainline Churches, the task is to keep asking questions about who we are? What do we need to be doing in the next few years to be more faithful? What are we trying to make different? What difference are we making in the lives of others and the life of the world?

One presbytery focused its conversation around these questions, questions that we on the mid council commission believe need to be at the center of a larger, broader, deeper discussion:

1. What kind of people do we want to send into the world?
2. What kinds of congregations send those kinds of people?
3. What kind of leadership equips that kind of congregation?
4. What kind of presbytery structure and staff leadership will set free those kinds of leaders to equip those kinds of people to be sent into the world?

The Outlines of Possibilities: Synods as Multi-Presbytery Missional Partnerships

The action of the commission is to eliminate the synod as a council, or ecclesiastical entity. The intent of the commission is to take a step toward “flattening” the church’s organization for the purpose of reducing redundancy in process and the bureaucratic layers between the local congregation and the national church. It was not the commission’s intent to eliminate those programs and processes that cross presbytery lines and either provide economies of scale or address identified missional goals. Indeed, we believe that the ingenuity and effort necessary to retain or reinvent these assets is crucial to the ongoing vitality of the church. Some examples of highly valued ministries and assets that will need to be reformed and retained in a new ecclesiastical system:

- The Synod of Living Waters believes its mission is to give presbyteries a chance to thrive. The synod seeks to create community among presbytery leaders and draws its strategy from those leaders. They are clear that they do not do anything that does not support their presbyteries. The Synod of Living Waters is also the home to a nationally recognized ministry that provides clean water for impoverished areas around the world. This mission already stretches far beyond the geographical bounds of the synod.

- The Synod of the Trinity’s mission statement declares that its role is “to provide support, resources, and nurture to its presbyteries.” It provides major grants to presbyteries for consultants to work with clusters of missional congregations.

- The Synod of Rocky Mountains also has funding available to support members within the synod providing their expertise.

- The Synod of Lincoln Trails is known for its commitment to work in partnership with its presbyteries and congregations to develop and support leaders. It offers training and continuing education for commissioned ruling elders, hosts seminars for new pastors spanning a three-year timeframe, provides interim pastor and interim executive training, and has a fund for Ministerial Excellence to assist pastors and congregations with education for dealing with economic challenges.

- The Synod of the Pacific determined years ago to provide financial and administrative services and never became a programmatic body. It developed a unique revenue stream by creating a savings and loan program to benefit congregations, presbyteries, and Presbyterian entities within its bounds. Due to economies of scale, the program is able to generate revenues to cover synod expenses beyond per capita so that all mission funds from congregations support their presbyteries and General Assembly. The synod is able to take on several fiduciary functions, including personnel services and some health benefits, on behalf of its presbyteries. The synod staff places a high value on “customer service,” listening and responding to the presbyteries.

- The Synod of Lakes and Prairies has a nationally respected “Synod School” for training church leaders, educators, and officers that draws from a large and diverse population offering churches the very highest caliber of resources.

- The Synod of Mid America virtual model grew out of recognition that the ways people in our culture communicate and relate to one another have changed. With people having limited time for meetings it was unrealistic to expect people to travel across state to make routine administrative decisions. They were also conscious that using newer technologies was better stewardship of financial and environmental resources. They are making decisions using conference calls, web-based platforms like Skype or Go To Meeting, and other evolving modes of communication. They will continue to have mission and training opportunities, but believe community will also be created by web-based discussion forums, blogs, and other virtual options.
• The Synod of Alaska-Northwest has started a new way of coming together that they name a “Call to Table.” Two or more presbyteries can call a gathering to look at a common challenge or mission opportunity

• The Synod of Living Waters values relationships and effectiveness. It gave up a physical office for a virtual one, not for financial reasons, but to allow staff to spend more time meeting with people in presbyteries. All documents are scanned and saved into “the cloud” for easy access. To encourage broader participation, particularly among younger Presbyterians many meetings are held by conference call, Skype, Go To Meeting, and other electronic formats. The synod also changed its approach to doing the Living Waters for the World project—after the first few years of asking people for money to do the mission and installing a handful of water systems, they stopped “doing the mission” and switched to training and equipping people, installing hundreds of water systems with teams from inside and outside synod bounds.

Organization: Presbyteries will be free to continue to collaborate for programs, mission, and all other needs where collaboration produces better outcomes. Under the new structure, it is also possible that any presbytery in the denomination could be part of this collaborative if the board of directors or those responsible for project chose to broaden its scope.

The difference is that presbyteries would no longer rely on synod as a council of the church to administer such a program; the presbyteries would collaborate on the structure for such a program as an administrative operation. Presbyteries could form a “joint powers authority” (JPA), a foundation, or simply agree to elect members of a committee or board to exercise administrative power over a program. This has the intended consequence of making the program more accountable to the end users.

Programs: It is the intent of the commission that ministry programs such as Synod of Lakes and Prairies “Synod School” and the Synod of the Pacific’s Loan Program would not be eliminated. While there will certainly be work and cost involved in transitioning these programs, we believe that they are validated by their missional relevance to churches and presbyteries, and not just vested in the synod structure, and therefore could continue to thrive in a new structure with creative leadership.

Advocacy: Another piece of significant data that was reviewed by the commission is the concern that racial ethnic ministries seem to work better across presbytery lines where there are more numbers and hence, more energy for their particular ministries. This issue requires serious attention of presbyteries.

Many members of the racial ethnic Presbyterian community have contributed greatly to the history and vibrancy of the PC(USA); initiating and modeling leadership, guiding the church to more socially and theologically responsible posture in its witness to the world, creatively enhancing the form and substance of worship, sensitizing and educating the church regarding manners of race, and providing a unique Presbyterian witness of the ministry of Jesus Christ. The call for the church to review and reorganize its commitment and approach to racial ethnic ministry is significant both within and beyond the notion of a Presbyterian reality that removes the ecclesiastical functions from synods. The need to discover a posture from which genuine ministry partnership can thrive is vital to the current health and future relevance of the church.

It is worthy of note that the plight of many established and emerging racial ethnic congregations directly mirrors the plight of small churches in the denomination. Exploring models that support and strengthen racial ethnic ministry has the added benefit of discovering new ways in which the entire church can be strengthened, both structurally and relationally. Beyond the notion of tolerance, God calls us to be imaginative and authentic in our interactions and in our witness. As a church, the degree to which we extend ourselves to and within racial ethnic communities will be directly reflected in the health and relevance of our brand of witness. A culturally proficient engagement will bear much fruit, not only in matters of church development and growth, but also in matters of spiritual health and wellness.

Using the regional administrative commissions authorized under the commission’s recommendation to give oversight and accountability to the committee of representation’s work, one of the most significant presbytery collaborations should be an active commitment to the particular needs and requirements of racial ethnic ministries. We are hopeful that this would end up being a priority in the creation of multi-presbytery partnerships to support the kinds of ministries that exist in regional areas. Hopefully, a good consequence could be more ownership of racial ethnic programs and ministries by the presbyteries.

In their cry to the PC(USA) for resource, relevant inclusion, nurture, and support, the racial ethnic Presbyterian community must be met with a posture that authentically values diversity, genuinely respects culture, and fully recognizes that what can be gained from honest engagement is not just the joy of giving, but the blessing of receiving. Within this frame, partnership emerges beyond paternalism as a fundamental engaging principle for racial ethnic ministry, and the denomination achieves an enhanced eligibility for the richness of blessing that compliance with God’s inclusive intention can bring.

Mission Projects: As described above, the commission is confident that when mission activities are valued by the presbyteries and churches, they will continue to exist under a new structure that actually gives them more accountability and control. By converting projects to 501 3c organizations, or foundations, or by creating joint powers authorities, collaborative groups of an unlimited number of presbyteries can continue the mission activities that capture the imagination and energy of their members. The solar project in the Synod of the Sun and the Living Waters of the World project of the Synod of Living...
Waters are examples of possible mission activities. As the commission understands, the Living Waters project can “stand alone.” It now functions under of the purview of the synod, but could just as easily be a project on its own. That is an exemplar of what the commission hopes would happen with such mission projects.

Shared Life: This is where the rubber meets the road. In reviewing the survey data, it was apparent that while we talk the talk about connectionalism, there is a significant lack of walking the walk. Survey respondents listed connectionalism as a very high value, but they also listed lack of communication among middle councils and with congregations as a major problem. The commission believes that by not mandating cross presbytery connections in an ecclesiastical entity, the new structure will actually require presbyteries to define when and how they choose to collaborate with each other in a shared spiritual life, and in making the notion of “one body in Christ” a reality. With the possibility of provisional presbyteries and provisional membership of presbyteries beyond its original geographic bounds, we strongly urge the formation of covenants of agreements between churches and their membership and affiliated congregations.

It is the commission’s hope that in this season of reflective experimentation presbyteries will pay even closer attention to how churches connect to each other across presbytery boundaries, regional boundaries, and indeed throughout the denomination. What does it truly mean to be connectional? If we’re not required to do it, will we actually embrace the notion of “one body”?

Assets: Although this varies widely from synod to synod, it is true that many existing synods have significant assets in the form of endowments, property, and reserves. The relocation of the management of these assets will be a significant issue if the new structure is approved. It is also true that the state in which these assets reside is a significant variable and would have to be considered on a case-by-case basis. The commission recommends that each existing synod establish a committee made up of representatives from each presbytery within the existing structure and that these committees be charged with developing a plan for the management of what is now thought of as synod assets.

The General Assembly Mid Council Commission Racial Ethnic Strategy Task Force proposed the following recommendations for the General Assembly Mid Council Commission to present to the 220th General Assembly (2012): [These recommendations have been incorporated into the report as Recommendation 8 above.]

1. Establish a National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force comprised of representatives from racial ethnic church leadership; racial ethnic caucus leadership; the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC); presbytery leadership; and the General Assembly Committee on Representation. This task force will exclusively review, assess, and explore the call to, responsibility in, and vision for, racial ethnic ministry within the PC(USA), reporting its findings for implementation to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

2. In light of what we have heard in our conversation with the church, identifying a critical condition concerning confidence in the substance and direction of racial ethnic ministry, we would also recommend that the National Racial Ethnic Task Force be
   a. created separate and apart from the proposed OGA task force;
   b. created whether or not the motion for the repurposing of synods is approved;
   c. instructed to specifically address the issue of language access, sensitivity and resource (particularly as relates to the Spanish and Korean languages) within the existing frame of judicatory operation, as well as within the context of any regional administrative structure that emerges as a result of the approval of the repurposing of synods;
   d. instructed to review the models of racial ethnic ministry that are operating successfully in the denomination with particular focus on, but not limited to, those noted in this commission’s report.
   e. instructed to explore the viability of a nationally organized racial ethnic ministry advocacy model on the local and/or cluster congregation level.

Charge

To address the question: “In the light of what we have heard from the church regarding the intrinsic value of racial ethnic ministry within the PC(USA), how will that priority be preserved in the face of transition to a structure that does not include synods with ecclesiastical status?”

Process

Representatives from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), representing the collective community of the racial ethnic Presbyterian family, presented the commission with a unified case for considering the historic role of synods in the vitality of racial ethnic Presbyterian ministry. Subsequently ACREC was invited to partner with this task force. Working together, we embarked on a process of exploration, assessment, and visioning regarding potential options and elements of a strategy for the PC(USA) to sustain the viability of established racial ethnic Presbyterian congregations and communities as well as those that are emerging, and those that have yet to. The focus of this exploration was founded in the overwhelming response in the commission’s polling of the church that consistently lifted up racial ethnic ministry as the number one element that needed to be accounted for in a post-synod Presbyterian universe.
Rationale

Even though the work of this task force was focused on identifying models for racial ethnic ministry in the face of potential transition to a structure that does not include synods with ecclesiastical power, we heard a wide spread outcry for relief from conditions as they currently exist. Established racial ethnic congregations continue to struggle in their relationships with their Presbyteries, resourcing and nurture are widely unavailable to them, and there is a feeling within this community that they are being abandoned in favor of other priorities within the denomination. The commitment to racial ethnic ministry that the PC(USA) has professed is seen as mere lip service, due to the general absence of evidence of that commitment on the local church level. The notion of life in the absence of Synod ecclesiastical authority is, for many racial ethnic congregations, the “last straw” in what has developed into a perceived tradition of tacit exclusion.

It is widely acknowledged, and factually irrefutable, that synods have been the traditional Safe Haven for matters regarding racial ethnic ministry. This truth emerges from two primary factors, Critical Mass and Sociological Necessity. Regarding Critical Mass, it is clear that in many areas of the country the numerical count of racial ethnic Presbyterians was insufficient to command the attention, sensitivity, and focus of many presbyteries. Synods provided the place where racial ethnic Presbyterians could gather in numbers that afforded them a voice that was not available on the presbytery level. Regarding Sociological Necessity, one need only refer to the historical truths that required federal government intervention in the local implementation of civil rights in many parts of the United States. Unfortunately the truths that called for such a solution were also actively impacting the life of the PC(USA), and the ecclesiastical power of synods served as the lone buffer for many racial ethnic Presbyterians and congregations.

The place of synods in this mix was both programmatic and resource oriented. Many synods had dedicated staff focused on the particular and peculiar place of racial ethnic ministry within the established Presbyterian domain. Local congregations were resourced with people, programs, and funding generated from the synod, which also evolved into a place of shelter and recourse for racial ethnic Presbyterians unable to access justice, recognition, and relief within their own presbyteries. The historic memory of this era looms somewhat larger than more recent renditions of that reality, but the spirit of the role that synods have played in the life of racial ethnic Presbyterian ministry continues to be the measure by which they are valued among the community of racial ethnic Presbyterians.

A historical fact that bears mention is that “racial ethnic” prior to the 1980s was primarily a “black and white” issue. That is to say, that the focus of most matters regarding ethnicity and race in America was conjugated in the context of the “Negro/Black/African American” struggle for equal rights. The Presbyterian church, in the southern and northern versions of itself, was challenged to respond to the social injustices of the time with ground breaking postures and statements that valued the parity, ministry, and witness of Black Presbyterians within the life and body of the church. In the northern church this was evidenced by, among other things, the hiring of Black Presbyterians into the established structure. In the southern church the social circumstance manifested the continuation of a structure that included the thriving presence of all-Black presbyteries and synods.

The fact that these all-Black judicatories (like the Synods of Atlantic, Blue Ridge, Canadian, and Catawba, and Presbyteries like Cape Fear, Yadkin, Southern Virginia, Tennessee, and others) were “structured” out of existence (along with much of the programming focused on their constituency) in a process advanced by the “redistricting” that followed the 1983 Reunion, is a fact that serves as a point of reference for the current concern that the fruits of the church’s current plan for restructuring will include sour grapes for those historically disenfranchised within the mainstream of American reality. The Native American concern had already been marginalized and because it was less visible in the “nightly news,” it less often received the recognition of having provided the original context (at least in principle) for the civil rights struggle. There were also Mexican presbyteries, which were more remote in connection, but no less relevant in the overall historic context of racial ethnic Presbyterian ministry.

Today when we use the term “racial ethnic” it refers to a multitude of cultures, including immigrants of all “non-white” races and ethnicities. The fact that most of them, like the Negro / Black/African and Native Americans became Presbyterian pursuant to global efforts of mission (albeit in somewhat of a different storyline of historic context), is one that is relevant to the universal nature of Presbyterian witness. It is this witness that moves “front and center” in forward looking discussions concerning the future of racial ethnic Presbyterian ministry, particularly in light of the demographic shifts occurring within the American mission field.

Also prominent in the commission’s polling of the church, were the expressions of deep and abiding mistrust—fuel by a general absence of meaningful connection to the national, regional, and even local judicatories. This is by no means a racial ethnic phenomenon, but it has peculiar ramifications within the racial ethnic Presbyterian community. Those feelings of distant disconnect are exacerbated by the day-to-day experiences of those within the communities of traditionally disenfranchised people; it is in fact a double-disconnect from society as a whole and from the church, so the distance seems greater—and the isolation more severe.

In a spirit that recognized “what Jesus would do,” the PC(USA) in the Book of Order creates a context for its place of responsibility to such communities:
The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution.

G-3.0101 Councils as an Expression of Unity of the Church

The mutual interconnectedness of the church through its councils is a sign of the unity of the church. Congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), while possessing all the gifts necessary to be the church, are nonetheless not sufficient in themselves to be the church. Rather, they are called to share with others both within and beyond the congregation the task of bearing witness to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in the world. This call to bear witness is the work of all believers. The particular responsibility of the councils of the church is to nurture, guide, and govern those who witness as part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to the end that such witness strengthens the whole church and gives glory to God.

APPENDIX B—ARTICLE 8. RACIAL ETHNIC REPRESENTATION, PARTICIPATION AND ORGANIZATIONS

8.1 The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall provide for a Committee on Representation for each governing body above the Session. Its membership shall consist of equal numbers of men and women. A majority of the members shall be selected from the racial ethnic groups within the governing body and the total membership shall include persons from each of the following categories:

a. majority male membership
b. majority female membership
c. racial ethnic male membership
d. racial ethnic female membership
e. youth male and female membership

Its main function shall be to guide the governing bodies with respect to their membership and to that of their committees, boards, agencies and other units, in implementation of the principles of participation and inclusiveness, to ensure effective representation in the decision making of the church.

8.2 Governing bodies of the Church shall be responsible for implementing the Church’s commitment to inclusiveness and participation which provides for the full expression of the rich diversity within its membership. All governing bodies shall work to become more open and inclusive and to correct past patterns of discrimination on the basis of racial ethnic background.

Racial ethnic members in the United States (Presbyterians of African, Hispanic and Asian descent and Native Americans) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision-making of the Church, and shall be able to form caucuses.

Participation and representation of racial ethnic membership shall be assured by the Committees on Representation (8.1).

The challenges we are currently facing as a church regarding racial ethnic ministry relate to the concept of fundamental commitment to this ideal. Arguably, the church’s passion has not been invested in racial ethnic ministry, regardless of the number of “success stories” that can be celebrated. Diminishing resources pumped through a structure of systems that are decades old continues to serve fewer and fewer people. Emerging racial ethnic worshipping communities are receiving their due priority, but more and more often it is at the expense of established racial ethnic congregations, who are struggling (along with the entire denomination) with the realities of decline in vitality and relevance. All of this while voice after voice echoes the sentiment that the PC(USA) continues to speak “out of both sides of its mouth”—stating the priority nature of racial ethnic ministry while simultaneously withdrawing resources from the places that would enhance and support it.

In response to a demographic reality in which the racial ethnic tide continues to swell, the PC(USA) has embraced multiculturalism as “... the answer ...” divesting itself further and further from racial ethnic ministry support. Valuing multicultural contexts of worship could never be “wrong,” but to choose those contexts as alternatives to racial ethnic ministry would be a mistake that many already believe the denomination to be making. The identified trend of immigrant racial ethnic congregations seeking to call pastors from their homeland of origin speaks to the critical nature of a cultural context in ministry. This cultural context is critical not only to the Taiwanese, Hispanic/Latinos, and Nigerians, it is critical for the long-established racial ethnic Presbyterian worshipping communities as well. A “... both/and ...” strategy is called for, and the PC(USA), if it is to be true to its stated priority for racial ethnic ministry (in a way that is consistent with the Book of Order), must passionately invest in both streams of racial ethnic ministry.

A structural reality that does not include synods with ecclesiastical power presents a fundamental threat to racial ethnic ministry, because it removes a recognized place of shelter. As relates to the concepts of “injury” and “harm,” they are experienced in both actual and perceived ways by the racial ethnic Presbyterian communities who have traditionally found nurture, protection, and care in a place that may no longer exist. In the sequence that calls for the “repurposing” of synods then, there must be a simultaneous process of identifying new and effective ways to resource, support, and enhance racial ethnic Presbyterian ministry; only then can the angst of “being restructured out of relevance in, and connection to the denomination” be replaced by a “purposeful discovery of a place from which to regroup and grow ... again.”
A fundamental element in this entire process is cultural proficiency, an ideal that is more prominently finding its way into popular focus. Yet in spite of most of us “beginning to be aware that we should be aware” (in matters of cultural [and other categories of] diversity) there is a lack of organized consensus regarding the measurement of our progress in that direction. As we speak there are, emerging from a varied set of sources within the denomination, numerous calls for us to fundamentally value the fruits of diversity with a reverence and respect that will allow us to truly grow together as a unified community in the Body of Christ.

The fragrant flowers of this ideal must be cultivated and nurtured however, and we have heard the voices of racial ethnic Presbyterians crying out (as in the wilderness) for an authentic diversity that has a shelf life beyond the boundaries of a photo opportunity. In the light of all those who are laboring to craft a church adaptive model, and in the face of a circumstance where the fantasy of “One Lord, One Faith, and One Baptism” is accosted by the reality of “Divided Mind, Divided Body, and Divided Spirit,” we would represent the awareness of an overwhelming desire for cultural proficiency to become one of the “Marks of the Presbyterian Church”; setting a visible example for a world that is sorely in need of one.

Conclusion

In our journey through the evident possibilities for a structure that would take all of these elements into account and provide a framework for the enhancement, nurture, and support of racial ethnic ministry in a post-synod Presbyterian context, there were a number of models that emerged. They ranged from the formation of new commissions and the creation of local advocates exclusively assigned to racial ethnic ministry concerns, to the adjustment of existing General Assembly constitutional provisions. At the end of the day the boundaries of our charge as a commission limited the degree to which we could prescriptively address these matters. Additionally, all of the primary stakeholders were not present at the table of our discussion.

In our unified effort, the members of ACREC and the members of this task force agree that the discussion we have been marinating needs to continue into a level of detail calls for significant, time, prayer, and study. Certainly there is much we can learn from those racial ethnic worshipping communities who are thriving and growing. Certainly there is wisdom to be gleaned from the Korean councils currently and the racial ethnic judicatories that appear in the history of our denomination. Certainly there are many structural options that have the capacity to transform our denominational ethos as relates to racial ethnic ministry. We find this to be a process that calls for all racial ethnic ministry stakeholders to engage in a constructive dialogue that can serve to heal past harms and forge a bold path forward into a vibrant and relevant vision for the ministry of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

As Jesus ministered to the Samaritan woman at the well, and the “Good” Samaritan man ministered to his Jewish “neighbor,” we are called—in Christ—into one another’s care. As a church we must not only embrace, but also live into the vision of an ethos that values the content of each character, regardless of the skin it’s in. Christ calls us to this as individuals and as a church for the very same reason—to provide a demonstrative witness to the world of the Kingdom of Heaven. The PC(USA) posture on racial ethnic ministry must be reflective of this context as it moves to address the question of how the disproportionate injury to the established racial ethnic Presbyterian community (caused by the removal of ecclesiastical status from synods) will be balanced in any new structure moving forward; but even if the synod structure is retained there is a cry for the PC(USA) to reassess, re-conjugate, reset, and refocus its approach to racial ethnic ministry.

With this in mind, we conclude that it would be most productive for all of the primary stakeholders in the PC(USA) frame of racial ethnic ministry to be convened and focused on an agenda of reflection, assessment, and imaginatively bold visioning—for the purpose of forging an effective and historically responsible model for moving forward in the effort to revitalize racial ethnic ministry on the national and congregational level.

Final Report from the Special Committee on the Administrative Review of the Synod of Boriquén (Puerto Rico), the Reverend Mauricio Chacón, Moderator.

Introduction

This report serves as our final report to the General Assembly Commission on Mid Councils, formerly the General Assembly Commission on Middle Governing Bodies (the commission).

As you are aware, the 219th General Assembly (2010) approved Item 04-06 creating the commission and, among other foci, charging it with the supervision of “the Special Administrative Review Committee on Puerto Rico and act on any recommendations they may make within the powers given to the commission” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 275 of the electronic version, p. 212 of the print version).

In directing that the SCARB continue, the rationale of Item 04-06 noted that “it is important for them [SCARB] to continue to function as a committee in dialogue with the church in Puerto Rico … [foreseeing] that the General Assembly may be asked to implement recommendations that the committee may make in the months ahead” (Ibid., p. 276).
Observations

In response to this charge from the General Assembly, the entire membership of the SCARB met in 2011 from February 22nd thru 25th with the councils and assemblies of the mid councils of the Synod of Boriquén (the "synod") and the synod’s Committee on the Future in an effort to continue the dialogue with and encourage dialogue among and between the leaders of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the "PC(USA)") in Puerto Rico.

As a result of that visit and subsequent informal communications with leaders of the Synod of Boriquén and its constituent mid councils, we make the following observations:

1. Though there continue to be power struggles among and between the leaders of the individual presbyteries and the synod, we observed during our visit that considerable effort has been made by all the leaders to mitigate those struggles and find ways and areas in which the mid councils can work together, or, at least, not interfere with one another.

Thus, we the members of SCARB believe we have done all we can in this respect and that any further efforts on our part would not serve to further encourage or enhance that dialogue and spirit of cooperation and community.

2. The need to search for and identify a permanent synod executive remains unresolved. Though all parties engaged in the leadership of the synod acknowledged the need to engage in such a search, the synod has not yet moved forward in this important process. Now it has been brought to our attention that the interim synod executive is on medical leave and we are unaware of when he will return and resume his responsibilities to the synod.

However, given the release of the commission’s proposed recommendations to the General Assembly redefining the role of synods, including the elimination of their status as councils of the church, the matter of searching for and installing a permanent synod executive seems to be moot. As such, it would be our suggestion that the synod be encouraged to seek a new interim executive, with the principal role of assisting the synod to move forward on addressing the future of the synod in light of the commission’s recommendations, if it is determined that the current interim will not soon return to his duties.

3. As previously mentioned and assuming that the commission will follow through in its recommendations to the General Assembly to remove the status of synods as councils of the church, and that the General Assembly and then the presbyteries of the PC(USA) approve moving in this direction, we would encourage the synod, in consultation with its presbyteries, to begin the process of considering the future of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Puerto Rico without a synod.

In that regard, we believe there are three options open to the PC(USA) in Puerto Rico:

   a. continue to be divided into three distinct presbyteries;

   b. realignment of the current presbytery boundaries, resulting in perhaps two or three distinct, but differently aligned presbyteries; or,

   c. creation of one, new presbytery.

   While we recognize that any realignment, such as those suggested by options b and c, above, may lead to further power struggles within the synod, we believe that this is also an opportunity for our sisters and brothers in Puerto Rico to come together in common cause, setting aside their differences and working together to best serve the congregations and people of Puerto Rico.

We are also aware that at the biennial meeting of the Synod of Boriquén in November, 2011, its Committee on the Future offered three possible directions that could be taken by the synod; they included:

   a. the synod with its three constituent presbyteries and a revised structure;

   b. one presbytery to attach to a synod of PC(USA); or

   c. The Presbyterian Church in/of Puerto Rico with

   (1) one presbytery with regional mission groups and program; or

   (2) three presbyteries with one administrative unit/office; or

   (3) four presbyteries with a synod or General Assembly; or

   (4) a church organized in councils.

However, we have yet to receive any report from the synod regarding what action(s) they took in response to those recommendations. Should we receive word of what action they took, we will certainly take those into consideration and communicate that to the commission with any revisions to this final report that may be necessary.
In any event, we, the members of SCARB, stand ready, individually or as a group, in whatever way the leadership of the Synod of Boriquén might deem appropriate, to assist the synod to work through any of the processes that might be a change from its current structure.

4. There continue to be voices of discord within the church that would encourage separation from the PC(USA), but we believe those voices to be a very small minority. However, the principal manifestation of these voices of discord and separation appear to be lodged in the Puerto Rican Presbyterian Caucus (PRPC). Here, as with the issue of the search for a permanent synod executive, though most leaders within the synod acknowledge that the caucus does not speak for the majority of the churches or their members on the issues of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Puerto Rico and, further, do not represent the synod, no definitive actions have been taken by the synod to assert that position and belief.

As a result, even the Office of Hispanic/Latino Congregational Support of the PC(USA) (OHLCS) continues to fund, at least in part, the participation of the members of the PRPC at the triennial meetings of the Caucus Nacional Presbiteriano Hispano Latino (Hispanic/Latino Caucus of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We appreciate that this position is based upon the OHLCS’s belief that, having not received official communications to the contrary, the PRPC-designated participants to the Caucus Nacional are the officially sanctioned representatives of the synod.

Here, again, as in our observations and suggestions noted in Item 3., above, we believe that the discussions and decisions about how to proceed into the future as the manifestation and presence of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Puerto Rico without a synod will necessarily provide the opportunity to address this particular issue head on.

Irregularities or delinquencies

Finally, we feel it is necessary that we reiterate to the commission and to the leadership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Puerto Rico, that SCARB was not constituted for the purpose of correcting known irregularities or delinquencies; but, rather, to investigate and make suggestions regarding, but not limited to:

- The effectiveness of the stated clerk of the synod and effectiveness of the synod council;
- The effectiveness of the leadership of the three presbyteries;
- The relationship among the presbyteries within the synod;
- The synod’s financial practices and those financial practices of presbyteries;
- Whether there is significant desire in Puerto Rico for a national Puerto Rican Presbyterian denomination.

Thus, we were to identify irregularities and delinquencies that may have occurred in the administration and governance of the mid councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Puerto Rico and which irregularities and delinquencies may have or are contributing to the issues identified in the original charge to SCARB by the Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Moderator of the 218th General Assembly (2008).

In fact, we did identify such irregularities during the original term of SCARB. Those included the intended actions of the synod, at the insistence of certain presbyteries, to dismiss the synod stated clerk without due process and the legal issues surrounding the building of a parking garage on synod property without the express permission of the synod assembly. These irregularities were identified, verified, and brought to the attention of the synod leadership and, as reported in the SCARB report to the 219th General Assembly (2010); those irregularities were appropriately and adequately addressed.

Consultation and Review of Final Report with Leadership of the Synod of Boriquén

We would note that we promised our sisters and brothers in Puerto Rico that we would give them an opportunity to review and comment on this final report before it is submitted to the commission. In that regard, the Moderator of SCARB, the Reverend Mauricio Chacón, and the commission’s designee, the Reverend José Olagues, attended the biennial meeting of the Synod of Boriquén, held in el Campamento El Guacio en San Sebastián, Puerto Rico, from November 10–12, 2011, and this report reflects that consultation and conversation.

Summary Response of the Synod of Boriquen to the Final Report of the Special Committee on Administrative Review (SCARB).

The Synod of Boriquén welcomed representatives from the special committee at its stated meeting on November 11–12, 2011, and engaged in dialogue with them regarding their report.

They also viewed a PowerPoint report from the synod’s “Committee of the Future,” which included three options for the synod’s consideration:

1. The synod with its three constituent presbyteries and a revised structure;
2. One presbytery to attach to a synod of PC(USA); or

3. The Presbyterian Church in/of Puerto Rico with a. one presbytery with regional mission groups and program; or
   b. three presbyteries with one administrative unit/office; or
   c. four presbyteries with a synod or General Assembly; or
   d. a church organized in councils. (from SCARB’s final report to commission)

The synod assembly later combined options 1 & 2 above as Model A, for the Synod of Boriquén to continue belonging to the PC(USA) as it is currently and option 3, with its 4 variants as Model B, for the creation of a Presbyterian Church in Puerto Rico with fraternal relationships with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The vote results were 33 for Model A (to remain in PC(USA)) and 30 (to form a Presbyterian Church in Puerto Rico). The synod instructed the moderator of the Synod of Boriquén to appoint a special committee to study, analyze, and negotiate between option 1 & option 2 above (originally proposed by Committee of the Future and combined into Model A—to remain in PC(USA) and to report at a special synod assembly sometime in the future.

The Committee of the Future was dismissed with thanks.

Note: The portion of the minutes of the Synod of Boriquén recording the above reported actions can be found in Appendix #5.

Appendix #1

Our Guiding Principles

- We live in a post-Christendom context that calls for continual reconsideration of our mission, our structures, and our practices in order to be faithful to Christ and fruitful participants in God’s mission to the world. This reality is now undeniable. We live in a new day, a new epoch. It is as significant as it was for the Reformed tradition to be transported from Europe to America, and it requires no less a reconsideration and reformulation of our way of being the church. And if we do not do so, they will eventually die.

- The missional congregation in a healthy, faithful covenant community is the center of the mission and faithful life of discipleship of Jesus Christ. Congregations are the “basic but insufficient” form of God’s mission in the world (Book of Order, G-1.0101) The congregation is the basic form of mission, but for congregations to be faithful to their mission also requires them to be in covenant relationships with other congregations for shared authority, accountability, edification, and missional support.

- Councils exist to serve the mission of the congregations in their local context. In the words, of Louis Weeks, president emeritus of Union Theological Seminary, “The highest council in the church is really the Session. The rest of the governing bodies serve the Session.” Presbyteries are “covenant communities of missional congregations” and the center of our corporate life, governance, and mission together connecting congregations to each other and the larger witness of the church. It is a “collegial bishop” charged with preparing and ordering the ministry of teaching elders, it is a covenant community of missional congregations, it is the “balcony” that offers a broader perspective to congregational leaders so that they might serve wisely and well in their specific contexts.

- This report and our recommendations are committed to refocusing the mid council structure on one goal: serving fruitful and faithful missional congregations. To that end, our structures, especially our mid council structures, must engage and serve the mission of God in the world through missional congregations and partnerships, not our institutional or denominational concerns.

- There is no “one size fits all model.” Ecclesial structure follows missional function and is always marked by a commitment to being covenantal and contextual. The best ecclesiastical structures are discerned by those who live in it together. They will be contained within the frame of our shared constitutional life, but those structural changes should ordinarily come from the local context, not the “national office.” The new Form of Government and the passage of Amendment 10A indicate a shift of authority to the local contexts for discerning the shape of a mission and we want to affirm and build upon that shift.

- Our structures must serve and support healthy, shared, spiritual and collaborative leadership between ruling and teaching elders.

- This report continues, builds upon, and lives into the decisions made by the church to accept a new Form of Government and place the discernment of fitness for ordination on local churches and presbyteries. Our proposal is a next step in a trajectory that we believe will result in further collaborative creativity by the whole church in every context.

- We envision a “big canvas with a clear frame.” While remaining securely within the “Foundations” of our theological and governance tradition, we call the church to create the conditions to energize collaborative creativity, missional innovation, and relational accountability with permission for many different models of middle councils to emerge that will foster the vitality and fruitfulness of missional congregations.
ADAPTIVE CHANGE: In contrast to “technical solutions” that are built on best practices and known insights or techniques, adaptive change demands group learning and institutional transformation to address new realities, circumstances, and challenges. Adaptive challenges require experiments, new discoveries, and adjustments across the organization. Technical problems may involve intentional effort and accountability or better communication. Adaptive challenges require the organization to change values, behaviors, and attitudes. Adaptive challenges require leaders to learn something new in order to address the situation. In the adaptive context, the leader’s role is not to “fix the problem” but to help the system understand the underlying issues and competing values at work in order to lead the system in a shift in habits, beliefs, values or behaviors that will open up new possibilities for facing the challenge.

ADJACENT POSSIBLE: Drawn from the work of Steven Johnson (Where Good Ideas Come From), this concept suggests that innovation comes by small steps through a process of trial and error and the insights of joining previously disparate ideas into a new understanding. Each small step opens up possibilities for new discoveries and innovations.

BALCONY: A concept of adaptive change, the “balcony” is a place for perspective and reflecting, for noticing patterns and seeing possibilities. To “get on the balcony” does not mean to run away from “the fray,” but rather, to pause and detach, in order to develop a broader, longer-range perspective on the issues. “Without the capacity to move back and forth between the field of action and the balcony, to reflect day to day, moment to moment, on the many ways in which an organization’s habits can sabotage adaptive work, a leader easily and unwittingly becomes a prisoner of the system” Heifetz and Laurie.

BOUNDED SET: An organizational model in which group membership is determined and maintained by establishing and enforcing boundaries. In churches, these boundaries can be doctrinal, practical, or cultural.

CENTERED SET: An organizational model in which group affiliation is more loosely determined and maintained, not by means of boundaries, but by means of shared commitments to a central idea or practice.

CLASSIS: In the Reformed Church in America, classis is the equivalent of our presbytery. In RCA polity, a classis can be a loose collection of churches who share a common mission, not just common geography.

CLERICALISM: A tendency to rely on professional clergy for the work of the church, at both congregational and mid council levels. Clericalism results in the loss of parity between ruling and teaching elders. John Calvin developed Presbyterian polity, in part, as a way to avoid clericalism in the church.

CONNECTIONALISM: A core principle of Presbyterian theology, ecclesiology, and polity, connectionalism is the insistence that congregations are more effective at mission and ministry when working together in covenantal relationships of support and mutual accountability.

COVENANT COMMUNITIES OF MISSIONAL CONGREGATIONS: This concept, drawn from the missional ecclesiology of Darrell Guder, serves as our working definition of what a presbytery should be. This way of thinking about presbyteries de-emphasizes traditional focus on the governing, regulatory, and judicial functions of presbyteries, and instead highlights the relational and missional character of a council.

CROWD SOURCING: A decentralized form of creativity in which an open call is made to collaborate on a shared project.

CULTURE: Kikanza Nuri Robbins writes, “Culture is the shared beliefs, customs, values and behaviors that unite a group of people and distinguish them from others. People belong to several cultures that are usually associated with their race or ethnicity, language, occupation or organization.”

CULTURAL PROFICIENCY: A process of discernment and problem solving by learning to look at issues from the cultural perspectives of those involved.

DISESTABLISHMENT: Beginning with the withdrawal of state recognition and/or support from churches in Western societies, disestablishment in the contemporary United States also refers to the post-Christendom reality that church is no longer at the center of culture.

ECCLESIAL INSTITUTIONS: Church structures responsible for order, discipline, ordination of ministers, continuing education, mutual encouragement, and missionary work.

ECCLESIOLOGY: Theological reflection on the nature, purpose, and organizational structure of the church.

EMERGING CHURCH MOVEMENT: In various manifestations coming from both evangelical and mainline churches, the emerging church movement is an innovative and ever-developing attempt to reconsider Christian traditions in light of the changing contexts of our flat, networked, postmodern, post-Christendom world.

EMERGING GENERATIONS: Youth and young adults in Generation X (born between the mid 60s and early 80s), Millennials (also known as Generation Y; born between the early 80s and mid 90s), and the subsequent generation.

FLAT: Popularized in the title of Thomas Friedman’s seminal work on globalization, The World Is Flat, flattening refers to the “shrinking” and connecting of our world through travel and communication technologies, as well as a growing preference for non-hierarchical and non-bureaucratic organizational models.
GLOBALIZATION: The pervasive interconnectedness of global economies and culture.

THE GREAT EMERGENCE: In her influential book, The Great Emergence, Phyllis Tickle suggests that every 500 years the church engages in a cultural and ecclesiastical “rummage sale” that sifts through the dead and dying elements of the past and route to a new expression of life and faith. Tickle argues that we are in the midst of one of these periods, which she calls the Great Emergence, occurring about 500 years after the Protestant Reformation.

THE INVENTIVE AGE: In a series of recent books, Doug Pagitt labels our contemporary time the Inventive Age. Most pertinent to our discussion is the transition from the recent Information Age (which is more familiar to many us) to the Inventive Age, which Pagitt describes as a shift from being consumers of information to producers and participants in information and media. The Inventive Age is typified by Web 2.0, wiki culture, and social networking.

KAIROTIC TIME: Kairos is a Greek word used in the New Testament to indicate an appointed time for God’s action. In Christian theology, it has come to mean a crucial juncture, a moment of truth, a turning point in history.

LEARNING COMMUNITY: The ability to learn new ways of understanding, responding, and growing is a necessary aspect of adaptive change. Learning communities nurture flexibility and adaptability as key characteristics needed to meet the challenges of rapidly changing environments. In a learning community, adaptive change is an ongoing reality of life.

MAINLINE PROTESTANT: This term refers to the streams of Christianity that represented the majority of Americans up through the middle of the 20th century. Mainline denominations include the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the United Methodist Church, the Episcopal Church (U.S.A.), the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the United Church of Christ, the Disciples of Christ, and the Reformed Church in America.

MID COUNCILS: In the terminology of our new Form of Government, which went into effect in 2011, presbyteries and synods are now known as “mid councils” instead of “middle governing bodies.”

MID COUNCIL COMMISSION: In response to the 219th General Assembly (2010), Moderator Cynthia Bolbach and outgoing Moderator Bruce Reyes-Chow created the Middle Governing Bodies Commission. After the 2011 ratification of the new Form of Government, this commission was renamed the Mid Councils Commission to reflect the terminology of the new Form of Government.

MISSIONAL: Whether describing theology, ecclesiology, mid councils, or congregations, “missional” indicates that the central purpose and organizing principle of a congregation is personal and communal participation in the Missio Dei—the mission of God in Jesus Christ to redeem and heal the world. In missional ecclesiology, there is a shift away from thinking of churches having missions to a realization that the church is mission.

MULTI-PRESBYTERY MISSIONAL PARTNERSHIPS: According to our proposals, after the ecclesiastical functions of synods are replaced by regional administrative commissions, presbyteries will focus on the missional partnerships that have always characterized healthy synods. The repurposing of synods as multi-presbytery missional partnerships responds to our changing contexts by flattening denominational hierarchy and bureaucracy.

NEIGHBORHOOD PRESBYTERY: A presbytery model defined by shared geography.

NETWORK PRESBYTERY: A presbytery model that spans geographical boundaries and is defined more by shared missional purposes or affinity to particular theologies or ideologies. Networks are often built around more fluid structural organization and are more focused on common concerns, objectives, and relationships.

NETWORK THEORY: Originating in computer science, the study of how networks function and affect systems. Contemporary social networks, facilitated by developing social media, are of particular concern for our reflection on the changing contexts of ministry in the 21st century.

PARITY: John Calvin’s basic concept of Presbyterian polity creates and sustains a relationship of equal and shared leadership, authority, and accountability between ruling and teaching elders.

PARTNERSHIPS: Two or more groups, organizations, or parties forging a relationship for mutual benefit and mission. Partnerships might be formal or informal, simple or complex, involve many people or just a few.

POLITY: The structural system of governance for a church. The three primary forms of polity are Congregational, Episcopal, and Presbyterian.

POST 10-A: A description of life in the PC(USA) after the 2010–11 approval and ratification of Amendment 10-A, which replaced the “fidelity and chastity” clause in the Book of Order.

POST-CHRISTENDOM: In today’s Western world, Christianity is no longer the definitive center and shaper of culture, as it had been since Constantine made Christianity the official religion of the Roman Empire. “Christendom”—the triumphal reign of Christianity in Western culture—is over. No longer part of the “cultural establishment,” the church must envision new ways of bearing witness to God’s kingdom in a rapidly changing world. (See “disestablishment.”)

POST-DENOMINATIONAL: The current reality in which appreciation of distinct denominational identities has become less critical to the average American Protestant. “Brand loyalty” is no longer a compelling factor in the growth or success of a congregation.
POSTMODERNISM: Philosophical challenges to the multifaceted ways in which Western culture was transformed by the Renaissance, Reformation, and Enlightenment.

PROVISIONAL PRESBYTERY: A temporary presbytery that can be created and explored during the season of reflective experimentation recommended in this report.

REGULATORY: An understanding of mid councils that prioritizes the sense of appropriate control and accountability exercised by a mid council over its constituent councils and/or individuals. While this term often elicits a negative connotation, it describes the legitimate need for organizations to live and work together in mutual accountability under a set of shared values and commitments.

SAFE HOLDING ENVIRONMENT: In the process of adaptive change, a “safe holding environment” is a place or situation in which experimentation and risk taking can take place. In the context of our report and recommendations, we suggest that regional administrative commissions (taking the ecclesiastical place of synods) will function as the safe holding environment for experimentation, risk taking, and innovation at the presbytery level. Likewise, the kinds of presbyteries we envision will function as safe holding environments for experimentation, risk taking, and innovation in local congregations.

SEASON OF REFLECTIVE EXPERIMENTATION: A proposed time in which the church will allow experimentation and flexibility in the formation of connectional relationships at the presbytery level. Among the possibilities to be explored during this season of experimentation are the creation of provisional nongeographic presbyteries and provisional presbytery realignments for specific missional purposes. This season of experimentation will be evaluated by subsequent General Assemblies and will expire on December 31, 2021.

STRATIGRAPHY: The study of strata or layers, used here not in the geological sense, but to note the changing nature of the church through time.

THEOLOGICAL FRIENDSHIP: A concept suggested by Barry Ensign George which suggests that trust is built across ideological lines through the transformative work of shared theological reflection. In communities of theological friendship, diversity and compatibility are held together in creative tension.

WEB 2.0: Internet applications based on participation and collaboration. Blogging and social media like Facebook and Twitter are prime examples of Web 2.0.

WIKI CULTURE: A wiki is a website whose content can be created and modified by users. Wiki culture is the sense of participation, collaboration, and shared ownership that is generated by this technology. Wikipedia is a prime example of wiki culture.

WORSHIPPING COMMUNITIES: A distinct community that gathers around the Word and Sacraments, is under the authority of a council, practices patterns of mutual accountability, is engaged in mission, and is self-sustaining or moving toward it.

Appendix #3
Cultural Proficiency: What Is It?

Cultural proficiency is a way of being that allows individuals and organizations to interact effectively with people who differ from them. It is a developmental approach for addressing the issues that emerge in diverse environments. In 1989, Terry Cross, executive director of the National Indian Child Welfare Association, in Portland, Oregon, published a monograph that changed many lives. Toward a Culturally Competent System of Care provides several tools for addressing the responses to diversity that we have encountered in our work. Although Dr. Cross addressed the issues of difference in mental health care, his seminal work has been the basis of a major shift in responding to difference in organizations across the country.

We like this approach for several reasons: it is proactive; it provides tools that can be used in any setting, rather than techniques that are applicable in only one environment; the focus is behavioral not emotional; and it can be applied to both organizational practices and individual behavior. Most diversity programs are used to explain the nature of diversity or the process of learning about or acquiring new cultures. This is an approach for responding to the environment shaped by its diversity. It is not an off-the-shelf program that an organization implements through training. It is not a series of mechanistic steps that everyone must follow. It is a model for shifting the culture of the organization—it is a model for individual transformation and organizational change. There are four tools for developing one’s cultural proficiency.

THE CONTINUUM: Language for describing behaviors and situations. Use the continuum to describe both healthy and nonproductive policies, practices, and individual behaviors.

THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS: Five behavioral standards. Use the essential elements as standards for planning and evaluating growth toward cultural proficiency.

THE GUIDING PRINCIPLES: Underlying values of the approach. Use the guiding principles to integrate with the core values of your organization.

THE BARRIERS: Caveats that assist in responding effectively to resistance to change. Use the barriers to determine appropriate interventions.

The Continuum Explained

There are six points along the cultural proficiency continuum that indicate unique ways of seeing and responding to difference:
Cultural destructiveness: See the difference, stomp it out. The elimination of other people’s cultures.

Cultural incapacity: See the difference, make it wrong. Belief in the superiority of one’s culture and behavior that disempowers another’s culture.

Cultural blindness: See the difference, act like you don’t. Acting as if the cultural differences you see do not matter or not recognizing that there are differences among and between cultures.

Cultural pre-competence: See the difference, respond inadequately. Awareness of the limitations of one’s skills or an organization’s practices when interacting with other cultural groups.

Cultural competence: See the difference, understand the difference that difference makes. Interacting with other cultural groups using the five essential elements of cultural proficiency as the standard for individual behavior and organizational practices.

Cultural proficiency: See the differences and respond effectively in a variety of environments. Esteeming culture; knowing how to learn about individual and organizational culture; interacting effectively in a variety of cultural environments.

The Essential Elements

The essential elements of cultural proficiency provide the standards for individual behavior and organizational practices:

- Name the differences: Assess Culture
- Claim the differences: Value Diversity
- Reframe the differences: Manage the Dynamics of Difference
- Train about differences: Adapt to Diversity
- Change for differences: Institutionalize Cultural Knowledge

The Guiding Principles

These are the core values, the foundation upon which the approach is built. Culture is a predominant force; you cannot NOT be influenced by culture. People are served in varying degrees by the dominant culture—People have group identities that they want to have acknowledged. Cultures are not homogeneous; there is diversity within groups. The unique needs of every culture must be respected.

The Barriers

The Presumption of Entitlement: Believing that all of the personal achievements and societal benefits that you have, were accrued solely on your merit and the quality of your character.

Systems of Oppression: Throughout most organizations are systems of institutionalized racism, sexism, heterosexism, ageism, and ableism. Moreover these systems are often supported and sustained without the permission of and at times without the knowledge of the people whom they benefit. These systems perpetuate domination and victimization of individuals and groups.

Unawareness of the need to adapt: Not recognizing the need to make personal and organizational changes in response to the diversity of the people with whom you and your organization interact. Believing instead, that only the others need to change and adapt to you. In our experience, the most effective and productive approach to addressing cultural diversity within an organization is cultural proficiency.

In an organization it is the policies and practices, in an individual, it is the values and behaviors that enable that organization or person to interact effectively in a culturally diverse environment. In a culturally proficient company or organization, the culture promotes inclusiveness and institutionalizes processes for learning about differences and for responding appropriately to differences. Rather than lamenting, “Why can’t they be like us?” managers and staff welcome and create opportunities to better understand who they are as individuals, while learning how to interact positively with people who differ from themselves.

Cultural proficiency is an inside-out approach, which focuses first on those who are insiders to the company or organization, encouraging them to reflect on their own individual understandings and values. It thereby relieves those identified as outsiders, the members of the excluded groups, from the responsibility of doing all the adapting. Cultural proficiency as approach to diversity surprises many people, who expect a diversity program to teach them about others. This inside-out approach acknowledges and validates the current values and feelings of people, encouraging change and challenging a sense of entitlement without threatening one’s feelings of worth.

Cultural proficiency prizes individual culture while focusing on the organization’s culture, which has a life force beyond the individuals within the company or organization. This focus removes the needs to place blame and to induce feelings of guilt. The approach involves all members of the community in determining how to align policies, practices, and procedures in order to achieve cultural proficiency. Because all of the stakeholders are deeply involved in the developmental process, there is broader based ownership, making it easier for them to commit to change. This responds to the issues that emerge when there is diversity among managers, staff and clients at a systemic level.

Building cultural proficiency requires informed and dedicated staff, committed and involved managers, and time. Employees cannot be sent to training for two days and be expected to return with solutions to all of the diversity issues in their company or organization. This approach does not involve the use of simple checklists for identifying culturally significant characteristics of individuals, which may be politically appropriate, but socially meaningless. The transformation to cultural proficiency requires time to think, reflect, decide, and change.
The culturally proficient organization closes the door on tokenism and stops the revolving door through which highly competent, motivated people enter briefly and exit quickly because they have not been adequately integrated into the organization’s culture. Culturally proficient managers can confidently deliver programs and services, knowing that their staff and clients genuinely want it and can readily receive it without having their cultural connections denied, offended, or threatened. Culturally proficient organizations can also be sure that their community perceives them as a positive, contributing force that substantively enhances the community and the organization’s position in it.

Definitions

Read the definitions for these commonly used and misused terms. Reflect on the definition comparing it to how you use the term. Note whether the definition affirms, helps to clarify, or challenges your thinking.

Culture. Everything you believe and everything you do that identifies you as a member of a group and distinguishes you from other groups. You may belong to more than one cultural group. Cultures reflect the belief systems and behaviors that are informed by ethnicity as well as other sociological factors like gender, age, sexual orientation, and physical ability. Both individuals and organizations are defined by their cultures.

Diversity. A general term for indicating that many people with many differences are present in an organization or group. Diversity refers to ethnicity, language, gender, age, ability, and sexual orientation and all other aspects of culture.

Tolerance. Putting up with differences with which one disagrees. Tolerance is first in a progression of steps that may lead to valuing diversity. Teaching tolerance is a good way to get beyond genocide or cultural destructiveness. It is the beginning of a process that moves toward cultural proficiency.

Multiculturalism. The preservation of different cultures or cultural identities within a society or nation, holding each as equally valuable to and influential upon the members of society. The educational term, multicultural refers to teaching about different cultures. Multiculturalism differs from cultural proficiency in that it reflects a state of being, whereas cultural proficiency is a process or a way of being.

Cultural Competence. A term created by Terry Cross that means interacting with one’s clients, colleagues, and community using the essential elements of cultural competence: assessing culture, valuing diversity, managing the dynamics of difference, adapting to diversity, and institutionalizing cultural knowledge.

Cultural Proficiency. The policies and practices of an organization, or the values and behaviors of an individual, which enable that organization or person to interact effectively in a culturally diverse environment. Cultural proficiency is a way of being reflected in the way an organization treats its employees, its clients, and its community.

Affirmative Action. A legally mandated approach to increasing the diversity of an organization. Focuses on having a proportional representation of all the people in the community in the organization. The intention is to have qualified people; the implementation often results in a focus on counting numbers rather than assessing qualifications.

Politically Correct. A term used to describe language that reflects sensitivity to the diversity of a group. People can act as if they are culturally proficient by using politically correct language. A culturally proficient person may be perceived as politically correct, but in reality that person is culturally correct.

Summary: The shaded areas are the most frequent responses to these questions. There is strong and clear support for maintaining a sense of connectionalism and collaboration among levels of the church. The focus of that collaboration is particularly strong in support of racial ethnic groups, leadership development, and common mission and ministry.

Summary: While connectionalism is highly valued, there is also a sense that the communication between the governing bodies is a major problem. Clearly, the governance structure is seen as a hindrance. Respondents want more focus on mission; less on rules.

Summary: It is significant that respondents struggled for consensus on what is working well. As with question one, there is support for racial ethnic ministries and programs/processes that support pastors, both in the call process and in their ministry.

Question Number Four: What is NOT working in your experience with middle governing bodies?

Summary: Nine of sixteen synod consultations identified that synods, as currently functioning, are not working, and it would seem that, as with question two, the big problem is relationships and communication. The comment, “We’re better at closing churches than at planting them,” seemed to sum up the frustration with rule-based processes vs. the messy work of evangelism and relationships. There is frustration with presbyteries that care more about their projects than they do their congregations.
PARTICIPATION AND DIALOGUE WITH THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW FOR SYNOD BORIQUÉN IN PUERTO RICO (SCARB) IN THE PC(USA) AND THE COMMISSION ON MIDDLE GOVERNING BODIES (CM-MGB) IN THE PC(USA).

Rev. Mauricio Chacón, Member and President of SCARB under the General Assembly PC(USA), and Rev. José Olagues, Member of the General Assembly Commission on Middle Governing Bodies, bring greetings to the Synod Assembly.

Rev. Mauricio Chacón presents a draft of SCARB’s report, which will be presented and discussed at the next meeting of the General Assembly Commission on Middle Governing Bodies (see Attachment).

The Moderator opens the dialogue on this item. The Moderator concedes several speaking turns for commissioners to express themselves on the matters referred by the said committee.

Rev. Mauricio Chacón and Rev. José Olagues are thanked for their presence at this Assembly.

AGREEMENTS ON THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE “FUTURE”

Rev. Rubén Ortiz Rodríguez, President of the said committee, presents the recommendations of the Report of the Committee on the “Future” (see Attachment).

The Synod Assembly considers the Report of the Committee on the “Future” and takes the following actions:

ACTION OF THE SYNOD ASSEMBLY ON RECOMMENDATIONS REGARDING MISSION: the Synod approves the adoption of the Declaration of Mission and Vision, and the Goals and Objectives in accordance with the Great Ends of the Church as presented. It is also approved that the documents on the Declaration of Mission, Financial Principles and Mission Initiatives be received for study and possible adoption in the future.

ACTION OF THE SYNOD ASSEMBLY ON RECOMMENDATIONS REGARDING THE RELATIONSHIP OF BODIES IN PUERTO RICO AND WITHIN THE PC(USA): a line is modified so that it reads—to fulfill our ordination vow and/or membership commitments (reception and confirmation). The recommendations are approved.

ACTION OF THE SYNOD ASSEMBLY ON RECOMMENDATIONS REGARDING THE ADMINISTRATION: a line is modified so that it reads—more than half of its real members. The recommendations on the administration are approved.

ACTION OF THE SYNOD ASSEMBLY ON RECOMMENDATIONS REGARDING THE MODELS STUDIED:

1. On the Recommendation that a ballot be used including all the models and that there be a vote on only one model

SYNOD AGREEMENT: it is unanimously approved that the debate rules be suspended to hold a question and answer period on the matter of the Ballot and the rules to vote on the models. There will be a committee of the whole for fifteen minutes (it is 3:10 p.m.).

REPORT OF THE SYNOD COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE: There were questions and answers on the matter of the rules to vote on the models and the Ballot.

The work of the Synod continues at 3:35 p.m.

MOTION ON THE BALLOTS: that the Ballot be done in the following manner: Two options: Option A to contain models 1 and 2 related to the PC(USA) and Option B to contain models 3-a through 3-d related to the PC in Puerto Rico.

It is properly seconded.

Amendment to the Motion: that it contain Option C (an additional option) saying “None of the above.”

It is properly seconded.

Action of the Synod: It is NOT approved.
Amendment to the Motion: so that the Ballot reads: Model A (Option 1 with models 1 and 2) regarding the PC(USA) (current relationship) and Model B (Option 2 with models 3-a through 3-d) regarding the PC in PR with a sister relationship with the PC(USA).

It is properly seconded.

There is opposition. The Moderator gives speaking turns in favor and against. The vote is taken.

Action of the Synod: The Amendment is approved.

AGREEMENT OF THE SYNOD: the amended motion is approved.

RECESS AND CONTINUATION OF THE SYNOD ASSEMBLY

The Moderator declares a ten-minute recess (it is 4:10 p.m.) to prepare the ballot. The work is continued at 4:30 p.m.

Prior to the voting a prayer is offered by Rev. Jorge D. Zijlstra Arduin (PSJ).

Vote on the Alternatives (for the Ballot):

The Moderator appoints the following persons as the Tallying Committee: Elder Sandra Marcial Ramírez (PSO), Rev. Juan Marcial Feliciano (PNO) and Elder Raúl Santiago Rivera (PSJ). The Ballot will be as follows:

Model A: Regarding the Presbyterian Church (USA) as it is presently constituted

Model B: Regarding the Presbyterian Church in Puerto Rico in a fraternal relationship with the Presbyterian Church (USA)

Voting by roll call begins.

Synod action: 33 votes for Model A and 30 votes for Model B. Model A is approved.

2. That provision be made so that the implementation of the selected model allows for the participation of all the bodies affected by the selected model.

Motion calling for the vote on Model 1 and Model 2. It is properly seconded.

There is opposition. The Moderator gives speaking turns in favor and against.

The Question is called for. It is approved.

Substitute motion: Refer to a special committee Options 1 and 2 (models) for study, analysis and negotiation; call a special synod assembly to present the report. It is properly seconded.

Synod action: In favor 30 and against 22. The Substitute Motion is approved.

SYNOD ACTION: The Substitute Motion is approved.

Motion: for the Moderator to appoint the special committee. It is properly seconded.

The triune God gives to the congregation all the gifts of the gospel necessary to being the Church. The congregation is the basic form of the church, but it is not of itself a sufficient form of the church. Thus congregations are bound together in communion with one another, united in relationships of accountability and responsibility, contributing their strengths to the benefit of the whole, and are called, collectively, the church.”

2. When Presbyterians were surveyed about the things that are valued and should be preserved in our structure, the synod-related responses were about programs and connections, not about ecclesiastical processes. It seemed to the commission that there was very little support for “oversight” and polity functions at the synod level and stronger support for those synods that collaborated with their presbyteries to find common mission, ministry, and support.

83. Ensign-George, “Cultivating Communities of Theological Friendship.” “Communities of theological friendship flourish through diversity and a wise attention to compatibility. Pastoral ministry is carried out in the midst of multiple spectra of diversity. Friendship happens in the space-between created by differences. Communities of theological friendship flourish when there is plenty of space-between. … At the same time, a community of theological friendship can only be built among people who are willing to participate in this particular community of theological friendship, with this particular group of people. This is an extension of the practice of friendshipliness. There are those who, for whatever reasons, are unable or unwilling to befriend or to be befriended. There are pairs of people who, again, for whatever reasons, are unable to serve as friends to one another. Communities of theological friendship will both be open to investigating such situations, asking whether friendship might be built together; and at the same time communities of theological friendship will have a collective wisdom in discerning when the community must move forward with those who are willing to make this journey together.

Mention of “compatibility” will be a complete non-starter for some, fearing that it is no less than a covert rejection of diversity. This anxiety can become something a bit odd. After all, the PC(USA) itself is a community that insists on a significant level of compatibility from its pastoral leaders in particular. Those leaders are asked to commit to a particular way of living out the Christian faith (a specific form of the presbyterian way) that separates us from the vast majority of Christians. Those not open to such commitment are welcome to seek pastoral leadership elsewhere. Communities of theological friendship recognize the need for diversity that genuinely stretches and the importance of willingness to join in a shared journey with a particular group of people.”

Because all these data were collected between March and June of 2011, prior to the passage of 10a and nFOG, the conversations that have ensued since the summer of 2011 are not reflected in our data. It is an interesting example of how quickly our context is changing and how important it is to find structures and a church “culture” that can respond to these changes.

87. Guder, “The Presbytery as Missional Context,” p. 3 “Perhaps the most pervasive and powerful reduction made in the course of the western church’s gradual establishment, as it became more dominant in its social and political context, and as the assumption took hold that everyone born and reared in this territories was Christian, was the fact that the essential character of mission in the biblical sense gradually faded away. Mission is not needed if everyone is already a Christian! … The contemporary exploration of the church’s essentially missional vocation challenges unquestioned attitudes formed over centuries that the church is to be defined more in terms of its maintenance than its mission. What is meant is, of course, the concern for the maintenance of the church as an institution. That concern turns the church inward, centers its attention upon itself and its members, upon its survival and their religious needs. The institutional inwardness of western church contradicts the clearly missional calling of the church in the New Testament defined by Jesus on the Mount of the Ascension: ‘You shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, and to the ends of the earth’ (Acts 1:8). Thus, Newbigin’s question can be paraphrased: How does the church truly regain its understanding of itself as called and sent, remembering that the term mission means, in fact, ‘sending’ (see John 20:21)? How does the church move beyond the idea that Christian identity is basically a geographical or cultural or organizational concept?” [emphasis ours].

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-12

Advice on Item 05-12—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The report of the General Assembly Mid Council Commission contains eight numbered recommendations for assembly action, each containing one or more specific action items. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution will address each enumerated recommendation separately, noting connections between particular recommendations.

1. General Notes on Recommendations 1–4:

These first four recommendations relate to the future of synods. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that they address complementary aspects of the same question, so that to approve any of them without approving the other three would create the potential for significant constitutional confusion. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) therefore advises that if the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Recommendation 1 to eliminate synods as councils of the church, that it consider the first four recommendations as a single motion with multiple parts.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) notes that the recommendations presume a number of constitutional amendments that are not yet before this assembly (cf. Recommendations 3 and 4). There is considerable risk in committing to a course of action on the assumption that the proposed action can be accomplished constitutionally without having the opportunity to evaluate the merits of the proposed mechanisms for implementation.

In addition, the ACC advises the assembly to review carefully the time frame for implementation of the recommendations so as to avoid the possibility of a lapse in constitutional authority to fulfill essential functions currently provided by synods prior to the full implementation of the recommendations.

The Advisory Committee on the Committee therefore advises the assembly that it would pose fewer constitutional risks to delay approval of Recommendation 1 until the assembly has also had full opportunity to review the amendments envisioned in Recommendations 3 and 4 for its implementation. If the assembly nevertheless wishes to fulfill the intent of Recommendation 1 it could answer the recommendation by instructing the Moderator to appoint a task force to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) the necessary constitutional amendments and a timeframe to accomplish Recommendations 1, 3, and 4 together. The Advisory Committee on the Committee also advises the assembly to consider carefully the merits of alternative strategies to accomplish similar ends, such as that proposed by Item 05-02 from the Presbytery of St. Andrew.

2. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution submits the following advice to the assembly regarding Recommendation 1:

Recommendation 1 contains two action items: The first action item would strike section G-3.04 in its entirety. This section of the Form of Government addresses matters relating to the synod, and would have the effect of eliminating synods as a council of the church. The second action item would amend language in G-3.03 (dealing with presbyteries) to reframe the function of presbyteries and to eliminate references to synods.

The history of the synod as a council pre-dates that of the assembly itself, the first synod having been established in 1717. The modern synod dates to 1972, when large regional synods supplanted the previous statewide synod model. Synods perform important functions in the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.): they facilitate the work of the church on a regional level; they have been the primary denominational contact with particular ministries in higher education; they have played an important role in advocacy and oversight of the denomination’s commitment to racial ethnic diversity and inclusiveness. While the particular mission functions of synods vary, many perform significant mission support both financially and in direct mission endeavors. In regards to governance, synods perform an important role as an intermediate level of administrative review and judicial process between the 173 presbyteries and the General Assembly. Synods are also uniquely empowered to form non-geographic presbyteries to support the mission of racial ethnic and immigrant communities (Book of Order, G-3.0403c).

However, there is nothing in the history or foundational principles of Reformed polity that requires the existence of synods. From a polity perspective, the benefits of a four-tiered system of governance versus a three-tiered system are pragmatic and logistical rather than theological.

While Recommendation 1 would strike section G-3.04 describing the purpose, mission, functions, responsibilities, and composition of synods, and amend G-3.03, regarding the presbytery, it does not identify substitute language to identify which purposes, functions, and responsibilities of the synod should be preserved, or how they would be preserved. The process for identification of these purposes, functions, and responsibilities is addressed in Recommendation 3. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution is unable to provide definitive advice regarding the elimination of a whole section of the Book of Order in the absence of language to replace current structures.

These two items, if approved, are intended to take effect at the end of the 222nd General Assembly (2016). Section G-6.04e specifies the date on which an amendment becomes effective and mandates that an amendment receiving the necessary affirmative votes “shall become effective one year following the adjournment of the assembly transmitting the proposed amendment.” This provision supersedes and controls the proposals of the Mid Council Commission, and would accelerate the date on which synods would cease to be councils of the church ahead of a complete plan for how the ecclesiastical responsibilities of synods would be handled.

The intention to postpone the effective date of the proposed amendments is in conflict with the clear procedures for amending the Book of Order in G-6.04, which begins “Amendments to the Book of Order shall be made only if all the following steps are completed:…” In other words, the amendment is to become effective either on the date specified in G-6.04e or not at all. If the assembly wishes to make the amendment to G-3.04 effective on a different date, it would be necessary to approve as an amendment to the Form of Government itself a provision establishing the date on which the provisions establishing the synods as a council of the church would cease to have effect (i.e., a “sunset clause”).

3. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution submits the following advice to the assembly regarding Recommendation 2:

Recommendation 2 would require existing synods to bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) plans for the transfer of assets, funds, projects, and programs of the synod. The language of the recommendation suggests that these plans would be presented to the assembly, but would not necessarily require approval by the assembly. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that the Form of Government would require assembly approval of such plans. Section G-3.0502 states,

The General Assembly has responsibility to maintain relationships with presbyteries and synods by:

a. consulting with and providing resources for presbyteries and synods as they execute their constitutional responsibilities;

b. overseeing the work of synods;

c. reviewing the records of synods, taking care to ensure that they conform to this Constitution;

d. organizing new synods, or dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining previously existing synods or portions of synods; …

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the constitutional responsibility of the General Assembly for “dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining previously existing synods,” extends to the approval of plans for the distribution of assets and continuation of programs of dissolved synods. A particular assembly may advise a future assembly of its design for how that future assembly should regard such plans, that is, with greater or lesser latitude for synod autonomy, but it may not bind the future assembly from exercising its responsibility of oversight and approval.

In addition to the above constitutional issues, there may be constitutional implications raised by the plans of particular synods when they are brought to the assembly for approval. It should be noted that the process of reallocating church property (both real and personal) is governed by G-4.02. There are tensions within this section between the missional and fiduciary functions of councils as they relate to property. Whatever processes may be proposed under Recommendation 3 for the review and approval of such plans should seek to resolve such tensions equitably and consistently.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that the time frame proposed in Recommendation 2 relies upon the delegation of assembly authority to approve synod plans to the commission envisioned in Recommendation 5, and/or to the regional administrative commissions envisioned in Recommendation 3, should a synod present an insufficient, unsatisfactory, or disputed plan to the 221st General Assembly (2014). Even so, it is possible that such a synod might be delayed in the approval or implementation of its plan beyond the 2016 deadline, requiring the synod to continue to function after the provision establishing synods has been removed from the Constitution.
4. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution submits the following advice to the assembly regarding Recommendation 3:

Recommendation 3 seeks to address the absence of specific constitutional language in Recommendation 1 by instructing the Moderator to appoint a committee to work with the Stated Clerk to present necessary amendments to the Constitution and The Manual of the General Assembly, to create five regional administrative commissions of the General Assembly for specified purposes of mission facilitation, boundary alignment, and preservation of historic racial ethnic ministries. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that the charge for these commissions may be too limited in prospect. Essential functions currently exercised by synods, such as administrative review, and the power to enforce the church’s commitment to racial ethnic diversity and inclusion, are not identified in the charge for these commissions. While all constitutional functions pertaining to oversight of councils would devolve to the General Assembly following the elimination of synods, it would seem prudent to allow for the assembly to delegate to regional commissions additional powers that may be necessary for the timely and effective review and remediation of issues at the presbytery level. Failure to do so may have the effect of increasing the need to resort to judicial process as a means of remediation of issues.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that it seems unwise to adopt an action in Recommendation 1 that would mandate the elimination of an entire level of governance without having had the opportunity to evaluate proposed amendments and structures to ensure the continuation of essential functions of governance.

5. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution submits the following advice to the assembly regarding Recommendation 4:

Recommendation 4 seeks to address how judicial process would function in the absence of synod permanent judicial commissions. It proposes empowering the Moderator to appoint a committee (evidently distinct from that in Recommendation 3) to propose amendments to the Constitution and The Manual of the General Assembly to create “the necessary number” of judicial commissions “rooted in the various regions” to perform the functions currently performed by synod PJC. As with Recommendation 3, this recommendation is sparse in detail, and leaves several important questions unanswered, among them:

   a. The relationship of regional GAPJCs to the national GAPJC. How will the regional judicial commissions function as commissions of the General Assembly distinctly from the General Assembly’s own PJC? Section F-3.0202 provides as a foundation of our polity that “… presbyters shall come together in councils in regular gradation.” By assigning two levels of judicial review to a single council (the General Assembly, through regional and national judicial commissions), the principle of regular gradation is challenged. Will there be provision that regional commissions be comprised of persons drawn from the region under jurisdiction of each commission? It is implicit in the principle of regular gradation that those exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction over a particular part of the church be drawn from that part of the church, except where conflict of interest or rotation of service may exclude a lower council from representation.

   b. The power of authoritative interpretation. Section G-6.02 provides for authoritative interpretation of the Constitution “through a decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in a remedial or disciplinary case.” If regional commissions are permanent judicial commissions of the General Assembly, will they be empowered to establish authoritative interpretations of the Constitution? Would provision be made for decisions in one region to be binding on that region and not on others, pending a decision by the national GAPJC, as with U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeal?

   c. The adjudication of cases in process. At some point, synod PJC would cease to function and their responsibility for cases in process transferred to regional judicial commissions. How would issues arising out of this transition be addressed concerning obtaining stays of enforcement, determinations on preliminary questions, and agreements or settlements at pretrial conference?

As with Recommendation 3, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that this recommendation requires the assembly to act on the elimination of structures without a clear understanding of what will replace them.

6. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution submits the following advice to the assembly regarding Recommendation 5:

Recommendation 5 would instruct the Moderator to appoint a commission to work in consultation with the Stated Clerk to act as the General Assembly for purposes of organizing, dividing, uniting, or combining synods, and approving the organization, division, union or combination of presbyteries (per G-3.0502) between the meetings of the General Assembly, until regional administrative commissions have been constituted. This would effectively continue some of the existing powers of the Mid Council Commission under a newly formed commission. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that these powers constitutionally belong to the assembly, and that the assembly may delegate them to one or more commissions if it chooses. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the assembly that the approval of various non-geographic presbyteries as envisioned in Recommendation 5 would give considerable latitude to this commission to authorize significant departures from the historic practice of the church. These will be discussed more fully in... the advice regarding Recommendation 6. Since a commission is empowered to act as the assembly, a liaison from the Advisory Committee on the Constitution should be appointed to advise the commission, consistent with Standing Rule E.3.f in The Manual of the General Assembly.

7. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution submits the following advice to the assembly regarding Recommendation 7:

Recommendation 7 consists of two action items that propose amendments to the Constitution to provide for two experiments in Presbyterian polity on a time-limited basis. The first action item would allow for synods to form non-geographic presbyteries within their bounds for “particular missional purposes” in addition to the existing power to create them to support racial ethnic and immigrant congregations, with certain specific presbytery powers shared jointly with a congregation’s presbytery of origin. The second would allow the transfer of individual congregations to presbyteries (either geographic or non-geographic) in the same or adjoining synods, while retaining an “affiliate” relationship with the presbytery of origin, which would also share with the receiving presbytery certain rights regarding church property and congregational division or dismissal. Section G-3.0106 states clearly that “mission determines the forms and structures needed for the church to do its work.” The proposals are consistent with this constitutional affirmation. In addition, the proposals include enabling constitutional amendments that are adequately specific so as to preserve the unity of constitutional authority. The advice on each of these proposals will be addressed separately.

   a. The first proposal, regarding non-geographic presbyteries, concerns a topic on which the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has advised the assembly on several occasions. Our advice on related proposals is attached to Items 05-01, 05-05, 05-08, and 05-10). The Advisory Committee on the Constitution has consistently expressed its concern over the creation of non-geographic presbyteries. They challenge the foundational principle of the unity of the church expressed in F-1.0302a, may intentionally or unintentionally compromise the church’s commitment to racial and ethnic inclusivity, and risk the division of the church into communities of the like-minded, with the effect of excluding the voice of God as God may speak through those with whom we are in disagreement. This particular proposal, in distinction from others, mitigates some of these concerns through the time-limited nature of the amendment, the requirement of the consent of the affected presbyteries, the sharing of certain powers with the presbyteries of origin during the period of experimentation, and the requirement of a valid mission rationale.

   Nevertheless, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that there are no constitutional restrictions on the ability of congregations with similar mission purposes to unite in common mission without the requirement of establishing a common structure of governance. It also advises the assembly that establishing temporary and fluid structures of governance creates issues related to their dissolution, such as the disposition of common assets and the membership of newly ordained members which are not addressed in the recommendation.

   If the assembly chooses to approve this recommendation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution raises the concern that churches seeking permission to sell property or be dismissed to another Reformed body would require the permission of their presbyteries of origin, but those churches would not be guaranteed voice or vote in that decision. Fundamental fairness would dictate that some accommodation be made to grant voice, if not vote, in these decisions.

   b. The second proposal concerns transfer of individual congregations to other presbyteries (either geographic or non-geographic) in the same or an adjoining synod. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution raises the same concerns regarding the unity of the church and the value of diversity as with the first proposal. In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds this proposal erodes the essential unity of the church as expressed in F-3.0201 and F-3.0202 by regarding congregational mission as somehow disconnected from that of other churches in its geographic vicinity, or of the shared mission of the geographical presbytery. This proposal has the added protection, however, that either presbytery could rescind the new relationship and restore the church to its original presbytery after consultation with the congregation. It should be noted that such “affiliate congregations” would have voice (and, in some cases, vote) in the presbytery of origin, whereas those dismissed (potentially) to the same (non-geographic) presbytery under the first proposal would lack that voice.

8. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution submits the following advice to the assembly regarding Recommendation 8:

Recommendation 8 would establish a task force to review the nature and function of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly with respect to their relationship and support of mid councils. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that such a task force is within the power of the assembly to create.

9. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution submits the following advice to the assembly regarding Recommendation 8:

Recommendation 8 recommends that the Moderator be empowered to appoint a national Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force to address various concerns expressed to the commission during its research. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that it is within the power of the assembly to create such a task force.
Advice and Counsel on Item 05-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

This report proposes major changes in the newly adopted Form of Government and related manuals to replace synods with five regional commissions (in the short-term), and to allow non-geographical presbyteries defined by their own mission emphases, with the use of at least five Moderator-appointed commissions, committees, and task forces, the last of which to be a national task force to address racial-ethnic concerns.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 05-12 be disapproved.

Rationale

Sometimes the cure is worse than the disease. In this case, a massive set of changes is being proposed that affect not only the structure of the church but its ethos of mutual accountability within a Presbyterian system. Under the goal of “flattening” the denomination’s structure, the Mid Council report would invest enormous authority in five commissions and committees to be appointed by the General Assembly Moderator. Synods, in consultation with their constituent presbyteries but not the General Assembly, would develop plans to disburse their assets. Under the banner of experimentation in governance, a basically congregational emphasis seems invited with limits placed on both the role of the General Assembly and the presbyteries. And while it is good to encourage missional combinations of congregations, the recommendation of non-geographic presbyteries threatens to balkanize the church into covenants of the like-minded. In the current climate, while claiming to want more “trust” and even “mutual submission” (p. 23), this proposal seems likely to weaken connectionalism and exacerbate division further.

Little analysis is presented as to the size and costs of these commissions and committees, how their decisions might be reviewed or appealed, and how their funding is to be drawn from a church-wide structure that is to be partially dissolved. Item 05-02 from the Presbytery of St. Andrew would wisely refocus the original intent of the assignment given to this Commission on Mid Councils and proposes the formation a new committee. There is a big difference between a focused plan to redesign regional coordination in a cost-effective way by restructuring or eliminating synods and a theologically narrow but administratively expansive desire to restructure the denomination at unknown cost.

In historic Presbyterian polity, there is a representative structure of mutual accountability running from the congregation to the General Assembly with policy set by the most church-wide deliberative process. Just as individual congregations are accountable to presbyteries and hold their properties in trust for the whole church, so presbyteries have been accountable through synods, which are in turn reviewed by the General Assembly. The functions of synods are not solely review and judicial process; they have performed a range of regional mission functions not treated fully in the report that are not specified in the general assignments given to the regional administrative commissions. The non-geographic presbytery recommendations would dramatically change the balance between local autonomy and national unity, and would replace our organic connectionalism with a voluntary-association model.

The report makes much of the “disestablishment” of mainline Protestantism, yet does not address the original Reformed theological purposes for the church’s unity—indepenedence from the state and other forces. The strength of Presbyterian polity was to help it resist cultural trends as well as expand its witness to God’s sovereignty over all of life. Historian Lefferts Loetscher, in analyzing the explicit property trust provision put into the Book of Order in 1980, summarized the theological purposes of our form of conciliar governance: “Calvin did not seek disestablishment of the church, but he did seek to build up the church’s internal self-government to the point where it could resist corrupting pressures from civil government or from other sources. [this is to see] … the church’s ecclesiastical government as a protection of its spiritual ideals and as a means of fulfilling them” (Lefferts Loetscher, “Presbyterian Church Property,” The Presbyterian Outlook, Feb. 11, 1980, p. 5).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is particularly concerned with the nature of the “missional” church that is to be recreated in the absence of significant attention to economic constraints and any corporate social witness or education. In the past, in fact, one of the functions of synods not mentioned in the report was their support for campus ministries to educational institutions. But the “Financial Realities” of what some have called our “lesser depression” are not mentioned until page 31, and only receive significant attention when the work of particular presbyteries is described near the end. There is much organizational and corporate consultant language, but the basic assignment to the church of caring for others and supporting our weaker members goes unmentioned. A generally idealized picture of the economy, globalization, and the “emergent frontier” is presented on pages 18–19, for example, while the major employment challenges for young people go unmentioned. As for the “flatter” world, it is one of enormously centralized corporate, medical, and research university bureaucracies that concentrate large amounts of wealth and political power.

The attitude of the report toward administrative structures and the social-ethical commitments of the church seems broadly dismissive whenever “bureaucracy,” “regulation,” and “social proclamations” are mentioned. One would not know that the church had a public role in civil rights, caring for the earth, resisting wars, advancing women, and addressing a host of human needs, while producing liturgies, resources, and programs to present the Gospel to people at all stages of the life cycle. Those denominational efforts to present a comprehensive set of programs are not fairly termed “top down enforced alignment,” nor was it primarily “regulatory.” Yet for this report, the post-WWII denomination seems to have been primarily about “complex and cumbersome bureaucracies” (13).

True, in a “less resourced” church, it is harder to sustain programs of any kind, but congregations (and presbyteries) sometimes also shift resources away from the “bureaucratic mid councils” because they prefer to disengage from some activities of the larger church. The majority of congregations that provide some level of support to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) clearly share a vision of what constitutes a fuller definition of the church and of how the councils, including the General Assembly mission agencies, complement each other in being a whole church. The impression conveyed—without representative data of any kind—is of a disdain for any structure beyond the congregation. Ecumenical cooperation and organization is not mentioned at all. How one frames the problem and how one uses the words says a lot about the basic assumptions behind the report’s “discipleship in a post-Christendom context.”

Only when we get to the unavoidable matter of the racial ethnic ministries sustained by synods does the report ever use the word “injustice” (the word, “justice,” is never used). Then we have a proposed “task force” that would cover all racial matters, but without the status or power of the “commissions” recommended elsewhere. Yet it is here that demographic realities intrude more on the report’s management consultant language, and this is not only about the need to reach out to a growing racial ethnic population (though how well do those communities trust our “transformative leadership?”).

The demographic data and analysis in Robert Putnam and Dennis Campbell’s thorough new book, American Grace (2011), raises questions about the repeated and formulaic language about “missional” that only generalizes negatively about social issues. Putnam and Campbell show that young people in increasing numbers are leaving the mainline denominations and the Roman Catholic Church because they take religion to be intolerant, a viewpoint influenced disproportionately by messages from the Religious Right. Social issues—which the report admits do not cause loss of members generally—create what the report calls “divisive debates and polarizing votes.” Its implicit answer: don’t have them. Yet of all the issues the church has struggled with, it is ironically acceptance of homosexuality that most marks young people in our culture. For them to hear, “God loves everyone—except them,” accelerates the weakness of mainline Protestantism even when we [as PC(USA)] are no longer the ones officially saying those words.

Putnam and Campbell also look at the danger of some congregations to become “echo-chambers” of the views of their leaders. A similar danger could lie in the strengthening of “echo-chamber” presbyteries, further from church-wide values and closer to gated communities.

Thus the report, while condemning the “political, regulatory, and institutional approaches to problem solving,” is a very political document. One does not need to agree with all General Assembly positions, or celebrate the operation of all agency offices, to know that “to get back to mission and ministry” will still require the church to honor the relationships, memories, and hopes that are part of our current organizational life. It is also pretty clear from the 2008 credit crash that “de-regulation” in itself is not a solution; nor is the Reformed tradition in general terribly libertarian.

Finally, the report’s attack on “bureaucratic mentality” is questionable when the report states, “As a commission, our deep desire is to see the whole church engaged in a wholesale process of reinvigorating congregations through reinventing presbyteries” (p. 34). Some of the report’s review of management consultant theories is probably helpful, but it is not theologically solid enough a vision and its multiplicity of commissions sound like an uncertain trumpet to dubious and repeated restructure, rather than a means to reinvigorate congregations.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012), in response to Item 05-12, to approve an alternate resolution to read as follows:

“2. Empower the appointed commission to develop strategies to address the questions raised in the reports noted above, and to be granted adequate budget for this work.

“3. Direct the commission, in consultation with representative groups, to develop strategies toward the path forward for the PC(USA)

“a. for the development and support of ministries and structures that support and grow established and emerging racial ethnic congregations;

“b. for the development and support of ministries and structures that support and grow multicultural congregations;
“c. for the development and support of ministries and structures that support new immigrant congregations;

“d. for the growth of understanding of the issues race, culture, and ethnicity raise within the Christian community, including development of churchwide strategies to raise consciousness of white privilege.

“5. Give representation on the commission to the following groups:

“a. racial ethnic caucuses

“b. new immigrant congregations and ministries

“c. racial ethnic congregations

“d. multicultural congregations

“e. Women of Color Joint Working Group

“f. mid council staff

“g. ACREC

“h. GACOR;

“and that all decisions would be made by consensus in order to ensure voice for all commission members.

“6. Direct the commission to consult with other groups as needed, both within and outside the PC(USA), to develop workable and sustainable strategies.

“7. Bring recommendations to the 221st General Assembly (2014).”

Rationale

Due diligence has not been brought to bear in discerning the way forward in restructuring the church for mission and ministry. In particular, the elimination of synods creates difficulty for racial ethnic Presbyterians, who have often turned to synods for assistance and support for racial ethnic ministry, resourcing, and, when needed, judicial cases.

Additionally, the recommendation supporting the formation of nongeographic presbyteries based on agreement has no historical precedent and cannot be supported by Scripture, our theological tradition, or our confessions.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns hears echoes of voices from across the church in the report’s Recommendation 8, which calls for the formation of a National Racial Ethnic Ministry Task Force. Specifically in reports to this General Assembly, calls have been made for:

• a national consultation to develop strategies and collaborate on growing new and existing African American congregations and communities of faith in the PC(USA) (Item 16-03, African American Church Growth Strategy Report, Recommendation 1);

• the development of a national strategy for Hispanic/Latino Church Growth, and infrastructure built to support this new strategy (Item 10-17, Hispanic/Latino/a Leadership Conversation Group Report, Recommendation e.);

• a national consultation to develop strategies and policies to support racial ethnic, multicultural, and new immigrant church growth in the PC(USA) (Special Task Force to Study Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Church Growth, Recommendations 1–6);

• recommendations to develop effective strategies for the development of racial ethnic and new immigrant worshipping communities; train seminary students in emerging cultural realities, and develop strategies within our seminaries to work toward curricular and faculty reform and change, that we might train racial ethnic and new immigrant leaders more effectively; develop multilingual resources and translation capacities to better witness within our increasingly diverse society; explore disparities in compensation between those of more and less represented groups in our church; develop resources to support the growth of new immigrant ministries and congregations, and increase the understanding among Presbyterians of white privilege that we might repent and be renewed and empowered for more faithful service (Item 16-07, Report of the Special Committee on the Nature of the Church in the 21st Century, Recommendations 1.c., 3.a., d., e., 4., 5., 6.b., c., f., and 8, respectively, page 1462).
These, in addition to the recommendation from the Mid Council Commission to develop a National Racial Ethnic Ministry Task Force, make it clear that while Presbyterians have been thinking about racial ethnic and new immigrant ministries for over a century—and while many faithful ministries have been launched in many contexts that have borne much fruit—we know and are voicing in many arenas our awareness that there is still much work to do. Race, culture, and language still divide us, marring the image of Christ we share with a world in need and blunting our witness to the good news. The current excitement about developing “1001 New Worshipping Communities” will not be realized without the engagement and investment of racial ethnic Presbyterians. To date, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has not addressed issues of race and culture sufficiently to ensure either that the needed engagement would happen, or that the voices of racial ethnic Presbyterians would be heard in the conversation.

Therefore, to faithfully steward the resources entrusted to us by taking a proactive approach to a number of overlapping initiatives and recommendations, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to answer all the recommendations noted above with the approval of this recommendation.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-12

Comment on Item 05-12—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

Rationale

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) expresses its deep gratitude to the members of the Mid Council Commission for the faithfulness and imagination with which they engaged their important work. The Mid Council Commission Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) offers a bold and welcome call to “reinvigorating presbyteries as locus of support for missional congregations.” Such a call holds bright promise in strengthening the witness of the church in the world and the commission has brought forward an important contribution in placing these issues before the General Assembly. The very boldness of the report’s recommendations regarding non-geographic presbyteries, however, requires a careful and deliberate consideration of our collective understanding of both the function and the ecclesial character of presbyteries.

With such important matters at stake, and because the report does not fully include adequate recommendations for guidelines, processes, and practices for addressing the administrative and ecclesial issues raised by a decision to undertake such extensive structural and institutional change, COGA believes that a more measured approach is required.

Moreover, COGA has raised questions about the long-term consequences (or implications) of the report’s recommendations regarding non-geographic presbyteries that would impact the essence of the church’s life together, including

- the prospect of like-minded presbyteries that sacrifice a vital witness to the reconciling grace of God in Jesus Christ, which is made possible by unity within a context of diversity;
- the potential of realigned presbyteries configured in ways that result in stark disparity between those with access to substantial human and financial resources and those lacking such access;
- the unintended consequence of the erosion of existing patterns of missional activity across presbytery boundaries;
- a disruption of the very fellowship that prompts the church in its obligation to discern together God’s will for our lives; and
- the potential compromising of the church’s witness to issues of justice and unity within the church and society, contributing to the further polarization of both.

Therefore, COGA urges the assembly to refer the above listed recommendations to a task force to further discuss, refine, and bring to the 221st General Assembly (2014) recommendations that consider the composition and organization of the presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in ways that reinvigorate their capacity to support missional congregations, and advance the ecclesial nature and character of those presbyteries, within the unity of the church. The Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012) will name the task force. It will be composed of an equal number of persons from the Mid Council Commission, COGA, and commissioners to the 220th General Assembly (2012). The optimal size of such a task force is twelve-to-fifteen persons. The Office of the General Assembly, including the coordinator of Mid Council Relations, will provide staff support to the task force.
Comment on Item 05-12—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Recommendation 8 of Item 05-12 and offers the following comments:

Background

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) has been a keen observer of this item of business before the members of the commission were appointed to service. The GACOR designated a member to attend and observe all of the Mid Council Commission meetings because the scope given to them by the 219th General Assembly (2010) was so critical to the ways they anticipated the PC(USA) would organize itself for ministry and mission going forward. That decision was confirmed at several points along the way and continues. The GACOR commends the members of the commission for their diligent work, their loving care, and their faithful engagement with one another and the larger church for the entire two years they met. Gaining an appreciation for their work and perspective we respectfully offer these comments in hopes that they will provide context and uncover unanticipated consequences of the directions pointed to in their recommendations.

The church has met in councils long before there were bishops and dioce— in fact, Presbyterians trace councils to the account in Acts 15 of the Council of Jerusalem. Councils provide “the mutual interconnection of the church” and that interconnection is “a sign of the unity of the church” (Book of Order, G-3.0101). The Body of Christ, the church is held together in our Reformed understanding by the sinews of councils. In the Bible, 1 Corinthians 12 is a powerful Scripture in the ministry and life of committees on representation and reminds us of the essential metaphor of church as embodied (connecting all human diversity, in all its myriad parts for the glory of the One God to create a singular Church). Councils are an essential part of our witness, not merely a way we decide and govern. Synods are not merely a place where marginalized communities yearning for justice find some remedy and support, they also “nurture a covenant community of disciples of Christ” and “help congregations and the church … to be faithful participants in the mission of Christ” (Book of Order, G-3.0101). Councils are found at every level of the church—congregation (session), presbytery, synod, and general assembly.

It is in setting the context and content (flesh and bone) of what it is to be councils of the church that the functions of committees on representation are given in G-3.0103, the section titled Participation and Representation.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) has written an extensive comment on Item 05-12 (as well as responding to Items 16-07, 10-17, and 16-03 as they share similar shared disaffection and disappointment with the current state of affairs, as well as shared diagnoses of the church from the perspectives of particular communities of color within the larger church). The GACOR supports their innovative recommendation that may more efficiently address the shared concerns while strengthening the impact of their gifts of new sight for the larger church. All of these actions came independent of one another and each strikes a note that harmonizes when seen together. We are at time of great convergence and schism within the life of the PC(USA). It is all around us. The GACOR commends for your consideration the comment written by ACREC and should the assembly approve of its recommended action, GACOR commits itself to supporting that body.

The changes to the Book of Order recommended in this report, if approved by the assembly and sent to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes, will take effect at the close of the 222nd General Assembly (2016). They will have profound effect on the ways the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) organizes its life and ministry in councils. The GACOR respectfully offers the following comments and recommendations:

Comment 1—Recommendations 1and 2

The very first recommendation makes two radical changes to the councils of the church. Each impacts committees on representation in mid councils and at the assembly.

• Removing council status from synods, in Recommendation 1.a., has severe ramification for committees on representation. The GACOR receives reports from the sixteen synods (the next lower council) as its way of reviewing their work and maintaining relationships of mutual support. The removal of synods means that the next lower council becomes the 173 presbytery committees on representation. With an annual report from each council, the review and relational work of the GACOR has expanded just shy of 1,100 percent. This will necessarily require adjustments to the way these elected leaders spend their time and demands a more traditional role of reviewing reports at the exact time that the GACOR is exploring less regulatory means to fulfill its functions and seeking ways to be encouraging the assembly level and the church’s lower councils to be equipped and equipping for giving “full expression,” and providing “full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices” (Book of Order, G-3.0103). The work has to be re-imagined and reconfigured if sixteen elected members who meet twice a year are going to be able to stay in relationship (providing accountability and encouragement) with 173 other councils.
Synods are constituted from the selection of commissioners from their presbyteries. The membership is selected by its lower councils and its leadership is nominated from that same community. Synods connect their neighboring councils. Perhaps the number of synods is no longer serving the needs of today’s church, but we respectfully question the removal of them all together as having deep consequences upon the connection and relations among the councils themselves. The changes to G-3.03 to connect presbyteries with the assembly in a post-synod reality are profound. Included at Recommendation 1.b. is the insertion of a new section at G-3.0302, which creates a new function for presbyteries to connect with other presbyteries (but not necessarily through the next higher council, the assembly) and the assembly. While the commission reported hearing strong value placed on synod by communities of color, GACOR reminds the assembly that persons of color are not the only persons who experience systemic discriminatory practice, suffer disparities, and have outcomes and options for ministry circumscribed simply because they are part of that community. There are other groups who share experiences of being “othered” and excised from community. The specificity of the inserted responsibility of “a. consulting with other presbyteries in their region about creating regional mission partnerships for racial ethnic advocacy and support, mission, and ministry projects, and other programs of shared life, diversity, and connection to the larger church” (proposed insertion at G-3.0302 in recommendation 1.b.) does not expressly cover persons with disabilities, women, youth, or the other categories of persons mentioned in F-1.0403. The constituencies extended promises by synods as councils who attend to this work are not included with this new responsibility.

- Recommendation 2 concerns itself with the stewardship of “assets, funds, projects, and programs” and gives a deadline for that work.

- Recommendations 3 and 4 concern themselves with the creation of interim bodies (committees) to plan and recommend the creation and composition of five regional administrative commissions (Recommendation 3) and five regional judicial commissions (Recommendation 4) respectively. The committees will guide the transition from synods to those regional commissions. Recommendation 5 empowers the moderator to create a commission and outlines its powers given by the assembly to work with the Stated Clerk to realign boundaries of presbyteries and synods and organize new synods and presbyteries until such time as the regional commissions are comprised. No less than three bodies are created to make this transition. Appointed by only one person, power and privilege are dangerously concentrated in this interim period. What is being dismantled? It is the connective tissues of the sixteen synod councils in the Body of Christ, and in their place five regional administrative commissions “empowered to consider and conclude matters referred to it by a council. The designating council shall state specifically the scope of the commission’s powers and any restrictions on those powers” (G-3.0109). Once created, they act within their scope in place of the council that created them (in this case the assembly). These recommendations (3–5) do not specify the powers or limits of the final ten regional commissions, but instead create further committees appointed by the moderator to recommend to a subsequent assembly (the council creating them) what powers the commissions will have. There’s a lot of opportunity to create very small groups who will have tremendous power and influence. One strength of councils is how they the function as corporate bishop (remaining constituted by election of its lower councils), discerning in that community derived from below, the will of God for the Church. Commissions are created from above (a higher council) and empowered so as to not require returning to their creator council except as specifically limited by that body to do so at their creation.

- What is troubling is that this commission has been given a council function without the accountability of a council to its higher and lower council. How does a commission administer for a region and also provide for the functions of G-3.0103? The GACOR is skeptical and the commission has not attempted to answer. Commissions are empowered to act and not require check, how then does it monitor itself and provide accountability for the councils above (assembly) and below (presbytery)?

- How shall these commissions have their leadership selected? That is yet to be determined but the bodies that will suggest their details are moderator-appointed and as a commission of General Assembly the higher council with authority, it seems reasonable that regular aspects of leadership selection might be retained with either moderator(s) appointments or by trusting the nominating process of the council, or another solution not yet imagined but whose likely source is the assembly. Instead of the bottom up model of councils in subsequent levels of authority, the commissions disrupt this structure and usurp it. Instead of connection, relying on mutual support, the councils of presbyteries (are tasked with connecting as it please with other presbyteries) and is held separate from assembly by the imposition of the assembly empowered but independent commissions (two for each region—one administrative and one judicial). This new structure will surely shift power. Any shift away from shared power should raise a concern in the Body of Christ disrupting the connections regional commission of General Assembly will likely select regional persons from some persons or bodies of the assembly (national council) level.

- Enabling the creation of non-geographic presbyteries, in Recommendation 6, holds the possibility for the contraction of those 173 or more likely the expansion from that number. The minimum being only ten congregations fractures the current communion into smaller, separate components, now allowed to organize around affinity for ministry and mission. Fewer sinews and more bones and muscles, how is this body to stay intact? Shall ten teaching elders be enough to hold the faithful into a community of mutual accountability, ministry and shared mission?

Comment 4

- Recommendation 7 intends to create a task force in order to review the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly “with respect to their relationship with and support of mid councils as they serve the vitality and mission of congregations in our changing context.” They have now redefined the purpose of the council to be valued “as they serve the vitality and mission of congregations.” This is a radical reversal of how councils related in Body of Christ with many parts. Now it seems that indeed the neck serves the foot.

Comment 5

- Where the commission has responded to racial ethnic constituencies who highly value synods as councils and mourn their loss and their value for supporting the ministries, holding presbyteries accountable to the shared principles and administering justice when persons are harmed, is with Recommendation 8 and the establishment of a National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force. The GACOR is happy to be able to designate a leader to serve in this body. The task force will support concern for loss of justice work at synod for racial ethnic communities.

- The GACOR is troubled that the expression in this recommendation is in disappointment in the substance and direction of racial ethnic ministries rather than the councils and their ministries that fail to secure necessary resources and support.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

GAMC/OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-12

Comment on Item 05-12—From the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly.

The General Assembly Mission Council recognizes the important role that many synods have played in the lives of racial ethnic persons in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). At the synod level, racial ethnic leaders received training in evangelism and church growth; institutes were offered to train and equip racial ethnic youth and young adults, and Women of Color events were held. In synods, racial ethnic people were able to find allies to help them with issues in presbyteries and communities that were too large for a few to address, and they engaged in leadership development designed to empower them to witness in communities that were socio-politically and economically disenfranchised. Finally, it was at the synod level where racial ethnic people could gather and address policies of councils that significantly impacted them. In other words, synods represented the platform from which the disciples were nurtured, equipped, and empowered.

Historically, African American Presbyterians, for example, who have the greatest number of racial ethnic congregations and worshiping communities in the PC(USA), received nurturing, mentoring, training, leadership development, networking, assistance with vocational placements, and shared community through synods. At one time in the history of the church, all-Black governing bodies existed. It was through these governing bodies that congregations and individuals received education, nurturance, enlivened spirituality, acceptance, and recognition of what it meant to be “Black and Presbyterian.”

When the Presbyterian church reunited and became the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), “all-Black” governing bodies were dissolved, and the Articles of Agreement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (Article 8.2 of Appendix B, PC(USA) Constitution, Book II, Book of Order) read:

… Racial ethnic members in the United States (Presbyterians of African, Hispanic and Asian descent and Native Americans) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision-making of the Church, and shall be able to form caucuses. …

The historic caucuses in the PC(U.S.A.) include the National Black Presbyterian Caucus (NBPC), the Native American Consulting Committee (NACC), the National Hispanic-Latino Presbyterian Caucus (NHLPC) and the National Asian Presbyterian Council (NAPC). When the Racial Ethnic Caucuses & Councils (formerly The Cross Caucus) met at the Big Tent in 2011, the gathering also included representatives from the National Council of Korean Presbyterian Churches (NCKPC), the National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus (NMEPC), and representatives from networks of new immigrant groups from Africa, South Asia, and Portuguese-speaking countries.

The General Assembly Commission on Mid Councils recognizes that synods have played a unique and particular role for racial ethnic Presbyterians. In the commission’s report there is a desire to maintain, protect, and even expand a platform for racial ethnic and immigrant Presbyterians should synods no longer exist as ecclesiastical councils. “The Outlines of Possibilities: Synods as Multi-Presbytery Missional Partnerships,” section of the report reads as follows:
Many members of the racial ethnic Presbyterian community have contributed greatly to the history and vibrancy of the PC(USA); initiating and modeling leadership, guiding the church to more socially and theologically responsible posture in its witness to the world, creatively enhancing the form and substance of worship, sensitizing and educating the church regarding manners of race, and providing a unique Presbyterian witness of the ministry of Jesus Christ. The call for the church to review and reorganize its commitment and approach to racial ethnic ministry is significant both within and beyond the notion of a Presbyterian reality that removes the ecclesiastical functions from synods. The need to discover a posture from which genuine ministry partnership can thrive is vital to the current health and future relevance of the church.

Recommendation 8 of the G.A. Commission on Mid Councils Report calls for the Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to appoint a National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force to review, assess, and explore the call to, responsibility in, and vision for, racial ethnic ministry within the PC(USA). In the recommendation, this task force is charged specifically to address the issue of language access, sensitivity, and resourcing (particularly as relates to the Spanish and Korean languages) within the existing frame of council operation, as well as within the context of any regional administrative structure that might emerge as a result of the repurposing of synods. Furthermore, the recommendations reads that this task force will develop a new mechanism to review the models in mid councils and congregations of racial ethnic ministries that are operating successfully in the denomination and explore the viability of a nationally organized racial ethnic ministry advocacy model on the local and/or cluster congregation level.

The GAMC supports the exploration of determining models for language access, sensitivity, resourcing, and advocacy of racial ethnic persons in new structures, should synods no longer exist as ecclesiastical councils. While attending to “language access, sensitivity, and resourcing” are important concerns in cross-cultural contexts, hearing directly from racial ethnic Presbyterians, who would be most affected should synods no longer exist as ecclesiastical councils, about the role that the synod holds in the lives of racial ethnic Presbyterians and what future support might likely be, is equally important.

The conclusion of the Report of the General Assembly Mid Council Commission Racial Ethnic Strategy Task Force reads as follows:

At the end of the day the boundaries of our charge as a commission limited the degree to which we could prescriptively address these matters. Additionally, all of the primary stakeholders were not present at the table of our discussion. …With this aim in mind, we conclude that it would be most productive for all of the primary stakeholders in the PC(USA) frame of racial ethnic ministry to be convened and focused on an agenda of reflection, assessment, and imaginatively bold visioning—for the purpose of forging an effective and historically responsible model for moving forward in the effort to revitalize racial ethnic ministry on the national and congregational level.

The GAMC is eager to play an even stronger role in resourcing this important area in our denomination’s life. Thus, this input might better be received by a consultation held across the denomination within the first year following this decision, jointly sponsored by the existing synods and the GAMC, specifically the Office of Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries, including representation from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns. The purpose of this consultation would be to talk directly with racial ethnic and new immigrant leaders about what they believe would be most needed and helpful. As each synod may individually begin to respond to its new status, if the synod is eliminated as a council, it will be vitally important that the needs of racial ethnic leaders and members not get lost. A consultation would also present an arena for discussions to occur with young racial ethnic and immigrant Presbyterians about their needs, which may differ from those of other generations.

The GAMC is eager to work actively and intentionally with the church to share ideas on how to provide future service and ministry that equips and supports racial ethnic Presbyterians in regions throughout the church. We see this as an opportunity to partner even more closely with the racial ethnic communities and individuals whom we serve.

Item 05-13

[The assembly approved Item 05-13 with amendment. See pp. 20, 23]

The Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

1. Shall G-3.0109a be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “a. Judicial Commissions

   “Judicial commissions shall consider and decide cases of process for the council or councils according to the Rules of Discipline. Sessions shall perform the function of a judicial commission for the congregation; each council higher than the session shall elect a permanent judicial commission (see D-5.0000). Cooperating synods may elect a joint permanent judicial commission pursuant to G-3.0404 and D-5.0101.

2. Shall G-3.0109b(6) be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “(6) (by all councils) making pastoral inquiry into persons accused of sexual abuse of another person (D-10.0401c) when jurisdiction in a judicial proceeding against such persons has ended due to death or renunciation of the accused; such inquiries shall not be understood as judicial proceedings but shall seek to reach a determination of truth related to the accusation and to make appropriate recommendations to the designating council.

“A commission of presbytery, synod, or General Assembly shall be composed of ruling elders and teaching elders in numbers as nearly equal as possible and sufficient to accomplish their work. A quorum of any commission shall be established by the designating council or councils but in no case shall be less than a majority of its members (except as limited by D-5.0204).

“A commission of a session shall be composed of at least two ruling elders, and a teaching elder in an installed or temporary relationship with the congregation governed by that session or a ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service.

“A commission shall keep a full record of its proceedings and shall submit that record to the council or councils for incorporation into its records. Actions of a commission shall be regarded as actions of the council or councils that created it. A commission may be assigned additional duties as a committee, which duties shall be reported and handled as the report of a committee. [The last two paragraphs remain unchanged.]”

3. Shall G-3.0404 be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A synod may decide, with the approval of a two-thirds majority of its presbyteries, to reduce its function. In no case shall synod function be less than the provision of judicial process and administrative review of the work of the presbyteries (G-3.0401c). Such a synod shall meet at least every two years for the purposes of setting budget, electing members to its permanent judicial commission, and admitting to record the actions of its permanent judicial and administrative commissions. Presbyteries of such a synod shall assume for themselves, by mutual agreement, such other synod functions as may be deemed necessary by the presbyteries and the synod.

“Two or more synods sharing common boundaries, with the approval of a two-thirds majority of the presbyteries in each of the synods, may share administrative services and form a shared permanent judicial commission, with the membership of the commission being proportional, insofar as possible, to the number of presbyteries within each participating synod. Each synod shall pay the costs for processing a judicial case arising within its bounds.”

4. Shall D-5.0101 be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“The General Assembly, each synod or cooperating synods, and each presbytery shall elect a permanent judicial commission from the teaching elders and ruling elders subject to its jurisdiction. Each commission shall be composed of teaching elders and ruling elders in numbers as nearly equal as possible. When the commission consists of an odd number of members, the additional member may be either a teaching elder or a ruling elder. The General Assembly commission shall be composed of one member from each of its constituent synods. The synod commission shall be composed of no fewer than eleven members distributed equally, insofar as possible, among the constituent presbyteries. In those synods with fewer than eleven presbyteries, each presbytery shall have at least one member. When two or more synods form a shared permanent judicial commission, the commission shall be composed of no fewer than twelve members, with each synod electing members proportional to the number of the presbyteries in each synod, insofar as possible. The cooperating synods shall designate between them one stated clerk to process the cases filed with the shared permanent judicial commission. The presbytery commission shall be composed of no fewer than seven members, with no more than one of its ruling elder members from any one of its constituent churches. Two of the members of the presbytery commission shall be designated to review any petition for review of the procedures of the investigating committee while the investigation in a disciplinary case is in process (D-10.0204) and to review any petition for review of the decision not to file charges (D-10.0303). These two members shall not take part in any subsequent trial. A session shall refer either form of petition to the presbytery commission.”

5. Shall D-5.0106 be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“All necessary expenses of a permanent judicial commission shall be paid by the electing council or councils. Cooperating synods shall pay the necessary expenses of a shared permanent judicial commission equally; however, each synod shall pay the necessary expenses for processing a particular judicial case arising within its bounds.”

6. Shall D-5.0203 be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The meetings of the permanent judicial commission shall be held at such times and places as the electing council or councils shall direct, or, if no directions are given, at such times and places as the commission shall determine.”

7. Shall D-5.0206 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]
“If, through absence, disqualification, or disability, a sufficient number of the members of a permanent judicial commission are not present to constitute a quorum, the permanent judicial commission shall recess until a quorum can be obtained.

“a. The permanent judicial commission shall report its inability to reach a quorum to the stated clerk of the council that elected it designated for processing the cases.

“b. The designated stated clerk of the council shall keep a current roster of those members of the permanent judicial commission whose terms have expired within the past six years. The names shall be arranged alphabetically within classes beginning with the most recent class. Whenever the permanent judicial commission reports its inability to obtain a quorum, the stated clerk shall immediately select, by rotation from that roster, a sufficient number of former members of the permanent judicial commission to constitute a quorum. The stated clerk shall report the roster annually to the council or councils.

“c. If a permanent judicial commission is unable to try a case for lack of a quorum, the council in whose geographic boundary the case arose shall reimburse the expenses reasonably incurred by those persons required to be present.”

8. Shall D-6.0101 be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic]

“A remedial case is initiated by the filing of a complaint with the stated clerk of the council or shared council having jurisdiction. [If a different clerk has been designated to process judicial cases for a shared judicial commission, the stated clerk having jurisdiction shall immediately transmit the complaint to the clerk.]

9. Shall D-6.0202a(1)–(6) be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with strike-through; Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“(1) a teaching elder or a ruling elder enrolled as a member of a presbytery concerning an irregularity or a delinquency during that period of enrollment, against the presbytery, with the synod or cooperating synod;

“(2) a commissioner to a synod, concerning an irregularity or a delinquency during that commissioner’s period of enrollment, against the synod or cooperating synod, with the General Assembly;

“(3) a session against the presbytery, with the synod or cooperating synod;

“(4) a presbytery against the synod or cooperating synod, with the General Assembly;

“(5) any council against any other council of the same level, with the council immediately higher than the council complained against and to which the latter council is subject;

“(6) a person who is an employee of a presbytery, a synod or cooperating synod, or an entity of a presbytery or synod, claiming to have sustained injury or damage to person or property by the council or entity, against the presbytery, with the synod, or against the synod or cooperating synod, with the General Assembly.”

Rationale

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-13

Advice on Item 05-13—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC).

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) regarding Item 05-13 as follows:

Item 05-13 arose as a referral from the 219th General Assembly (2010) to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to develop and report constitutional amendments to provide for two or more synods sharing common boundaries to form a shared permanent judicial commission. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommended that the original overture, which also provided for shared administrative services, be divided and the portion relating to shared judicial services be referred to develop appropriate constitutional language. At the time, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution did not make a recommendation either to approve or to disapprove the originating overture. The committee advises that the adoption of the current Form of Government in 2011 has not substantively altered the relevancy of the referral.

The recommendation upon referral proposes changes to nine different sections of the current Form of Government.
If the 220th General Assembly (2012) believes that the intent of Item 05-13 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the recommendation identifies the necessary passages in the Form of Government and the Rules of Discipline to amend in order to accomplish the intent of the referral.

If the 220th General Assembly (2012) believes that the intent of Item 05-13 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the language of Recommendations 1 through 7 is clear and consistent, and proposes the necessary amendments to accomplish the intent in those sections of the Book of Order.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the language of Recommendations 8 and 9 is unclear and recommends the following amendments to the recommendation, which shall be addressed separately.

The ACC advises that Recommendation 8 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“8. Shall D-6.0101 be amended as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic]

“A remedial case is initiated by the filing of a complaint with the stated clerk of the council [or shared council] having jurisdiction. [If a different clerk has been designated to process judicial cases for a shared judicial commission, the stated clerk having jurisdiction shall immediately transmit the complaint to that clerk.]”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the designation of a single clerk to process judicial cases may be expedient, but it does not supersede the role of the elected stated clerk as the recipient of initial complaints in remedial cases. This is warranted by the role of the stated clerk as an elected officer of the council, and the unnecessary and possibly confusing complication presented a complainant by having multiple clerks with jurisdiction.

The ACC advises that Recommendation 9 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

9. Shall D-6.0202a(1)–(6) be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with strike-through; Text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“(1) a teaching elder or a ruling elder enrolled as a member of a presbytery concerning an irregularity or a delinquency during that period of enrollment, against the presbytery, with the synod [or cooperating synod];

“(2) a commissioner to a synod, concerning an irregularity or a delinquency during that commissioner’s period of enrollment, against the synod [or cooperating synod], with the General Assembly;

“(3) a session against the presbytery, with the synod [or cooperating synod];

“(4) a presbytery against the synod [or cooperating synod], with the General Assembly;

“(5) any council against any other council of the same level, with the council immediately higher than the council complained against and to which the latter council is subject;

“(6) a person who is an employee of a presbytery, a synod or cooperating synod, or an entity of a presbytery or synod, claiming to have sustained injury or damage to person or property by the council or entity, against the presbytery, with the synod, or against the synod or cooperating synod, with the General Assembly.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that the amendments proposed in the recommendation on referral are unnecessary and potentially confusing. When cooperating synods share administrative and/or judicial functions, the exercise of jurisdiction remains in the province of the synod of membership. It should not expose the cooperating synod to complaints arising in presbyteries not under its jurisdiction. However, if a person is employed jointly by cooperating synods, then the right to complain against any or all of the cooperating synods should be preserved.

Item 05-14

[The assembly approved Item 05-14. See pp. 20, 23.]

Interpretation of G-3.0403c—From the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) answer this request by approving the following authoritative interpretation of G-3.0403c:
In G-3.0403c the charge to synods regarding the creation of non-geographic presbyteries, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries and subject to the approval of the General Assembly, is only for the purposes of meeting the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations and does not permit the creation of non-geographic presbyteries for reasons other than to meet those mission needs within the bounds of a synod.

Findings

Pursuant to G-6.02, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this request presents a question for which interpretation of G-3.0403c is advisable.

Rationale

Constitutionally expressed permission for synods to create non-geographic presbyteries is relatively recent. Although included as continuing entities by the Articles of Agreement at the 1983 reunion of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., Dakota Presbytery (organized 1844) and Hanmi Presbytery (organized 1983), non-geographical presbyteries created to accommodate Native American and Korean culture and language differences, were not explicitly provided for in the Form of Government at that time.

In 2001–2002, in response to attention focused by the report of the Special Committee on the Nature of the Church and the Practice of Governance (1993) and following church-wide consideration of whether to make explicit and support an existing geographic exception intended to respond to significant cultural diversity, the church amended G-12.0102k by inserting the first provision for non-geographic presbyteries, reading:

k. to organize new presbyteries, to divide, unite, or otherwise combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries previously existing, and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, to create nongeographic presbyteries in order to meet the mission needs (G-11.0103a; G-12.0102a) of identified racial ethnic or immigrant congregations; subject to the approval of the General Assembly. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-7.0201 and G-11.0102 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created. (Book of Order 2002/2003, Form of Government, G-12.0102k)

The 218th General Assembly (2008) sent down a proposed amendment for ratification by the presbyteries and in 2009 the church further amended G-12.0102k, providing for non-geographic presbytery membership in another synod, restricting the creation of non-geographic presbyteries to those based on language, and adding the new requirement of an end date:

k. to organize new presbyteries, to divide, unite, or otherwise combine presbyteries or portions of presbyteries previously existing, and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, to create nongeographic presbyteries in order to meet the mission needs (G-11.0103a; G-12.0102a) of identified racial ethnic or immigrant congregations; subject to the approval of the General Assembly. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-7.0201 and G-11.0102 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created. When such mission needs arise inside a congregation that lies within a synod lacking such a nongeographic presbytery, that synod may permit, with the approval of the General Assembly and unless some legal or ecclesiastical issue would prohibit, that congregation to join a nongeographic presbytery inside the bounds of another synod with the consent of that other synod, the geographic presbytery, and the nongeographic presbytery; such presbyteries should be formed only on the basis of language, and there should be a sunset clause (end date) added at the formation of each nongeographic presbytery. (Book of Order 2009/2011, Form of Government, G-12.0102k)

Now, G-3.0403c in the current Form of Government charges synods with

c. organizing new presbyteries, dividing, uniting, or otherwise combining presbyteries or portions of presbyteries previously existing, and, with the concurrence of existing presbyteries, creating non-geographic presbyteries, subject to the approval of the General Assembly, or taking other such actions as may be deemed necessary in order to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations. Such presbyteries shall be formed in compliance with the requirements of G-3.0301 and be accountable to the synod within which they were created. (Book of Order 2011/2013, G-3.0403c)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the current language of the Form of Government in G-3.0403c does not permit the creation of non-geographic presbyteries for purposes other than to meet the needs of racial ethnic or immigrant communities. We do so for the following reasons:

1. While the syntax of the present language is admittedly unclear, the phrase “subject to the approval of the General Assembly” is set off as an appositive clause so that “creating non-geographic presbyteries” is to be governed by the continuation “or taking other such actions as may be deemed necessary to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations.” This is required because:

   a. If it were to be read as a broad power to create non-geographic presbyteries, the remainder of the sentence would not make sense. Either it would require reading the entirety of what precedes as subject to the condition “meeting the needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations” or it would append the condition as a non sequitur clause; and

   b. To read it otherwise would contradict the definition of a presbytery in G-3.0301: “The presbytery is the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district.” This is clearly not intended to define a non-geographic presbytery, which is not composed of “all the congregations and teaching elders” within the geographic limits of its membership. The provision of G-3.0403c was therefore designed as an exception to this rule, not as a general power.
2. There was no consideration of such a reading of G-3.0403c anticipated in the analysis or debate at the time of its adoption. To adopt a broader reading of G-3.0403c would have the effect of amending the Constitution through authoritative interpretation.

3. To interpret G-3.0403c to grant broad permission to form non-geographic presbyteries could significantly compromise the foundational principles of unity and catholicity found in F-1.0302a and F-1.0302c, and unity in diversity found in F-1.0304. The potential division of the church into factions of the like-minded would hinder the ability of the church to discern the will of Christ by excluding or marginalizing the voices of those with different experiences or perspectives at the presbytery level of governance. The exception granted for the mission needs of racial ethnic and immigrant communities was designed as a temporary measure for the purpose of strengthening their voice and enhancing the diversity of the larger church, in order to express those principles more fully.

4. The request for interpretation appears to exclude the role of the General Assembly in approving changes to synod and presbytery boundaries as required in G-3.0502e. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that in providing constitutionally for non-geographic presbyteries, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has expressed its theological understanding of the wholeness of the Body of Christ in organic connectionalism by requiring that synods may organize, divide, unite, or combine presbyteries and create non-geographic presbyteries only with the concurrence of existing presbyteries and with the approval of the General Assembly. The phrase “subject to the approval of the General Assembly” refers to the necessary, final, and broad church approval for the creation of any presbytery; other forms of mission support may not require the attention and approval of the whole church through action of the General Assembly, but as exceptional councils created to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations, non-geographic presbyteries must.

Question Presented to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

This request from the Office of the Stated Clerk presents the following question upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

Does G-3.0403c permit a synod to create a non-geographic presbytery for reasons other than to meet the mission needs of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations?

On Transferring the Biscoe Presbyterian Church of Biscoe, North Carolina from the Presbytery of Charlotte to the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina — From the Presbytery of Charlotte.

The Presbytery of Charlotte overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve the dismissal of the Biscoe Presbyterian Church of Biscoe, North Carolina, from the Presbytery of Charlotte and the transfer of the church membership to the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina [and to instruct and authorize the OGA to make the appropriate boundary adjustments in consultation with the synod.]

Rationale

The Session of the Biscoe Presbyterian Church of Biscoe, North Carolina, unanimously approved the requested transfer of membership from the Presbytery of Charlotte to the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina. The Presbytery of Charlotte approved the transfer of the church to the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina at its stated meeting of February 11, 2012. The Presbytery of Coastal Carolina approved the admission of Biscoe Presbyterian Church of Biscoe, North Carolina, at its stated meeting on March 3, 2012.

Concurrence to Item 05-15 from the Presbytery of Mid-Atlantic.

Concurrence to Item 05-15 from the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina (with Additional Rationale).

Biscoe Presbyterian Church was organized in 1908 in Fayetteville Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and has been a member of the Presbytery of Charlotte following reunion from 1989 to the present. Prior to 1989, Biscoe Church was a member of Fayetteville Presbytery. Today it is located just three miles from the western boundary of the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina. The church has maintained contacts and close ties with nearby Coastal Carolina churches with whom it shares a Scottish Highlander heritage from the days of the earliest settlers of the region in the 1700s.
Access to the Presbytery camp is one concern for the church. The camp for the Presbytery of Charlotte is approximately four hours away from Biscoe and it has been difficult to get young people and families to use that facility. However, the Monroe Camp and Retreat Center located in the western end of the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina is only one hour away from Biscoe, and is a familiar, beloved place for youth and adults from the Biscoe church.

It is also believed that the participation of the Presbyterian Women from the Biscoe church at the presbytery level would be enhanced significantly if they were part of the Presbyterian Women of Coastal Carolina Presbytery because driving distances would be greatly reduced and there would be none of the challenges of having to drive in a large metropolitan area.

The church also believes that relationships with congregations of similar history, size, and circumstance, similar challenges and opportunities, and similar geographic, social, and economic orientations, would be stronger and would enhance the ministry of the Biscoe congregation.

This overture does not propose any change in the existing boundaries of either presbytery. It simply asks for the transfer of this one congregation to a community of faith that will be more compatible with its history, its needs, and its vision.

The original overture was approved by the Presbytery of Charlotte on February 11, 2012. This concurrence was approved by the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina on March 3, 2012. It was forwarded to the Synod of Mid Atlantic for action at their March 19–20, 2012, meeting.

On Transferring Covenant Community Church, Vacaville, California from the Presbytery of Sacramento to the Presbytery of Stockton—From the Synod of the Pacific.

“The Synod of the Pacific overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to concur with the request that the Covenant Community Church, Vacaville, California, (PIN 11401) be transferred to Stockton Presbytery from Sacramento Presbytery [and to instruct and authorize the OGA to make the appropriate boundary adjustments in consultation with the synod.]

[Note: It is understood the effective date will be upon favorable action of the General Assembly.]

Rationale

Covenant is seeking to transfer to the Stockton Presbytery in order to preserve the peace, unity, and purity of the congregation. Due to recent actions by the General Assembly and a majority of presbyteries, some in Covenant Community Church wanted to leave the denomination while others, who were still displeased by the denomination’s actions, wanted to stay in the denomination. Even though there was disagreement on whether to stay or go, there was agreement that Covenant Community Church wanted to stay together as a congregation.

After hearing of a church in Hawaii that was transferring presbyteries, Covenant Community Church began to explore this possibility as a compromise and a way forward in the PC(USA). Covenant discovered that the Stockton Presbytery, which is contiguous to the Sacramento Presbytery, had approved a clear set of essential tenets of belief and had a very clear mission statement that called the presbytery to assist local congregations in making disciples for Jesus Christ. These tenets and mission closely mirror those of Covenant Community Church. Thus, Covenant Community Church concluded that Stockton Presbytery would be a presbytery in which Covenant Community Church could most effectively maintain the peace, unity, and purity of the local congregation and fulfill its ministry and mission. Thus, Covenant Community Church seeks permission to be released from the Sacramento Presbytery and transferred to the Stockton Presbytery.

Stockton Presbytery is now ready to welcome Covenant Community Church of Vacaville, California, and able to assume loan guarantees previously assumed by Sacramento Presbytery.

Covenant Community Church of Vacaville, California, has requested a transfer from Sacramento Presbytery to Stockton Presbytery.

On April 23, 2012, Sacramento Presbytery voted to transfer Covenant Community Church of Vacaville, California, to Stockton Presbytery.

On May 5, 2012, Stockton Presbytery voted to welcome Covenant Community Church of Vacaville, California.

The Synod of the Pacific voted at its May 9–11, 2012, stated meeting to approve the transfer, and to overture the General Assembly to concur.

On Transferring Elizabeth Korean Presbyterian Church from the Presbytery of Elizabeth to the Presbytery of Eastern Korean—From the Synod of Northeast.

The Synod of Northeast overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to concur with the request that the Elizabeth Korean Presbyterian Church from the Presbytery of Elizabeth (PIN10411) be transferred to the Presbytery of Eastern Korean.

[Note: It is understood the effective date will be upon favorable action of the General Assembly.]

Rationale

Elizabeth Korean Presbyterian Church is a predominantly Korean-speaking congregation. They have recognized that they will be more able to engage in relevant mission comfortably if they are part of a Korean-language presbytery.

Elizabeth Korean Presbyterian Church in Elizabeth Presbytery has requested a transfer to Eastern Korean Presbytery.

On January 19, 2012, Elizabeth Presbytery voted to transfer the Elizabeth Korean Presbyterian Church to Eastern Korean Presbytery.

On May 20, 2009, Eastern Korean Presbytery voted to welcome the Elizabeth Korean Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth Presbytery.

The Synod of the Northeast voted at its December 9–10, 2011, Synod Council Meeting to approve the transfer, and to overture the General Assembly to concur.

- dismissal of Bethany Presbyterian Church from the Presbytery of Cherokee, Synod of South Atlantic, to the Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery, Synod of Mid Atlantic;
- dismissal of First Korean Church of Valdosta from the Presbytery of Flint River, Synod of South Atlantic, to the Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery, Synod of Mid Atlantic;
- dismissal of Jesus Hope Presbyterian Church from the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta, Synod of South Atlantic, to the Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery, Synod of Mid Atlantic;
- dismissal of Savannah Korean Presbyterian Church from the Presbytery of Savannah, Synod of South Atlantic, to the Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery, Synod of Mid Atlantic.

Rationale

For rationale pertaining to this overture, see 114-transfer-4-churches-from-south-atlantic-to-mid-atlantic.pdf or pages 565–70.

Concurrence to Item 05-18 from the Synod of Mid-Atlantic.

Item 05-19

[The assembly approved Item 05-19. See pp. 20, 24.]

On Transferring Two Churches from the Synod of South Atlantic to the Synod of Mid-Atlantic—From the Synod of South Atlantic.

The Synod of South Atlantic overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve the dismissal of the following churches from the Synod of South Atlantic, Presbytery of Greater Atlanta, to the Synod of Mid-Atlantic, Atlantic Korean-American Presbytery:
• Korean Presbyterian Church of Georgia (PIN 10698)
• Korean Presbyterian Church of Lawrenceville (PIN 11846).

Concurrence to Item 05-19 from the Synod of Mid-Atlantic.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY COMMISSION ON MID COUNCILS COMMENT ON ITEM 05-19

Comment on Item 05-19—From the General Assembly Commission on Mid Councils.

The General Assembly Commission on Mid Councils strongly affirms the transfer of the Korean Presbyterian Church of Georgia and the Korean Presbyterian Church of Lawrenceville as requested by all parties. Although the commission found the requests in order, there were questions raised about whether such transfers could occur between two different geographic synods when one church does and one church does not have a language-specific presbytery within its bounds. There is precedent for such under the former Book of Order, which was evidenced by a Korean-language speaking congregation in Houston (Synod of the Sun) being granted membership in Midwest Hanmi Presbytery (Synod of Lincoln Trails). The current Form of Government does not provide clear guidance on whether such a transfer would, in fact, constitute a “nongeographic” presbytery that is not currently allowed or whether such a transfer would be acceptable given the precedent earlier mentioned. Rather than risk being out of compliance with the current Constitution, the General Assembly Commission on Mid Councils voted to refer this requested action directly to the General Assembly with strong encouragement to grant the request.
Summary of Survey Results for the Middle Governing Body Commission
2011

Overview

Research Services developed three questionnaires in cooperation with and at the request of the Middle Governing Body Commission:

- A session survey.
- A presbytery and synod leader survey.
- An individual survey.

All three were placed on the PC(USA) website on March 24, and their availability was publicized widely throughout the denomination by the Commission. Responses were accepted through July 8, 2011.

Individual Presbyterians were invited to go to either the leader or individual survey, as appropriate. Sessions were invited to download a copy of the survey, come up with one set of responses for the entire group, and then have one representative complete the survey online. The number of respondents for each is:

- Session survey: 754.
- Presbytery and synod leader survey: 978 started the survey, of whom 272 were determined by initial questions not to be presbytery or synod leaders and were referred to the individual survey; of the rest, 643 were solely or primarily presbytery leaders and 63, solely or primarily synod leaders.
- Individual survey: 783 started the survey, of whom 173 were determined by initial questions to be presbytery or synod leaders and were referred to that survey, leaving 610 individual respondents.

Because respondents self-selected, results may not be representative of the larger constituencies of which respondents are a part.

The four survey groups (counting presbytery and synod leaders separately) were asked a variety of questions, but not every question was asked of every group. When particular results are reported for only some of the groups, it is because the other groups were not asked that question.

The analyses that follow show only those responses that express an opinion on an issue, unless otherwise indicated. That is, “no opinion,” “don’t know,” “not sure,” and similar responses have been excluded, and the percentages recalculated using the remaining responses. For example, for a question on which 33% “agree,” 33% “disagree,” and 33% are “not sure,” this report would show 50% “agree” and 50% “disagree.” The purpose is to emphasize evaluative responses. Readers interested in the full range of responses, including “no opinion,” “don’t know,” “not sure,” etc., will find those in three appendices that report percentage responses to each question for each survey: Appendix A, session survey; Appendix B, leader survey; and Appendix C, individual survey.

Verbatim comments to open-ended questions are found in separate appendices: Appendix D, session survey; Appendix E, leader survey; and Appendix F, individual survey.

Who Responded

Sessions

Responding sessions represent a wide range of congregational sizes, though they somewhat underrepresent the smallest congregations and somewhat overrepresent those of intermediate size, especially those with 301 to 800 members. (See Table 1.)

Of responding sessions, 17% indicate that their congregation has increased in membership size over the past five years; 43%, that it has decreased in size; and 40%, that it has stayed the same. Two-thirds of sessions report that their congregation has an installed pastor (67%), while one in four have an interim or supply pastor (23%) and 10%, a commissioned lay pastor. Another 10% have no pastoral leader. (Responses total more than 100% because some congregations have more than one pastoral leader.)

Leaders

Almost five times as many presbytery (n = 682) as synod (n = 124) leaders responded to the survey, including 82 who reported leadership in both. Of the latter, three-fourths indicated their primary leadership role is in the presbytery (74%), one-fourth in the synod (26%). Leaders with roles in both types of middle governing bodies were asked questions about the governing body in which their primary role is found.

Leaders with a sole or primary responsibility in the presbytery (n = 643) represent a variety of leadership roles there. The largest numbers are members of a presbytery council (33%). Only 5% indicate that they are an executive or general presbyter, and only 7%, a stated clerk. Similar shares report being chair of a committee on ministry (5%) or committee on preparation for ministry (3%), while 28% report being the chair of some other presbytery committee. (Note that the same person can and often does wear more than one hat; on average, respondents list 1.4 presbytery roles.)

Nine in ten presbytery leaders report that they were “very involved” (60%) or “involved” (29%) with their presbytery in the past two years. Only two respond “not at all involved.”

Of leaders with a sole or primary synod leadership role (n = 63), the largest percentages are committee chairs (32%), members of synod council (18%), or other staff (12%). Only 5% are synod executives, and 2% are synod stated clerks. A total of 10% are either synod moderators (5%) or vice moderators (5%).

More than eight in ten synod leaders report they have been “very involved” (55%) or “involved” (26%) in their synod during the past year. Only 5% (n = 3) respond, “not at all involved.”

Individuals

Almost all individual respondents are white (96%). A majority are male (55%). The median age is 60 years. They occupy a variety of church roles (2.2 per respondent, on average), including:
- More than one-third are ministers of the Word and Sacrament, either in active service (28%) or retired (8%). Of the former, 13% are installed pastors and 4%, interim or supply pastors.
- Another 2% of respondents are commissioned lay pastors.
- A majority are ordained elders (53%), about half of whom are currently on session (25%). An overlapping 12% are clerks of session.
- One in six are ordained deacons, with 2% in active service and 16%, not.
Mission Strategy

A quarter of sessions indicate that they are “very knowledgeable” (4%) or “knowledgeable” (20%) concerning their presbytery’s “strategy for mission.” Another quarter are “not knowledgeable” (24%). The rest are “somewhat knowledgeable” (53%). Individuals are a bit more aware: 13% are “very knowledgeable” and 29%, “knowledgeable.” One in six are “not knowledgeable” (18%), with 40%, “somewhat knowledgeable.” (See Table 2.)

*Responses may not total 100% because of rounding.

Both sessions and individuals report much less awareness of their synod’s as compared to their presbytery’s mission strategy. Majorities in both survey groups are “not knowledgeable” (sessions, 82%; individuals, 62%), and only 4% and 15%, respectively, are either “very knowledgeable” or “knowledgeable.”

Presbytery leaders were asked a slightly different question—about their familiarity with presbytery mission. Eight in ten are either “very familiar” (45%) or “familiar” (37%). Only 2% respond “not familiar.” Synod leaders were not asked about their familiarity with synod mission.

Presbytery leaders were also asked about the clarity of their presbytery’s strategy for mission. Six in ten respond either “very clear” (14%) or “clear” (46%). Only 11% respond “not clear.”

Presbytery and Synod Connections

Sessions

Sessions report a variety of contacts between their congregation and their presbytery in the past two years. From a list of 13 types of contact, sessions report an average of 4.5, including:

- Review of session minutes and records by the presbytery, 92%.
- Request for completion of annual reports, changes in terms of call, etc., 73%.
- Congregational participation in a presbytery program or ministry, 45%.
- Support in calling a pastor or other change in pastoral leadership, 43%.
- A triennial review or other routine visit with session by presbytery representatives, 43%.
- Use of the presbytery’s camp or conference center, 38%.
- Assistance with the vision and future of the congregation, 32%.
- Contact related to the congregation’s property or facilities, 24%.
- An inquirer or candidate for ministry from the congregation is under care of presbytery, 21%.
- A grant from the presbytery, 20%.
- Help in dealing with conflict in the congregation, 12%.
- Congregational involvement in a Presbyterian judicial process, 3%.
- Congregational involvement in civil litigation, 1%.
In addition, 86% of sessions report that in the past two years at least one congregational representative has served on a “committee, board, commission, task force, ministry team, or other entity” of their presbytery, and 97% report that at least one elder commissioner from the congregation has attended a presbytery meeting. Most of these sessions further report that an elder commissioner has attended “every meeting” of the presbytery (46%) or “most meetings” (39%) over the same period.

Only one in three sessions report any form of contact between their congregation and their synod in the past two years. The most frequent types of contact indicated are:
- Participated in a training or education program of the synod (14%).
- Attended a synod event or visited the synod offices (14%).
- One or more elders or pastors were commissioners to a synod meeting (11%).

In presbyteries with a mission partnership in another country (61% of sessions report such a partnership), six in ten sessions (62%) indicate that their congregation participates in this partnership.

Four in ten sessions report that their congregation “has a strong connection” with their presbytery (40%). Of the rest, most respond “has neither a strong nor a weak connection” (47% overall). Only 12% of sessions report a “weak connection.” Similarly, few sessions (8%) report that their congregation’s connection with their presbytery has “grown weaker” over the past two years, while 31% respond “grown stronger” and 60%, “stayed about the same.”

Leaders

For leaders’ involvement in presbyteries and synods, see the previous section, “Who Responded.”

Individuals

In the past two years, majorities or large minorities of individual respondents have been actively involved with their presbytery in various ways:
- 73% have received a presbytery newsletter.
- 72% have visited the presbytery’s website.
- 52% have attended a presbytery meeting as a commissioner.
- 46% have attended an event sponsored by the presbytery (other than a presbytery meeting).
- 42% have served on a presbytery committee or task force.
- 31% have visited the presbytery resource center.

Only 13% of individuals report no contact over the two-year period.

In contrast to sessions (see above), more than six in ten individuals describe the connection between their congregation and their presbytery as “strong” (63%). All the rest respond “neither strong nor weak.” A majority of individuals indicate that the connection between their congregation and their presbytery has “stayed about the same” over the past two years (58%), with twice as many reporting that it has “grown stronger” (29%) than “grown weaker” (14%).

Presbytery Effectiveness

Asked to evaluate how effectively their presbytery has been carrying out 32 aspects of its mission, majorities of sessions and leaders respond “very effectively” or “effectively” regarding 21 and 22 of these, respectively. Majorities of individuals so respond to only 12 aspects. However, the pattern of response is very similar in all three groups, with the same eight aspects seen as being carried out “very effectively” or “effectively” by the most respondents in each of the three surveys. (See Table 3.)

*Shading indicates the ten highest rated for each group.

At the other extreme, the ten responsibilities with the lowest total “very effectively” and “effectively” responses are also similar across the three groups, and of similar magnitude, with a few exceptions (see Table 4):

- Around a third of sessions (35%) and individuals (32%) believe presbyteries are “very effectively” or “effectively” carrying out their responsibility to “visit with sessions on a regular basis,” but half of presbytery leaders so respond (51%).
- Four in ten presbytery leaders (40%) and individuals (41%) believe presbyteries are “very effectively” or “effectively” carrying out their responsibility to “provide encouragement, guidance, and resources to congregations in areas such as personnel policies, equitable compensation, and fair employment practices,” but a clear majority of sessions so respond (56%).
- Around a quarter of presbytery leaders (26%) and individuals (27%) believe presbyteries are “very effectively” or “effectively” carrying out their responsibility to “organize or receive new congregations,” while almost four in ten sessions do so (38%).

Support from Presbyteries and Synods

For Congregations

Only a minority of sessions and individuals rate their presbyteries as “very supportive” or “supportive” of their congregation in five of seven areas, with responses lowest for “helping congregations with evangelism” (sessions, 31%; individuals, 33%). Majorities of both groups, however, respond “very supportive” or “supportive” for “helping congregations with conflict” (60%; 54%), and a majority of sessions (54%), but not individuals (46%), for “helping congregations with church redevelopment or transformation.” (See Table 5.)

Sessions were further asked a general question on presbytery support: “How supportive of your congregation has your presbytery been” in the past two years? Two-thirds respond “very supportive” (25%) or “supportive” (41%). Only 6% respond “not supportive.”

Only around one-third of sessions provide an opinion on the question, “which term best summarizes your congregation’s relationship with the synod” over the past two years? Indeed, more than half respond “not enough contact on which to base an opinion” (52%; another 12% are “not sure”). Of those with an opinion—36% of the total—less than three in ten respond either “excellent” (8%) or “very good” (13%), though 37% respond “good” (34%). Another 27% respond “fair,” and 15%, “poor.”

Asked whether they think their synod could have “provided more services to your congregation than it did” over the past two years, almost eight in ten sessions respond either “not sure” (24%) or “our congregation did not have any contacts with or receive any services from the synod” (54%). Of the rest, 55% respond “no, it is doing all that it can,” leaving 45% who indicate that the synod could have done more.

For Presbyteries

Three in four presbytery leaders report that their presbytery received one or more services (from a list of 12, including “other”) from their synod in the past two years (75%). These leaders were asked whether their synod could have “provided more services to your presbytery than it did” over the past two years, and a third responded “not sure” (32%). Only 153, or around a quarter of all presbytery leaders (24%) have an opinion. Of these, six in ten respond “no, it is doing all that it can” (60%).

1 It is interesting that ratings of overall support are greater than ratings of support for any specific activity. It should be noted that the general support question appeared early in the questionnaire, while the questions about support in specific areas were located much later.
An identical share of synod leaders with an opinion (60%) also respond “no, it is doing all it can” to a parallel question, regarding whether they think their synod could have “provided more services to its presbyteries than it did” over the same time period.

Finances

Presbytery and Synod Budgets

Fewer than half of presbytery leaders are familiar with their presbytery’s budget (48%). Those who are reveal that there is considerable variety in the shares of presbytery funds that come from each of several sources (see Appendix B). In general, however, in most presbyteries the bulk of funds come from either per capita apportionment or general mission giving. (See Table 6.)

Half of synod leaders are familiar with their synod’s budget (49%). Those who are report that the largest single source of income for synods is per capita apportionment which, with a median of 42%, is very close to the budget share from per capita for presbyteries. Synods, however, rely less on general mission giving (median of 13%) and unified giving (median of 10%) than do presbyteries, and more on investments and endowments (10%).

Per Capita Apportionment

Eight in ten presbytery leaders believe that “the current split of per capita funds among your presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly” is either “very appropriate” (30%) or “appropriate” (52%). The 19% responding “inappropriate” or “very inappropriate” were further asked to indicate how they “would change the relative distribution of per capita funds.” Almost all think more funds should go to their presbytery (95%), and an overlapping 26% think more should go to the General Assembly. Almost no one (7%) thinks more per capita funds should go to their synod. Consistently, most of these same respondents think a lesser share should go to their synod (77%) or to the General Assembly (46%), while only 5% think less should go to their presbytery.

An even greater share of synod leaders believe that the per capita split among governing bodies is “very appropriate” (9%) or “appropriate” (84%). Only three respondents choose “inappropriate” or “very inappropriate”—too few for an analysis of their opinions on how to shift funds.

Presbytery leaders have mixed opinions on “moving away from a per-capita funding model to a different type.” While a small majority (51%) are “very interested” or “interested” in moving away from per-capita funding for synods, fewer so respond concerning the General Assembly (43%) and presbyteries (35%). And 28%, 34%, and 39%, respectively, are “not interested” in such a shift. (See Table 7.)

Only around a third of synod leaders are “very interested” or “interested” in moving away from a per capita model for funding either presbyteries (33%), synods (35%), or the General Assembly (35%). More are “not interested,” including a majority regarding funding for presbyteries: 54%, 49%, and 49%, respectively.

(For more on finances, see the “Trends” section, which follows.)

Trends

In the Presbytery

When presbytery leaders were asked about changes in seven aspects of mission and finances in the presbytery over the past five years, the highest “increase” response is 17%, for mission. All of the other “increased” totals are less than 10%. Asked about expected changes in the same seven aspects over the next five years, the highest “increase” response is 20%, also for mission. Again, no other aspect has an “increase” response as high as 10%. (See Figure 1 on the next page.)

By contrast, majorities of 59% or more believe there has been and will be a decrease in five of the factors: “financial resources available for the presbytery’s mission, in general”; “giving by congregations for the mission of your presbytery, in particular”; “total worship attendance among all congregations in the presbytery”; “giving by your presbytery and its congregations for the mission of your synod”; and “giving by your presbytery and its congregations for the mission of the General Assembly.” For the other two aspects, the “decreased” percentages for “the number of staff” are 53% over the past five years and 46% over the next five years, and for the “amount of mission carried out by the presbytery, in general,” 32% over the past five years and 35% over the next five.

Judging by the percentages who respond “increased,” presbytery leaders are slightly more hopeful about the next five years than the past five regarding six of the seven factors: “total worship attendance among all congregations in the presbytery” (“increased” responses up 6%); “financial resources available for presbytery mission, in general” (up 4%); “giving by congregations for presbytery mission” (up 3%); “the amount of mission the presbytery will carry out” (up 3%); “giving by your presbytery and its congregations for the mission of your synod” (up 1%); and “giving by your presbytery and its congregations for the mission of the General Assembly” (up 1%). For the seventh aspect, “the number of presbytery staff,” the “increased” percentages drop 1%.

In the Synod

Fewer than 10% of synod leaders report an increase in six of seven aspects of their synod over the past five years (including three for which no one responded “increased”). The exception is “the amount of mission carried out by the synod,” which 22% describe as “increased,” 59% as “stayed the same,” and 20%, “decreased.” In contrast, majorities of two-thirds or greater respond “decreased” for five of the other six aspects. The exception here is “the number of synod staff,” which 40% indicate has “decreased” and 58%, “stayed the same.” (See Figure 2.)
Figure 2. Synod Leaders’ Views on Their Synod’s Trends in Mission and Finances: Past Five Years and Next Five Years

A few more synod leaders believe that several of these aspects will “increase” in the next five years than believe they have increased in the past five, but they are very small in number. For example, 5% believe giving by presbyteries to General Assembly mission will have increased in the next five years, compared to 0% who believe it has increased over the past five. Similarly, for four aspects, fewer synod leaders expect a drop in the next five years than believe there has been one over the past five: “financial resources available for the synod’s mission, in general” (down 1%); “total worship attendance among the all congregations in all presbyteries in your synod” (down 9%); “giving by your presbyteries for the mission of your synod, in general” (down 5%); and “giving by presbyteries for the mission of the General Assembly” (down 11%).
Obstacles Facing Presbyteries

Majorities of presbytery leaders believe three (from a list of seven) factors are a “very great obstacle” or “great obstacle” to their presbytery “accomplishing its mission”:

- Lack of funding (67%).
- Insufficient support from congregations (57%).
- Differing congregational demographics (54%).

Less than one-third, however, respond “very great obstacle” or “great obstacle” to the other four factors:

- Mismatch between staff and needs (18%).
- Inability to manage conflict effectively (30%).
- Lack of staff (30%).
- Lack of vision (30%).

A “mismatch between staff and needs” is the only one of the seven factors for which a majority respond “not an obstacle” (56%). The next largest “not an obstacle” responses are for “lack of vision” (40%) and “lack of staff” (37%).

Size and Demographics

Representation of Demographic Groups

Majorities of sessions believe that the leaders in their presbytery “very effectively” or “effectively” represent the diversity of the presbytery on a variety of factors. Responses range from 66% for “racial-ethnic diversity” to 57% for both “age diversity” and “rural-urban diversity.” Responses are very similar when it comes to how effectively participants in presbytery meetings represent the same set of six factors. (See Table 8.)

The opinions of individuals are around 10% lower on every item, with combined “very effectively” and “effectively” totals ranging from 52% for “racial-ethnic diversity” to 45% for “age diversity” regarding the representation of presbytery leaders, and from 56% for “size variation of congregations” to 42% for “age diversity” regarding “participants in presbytery meetings.”

Size of Presbytery

Majorities of all three groups asked the question believe that the geographical area of their presbytery is “about right” (sessions, 55%; presbytery leaders, 64%; individuals, 69%). Almost all of the rest believe it is “too large” (43%; 33%; 29%), but almost no one believes it is “too small” (2%; 3%; 2%). (See Table 9.)

A similar pattern is found regarding the number of congregations in the presbytery. Two-thirds or more of sessions (70%), presbytery leaders (68%), and individuals (75%) indicate that the current number is “about right.” However, compared to responses on geographical size, fewer respondents believe the number of congregations is “too large” (19%; 16%; 16%) and more believe it is “too small” (11%; 16%; 9%).

Staff Size

Presbytery leaders report a median of three full-time and three part-time staff members (these numbers include the executive presbyter and stated clerk).

Size of Synod

Synod leaders and individuals respond identically when asked about the size of their synod: two-thirds indicate it is “about right”; one-third, “too large”; and 2%, “too small.” Even more in both groups believe the number of presbyteries in their synod is “about right,” with almost all of the rest responding “too large.” Only 6% in each group believe the number of presbyteries is “too small.” (See Table 10.)

Relationships with General Assembly Agencies

Sessions and Leaders

Majorities of sessions and leaders report that their entity—congregation, presbytery, or synod—had related in some way with three of the six General Assembly agencies in the past two years: the General Assembly Mission Council; the Board of Pensions; and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. Almost all leaders (96%) also report relating with the Office of the General Assembly, though only 35% of sessions do so. Fewer than half of sessions and presbytery leaders report relating to either the Presbyterian Foundation or the Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, though a slim majority of synod leaders do so. (See Table 11.)

Sessions and leaders who report that their entity had related to a particular General Assembly agency were also asked to indicate the quality of that relationship. A majority of sessions report an “excellent” or “very good” relationship with only one agency, the Board of Pensions (60%). The next highest “excellent”/“very good” total is 44%, for the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. At the low end, with 26%, is the Office of the General Assembly. (See Table 12.)

Many more presbytery and synod leaders than sessions use “excellent” or “very good” to describe the relationship between their entity and each General Assembly agency. In fact, half or more of both groups of leaders use one of these terms to describe their relationship with each of the agencies. For both leader groups, as with sessions, the highest total of “excellent” and “very good” responses is for the Board of Pensions (presbytery leaders, 80%; synod leaders, 82%). The lowest, however, in both cases is the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (50%; 59%). (Note that the lowest shares of “excellent” or “very good” responses among presbytery and synod leaders are still much higher than the lowest shares of the same responses among sessions.)

Individuals

Individuals were asked about their familiarity with each of the six PC(USA) agencies and how helpful had been the services each one had provided to the presbytery in the past two years. Majorities report some level of familiarity with each agency, though the only agency with which a majority are “very familiar” or “familiar” is the Board of Pensions (60%). Of those with some degree of familiarity with an agency, the percentage describing it as “very helpful” or “helpful” to their presbytery ranges from 79% (Board of Pensions) to 45% (General Assembly Mission Council). With the exception of the Board of Pensions, combined “very helpful” and “helpful” responses are fairly similar for each of the other agencies, every one of them falling in the 55%-to-48% range. Survey Questions and Responses
Session Survey for the MGB Commission
Spring 2011

This survey is for sessions, not for individuals. Only one survey should be completed for each session. The deadline for submitting session responses is June 30, 2011.

If you would like to provide your individual opinions to the Middle Governing Body Commission, go to www.pcusa.org/mgbchurchwidesurvey.

Sessions should meet and develop a collective response to each question. Once elders have reached agreement on the session’s responses to each question, one session representative should return to this site and enter those responses into the web survey that follows.

To assist sessions in getting to this point, a PDF copy of the questionnaire may be downloaded here www.pcusa.org/pdfmgbsessionsurvey. Make copies for session members to use during discussions to determine your session’s responses. Record your final responses on one copy of the questionnaire to use as you respond here.

n=754 unless otherwise indicated.

Q14. The General Assembly and most presbyteries and synods support their ecclesial functions by assessing congregations a charge based on their number of members, an amount usually referred to as “per capita.” Do you think the current split of per capita funds among your presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly is:

Q30. Is there anything else you want to tell the MGB Commission to inform their examination of:

a. Presbyteries and their oversight of congregations?

- Cut the crap! Stop the abuse of all pastors (especially women), harassment, bullying of all types!
- We are a small rural church with 44 members which limits our participation with Presbytery. We have had good oversight by the Presbytery. We have excellent pastoral care.
- There is no accountability and no sense of being connectional. It's like we are all playing survivor. The system is strangling itself. Can't we all just get along?
- Be more aggressive in developing new churches in high growth areas of the Presbytery
- We have a strong and healthy relationship with our Presbytery. The staff is efficient and responsive to our needs. The EP is outstanding and provides clear and positive leadership. We feel blessed!
We are a small church in northwest Iowa and wondering why we are part of PCUSA. Where is God in all of this. Our presbytery is run by people who have no vision for anything other than their own politics. Our stated clerk assaulted an interim female pastor at another church, and we are wondering what anyone is doing about that. Many of our pastors live in fear of this person. It is definitely not a healthy situation here.

Several session members said to make the survey shorter.

1. Reports from the GA by Presbytery commissioners need to include reports on what happened, not just their impressions of their surroundings.
2. Because we are in a Presbytery that has numerous retired ministers that are still voting members of the Presbytery, votes at Presbytery are skewed not only by their presence, but by the various sizes of the congregations represented, the meeting dates (weekday meetings do not allow those who are employed to attend), and location (with current gas prices, it’s not cost prohibitive to travel clear to the end of the Presbytery for a meeting).

Very dependent on whom is executive presbyter. Pastoral and administrative roles are difficult to meet with 1 individual. Travel and meeting times are a challenge to involvement with Presbytery. Need programmatic approach to engaging with each congregation on a routine basis, not just when troubled.

Our Presbytery sends an electronic newsletter to clerks (and others). Clerk sends it to Session members. Thus, there is an opportunity for Session to get information. However, our society is overwhelmed with information. People avoid that which does not speak to an immediate need.

It might be nice to be visited from time to time from a Presbytery Leader.

We are pleased with our fine Washington Presbytery and its excellent staff meetings and programs.

No [16 sessions made this comment]

This side of the Presbytery is ignored.

Presbytery is there when we need them. They have supported us in the past but we have not needed them in the last two years.

Presbytery does what it can with the situations that occur over which they have little or no control. They do a good job securing pastoral leadership for congregations. We have relatively little contact with our presbytery and their procedures and requirements seem burdensome at times. However, I am glad they are there when we need their services. Our church is a long way from presbytery headquarters and that is obvious by our lack of close involvement.

Excellent support for the Campus House at [deleted] University which our congregation oversees. Assists with providing a teacher and finances.

NONE—mentioned 8 times

We think they could do a better job of informing people of the job they are doing and the services available to congregations

Due to all the differences over Biblical authority, interpretation and application, particularly to the potential lifting of Fidelity and Chastity requirements, there is a distrust of higher governing authorities. Local congregations are retreating to their own autonomy. There is going to have to be an honest recognition that diversity has become disunity. There is going to have to be a formal or semi-formal organizational restructuring to encourage churches with similar theological views to bond together for mission.

One visit 3 years ago regarding our ministries.

Small churches tend to be overlooked. Need to encourage younger representatives Need Elder Training and lay training Leadership at Presbytery level is critical to the health of its churches. Take the overhead of the Synods and push it back to the Presbytery level in improve paid staffing and quality of services.

Small churches need help w/basic finances - i.e.: bookkeeping, investing, and reporting

Make your surveys shorter

Do Presbyteries have the heart for doctrinal oversight? Do Presbyteries have the heart to close small churches to advance mission of Presbytery?

We believe that the Presbytery, primarily via the Committee on Ministry, should take a more pro-active position in being in contact with the small churches.

Our presbytery (Phila) is far too large (number of congregations) to effectively carry out its responsibilities vis-a-vis congregations. Too many congregations with too many problems.

Representatives from COM, [deleted], have been very supportive and helpful to our pastors and Session over the past year, and we very much appreciate that. [deleted] Presbyterian Church

This survey makes us realize that we are very unfamiliar with the actions of our presbytery and the relationship with our congregation.
You know when our Pastor left we were so desperate for a Pastor and now we are suffering. It's like the Presbytery through us away. When we did receive help it was more of the Presbytery had given up on us, because they feel no African American Preacher would fit the criteria to become a Presbyterian. Our church never stated that we had to have an African American preacher. When our church first open we had a Caucasian Pastor and we had Caucasian worship leader. Now we have someone moderating our session who really don't care. He is letting one elder do what he wants and when there is a verbal elder that go against this elder it's a blow off. I just hope Presbytery don't let this worship leader take the church. That church has potential in that area. If we can get strong elders to work together it will and can grow.

Our contact with the presbytery is through our appointed moderator of session after 2 years of no contact.

We have a wonderfully accessible presbytery, with outstanding staff.

Our congregation is currently coming to terms with issues related to the last 2 pastoral calls. Each of our last 2 pastors had issues that we were not made aware of. The session feels as though there is a serious flaw in the "process" of calling a pastor, either with the member presbytery not fully disclosing problems or with Trinity not fully disclosing what they may have found out prior to our church making a call. We are currently without a pastor and trying to come to terms with our feelings of anger, disappointment, and betrayal.

Our presbytery is too large for the staff to handle they do the best they can with the resources available to them

This Session is strongly discourages with the rewording of the Book of Order that's founded on God's word.

The COM is very active in our Presbytery. This is important with the recent changes in the BoO. The Presbytery of the Inland Northwest is in the midst of a mission study and I believe this will encourage more congregational involvement.

Our Presbytery does an outstanding job of helping Sessions with preaching supplies—they've created a top-notch system.

We wish Presbytery could do more than "put out fires”—of which we have had many in the past two years. Restructuring may or may not help. Declining numbers and funds mean that volunteer leaders do what is necessary. It is time for a generational change in terms of leaders. It is happening. But many Sessions have little participation in Presbytery.

why is it so difficult to get info on new member material

Shrink Presbytery size. Find ways to increase theological diversity rather than the overemphasis on racial/ethnic/gender diversity.

The problem with this question is the word "oversight.” We need a new paradigm. Some Presbyteries are searching for that paradigm. Ours was too, but it's been derailed by our EP.

Except for Committee on Ministry liaison seeing us annually, we really had no connection with Presbytery. We are seeing more connection through our Presbytery's transition.

If there is a merger of Presbyteries, Lehigh Presbytery would be better served merging with Lancaster Presbytery rather than Philadelphia Presbytery.

[deleted]’s per capita has increased from [deleted] to [deleted] during the past ten years. While the cost of living and other expenses have increased by 1% to 3% each year, per capita normally increases by two or three times this percentage. During this time, [deleted] has had to make cuts to staff and reduce giving to mission. We know the Presbytery has good people doing good work, but it seems that the Presbytery is not willing to make the same type of cuts as the congregations are making. Instead, the Presbytery significantly ups the per capita and passes the burden onto the congregations. [deleted] is deeply committed to its Presbyterian heritage, but financially it is becoming increasingly more difficult to be a Presbyterian because of the Presbytery’s life-draining financial policy.

All info was an average of 7 session elders who took this survey.

Presbytery leadership and staff should make an effort to regularly communicate with—and listen to—individual churches to determine what forms of support are needed and how best to provide support for the health of the church.

Need clear vision and better use of technology

More transparency when placing pastors who have had serious problems in other congregations.

Our contacts with the Presbytery of Tampa Bay have been positive.

We have excellent relationships with our Presbytery. Due to actions of the GA and its agencies over the last several years, the opposite is true of the GA.

We are a very small congregation in a rural area a lot of these questions, don't apply to us.

Good job!

We would like more support from the Presbytery and have a stronger relationship with them.
We are pleased with our wonderful minister and our relationship with Mid-Kentucky Presbytery. Our Presbytery has sharply improved communications in the past couple of years through use of an on-line newsletter and announcements. We would welcome more information about the Presbytery and opportunities to work together.

Our pastor received a call from a different congregation, and so we were left with a vacant pulpit. The representative from COM did not provide us with the guidance we needed to do a self study of our financial situation and lead us in a self-examination of our goals and mission in our community. We felt we were left adrift in the normal business of running the church and also needed guidance in selling the manse. After contacting additional persons in Presbytery, we have a different moderator and clergy to guide us on our journey. We also had trouble with the Pension Board not recognizing our status of vacant pulpit.

When there is a diverse area and the leadership is in the urban center of the presbytery, the rural outlaying areas find it more difficult to relate to what is going on in the city and perhaps the reverse is also true. The churches in our county seem to be different theologically, and economically. We do not share the same issues of the urban churches.

We are involved in a mission partnership in another country however it is not Presbyterian.

We are a small rural struggling congregation that has not received much help from Presbytery, Synod, or General Assembly.

Good.

It's largely irrelevant.

Our Presbytery, Presbytery of New Covenant, should be a model for all other presbyteries.

Present leadership is doing well. We are concerned about deficit spending.

Our Presbytery, especially the COM does well in its oversight to congregations. Presbytery is too big—112 churches. Presbyteries must be open to more sharing of resources and personnel across boundaries. They must develop a new vision regarding ways to implement and support mission and ministry. There is a desperate need for renewed energy toward youth/young adult programs and events for presbyteries.

Our presbytery is very reactive and not proactive. This causes much tension and problems within the presbytery.

Church members want more time and effort spent on church development and redevelopment.

Comments from session members: "damaging, no real leadership provided for church staffing and church yoking/merging." "Our experience with Presbytery has been one of conflict. It has been ineffective in finding solutions to pastor/congregation conflict." "Far too bureaucratic"

The relationship between Presbyteries and the congregations could stand improvement. It is becoming increasing difficult to see the value of the body. Decisions are made with little or no input from the congregations. Conservative voices are discounted. Presbytery staff appoints pastors/elders/staff who will vote the agenda, not the congregational voice. Q15 We understand the per capita apportionment. There is a disconnect between the Presbytery/Synod/GA and the congregations. Q21 Small churches continue to out give larger churches per capita, but programs are developed for and housed in larger churches. Q23 Conservative voices are not well represented. The Presbytery's role is to provide opportunities for dialogue and debate on issues concerning the greater church. This is not happening! It appears that the local Presbytery's goal is pushing an agenda and the directive is being sent through the GA and Synod.

Share best practices of Presbytery meetings that work well.

Need more contact, and triennial visits need to be triennial, not every nine years. We are beginning a search for a new general presbyter. Hope that person will visit all churches.

The PET assisted us greatly during the 2008/2009 illness and then death of our minister and then our Interim minister and current Installed minister. The PET has been most helpful during our recent renovations. We are so very pleased with our presbytery. Thanks for asking.

Discussions of theology, church structure & diversity appear to have more attention than relationships with congregations.

Our Presbytery has worked hard in two areas: (a) Immigrant churches (b) Churches wanting to leave denomination—have developed an excellent "discernment process." Because our Presbytery is in the Northeast, we cover a large geographic area with a small number of churches in it.

Separate Presbyteries are better than 1 Presbytery because of the vast area in NM to be covered. There is no cost saving measures by having 1 Executive presbyter. She has to cover a vast area, have 2 assistants, extra gasoline expenses and no time to breathe. It's better to have 2 Executive Presbyters.

Grace does a good job of keeping our church informed about happenings, information needed by our church.

What oversight?
Q17 Our Presbytery is not really geographically too large, but the "headquarters" are not central, but in the northern area where the metropolex is, leaving us in the south rural feeling isolated and remote.

The Session is now receiving the newsletter from the Presbytery so that they can become better informed.

They are not as involved as they could be and there is not much strategic planning.

Newton Presbytery does an excellent job in this area.

Some individuals believe the process for calling a pastor takes too long.

Our church has a very good relationship with our Presbytery.

We have an outstanding E P in Dr. Paige McRight.

Would like more training for deacons and elders. More education would help transfer information back to congregations. We have several new session members that are unsure of the whole process.

Our presbytery plays a valuable role in promoting fellowship among ministers.

Increase support—need more oversight and guidance

Be more proactive in providing triennial visits with healthy congregations. Visits often wait until congregations are in trouble.

Respond to inquiries.

A lot of the Questions don't relate to the realities of a small presbytery.

Largest problem in our Presbytery is the number of large church—approx. 35% who do not pay there per capita in full. This has caused our per capita to be $7.00 higher than it would be if all contributed their fair share.

Things are getting much better now that we have a new General Presbyter in Grace Presbytery

Have a good relationship with our Presbytery, but diminishing resources cripple Presbytery's ability to provide programs and services. Session felt ill-equipped to complete the survey questionnaire

Trinity Presbytery has been very supportive of our church for years. It is a good relationship that we have.

We allotted 30 minutes for this survey during a session meeting; therefore we did not have enough time to complete all the questions.

The Presbytery office is too far away from the upstate, and everything seems to center around the Columbia area.

Discouraging, unreliable, no real leadership provided for church staffing and church yoking/merging. Our experience with Presbytery has been one of conflict/ineffective in finding solutions to pastor/congregation conflict. Far too bureaucratic.

Is the Presbytery no longer in favor of God and the word of God. How can a church of God condone the sin that God condemns? To affirm any sin is to disaffirm God and the word of God. Will the presbytery affirm adulteries and prostitutes in the future as long as they are committed to those relationships? Why would you allow your synod to affirm homosexuality as a good practice in the church of God and change your constitution to go against the word of God. It seems that you no longer want to be a church of God. It is really appalling how you have caved in to society and its whims instead of standing strong for God. One cannot have the love of God without the law of God. I will be praying for your synod and your presbytery that it will return to God and not teach people that it is okay to ignore the word of God as a Christian. [deleted] communication with churches needs to improve

The PNK was very, very supportive of the [deleted] Presbyterian Church in [deleted] when we had a split and a large number of members left to join the Evangelical Presby. Church. Those of us that remained with PCUSA and PNK are grateful for the guidance and the expertise the Presbytery gave us. The Commission on Ministry was especially effective in their leadership and assistance to us.

We as a session don't participate in many presbytery actives

Overall support from The Presbytery of Grace is very good.

Our Presbytery covers a very large geographical area.

Our Triennial Visit meeting results with our Presbytery was offensive.

Disagree with Book of Order Change!!

Helpful when asked, not necessarily proactive.

We have been without a minister/moderator for over 3 years. In that time no one from Presbytery has contacted us to determine our needs or ask about assigning a moderator. A member of our session has scheduled regular meetings and was eventually appointed moderator by Presbytery. That person has received no contact or assistance from Presbytery or its Committee on Ministry. We feel very much isolated from and unsupported by our Presbytery.
We have a wonderful relationship with the General Presbyter. The personal relationships between MGB officials and staff and the congregations they serve and support is critical to their success.

FYI—The Session could not answer most of these questions; the survey answers were mostly from the Senior Pastor. For the most part, the pastors have a connection with the Presbytery. The individual members of the Session have limited connection with the Presbytery. The pastor believes the Presbytery is supportive and resourceful.

WE have not needed oversight except for when we had pastoral transitions, where we worked very closely with our Committee on Ministry and the Executive Presbyter.

They have had to cut budget and staff which has caused a drop in services. Survey was entirely too long.

They do not appear to be a positive influencing factor in dealing with individual church issues. Session contact limited to reports from commissioners to Presbytery meetings and Pastor reports from contacts with Presbytery. Working with Presbytery can be a disadvantage based on several cases observed. Not supportive of churches in trouble or that are having problems.

We need to keep communication open across the theological spectrum.

Have someone write a summary of presbytery meetings. Move 1-2 meetings per year to weekends for working elders to be able to attend.

Need to have regularly established visits with congregation.

Clearer vision statement

Generally very supportive of our activities, missions and requests for information. However, Presbytery MEETINGS have little to offer us as a congregation, so we tend to participate only sporadically.

Our church has been seriously damaged by former pastors. The Presbytery has been of some help but also surprisingly powerless in acting in a timely fashion. Two if the three abusive pastors that were asked to resign continue to return to the community to cause further damage. What if the Presbytery is able to enforce the ethics and directives in the Book of Order?

We have lost sight of the real purpose of the Church of Jesus Christ: to make disciples who keep His commands.

Suggest a "hospice" for churches struggling to stay alive but facing closing, which is happening so much lately. Our church feels that we have had very little support from our Presbytery over the years.

May need to take one layer off, possibly Synod. Some Presbyteries might be merged in order to make the geographical area of the churches all in one geographical area rather than churches miles and miles apart in some current Presbyteries. It would be easier for General Presbyter to visit churches in one's Presbytery if area was smaller or "clustered" together.

Presbytery needs to be less involved with its own structural mechanisms and more involved in supporting local churches, pastors and programs.

Visit churches to discern God’s will—Don't try to build or renew a church/denomination from surveys. Smaller presbyteries

Jeff Hutchison is doing an excellent job in the Presbytery of Southeastern IL. The [deleted] visited our congregation during worship one Sunday to let us know Presbytery is interested in us and sees great things going on at our church. The pastor and clerk are active in Presbytery. Even with all the good things going on in our Presbytery, we as a Session are dismayed at the decision to abandon the Word of God with the change in ordination.

Our Presbytery does not support us and does not represent us.

Presbytery has a very liberal bias.

Based on the geographical area we believe the Presbytery could be more helpful. When we were searching for a Stated Supply Pastor, the Committee on Ministry was an invaluable resource for us.

The Sierra Mission Partnership (SMP), of which our Presbytery [deleted] was a partner, was dissolved at the end of 2010. In all fairness, we would like to point out that [deleted] Presbytery is still getting itself organized and functioning after the SMP dissolution.

We think that the Presbytery needs to be a bit more aware of the fact that many of the meetings that are scheduled are not convenient for persons that work full time. We also think there needs to be more frequent communications, particularly with the smaller congregations.

Our Presbytery has an interim exec that has done a great job in-house with issues. Since only part-time, he has not gotten into the local churches during this past year. Other Exec did to some extent.

SURVEY TOO LONG

They are there and assist when asked and have been very creative and generous with their assistance. However, it would have been extremely beneficial for them to have had a greater presence when things were going well so that that could have picked up on signs when things started to go downhill.
smaller presbyteries would be helpful and realistic; more emphasis on collegial presbyteries with only a Stated Clerk and administrative assistant as staff, with churches working together directly to plan/carry out mission in the region of the presbytery

| Q30. Is there anything else you want to tell the MGB Commission to inform their examination of: |
| b. Synods? |
| Why do they exist? No help here. |
| Due to the size of the congregation we have limited contact with Synod. We miss having Synod School. |
There is no accountability and no sense of being connectional. It's like we are all playing survivor. The system is strangling itself. Can't we all just get along?

Do away with Synods

Synod is anachronistic. Mission can be effectively administered by Session, Presbytery and GA.

See above.

Are synods required for good order, discipline, or faith building? I think not.

Our session expressed concern about the viability and sustainability of synods.

Unnecessary.

Understandably, our contact with Synod is not as frequent or as close. However, we feel that the leadership has provided good oversight and support to our Presbytery and, our church, in kind.

There seems to be a significant breakdown between congregations and Synods. We don't know what it is or what it does, or why it exists.

Synods need to either be absorbed into GA and or Presbyteries

No [25 sessions made this comment]

Our session feels like we are ignored and should be given more time.

Unfortunately, our Synod is not a part of our ministry. We value the work and service of the Synod, but it is time for our denomination to say, "Thank you," and "good-bye" to our Synods.

Weak presbytery involvement leads to weak involvement with synod. We have no direct contact with our synod.

NONE [7 sessions made this comment]

What do Synods do? The congregations need more information regarding resources and programming.

Not familiar, no understanding of what it does with our small congregation.

An outdated concept that should sunset with program delegated to the Presbyteries or GA.

Our knowledge of Synod is through PW which is the only contact we've ever had with Synod.

Should be abolished.

What functions do they serve?

The effectiveness of synods has declined greatly in the last quarter century. Synods should be disbanded.

Don't need them

If presbyteries are going to stay their current size, then most synods are largely redundant.

Synod is anachronistic. Mission can be effectively administered by Session, Presbytery and GA.

Sending information to the churches directly helps to keep the local congregations in the loop.

Very little at the congregational level. I have just become a member of the Synod Peacemaking Committee—I my first meeting will be in September. The Presbytery recently received a loan from Synod to get us through a tough spot.

This survey makes us realize that we are very unfamiliar with the actions of our synod and the relationship with our congregation.

should be eliminated

The purpose of the Synod is unclear to us. Is this a level of the church that is necessary?

Our Session considers Synod something of a dinosaur. It is not visible most of the year, and has little effect on our activities or theology.

Put them out of their misery; but we still need regional trainings and gatherings.

I've never thought synods were a good idea

Consider non-geographic synods. Get the synod leadership out of their offices and out visiting churches.

They seem to be an unnecessary layer of bureaucracy.

Our congregation and Session are unaware of any benefits from having Synod within the church structure. Synod should either become a visible partner in ministry or be dissolved (other than any required judicial function.

Nebulous nothing

We are not aware of our Synod's resources, plans, personnel, mission, etc.

What is it? What does it do?

We will miss correspondence from Synod
We would like more information about synod committees, such as Self Development of People.

None of us, including this pastor of 25+ years, understands the need or function of the synod.

Our congregation would not be impacted if there were no synod.

Many congregations are just clueless about their governing body. Our church has a hard time with the whole idea of being "connectional". Although there is a great deal of ecumenism going on in our county, it is not inspired by the PCUSA.

We have essentially lost touch with Synod Not sure of their necessity

We are a small rural struggling congregation that has not received much help from Presbytery, Synod, or General Assembly.

Invisible.

It's totally irrelevant.

We question synods' usefulness.

Not knowledgeable-what is it useful for?

We don't need synods.

For our congregation, synods seem irrelevant.

Better interpretation of Synod to Presbyteries and congregations.

Synod school covers 2 synods and draws 75 people. Need to rethink this.

comments from session members: "Ineffectual to local church"

Synods need to be more active with the local congregations!

Synod staff of one limits the amount of help and information possible to presbyteries and congregations. An active and interactive synod website would be helpful.

Synod serves no purpose now. Either go back to letting the synod be an avenue for presbyteries to carry our joint missions, or abolish synods.

Who are they?

Why do synods still exist?

As far as we're concerned, the Synod plays no role in what we do on a daily, weekly, monthly or yearly basis.

What does the synod do?

Don't know of their need to exist.

They are no longer effective.

As a Session, we do not understand the purpose or value of synods.

We have no personal contact with the Synod—only through Presbytery.

Pacific Synod is very large and dispersed—not sure this "layer" in the structure of the church given the resources involved is the best structure for the churches.

Recommendation: eliminate them—in this time of financial pinch especially Resources are being used for an entity that does not seem to provide services to congregations. Our synod used to provide excellent leadership training through synod schools.

Respond to inquiries.

communication with churches needs to improve

I'm not sure they are a useful tool for the church in our day. No one seems to know what their mission is or what work they are doing.

Our congregation has little or no knowledge of the purpose of Synods Eliminate synods. We do not need them. If neighboring Presbyteries want to work together, we can figure out how to do that without a synod. Would save the church money.

Just no connection at all with Synod of the Southeast. We know that they have something to do with Presbyterian College and Thornwell Orphanage, but we just don't interact at all.

Need to strengthen communication about the role and responsibility of Synod.

Ineffectual to local church.

See above

Not much contact with the Synod of the Sun.
Synods are a waste of time and money. They contribute little to nothing to the mission of the PCUSA and should be abolished, so the material and personnel resources they require could be used in a more effective fashion.

Thanks to the Synod of Lincoln Trails for the new pastor's group provision.

Our synod has been most used and useful as a judicial stop before a case goes to G.A.—little else.

Our congregation—including Pastors & Session—have no experience with the Synod.

Are they still needed outside of their judicial appeal function?

Where will unique concerns of racial ethnic caucuses, women's advocacy, and youth be supported?

LITTLE OR NO CONTACT FROM OUR SYNOD.

Why do we still have synods?

No relationship. Too far removed from our daily activities as a congregation.

Unclear about any support we get from synod though we continue to send money each year.

Synod school is wonderful.

We don't see a need in our area however, one size does not fit all. If a synod is needed in an area, then let them be used.

No real relationship.

We have lost sight of the real purpose of the Church of Jesus Christ: to make disciples who keep His commands.

Should be abolished. Unneeded layer.

The role and services of the Synod are not well communicated. If the synod is to continue as a viable entity, its specific and unique function in the presbytery hierarchy needs to be delineated and communicated to local churches and presbyteries.

Oultived their usefulness

Our Synod's work in Missions with Living Waters for the World are an example for Synods, we are proud to be in the Synod of Living Waters.

Synods have out-lived their missional usefulness.

To our knowledge our church has never had any contact with the Synod. This level of management probably is not needed. We would like more information regarding the work of the synod.

The Synod of the Pacific functions essentially as a financial institution; it appears to have no additional mission. What it does could be done a different, specialized organization. As a "middle governing body," it adds a layer of bureaucracy that seems redundant to us. So far as the Synod of the Pacific is concerned, it has outlived its usefulness, and our suspicion is that this perspective may apply to many, perhaps all, Synods.

We think that the Synod needs to be more engaging with the congregations, particularly the smaller congregations.

Never hear from them, not sure what they do or provide at a session level.

seriously doubt their usefulness any longer, even with the institutions they "oversee" (and Pastor has chaired the Board of one such)

No contact and little knowledge about.

Need representation and more information

The fact that we don’t hear much is probably a good thing, in that it probably means they do their job well.

Do away with the Synods. Unnecessary layer of beauracracy

In the Internet Age, is the Synod a necessary body for the local congregation?

Lack of direct communications; an overall feeling of lack of support.

These folks do what they want and they don't tell us about it.

What is the purpose of the Synod in today's world?

Needs more Communication

We are not sure if we understand these relationships.

We have not experienced any recent contact with our Synod, so we are not sure of the value of its function in relation to Presbyteries and congregations.

The five presbyteries of South Carolina act as their own de facto synod. We have no idea what happens at the synod.

We don't hear much about our synod.

No real contact
Need better synod to congregational communications
Do not really understand the value/purpose of the synod for us

Q30. Is there anything else you want to tell the MGB Commission to inform their examination of:
   c. The relationship of Presbyteries and synods with the General Assembly?

Satisfied.
There is no accountability and no sense of being connectional. It's like we are all playing survivor. The system is strangling itself. Can't we all just get along?

See two answers above.

We are glad to see that your website is improving, and hope to see continued progress.
   1. The PC(USA) website needs to be more navigational and user friendly. It's often difficult to find what you are looking for.
   2. Define General Mission Fund. We support validated mission within the church; however, as stated above, when we searched for "General Mission Fund" it was not to be found anywhere.
   3. This applies to all of the above....a number of our Session members believe that the governing bodies of the PC(USA) are either unaware of or insensitive to the operating environment of small congregations. For example, fair rental value of our manse in our small town is not the same as it would be in the big city. There is no way we could rent the house for what Louisville says its rental value should be. Anyone with that much money would buy their own house. No one determines rental value based upon the occupant's salary, except in low-cost housing. Another example....we are required to continue paying the pastor's salary during a 3 month sabbatical, in addition to having to pay for pulpit supply and mileage during that time, but there is no financial assistance for us to meet this burden.....our minister hasn't been here long enough according to the fine print in the grants.

We support the General Assembly financially and prayerfully. Those that serve do a good job providing fair and reasonable support to Presbyteries and Synods, as best we can tell. We have not had any problem with the decisions that have been made.

Do we need 2 levels of structure? With technology, we should be migrating to electronic/web-based records and communications to simplify and streamline the organizational structure and improve communications.

No [25 sessions made this comment]

Same answer as B.

This does not pertain to this question, but we have no other place to make further comments. We felt this survey was too limited in time period and it was too time consuming a survey.

Our involvement with General Assembly is practically non-existent.

NONE [9 sessions made this comment]

What is the relationship?
This survey makes us realize that we are very unfamiliar with the actions of our General Assembly and the relationship with our congregation.

1. There are several International students who join us in Worship each week, because of the near-by university. The students participate regularly in our programs but for the most part do not become "members". So, we feel our congregation is much more diverse than our numbers indicate because of their presence.
2. Our church is located several hundred miles from the Presbytery 'seat' and consequently time and money are major concerns for attending meetings. It takes our members two days of travel and an overnight to attend most meetings and there is little financial reimbursement. 3. We would have answered a lot of the questions differently in this questionnaire if the questionnaire had asked us to go back three years, rather than only two years. Three years ago our church was searching for a minister and the Presbytery did assist us in our search and we were appreciative of their help. Also, three years ago we received a Mission Grant from the Presbytery and Synod. The grant was revoked when our pastor left and never reinstated when we hired our new pastor.

The General Assembly seems to be out of touch with the "average" church member. Policies made at the GA do not seem to reflect the feelings of a majority of members—just those who go to the GA with an agenda. Without the local churches and presbyteries, there would be no General Assembly!

This last year has been exciting with all of the questions that GA has asked us to vote on. The Session of Faith Presbyterian Church has a task force to look at the problem of living with the nFoG. Our particular congregation is doing very well with the changes and I believe we will be the better for them. There are congregations in PIN that are not doing so well with the changes, i.e., the ordination standards.
This survey makes us realize that we are very unfamiliar with the actions of our General Assembly and the relationship with our congregation.

Our Presbytery has had several people sit on major committees, and even on Mission Council. We are blessed by these contacts and it has allowed us to learn more about how GA operates.

Middle governing body leadership is changing drastically. The usual networks will no longer work to get resources out to the congregations. Electronic communication will be the way to go...but perhaps we can Skype more to keep relationships a little more personal.

Not sure what that relationship is.

The General Assembly web presence has been very helpful to our local congregation—even when the Presbytery and Synod were very non-present with us in any real way.

We don't know what the relationship is.

Not familiar.

Why is there no mention of Christ in the survey?

To best of our knowledge, good relationship

Your website (General Assembly) needs improving to make it easier to navigate.

GA is the "enemy" that passes "laws" that our church doesn't agree with. It is frustrating.

We are a small rural struggling congregation that has not received much help from Presbytery, Synod, or General Assembly.

Does the Synod have a relationship with General Assembly? GA has provided significant funding/support to PNNE.

Better communication is needed.

Have more direct contact with local leaders.

Only need Synod for Permanent Judicial Commission.

Not sure what the relationship with the General Assembly is.

From our perspective, the relationship between the Presbytery, Synod and GA is very good. However, the local congregations have been minimalized. You are not listening to the congregations. Clearly, you are unwilling to correlate the decreasing membership and financial support to the ongoing theological issues that are ravaging and dividing the Presbyterian church.

PCUSA personnel and resources are excellent; those spoken to on the phone are always eager to help. GAMC is particularly helpful and resourceful.

Our Presbytery worked out a good process to ensure people from different congregations get the experience of GA.

General Assembly may hear people who want to change the Book of Order but the General Assembly isn't effective for the small congregations or Presbyteries as far as we're concerned. There is too much arguing about issues instead of helping the smaller churches. Make it a rule that no changes can be done to the Book of Order but every 10 years.

GA should be more responsive to the congregations and sessions.

There is one?

No knowledge of.

Appears to be good.

OUR PRESBYTERY NEEDS MORE CONTACT WITH CONGREGATIONS; BETTER COMMUNICATION; THE WEB SITE IS OF LITTLE HELP; AND THE TRIANUAL VISIT HAS NOT BEEN DONE IN SEVEN (7)+ YEARS. TOO OFTEN MEMBERS OF THE CONGREGATION QUESTION THE SERVICES THE CHURCH RECEIVES FOT THEIR PER CAPITIA PAYMENT TO THE PREBYTERY.

Not sure about presbyteries and synods relationship with General Assembly, but our congregation makes very good use of General Assembly resources, staff and programs

We have people who go to the General Assembly meeting every year and have had commissioners in the past. We actively follow what comes out of the GA and there are a few in the church who are upset with the events, but really most are not really involved.

General Assembly needs to be trimmed back or focus on ministry and mission and not be so concerned with self preservation.
Reasonable on Presbytery level. No comment on Synod.

Reduce size and scope of General Assembly meetings. Too much business, too many commissioners.

Perhaps synods could be made larger and pared down to a judicial function.

Our relationship with presbytery, Synod, and GA is still and has been strained when the sound Biblical foundation of our communion has been deteriorated by repeated attempts to diminish that basis. If there was a way to affiliate with those congregations and presbyteries of sound Spirit and biblical basis, then we could support the same type of ministries that build Christ's church.

Please do not just tweak—transform us instead.

There needs to be a set policy for Presbyterian churches that decide to leave the denomination—what should they pay PCUSA if they want to retain their church building, etc. Leaving it up to the individual Presbyteries creates too much pressure—it is also enormously unfair because some rogue churches are paying pennies on the dollar of fair market value for their buildings.

We have lost sight of the real purpose of the Church of Jesus Christ: to make disciples who keep His commands. This questionnaire addresses none of the real concerns our Session has.

Local churches are unaware of most services of GA. Better communication is needed to help presbyteries and local churches know what is available plus how to contact resource people/departments at the GA level.

Visit churches to discern God's will—Don't try to build or renew a church/denomination from surveys.

In 2001 our church was a redevelopment/relocation church, which received grants from both the Synod and GA. Their concern and oversight along with our Presbytery was excellent.

Pleased with General Assembly's support.

We have been requesting information and documentation on a reported outstanding loan for five months. We have had great difficulty getting a response. Five telephone calls were made with no results to date!

We need a better website. A member of our Session has tried multiple times to obtain materials via a link or URL provided and cannot access anything. Also, the Presbyteries website is NOT user friendly. If materials are available we have not been able to access or locate them.

We think that there needs to be more direct contact from the Presbyteries & Synods with the General Assembly that would result in greater communications & dialogue with the local congregations. We also think that the entire Presbyterian Church (USA), would be strengthened if the communications were direct, ongoing and most of all, inclusive, to the extent that the various perspectives are considered with equal weight.

Other than issues at GA on which our congregation has commissioner to vote at Presbytery, we have no contact with GA. The press does not give any positive view of GA.

Not sure what they do or provide at a session level.

no opinion able to be formed

No information

I wish the Foundation could be better known about the mutual fund program and how churches could invest through this vehicle.

Don't really know. As for direct support of churches, the GA does a great job with worship materials, but it is a bit frustrating sometimes actually finding those resources.

Each has a constitutional role; however, in reality, folks in the churches only hear from them when they need something.

See answer to b.

It seems like there is a gulf between the presbytery level and the GA.

Nothing else

No relationship other than attending meetings

1. The 'new' PC(USA) website is Horrible. Difficult navigate and to use. Nothing about it is User Friendly. 2. The PCUSA should be doing National Advertising on behalf of the denomination as we see being done by; The United Church of Christ, The United Methodist Church and the Lutheran Church. Synods and Presbyteries cannot afford this and would benefit greatly. With membership dwindling this seems like common sense.

Don’t get sidetracked trying to remake the GA itself (agency or meetings). That is, as we understand it, not the purpose of your group. There is enough work to be done with Presbyteries and Synods.

Q-10. How much is each of the following an obstacle to your presbytery accomplishing its mission? h. Other (please specify):

culture of passivity
Lack of commitment to fulfilling per capita obligations on the part of several churches.
Staffing model is outdated and ineffectively "top heavy." No real need for an EP position in this Presbytery Vision is being clarified given newly implemented shared staff with neighboring presbytery.
We are in transition too many tiny churches - need to combine or close some disconnect of info presbytery down to pews
Our EP is also the camp director, and I think it takes too much of his time. We should get rid of the camp ministry, or it should act as its own entity.
Disagreement on role of presbytery.
Why the word 'obstacle'? Produces a negative response.
Urban verses rural churches not participating in presbytery
Lack of participation by pastors and elders
We are in the process of finding a new Executive Presbyter lack of connection and meetings too infrequent to have a shared work and vision

The presbytery in which I live is too often following ruts of long ago Presbyterians in this area. Ways of doing and believing don't change easily in this area of the country. People move here partly for that reason. I experience it in PW.

Different view on practical theology

Deep theological divide

general presbytery lacks experience and leadership direction

Political machinations by some churches & individuals within and outside the Presbytery

Presbyterians in this area. Ways of doing and believing don't change easily in this area of the country. People move here partly for that reason. I experience it in PW.

Deep theological divide

Political machinations by some churches & individuals within and outside the Presbytery

Presbyters are uninspired, unable, or unwilling to do the real work of the presbytery, look to pby staff too much for answers rather than doing the work themselves

Many (most?) of the congregations function as though we are congregationalist, not Presbyterian. They see the Presbytery as a source of funds (resources) and fellowship, but don't see the need to contribute—ideas, opportunities, etc.

Lack of leadership for change.

Need to be set up non geographically with common vision and understanding of ministry theological differences churches don't attract multicultural population

Travel between congregations in the Presbytery is by ferry, or small plane, therefore meeting face to face is expensive.

It is a challenge to get minority congregations involved

We suffer from having 10% of our churches in Hawaii. Also, we have a handful of very large churches who are overbearing in their relationship to the rest of the Presbytery. Some of these same large church do not contribute financially to the Presbytery or denomination as they should.

need to promote vision more

Too many of our congregations have lost the connectional nature of what it means to be Presbyterian. They are becoming "Lone Rangers". They are very inwardly focused within their own four walls.

Distrust of Presbytery/GA

Communication among the congregations

Staff new, in transition too large

lack of volunteers

Our General Presbyter likes the perceived power in her role as the GP. They seem to enjoy secretiveness and playing sides. This is an obstacle because it cultivates suspicion and division.

Need to restruct mission to match staff competencies

Insufficient visible support to local congregations from presbytery geography - distances and cultures

Staff and volunteers don't represent the full theological diversity of the presbytery ownership of the vision large geographical area=less interest by some congregations pending financial crises

Presbytery does not know what congregations want/need re: support, shared resources, local challenges and opportunities, etc.

This is a small presbytery with small congregations. We do well for what we are able to do and yet are limited by size of congregations, aging within congregations and distance between congregations

Inability to embrace change and redirection.

We have enough staff, just not the right staff.

no single presbytery mission strategy; each church on its own the executive presby is not involved enough geography of presbytery which is over 50,000 square miles in three states huge theological chasm leading to unending cycles of pain

</table>
Because of the general trend of fewer members in our presbytery, it is likely that for all the items that I marked "Stayed about the same," there was a general down-ward trend, but compared to other losses of funding it is relatively insignificant and represents no change in the desire of congregations to support the work of presbytery, synod and GA.

Many churches and church members see little to no benefit in supporting G.A. and Synod.

Economy has hit this also...several churches refuse to give per capita or cut the amount.

Decreasing membership and economic hard times leads congregations to be more locally focused.

Number of congregations has decreased overall population of our area has decreased.

Congregations are dealing with high unemployment and older membership so giving has decreased. Theological differences lead some congregations to limit mission giving and to not pay per capita as a way to "protest" GA decisions.

I believe Newton Presbytery's leaders are intentional and faithful in using resources wisely considering the changing landscape of the mainline church in America.

Mission dollars are used to support presbytery operations/salaries rather than mission because per capita is so low. Neither Synod nor General Assembly do a good job of publicizing the good work of missionaries or mission projects.

Some of the larger congregations in the more populous areas of the state have withheld or been slow in paying the per capita. As the Presbytery fulfills its obligations to synod and GA per capita, these funds come out of the presbytery budget for local mission and ministry.

Declines in all areas are overwhelmingly due to mortality. Our folks are steady givers of time and funds.

Among our 18 churches, we all know pretty well what the others are doing. Even two mission trips a year by two different churches seems a lot. We are a small presbytery in numbers, huge in area. It takes ingenuity to carry out mission by churches cooperating.

We are in process of using a new model; sharing staff with our sister Presbytery so all positions are shared between the 2.

We had a sudden need to which people gave (d) but overall the resources were challenged (c)

Churches under economic pressure; national issues causing divide; several large churches only pay the per capita that they collect from members which puts extreme pressure on other churches.

Doing about the same with less all the time. Coming to a head and the next staff retirements will bring a restructuring of staff.

The presbytery has been in leadership transition. That has been quite positive but change is slow.

Our numbers and strength are in steady decline

Mission supports staff salaries and per capita is uncertain

Downsizing in staff, support (both staff and information) and funds, to the Synod NW has created a major change in our presbyteries association with our synod.

Locally giving to mission of GA is up but I'm not sure about Presbytery wide.

Membership in our churches has declined, having a ripple effect on our resources. Half the churches in our Presbytery did not contribute any money to the work of upper bodies. This has been the case for more than the last five years. Our Presbytery pays its full per capita apportionment anyway.

I do not see the value of the synod.

While our churches tend to be supportive of local mission opportunities, they are often less so for mission conducted by the synod or General Assembly. There seems to be a suspicion that in the larger governing bodies, mission funds will not be spent in the ways local congregations intend. This seems to be the case for our more conservative congregations -- I don't see the same concerns from the more moderate to progressive folks.

The population of our geographic area is aging and shrinking and our congregations (tend to be) aging and shrinking.

We do have congregations who withhold funds for the Synod and GA, we are discussing whether we will continue to make up this difference from our resources.

These are hard questions. The staff fluctuates because we contract for specific tasks, some of which are not paid positions. I still counted them. Our finances are adequate, but we still have congregations refusing to pay per capita because they do not like something GA has done. So we pay anyway. Mission giving depends on what we are promoting. We are looking at other ways to do regional mission/fundraising.

Several large congregation were dismissed from our presbytery reducing everything.
I would say that presbytery has, in general, seen a shift in mission from being done by the presbytery to being done by the local congregations. So there may be a perceived decrease in the total amount of mission being done, though it may be more of a shift in how that mission is being done.

No great changes noted. Stability remains fairly good, as does the cooperation and coordination of services. I'm not sure about these questions because I have only been a part of this presbytery for 6 mths and am still learning about the presbytery.

The term "mission" is very general and is thrown around in the denomination as if everyone knows exactly what it means. However, the interpretation of the term varies. How does the MGB interpret the term?

It is mostly the economy, but alienation and disenchantment also contribute.

We recently restructured to have 3 part-time Associate Missional Presbyteries to coordinate mission and ministry within a smaller geography. Again however the difficult is a lack of trust in the Presbytery, Synod and GA that money will go for the right purposes (which is a concern) there is also a greater emphasis on having the congregation do mission rather than outsourcing to the Presbytery Synod and GA (which I think is a good thing.)

We lost the largest congregation with respect to giving in our presbytery which seriously impacted our funding and ability to give.

We are struggling with decreased giving, what is perceived to be a lack of vision. Having said that, let me say that we are emerging from several difficult years due to a mismatch with our former Presbyter Exec. Under the skillful guidance of an interim exec who brought much healing and much hope to the presbytery, we were able to call a "General Presbyter" who is calling us to ministry. We are beginning to heed his words. It us exciting to watch this transformation begin.

I am very new to my position - I am still have a lot to learn about the presbytery, congregations, history and vision for the future.

The demographics have changed... increase in Hispanics and other races and cultures... The job market has shifted from high tech to service jobs Education is also a factor New ways of communication have brought about changes which cannot be easily measured -- many churches have changed their worship style. The controversy of theological perspectives is difficult for many.

Giving differences are slight. Staff differences are big - our shared paid staff resources (among 3 presbyteries) have just gone away as the sharing agreement expired at the will of the participating presbyteries. This is the last of several such arrangements in our synod that have expired over the last five years.

In general the Presbytery is decreasing in members and congregations both in numbers and $$$ resources. This is a reflection of what is happen with the congregations. However, this is aggravated by a disconnection between the rank and file member and the role, function, missions, etc of the Presbytery. As for the Synod, multiply this disconnection by 100 fold. Event to this day, as 35 year Presbyterian I am not sure I really understand the role, need, function of the Synod.

How do you define "mission". Is it outreaching beyond ourselves, or is it carrying out our internal work? This is a source of disconnect with our congregations. They see their "mission giving" as to be used for "outreach beyond ourselves", not for paying the salaries of staff or presbytery programming, even if that is educational work within the presbytery. More and more they are directing their "mission giving" to specific programs, such as missionary support, food banks, homeless support or programs such as presbytery camp.

We are GIVING less to mission programs, but I think the presbytery is focusing more now on developing CHURCHES, which is where it ought to be. If we'd quit fighting about sex, I think giving would be substantially larger - conservative churches are redirecting funding, and they have more money. But if we count all mission funding, I think it has stayed the same or even increased; they are just not giving to PCUSA or presbytery mission causes.

We had several churches leave the denomination, the largest in the Presbytery.

We lost a huge and wealthy congregation to the EPC, on top of the recent financial debacle.

As with many PBYs and particular churches, giving patterns have been more focused on local rather than regional or national mission.

I wish I had the numbers in front of me.

Our Presbytery has made a commitment to remit the full amount of per capita to the Synod and GA even if congregations do not provide per capita to the Presbytery for that purpose.

Staff increase reflects change from part-time camp director to full-time. Change to GA Mission reflects both change in percentage allocated from shared giving and dissatisfaction with GA positions among some churches.

Churches are increasingly withholding money because of discontent.
My husband and I moved into this presbytery in Aug. 2006 so I do not have the background information to answer f. and g. Financial resources dropped because one large church left the denomination and another large church decreased its giving over 2 yrs. by $58K.

Because of the theological divide, and the continuing controversy over ordination standards, there is a great lack of enthusiasm and support.

These are hard times in Michigan

Percentage of Mission Dollars went down for both Synod and G.A. Big decreases from churches on Mission Giving. Offset by no staff salary increases and decrease of project funding - only project funding we do is from our endowments at present.

My sense is that the presbytery is trying to do more with less resources. I believe that we give the suggested per capita and mission dollars to the GA and Synod but do not get as much financial support from the congregations. Several have not paid per capita for several years.

Only been in this presbytery for 1 year so have no clue how to answer these questions.

Decreases are mostly a result of decreased membership.

The percentage of giving to Synod and the General Assembly stayed the same.....

We have available funds in a sort of endowment so the presbytery can make up the difference for some decline in the giving by individual congregations.

Sorry, my brain does not compute numbers very well, so I'm in a fog in this area.

a. The ability to sustain the staff size has been a matter of debate f & g. It seems that directed giving has increased, but how much of that is being directed to specified synod or General Assembly mission is not clear

Some congregations are giving directly to the GA and Synod and the Presbytery doesn't necessarily know what is given directly.

We downsized one staff person in 2010, first time in recent history. We also reluctantly decreased giving to the Synod and GA about 3 years ago.

With the addition of a part time Mission Coordinator we have increased the amount of hands on mission our churches are doing together. We also made the decision to get read of the "laundry list" of small missions the Presbytery was focusing on and consolidate our efforts to one international mission, (Sudan) one regional mission (Pine Springs Camp) and one grassroots mission...that soon became disaster relief. We have made many trips to places within the USA that have been impacted by Natural Disasters.

The biggest problem is the doing away with per capita apportionment on a presbytery level. Congregations have not caught the vision, and presbytery was caught in the lurch. It's now using reserves and searching for an answer.

giving has been maintained because it is virtually all designated

I think it is important to note that the Presbytery has continued to pay its full per capita assessment to the General Assembly.

We transitioned from a full time Associate Executive Presbyter to five part time Regional Associates in our Presbytery. These Associates are not technically staff of the Presbytery. This was an intentional, innovative restructuring.

Emphasis and recognition of Unified Giving has been done. This has kept the giving levels at about the same over the years.

We have closed some churches. There seems to be a general feeling of scarcity, accompanied by some local-church-first attitude.

Change in funding strategy has great theology but has been detrimental in practicality and actual dollars.

The decreases speak for themselves. The presbytery is irrelevant to the mission of its congregations. The synod is even more irrelevant. The presbytery has a plethora of policies and rules with which it inflicts and threatens smaller congregations. It steers clear of the "mid sized" and large congregations in case it pisses them off even more and they contribute even less. Look at the decline in membership and giving in the PCUSA for fifty plus years and you wonder what is the relevance of the presbytery. This has nothing to do with the ongoing battle over ordination standards. The decline in enthusiasm and membership was in effect years before. The PCUSA is broke and it has constantly obdurately refused to look at its structures. The abolition if synods was suggested in the 1980's and no action was taken. Congregations can get excited about entities like "Habitat" etc and support them generously. Presbytery means nothing, this is not good but will things change anytime soon? I suspect "decreased" will be the most checked box.

Believing that, while discouraging, our continued dedication on all these issues and more is what we are called to do with faith, hope and daring to think outside the box.
I am not completely sure, but I believe that all financial giving is on a downward turn.

Infrastructure, overhead, expectations that the presbytery is supposed to provide services, expectations staff have to run committees all help create this situation. Too many complex rules and time driving to meetings means there is no time or money for proactive work to connect our churches. Congregations don't feel the value of MGB and often feel the MGBs think the congregations exist to serve them or only offer what they want without even asking the congregations what they need. Even when they ask nothing changes to respond to reality congregation’s face. Less staff who are adaptable and flexible could help churches share resources with each other at minimal cost and be far more valuable. Virtual offices and get out with the people. Stop promoting people to incompetence and seek people with new ideas with experience outside of the church.

The sense of connectionalism -- or more accurately, relationalism -- is diminishing in leaps & bounds!

I am not in possession of the relevant statistical reports. I could have responded "not sure" to all of the above, but have attempted to answer from my perception.

This survey does not include local & international mission activity done by congregations beyond presbytery, synod, and General Assembly.

Our church has specifically not sent funds to the synod and GA, but we continue to support our presbytery.

When most of your congregations are small and your losing members the possibility of giving to go up is slim or not at all except these congregations are in small rural communities and farming and ranching has been good the past several years. There is new growth taking place in rural communities.

May not be the best resource to answer. Think that we can better use the churches and their unused space to consolidate the offices of our Presbyteries. Eliminating rents and sharing secretarial services would allow more funds to be used for our mission/church work.

Trends and other key financial information, including headcount not widely available.

There is a significant trend in decreasing attendance overall in our congregations, and some focus on church growth, but not enough to address the decreases concretely (more triage). These decreases and the inability to address them with concrete actions have lead to decreased funding, staff, giving at the larger church. Inability to change has also been a challenge in identifying and responding to decline.

The presbytery suffers from the facts that it has only 34 churches and that most are quite small. There is a cluster of stronger churches in one county.

Everything depends on how you define mission. We may be meeting our "mission goals," but are they worth having. We're in the process of developing a new structure and mission, but for the most part it's the same old people doing the work. Maybe we should be asking if we need a Presbytery for anything other than tending to our congregations and their mission. With regard to Synods and GA, whether we need them or not is an even bigger question. They perform virtually no useful functions for us at this point.

The Synod of the Mid-Atlantic is a minimal, non-programmatic synod. Thus, none of our undesignated mission receipts are allocated to the synod.

A new committee this past year has increased awareness, and offered some funding, for local congregations' mission. Presbytery mission $$ going to local organizations known primarily to Council & others who study the Annual budget Percentage giving to GA and synod has not decreased but overall giving has.

Mission-giving is becoming more and more localized--congregations want to have a more personal connection to the mission efforts they support.

I've only recently become involved with Grace Presbytery and do not have that much knowledge of staff and missions.

The economy has been a factor.

Congregations have little interest in presbytery and no interest in synod. Difficult to assess congregations' understanding of and familiarity with General Assembly.

Mission Giving in general is down over the last two years, due to the poor economy.

We have lost mission dollars from GA

As membership decreased, so giving

The overwhelming opinion in this Presbytery among leaders is that Synods are redundant, taking up resources which can be more effectively placed in technological advances and connections rather than administration and holding onto the past. The number of congregations will decrease overall population of our area will decrease

Presbyterians are a dying breed in the Northeast. How can a denomination or presbytery or congregation reverse a societal trend away from organized religion?

The lack of support from synod and GA to local ministry after years of aid-to-field for the small rural congregations is leaving the presbytery with reduced or substandard pastoral leadership. The recent failure of the various synod and national PJC to uphold the authority of either the Book of Order or the Scripture does not sit well with many of the more traditional faith members of the churches. As the connectional system has been primarily felt to be only going one way [from the local church to the denomination and no support coming from the national, synod, or presbytery to the local church] the sense of connection with the larger Church is already much less than a few years ago. With the 35 year battle over the authority of scripture seemingly moving further away from the traditional views, the connection is exceedingly fragile.

Again, the decline will probably be mortality. Our economy has been declining since 1950, and our churches have slid since then. Many are at the tipping point of inability to carry out mission. But they are loyal to their congregation, the presbytery, and the General Assembly.

People in the pews are beginning to understand and appreciate the work of our presbytery, not so for Synod. I thought the Synod was becoming extinct. I am hopeful that we are moving toward a Revival led by our ministerial team. If so perhaps e will be increase!

Congregations are focusing more and more about what they can do locally, either alone or in partnerships with other churches, both Presbyterian and those of other denominations. Hence more funds stay "at home."

Difficult to predict what response to amendment of G-6.0106b (if it is ratified) will be. Our next to largest and most conservative/evangelical church has withheld per capita support for some years and might re-consider their unified giving commitment to presbytery or even leave the denomination.

There is little interest at presbytery level in any mission because we hear constantly can't afford that the several larger churches have carried the weight of that but one of them had major losses in the investments and the other two have decreased their pledge as well.

We are taking a new approach to stewardship that will increase giving in all areas. Initial response has been favorable. Increase giving, combined with re-visioning of staff needs and responsibilities will allow us to be better stewards of what we have, which will ultimately increase the level of giving.

Our funds will increase as we sell church properties of closed congregations. Our hope is that as we focus on healthy growing congregations our worship attendance will increase presbytery-wide. Some congregations are very concerned about the vote on amendment 10A. This could affect (in a negative way) giving to presbytery and GA. Congregations may look to designate giving.

are in a depressed area economically and not evangelizing folks...new members tend to be church members somewhere else...very few first time Christians.

Again with the aging and shrinking.

Congregations will be smaller as we continue to drop in membership. Congregations will be asking to be dismissed due to several issues. The PC(USA) does not have a program for evangelism. We will continue to lose members in several ways.

I foresee little change, despite efforts at church planting. Sizes of churches in not expected to grow significantly, with stability strived for.

I think unfortunately we will see 3-4 of the largest 6 congregations leave the denomination in the next 2 years. This will obviously greatly impact the Presbytery as a whole...

At the present time there is nothing that we can see that will cause our mission and giving to change.

All the hoopla about ordaining gay ministers is dividing the congregation and will cause a decrease in all things good. One way or another we need to make a decision and put it behind us so we can move forward.

The impact on our presbytery of the constitutional changes will likely have an impact on our mission.

Without vision and sufficient leadership, things will only continue their present downward trend.

My presbytery is in flux due to a reduction in Mission Partnership Funds.

Most people do not see value at the synod level.

The road ahead is full of twists and turns, but I am convinced that God is walking beside us and will grant us insight to minister to his people.

Increased mission will be due to individuals volunteering in the missions they particularly wish to promote. Also, Lay Pastors will contribute their time and talents to the work of missions.
Staffing is hard to predict as the committees shoulder the responsibilities formerly performed by the sharing arrangement.

Do not anything that would change the current trend with the exception of the number of staff. We are currently operating at a minimum level short of asking the Exe to become part time. This minimum level of staff is aggravating the trend.

We have two large congregations that are growing, along with several medium size congregations that are also growing. The majority of our smaller churches are declining in membership and attendance. Critical issues such as changing theology, governance, ordination issues, and perception of lack of effective outreach to the unchurched locally and abroad are dividing our congregations and churches and may well cause us to lose either one or more congregations or substantial portions of congregations, which will have a crippling effect in our congregations, presbyteries and denomination.

IF we keep fighting, we'll keep shrinking. Gal 5:15

Our general presbyter has been very proactive in suggesting ways to trim staff costs through some sharing with other presbyteries, even though this would impact his job. I appreciate his vision, although the neighboring presbyteries haven't been as open to such ideas.

I am hopeful but I believe more churches will leave the PCUSA.

Who knows. Is this a glass half full/glass half empty question?

We are in transition in our presbytery, perhaps moving to a smaller staffing model. With goal emphasis on helping congregations grow, our hope is for increased attendance & giving, but true outcome is unknown.

e. I believe worship attendance mayor may not increase depending on the ability and willingness of current church members to adapt to new and/or different ways of worship. Many congregations across the country have done so successfully. In our region of the country people are more stuck in the traditional.

Given that at least two large churches in our Presbytery have publicly declared their intent to join the new non-geographic, theologically based synods and presbyteries, the total giving could actually go up, if those church begin to dramatically increase giving to an 'affinity' presbytery. That would leave 'our' presbytery weakened, however.

I don't know what will happen with the congregational responses to changes in the Constitution.

We are working on 2 options of revitalization processes with our congregations. It is still early, but our goal is to increase mission giving and worship attendance.

These answers look bleak, but I honestly don't see how we are going to change this trend in our presbytery. A good part of our Presbytery is in an economically disadvantaged area. We have dozens of small churches just hanging on trying to keep the doors open. Most of our large churches are taking issue with the direction in which the PCUSA is moving and we have already lost one of our biggest churches and are in the process of losing another. I fear that there will be more in line as the votes come in on the "fidelity and chastity" issue.

If the per capita crisis is not well-addressed, we will continue to lose ground.

change in G-6.0106b will definitely cause a decrease in GA giving

I do not see many of the congregations increasing in members or giving given the demographics of the small communities in which the congregations are located.

There is a new vision, relatively new EP, new Stated Clerk, and a plan for transformation of congregations within the Presbytery, and enhanced mission opportunities. Whether those are fulfilled waits to be seen.

Hard to comment given the nFOG and the fact that our Presbytery has an enormous debt due to a payout from a sexual misconduct lawsuit. The Presbytery voted to give the payout due to the amount of damage incurred to the individuals.

I'd like to be hopeful but I don't see it turning around any time soon.

Membership is declining and aging and has been for years. From where is the money going to come?

Some very small churches will close within two-3 years. Worship attendance and giving in some churches will increase slightly.

Again - a guess.

I answered these questions as if Amendment 10-A will become G.60106b, which it is very likely to do. We have a large conservative church in our presbytery and many small conservative ones, too.

A number of congregations, especially some larger ones, are concerned about Amendment A's impending passage, and may withhold or reduce giving when/if it passes.

I personally have been disappointed that contributions to synod and GA have decreased; but with dwindling financial resources, the choice has been made to keep more of the available funds "at home."
Radical change is necessary. Some things appear to be changing, but the reason for the change can't be so that we can "save" the denomination. Change needs to happen to help our churches share resources with each other and build relationships and synergy. The world has changed and a hierarchical system is a hindrance. The system needs to be reset to what it was meant to be. The governing bodies are to be facilitators for churches to function in ways that allow flexibility and encourage health. Constant arguments about negative issue where there is no clear consensus also serves to leave congregations with a negative attitude that speeds the decline.

Pessimistic about it. Yet hope in new leadership that conflict can be decreased and giving increase

I anticipate that imminent constitutional changes for the PC(USA) will result in loss of membership across the PNK, including potential defections of entire congregations to the EPC. The loss in membership will translate into a decrease in giving. I pray that these consequences will not occur.

The next five years trends depend upon mission interpretation by staff, committees, presbyters (active session elders and active ministers of Word and Sacraments, use of websites, emails, Presbyterian Outlook subscriptions, Presbyterians Today, and specific mission printed/email resources. Presbytery online newsletters do help inspire some viewers. Presbytery staff does send mission alerts emails and these do inspire some readers. Mission team reports back to congregations, and mtgs of presbytery do reach those who are there and are listening.

Demographics are working against us.

While these answers seem negative on the surface, I think they are part of a changing model that we see in the church. More of the mission will be driven by the congregants than the middle bodies, perhaps partnerships forged between churches rather than the presbytery as a whole.

We will become more congregationally focused and higher governing bodies will need to adjust re: their role vis-a-vis congregations (ask, listen and respond vs. current practice of top down direction and wondering why response not sufficient).

Unless we are willing to intervene and concretely help congregations redirect and resurrect their mission, we will have to work through at least another decade of closing churches before we will be prepared to redirect our mission overall.

Some of the larger churches and a few of the smaller churches are growing in membership. However, only recently we have begun to realize that some of our smaller churches may have to close, and one former large church faces substantial obstacles to its struggle to survive because of poor leadership and high overhead costs for its physical plant.

With regard to "f", we can only hope that there will be a decrease. Of all governing bodies, it is clear that Synods are least useful. People were already saying this in the 1960's. It is clearly time for Synods to go away.

Of our undesignated mission receipts, 22% is allocated to GA mission.

Giving to Synod/GA will increase gradually for a few congregations, decrease dramatically for a few congregations, and stay the same, most likely, for many.

b, f & g--our presbytery currently has real property for sale (1 pending sale and 1 just listed for sale) which will allow our presbytery to increase fluid financial assets and resources to support all mission in general.

We may have to decrease percentage giving to Synod and GA

Trends in giving are decreasing and most churches rather designate their gifts.

Presbytery going through transition time and get better answer these questions after the presbytery has discerned its future

This is assuming that some congregations will leave the PC(USA) because of theological issues.

I expect at least one of our larger churches to withdraw from the PCUSA and others to reduce their giving to presbytery, synod, and GA.
Q14. The General Assembly and most presbyteries and synods support their ecclesial functions by assessing congregations a charge based on their number of members, an amount usually referred to as “per capita.” Do you think the current split of per capita funds among your presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly is:

Q14a. [If “inappropriate” or “very inappropriate,”] Please indicate how you would change the relative distribution of per capita funds. (Assume that the total amount of per capita funds stays the same, but is only being split differently.)

c. Comments on your responses to Q14a-b:

Our presbytery serves SMALL rural churches who often need help. Our presbytery wants to help and funds are limited. If more of our money stayed within their hands, more would be available. Our mission giving is greater than the giving for local needs, because we are a caring people, within a caring presbytery. Our churches would be more comfortable going to presbytery for help, if they felt they were not taking funds from others.

Synods are based on an outdated model in which travel was far more restricted. There is no need for Synods in modern times, in my opinion.

per capita should decrease or at very least not increase; per capita is becoming alternative offset to decreased mission giving

The Synod should get nearly nothing; and the GA should get significantly less than it does. Things have changed, and we don't need a bloatped staff in Louisville.

We still seem to be confusing the difference between "social gospel" and mission in our denomination.

The synod has a decreased role and function and does not need the same amount of money. The General Assembly is putting more roles on the presbytery and so the funds for presbytery should increase.

There’s not an option here for eliminating per capita altogether, which I would prefer. If the funding information we've received from the Lake Research folks at IU is accurate, requiring or compelling "gifts" is just not the way forward.

We need to fix the required imbalance between mandatory per capita and optional mission giving (OGA vs GAMC)... when our presbytery budget went down 30-40%, we had to keep per capita the same, and so GA mission giving was cut more than the 30-40%. These two should not be in competition. Also, presbyteries should not have to pay per capita for churches that do not submit it.

G.A. gives us bupkis on the positive side and a host of headaches on the negative side

In Hudson River Presbytery the per capita is too low to support its intended goal

The presbytery is where the hands on ministry is. It is, as we used to say in the Army, “boots on the ground” mission. GA officials meeting with the presbytery have said, “You feed the hungry but we do the more important work of looking at hunger's causes.” Really? And what has been accomplished? How many full time staff are on the Washington DC lobby group? [5] How many staff at the U.N. [3]? How many for the small Church ministry which represents 52% of our denomination [occasionally 1] Some 1500 of our 5,000 + small churches cannot afford a pastor and efforts to offer new models of ministry to fill those slots are ignored by GA and Synod and Presbytery. But if the “boots on the ground” pastors are to do the work of the ministry, it will have to be at the presbytery level that support, encouragement, and mission aid comes.

As synods go, ours is excellent, but I am increasingly convinced that the role of synod has become completely obsolete. As our denomination struggles with loss of membership and funding--this is an easy call.

Both synod and GA are entities that serve no purpose except to try and manage local congregations. All monies come from local congregations imagine what we could do if we did not send any of it to synod or GA.

It isn't so much that the proportion is off, it is that the Presbytery portion of per capita is $20 which is too high. But I think there is also a concern with how Synod and GA use the funds as well.

My presbytery would be able to function if we could absorb Synod per capita from Synod and find ways to be better stewards of our resources between Presbyteries.

Synod should be eliminated

The structure is too top heavy.

I think synods should be disbanded.

These questions really don't get at the heart of the matter which is what are roles of these governing bodies.

It is hard to justify Synods in 21st C. USA. The Synod is not necessary for the mission of the church and actually demands resources for staff and program that could be better used at the local level. While some Synods do great work in mission, most simply add an extra expensive level of management that does nothing for the local congregation.
It is time to do away with Synods - when communication was more difficult, there may have been need for three levels of government, but that time has passed. Synods may need to have a Stated Clerk for judicial process, to organize EMI type of courses, and to bring clerks together for minutes reading, but we have too many levels of mission. It is very disorganized and inefficient.

If given the options I would have checked all three in "b"

No per capita. If the congregations believe in what the governing bodies are doing then they will abundantly fund them for what is important and necessary. Per capita does fund necessary things but it also allows continuance of behaviors that are not beneficial to our congregations.

They decreased it by a large percentage in recent years - as specific churches gave less due to "politics" at National level. Yet some things national level does best.

This is, of course, a very tricky balance, because most of the "front-line" mission work is initiated by the presbytery. But weakening the synod and GA is counter-productive in the long run I believe.

I see no reasonable role for synods today.

Synod is not needed; is a body looking for a purpose. My presbytery needs to consider merging with another body.

Other (specify):

- website cooperative was set up
- Synod activity was down due to resignation of Synod Executive to take another call.
- we're part of a four presbytery unified camping ministry
- Our Synod provided legal defense and negotiation in resolution of conflicts with dismissed congregations
- Multiple-presbytery sponsored pastor conferences

  This state is enormous and has two huge presbyteries. It is a major thing to go outside this presbytery--hundreds of miles. I am not aware of what the synod does in our presbytery, except that the Executive regularly attends presbytery meetings, which we love him to do. I really don't pay much attention to what the Synod does in our (enormous) area.
- Fundraising
- mass web communication
  At my level of involvement I am not able to answer these questions.
- some individuals and committed do provide limited conversations and information
- website hosting
- PJC tried a remedial case; stated clerk convened group of ptr stated clerks for minutes review and continuing ed.
- Synod may have done others of these listed, but I am not aware of it.
- provided a common mission - Living Waters for the World
- Presentations at Presbytery Meetings
- Synod School
- training of new pastors
  I really haven't done much with the synod.
- Not well informed about Synod
- Don't know.
- Our Synod conducts a pre-commissioning training program for future CLPs and continuing education activities for CLPs as well.
- Grant to partially offset Hawaii Delegate Travel
- I honestly don't know
- I'm sure that the Synod has done lots of these things - but - I do not have firsthand knowledge such that I can provide appropriate input.
- Not sure of Synod activities
- Synod Men's Fellowship
- pastoral training, summer conference, youth conference

Q30. Is there anything else you want to tell the MGB Commission to inform their examination of:

a. Presbyteries and their duties and functions?

Presbyteries have the historic duty, since 1789, of care and oversight of both pastors and churches. The last 40 years have seen programmatic responsibilities dumped onto what was once an ecclesiastical body. What Synods used to do, Presbyteries do now. What GA used to do, presbyteries do now. It has strained presbyteries almost to the breaking point. They are stressed by being the 'pinch point' between congregations and GA.

We are in the midst of a program designed to discover, as a Presbytery, what God has in mind for us. We are looking closely at the ways our Presbytery serves the congregations and pastors, and the spiritual guidance and encouragement they offer.

Presbyteries have too many redundant positions. Every presbytery has a stated clerk, yet the job of the stated clerk could be shared by multiple presbyteries if we could work out the "be a member of that particular judicatory: Every Presbytery has a web master. That is redundant. Why can we not have one webmaster for multiple settings? We have multiple offices, yet, most of us can function virtually. The connections are the relationships - by phone or in person. These have to be made. The jobs of resourcing congregations can be outsourced to multiple presbyteries, using the money we currently use for Synods to assist.

Given the reality of declining membership, I believe it is imperative that Presbyteries become more efficient. With new technologies, we ought to be able to do more with less staff. I see this happening in our Presbytery and it needs to happen everywhere.

In order to function effectively in the changing ecclesiological culture in which we find ourselves I believe that it will be increasingly necessary to reduce our Presbytery geographic and staff sizes in order to more effectively address the needs of our congregations. Please get presbyteries to stop using unified mission monies/budgets to pay for administrative expenses that can't be provided for in the administrative budgets. Please also ask them to replace the unified giving percentages we were using in the 1970's.

I'm not sure how to address the isolation experienced by small churches in presbyteries with expansive geographic boundaries. Wouldn't Synods be able to provide some programmatic resourcing for congregations regionally in such cases?

We have some members of the church working very hard and serving on more than one committee while other members refuse service or are not asked.

Allow non-geographic presbyteries based on theology. It may be the only way to hold the PCUSA together. It is better to have theological alignment than to lose our conservative brothers and sisters in Christ.

It is time to move away from per capita funding, a regressive "tax" which does not take into account a church's income. It's quite possible for a smaller church to have significantly more income per year than a larger church and yet pay less per capita.
That "Presbyteries" are not a collection of staff persons, but the body of members/commissioners that take actions that are facilitated by the staff. The term "presbytery" is misconstrued by most PCUSA congregations.

To foster collegiality presbyteries need to be smaller.

We need to combine Presbyteries, giving us more churches, more people, and more money to work with.

OUR presbytery IS EXTREMELY DIVIDED OVER THEOLOGY TO THE POINT OF WANTING TO SPLIT TO AVOID FURTHER CONFLICT

Our presbytery is in its first full year of functioning without an executive. As a member of Council, I am part of the group that is doing work to update our Manual of Operations to make it easier for committee chairs to transition without that kind of staff person's oversight. I believe that our presbytery is growing to be more "connectional" and more intentional in mission, now that the clergy and lay members of presbytery feel more responsibility to carry out these functions without an executive on staff. The transition is proving to be a good thing for us.

We are now working without an Executive Presbyter. We have a Stated Clerk and Asst. Clerk. The Stated Clerk is has some part time employment. We have one part time office manager. We are collaborating with another Presbytery for Accounting services. The rest is all volunteer initiative. We're busy and looking forward to updating our manual of operations and services to our congregations.

The same comment could be applied to each judicatory: We continue to use a business model to function rather than a missional model. Unless many of the Presbyterians in the PC(USA) feel that their more direct support from each judicatory, we'll probably continue to decline.

Size is toooooo large, to hard to reach everyone, to form connections

Activities are not widely known

Presbyteries need to become less bureaucratic, less focused on meetings, and more focused on healthy congregations, healthy pastors and REAL accountability for leaders. Rolls need to be cleansed of all retired and specialized clergy - pastors and elders who actually represent congregations - should ALONE have vote in presbytery.

NO [3 leaders made this comment]

It is not clear how strong the Presbytery mandate is to close/consolidate very small churches. As a result we wait until they wither and die.

Staff too large and takes too much of the operating budget

Presbyteries exist to support local congregations, not the other way around.

Presbyteries need to focus on the individual congregations and become the conduit for connectionalism to flow both ways.

The Presbytery is where the action is and needs to be the primary partner with local congregations as they are empowered to carry on effective ministry for Jesus Christ.

Primary focus should be on presbytery's role of determining minister members' fitness for membership, on resourcing its congregations, and formation of strong theological understanding of presbytery's core values (theological and ecclesiastical)

Seems we have become dysfunctional due to conservative/liberal split. This split on certain committees has left them unable to function effectively.

We are a small, harmonious, and hard-working presbytery. I am currently moderator of COM, quite green at this, and not involved in the other committees. The whole state is big in area, small in population, hard-pressed economically even in boom times, used to relying on ourselves. Conditions taken for granted elsewhere are irrelevant to us. Perhaps we are closet isolationists, but happy ones.

Distance needs to be considered. It takes me 3 1/2 hours to get to our Presbytery office and mileage and other travel costs add up. We want to encourage people from all over the Presbytery to be active, and for many, its cost prohibitive unless the Presbytery can reimburse.

We need lots of authorization to use technology in our meetings as we have large distances and few people. It's unreasonable to meet in person year around.

With electronic communications and the availability of on-line resources, the Presbytery is moving to becoming an enabler and assistant to the churches to obtain resources rather than providing them. Presbytery needs to focus on assuring high quality pastors and resolving unhealthy congregational situations.

Ministers and those elders who attend presbytery meetings with some regularity and/or who are members of presbytery committees/teams have some working knowledge of what presbyteries do. Otherwise, the members in the pews have little awareness (and likely little interest) in presbytery's duties and functions.

We are looking at restructuring triennial visits whether NFOG passes or not.
The Presbytery is envisioning changes regarding its functions for the member churches. It is just now revising its mission statement in that regard and council is conducting "envisioning" discussions.

Without a great deal to compare it to, I sense that this Presbytery functions at a very high level especially given its dwindling resources.

As at least this presbytery is best represented by its Council, it may not be totally helpful to depend on staff input to the MGB Commission, although it may seem more convenient.

Facilitate sharing of models and structures; analysis of viability criteria

I think it would be good to encourage the formation of non-geographical presbyteries, or perhaps "orders" to which congregations and pastors could subscribe, perhaps in line with the suggestions made in the recent letter published by pastors of large churches.

My presbytery is in free fall and operates by the seat of its pants. It reorganized about six years ago and quickly placed the plans in a bottom desk drawer. The serving exec was hired for teaching not administrating. 75% of his time is spent in administrative matters for which he is not qualified or particularly interested. Presbytery has a $172,000 mission budget for which $100,000 goes into the teaching Presbyter's compensation package.

The leadership in any capacity needs to be better informed of inter presbytery, intra presbytery and GA. The key will be to have solid leadership rather than simply taking care of someone who is without a call. The understanding of vote percentages needs to be clarified; rather than accepting a 60/40 split both presbytery and staff person need not move ahead. It is stressed for pastors and needs to be stressed for other called positions. The staff people need solid training in a wide variety of areas. When there is a major conflict and a complaint has been filed, staff needs to know how to handle it timely.

It's difficult for the "person in the pew" to understand what Presbytery is, what it does, why we need to support it.

Maximize flexibility

If the new nFOG comes into effect, the range of duties and responsibilities for a Presbytery greatly increases. Are our presbyteries up to the task or will we live in a 'local rule' kind of network of churches?

Property ownership. Because of the theological climate in the PC(USA), I don't think that congregations should be held hostage by a theological or scriptural interpretation that they do not agree with. Ordination of a practicing homosexual does not uphold scriptural authority. What happens to congregations (pastors. leaders and members) who will not uphold this practice? There needs to be more freedom with how a congregation associates and is in relationship with presbytery, synod and GA.

Watching the vote results on amendments this year I notice the great difference in membership of our presbyteries; some have hundreds voting, many have dozens. Generally smaller membership presbyteries promote relationships that larger, corporate, programmatic presbyteries can't (or don't) achieve. The MGB commission should look at realigning presbyteries into smaller groups.

in all areas of the church I feel that the PCUSA does the worst job at telling the congregational members in the pews what wonderful things are actually happening in the church. All they hear is the negative and many will not take the time to look for anything else. This goes for Synods and GA.

As our denomination loses members it may begin to make excellent sense to merge/close/combine some Presbyteries. If you could help to create a process to make that easier--that would be great.

We are clearly in a situation where we are going to have to consider working more closely with other Presbyteries in our area to control operating costs.

As COM chair, I am an un-paid Presbytery staff person. I am finding the work load to be a challenge. A small presbytery has fewer folks to draw from to do the work. A larger presbytery may have more work to do. I think the changing times are generating more church conflicts. The ability of a presbytery to respond constructively to that needs to be kept in mind.

I see presbyteries as THE middle governing body.

reducing the size and scope of a presbytery could be a useful vision;
As PW Moderator I have been most impressed with the workings of our Presbytery Council. Everyone on the Council is knowledgeable, friendly and eager to answer questions when asked. Every meeting is conducted in a businesslike manner.

The biggest difficulty our Presbytery faces is distrust and suspicion between 'liberals' and 'conservatives.' We are about to lose one of our wealthier congregations due to the divisive leadership of its pastor, but seemed unable to do anything about it.

feel that we are active and concerned to cooperate with Synod, and the General Assembly, and all of our fifty (50) congregations in aiding in their work of spreading the Word and doing their jobs.

Generally speaking, presbyteries in our region work well together.

The ministries and projects that comprise the (Biblically mandated) mission of the church, that are only possible at the Presbytery level, need to be clarified and promoted.

It will not be beneficial to advise presbyteries to become non-geographical. The hurdles to a non-geographical presbytery--financial, communication, etc. are significant.

I think we need to allow congregations (if they wish) to join other Presbyteries non-geographically and/or form small presbyteries. I think we will have greater participation and connectional focus.

We are a small presbytery with most of the small congregation are without pastors. The presbytery has trained CLP who are serving these small churches.

Look for simplicity and clarity in ministries. Stop trying to do everything for everybody, and be everything for everybody. Furthermore, educate, educate and educate more about what a presbytery can and should do -- and, again, that does NOT mean trying to do everything for everybody. We have too much dependence by sessions and pastors of small churches on waiting for the presbytery to do for them, when they can do so much more for themselves!

My response to a, b, and c is education. Few of our members are lifelong Presbyterians who are familiar with a, b, and c. Therefore they need to be introduced to the entities so that they may learn that they are a vital part of our connectionalism. So often, we assume that every member knows as much about our form of government as do those of us who are lifelong Presbyterians. We do a poor job of bringing new members into the larger church. And yet the larger church - presbytery, synod and GA is a portion of our identification.

change at all levels

I think the basic functions of the Presbyteries are being done well that is overseeing and caring for the sessions and pastoral staff within the Presbytery. The weakness is in the area of connecting to the general rank and file members.

Need to focus more on supporting churches than on programs. It's easy to get people together on committees, but the real meat of a presbytery is supporting churches and pastors.

I think the book, "The Fly in the Ointment: Why Denominations Aren't Helping Their Congregations...And How They Can" (Church Publishing: NY) summarizes well my feelings about Presbytery. It ends up setting up alternative to the churches, instead of focusing on helping churches grow. We have a great new Executive. Yet the Presbytery itself does not have a vision of what we need to do to help congregations thrive.

Presbyteries serve an important role, but I think it might be time to take another look at presbytery boundaries or presbytery inter-cooperation, to see if there might be ways to work together more efficiently for the future while still supporting local churches.

We need to teach our pastors and elders the importance of being imbedded in Scripture.

The diversity of theology, geography, demographics, congregational size and context created by geographic presbyteries has been very valuable for our presbytery and allows for congregations to experience new & different contexts for ministry. Moving to non-geographic presbyteries would significantly diminish this wonderful asset as we would likely become more homogeneous and exposed to less ways of experiencing God's vision for ministry in the world.

Deeply desire that we find a way to come together for mission instead of politics and better support our congregations on the front line.

Continue the focus on the Presbytery supporting the local congregations as opposed to the local congregations supporting the Presbytery.

We should have non geographical presbyteries so churches can form like minded bodies to avoid leaving the denomination

It may need a system to equip and train peoples to be effective elders.

There needs to be more vision and an effort to rationalize churches in size and location.
We must form Presbyteries and bodies that fall along theological lines - especially with regards to GLBT ordination. The conservative and evangelical congregations will not stay in the PCUSA. If there is going to be at least some connectional system, it must be with like-minded theological bodies.

We should have non geographical presbyteries so churches can form like minded bodies to avoid leaving the denomination.

Presbyteries play a key role in keeping track of the local churches. The network of people that are part of the committees and commissions are a key resource in detecting early signs of trouble in congregations. They are also a resource in helping the congregations.

I would be interested in a conversation about presbytery leadership and governance in our denomination and wonder what resources are available on these topics. Specifically, I am concerned that presbytery staff may be encouraged to over-function (do the work of COM) rather than help lead and cast a vision for the ministry and mission of the presbytery. This has been a struggle in our presbytery . . . what is the role of the EP?

I see the issues in the PCUSA related to individuals, congregations, presbyteries, synods, etc., as analogous to the political debate between libertarians (individuals), conservatives (local government), state rights, and "big" government. The idea of "connectedness" has been lost (or never understood) by many rank-and-file members. The best way to get this communicated and experienced is congregation to Presbytery. That means that INITIALLY (not ultimately) the individual members and individual congregations have to see the direction of help/initiation of relationship, etc. being Presbytery to local. Then, as the relationship is better established (not just experienced by the pastor and an elder for occasional presbytery meetings) and connectedness is lived out, individuals and congregations can comprehend that we are the Presbytery. That means Presbytery staff and leaders must do more than "have meetings."

Providence Presbytery is a very effective Presbytery and a great size with number of churches and amount of area it covers. Charlotte Presbytery is too large and poor staff communication and direction. There is no congregational support from the Presbytery staff. Western North Carolina is too Large of an area and Gaston County churches are left out of the loop.

Less is more...

Presbyteries should focus on administration and not programs. Membership in the presbyteries should be non-geographical in nature and based on common theology and vision for ministry. Local sessions should be given the freedom to choose which presbytery to belong.

I am a general presbytery so I am aware of the vital role that presbyteries can play in the life of congregations. Presbyteries can nurture congregations, support them in times for crises, applaud them in times of expanding mission, help them find pastors, provide building loans, and the list goes on and on. It is a pleasure to serve the congregations in this presbytery.

I think a compelling role of presbyteries is to as an organized network of churches in mission together.

The purpose of the Presbytery is to assist the local congregation in it's mission and ministry. It does not need to do it's own mission. The Presbytery should also have a lean staffing plan.

Many of the Mission Churches within our Presbytery are experiencing a very high cost of heating fuel, and electricity. This makes loss of mission support funds a hardship for our mission churches.

I feel the Presbytery still serves a vital role in the overall mission of the PCUSA. Without it, the churches would soon become individual entities unto themselves. There needs to be some body that promotes the connectional nature of our denomination. Some body that promotes shared worship, stewardship, mission, etc. There needs to be some body that oversees the ministry of the local congregations and deals with "issues" as they occur, whether this be filling pulpits, finding called and installed pastors, shepherding candidates and inquirers, or generally challenging churches in their outreach and vision within their communities. It also is an independent body for dealing with conflicts that manifest within the individual congregations.

Presbytery is a major component of our Presbyterian system.

need to become non-geographical

Our Presbytery is going through a transitional period for the next 3 years.

Our Presbytery co-sponsors with McCormick Seminary a Leadership development day in Winter each year. It is extremely well attended and valuable for lay people and speakers come from within the Presbytery, except for the Key Note speaker.

I believe the Presbyterian Church needs to continue to find ways to allow Presbyteries to work together, merge, change boundaries. All of this takes time but with the the use of computers and technology, it no longer means that a Presbytery has to have an office or a building.
I have been serving on committees of the Presbytery of Northern New England and have not known of any training program for leaders, other than Early Ministry Institute for newly ordained clergy.

We have a wonderful presbytery and it provides important support to the churches. I wish the churches would make more of an effort to utilize what the presbytery offers.

Presbyteries need to continue to work on being more relational and less regulatory; more program facilitators and less program developers.

if nfog passes this could change a lot. COM would do better if it could move beyond dike-plugging. Attention to prayer and resourcing congregations has improved relations and functionality.

Make presbyteries smaller and eliminate wherever possible "General Presbyters; "Executive Presbyters" and the like who are overpaid and un-necessary functionaries that hearken back to a vanished era in the life of the church. The PCUSA used to live without them it can do so effectivley again. Large presbyteries have little sense of community and identity. Distance and the associated costs impact attendance. If the church wants to encourage what few younger elders are left to attend presbytery why hold meetings on weekdays during working hours? Ministers don't like meetings on Saturdays but where in our polity does it state presbytery meetings are for the convenenience of the clergy? if presbyteries were smaller with less structure and more colegiality and informality and devoid of "Presbyters" who think they are the boss then they might, just might, recapture some of their relevance.

Presbyteries need to be more relational and less regulatory.

most congregations are not aware of Presbytery's duties and functions.

I have concern about presbytery's inability to assist Candidates, who have completed seminary training three or four years ago, in suitable full or part-time positions when many small churches have no pastor. I really appreciate and utilize the Resource Center of Presbytery.

Please help presbyteries become smaller and do less!! I belive that the local church is where 99% of the mission and evangelism should be done. Let presbyteries be an theological and (when needed) buracratic structures that minimally holds us together as presbyterians.

Given the rising gasoline prices, large presbyteries need to do more with technology such as Skype to facilitate committee and council meetings so less travel time and money is being spent just getting to and from meetings.

Staff should be out with the people and not sitting in meetings. They can be most valuable by connecting congregations to share resources rather than consuming financial resources and attempting to provide services.

clarity and purpose with a smaller staff and the increase of regional church connections within presbyteries Presbyteries are a vital link in a connectional church. In addition to oversight and administrative functions, they can bring local congregations together to accomplish more than they could alone. I would like to see more efforts across PNK to develop cross-congregation dialog and mission.

Assist ordained officers in their understanding and use of all creedsand confessions in the Book of Confessions as a "confessional" church.Enable elected officers in understanding the Ordination Questions andthe applications of their responses to these Ordination Questions asthe sessions approve newly elected officers to the leadership of thechurch (Sessions, Presbyteries, Synods, and General Assembly).

We need help adopting new technology and structures that will allow us to better serve churches that are distanced from each other.

There has been interest in our church with nongeographic presbyteries of like minded, conservative, congregations. The constant disagreement over fidelity and chastity has had a negative impact on our congregation and its willingness to work in the local presbytery. This is a congregational response, not my personal response.

More proactive contact with churches on successes in growing congregations.

My presbytery is BIG - but we have been blessed with great staff and excellent programming over the years. There is always talk of dividing the presbytery into smaller sections; but I think that many would be disappointed in what each new body could actually do with their respective new sizes.

We no longer have an EP, we have a Presbytery Administrator. We are doing well financially but I believe we are really missing out on service to congregations and ministers. What to do?

Need to increase level of communication and transparency with local congregations.

our presbytery (Geneva) has been on a nearly six-year journey to respond to God and the needs of our congregations, primarily in vision and role and only secondarily in structure. Our calling is to resource our congregations as they transform their mission and ministries in their communities. It's making a big difference!

We have many dedicated elders, pastors and other lay people who provide many services for the PY, especially in the COM, CPM, Nominations, Council and in one specific subject, Social Justice.

some presbyteries are too big, making relationships and pastoral care difficult,
I think that these years are a time of transition to newer forms of communication, newer models for doing ministry, and allowing for change in structure from the top-down models and staff-driven models of the past. Change is painful, and a lot of presbytery work will focus on closing churches until we work between congregations to train more evangelists and allow for new models of doing church that have broader leadership (not just pastor do everything), less connection with buildings, and concrete focus on church growth... helping churches not to accept sustainability, but growth as model. Unfortunately many, many churches are not willing, ready, or believe they are able to engage in growth, and it is presbytery's function to help identify leaders, training, strategies, and wake up calls to hold those congregations accountable to the six great ends of the church.

Presbyterian church was never intended to be the hierarchy it has become. GA, and some presbyteries have forgotten that they are to be coalitions, not bishops and arch-bishops. We need the connectionalism of presbyteries, but they must be relational and equipping, not mandating and punitive. Camps, and joint missions and combined officer training, and these things help churches.

Our Presbytery has not been able to leave behind our 1950's organizational model, possibly because the entire denomination has not been able to give up its comfort with this model.

In today's world with so many churches having funding issues as well as all the issues with church officer standards, the main question for presbyteries is how they can best be of service to the smaller churches in their area. These are the churches we are going to lose whether by just shutting down in small towns or the congregation leaves for other churches. Presbyteries need to be more entrepreneurial in spirit and not so focused on committees, councils and other bureaucracy and instead get out in the community and be hands on by helping those in need.

Our presbytery is so large we are focusing on finding ways to function in smaller "communities." A lot of energy and money is spent trying to find effective ways to function as a large presbytery.

In general, congregations fail to show interest in or engagement with the presbytery. This presbytery continues to attempt to live the connectional model of our denomination.

Establishment of minimum guidelines for an effective and healthy presbytery based on church size, etc.

Move from an Executive to a Moderator...Stated Clerk Model...Consolidate Presbyteries to compensate for lack of financial resources

If this denomination is to survive, we must strengthen the ties of individual churches to the Presbytery.

I think that the Presbytery staff are to support the pastors and the congregations. Not the congregations to support the staff.

Q30. Is there anything else you want to tell the MGB Commission to inform their examination of:

b. Presbyteries’ relationships with their synods?

If there wasn't a Synod, presbyteries in a region would probably have to form one. That said, most people in a presbytery don't know or care what a synod does. But then they don't have to.

I see the Synod as a dinosaur - it sits there, and is pretty big, but it does little of relevance to the congregations and is on its way out.

The relationship with the Synod has not been effective for years because the foundational principle - that we need geographical connections - is no longer true or helpful. No matter who is in the position, the relationship is characterized by lack of effective cooperation and vision. Synods are unnecessary. Regional PJC's can do the judicial work that is necessary. We are not that big anymore.

In the Synod of the Trinity the relationship of the presbyteries to the Synod seems to be good.

I am convinced that we can no longer support synods. I believe their duties should be folded into the Presbytery level and that Presbyteries (at least on the East Coast) should be merged to make fewer judicatories. People in the church are frustrated with high administrative costs and want a greater proportion of their money to go directly to mission.

We don't need Synods. Period.

Synods are needed to facilitate regional mission among Presbyteries that cover several states rather than several counties. IMHO.

Our relationship with the synod has been positive

We hope to improve this in the future. Our poor relationship seems to have been a problem from our end, not synod's.

I question the need for synods, Our synod dropped much programming and few around here noticed it, particularly at the congregational level.
Synods are unnecessary in the modern age. They add a layer of bureaucracy that does not provide sufficient benefit for the cost of the investment. There is no reason the function of synods could not be divided between presbyteries and GA at a much lower cost than continuing the synods.

No need for synods

In this era Synods seem to have far less relevance and, indeed, usefulness.

As a presbytery, I think we have a good relationship with our synod, but there is a breakdown in communication somewhere between us and the Presbyterian in the pews: they haven't a clue about what the synods do and why we have them.

The Church of Scotland hae nae Synods

Synod truly may not have much of a role in the long term. (I say that as someone who participates in the Synod of the Trinity which is quite helpful. But I realize that the vast majority of people in this presbytery would not notice if the Synod were to disappear.)

We are well supported by our Synod staff and find their expertise to be invaluable.

Their PJC seems useful. Other than that, it's hard to see a value.

It is time to conclude the synod structure.

In my opinion, the synod level governing body should be eliminated.

More and more Presbyteries are distancing from Synod relationships. It seems redundant.

Our involvement with Synod is irrelevant. Synod does very little to assist our Presbytery.

As a minister member of PCUSA for the last 30 years I can no longer understand the purpose of Synod. I think they need to be eliminated with the hope of non-geographical type relationships built around missional goals. Working on projects and events that will connect our people with like minded people.

OTHER THAN THE CREDIT UNION SYNOD APPEARS TO BE AN UNECESSARY FILTER BETWEEN PRESBYTERY AND GA

There is not a lot of activity with our Synod. There were successful youth trips to the Pres. Office of the UN that was initiated at the Synod level and included five Presbyteries in our region. Meetings of the Exec. Presbyters from our Synod forget to invite our Moderator or Clerk to these meetings. Even before the untimely death of our Synod Moderator, there was not a lot of services or connection. This is even more true at the congregational level.

We need to abolish Synods!!!!!! An old model that can be addressed with modern technical methods. Don't need the expense involved.

Our Presbytery is a major supporter of our Synod. We work very closely together and continue to rely heavily on the wisdom, leadership, spiritual direction, and dollars in all forms from our Synod.

Not too much going on with the Synod except in PW

Not too much going on with the Synod except in PW

Most congregations are unaware of relationships what are synods for? they feel like black holes where money goes but nothing ever comes back.

NO [3 leaders made this comment]

We work better as a state cluster of presbyteries. Synod isn't "there" in any significant way, other than as a funnel for money and PJC review. Find another way to handle these functions and do away with synod.

Synod does nothing and should be abolished

Synods should keep out of the way and let presbyteries work.

Other than hearing PJC appeals, there seems to be little benefit from this organization.

Synods need to be phased out completely - with regional judicial functions re-imagined - and with equitable distribution of existing funds and endowments

Get rid of synods

We see no purpose for the synod and have see no benefit derived from them.

Synods are a thing of the past, and no longer necessary. My sense is the Synod of the Northeast is only around because it has so too money and doesn't know what to do with it.

I don't know; I never think about this. We know that nobody in the Church has money to throw around, and so far, so far as I know, we don't expect outside entities to solve our problems. Maybe if I had been higher up in the hierarchy, for longer, I would know more about this.

Synod of the Trinity has successfully reduced its role to the provision of services actively requested by presbyteries. As such it is very useful and light on the administrative budget.

A small Office of Presbytery Relations (maybe we could come up with a snappier name) at the Presbyterian Center could very effectively replace our many synod offices, and a few (maybe four) appellate level judicial commissions could replace synod PJCs. Please consider taking the radical step of recommending the elimination of synod as a layer of Presbyterian governance.</td>

In our Presbytery, there is a strong contingent which is actively working to destroy the relationship between Presbytery and Synod, and get the Synod dismantled. This is unfortunate, as our Synod has actually picked up a big chunk of pastoral support and training which cannot be effected at the Presbytery level.

Effective working relationship through our Executive Presbyter who is very active and very effective.

Synods are much too large. South Carolina effectively functions as a separate synod providing services the 5 presbyteries cannot do on their own. Single state synods would work in the southeastern US.

I have no idea of presbyteries' relationship with synods.

Any ministries and projects that comprise the (Biblically mandated) mission of the church, but that are only possible to accomplish at the Synod level (such as support of college student ministry), need to be clarified and promoted. Ancillary and superfluous priorities that are merely "politically correct" but that do nothing to facilitate the 5 great ends of the church need to be abandoned.

Presbyteries and synods should foster good relationships. However, it is becoming increasingly clear that synods should be "phased out" gradually within the next decade.

I think Synods should also reform and Presbyteries voluntarily form under Synods to provide more of a judicatory function.

We try to involve ourselves with the synod, however, we are so far removed from the synod office, and travel is very expensive. However, the Presbytery Exc. is very faithful in attending the meeting that are especially subject to our concerns as a presbytery.

Our presbytery is an island...no real partnership with any other presbytery, whether in our synod or not.

Looser ties -- synods are irrelevant to the practice of ministry in local churches.

I am in favor of eliminating synods entirely. I was at one time very active in synod work myself. I feel Presbyteries and G.A. could do the ministry & mission of synods more effectively if money was allocated to them.

Other than the review of presbytery minutes and submitting nominees to the synod, I don't recall any other interactions.

No real contact or support from Synod except for judicial issues or review of minutes.

Not sure. I do not see much of this relationships. The role and functions of the Synod is very unclear to the rank and file members.

Most effective help has been in facilitating inter-presbytery and inter-synod communication and consultations on topics such as new congregation development and in fostering and supporting international partnerships between presbyteries and congregations. Those international partnerships have strengthened and pulled our congregations together. Extremely helpful in those ways. Good connectional knowledge across our synod of people and resources of particular expertise and help. However, I seriously question the need for a middle level of governance and administration. Streamline to focus on connecting and resourcing programs.

I really don't know what a synod does.

Synod has not been worth the amount of funds it takes to run it. Good people, but no vision. For Synod to be useful at all, it needs to take leadership in helping the Presbyteries strategize about regional concerns. Instead, Synod is just a rather ineffective level of bureaucracy.

We have a great relationship with our synod, but I wonder if synod's haven't perhaps outlived their usefulness. The ways synods coordinate presbyteries working together can be valuable. It would seem that presbyteries could do this on their own, but whether they would do it without synod's help is uncertain.

Our synod has been valuable in providing connections & opportunities across presbyteries and also working with other synods. There is at times a disconnect between the presbytery and synod, but overall our synod has been a valuable partner in ministry that is very "value added" and is not just another level of bureaucracy.

Our synod has, in the past, been a great partner in building COM & CPM networks and in leadership development. Only financial constraints have limited that role in recent years. We continue to count on synod's partnership in carrying out our presbytery mission.

Synod of the Pacific did a remarkable job of handling litigation for the presbytery. Truly appreciate the money for mission provided for the Synod of the Pacific savings and loan program.

Still have difficulty understanding the need for synods.

We don't really need synods.

Synods must first allow theological presbyteries. Then Synods must find creative ways in which these presbyteries can have meaningful fellowship.

Difficult to get anyone interested in the synod and its activities. Can't find commissioners, and there's little interest in what goes on there...
It is hard to see what additional the Synods provide that the G.A. and Presbyteries don't - at least in our case.

I do not see a real need for Synods

Synod's do not work...Never hear anything out of them and when I do call for help or a question you can never talk to a person and when someone returns your call they have no clue to the answer.

Synods in our part of the world seem increasingly unimportant...The travel distance from one end to the other keeps it from being practical or useful. Smaller synods (say around state lines) make more sense if they are to be kept at all. However economic realities suggest they probably need to go away.

Again, this relationship should be non-geographical in nature and based on a common theology and vision for ministry.

If Synods can support the ministry and vision of presbyteries, then there is a vital role for synods. I see this as the primary task but not the only task of these relationships.

It can be helpful to think regionally and resource and learn from one another across presbyteries but rarely is this done at the synod level.

Why are Synod's necessary? What unique purpose do they fulfill? Why would a local congregation care about a Synod? If a local congregation has no use for the Synod, what use does a Presbytery?

Our Presbytery has received several grants from our Synod, which has been very helpful.

I have been a Presbyterian my whole life and really have had very little connection to the Synod. I do not feel qualified to comment on the role of the Synod within the PCUSA. However, the question does become, if I have made it for 60+ years as a leader within the church and have not had much connection to the Synod, is it necessary?

The Synod currently provides very little in the way of programs, which has resulted in substantial decreases in Presbytery funding to the Synod over the last several years. The Presbytery has taken on the Synod's previous role in a couple of areas.

Presbytery and Synod should continue to work together to coordinate mission on a regional basis.

need a 17th synod

Limited exposure to what goes on, like a brief report at Presbytery meetings. The Synod newsletter is good, but frequency of contacts does not keep my up to date or sustain my interest.

It appears from the "outside" that the major function for this Synod is the work of the PJC.

Our Synod has been a model among others in the country. We have had co-executives until this past summer, and programming for new clergy, interim pastor training, stewardship assistance, synod school were among the best lead programs they provided. Now with one executive, of course the amount of leadership available is less.

This seems to be the weakest link in the chain.

I believe it is time for Synods to be eliminated or downsized to skeletal staff. There just doesn't seem to be a need for an additional middle governing body level. Most presbyteries operate very independently. If anything I think another middle governing body level bogs down the process for change. I think Synods are in a survival mode and not being particularly helpful creating extra work for presbyteries or wanting to take over some of presbytery responsibilities.

I've been in my presbytery for 25 years. Have never felt that the synod was particularly helpful.

I am a member of the Mission to the USA committee, a program the synod funds. The presbyteries could not provide this great program with the synod support.

There is a decreasing need for a synod structure.

One continues to question the need for the synod governance level

EP forum keeps synod connections better than if it didn't meet. Some of the mission coordination at this level unique and good; not easily assumed by presbytery or GA.

Abolish all synods

Presbyteries need more relationships with synods; otherwise, what are synods for?

Synods probably need to "go away"

most congregations are not award of Synods functions

More interactive projects and programs.

I am no longer sure about the viability of Synods. Fewer and fewer mission projects are being handled by the Synods as their resources decline. Perhaps Synods need to be simply a review body for disciplinary, COM and inter-presbytery issues.
Get rid of synods altogether

Synods should help to facilitate work that presbyteries can't accomplish individually and promoting relationships with pastors that cross the artificial presbytery boundaries we have drawn that often don't make geographic sense.

clarity and purpose

Since my focus is on the life of particular congregations, I have not seen as much need for synods as I do for presbyteries.

Provide specific interpretation of inter-relationships in Mission of Presbytery Committees and congregations with specific ministries of their Synod. Most of the relationships are limited to specific committees of presbyteries with some or all other presbyteries within their synod. Interpret and involve more Presbyterians with their Synod.

We are getting ready to participate in a virtual synod in the very near future and are excited about how that will work.

Because the Synod of Lincoln Trails is so effective and important to the work of my Presbytery (Chicago), I cannot understand the push to devalue, let alone dissolve, Synods. I pray it will not happen in my life-time.

I see very little that synod does for our church or our Presbytery. I see the functioning body of the PCUSA as the presbytery and the local congregation, not the synod.

I think the time has come when the Synod's role in our connectional church needs to be reevaluated and probably restructured.

One of the reasons that my presbytery has a "fair" relationship with the synod is that for the past several years the executive has clearly wanted synods to go away so it did not matter what the synod did or did not do - the synod was always "bad." I know this for a fact because I served as synod Stated Clerk for seven years and saw it firsthand in forums and other gatherings of representatives of presbyteries.

What relationships?

Other than loans, not certain what Synods do that is of value to local congregations.

Synod can provide an important and useful role regarding support for clusters of presbyteries. This includes distribution of mission monies for the use by the presbytery groupings. With small membership presbyteries, such as my own, this is vitally important. The cluster, for example, has contracted with an advocate for peace and justice who also arranges opportunities such as visits to the UN for youth. Such activities would probably not be possible without the partnership. As a member of the Synod PJC, I consider the role of the Synod again critical; I cannot imagine every case that comes from presbyteries going directly to the GAPJC.

May very well be time for the too-big regional Synod of the Northeast to move to NY, NJ, and New England Synods with SNE funding allocated to the new/old synods.

As communication is more and more broadly available, I think that much of synod's functions can be handled more locally, but that will again require congregations and presbyteries to take on the work of being connectional.

Sporadic. Most relationships occur in PPGs, commissioners to the Synod, and the Executive Presbyter and State Clerk meeting with their peer through auspices of the Synod.

In addition to including options in your survey for no opinion or lack of knowledge, you should have included an option for "don't care." Synods are a waste of money.

we feel good about our Synod -- and especially appreciate their enabling 3 presbyteries cooperation with a Camping Facility.

When the synod was smaller there was a closer relationship between the presbytery and synod. No longer the case. Synod seems distant.

Synod of the Northeast is moribund. In general, synods are less essential in this period of declining membership and technological advances in communication and transportation.

Support consultation among presbyteries within the synod going through staff transitions as to shared staff, realignment of boundaries, etc.

Consolidate number of Synods or eliminate them altogether they are a costly and passe element in an antiquated process.

I know that our synod has done some good things, however I think it is just another step between the GA and the presbyteries that I cannot justify.

I think this is a level of government that has lived its life.

Our presbytery functions as a synod because of the size (AK) the synod is not much of a benefit to us.
Q30. Is there anything else you want to tell the MGB Commission to inform their examination of:
   c. Presbyteries’ relationships with the General Assembly?

| Love-hate relationship. With OGA, presbyteries find a source of support and service. With GAMC it is a bit more complicated. Presbyteries and GANC share common interests. But GAMC has long seen presbyteries not as an ally but as a competitor for funding. That is a source of tension and frustration. It is exacerbated when GAMC appeals directly to church members for funds, without ever consulting Sessions or Presbyteries. The result has been a mortal wound to the mission funding system, with nothing to replace it. If the GA wants to ignore presbyteries - the very heart of our system - why don't they go ahead and invent the Southern Baptist Convention all over again. Someone needs to read the polity! |
| The GA staff is responsive to our needs and in general is amazingly helpful, particularly in offering resources and coming up with items to spark our mission projects, like DVDs, artwork and other media. |
| There does need to be a way for a wider judicatory to resource congregations and presbyteries. I like having specialized ministries in church development to assist in particular areas of ministry but am frustrated with the lack of cooperation between Racial Ethnic ministries and church development. There are turf issues which continue to plague us all. |
| If we separate out some of the General Assembly actions and focus on the GAMC and the OGA things are okay. When GA actions are added in, particularly regarding the ordination standards, things are not so good. |
| I expected this to be a problem when GA went from annual to biannual meetings, however the transition was handled well. My only complaint on the GA level is that we no longer receive annual stewardship resources (other than special offerings). Dropping that is lie biting the arm that feeds you. |
| Get GA people out of the office and into the Presbyteries... how 'bout regional offices for the GA folks? |
| No comment. |
| Commissioners attend the General Assembly and report back with enthusiasm |
| Last time I traveled to Louisville, the travel was murderous. |
| General Assembly and Long Island Presbytery are largely in accord. That said, both are out of step with an awful lot of congregation and members of congregations. Those with an agenda (liberal or conservative) have tended to be the ones who get involved. The majority of people in the pews are not on board with what GA has been doing of late. Too much money spent, too much staff, too much bureaucracy. |
| The PCUSA website could use a bit of streamlining. Searches almost always result in thousands of unwanted, confusing results. Google is easier. |
| Once again, there is a breakdown in communication between GA and the person in the pew: if their sole source of information is the local daily paper, they only hear about the controversial decisions and have no idea of the scope of the work done by the Assembly and its offices. |
| Hard to work up much enthusiasm there... |
| The GA is less and less relevant today. The trust level is at an all time low for many of us. It is time to rethink what it means to be Presbyterian. |
| Top down authority of GA over Presbytery should be reduced. Mandatory funding of per capita should be eliminated. |
| We give token attention to General Assembly. GA is out of touch with who we are and what we are about. GA is giving poor leadership to the PCUSA. We are trying to exist with as little contact with GA as possible. |
| HALF OF THE PRESBYTERY DOES NOT TRUST, RESPECT OR WISH TO DEAL WITH GA |
| Folks relate more directly to various GA offices and committees on a regular basis. E-mail, phone calls, US mail and use of the website has made this possible. GA is more visible in the lives of local congregations as well. |
| The member in the pew is the top of the "pecking order". G.A. is the bottom and broadest level of support. We feel very left out of the beaurocracy and holier-than-thou attitudes of most G.A. staff. |
| Follow the rules - work around the rules, you name it! |
| Most congregational members see the GA as too political |
| NO [3 leaders made this comment] |
| General Assembly meetings do more harm than good. As look as there are up/down-win/lose votes, and endless hours that stretch commissioners to the limit, we will lose more than we gain from these meetings. Dial back on all the commercial interruptions. Double the number of committees, so these poor folks can take seriously the items they are asked to deal with. |
1. Stop making social pronouncements that cause trouble in the local churches. 2. Congregations came first, then presbyteries, then GA. G.A. does not run the church. It exists to support congregations. If it gets in the way of that mission, it should be abolished.

There are many GA programs and services that are useful to Presbyteries and their congregations. Staff seems eager to help but is very hard to contact -- at least from my experience. There are several clerical input errors in the 10 year statistical reports of various congregations that should not have occurred and need to be fixed but aren't attended to.

Presbyteries ought to be represented by rotating delegates instead of allowing special interest groups that dominate some presbyteries to send the same people year after year. Let other voices than the special interest groups be heard and keep them from dominating the GA when most delegates are new and still learning the ropes. Presbyteries need to hold GA accountable for the use of the per capita and ensure there are staff to represent the needs of the congregations who know something about "boots on the ground" ministry and have done it before coming into a leadership position that sets policies directly impacting the local congregation's ministry and mission. In dealing with GA staff the attitude I have most commonly experienced was either ignorance or indifference.

The General Assembly needs to be a key partner with the Presbyteries as the Presbytery assists the local church in its ministry.

Small presbyteries need resourcing from Ga-level (manuals, best practices, legal advice) because they do not have the staff or volunteers to provide them. Get rid of the property trust clause. It is an irritant, and the only properties we get are unsalable cemeteries or decrepit buildings that drain the scarce resources of the presbytery. They are not assets, but liabilities, and the church shouldn't be about greed or money.

Once in a while we need some help from GA, for example, recently we needed to know about CLPs or clergy serving across presbytery lines when it seems useful. We appreciated the reading we received from GA and acted upon it. There may be more going on in this relationship than I am ever aware of.

executives need more of a relationship with GAMC like clerks have with OGA

GA needs to help Presbyteries grow in understanding our joint efforts in universal mission. Many congregations see per capita as tax or forced dues. We need to speak alot to what that $ buys and why we would want to continue those programs. Many Lousiville employees think they have the job because they were the best available. Perhaps it was only availability. (Sorry I know that sounds negative.)

Support for pastoral searches; support for sticky polity/legal issues; support for global mission; support for disaster assistance

GA should be able to communicate directly to the Presbyteries.

Some presbytery functions (e.g., EP, stated clerk, moderators of COM and CPM) involve at least some direct contact with GA folks, but otherwise there is little familiarity with the organization and function of GA. Many perceive GA as an agency that often acts independently of the denomination grassroots (especially with respect to social issues).

Important resource on denominational issues especially.

We encourage GA participation and nominate our members for work on GA committees.

Presbytery staff are often called upon to help congregations track down information, or tell them how to find things themselves. The new GA website is several steps backward on communication and a constant source of frustration.

direct the leadership needs to include more than staff in this involvement and that means fiscal support ss as well as shared information.

I do not think that overtures decided on at General Assembly needs to be passed by a majority vote of presbyteries Collaboration must be amphasized as opposed to competition. We are all on the same team.

Property ownership. Because of the theological climate in the PC(USA), I don't think that congregations should be held hostage by a theological or scriptural interpretation that they do not agree with. Ordination of a practicing homosexual does not uphold scriptural authority. What happens to congregations (pastors. leaders and members) who will not uphold this practice? There needs to be more freedom with how a congregation associates and is in relationship with presbytery, synod and GA. In our attempt to be inclusive we are excluding some of our strongest, more conservative congregations. This is not right!

Per Capita needs a more creative approach. We tend to lose members because churches do not want to pay per capita for those who are not attending. Some how, some way, we need to be more positive with our approach to those who are not entering our sanctuaries.
What relationship?

Very good. Constitutional services is very helpful. So is Linda Valentine.

GA is becoming irrelevant.

Our presbytery has excellent relations with the GAMC and has submitted overtures with success.

I don't have much to say about that .we've had members involved at GA levels, and our executive is well known in that arena. The Presbytery functions quite well without a lot of GA input, but it should, shouldn't it? GA Mission Council needs to have a better understanding of what each presbytery is ad its needs.

If the Synods were dissolved, I would imagine that the General Assembly would need to pick up the Permanent Judicial Commission function in some way, either by establishing a larger-than-presbytery regional boundary for PJCs. But that seems do-able to me.

Calling Louisville is always very helpful. I appreciate the resources and guidance provided.

From a PW point of view, I really do not have an opinion on the work with the General Assembly since that is not in the area in which I am involved.

Again, there is suspicion that the GA is using "our" money unwisely - the Presbyterian Laymen communicates this suspicion well, with little real impact from the positive messages sent from GA.

Stated Clerk and the Executive Presbyter are closely connected and intertwined with the General Assembly, working closely with them at every opportunity.

Much better sense of presbyteries working with General Assembly than with synods.

Any ministries and projects that comprise the (Biblically mandated) mission of the church, that are only possible to accomplish at the national level (such as support of international missions, disaster relief, hunger relief, humanitarian aid, support for congregations in hostile societies), need to be clarified and emphasized. Ancillary and superfluous priorities that are merely "politically correct" but that do nothing to facilitate the 5 great ends of the church need to be abandoned and publically disavowed. By allowing its focus to be distracted for so many years by the demands of a narrowly focused special interest group, the GA has forced the entire denomination to obsess over a single issue, and shamelessly neglect the mission assigned to the church by Christ before he left. As a result of this dereliction of its duty, the GA has created a profound--possibly irreparable--crisis of credibility with most of the congregations and presbyteries in this denomination.

Not as good as we'd like.

GA is out of touch with our presbytery. We haven't had any genuine interaction on substantive issues with GA for a while.

Simplify and clarify GA mission -- and educate on that mission. We cannot afford, financially or otherwise, to keep trying to have GA do everything for everybody, or have a pronouncement or program on most every topic, or a Sunday given to everything under the sun. FOCUS!!

Primary relationship is with Constitutional services. Corresponded with GAMC but received no response.

This relationship seems to strong with respect to the upward relationships (that is, we send and have commissioners and clergy that are active in this relationship -- but the rank and file member have little, if any, idea what this relationship is all about.

The presbytery staff has a good relationship. The people in the pews, less so.

We have a crisis of membership decline, and the overall impression is, no one is treating it like a crisis. The #1 issue that the General Assembly needs to work on: planting new churches. The #2 issue: Helping our strongest churches grow stronger, so they can then plant new churches. As we grow, then we can be more helpful to a great many other churches. The Staff of the G.A. Evangelism office is filled with evangelicals, who do not speak the language of the mainline churches. Nice people, but they do not connect with the needs our Presbytery has. We need focus and fit so the resources of the church can be mobilized for growth. G.A. is the only group that can help Presbyteries grow in their wisdom and understanding of what needs to happen. It is a time for powerfully articulated vision of growth in language the mainliners can embrace and by which they can be energized.

I think in general we have a fine relationship with GA. Sometimes it would be nice to see more GA people face-to-face than we do now.

They are too top heavy and the website is terrible!!!!!!

The GA is a valuable part of our connectional church, but at times it can feel like the "other" because except for a roughly week period every other year we don't hear much about the "General Assembly." If there was a way for the GA to more present for presbyteries and congregations between the assemblies it would be very valuable.

I hope GA may contact the presbytery to find out able persons for its position.
See the need more than ever of the GA supporting the Presbyteries supporting the congregations rather than the Presbytery supporting the GA.

The GA must first allow theological presbyteries. Then the GA must find creative ways in which those who gather for GA can have meaningful fellowship.

As staff of the Presbytery it sometimes seems that G.A. should consult with Presbyteries before it acts - I think particularly of shifts in funding strategies that seemed to undermine Presbyteries' ability to maintain funding from the churches.

General Assembly has lost touch with the people in the pews. If it was more in touch with the people we would have better curriculum in our congregations and not wasting money on all the leaflets and flyers that get sent to us all the time. It is a waste of printing, resources and postage. We spend too much time fighting about things and too much money on a less effective website and complicates finding resources for congregations to use.

There is a growing disconnect between presbyteries and GA though not because there are bad people in Louisville or at the presbytery level. Most I've met have been dedicated servants of the Lord and deeply caring people. Nevertheless people at the presbytery less and less care what GA says or thinks in my experience.

Presbyteries need to have the freedom to choose which Synod to belong.

If the General Assembly Mission Council supports the work of presbyteries as presbyteries support congregations, then the entire PC(USA) is strengthened as we serve the Risen Christ.

I feel the General Assembly is also necessary, especially with coordination of mission, but wonder if it is as efficient as it could be. The General Assembly in the eyes of most people in our presbytery, is a body that just meets once every two years and stirs the pot of controversy. I know this is not a valid perception, but certainly one that does prevail.

Presbytery should continue to relate our local churches to the broader church.

designated giving is the only viable option

I was a commissioner to the 2010 General Assembly. My orientation to G.A. had to be developed by myself for the most part, and I found that there did not seem to be much interest in learning what occurred at the G.A. meetings. Presbytery does a good job handling G.A. overtures.

This Presbytery is fairly-well represented with General Assembly Committee participation, as well as connection with the OGA and we have a representative on the GAMC.

We have a good relationship. We send commissioners to each GA, we work in conjunction with the GA 6. Our Executive attends various meetings which is helpful to him, I believe. Our Stated Clerk works with her peers and receives help when requested. Same with COM and CPM chairpersons.

I believe presbyteries look to the General Assembly for resources. I see the General Assembly doing a great job of providing opportunities for training and resources. One additional comment...I find the PCUSA website very difficult to find resources on. I use it allot but it takes a long time to find what I am looking for.

We have a good relationship with GA and appreciate the resources and staff who are available to us.

Clerk consults and CLC key; could perhaps work better. Important conduit of GA to churches; could work better.

Reduce Louisville to the Stated Clerk, a few mission personnel, disaster relief folks and a couple of admin. staff and move to much smaller premises. It will save a ton of money and can be no less efficient and effective that it is presently. Current presbytery relationships with GA are a mingling of bureaucrats and wannabees from both levels. The folks who support their local congregations with involvement, financial commitment and loyalty are not found much or welcomed in GA structures but perhaps they have too much sense to be involved in the pretentious nonsense that goes on there.

If nFog passes, these will need to improve, as presbyteries will need good instructions from GA as to implementation of nFog.

most congregations do not understand the relationship of Presbyteries with the General Assembly

Sending commissioners

GA's functions have changed over the years, although not everyone admits that, either on the national staff or in the presbyteries. GA no longer is the overseer of and supplier of all resources to Synod and Presbytery, from personnel to CE resources. I think GA needs to be more of a facilitator to Presbyteries and a vision-setter for Presbyteries, and the interrelationships need to be much more flexible.

With the Internet, Facebook, email and all the other forms of communication presbyteries don't need to act as an intermediary. Congregations also rely less on the GA to facilitate and often competitive resources are far more effective compared to our own resources, advice etc.
The General Assembly is the church assembled, but it is hardly representative of the life of particular congregations. This growing rift is sad.

More detailed information in the year between General Assemblies. I learned more about the issues and concerns from Presbyterian Outlook. The Mission & Stewardship Committee of Presbytery needs to receive more specific information throughout the two years between General Assembly Meetings. Promote the Presbyterian Church (USA) website in many more ways to the members of congregations.

We are excited--and have some trepidation--about the possibilities of nFOG. We're going to need help if it passes. The constant insistence by the GA on sending "fidelity and chastity" requirements every two years for a vote in our presbytery has had an extremely negative effect on our congregation and their willingness to work with our local presbytery.

My presbytery has had a pretty positive relationship with GA, I believe.

getting better as GA seems to be "post-modernizing" in the same themes we have felt Participation in facebook groups, email groups, mailing lists, web interaction, etc and education of presbytery leaders to participate can continue to improve and expand presbyteries' relationship with General Assembly.

Somewhat more remote. However GA has been very responsive in sending representatives to meet with our leadership and/or committees to advise us on specific matters, e.g., ordination standards, pensions, office management, and managing in a changing environment.

We don't trust them. They don't live by the GA statements (evidence the Washington office, participation in abortion rights, and IPMN), they promote an agenda that is not mine nor that of the average person in the pew. I am offended by the hubris of the Moderator and clerk who issue statements as if they were Bishops on things about which they cannot possibly have sufficient information when they have no official PCUSA voice on anything where GA in session has not spoken. They spend too much money on politics, man-made agendas and things that are not of the kingdom of God.

I have more knowledge of the General Assembly than most pastors in this presbyter, yet it still feels to me as if nothing truly valuable goes in at that level of church life.

After Hosting GA 2010 we're still on a 'high'

Many presbyteries are divided between those who are evangelical and those who are more "progressive", and with the officer standards changing these presbyteries are going to have to be true to gospel and the congregations. Too many presbyteries have more ordained personnel voting than ruling elders which makes things a bit lopsided as the lay is not as well represented -- this needs to change. As a ruling elder, I don't always agree with the teaching elders (pastors) at my church and yes, I know that all may vote their conscience. But both GA & presbyteries need to focus more on the congregation & not politics going forward -- if not, more people will leave.

Guidance for small congregation sized, large geographical size presbyteries

Improve the ability of the local congregation to dialog directly with GA offices eliminating the political, "old boy " stifling of communication.

General Assembly is going to take a big hit with the passage of the NFog and the elimination of the language on ordination. It will not be rational but it will be significant.

It seems that program folks from the GA are coming to our Presbytery meetings and doing a good job of communication.

- Member of two synod committees: Finance & Stewardship and COR
- President of Board of Trustees, Moderator's Committee
- member budget & finance committee
- Commissioner & Search Moderator for PW in Synod of S. Atlantic SQ6. Over the past five years, what has been the general trend in your synod when it comes to:
  h. Comments on your responses to SQ6a-g:

There is a noticeable decrease in the connectionism throughout the Church in this area.
Because of Living Waters for the World, a project of our Synod, we have had to add more staff and more staff hours. This is a project that installs waters systems to purify water where it is needed. It continues to grow.
I have only been with Synod a short while and cannot answer "for the past five years". I do know that our Synod has become a virtual office this past year.
It seems churches are giving to local mission projects more and more, and giving less to unified mission.
For the Synod and for the Presbytery the answers would be the same. I could have checked both Synod and Presbytery for high level of involvement
It seems that the mission mentality has shifted from trusting the people most familiar with the overall picture of mission. Now mission money travels to the most familiar or attractive sites from the local churches. This forces the GAMC to send appeals to individuals and churches, something unheard of in years past. We've lost our connectional system of mission support.
These answers are based on reports I have read and conversations I've heard. I have no direct information.
I am only a member of one committee that reports to Synod; I am not involved in the life of the Synod otherwise.
My focus has been on this particular mission of the Synod and for LWW, financial resources and number of mission projects have increased though not all of this giving and work comes solely from within the synod boundaries.
The only source of revenue we receive from our presbyteries is per capita. All BMS is returned to the presbyteries or GA. Through our financial services (S&L program) we generate enough excess revenue over expenses to return about $700,000 annually to our presbyteries.
I've been more active in previous years, serving on COM for six years in this presbytery and numerous positions in other presbyteries. I am the moderator-elect for ETP Presbyterian Women.
I am not privileged to know the answer to question g. Also I am answering the questions here in regard to my position as secretary for the Presbyterian Women in the Synod of Living Waters.
I am reflecting on the struggle for support for Campus Ministries and for ethnic scholarship funds and that these funds have decreased in the years I have been active in the synod on the Higher Ed committee.
This is my first year of service as secretary for PW Synod of Living Waters.

We're trying to do the same (or more!) with declining financial resources.

There has been a 10 year trend of decreased UNIFIED mission giving. We believe that many congregations (my own among them) now designate a significant portion of their denominational giving to a specific project with then directly reduces the "trickle up" portion for Presbyteries, Synods, and GA.

SQ7. In the next five years, what trends do you anticipate in your synod when it comes to:

g. Comments on your responses to SQ7a-g:

We have become a Presbyterian Church that looks and acts more like a Congregational Chutch.

Again, Living Waters for the World will continue to grow to reach more people. With this growth, more and more members learn about that mission and contribute to it.

e. Some congregations in our presbytery seem to be growing, others decreasing. I think this is true in all Presbyteries. We cannot generalize our congregations and the work of God's Hand.

The line between about the same and decrease can be very close. In the Synod we have lowered our budget, so some of the massive cuts have taken place. As the stock market goes up that may offset a decrease in mission giving from the Presbyteries.

The Synod has invested wisely its considerable endowment and will be able to exist at the present level for a while even with fewer mission dollars. Maybe less than five years, but for a while.

We are currently in the "black" and doing well.

My answers are based on the same conditions of the previous questions./

Again, as my work is specific to LWW and the fact is that our program staff will likely increase. Our financial support - likely to increase - will also not come solely from the synod alone. However the number of synod congregations supporting our work with both human and financial resources has, and will likely continue to grow.

See previous comment. We plan to use our reserves to continue to do what we The Synod of the Trinity are called to do.

Synod of the Pacific is a non-programatic synod. This Synod supports the mission and ministries within its bounds through its presbyteries.

Given the questionable future of synods, this is a difficult question to which to respond.

SQ12. [If “inappropriate” or “very inappropriate,”] Please indicate how you would change the relative distribution of per capita funds. (Assume that the total amount of per capita funds stays the same, but is only being split differently.)

<tr>
<td>Our Synod has a good working relationship with all 12 Presbyteries.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I have not been there long enough to answer many of your questions.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I feel that Synod's are important to the work of the Denomination. They are in a position to be closer to Presbyteries than GA staff. Presbyteries do not related to the Synod in an equal way. Of our 11 Presbyteries usually 10 receive more money from the Synod in mission dollars than they given to the Synod in mission dollars.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We have an excellent synod. Executive Committee works well together. It is the &quot;Connectional Church&quot; in action.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I believe the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) needs to continue to have both synods and presbyteries. But I also think it would be better to have more and smaller synods with fewer presbyteries in many of the synods. I believe synods still have a valuable function in resourcing presbyteries and in coordinating and offering mission programs that presbyteries could not do by themselves.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Synod appears to perform the duties and functions that are asked of it.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I believe that there is still an important role for the synod in the new structure. The Synod of Living Waters has been very supportive and energized by the work of Living Waters for the World. It has been a joy to share much of clean water training methodology with the Synod of the Sun's new Solar School program. In both cases this work is equipping congregations and presbyteries to get involved in mission in a new way.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Synods provide the glue that helps maintain our connectional nature; being in community. Synods are not all the same. We provide different services depending on the needs of our presbyteries and churches. A &quot;one size fits all&quot; model is inappropriate. There needs to be flexibility in the role of synods.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I think there is too much diversity across the board as to the role and function of synods. Some function well, providing wonderful opportunities for new ministers, providing mission funding and fostering relationships across presbytery lines. And yet there are many synods that don't function well at all. I think that providing some guidance on to the role and function of MGB might be helpful. I think there is room for synods to a degree but not if many or most are not functioning as a body that can encourage and foster the ministry of the whole body. I have had a chance to hear a lot about what other churches are doing in ministry through my synod meetings and that is a valuable source of encouragement and information. If there is a way to create more of that opportunity among churches/presbyteries without a synod great, if not I think that there is still a role that they can play.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Synod has provided wonderful opportunities in the southwest to help deal with issues of eccumenicity, race relations, ethnic issues, immigration issues and native american causes. Synod is very important.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Synods are a waste of time, energy and money. I attend Synod meetings as a commissioner, and am deeply disturbed at the cost involved in us doing little or nothing.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Our Synod offers Synod School which is attended by 650 to 850 people every summer. Our staff is very accessible when needed by presbyteries in help with personnel issues or financial issues. Diana Barber has been awesome in educating people on the proposed new form of government. The COM and CPM training is excellent. The Newly Ordained Clergy classes held at Synod School are very beneficial to new pastors. Jay Wilkinson has brought extra income to the Synod by doing the books for other Synods and Presbyteries. I think our Synod is a vital part of the Presbyterian Church USA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I see Lakes and Prairies providing a model for the church at large...I want the connectional system to be vital in the plans of PCUSA...Eight would be good number....with 5/6/7 states...in each Synod....We have proof that larger geographic areas work just fine...I like F O G very much, but still see Presbyteries Synods and GA as the that the connector process...that MUST remain a strong unit of mission....</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
We have an active and helpful Synod.

There will never again be such a thing as uniformity for Synods - if there ever were such a thing. If synods are to remain as a governing body, flexibility needs to be encouraged.

Our Synod has responded to serious conflict in one of our Presbyteries, providing a presence, counsel and support.

Synods have an important role to play in helping maintain campus ministries but there is almost no funding to do this. The MissionUSA program of the Synod of the Covenant is an excellent program that struggles to find funding and support.

We have been blessed with exceptional staff who provide training, support and resources for our presbyteries that we'd never be able to create or sustain on our own.

The Synod of the Trinity provides service to our 16 Presbyteries - administrative, organizational, and services Presbyteries cannot easily provide on their own (eg campus ministry support and support of our Synod related colleges). The funding model, however, is broken.

Synod of the Pacific is a mission support synod. We provide services to our churches which helps in two ways. 1) reduces cost because our pool is larger for bidding, and 2) the net revenue generated from our services is returned to our presbyteries to support their mission and ministries.

Synods cannot continue to exist as they have. They must adapt and reorient to nurture and support the work of their presbyteries. With the recent changes to the BOO (and the proposed nFOG), Synods are now able to facilitate conversation that will allow for that to occur.

As with most Synods within the Presbyterian Church (USA) we are currently undergoing restructuring, so nothing is very stable right now and we are all trying to deal with a lack of under-structure.

SQ26. Is there anything else you want to tell the MGB Commission to inform their examination of:

b. Synods’ relationships with the General Assembly?

We historically have had strong relationships, including some that were adversarial but which were resolved reasonably amicably.

synod of the sw has always been very involved in the GA

I have not been there long enough to answer many of your questions.

I have found the GA very helpful. In the last couple of years we have not had as many reports from our Synod representatives on GA Mission Council as we had in the past. A few years ago I attended the Moderator’s Conference as the Synod Moderator and found that very helpful

I have not heard of any major differences with General Assembly.

I am most grateful for the improving relationship between LWW and the World Mission office. This is leading to increased collaboration in the world where we are mutually working.

Unfortunately, I would say the majority of synod executives, to greater or lesser degrees depending on the executive, feel that the leadership staff of GAMC ignores them, with the exception of the Director of Middle Governing Body Relations. Most of my EPs frustrations are with GAMC not OGA.

We used to get updates from Manley Olson when he was on the General Assembly Council at Synod meetings. We do not hear about GA as much now. I was a GA commissioner last summer so I feel very connected to GA. I love the Presbyterian Church USA!

SEE ABOVE PROCESS

Again the relationship is very good.

Our Synod cooperates very well with the General Assembly.

Some agencies function as if Synods are not even part of the system; again, if synods are to remain as part of our governance, appropriate ways of relating, sharing information, seeking consuoltation, etc., need to be developed and encouraged.

Our synod relates as well with GA as they relate to presbyteries and congregations. The staff have strengthened my own sense of connection as a pastor and synod commissioner and trustee.

The Synod of the Trinity would love to be able to do mission interpretation for all levels of the PC(USA).

Synods can be in a position to bridge the work of the presbyteries with the GA. Synods are able to speak to GA about the work and the specific needs of the presbyteries in their geographic areas. Synods can help the GA to understand that "one size fits all" does not function any longer.
Q1. Do you currently hold any of these leadership roles in your presbytery or synod? (Check all that apply.)

a. Presbyteries and their duties and functions?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Presbyteries serve a useful function as places where leaders of our diverse congregations and leadership can plan, learn and share with each other. This connection is vital. They can also share ministry resources together. I do believe that mission can be done cooperatively through a Presbytery, but all need to be aware and supportive. I do not believe that Presbyteries are the only way to share resources or ministry/mission amongst congregations and leadership. Many of the programmatic functions of Presbyteries cannot be supported and can be better done in partnership with other entities and organizations such as regional missions or camp and conference centers for children/youth/young adult programming.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Presbytery meetings can be generally described as preacher parties. Elder commissioners are few and far between and when an important vote comes to the floor all the pastors together with all the retired pastors show up to vote. Elder participation seems like an intrusion on the party.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Recognize that there are geographic and other considerations in evaluating and/or assigning responsibilities to presbyteries. Leadership and vision vary and therefore the effectiveness of what a presbytery provides for its pastors and congregations will also vary in both need and effectiveness. Painting with a broad brush, assuming &quot;all presbyteries are created equal&quot; does not seem to be the most effective way of administering and ministering to them.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Since [deleted] has become our Regional Presbyter, our congregation and our rural Cluster of churches have gotten much more help, understanding and attention from Presbytery. I think rural churches tend to lose out in representation especially when there are long geographical distances to cover.</td>

<tr>
<td>My presbytery is too small in numbers to do much more than the administrative work called for in the Book of Order. The executive presbyter does a good job in filling vacant pulpits and organizing useful seminars for church leaders. However, the mission budget is abysmal because so much undesignated mission giving is transferred to supporting the administrative function. The Presbytery probably should be disbanded and joined with several adjacent presbyteries that have more resources for both administration and mission</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>As long as presbyteries allow themselves to be dominated by the issues of big steeple (often conservative) churches and treat Presbyterians of color as ancillary to the larger picture, they will either lack or decrease in vitality</td>

If groupings of sessions, congregations or interested parties develop naturally communicate. Do not impose clusters or area group structure from presbytery level unless the presbytery is willing to build leadership and joint vision for the intrinsic value and not as vehicles for promotion of presbytery programs or as ad hoc representational bodies. <tr>
<td>I had trouble answering the questions because the apathy that exists in congregations in the Northeast also exists on the Presbytery level. Our EP is great. She has a lot of energy, is very responsive, relational and knowledgeable, but she is leaving next year, and without her I'm just not sure how much responsiveness there will be in the Presbytery.</td>

we are a small rural presbytery which is working hard to survive and spread the good news with not many members and large area to cover. I am proud of my Presbytery and its efforts in MONTANA

NO [14 people made this comment]

Anarchy will prevail if nFOG passes.

Most congregation members have little knowledge of Presbytery or its function

While my view may be affected by the fact that I am fairly new in my involvement at a level beyond the congregation, I have a firm view that there is a need for congregations to have an opportunity to regularly interact with other congregations. This may be especially important in rural areas where there are no other congregations within many miles of each other.

I don't think Presbytery's need staff other than administrative...I believe churches should provide the rest of the support needed

I do not know a single person in their 30's or 20's who likes Presbytery. My generation wants to make a difference, and 97% of what we do in Presbytery is small, pointless, and wasting my time. If Presbyteries had a laser focus on developing healthy congregations I would be more excited.

During the process of preparing candidates and inquirers for ministry, and throughout their careers, there should be more training/support for their spouses. The idea would be to help them prepare for a role that is almost as difficult and has almost as many expectations—yet with fewer if any) guidelines and even less preparation.

Require Presbyteries to do a better job of informing congregational members about what is going on within the Presbytery and total church, make this a part of the evaluation of the effectiveness of pastors and elders. Require documented training of persons elected as deacons and elders, possibly with graded and test results following formal instruction by someone other than the installed pastor of the specific church.

Seemingly lack of leadership at all levels and inability to respond to the needs of congregations with constructive help or support. I feel our church has been drowning for years and we have not even seen a life preserver being thrown our way.

Having healthy and effective leaders at this level is critical.

Presbyteries are the heart of mission and ministry resources.

I suppose that the Executives and staff are doing fair with all the new rules from the GA and all the new changes they are supporting. I am so disappointed over the way our churches are going.

The new FOG will cause us to become less Presbyterian and more Baptist in our polity.

I think we could do a lot better job of being more neutral of divisive issues. Example we find issues promoted that do not reflect what is taught in the bible. We find issues not talked about which are instructed in the bible. We things promoted which have not been voted on.

Their duty and function is to protect His children! At a time of crisis within the PC(USA) emphasis must be placed on His Word as revealed in Scripture and not the social influx of worldly desire which is all too often based on selfish demands!

Should be less of a judicial/conflict resolution structure and should be about building up the pastors and congregations. Providing resourcing for daily ministry, training, and mission. Truly work to connect the pastors and congregations. Not just a select few good old boys (gals)!

There should be a financial report (not a budget) each time the presbytery meets. Commissioners should know specifically where the presbytery money is spent. The average person in the pew and the average commissioner has no clue where money is spent but congregations are each year quickly informed about per-capita obligation.

Some of the BOO mandated activities required of Presbytery are very expensive to implement in small Presbyteries that cover a large geographic area; i.e.: Alaska

More focused on the enterprise of the denomination than the mission of the church.

I think while sizes may be 'about right' the configuration could be better done....ours is a long thin thing.

Yes, I believe that my answers related to what the Presbytery does are indicative of that fact that most congregants do not know what the Presbytery does or why it is necessary. At this point my view is that it is an unnecessary governmental body that is eating resources that could be used to otherwise serve the people of God.

Many individuals and congregations in Missouri Union Presbytery willingly and faithfully contribute time, talents and treasure to building up the Church. There is a good hope of this being done more effectively if the entire work of the Presbytery can be open to transformation.

The method of funding used in our presbytery is outdated. Percentage giving does not allow congregations sufficient input into the way presbyteries set their budgets.
The greatest challenge is the effectiveness of COM and how it actively cares for congregations, members and clergy. I have served in 4 Presbyteries (serving on COM in 2) and they have all been ineffective, particularly with the small congregations. Too often, COM does not get involved with a congregation until the fire is out of control. There needs to be better mentoring and accountability for clergy. Most other professions in the "helping" field have required professional development and accountability/supervision. Such a practice would have the potential of decreasing the number of clergy misconduct and the blurring of ethical boundaries. Congregations also need to be better educated on the Presbyterian Call System. Many members come from different backgrounds and have no clue about the Call system until their pastor leaves, and then there is all kinds of misunderstandings and miscommunications. Presbyteries need to help their congregations rediscover and discover anew what it means to be church in today's world.

We are a congregation without a pastor and have had absolutely no contact from our Presbytery office offering assistance. We were assigned a Moderator, but have had little contact with them, except our once every three months Session meeting.

Our church and the presbytery are making slow, but forward progress healing from some "history" of discord. Things are getting better, but there is still a we/them attitude.

Support of same sex marriages and allowing gay/lesbians to be ordained. Get rid of the glass ceiling for women in the ministry and in other organizations of the church. Be more focused on poverty and human rights issues instead of preaching. Treat all people equally. Emphasize simplicity in daily life.

I am in a small presbytery (Lehigh) that is struggling to stay afloat financially, has many churches which have little or no life and ministry but we continue to let them struggle along. 2-3 churches considering leaving our denomination, and staff uncertain about their future employment. At least in the case of this Presbytery, I think our energy, time, and resources need to be focused on discerning the future of the Presbytery long before we can pay much, if any, attention to the work and ministry of the Synod.

I believe that the Presbyterians function very well in terms of their responsibilities. However, presbyteries with growing areas on the edge of the urban centers are very weak about new church development while the PCA runs circles around us. I am highly critical of the 3 presbyteries I know best for not adequately meeting the challenge, Santa Fe, Giddings-Lovejoy and Milwaukee. I'll be this is happening everywhere. There is no imagination how to get these started and a lot of whining about costs. Meanwhile our central cities and close in suburbs in many cities are seeing us close one church after another with declining population. Therefore, the PCA and who knows who else are picking up our members moving to the fringes of the metro area. Now, I think our presbyteries are the right size though I think Missouri River Valley is problematic putting Omaha in a Presbytery with a large area of rural Iowa instead of Nebraska. I think John Knox is also problematic in a sense. There is a great need for borders of presbyteries, as much as possible to follow state lines except when an urban area crosses a state line. I think Presbyteries should be responsible, and often are not, for campus ministry on major university campuses in their bounds EXCEPT that the major state universities are a synod responsibility. Presbyteries need IMFIGNATIVE leadership.

Our presbytery has been undergoing extraordinary legal, organizational and theological issues for the last 5 years. We have had leadership crisis and turmoil. As we welcome a new transitional presbyter and settle into the future of no longer being part of a partnership with the presbyteries of [deleted], we anticipate a new future vision being determined and worked toward. In all, we know God has been walking with us.

Think the presbytery must be more intentional in staffing middle governing positions with diversity—people of color—in all positions. The can just talk it but if no persons are deemed 'qualified' then they need to either not staff the position or reevaluate the requirements, they need to put mentoring or development strategy in place to get them qualified. There is no reason for some of the largest metropolitan cities/areas in US not to have ANY person of color on staff and as an ongoing +10years issue.

I love my Presbytery and the way we "do business" and have been organized. I think our Teaching Presbyter, Steve Shusset is a great leader and provides pastoral help to the pastors who need it. I am very proud and pleased to tell people I am from Lehigh Presbytery in Pa.

Spend less time and money in fundraising and more time in nurturing congregations. catechize elders and teach the confessions of the faith rather than mobilizing for the promotion of political agendas forget trying to create diversity and just minister to the people you have in front of you.

Our presbytery has less than 40 churches, half of which do not worship with 100 people on Sunday morning and half of those have less than 50. There is not enough money or people to be supportive of any work. Our theological diversity keeps us from being of much use to each other—other than to get together argue and vote. For the folks at my church, presbytery has become a waste of time and energy and until we solve the theological diversity issues it will continue to be. Besides small dying churches take up most of the energy of exec. Rather than figuring out ways to close these doors.
Presbyteries should allow individual churches to transfer to non-geographical Presbyteries if such churches can no longer, in good conscience, agree with the philosophical and theological presumptions being espoused by a large number of their current Presbytery's churches.

I am the one who doesn't know about MGC. Things seem to be going well. I appreciate the people who serve, and their leaders.

The PC(USA) needs to have Theological Presbyteries, or we are in danger of losing all connectivity. Because of the continuing sharp disagreement over Ordination Standards, there needs to be distinct non-geographical groupings of like-minded churches (liberal and conservative), that can share in a more focused mission.

Our presbytery does not help us unless asked and then not very effctely. The do not keep us in touch with GA or Synod

I am very supportive of Theological Presbyteries. Our church is very concerned with the removal of Amendment B. If the possibility of joining a Theological Presbytery is not an option our church will leave the denomination.

NO MENTION OF PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES

When a church needs help they are there to begin with, but then it seems that they just disappear. Letting us know that we haven't been forgotten would be a good thing.

Most are too big, too bureaucratic, and too diverse theologically. Why not move to smaller presbyteries where congregations that are theologically like-minded can actually focus on joint mission instead of theological battles? Most could have part-time staff only.

Would like to see more being done to assist small churches who are losing members rapidly due to demographics, age, and competition.

Our presbytery functions well, using the gifts and resources from a variety of lay persons and clergy throughout the presbytery.

Pastors need pastors/spiritual directors Much more involvement in conflict training look for ways to establish political witness

Too formal and cliquish

I wish that the members of our presbytery would feel inclined to travel to the outskirts to support mission programs and meetings on the boarders of the presbytery.

We have too many Presbyteries that are now too costly for the PC(USA).

You are one giant unknown organization with closed meeting except to elder commissioners and pastors.

Revise the requirement that does not allow Interim Pastors to be considered for Permanent Pastor position. Interim Pastors should be allowed to "Throw their hat in the ring" so to speak. In other words, be allowed to compete for the permanent pastor position. Rely on the congregations PNC to determine if the Interim Pastor is indeed qualified to become the Permanent Pastor. Members of the congregation are the best qualified to determine their next Permanent Pastor. Not outsiders from the Presbytery, Synod or General assembly.

Presbytery committees seem to be chronically inept. We need an IQ test before anyone serves on a COM or CPM.

I am against the proposal being put forth by my presbytery, Santa Barbara, regarding the Conjunct Presbytery idea. There are only about 5 or 6 of our churches that disagree with the majority of our presbytery, so it is very difficult to be heard on these issues.

Our [deleted] Presbytery executive is inept. A minister member of our presbytery had multiple sexual liaisons and when he was forced to leave his church, he was taken in to live with our presbytery executive for 6 to 8 months. He is not trustworthy to demonstrate appropriate boundaries. He is seriously damaging congregational support of the presbytery, and by extension the PC(USA).

More activities for revitalization

Need fewer rules and allow more discretion. Being hidebound to a rulebook inhibits creativity.

Regarding Presbytery: our Presbytery offers great resources, including people, but I don't think the average congregant has a clue. Our executive presbyter and stated clerk for the Presbytery have always been extremely helpful and quickly available when needed. Diversity within our Presbytery—or lack thereof—is reflective of the area we live.

Presbytery meetings are cut and dried. Feel as if it is a time to inform us what each committee has done with little opportunity for input. Most discussions are on subjects handed down for approval or disapproval from GA.

Fewer larger presbyteries is vastly preferable to more smaller presbyteries.

Presbytery personnel need to "offer" education, guidance to local churches with visits, not assuming everyone knows about all programs if they read the nsl. Lack of communication is shameful! And the superior attitude of our "local" presbytery personnel is a turnoff.

I believe that the duty which is ignored on every level is talking with members. A bond is created each time we talk with our membership or Presbytery. It could be defined as being a person to another person with a common interest.

Presbyteries need assistance in getting information concerning the denomination's stands—Book of Order—to the people in the pews. Often people are misled by those in positions of leadership who don't understand what is really written down. This leaves room for strong individuals to convince a congregation that the GA is saying something it really isn't. This leads to infighting and congregations leaving based on incorrect information and fear.

I have very little knowledge of presbytery functions mainly because they are not visible in our church or community. So I do not know if they are doing what they are supposed to do or not. We have very little interaction with our presbytery as far as I know.

More emphasis needs to be focused on evangelism and church growth from a practical standpoint to equip congregations with ideas and resources on how to evangelize in the 21st century.

I think Presbyteries should deal with ecclesiastical matters only—not mission. They should be a fairly small group of churches within a close proximity existing for mutual support of the congregations. Focus more on the body and less on the staff.

Presbyteries need to be smaller, more relationship-oriented, and more permission-giving.

I've not been active for the past eight years since my retirement. Health issues for the family and burnout have kept me away from active involvement until recently.

Need to look at alternatives to face to face meetings

I generally know about my presbytery and have been to some meetings of presbytery and events but I would like to know more.

The Executive Presbyter of the Presbytery of [deleted] is completely ineffective as the leader of a Presbytery, due to his own selfish need for power and control over pastors and other members of the presbytery. Please, please would SOMEONE step in and find out the truth about the workings of this presbytery???

The PRP acts in an unchristian like fashion when it comes to working with smaller churches. They twist and turn the Book of Order to meet their own personal desires. We have lost quite a few members because of them. Can an administrative commission really take over a church because it did not have a quorum for a nominating committee meeting? They did. What an aggregious abuse of power! Shame on them!

Presbyteries only serve to perpetuate Presbyteries. They need to be reimagined as agencies that connect like-minded and like missioned congregations. There is no need for an EP and no need for a budget, beyond the money that directly supports mission agencies within the bounds of the Presbytery. But even those monies can go directly from congregations to those agencies.

In our experience, the Presbytery is not vigilant in its examination of candidates for the ministry in confirming that they are in agreement with "The Essential Tenets of the Reformed Faith."

reach out to rural and small town and church areas MORE

Innovate. Experiment. Seek new ways of building the kingdom, even if it is not popular with oga.

I believe in the connectional form of our polity both theologically and practically. The concern, however, is how to implement it in a meaningful way because of 2 factors—budget constraint and human nature. The first, budget, constrains the staff that can be devoted to the task. The second, human nature, makes me wonder if there can be an organized designed to serve others that doesn't become self-serving and self-justifying—an end in and of itself.

The churches are so scattered in [deleted] Presbytery that I do not know many of the minister & elders in 2 1/2 years, except those in my cluster in [deleted] and I'm on several committees. Our cluster has been thinking of making our own presbytery within [deleted]. Too many committees in my estimation.

In our presbytery in particular, because of its size (~170 churches), most of the time and energy of our leaders is spent on emergency room care for congregations in deep conflict, leaving very little resources for preventative care for congregations with slow and steady decline or healthy congregations.

Presbyteries must reflect all views of the member congregations, not just those in line with the Executive Presbyter and the large affluent churches.

I believe Presbyteries need to set some standards across the board for congregations, for example, some criteria for what a "viable congregation" is. Presbyteries need outside consultants to come in and develop a "business plan" to move the presbytery forward, thus determining where limited energy and resources can best strengthen the overall church/presbytery. With no "vision" in place, the "loser" congregations get the attention and the other congregations decline until they become a "loser" and get attention. Unfortunately, the attention is to assist them in closing down. No business would run this way! Why does the church believe no vision is okay?

I'll just post here, as this applies to all three. After taking this survey, I have discovered I am GROSSLY IGNORANT of the roles of Presbytery, Synod and General Assembly!
We have too many presbyteries in NJ. We need to have 1-2 for the whole state. There is systemic discriminatory behavior against women in ordained positions in congregations in Monmouth Presbytery, including permitting male HOS to over-run women in ministry in this presbytery. After serving two presbyteries in NJ I see widespread dysfunctional behavior. We need to change the entire structure in order to get entrenched persons and systems of dysfunction to end.

In bad times travel across the Presbytery takes time and money which means we are not represented in our votes by the smaller congregations. Virtual attendance by electronic means using current technology is possible to connect the smallest and largest congregations. The latest vote in our presbytery reflects this bias that money talks and repeating votes on the same issues discourages the denomination at large on issues dear to the heart over the average membership.

Presbyteries are important. Churches should be able to have better communication links.

For a person changing their denominational affiliation, the Presbytery Church is very complex and layered. But, I suppose all denominations are such. I consider myself an intelligent person and am working hard to get an understanding of the complexity of the denomination. It is a very closed system as well.

Not enough care/concern about individual congregations; too much emphasis on mission with little interest by exec. of any other areas

Presbyteries are too large and they not focused on mission instead they focus on polity and committee control and votes. They are spiritually dead meetings, they look like the folks who are about to die from a rest home. The meetings are tedious and boring uninspiring. The E.P. spends all their time putting out fires instead of nurturing what is growing [and delegating the fire fighting] it is a sad waste of resources. The presbytery costs 1 million dollars and accomplishes almost nothing, we celebrate correct minutes more than confessions of faith and new mission. Presbyteries should be gather and sending mission agencies, with the goal of creating larger church networks to impact communities. The functions of voting on amendments etc should take on a much diminished and more infrequent role say once every 5 years. Training should be done in biblical peacemaking related to conflict resolution in churches and communities. We should be people bringing peace instead of constant debates of our agreed differences which is killing the involvement of the 2/3rds world leaders and churches who are abhorred by our constant bickering and sex talk. In order to reach the emerging populations these discussions should be extremely limited and we should be asking our immigrant and racial ethnic churches what their struggles are in the U.S. and how we can partner with them instead of counting bodies on committees of in-consequence.

The closer the governing body (Presbytery) to those governed, the better the relationship.

The large corporate model instituted in the '70's doesn't seem to work anymore. Small is better. We have no ownership in presbytery; "let the professionals do it", seems to be the attitude.

Presbyteries should focus their duties and functions on building up the ministries of its congregations.

spend less time protecting pastors and more time protecting the congregations

There doesn't seem to be enough connection between Presbytery and the individual church or pastor. The staffing is limited and their time is limited as well so needs are dealt with but caring about the individual congregation is so much more involved. Pastors need support in order to meet the needs of the congregation.

Presbyteries seem best at coordinating ministerial and administrative functions of churches in small defined geographical area

I hope there is a way for non-geographical presbyteries around theological issues. When Amendment 10-A passes—this would be a way that would allow people who think alike to have the same ordination standards—pro or con.

Smaller, less paid staff, essential functions only

Should support and strengthen congregations...Too much lip service while USING congregations to fund Presbytery & GA mission goals. Congregations are dying and so will denomination on this course. Ethnic efforts will not save us.

Our Presbytery is a good reflection of what our local churches are—but the leap between our presbytery and our General Assembly are worlds apart.

Follow Biblical scripture rather than what is deemed fashionable in contemporary life style.

There appears to be a big gap between expectations for what a presbytery could be and how it actually functions, seemingly doing so many things that none of them are done with much depth. I think some of this disability may be related to the large number of congregations and pastors. I'm not negative on presbytery so I don't want this to sound like whining, but having been around before the enlargement of presbyteries back in the 1970's, I think presbyteries are considerably less effective now than they were then. Of course we live in a more complex world too, so size is clearly not the only determining factor.

Where is God in all of this?

Q24. Is there anything else you want to tell the MGB Commission to inform their examination of: b. Synods and their duties and functions?

| I'm not sure of the role of Synods but if they can use resources to coordinate on a regional level and support networks across congregations, Presbyteries and specialized ministries, then they are using shared resources well. A better understanding of the role of and history of Synods would be helpful in deciding the fate of Synods. Who would pick up the essential work of Synods if we did not have them? |
| Not aware of its duties. |
| The Interim Synod Executive of the Synod of the Southwest is very creative in getting various committees to coordinate and collaborate together, e.g. Synod COR, Nominating and Hispanic Ministries. There is more sharing and understanding. |
The same comments apply to Synods as I have stated in the presbytery duties and functions comment area. Some synods are extremely effective in what they offer—in their support and in their vision. This is especially true in non-metropolitan areas where considerations of both rural and metro populations is significant and necessary. Definitely synods are needed and valued in some areas. In some geographical configurations perhaps they are less effective. Again, painting with a broad brush and assuming that all synods are created equal and are valued accordingly, would be an unfortunate approach.

synod seems far removed from presbytery and its congregations except for grants
Synods are unnecessary and should be abandoned
Well, it isn’t what it used to be irrelevant except as funding vehicle
My familiarity with synod activities is mostly through attendance at conferences which it sponsors. These do allow access to noteworthy speakers and seminars. However, the synod is so big that driving takes in many instances half a day to reach the site of such activities.
We have heard reports from our Synod commissioner at presbytery meetings (I don't think there was a check-box for that).
Our synod has been exceptional, not to mention prophetic, in its understanding of the broader mission of the Church especially in terms of Latino membership and emerging congregations. It would be unfortunate if antipathy from conservative churches and presbyteries was allowed to diminish the role and presence of synod in the wider church.
I've found Synods helpful in caring out ministry where mission needs cross presbytery boundaries.
Synods need to be eliminated. Cost savings then applied to mission and evangelism.
Synod functions could be pared down to permanent Judicial commissions and collaboration in regional training events that rotate to differing locales. The deliberative body meetings and staffing should be minimized. Assisting presbyteries in collaborative functions is the only other use I see for synods.
Synods should be the resource to presbyteries have little to affirm—have been a commissioner to another synod; have participated in synod events in the past—an unnecessary entity in my opinion
My contact with Synod was limited to the Early Ministry Institute which needs to be redesigned in a way that makes it possible to attend shorter closer group continuing ed. sessions.
Streamline and simplify. Educate so people know what those streamlined purposes are.
We need to get rid of the Synods. They are a waste of time, talent and money.
Personally I have benefitted most when I began ministry as a new minister 26 years ago. And then again 3 years ago for Interim ministry training. I did attend 1 synod school, which was enjoyable. I think geography plays a significant if not insurmountable issue in Synod functions. With technology now, travel is less desirable for meetings at long distances. This is very true for lay people who r younger with families.
Redundant. Consider elimination.
Keep the present constitution! Vote no on the replacement!

What does a synod do anymore? I have been a commissioner twice to Synod assembly. Since reunion, synods have gone from an effective co-operative mission entity for the presbyteries to just another layer of bureaucracy. We should either restore their earlier function (supporting missions and agencies) or abolish them.
Communicate more with retired clergy and their spouses.
Synods seem to be the most helpful body when it comes to young adult and college age ministries. Also camp ministries.
They need to be responsive to the needs of the Presbyteries.
Synods have very little apparent function beyond a middle level judicial commission. Perhaps they could be more effective in mission if they were non-geographic, and the judicial functions were taken over by a smaller number of appeals courts.
No [11 people gave this response]
Irrelevant to most churches.
Many congregation members are completely unaware of Synod's existence
I do not believe we need synods. These were not choices in the survey.
THE DENOMINATION HAS MISSED SOMETHING IN HAVING SYNODS TOO LARGE FOR EVERY CHURCH AND MINISTER TO ATTEND ONCE EVERY ONE OR TWO YEARS. THE COLLEGIALITY AND FELLOWSHIP HAS BEEN TAKEN FROM THE LARGER CHURCH.

<td>I believe that the Synod plays an important role in helping Presbyteries and congregations network and share their many resources, not just financial, but leadership training, mission opportunities, stewardship of resources and the list can go on. The synod can also play an objective role in helping mediate conflicts, as well as provide support for the Presbytery leadership. I believe that we need Synods, and have been blessed to be in a very functional and nurturing Synod for over 20 years. Synods need to help their Presbyteries and congregations and pastors rediscover and discover anew what it means to be church in today's world.</td>

<td>To the average pew sitter, and many elders and pastors, Synods are a huge unknown. This is not due to lack of communication from the Synod, it is more a reality of our times. With limited resources—time, money, talent—and with dying and struggling congregations, the local church is what gets and needs our attention. I believe that the role and need for Synods no longer exists and/or can be accomplished without the existence of Synods.</td>

I am not always clear about the purpose and function of the Synod. I believe the biggest responsibility for this lack lies with me. It has not seemed overly important yet to me.

I believe that synods are very necessary for support and coordination of presbyteries in a given state or region. I believe that they are necessary for support of the campus ministries of state universities, but not necessarily the other state or private schools. For instance, the students may come from the big urban areas but the campus is in the bounds of a rural presbytery. Also, synod needs to be the principal church structure relating to the church's retirement homes. There are other institutions that need to relate mainly to synod, maybe church related colleges, and, in some instances, church camps. We need synods though I think Lakes and Prairies could be divided to 3, Mid-Atlantic and Covenant, could all be divided to 2 Each. In Lakes and Prairies, synod is too distant for folk to sense identification as I recall when I was in Nebraska. Smaller synods could revert to all at the meetings instead of delegated such as was the case in Michigan Synod. We need strong ties between synods and our church related colleges. I'll be the loss of Occidental was due to limited relationships between the school and church.

I believe Synods are a vital link in the exercise of our polity. Like Presbyteries, at this point in time, there may be too many of them and some consolidation is in order, but I would not do away with them wholesale. Fewer, geographically larger Presbyteries and synods are in order.

I'm sad to say I know little of the function of the Synod, but once again I am willing to learn.

Same as my comment on presbyteries.

The workshops of the synod for commissioned lay pastors have been many and helpful, especially the ones that I attended before entering seminary.

Synods have a real PR problem. The only people who have any idea why they exist are those few who have been a Synod delegate. I cannot ever remember hearing a report back to the presbytery from a Synod meeting.

these have become a waste of time—work synods have done in the past are now better done by outside agencies—ours at best fills a bureaucratic function.

I have worked for a PC(USA) church for a very long time and still do not know what Synods do or why they are necessary.

Synods can help in gatherings of the different Presbyteries—both theological and geographical—by finding activities of common ground for fellowship and mission.

I do not know much about synod

Have never believed the Synod was needed. Especially with the financial struggle of our denomination as well as the continuing downturn in membership. I believe that the Synods should be dissolved.

I think synods need to be disbanded and that we no longer need synod staff nor synod offices. Responsibilities specific to synods, such as judicial proceedings could be handled by committees formed from two presbyteries.

NO MENTION OF PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES

Useless as far as I can tell, unless we go to a 17th Synod model to allow for relief of conscience if 10-A passes. Please, do something that will allow us to at least stay together enough to share Bd of Pensions and the Foundation!

To consider the above at all levels. The grassroot churches are dwindling and we are losing a piece of history every day. It seems no one cares or knows what to do about it. I have often felt as a pastor of two small churches that perhaps we are not seen. (out of sight, out of mind).

Training, the new pastors training, and the joint effort for interim training is good. Restore some political witness

Disband them like the Church of Scotland did decades ago

Synods are unnecessary. Divide their responsibilities between GA and a fewer number of Presbyteries, presbyteries Shut down a synod and stop eating up money from churches who are struggling.

See above.

Synods have no viable or useful function in the PC(USA). It is time to close them all down.

I believe Synods have outlived their usefulness to the denomination.

synods are superfluous

In interviews I did in working on my D.Min I found that synods do a better job of helping newly ordained pastors than do presbyteries (5 pastors in 5 different presbyteries in 3 different synods). Synods offered retreats and/or support groups, which seemed to be helpful. Presbyteries often said there would be a mentor, but I heard comments like, "we never figured out who mine was" and "she took me to lunch once then I never heard from her again."

Don't know much about synod except from web, which I pursue. Local churches (and Presbytery) keep synod and General Assembly info and activities under wraps. The local parishioner knows nothing because the pastor doesn't think they need to.
It's time to acknowledge the reality that synods are unnecessary.

Synods need to be more connected to the congregations and their needs. For a good example—look at the redesigned Synod of the Trinity.

Presbyteries and synods are varied in organization and function. To lose Synod of the Pacific's savings and loan program would be devastating to churches and mission within its bounds.

More emphasis needs to be focused on evangelism and church growth from a practical stand point to equip congregations with ideas and resources on how to evangelize in the 21st century.

I see no need ecclesiastically for synods.

Seems to me that for many years this body has been unnecessary and an unnecessary expense.

Synods may not need to exist in any way other than mere form.

Thirty years ago I lived and served in an inter-city church. While attending a synod meeting dominated by rural churches, I found little or no understanding of the problems being faced in the 70's. I still feel that Synods should be abolished.

Our synod (Lakes and Prairies) does a very good job of providing assistance and leadership to presbyteries in CPM and COM.

Lakes and Prairies is a good model to follow in terms of program

I have been a member of PC(USA) all of my life and I know nothing about the synod except that it exists.

I have very little understanding of what a synod does or why it's necessary or important.

Synod of Lincoln Trails does an excellent job of training lay pastors. I also participated in 'new clergy' retreats several years ago that were VERY well done.

Synods are applying their own personally held world views rather than interpreting our book of order. This leads to long term dissatisfaction with church governance as the people see that what they want matters not at all.

Synods are useless. They have no purpose and are totally superfluous—a drain of resources.

No reason for geographic synods to exist anymore; but please recommend that GA create a non-geographic synod for those churches and presbyteries who cannot affirm non-marital sexual activity for ordained leaders!

Enable, don't restrict. Recognize the world has changed, higher governing bodies are not more expert, and risk everything for the gospel

I do not see either duties or functions, except perhaps judicial, that justify the continued existence of this level of our polity.

Lakes and Prairies have a very good Synod School. Other than this, I would not miss a Synod. The only Synod that I ever saw working well is the Synod of The Trinity in PA, W.VA. & Eastern Ohio. Bruce Stevens, the executive, runs it well and shows up at presbytery meetings. Otherwise, it is rare to see a Synod Exec. at presbytery.

Need more info on structure and relationship and duties of Synod

Without a strong affirmative argument to preserve the synod level, synods should be dissolved and the assets returned to the member presbyteries. There is no reason for the synod layer in the information age.

The Synod can certainly play a role in assisting presbyteries to develop their vision and standards for congregations and "mission". An overall geographic mission ministry linking presbyteries and resources to visible mission would benefit the congregations of the presbyteries.

Without a strong affirmative argument to preserve the synod level, synods should be dissolved and the assets returned to the member presbyteries. There is no reason for the synod layer in the information age.

No longer necessary.

Other than fellowship, I don't see a need for this as a governing body. Ours seems to hold funds to itself. I'm glad they meet only twice a year.

I will be attending my first general synod in May, therefore I have no opinions.

need to be more visible with congregations

Our Synod is corrupt and dysfunctional, it has spent more than 2 million dollars suing local congregations for their property. It mismanaged over 3 million dollars in the sale of a camp only to have another one be shut down for heath code violations. They squandered enormous sums and refused to answer any of our session's questions in person or in written form. They are utter chaos. After much prayer we chose not to sue the synod in the church and civil courts for their violation of fiduciary responsibility. As far as we can see the only purpose for a Synod at this point would be for court cases and all others would best be suspended and the resources relocated to better purposes.
What does the Synod do? Specifically, what does the Synod do to assist local congregations in ministering in our communities?

Quite frankly, I am somewhat ignorant of Synods. However, I am a business person and it appears to me that a "Synod" is duplicative to a certain extent and would suggest less emphasis on Synod and more emphasis (financial resources staying at the Presbytery level) on the Presbytery. In other words, reduce level of management and put the resources where they are closest to the congregations and members.

If synods disappeared, I don't know if I would notice.

Synods should serve to building up denominational infrastructure—missionaries to international partners, regional children's homes, seminaries, colleges and ministry to college students.

The days of usefulness of synods is over. Our reticence to simply do away with them is founded primarily on our concern for those who are employed by the synods. In total, if we are to be a responsive church, we need to live into what is already understood by most of us—the place of synod in our governing bodies needs to be officially pronounced dead and its (very minimal) functions devolve back upon the presbyteries.

Be more vocal—get information to the Presbyteries and the local churches, focus on Evangelism for Jesus, not the environment

New Jersey PPG too large geographically. West Jersey Presbytery too secluded from rest

Not needed, unless we move two a two synod federated model

Synods (or equivalent) seem best at coordinating regional mission and educational initiatives

I would hope for a non-geographical synod based on theology.

Synods are outdated in our day of communications they could be eliminated, I feel they are a useless go between Swiftly becoming irreverent in the world of Christian core belief and structure.

I've thought for some time that if the synod disappeared tomorrow it might be five years before anyone noticed. I would be in favor of eliminating the synods.

I feel the time for the Synod has passed. With communication as good as it is now, there is no longer a need for this body. The resources could better be used by the Presbyteries who are in the trenches daily with the local churches.

I see no need for synods.

I value synods as part of our system, and would affirm the diversity of the ways synods have developed. All synods should not look the same.

A coordinating, facilitating role for the missions of presbyteries

Same as above,

Either create a non geographic synod for Presbyterians/presbyteries who wish to connect and support ministry from a conservative—evangelical perspective, or phase out synods because a third layer of governance is no longer needed.

Synod used to be a place for justice issues. There are very few places for any of that to happen now with the very small number of people as staff and council.

A synod is a middle sibling, squeezed between the oldest and biggest, and the little ones who get the attention. Either give synod the authority to be more than a "go between," or let them go.

The Synod consistently stays focused on the mission outreach the church ought to be about!

Same

Complete and total transparency

My general remarks above under section "a." have also covered sections "b." and "c." I do, however, have a few additional comments to make re synods. I strongly believe in the need for synods. I know there are many who believe we should abandon this level of our government. I am not among them. Just as there are things that only a strong, well-staffed and adequately funded national office (GA) can to best for the whole church, the SAME is true for our regional, geographic groupings of presbyteries. Synods DO have a place in our structure and there are essential and productive roles to be played by synods in the life and ministry of our church. It is not conceivable to me that ANYONE in Louisville could possibly grasp the day-to-day realities, problems, and challenges of 170+ presbyteries, let alone 10,000 congregations! When there is a hurting congregation, SOMEONE needs to become AWARE of the need and be available to help and support them through the pain and suffering! And when there is a whole presbytery in trouble, SOMEONE needs to KNOW and be readily available with wisdom, resources and strengths! And Louisville is simply TOO FAR AWAY and REMOTE to effectively assist with commutating, training, informing, and guiding the herd of cats we call "Presbyterians."
I've been involved in service to the Synod off and on for 25 years now and am more convinced than ever of its ability to lead in mission and education throughout a large geographic area.

Poorly run at best

Cannot see any reason for this additional layer of bureaucracy in these times of instant communication and tough financial decisions. It seems to be just another layer of paid staff and committee volunteers. The only people who care what people at synod do are those people who work at the synod level in some capacity. No one else cares except when they do something really mean-spirited and ill-considered like banning Arizona from hosting meetings.

Synods have a vital role to fulfill in enabling strong, vibrant, healthily functioning presbyteries. It is an emerging role that doesn't much resemble the Synod of our memories, but vital none the less. Synod staffs have, on the whole, not functioned well for a long time.

Need more contact with the presbyteries and congregations in its area.
Synods form a vital link in our connectional system! They are vital to regional ministries like campus ministries and sharing of resources within a vast area. I believe we need Synods to be fully Presbyterian.

The only contact with the synod I have had is to meet and listen to the synod executive who spoke at a presbytery meeting.

Same as above

Synods should be eliminated

I feel that synods in general have outlived their necessity. With the advent of new technologies, the connectional need no longer exists.

Excessive and outdated bureaucracy. Have no idea why this level of governance is in place. In my 16 years as a pastor I have seen no reason why resources are given to Synods.

Q24. Is there anything else you want to tell the MGB Commission to inform their examination of:

c. The General Assembly and its agencies and their duties and functions?

Again, there are some things (PDA, Hunger and other ministries) that can be better done together through a national body. Equipping for evangelism and helping congregations connect to a wide array of resources—both explicitly Presbyterian and other, would be a good use of a national body such as the General Assembly mission council. Do we still need an OGA and a GAMC?

No [12 persons made this comment]

Good communication. I miss office being in NYC. Too many events in Louisville rather than here in the Northeast.

Irrelevant too many congregations and church members.

My main contacts with the General Assembly are with World Mission. I have found them very helpful in providing information about missionaries who need support and in providing videos and printed matter that explains the work of World Mission. I also know from my spouse's experience as a commissioner to General Assembly and participation on a General Assembly committee that these activities are worthwhile and meaningful.

The more personal contact between GA and its agencies have at the presbytery and synod levels, the better. Such contact gives lie to the attitude that GA is somehow "big brother" or an alien force.

I have really appreciated the email news briefs that I receive from various agencies.

Cease publishing the glossy annual report from Council. It provides little useful information financially or in mission interpretation. Forgo multiple mailings from mission agencies and special offerings. Expand digital capacities.

Provides the global and large operation of mission opportunities and operation of the church at large. Resource to synods, presbyteries and congregations and missionaries benign, mostly

I have had major participation in OGA and GAMC functions—both are moving in good directions—streamlining—facilitating, equipping—I think we have leadership who are concerned about making the right things happen

We suffer from an us-them mentality that is symptomatic of individualism creeping into the lives of congregation. "They" say we have to pay this, believe that... It's not about US together in mission until we figure out how to show that it is US all together in mission.

This is a mixed bag. It all depends on who you speak to on the phone. Just spoke to a very defensive person from the BOP today, but went to a seminar with Steve Fleming and he is EXCELLENT! I wish I didn't remember the "good ole days" when I totally depended upon and respected the GA staff. Now, a lot of the really gifted people have left. The money crunch has affected everyone. The only way to save this denomination is to get rid of The Layman!
The national church is running like a corporation and not a ministry and I don't like it.

I think our GA is unable to manage change. It is theologically captive to constituents with divisive tactics. It is in a defensive mode from both flanks but largely from evangelicals. It supports too many social justice agendas (some needed) that it dilutes its efforts and does not provide a clear vision. I think the GA is in a lose-lose situation trying to delay the exit of conservative churches without enough resources to foster new congregations with migrant groups. Unable to build a bridge that can encompass a truly inclusive church, its present latent hostility toward socially and theologically conservative beliefs and values has led those churches to consider departure or form associations. Not to be out done, progressive churches are proposing their own association. I believe, on the other hand, that PC(USA) has a specific calling to the needy and poor. It will someday be a church that includes a rainbow of peoples unlike its European, shite founders. That will be a great accomplishment, if God so wills it. Sadly, I believe that church will diminish the importance of a vertical faith in Christ and the Cross and Resurrection. It will serve and love its neighbor, yet I am not sure whether love and serve Christ. On the other hand, the evangelical side of the church will uphold Orthodox faith and beliefs but will be less engaged in social justice. The Kingdoms of the right and left are tearing the essential shape of the Cross of Christ apart. The Gospel is being divided into spiritual and social dimensions. I wish it were not so and pray one day our unity will be restored and we can work together.

Dominated by clique of long time liberal clergy members.

Keep the present constitution! Vote no on the replacement!

Communicate pastorally.

They need to be responsive to the members at all levels.

Focus on international missions and ecumenical/interfaith relationships.

Thanatos Libido at work

Some congregation members know there is a General assembly. Most don't recognize our connection.

I think it is important for GA, etc. to represent the collective body of PC(USA). I think that, in our increasingly mobile society, people need to be able to assume some common ground between Presbyterian churches—though their worship styles and demographics may differ significantly. I think it is necessary for there to be some central "authority" (for lack of a better word) on "What does it mean to be Presbyterian?"

These offices serve a valuable function in pooling our resources together, our denomination together, and providing support, conferences, voice, etc.

It is an open secret among my pastor friends that the materials created and recommended by the PC(USA) aren't worth much. The VBS material is extra weak. I will say their quality has been on the rise recently, but that's relative to rock bottom.

I feel that the General Assembly has gradually developed too many "chiefs", and let support staff go, and that there isn't enough connection to the lower governing bodies. One example: the Woman’s ministry division used to have women to resource the synods. AND that department has been combined and can no longer do the job effectively.

Out of touch with local congregations and is becoming irrelevant to our culture by compromising on the truth of God's Word.

See Above

None [12 persons made this comment]

The General Assembly Office has many helpful services, however the training and advice the GA PJC/Staff has given to Presbytery PJC cases locally has not been helpful as it contradicts the spirit of the Rules of Discipline and creates an environment that is much less fair and respectful of defendants than is our secular criminal justice system.

The General Assembly needs to continue to be the overall resource for mission and ministry resources.

I'm only a little better here!

I am very sad to see people leave our Church, that is Presbyterian churches in general. I do not think that all the changes that the GA is pushing are needed and know that is part of the reason for our loosing members. Maybe we need to search ourselves and return to the deep abiding love for our Heavenly Father and pass it on to our fellow men and women, boys and girls and strive to make our land a better place.

Design a website that is more user friendly. The current website is not intuitive and is more difficult to navigate than the previous website.

I think we could do a lot better job of being more neutral of divisive issues. Example we find issues promoted that do not reflect what is taught in the bible. We find issues not talked about which are instructed in the bible. We things promoted which have not been voted on.

The General Assembly agencies ignore local congregations, and promote their own agendas.
Their duty and function is to protect His children! At a time of crisis within the PC(USA) emphasis must be placed on His Word as revealed in Scripture and not the social influx of worldly desire which is all too often based on selfish demands! To which I would add that using ancient clichés to present items of importance upon which we are required to vote only indicates a lack of a proper theological education on the part of general assembly members!

More focused on the enterprise of the denomination than the mission of the church.

I am sorry to say that my impression of the General Assembly and its agencies is swayed by my sense of their left leaning thinking and leadership.

See the answer to a. Although the GA is probably charged with the guidance and direction of the PC(USA) members. However there are a few amendments to the constitution that demonstrate degradation in the beliefs and teachings of the bible. Specifically the contradiction between the bible teachings and the ordinations of practicing homosexuals, i.e. the unrighteous. 1Cor6:9

Overall, there is heaviness to our bureaucratic system that makes it difficult for churches to move and change and grow with the Spirit. Our infighting is killing us. Pastors are burning out. Congregants are disillusioned, bored, and remain members out of obligation more than joy. These are not easy problems to tackle, and many do not have "governing body" solutions to them. I don't have answers, and I confess to not really knowing what "effective" is supposed to mean in most of these questions. The big questions are ones of identity. Who do we really want to be? How can we better serve God in the particulars? What can we allow to die so that new seeds can sprout forth from the stump? I may be preaching to the choir here. The PC(USA) boat is rocking and like the disciples, we are terrified. We can reach out to the peace Christ offers, but it's scary to be losing what we've known when we don't know what to reach for next. Keep searching. Keep wondering. Keep following. Don't let what's "safe" be the ultimate deciding factor in what we do. Glad to talk further if you like. Surveys are a rough medium. [deleted]

I personally feel distant from the General Assembly, its agencies and its functional effectiveness. There does not always seem to be a clear focus or direction. I am thankful that we are not a hierarchical denomination, but it is clear to me that our congregations, ministers, Presbyteries and Synods need clear guidance and support from the General Assembly and its agencies. I hear GA commissioners share what an amazing experience it was to serve, and be very complimentary of the process at GA, but somehow, this process never finds its way to the Presbytery or congregational level. GA needs to lead. GA needs to help all the governing bodies rediscover and discover anew what it means to be church in today's world.

Save as above

I find G.A. and the agencies to be doing what we need. It is too bad that some parts of its ministries have been limited by finances, and that goes back to the 1950s. I give thanks that I was not around for the 1924 G.A. reorganization. We have had too many during the time of my ministry to today. We expend far too much time, money and energy in drawing lines on paper, reorganizing, jumping on board a proposal by one person, and having one study committee after another at great cost. I suppose it may partly be due to having lst time commissioners at the meetings of G.A. Forget re-organization. Keep our synods and presbyteries and let's engage in effective ministry at home and abroad and meet the challenge of the PCA and EPC forcefully.

I have attended several GAs, though not in the last 12 years. What we know of GA is mostly tied up in the votes we take. In the last 2 years we have been more aware of the PDA and have helped there.

How can the GA become more focused and supportive of the local church to make them viable witnesses to Christ in the 21st century and culture?

Trimming and consolidation might be in order.

I know little of the function of this group.

You are trying to destroy my church

I know a great deal about GA, but not from our presbytery.

We often criticize the decisions of the General Assembly, but the GA is us. Unfortunately the agencies that run the church between GAs have a tremendous influence on the direction of the denomination and too often they respond to the actions of the most recent GA without consideration for the hundreds of years of history which ought to direct our course. So we congregants have a sort of whiplash and at the congregational level there is VERY little sense of respect for those at the top leadership in our denomination. In some cases there is a real sense of anger and betrayal that our denomination has abandoned the core values of our faith and is leading us into apostasy. Glitzy promo videos and brochures will not build trust. It is time for top level staff to visit a few sessions and get back in touch with those it seeks to lead.

It often appears that General Assembly, because of its bureaucratic processes, inhibits rather than grows God's church in this country. Although it is a governing body, it seems to have lost touch with the desires of the local church.
Recent work done at the mission agency has been good, though probably a little too late. GA, which I have been two twice as a commissioner (once as a vice committee chair) does not enable good discussion or the ability to do good work: committees are to large, too much politics, and the actions of the assembly to not represent to opinions of those in my pews.

The GA can help bring oversight to both theological and geographical groupings, by offering different tracks of ministry and mission. This is the only way we will stay together.

Not particularly impressed. Our church does not have a strong trust with the leadership and the lobbying at the GA level. We have continued to pay our per capita but that will stop with the change in our constitution. After each General Assembly we are horrified with many of the decisions and of course the news coverage. I believe in many of the Mission outreachs of our denomination, but that ministry is often overshadowed by the poor decisions of GA.

I think holding the general assembly every other year is a step in the right direction and think that we should move to every 3 or 4 years. We should have fewer delegates and fewer advisory participants. I also think we should not allow the assembly to mandate action that is not budgeted.

NO MENTION OF PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES

The GA is too divided to accomplish any ministry they just bicker over doctrine.

It appears to me that the process just approved for the 2012 GA is a further move toward allowing the organizers of GA to feed the 'party line' to commissioners (through Riverside Conversations, where the leadership gives 1-sided presentations on major issues, and through less time to actually read committee reports). Another huge concern is the serious underrepresentation of conservatives/evangelicals at both the presbytery and GA level. Major problem!

We need clear criteria and guidelines on grading ordination exams.

They all live in ivory towers

Stay out of politics and concentrate on determining why we lose 40,000 members each year and put us back on track as a Church that represents a loving God.

Downsize, push mission down to the congregations—GA as network, not hub.

Discontinue the advocacy of polarizing political and social rules and commentary. Stay mainstream in theology and Christ focused rather than taking on fringe issues that direct your focus away from most of our core beliefs.

Please improve the "search" function on the PC(USA) website, and have someone answer the phones in Louisville. It is so hard to help members of churches see the value of our connectional system when they can't easily do simple things like renew subscriptions to publications or order bulletin inserts.

The GA should not permit honorably retired persons to serve as voting commissioners—only as advisory members.
Commissioners are too old, and new ideas at GA are blocked. Agencies should focus on providing grants and $ aid to local and worldwide mission programs instead of spending money on centrally administered programs.

GA is primarily responsible for the colossal failure of our denomination to fulfill is God given charge to make disciples of all nations. We need to tear GA down and start over.

I find the GA interesting, and when I was younger, was hoping to be able to go. Don't know anything from Presbytery or our pastor. I get my information on the web and newspaper. Generally, in my opinion, the local church member is asked for pledges and to work (both okay) but is excluded in any further-reaching information about the workings of these bodies. What a shame. I'm leaving my P church, after being there 30+ years and being elder, deacon, clerk, PNC moderator, sometime preacher, etc. to be a Methodist or UCC. All because of failing corrective relationships with our church and our Presbytery. One-third of our congregation is no longer worshipping with us because of the pastor, and we have received no constructive help with the relationship from our Presbytery. Typical.

The more opportunities the people in our congregations have to meet in the flesh—in their own community—a person from the GA—the better. When a face is put on the GA—it has tremendous impact. People need to know you to trust you—and not be afraid the denomination is heading away from God.

More emphasis needs to be focused on evangelism and church growth from a practical stand point to equip congregations with ideas and resources on how to evangelize in the 21st century.

Cut all programs and just be an administrative body. Facilitate discussions about issues but stop voting a position on every issue that comes up in the world. A few hours of debate in a GA committee by people who know very little about the topics is a pathetic way to provide witness.

I worked with the Mission of the church and interpreted Mission in three different Presbyteries. Involvement with the Sister Church Program was exciting and opened many new doors for people in the pew to experience real life in other parts of the world.

Unfortunately social justice ministries seem to be diminishing in size and impact. There are few resources in Louisville to assist presbyteries and congregations in those areas and the synod has none.
GAMC has been decimating social justice ministries

I generally know about the General Assembly. What I know about it is what I am able to read about it on the PC(USA).org website.

Seems to be more interested and involved in social engineering issues rather than in spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The General Assembly is overwhelmingly attended by very liberal members who are not representative of their congregations and who are led by the even more liberal staff of PC(USA).

The GA has to change its mindset from the Fordist mentality (manufacturer out to dealership where dealership pays fees to be part of the network) to one of uniting congregations for mission. Presbyterianism is not meant to be top-down but rather bottom-up. This is not how it works practically, however, and needs to change.

The only way to prevent the departure of many evangelical congregations will be to allow them to join a non-geographic synod and form new presbyteries that do not recognize the ordination of practicing homosexuals or heterosexuals engaging in sex outside of marriage.

Enable, don't restrict

Again, I understand the connectional nature of our polity and the need for a denominational center. I wonder, however, if a shift of most resources from the national office to the presbyteries wouldn't better serve the church.

I hate to say, it but there is no close connection with our church or with what I'm doing. The best activity that I ever saw was the Stated Clerk and the Director of the GA Council visiting presbyteries. Having visiting co-workers is a good program. PresbyteTel is good.

Continue to develop pilot programs and target involving two congregations in each presbytery with the pilot. Let the two then interpret for the rest of the presbytery. Show the difference the General Assembly Mission Council's staff and resourcing can do! Also, the General Assembly needs to bring its excellent social witness policies guiding its mission to the presbyteries and congregations. This type of strategic "social witness"—both hands-on opportunities and witness in the public square—is just what the youth of our presbytery appreciated most at Triennium. Look at the REACH Work Camp programs that bring together youth in building relationships with the poor, disabled and elderly as they build renovating homes. There is no reason why the GA can't pull together such opportunities and "have it pay for itself"!!! Youth and congregations love to earn resources/provide resources for the youth to have these meaningful opportunities. Why does a para-church group do what the church might well do on its own? Our fear of limited "cash" resources/people feeling the church should offer everything free, keep us from providing opportunities that can develop the next generation of leadership.

We must strengthen the social action policy implementation of the GA!

I would like some help to attend seminary financially. Can that be arranged?

I strongly dislike the repeated voting on issues that have been rejected time after time by Presbyteries with vague wording and meanings that do not reflect Biblical truths. Can't these bodies see the impact on our denomination from these actions?

It seems that the size and strength of GA is getting smaller. Meeting every two years is a good idea. The agencies are important and I would not like to see them disappear.

too political too distant no concern for individual congregations

Power that strays from Biblical, explicit doctrine corrupts. It represents a doomed falsehood generated from the eyes of sinful man who thinks he can fashion as comfortable the rewritten Bible to his interpretation. Turning from traditional Christian teaching is sin regardless of its current acceptance, even at the highest level of organized religious denominations.

Does the GA understand that local congregations are the heart of the denomination, and supporting congregations in the mission of Christ is its primary reason for existence?

General Assembly should focus on relations with and in support of international denominations, and on building common ground for mission by congregations and groups of congregations.

Let’s focus on evangelism, our commission, the Bible, and reaching out, developing programs the local church can incorporate and are proud to do so. Let’s be the church focused on worship repentance and acceptance to a new life in Jesus, not on psychology.

For the most part too liberal, too top heavy, too worried about preserving itself and not worried enough with honoring the lord

Again, many of my remarks above in sections "a" and "b" speak to issues concerning the GA and its agencies. For 13 years of my ministry career I served as a [deleted] to one of the GA programs. My duties carried me from coast to coast and border to border across the whole U.S. In that capacity I became acquainted with a great many of the staff there at the Center and their program responsibilities. During the time, I witnessed the great expectations and promise of the 1988-89 merging of the two national staffs from the former PCUS and UPC(USA). There was an all too brief few years of remarkable energy and vision in evidence, as the best of the two former congregations finally were empowered to function as one. Then came the semi-annual rounds of staff reductions and reorganizations as the funding began to dry up and disappear. Many congregations had begun to withhold their contributions in order to express their disagreement with the GA Policy positions they disliked. Bound to us by the "Property" provisions and structure of the Board of Pensions programs, these dissatisfied presbyters (I use that word loosely!) took it upon themselves to punish and destroy that which they could not dominate. With the passage of Amendment 10-A, we'll probably experience another ghastly round of the same behaviors. We MUST find a way to remember our ordination vows and honor them!—

Someday I also hope we stop trying to run this church as if it were a BUSINESS! We are a CHURCH, not a Fortune 500 Corporation! What possible understanding of what it means to be a "CHURCH" would prompt us to do a "reduction in force" following the secular practices of having a uniformed guard stand by to ensure that the employee receiving the pink slip would gather his or her few personal possessions, place them in a cardboard box, and be marched out of the building and forbidden to return? That is the most disturbing image I have witnessed at the Center. But the "Corporate" model is a BAD fit! Yes, we need good policies and administrative direction for effective management of the Center staff and their functions, but it ought to FEEL like "Church," not just another "business." —

IF we have the courage and wisdom to invest an appropriate amount of our earthly treasure in our GA staff and programs, the whole church would be blessed by the possibilities! It's been so long ago I can't remember just when it all but disappeared, but excellent resources (curriculum, etc.) used to be available to congregations at reasonable, affordable cost to them. I know that many of our "congregational" model churches have abandoned the use of ANYTHING produced by the PC(USA), but surrendering to their irregular actions has hurt the WHOLE church, and especially the smaller congregations struggling to persevere as "Presbyterians." —It's past time to bring these remarks to a close. I am 80 years old, legally blind. I apologize for spelling mistakes above. This system does not permit spell-checking and even review is quite difficult for me. I hope at least some of the things I have said above will prove useful in some way. I love my church! Thank you for the opportunity to share these reflections and observations. Your servant, [deleted]

Too liberal. One member told me that my and his church has been "hijacked". It is a greedy, out of control "Not for profit"

GA needs to represent the entire denomination not just the liberal side—they talk about unity in diversity, but I see little diversity among staff and leadership and they are very vocal about their liberal positions

Introduction and Research Strategy

The General Assembly Middle Governing Body Commission asked the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Research Services staff to help the commission consult with Presbyterians as it reimagines presbyteries and synods. Research Services staff conducted one-hour telephone focus group discussions with representatives of 11 PC(USA) constituencies. The staff drafted focus group questions (with input from a research subcommittee of the commission), sampled and recruited focus group participants, moderated the discussions, and summarized and analyzed the discussions. Operating mainly in pairs, commission members opened and closed the focus groups and listened to the discussions. The focus groups took place during the second and third weeks of April 2011. Each focus group involved between six and nine participants, in addition to the commission members and researchers, and lasted for one hour.1

The focus groups gathered people in the following constituencies:
- Executives of large presbyteries
- Executives of small presbyteries
- Moderators of large presbyteries
- Moderators of small presbyteries
- Stated clerks of presbyteries
- Pastors who are younger than 45 years old
- African American Presbyterian leaders and leaders in African American ministries
- Asian American, non-Korean Presbyterian leaders and leaders in Asian American, non-Korean ministries
- Hispanic/Latino Presbyterian leaders and leaders in Hispanic/Latino ministries
- Middle Eastern American Presbyterian leaders and leaders in Middle Eastern American ministries
- Native American Presbyterian leaders and leaders in Native American ministries

The names of the individuals who participated in the focus groups are included in the summary of each group (see Appendices A-K). The summaries include the questions that were asked, all of which had been shared with participants in advance.

Findings

Introduction

For the most part, the discussions in the focus groups with racial-ethnic leaders and leaders in racial-ethnic ministries were different from discussions in the other focus groups. Most of the participants in the focus groups that were not with racial-ethnic constituencies were presbytery leaders. These participants are very involved in their presbyteries, whereas racial-ethnic constituency leaders tend to be more involved in their congregation or in their PC(USA) racial-ethnic caucus than with their presbytery. Thus, the discussions among these two groups of participants will be analyzed separately.

1 For more information about telephone focus groups, see: http://www.tc.umn.edu/~rkrueger/focus_tfg.html.

2 Criteria for presbytery size were number of congregations and total number of members in those congregations.
Issues for Presbytery Leaders

Small vs. large presbyteries. Leaders of small presbyteries generally like being in small presbyteries, particularly because they appreciate the intimacy, accountability, and relationships that develop. When one participant talked about moving from a larger to a smaller presbytery, s/he expressed surprise that pastors called him/her in advance if they could not make it to a presbytery meeting. S/he said pastors would not have made such calls in the larger presbytery. This participant realized that it was because, in the smaller presbytery, people noticed when others were absent, and they cared.

On the other hand, leaders of small presbyteries conceded that some such presbyteries run low on resources. Some of these presbyteries have reduced staff—sometimes exclusively because of financial woes, sometimes for other reasons also—and may need help sustaining presbytery initiatives and taking care of presbytery business. Some small presbytery leaders decried the large number of committees the Book of Order apparently mandates, while others noted that their presbyteries have simply eliminated many committees. Some small presbytery leaders like that their presbyteries have small administrative staffs. In fact, a few said that presbyteries should have no staff.

The comments of leaders of large presbyteries generally were similar to those of their small-presbytery counterparts, only in reverse. Large-presbytery leaders like having adequate resources and large numbers of people available to serve on committees. They are troubled by the loss of intimacy and relationship-building that being in a large presbytery may bring.

Multiple criteria for size. When recruiting focus group participants, Research Services defined presbytery size by the number of congregations and the number of church members. Leaders of presbyteries identified a third dimension of size: physical size. Presbyteries that have large geographic areas within their boundaries (whether they are small or large in church membership or number of congregations) struggle with specific challenges, including the need for many of those participating in presbytery activities to take significant amounts of time to participate due to travel time. However they are drawn, presbytery lines are also somewhat arbitrary, and Presbyterians who live and work on the far end of one presbytery might be able to forge closer ties with Presbyterians in an adjoining presbytery.

Synods: for or against? Presbytery leaders expressed mixed feelings about presbyteries working together on their own initiative (without their synods) or working through or with their synods. Some presbyteries have recently withdrawn from cross-presbytery partnerships, while others are starting limited new ones, sharing financial management, camps, or even executives. In some cases, synods have been providing cross-presbytery services—for example, financial management—while in other cases synods facilitate cross-presbytery networking. In the focus groups presbytery leaders engaged in a lively debate about the future of synods. Some presbytery leaders identified themselves as long-time proponents of eliminating synods. Others said synods used to do important work, but now are weak and do little. Others said the connectional functions that synods serve would be better accomplished if presbyteries created associations on their own. A few also said having a three-layered denominational judiciary is too much, and some suggested eliminating one of the layers. However, others were skeptical that getting people from across presbyteries together would actually take place in the absence of synods. The most vocal proponents of synods were those in three synods that have at least one specialized ministry: Living Waters (Living Waters for the World water purification mission project), Pacific (loan fund), and Sun (Solar Under the Sun solar power mission project).

3 The Book of Order appears to prohibit some cross-presbytery partnerships.
