[The assembly approved Item 11-01 with amendment. See pp. 28, 29.]

On Economic Justice in These Troubled Times—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Atlanta overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012), noting the frustration expressed in “Occupy Wall Street” and similar public demonstrations, to do the following:

1. Condemn personal and corporate greed as a moral sin, and express its concern for the numerous individuals and families affected by our very troubled economy.

2. Proclaim that

   • We stand with and advocate for those who have lost their homes, lost their jobs, lost their health insurance benefits, and those who have lost basic services in their communities including quality public education and vital public infrastructure.

   • We are concerned by political discussions related to reducing budgetary expenditures for critical safety net programs such as Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, and community services block grants that support Head Start, WIC, WAP, and other services for our poorest citizens.

   • We urge policymakers to pursue policies that meet human needs and support the public good, not those that benefit the most powerful.

   • We decry a moral climate that condones unbridled greed as a necessary ingredient in our economic system.

   • We uphold the religious and spiritual value of participation that those most affected by decisions be present and involved at the table where decisions are made.

3. Call

   • for our church members to follow the historic Reformed tradition of civic engagement, and insist on accountability, transparency, and responsibility on the part of elected officials and public servants in this time of economic distress; and

   • on our churches to partner with other ecumenical, interfaith, and nonprofit community organizations to address in practical and effective ways the weaknesses in our social structure, paying particular heed to those people who have long been marginalized and excluded from the fullness of opportunity in American society.

[4. Uphold the human value of the participation in decision making of all those affected by the decisions and authorize the Office of the General Assembly, Office of Public Witness, individual Presbyterians, and councils, to support legislation, ballot initiatives, constitutional amendments, and other means to prevent unlimited money from corporations, unions, individuals, and other entities from distorting electoral campaigns and to restore legal boundaries between business corporations and human persons endowed with free speech and other constitutional rights.]

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-01 overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to condemn personal and corporate greed as a sin; to express concern for individuals and families affected by a troubled economy; and to advocate for those who have lost homes, jobs, health insurance benefits, and basic community services. It also requests General Assembly advocacy for policies that meet human needs and support the public good, for participation in decision making by those affected by policy choices, and for civic engagement and ecumenical partnerships to enhance the performance of social institutions with particular attention to disadvantaged groups.

Add a new recommendation 4 to read as follows:
“[4. Authorize the Office of the General Assembly, Office of Public Witness, individual Presbyterians and councils, to support legislation, ballot initiatives, constitutional amendments and other means to prevent unlimited money from corporations, unions, individuals and other entities from distorting electoral campaigns and to restore legal boundaries between business corporations and human persons endowed with free speech and other constitutional rights.]”

Rationale

In spirit and intent, Item 11-01 is consistent with the abiding witness of the church on behalf of “the stranger and the orphan and the widow who are in your midst” (Deut. 16:11). The UPCUSA stated in The Confession of 1967: “… A church that is indifferent to poverty, or evades responsibility in economic affairs … makes a mockery of reconciliation and offers no acceptable worship to God (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.46). In the PC(USA), this witness has been demonstrated in a long series of approved policies that address economic injustice, notably the Social Creed of the Churches (1908) (http://www.pcusa.org/media/uploads/acswp/pdf/connectingtothecreed.pdf) and A Social Creed for the 21st Century (2008), (http://game.pcusa.org/ministries/acswp/social-creed/), as well as God’s Work in our Hands: Employment, Community, and Christian Vocation (1995), and similar statements. Further, it anticipates the concerns and recommendations being presented to this 220th General Assembly (2012) in Item 11-09, the ACSWP study entitled, “World of Hurt, Word of Life: Renewing God’s Communion in the Work of Economic Reconstruction.”

The recommendation suggests provides specific ways to engage the overture’s concerns for “accountability, transparency, and responsibility on the part of elected officials” by addressing the main factors that allow powerful interests to dominate the U. S. political process.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 11-01.

Rationale

Item 11-01 is well-stated and points to many cogent truths about the nature and scope of the economic crisis in our time. The situation for many racial ethnic residents of the U.S. is graver than the language in Item 11-01 suggests as the situation for Americans at large. The ACREC supports Item 11-01 and calls the church to stand with those in need of economic justice.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON OVERTURE 11-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 11-01.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta in this item, “On Economic Justice in These Troubled Times.” We believe we are called as a church to stand with and advocate for people who have been marginalized in our country and communities and who are suffering at the hands of systems and structures of political, corporate, and economic greed and corruption.

The ACWC notes that, many times women have been more heavily affected in these systems of oppression and injustice. Women’s health care and decisions regarding a woman’s own body and health continue to be affected by recent legislation and political/social diatribes. The reduction of budgetary expenditures for critical safety net programs also affects the lives and families of many women in ways that are specific to women. The ACWC fully supports this item, which gives voice to the experiential frustrations of many women in this country.

[The assembly approved Item 11-02 with amendment. See pp. 28, 29.]

On Calling for an End to Poverty Zone Development and for the Advocacy of Fair Development—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:
1. Commend the United Workers Association of Baltimore for its efforts at organizing low-wage workers to demand living wages, better working conditions, and respect for human rights.

2. Support the call of the United Workers Association of Baltimore for Fair Development Standards that will improve working conditions and alleviate poverty conditions for millions of workers across the United States.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk to write a letter to the prominent national developers General Growth Properties and the Cordish Company, the mayor of Baltimore city, and the governor of Maryland, calling for an end to Poverty Zone Development and urging the adoption of development that respects human rights (work with dignity, the right to health, care and education), maximizes public benefits, and fosters sustainability.

4. Urge Presbyterians to
   a. support the organizing of low-wage workers at malls to improve working conditions;
   b. join together with low-wage service workers to pressure developers to respect human rights and pay living wages in cities and towns across the country; and
   c. hold developers to account through worker-driven corporate accountability campaigns, changing the relationship between developers, the community, and workers, to secure human rights standards and Fair Development Agreements.

5. Request that the Presbyterian Hunger Program, the Presbyterian Office of Public Witness, and/or other appropriate entities of the church, help build a national public policy dialogue about how to ensure that public resources are used to benefit the public good rather than private interests.

Rationale

Poverty Zone Development produces poverty wage jobs, disregards the health and wellbeing of workers, and creates barriers to education. These human rights abuses take place while developers who control shopping malls, tourism destinations, and other developments profit through the use of public resources. Poverty Zone Development is an affront to the human rights values of respect, dignity, and the sanctity of life. That is why low-wage workers at Baltimore’s Inner Harbor are calling for Fair Development. Unfortunately the Inner Harbor is not unique. There are millions of people—the working poor—who work at restaurants and retail outlets as cooks, clerks, servers, cleaners, and security guards, who experience human rights abuses.

The current economic crisis in the U.S., the worst since the Great Depression, has symbolized the continuing decline of worker power in this country. The year 2009 was a record year for CEO compensation while unemployment continued to grow. Little is being done to rectify the primary reasons for this economic decline—the growing gap between the very rich and everyone else. We believe that the missing piece is organizing, and the creation of a large social movement that secures human rights for everyone, everywhere.

The United Workers has chosen Baltimore’s Inner Harbor as the first focus of its Fair Development Campaign because it is the perfect example of Poverty Zone Development where developers make billions in profits and exert downward pressure on wages and working conditions. In Baltimore, tourism represents the third largest employment sector, and nationally the service economy has replaced manufacturing as the base of employment. The Inner Harbor is really the new sweatshop factory floor of the early 21st century—without union or governmental protections, workers who run this tourist mecca are extremely vulnerable to human rights abuses. These abuses include being forced to work “off the clock,” no access to health care or sick leave (members of the United Workers have been fired for being in the hospital), and barriers to education (unpredictable scheduling makes it nearly impossible to go to school and work at the same time). The service sector employs millions at shopping corridors, stadiums, and tourist zones across the country, locations that go virtually unregulated by labor laws or include special exemptions like the restaurant industry tip credit. General Growth Properties and David Cordish, the two developers who control the Inner Harbor, and who are at the center of the United Workers’ campaign, own nineteen properties in Maryland alone—between 10,000–20,000 low-wage workers that could be brought into a process that builds leadership, organization, and the ability to make systemic change.

Both companies, but particularly Cordish, have become experts at funneling huge amounts of public money into developments billed as “revitalization” projects for depressed areas. Yet the jobs created by these projects are unregulated, minimum wage, seasonal, and rife with human rights abuses. The Cordish Company is the recipient of hundreds of millions of federal dollars in New Market Tax Credits, which have facilitated its development projects around the country. Part of the Community Renewal and New Markets Act of 2000, the purpose of this tax credit is ostensibly to create developments that benefit low-income communities. What is not generally available to the public is whether these tax credits do in fact benefit these communities or better the lives of low-income people. As we have seen with the Inner Harbor, the jobs Cordish has created are rife with human rights abuses, and the cities for which the developments are created see very little of the revenue they were promised. There is no structure of accountability in place to regulate these tax credits, so developers like Cordish continue to reap huge profits at the expense of the communities on which they prey.

Human Rights Abuses Systemic at Baltimore’s Inner Harbor:

- ESPNZone and Disney Corporation violate workers rights to be notified of restaurant closing under the WARN Act.
- Cheesecake Factory workers forced to work off the clock without pay.
- Tir Na Nog workers, in order to avoid retaliation from managers, must buy sodas and food from manager.
- Hooters workers go months without receiving paycheck.
- Phillips Seafood found in violation of EEOC regulations regarding race-based discrimination.

The human costs of Poverty Zone Development are tremendous. Inner Harbor workers have become homeless as a result of systemic poverty wages, lack of health care, and denial of education. Workers have been saddled with huge debts trying to pay utility bills and health care bills. Many must rely on food stamps and other subsidies to survive.

Baltimore, like many cities in this country, is grappling with how to grow and maintain a vibrant community life in uncertain economic times. When more and more of its manufacturing base was leaving for other locations, the solution put forward by city leaders and developers was the promise of tourism and service sector jobs. The Inner Harbor was a vision of a city reborn. However, city leaders and developers’ promises have not been fulfilled, and many are questioning the economic thinking of relying on tourism (now Baltimore’s third largest industry). We believe that this intersection of development, poverty, and human rights must be addressed in order for Baltimore or any other city to have a sustainable and vibrant future.

Calling for an end to Poverty Zone Development and urging the approval of Fair Development principles is in keeping with “A Social Creed for the 21st Century,” approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The social creed says, in part:

In faith, responding to our Creator, we celebrate the full humanity of each woman, man, and child, all created in the divine image as individuals of infinite worth, by working for:

- Full civil, political, and economic rights for women and men of all races. …
- Employment for all, at a family-sustaining living wage, with equal pay for comparable work.
- The rights of workers to organize, and to share in workplace decisions and productivity growth.
- Protection from dangerous working conditions, with time and benefits to enable full family life. …

In the love incarnate in Jesus, despite the world’s sufferings and evils, we honor the deep connections within our human family and seek to awaken a new spirit of community, by working for:

- Abatement of hunger and poverty, and enactment of policies benefiting the most vulnerable.
- High quality public education for all and universal, affordable, and accessible healthcare.
- An effective program of social security during sickness, disability and old age.
- Tax and budget policies that reduce disparities between rich and poor, strengthen democracy, and provide greater opportunity for everyone within the common good.
- Just immigration policies that protect family unity, safeguard workers’ rights, require employer accountability, and foster international cooperation.
- Sustainable communities marked by affordable housing, access to good jobs, and public safety. … (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 924–25)

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-02 be approved.

This overture asks the General Assembly to approve a series of actions in support of more equitable treatment of low-wage service workers in malls, tourist destinations, and re-development areas, both specifically in the Baltimore area and more generally within the country. Additionally, it requests that the Presbyterian Hunger Program, the Presbyterian Office of Public Witness, and other appropriate entities of the church be charged with fostering a national public policy dialogue on ways to ensure that public resources are used to benefit the public good instead of private development interests.
The Bible condemns the exploitation of workers, saying “Then I will draw near to you for judgment; and I will be a swift witness against ... those who oppress the wage earner in his wages ... says the Lord of Hosts” (Mal. 3:5). John Calvin was a labor activist as well as a theologian. When the Geneva city council sought to limit workers' salaries and make de facto unions illegal, Calvin and other pastors sought worker conciliation and backed a more egalitarian organization of trades.

Advocacy on behalf of low-income workers and against the human rights abuses to which they are often subjected have been longstanding PC(USA) commitments. In 1952, the PCUSA General Assembly urged a “… greater emphasis upon free collective bargaining in labor-management relations,” and that Presbyterians “… participate more actively in management organizations and labor unions as an expression of Christian vocation. …”(Minutes, PCUSA, 1952, Part I, p. 204). The “Principles of Vocation and Work,” approved by the 207th General Assembly (1995), emphasize that “Inequalities in compensation and working conditions demand the strictest scrutiny.” A Social Creed for the 21st Century, approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), reconfirms the church’s commitment to: (i) Full civil, political, and economic rights for women and men of all races; (ii) Employment for all, at a family-sustaining living wage, with equal pay for comparable work; (iii) The rights of workers to organize, and to share in workplace decisions and productivity growth; and (iv) Protection from dangerous working conditions, with time and benefits to enable full family life.

Advice and Counsel on Overture 11-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 11-02.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns strongly supports this overture in support of workers’ rights and fair wages. In order for the economy of the U.S. to be on a sure footing again, we need to strengthen the middle class, without which an economic recovery is not sustainable. Historically, our middle class was built on jobs that paid a living wage with healthcare benefits and access to education that provided the ability to improve one’s prospects. These hard-won rights and the emergence of the large middle class in the twentieth century would not have been possible without collective bargaining and organized workers demanding their rights.

Today, with the shrinking numbers in the middle class, racial ethnic communities have been affected more than others in the economic downturn; they are the first to drop out of the middle class and the last to be lifted out. Trickle down economics only work if you already have a boat to rise when the tide comes; racial ethnic communities need more help to rise when economic recovery comes. Supporting workers’ rights, as this overture outlines, is key to helping those most affected and in building back the middle class as the backbone of the country. This will become even more pronounced as the demographics of the U.S. shift to larger and larger numbers in racial ethnic communities around the country.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-02

Comment on Item 11-02—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The Office of Public Witness is currently working in this area through the Faithful Budget Campaign in which Presbyterians are provided tools to respond to their national leaders after having discussions in local communities. This is an effective way to organize a national public policy dialogue outside of Washington, D.C. In addition, both the Office of Public Witness and Presbyterian Hunger Program already connect Presbyterians to Interfaith Worker Justice who has field offices throughout the United States to work with faith communities in their specific communities on poverty issues. These issues include an economy that benefits the common good as campaigns like Faith Advocates for Jobs. The Presbyterian Hunger Program also supports SweatFree Communities that specifically seeks to build market demand for decent working conditions and wages for workers in labor-intensive industries that make or grow products purchased by governments.

[The assembly approved Item 11-03 with amendment. See pp. 28, 29.]

On Endorsing “A Fifty Year Farm Bill”—From the Presbytery of Heartland.

The Presbytery of Heartland respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

2. Direct the director of the General Assembly Mission Council to endorse “A Fifty Year Farm Bill,” which is related to perennialization of crops and biodiversity with the goal of social and ecological sustainability. Also, direct the Stated Clerk to correspond with members of Congress on our position.

3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), including the Office of Public Witness, to orient their advocacy and programs concerning agriculture and food supply in accordance with the following principles and goals: renewability, sustainability, resilience, minimized carbon emissions, participatory research and decision-making, revitalized rural communities, strong local food economies, security of food supply, ethical treatment of animals, and fair and dignified treatment of persons working throughout the food chain.

Rationale

The Fifty Year Farm Bill is a program that uses five-year farm bills as mileposts. Each bill will add larger, more sustainable end goals to existing programs.

This overture is a plan to perennialize the landscape so it will be sustainable for future growth. The goal is to gain social stability and ecological sustainability in secure food supplies. The 50-Year Farm Bill (50YFB) can be seen in its entirety at www.land institute.org.

By using this overall plan, conservation will be a positive result of production, and our food producing land will grow and flourish, as will our producers and our agricultural communities. This bill will help us care for God’s creation and increase the health of the people of the world and sustain the resources of the earth. It will help turn around many of the problems that are causing the eroding of our renewable natural resources, and help to save what is remaining.

The 50-Year Farm Bill has effective plans for following areas:

*Protect soil from erosion
*Cut fossil fuel dependence to zero
*Sequester carbon
*Reduce toxics in soil and water
*Manage nitrogen carefully
*Reduce dead zones
*Cut wasteful water use
*Preserve or rebuild farm communities

Scripture proclaims, “The earth is the Lord’s, and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it” (Ps. 24: 1). “As for you, my flock, thus says the Lord GOD … . Is it not enough for you to feed on the good pasture, but you must tread down with your feet the rest of your pasture? When you drink of clear water, must you foul the rest with your feet?”… Therefore, thus says the Lord GOD to them: I will judge between the fat sheep and the lean sheep” (Ezek. 34:17–20) Our God is concerned with all of creation for which we share and care.

In a time when long-term food security is an issue and there is a need to guarantee sustainable agricultural production in the future of our plains states, we support the proposal of a 50-Year Farm Bill. This bill is being proposed by The Land Institute of Salina, Kansas, in cooperation with five land grant universities and thirteen conservancy, trade, and watershed organizations in the U.S. This is at a time when soil fertility is declining, soil erosion is increasing, land is being poisoned by pesticides, and there is more biodiversity loss in our food-producing land. These research groups have completed studies that demonstrated this bill’s ability to make a positive change in our ecosystem.

This farm policy will create a positive economic transformation. It will bring people back to the family farm to use the improved technology and increase the long-range productivity of the land. The inventions and techniques have already been developed and are continuing to be improved upon. It will bring new health to the earth, clean up the sea’s “dead zones,” and stop the erosion of the good soil that is going seaward.

The Book of Order (W-7.5001a) states that “God calls the Church in the power of the Holy Spirit to participate in God’s work of creation and preservation.” In W-7.5003, it reminds us that we are “stewards of God’s creation who hold the earth in trust … .” In W-7.5003b, it asks that we “develop technological methods and processes that work together with the earth’s environment to preserve and enhance life.” Section W-7.5003e states we should “use and shape earth’s goods to create beauty, order, health, and peace in ways that reflect God’s love for all creatures.”
Organizations that partnered to develop this plan are: Green Lands Blue Waters Coalition, University of Illinois, Iowa State University (the Leopold Center for Sustainable Agriculture), Louisiana State University, the University of Minnesota, North Dakota State University, the University of Wisconsin, The Audubon Society, the Illinois Stewardship Alliance, the Institute for Agriculture and Trade Policy, The Land Institute, The Land Stewardship Project, the Minnesota/Iowa Farmers Union, The Nature Conservancy, Trout Unlimited, Practical Farmers of Iowa, and the Rural Advantage and Agricultural Watershed Institute.

We in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have a long history of supporting actions that would protect the environment.

Historical References

In 1954, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (PCUSA) stated:

> We call upon the Christian conscience to recognize that our stewardship of the earth and water involves both a land-use program which recognizes the interdependence of soil, water and man and the development of a responsible public policy which will resist the exploitation of land, water, and other natural resources, including forests, for selfish purposes and maintain intelligent conservation for the sustenance of all living creatures through future generations (Minutes, PCUSA, 1954, Part I, p. 198).

This stewardship commitment has been repeated and reaffirmed by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessors, as follows:

1967    The Confession of 1967 stressed the justice of sharing resources and the interdependence of resources and living creatures.

1971    The 183rd General Assembly (1971) of the UPCUSA accepted the Christian Responsibility for Environmental Renewal statement that calls for a new order of values based on an “eco-ethic” and a Statement on Environmental Renewal. (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1971, Part I, pp. 574-584)

1975    A recommendation is made to the 187th General Assembly (1975) of the UPCUSA to affirm advocacy of the protection of wildlife areas and parklands. (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1975, Part I, p.59)

1980    The 192nd General Assembly voted to (1) develop educational resources on the adverse impact that careless technology has on the environment and health of the unborn; (2) instruct the Board of Investment Committee to review corporate responsibility regarding manufacture of dioxins (Social Policy Compilation, 1980 Statement to the Mission Board, Item 1, 6.2.4).

1983    The 195th General Assembly (1983) urged the session of each congregation in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to consider making a “Commitment to Peacemaking” that included making peace with the earth—involve the congregation in efforts to protect and restore the environment (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 438).

1984    The 196th General Assembly (1984) called upon Congress of the United States to reduce the emissions of sulfur dioxide and the oxides of nitrogen to a level that would protect the most sensitive environment and stated that human stewardship was not a “dominion of mastery” and called us to exercise respect for the integrity of natural systems and for the limits that nature places on economic growth and material consumption (Minutes, 1984, Part I, p.349).

1987    The 199th General Assembly (1987) voted to urge the United States government to assure acceptable disposal sites for high-level nuclear waste. It also voted to urge each presbytery and local church to encourage and support alternatives to pesticides and support the victims of pesticide poisoning (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 796).

1988    The Environmental Justice Office was created to study past environmental policies of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the Presbyterian Church in the United States to create a combined report of environmental concerns for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Environmental Justice Office was a ministry of the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), lodged in the National Ministries Division, Social Justice Program Area, and is now actively involved in creation care and environmental justice issues.

1990    The 202nd General Assembly (1990) passed “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” affirming “creation cries out in this time of ecological crises,” calling the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to respond to this cry and engage in an effort to make the 1990s the “turnaround decade,” providing the foundation for the work of the Environmental Justice Office.
Also, the 202nd General Assembly (1990) called attention to the problem of global warming and encouraged the United States government to take steps toward incorporating environmental damage and depletion into “full-cost pricing” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp.646–670).

The Affirmation of Faith from that General Assembly noted that “Restoring Creation is God’s own work in our time, …” and that “The love of neighbor, particularly ‘the least’ of Christ’s brothers and sisters, requires action to stop the poisoning, the erosion, the wastefulness that are causing suffering and death. The future of our children and their children and all who come after is at stake. In this critical time of transition to a new era, God’s new doing may be discerned as a call to earthkeeping, to justice, and to community” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 647).

1992 The 204th General Assembly (1992) directed all future General Assemblies to print all official reports on recycled and recyclable paper and to direct all related bodies to use recycled and recyclable paper for all reports and publications (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p.846).

1993 The 205th General Assembly (1993) reaffirmed the “Call to Restore Creation,” received the document “World Scientists’ Warning to Humanity” as a prophetic word to the church, urged President Clinton to follow new policies from the Earth Summit, and directed the Social Justice and Peacemaking Unit to advocate for policies that would reduce carbon dioxide emissions (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp. 896–97).

1994 The 206th General Assembly (1994), within the context of its “Resolution on the United States in Its Asia-Pacific Relations,” listed five basic principles by which past General Assemblies have been guided related to international affairs. One of the principles, and the resolution that follow it, relates specifically to the environment. “The General Assembly has advocated new understanding of the relationship among human life, institutions, and the total stewardship and care for the planet, which is the common heritage of all peoples …” (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 310).

1996 The 208th General Assembly (1996) approved the paper “Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development” as policy for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Just and sustainable human development is the comprehensive enhancement of the quality of life for all, present and future; it necessarily involves the integration of economic, social, political, cultural, ecological, and spiritual dimensions of being.

1998 The 210th General Assembly (1998) called upon the United States to ratify the protocol negotiated in Kyoto and urged Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations and institutions to pursue energy efficiency and conservation in their buildings and property.

1999 The 211th General Assembly (1999) again called upon the U.S. to ratify the Kyoto Protocol, urged the United States to go beyond Kyoto targets for carbon dioxide emission reductions, directed the Presbyterian Center in Louisville and all other properties of the General Assembly to minimize fossil fuel energy (along with urging local congregations to do the same), and directed the General Assembly to promote education regarding global warming and other environmental concerns (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 669–70).

2001 The 213th General Assembly (2001) called to issue and disseminate the “Call to Halt Mass Extinction.” The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) called Presbyterians, other citizens, governments, and societal institutions to face the severity of this threat and to take steps to prevent mass extinction and preserve the biodiversity essential to the flourishing of life (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 473–75).

2003 The 215th General Assembly (2003) called on the United States government to join the world effort to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and to develop and enact a national emergency response, underwritten by law, with adequate financial support, and economic enforcement mechanism, to be fully functioning by 2005, with targeted reductions by that time (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 617).

2006: The 218th General Assembly (2006) asked its members to “make a bold witness by aspiring to live carbon neutral lives” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 896). It was noted that “without significant changes in public policy and corporate behavior to complement actions of personal discipleship, massive and irreversible climate changes will only accelerate over the next century” (PC(USA) Memorandum; Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Dec 4, 2006)

2010: The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved an overture from the Presbytery of Charlotte entitled “On Lifting Up the ‘Call to Restore’ Creation” reaffirming the Call to Restore Creation from the 1990 policy, “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice”; commends churches that are working to care for God’s earth; and encourages churches, members, and institutions to "adopt institutional and individual lifestyles reflecting greater stewardship of resources, particularly in energy consumption." The overture was amended to include the affirmation that "concern for God's creation is, for every Christian, an essential way of living faithfully"; to affirm that the best available science should shape the direction of environmental programming and policy; and that access to potable water is a human right.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Recalling the church’s longstanding and regularly reiterated commitment to environmental protection, this overture seeks the General Assembly’s endorsement of a fifty-year program, proposed by the Land Institute\(^1\), to progressively improve the sustainability of American agriculture and food supply over the coming half-century.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-03 be approved with the amendment by adding a new Recommendation 3 to read as follows:

“[3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), including the Office of Public Witness, to orient their advocacy and programs concerning agriculture and food supply in accordance with the following principles and goals: renewability, sustainability, resilience, minimized carbon emissions, participatory research and decision-making, revitalized rural communities, strong local food economies, security of food supply, ethical treatment of animals, and fair and dignified treatment of persons working throughout the food chain.]”

The purpose of the amendment is to extend the General Assembly’s affirmation beyond the specific actions proposed in this overture to embrace the principles that undergird it and their application to our country’s agricultural policy.

In God’s covenant with us, we are provided with the abundance of the earth although the earth does not belong to us. “The earth is the Lord’s, and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it” (Ps. 24: 1). Human accountability for the care of God’s creation is a recurring theme in the Bible. For example, “As for you, my flock, thus says the Lord God … Is it not enough for you to feed on the good pasture, but you must tread down with your feet the rest of your pasture? When you drink of clear water, must you foul the rest with your feet?” … Therefore, thus says the Lord God to them: I will judge between the fat sheep and the lean sheep” (Ezek. 34:17–20).

Human responsibility to maintain God’s creation has been affirmed on eighteen separate occasions by General Assemblies since 1971. Among the more notable actions are approval of the policy statements Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice by the 202nd General Assembly (1990), Hope for a Global Future: Towards Just and Sustainable Human Development by the 208th General Assembly (1996), and a Report and Recommendations on Limited Water Supplies and Takings with Study Guide by the 216th General Assembly (2004). These actions provide justification for the approval of this overture without the need to restate their arguments.

In addition, the Book of Order (W-7.5001a) states that “God calls the Church in the power of the Holy Spirit to participate in God’s work of creation and preservation.” In W-7.5003, it reminds us that we are “stewards of God’s creation who hold the earth in trust . . .” In W-7.5003b, it asks that we “develop technological methods and processes that work together with the earth’s environment to preserve and enhance life.” Section W-7.5003e states we should “use and shape earth’s goods to create beauty, order, health, and peace in ways that reflect God’s love for all creatures.”

Endnote

1. The Land Institute is a thirty-year-old nonprofit center based in Salina, Kansas, which is dedicated to research, public education and training in an effort to develop ecologically sustainable farming systems for the prairies of the Midwest. A main concern has been to maintain soil fertility and groundwater supplies necessary for continuing food production. Its fifty-year Farm Bill was developed in 2009 through partnerships with six state universities, several farmers associations, and six nongovernmental organizations, including the Audubon Society and the Nature Conservancy.

The Presbytery of Grand Canyon, in order to strengthen connections between our churches, overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to do the following:

1. Invite every session to communicate with [the session of] at least one [other] racial ethnic Presbyterian congregation [or fellowship] in 2013 for the purposes of: learning more about that congregation’s history and culture, increasing racial and cultural sensitivity in the whole church, engaging in mutual prayer for one another, and nurturing the connectional nature of our church.
2. Request that the [General Assembly Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns] [appropriate PC(USA) entities, including General Assembly Committee on Representation and Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women,] prepare information to facilitate these connections, including an invitation letter, a list of all the racial ethnic congregations in the PC(USA), and a list of suggestions to facilitate this connecting.

3. Request that the General Assembly’s Office of Communication distribute this information electronically, where possible, in order to reduce the overall financial implications of this overture.

4. Request that the councils and leadership teams of the [presbyteries] facilitate and reinforce this invitation to our sessions and report to the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns a list of the sessions accepting this invitation and their activities in this regard, as a part of the annual presbytery year-end miscellaneous information form, and that the Office of General Assembly collect and transmit this information to the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

Rationale

In response to our participation in the January 24–26 national Native American Consulting Committee Consultation, held in Phoenix, Arizona, we recognize that

- more than 90 percent of the PC(USA) congregations are predominantly of white European ancestry;
- the most recent U.S. Census indicates that 36 percent of the population is non-white;
- education, communication, and relationship-building are important to reduce racism in our country and increase understanding of our many-cultured life;
- there are 1,350 multicultural congregations in our church, 111 Native American, 600 African American/Immigrant, 340 Hispanic/Latino/a, 430 Korean, and 146 Asian (sources: Research Services and Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns); and we further recognize
- that the Presbytery of Grand Canyon has invited every one of its sessions to communicate with at least one racial ethnic Presbyterian congregation and directed its commission on ministry to include presentations on the cultural gifts our Grand Canyon racial ethnic congregations bring to our presbytery in new teaching elder orientations.

Concurrence to Item 11-04 from the Presbytery of de Cristo.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-04

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 11-04.

Rationale

The ACREC recommends approval of this overture but makes the following comments regarding implementation of the overture. The ACREC recognizes this overture as establishing a standard for measuring cultural proficiency in our churches. Cultural proficiency, as defined by the Climate for Change Task Force, and incorporated by ACREC in its 2012 Climate for Change Report, is:

The policies and practices of an organization, and the values and behaviors of individuals, that enables an organization or person to interact effectively in a culturally diverse environment. Cultural proficiency defines diversity as a strength, rather than a problem in organizations. It is a process for strategic, intentional organizational transformation that addresses culture, commitments, practices and skills.

This grass-roots overture advocates for “intentional organizational transformation” by encouraging predominantly white churches to interact with racial ethnic churches and congregations, with the goal of increasing racial and cultural sensitivity of the whole church. Identification of racial ethnic churches and congregations can be obtained from the racial ethnic caucuses and from various offices under the Racial Ethnic & Women's Ministries/Presbyterian Women. In addition, several presbyteries have instituted similar programs between sessions, such as National Capital Presbytery, and those presbyteries can be a resource for those church bodies that want to engage in a similar program. The overture recommends capturing this information by reporting this information on the annual presbytery year-end miscellaneous information form, and having the Office of the General Assembly forward this information to ACREC. The ACREC, if so directed, could monitor this cultural proficiency standard, for the purpose of reporting the results to the General Assembly.
Comment on Item 11-04—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises that Item 11-04, Recommendations 1.–4., be approved by the 220th General Assembly (2012) and offers this comment:

The GACOR wants to commend the Presbytery of Grand Canyon for walking its talk in challenging its sessions to connect with session of racial ethnic congregations and to present it to the wider church as a model for cross-cultural connection. Committees on representation are mandated at all councils above session so we commend them as a partner in this important work. We might encourage there to be preparation work so that white congregations are not expecting racial ethnic congregations to teach them how to be sensitive, etc. There are resources, especially tools in cultural proficiency that are adaptable to any context. Perhaps it would be helpful to connect the response to this item with Item 10-20 on renewing the call to hear and sing new songs to God. While our colleagues in the advocacy committee are committed to important advocacy work, GACOR respectfully suggests that committees on representation, available at all councils above session, are an excellent resource and structure to assist councils in implementing these habits for the long haul weaving of these experiences into the communal life of the congregations and councils. We humbly suggest that connection and offer our networks as a way of supporting these efforts.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

On Calling for an End to the Practice of Corporal Punishment in Homes, Schools, and Child Care Facilities—From the Presbytery of Grace.

The Presbytery of Grace respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve the following recommendations, calling for an end to corporal punishment by parents and caretakers in homes, schools, and child-care facilities:

1. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
   a. encourages its members to adopt discipline methods [at home, in schools, pediatric facilities, and institutions (e.g. hospitals, orphanages, clinics, state institutions) and child-care facilities] that do not include corporal punishment of [their] children, and
   b. encourages congregations to offer opportunities for dialogue and education on effective discipline of children.

Rationale for Recommendation 1.

Corporal punishment models aggressive behavior as a solution to conflict. Numerous research studies have associated corporal punishment with increased aggression in children and adults, increased substance abuse, increased risk of crime and violence, low self-esteem, and chronic depression. It is difficult to imagine Jesus of Nazareth condoning any action that is intended to hurt children physically or psychologically. Time outs and deprivation of privileges are as effective as corporal punishment in stopping undesirable behavior. The effectiveness of corporal punishment decreases with subsequent use and therefore leads caretakers to hit children more severely. Children must eventually develop their own conscience and self-discipline, which are fostered by a home environment of love, respect, and trust.

2. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) calls upon all states to enact [licensing] laws prohibiting corporal punishment in schools and day and residential childcare facilities.

Rationale for Recommendation 2.

Schools and child-care facilities are the only institutions in America in which striking another person for the purpose of causing physical pain is legal. Corporal punishment is humiliating and degrading to children and sometimes causes physical injury. It is difficult to imagine Jesus of Nazareth condoning any action that is intended to hurt children physically or psychologically. Corporal punishment sends a message that hitting smaller and weaker people is acceptable. Corporal punishment is used most often on poor children, minorities, children with disabilities, and boys. There are effective alternatives to corporal punishment that teach children to be self-disciplined rather than to submit out of fear. Schools and child-care centers should inspire children to enjoy learning and school and child-care personnel should be able to encourage positive behavior without hitting children.

Overall Rationale

The 218th General Assembly (2008) of the PC(USA) approved the Social Creed for the 21st Century. It states “we honor the dignity of every person” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 924) and calls on church members to work for the full rights of all people.

The Social Creed, while focusing on a broad array of social injustices, nevertheless affirms the fact that we are all created in the divine image and because of this alone, we are individuals of worth. It concludes, “we …commit ourselves to a culture of peace and freedom that embraces non-violence, nurtures character. …” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 925).

Consistent with the goals and statements in the Social Creed, the recommendations calling for an end to the practice of corporal punishment likewise:

- Asserts the basic dignity of every human being as created in the image of God, including and especially those most vulnerable, the world’s children.

- Declares and rejects the use of any form of physical violence, for whatever reason, toward children and adolescents.

- Affirms the principle of seeking nonviolent solutions to human problems, be they interpersonal, behavioral, or social.
• Acknowledges the social sin of our participation in a system that not only condones, but encourages such violence toward children and that legally protects adults who choose to spank, slap, or hit their own children or the children of others.

• Declares the use of corporal punishment (CP) on children (e.g., spanking, slapping, hitting), both in the schools and homes, as outdated and ineffective, as evidenced by decades of psychological research.

The impetus for this resolution is driven by the spirit of compassion that is our gift from the Creator. It is also driven by the desire to change a sinful system that condones different standards of behavior based solely upon the age of the victim of physical hitting, slapping, or spanking. Further, to note:

• Corporal punishment was once common in prisons and the military—but it is now banned. It is also now outlawed in most daycare centers and foster-parent homes.

• There is a large body of research that indicates spanking is, in fact, associated with a number of negative, unintended consequences on children (e.g., increased aggression, depression, and anxiety) and adults (mental health problems, partner violence, and child abuse).

• The practice does not promote close, loving family relationships.

• Corporal punishment in homes and schools contributes to the intergenerational transmission of violence in our society.

• Let us join The United Methodist Church in voicing our objection to this practice. They passed two resolutions against the practice in 2004.

Ending corporal punishment of children in our world is not only the sensible and humane thing to do, it is the faithful thing to do.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-05—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-05 calls for an end to corporal punishment in homes, schools and child care facilities.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-05 be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

   “b. encourages congregations to offer opportunities for dialogue and education on effective discipline of children.

The ACSWP concurs that corporal punishment of children is a serious and persisting issue warranting attention. The language change increases the inclusivity of child-related agencies, facilities, and institutions to be covered under this overture. The addition of the bibliographic citations provides documentation to support the rationale for the recommendations but as importantly provides sources for additional study of this issue. This listing is not intended to be exhaustive, and is meant to complement theological understandings of childhood (such as Osmer, Anderson/Johnson, Capps, Pitkin, Stine, Widmer) and legal statements such as the “Convention on the Rights of the Child,” (endorsed by past General Assemblies).

On Instructing MRTI to Report to GAMC on the Corporate Practices of Publicly Traded Corporations That Operate For-Profit Prisons—From the Presbytery of Hudson River.

The Presbytery of Hudson River respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to

[1.][i][ii]Instruct the General Assembly Mission Council, through the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), to have MRTI report to the General Assembly Mission Council on the feasibility of affecting the corporate practices of Corrections Corporation of America (CCA), the GEO Group, and any other publicly traded corporation that directly manages or operates for-profit prisons and/or detention centers in light of the General Assembly’s 2003 Resolution Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Prisons. The findings of the MRTI report to the GAMC may include recommendations to the 221st General Assembly (2014) regarding the potential placement of specific corporations on the list of proscribed investments to be honored by Presbyterian agencies. The proscription list already includes areas of concern such as tobacco, alcohol, and gambling. While PC(USA) funds are not currently invested in these companies, we encourage the General Assembly Mission Council to prevent future investment and, as it deems appropriate, encourage individual Presbyterians and congregations to divest holdings in the said companies.

[2. Encourage education within local congregations about for-profit prisons and the local and national implications of investment in these corporations, using existing materials and networks including, but not limited to, the General Assembly’s 2003 Resolution Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Prisons.]

Rationale

The United States has more people in prison than any other country, according to a 2008 Pew Charitable Trust study (One in 100: Behind Bars in America 2008). Not only is the absolute number the highest in the world, but the rate of incarceration (inmates per 100,000 people) also is the highest. The International Centre for Prison Studies at King’s College, London, calculates the U.S. incarceration rate at 743 per 100,000. (The rate in Russia is 568. In Canada, it is 117.)
The growth in the prison population over the last several decades is equally significant. According to the Statistical Abstract of the U.S. (2011), the total number of incarcerated persons grew 359 percent from 1980 to 2008.

While the overall prison population has grown dramatically, the growth of inmates being detained in private, for-profit prisons has grown much faster. Between 1990 and 2009, the total number of inmates in federal and state prisons doubled, while private prisons saw their business explode—growing seventeen times larger in those same twenty years.

The CCA and the GEO Group are the two largest (and the only two publicly traded) private prison companies in the U.S., operating and/or owning, respectively, 111 and 116 correctional, detention, and/or residential treatment facilities. In 2010, CCA earned nearly $1.7 billion; the GEO Group, $1.3 billion.

Proponents of private prisons may claim that these institutions fill a need in society by providing lower-cost incarceration of prisoners while bringing economic benefits to local communities. Proponents may also contend that private prisons offer greater efficiency, better services, and more innovative correctional practices.

Studies have shown, however, that private prison employees are lower paid and less experienced than their public counterparts, which leads to private prisons being more violent, experiencing more sexual abuse, and having more escapes than public prisons (from “Growth and Quality of U.S. Private Prisons,” a 2001 study for the Federal Bureau of Prisons). Furthermore, private prisons play a key role in lobbying for harsher and longer sentencing and for tougher policies on the detention of immigrants (“Unholy Alliance,” a paper by the PICO National Network and Public Campaign, 2011).

In a January 30, 2012, article in The New Yorker, writer Adam Gopnik confirms that a growing number of American prisons are now contracted out as for-profit businesses to for-profit companies. He writes,

The companies are paid by the state, and their profit depends on spending as little as possible on the prisoners and the prisons. It’s hard to imagine any greater disconnect between public good and private profit: the interest of private prisons lies not in the obvious social good of having the minimum necessary number of inmates but in having as many as possible, housed as cheaply as possible. No more chilling document exists in recent American life than the 2005 annual report of the biggest of these firms, the Corrections Corporation of America. Here the company (which spends millions lobbying legislators) is obliged to caution its investors about the risk that somehow, somewhere, someone might turn off the spigot of convicted men:

Our growth is generally dependent upon our ability to obtain new contracts to develop and manage new correctional and detention facilities … The demand for our facilities and services could be adversely affected by the relaxation of enforcement efforts, leniency in conviction and sentencing practices or through the decriminalization of certain activities that are currently proscribed by our criminal laws. For instance, any changes with respect to drugs and controlled substances or illegal immigration could affect the number of persons arrested, convicted, and sentenced, thereby potentially reducing demand for correctional facilities to house them.

Not surprisingly, a number of religious denominations have spoken out against the private prison industry. In November 2000, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops questioned “whether private, for-profit corporations can effectively run prisons.” The profit motive may lead to reduced efforts to change behaviors, treat substance abuse, and offer skills necessary for reintegration into the community.

In the same year, the General Convention of the Episcopal Church called “for a moratorium on further prison construction and the use of private prisons. …”

Also in 2000, in response to Overture 99-35, On Opposing the Privatization of Prisons—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta, the MRTI reviewed the investments of the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, and found no investments in the prison industry.

Declaring “private prisons are not an economic but a deep religious and ethical issue,” and affirming that “the ultimate goal of the criminal justice system, according to the policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), is ‘restorative justice,’ the 215th General Assembly (2003) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved the “Resolution on Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Private Prisons,” developed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. One paragraph in the Resolution’s rationale follows:

A major factor in the decision as to whether to release someone from prison is the reports on their behavior filed by the correctional employees who work with them. In at least one of the major for-profit private prison corporations, correctional employees receive stock in the corporation as their pension plan. It is therefore in those employees’ self-interest to make sure that the for-profit private prison corporation is as profitable as possible. If the corporation is having trouble filling its “beds” (a common situation in the for-profit private prison industry), that employee is in a serious conflict of interest position when being asked whether or not a prisoner should be paroled. While we hope and expect that many if not most correctional employees would act honorably under these circumstances, the very dynamic places them as well as the prisoner in an intolerable situation. (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 444)

The conditions that brought about that resolution in 2003 have not improved.

The United Methodist Church also has questioned the role of the private prison in the United States. Resolution 4058, Privatization, first adopted in 2004, acknowledges “privatized prisons, nursing homes, hospitals, welfare programs and other social services have sometimes been less dedicated to service and rehabilitation than to cutting service and increasing profits. … The public must be vigilant to regulate and control any privatization of public resources.” The resolution also calls upon selected agencies of the church “to lead an effort to discern effects to society of privatization of services in the United States and globally and join in opposing detrimental privatization.”

In 2008, the UMC General Conference adopted Resolution 3281, Welcoming the Migrant to the US, which calls for the “elimination of privately-operated detention centers. …”

In 2011, members of the United Methodist Interagency Task Force on Immigration (created in 2004) approached the General Board of Pension and Health Benefits (GBPHB) with concerns about two private prison companies in the general board’s investment portfolio: Corrections Corporation of America (CCA) and the GEO Group, Inc., with concerns that CCA and the GEO Group have been accused of human rights abuses of young people, immigrants, and people of color.

Finally, in January 2012, the board of directors of the GBPHB of The United Methodist Church announced the decision by the board’s Fiduciary and Executive Committees of the addition of an investment screen that would prohibit investment in companies that derive more than 10 percent of revenue from the management and operation of prison facilities. The GBPHB Statement of Administrative Investment Policy has been amended to include this screen.

Context and History:

Biblical and Theological

From “Resolution on Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Private Prisons,” 2003, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy: In Luke’s gospel, Jesus voiced his concern for those who are incarcerated by reading Isaiah 61:1 in the synagogue one Sabbath and declared that “This passage has come true today, as you heard it being read” (Lk. 4:21, TEV). The text that he read included the statement: “The Spirit of the Lord is upon me. … He has sent me to proclaim release to the captives” (Lk. 4:18, TEV). In his Sermon on the Mount, Jesus rejected vengeance as the primary goal of the justice system and abolished the law of an “eye for an eye.” “You have heard that it was said, ‘an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.’ But now I tell you: do not take revenge on someone who wrongs you” (Mt. 5:38–39, TEV). In Matthew 25:31–46 he challenged his followers to visit those in prison. “I was sick and you took care of me, in prison and you visited me … I tell you, whenever you did this for one of the least important of these followers of mine, you did it for me” (Mt. 25:36, 40; TEV). He gave specific instructions regarding our responsibility to visit prisoners and to be concerned for their welfare.

Jesus announced that the “kingdom of God was near.” This kingdom would mean a transformation of all of life. Jesus himself was arrested at night, tried and convicted a short time later of blasphemy, and handed over in chains early the next morning to Pontius Pilate. The charge against him was changed from blasphemy to the King of the Jews, a political accusation on which Pilate based his decision to have Jesus crucified. Clearly his arrest, conviction, and sentencing were products of a corrupt justice system. We believe that we as Christians are called to care for individual prisoners by personal contacts, but that we are also called to examine and to change the current system of for-profit private prisons as part of our responsibility to love our neighbor.

We affirm that those who are behind prison walls are persons who have been created in God’s image and are fellow children of God. They are neighbors for whom Christ died and whom we are called to love. We are all sinners in need of forgiveness and a Savior. As we gratefully experience the grace and forgiveness of God in our own lives, we are convinced that we can develop a society that moves toward both the Old Testament vision of Shalom and Jesus’ teaching about the Kingdom of God. Our vision is of a society where there is education and health care for all, drug treatment for all who require it, jobs for all who need them, and a sense of belonging to a community. With this vision of community, we can begin to develop a criminal justice system that is truly just and not simply another way to make money.

We reaffirm the 1910 and 1915 statements of prior General Assemblies, for we believe that Christ calls us to care for our neighbors who are in prison and never to abandon them. We affirm our solidarity with our sisters and brothers, fellow chilchildren of God, who are behind prison walls. For we have all been created in God’s image, but we have all fallen short of the glory of God. We are all sinners in need of a Savior. We can all be counted among those for whom Christ has died.

As we gratefully receive God’s grace in our own lives, we proclaim our understanding that no person is beyond the reach of God’s redeeming love in Christ. Further, we acknowledge that Jesus has called us to minister to each other in his name. We are to be concerned for all the oppressed and marginalized in our society. As followers of Christ who understand ourselves to be fellow sinners, we recognize our responsibility for the care, custody, and rehabilitation of those incarcerated rather than the profit of big business.

From “Connecting to the Creed, A Guide for Understanding and Applying the Centennial Social Creed,” 2008, adopted by ecumenical representatives of thirty-five Protestant and Orthodox Church Communions:

You have heard that it was said, ‘An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.’ But I say to you, do not resist an evildoer. But if anyone strikes you on the right cheek, turn the other also; and if anyone wants to sue you and take your coat, give your cloak as well; and if anyone forces you to go one mile, go also the second mile. Give to everyone who begs from you, and do not refuse anyone who wants to borrow from you.” (Mt 5:38-42) Jesus’ words in the Sermon on the Mount may well refer to a proactive “third way” (Walter Wink) between violent fight and fearful flight, an approach that reveals and builds on a shared humanity. However interpreted, these words point to an alternative to retribution that can be called “restorative justice.”

Restorative justice addresses the humanity of both victim and perpetrator. It also seeks to restore the social fabric by acknowledging the full costs of a given crime and offering possibilities for transformation, through serious community service, fines, public repentance, restitution, and forgiveness as well as incarceration or probation. Naturally, the church seeks to reduce, if not eliminate, all forms of crime, but we resist demonizing even violent individuals when rates and patterns of criminal behavior can be predicted—and thus are partly preventable.

Of the more than 2 million U.S. citizens in prison at any given time, more than half are persons of color. States vary in their incarceration rates, from more than 1 in 100 to less than 1 in 500, but in all cases prisoners are disproportionately poor and poorly educated, from divided families, mentally ill and homeless. Rural communities, poor themselves, vie to attract prisons and count prisoners as part of their communities to increase their share of state and federal benefits, while prisoners are deprived of voting and other civil rights, often effectively for life. A large number of prisoners are imprisoned under mandatory sentences, sometimes under grossly inequitable provisions of the “war on drugs.” Most prisons themselves do not offer drug rehabilitation, educational or training programs, feeding a high recidivism rate based in part on lack of opportunity and discrimination on the “outside.” In terms of violence, prisons themselves intensify the brutality and hopelessness of harsh neighborhoods: prison rape and AIDS rates are high, gangs and corruption become ways of coping with overcrowding and enormous social tensions. All know the cliché that prisons are training grounds for crime rather than places for rehabilitation or repentance. Some call the system “racialized” for its disproportionate involvement of black and Hispanic young men (more than 25 percent of whom have been in prison or on probation). Despite all this, prison ministries and volunteer visitors do vital work within a broken system. The following policies follow from a restorative justice commitment:

1. Restitution and other alternatives to incarceration.
2. Review of “life terms” for long-serving prisoners.
3. Prison reform to end overcrowding, rape, other violence, and drug availability.
4. Rehabilitation, education, and addiction treatment programs to cut recidivism.
5. Programs to help maintain family connections.
6. End to for-profit prisons as improper commercialization of the justice system.
7. Decriminalization of low-level marijuana offenses, as in Massachusetts.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

“[1.] [h][I]Instruct Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to report to the General Assembly Mission Council on the corporate practices of Corrections Corporation of America (CCA), the GEO Group, and any other publicly traded corporation that directly manages or operates for-profit prisons and/or detention centers. (While PC(USA) funds are not currently invested in these companies, we encourage the General Assembly Mission Council to prevent future investment and, as it deems appropriate, encourage individual Presbyterians and congregations to divest of holdings in the said companies.)

“[2. Direct MRTI to investigate the investments and holdings of Wells Fargo & Co. to ascertain the extent of holdings in Corrections Corporations of America and the GEO Group and to use MRTI’s customary corporate engagement process to effect change in such investments by Wells Fargo so that they no longer invest in these for-profit prisons. If Wells Fargo does not comply, MRTI should report back to the General Assembly regarding our investments in Wells Fargo so that the assembly can decide whether to continue investing in Wells Fargo.]

Rationale

The incarceration growth rate in private prisons in the U.S. is dramatic. Incarceration has not only become a way to create business opportunities and to increase profits for companies, but it has also become a way of creating economic development in under-developed areas. In some areas of the country where industry has departed, prisons have been built and filled in the void. They are now considered development projects and seen as way of undergirding the economy and providing jobs.

Ironically, the increase in the prison population has been used politically to demonstrate a strong need for stability, law, and order in communities. The ability to create a safe and stable environment has been a selling point for expanding prisons, which then need to be filled with more and more people for more and more profits.

This movement to for-profit prisons as a way of social control, and societal investment in them, has diminished resources that could be directed to education, crime prevention, and offender rehabilitation. (Even for-profit prisons are not built for rehabilitation.)

For-profit prisons have become a way of warehousing people; they produce high profits for a few and provide low-wage jobs for many, thus tearing apart the fabric of the very communities that they are presumably helping. A side effect is that they prevent other better-paying jobs from coming to the community.

The ACREC asks the General Assembly to direct MRTI (Mission Responsibility Through Investment) to investigate the investments and holdings of Wells Fargo & Co. to ascertain the extent of their holdings in Corrections Corporations of America and the GEO Group, and report back to the General Assembly. The ACREC asks the General Assembly to direct MRTI to use its customary corporate engagement process to effect change in such investments by Wells Fargo, in accordance with socially responsible investing.

“The protesters called Wells Fargo hypocritical for targeting Latinos and immigrant customers while also giving money to causes that immigrants largely oppose, such as private immigrant detention centers and bills that make it difficult to migrate legally to the United States. Wells Fargo uses its mutual funds to invest in two of the largest for-profit detention companies: Corrections Corporation of America and the GEO Group, both of which spend millions each year lobbying for stricter immigration enforcement” (Immigrants To Wells Fargo: Stop Investing In For-Profit Detention – by Elise Foley, Huffington Post 10/17/11).

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Item 11-06 directs the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to compile information on the corporate practices of publically traded corporations that operate for-profit prisons and report these findings to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). Secondly, the overture requests the GAMC to “prevent future investment” in these corporations and possibly encourage individuals and congregations to divest of shares in these corporations.

The ACSWP advises that Item 11-06 be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

[The two parts of the overture be crafted as sequential activities; the second action based upon the findings of the report to GAMC. Re-wording of the overture would be:]

“[The Presbytery of Hudson River respectfully overtures [s] the 220th General Assembly (2012) [s] to instruct[s] the General Assembly Mission Council, through the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), to [have MRTI report [to the General Assembly Mission Council] on [the feasibility of affecting] the corporate practices of Corrections Corporation of America (CCA), the GEO Group and any other publically traded corporation that directly manages or operates for-profit prisons and/or detention centers [in light of the General Assembly’s 2003 ResolutionCalling for the Abolition of For-Profit Prisons] [While PC(USA) funds are not currently invested in these companies, we encourage the General Assembly Mission Council to prevent future investment and as it deems appropriate, encourage individual Presbyterians and congregations to divest of holdings in the said companies.] [The findings of the MRTI report to the GAMC may include recommendations to the 221st General Assembly (2014) regarding the potential placement of specific corporations on the list of proscribed investments to be honored by Presbyterian agencies.”

Rationale

The Presbytery of Hudson River carefully describes the primary issues of policy and practice that have led church bodies and restorative justice organizations to oppose for-profit prisons. The presbytery further appreciates that decisions to proscribe or limit investments are not made without some engagement and analysis of salient factors, even when policy is quite clear.

While some data about corporate practices and organizational behavior are available and referenced in the overture rationale and in the 2003 Resolution Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Private Prisons (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/resolution-calling-abortion-profit-private-prison/), a focused survey or report would provide more detailed descriptions of organizational behavioral that explain how profit is achieved and spent and comparative impacts on employees and persons incarcerated in for-profit prisons. Based upon such a review of corporate practices identified in existing policy, the 221st General Assembly (2014) would have in hand recent summary data, plus recommendations from MRTI upon which to make decisions regarding adding these corporations to the current list of corporations excluded from PC(USA) agencies’ investments.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-06

Comment on Item 11-06—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

This overture instructs Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to report to the General Assembly Mission Council on the corporate practices of Corrections Corporation of America (CCA), the GEO Group, and any other publicly traded corporation that directly manages or operates for-profit prisons and/or detention centers. While acknowledging that PC(USA) funds are not currently invested in CCA or GEO Group, the overture encourages the General Assembly Mission Council to prevent future investment and, as it deems appropriate, encourage individual Presbyterians and congregations to divest of holdings in the said companies.

The MRTI is capable of producing the requested report. However, with no stock owned in either of the two companies, the full range of corporate engagement tools will not be available to the committee. In addition, as the General Assembly in 2003 determined that for-profit prisons should be abolished, corporate involvement in this enterprise seems to compare more closely with tobacco, alcohol, and gambling companies where investments are avoided due to the nature of the product or service. Thus, the issue to be addressed may be more accurately whether the General Assembly desires to clarify its 2003 position by proscribing investment in publicly traded for-profit prison companies until such time as legislative action prohibits the practice.

[The assembly approved Item 11-07 with amendment. See pp. 28, 31–32.]

On Support of the United States Environmental Protection Agency—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

2. Direct the [Executive Director] [Stated Clerk and appropriate offices] of the General Assembly Mission Council to support the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) by affirming the agency’s [authority to take action] [mandates and goals] to protect public health and the environment and by advocating for adequate funding for EPA.

3. Recognize the PC(USA)’s support of landmark environmental legislation such as the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act (whose 40th anniversary is in 2012), the Safe Drinking Water Act, the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), and the Endangered Species Act, which affirm the national mission of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).
[4. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) and the Office of Public Witness to urge Congress to restore the EPA’s full oversight authority under the Clean Water and Safe Drinking Water Acts (which are currently restricted) as they relate to the waters of the United States.

[5. Direct the Office of Environmental Ministries of the General Assembly Mission Council to identify resources addressing legal and environmental issues with regard to extraction of natural gas in order to educate Presbyterians and protect the environments in which they live, worship, farm and locate their camps and conference centers.]

Rationale

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) was established on December 2, 1970, during the administration of President Richard Nixon. Recently, funding for the EPA has been cut and amendments to various regulations have been proposed to restrict the EPA’s authority to carry out its mandates. (See EPA news release 2/14/11 and The Hill Newspaper 4/07/11.)

As Christians we are charged with “… lov[ing] your neighbor as yourself” (Mk. 12:31). A tangible way to do this is to prevent sickness by reducing pollution in the air. Using authority and powers given to it by Congress and the 1990 Clean Air Amendments, the EPA predicted, in a 1999 report using statistical analysis that in 2010 it would help prevent approximately:

- 23,000 premature deaths,
- 67,000 incidences of chronic and acute bronchitis,
- 21,000 cases of heart disease,
- 91,000 occurrences of shortness of breath,
- avert 1,700,000 incidences of asthma attacks and aggravation of chronic asthma,
- 4,100,000 lost work days,
- 31,000,000 days of restricted activity due to air pollution related illness,
- 22,000 respiratory-related hospital admissions,
- 42,000 cardiovascular hospital admissions,
- 4,800 emergency room visits for asthma.

Historical References

We in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have a long history of supporting actions that would protect the environment.

In 1954, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America stated:

… We call upon the Christian conscience to recognize that our stewardship of the earth and water involves both a land-use program which recognizes the interdependence of soil, water, and man and the development of a responsible public policy which will resist the exploitation of land, water, and other natural resources, including forests, for selfish purposes and maintain intelligent conservation for the sustenance of all living creatures through future generations (Minutes, PCUSA, 1954, Part I, p. 198).

1967 The Confession of 1967 stresses the justice of sharing resources and the interdependence of resources and living creatures.

1975 A recommendation was made to the 187th General Assembly (1975) to “affirm advocacy of the protection of wildlife areas and parklands” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1975, Part I, p.59).

1980 The 192nd General Assembly voted to (1) develop educational resources on the adverse impact that careless technology has on the environment and health of the unborn; (2) instruct the Board of Investment Committee to review corporate responsibility regarding manufacture of dioxins. (Minutes, PCUS, 1980, Part I, p. 56).

1983  The 195th General Assembly (1983) urged the “session of each congregation in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to consider making a ‘Commitment to Peacemaking’ that included ‘making peace with the earth—involve the congregation in efforts to protect and restore the environment’ (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 438).

1984  The 196th General Assembly (1984) called upon “the Congress of the United States to … reduce the emissions of sulfur dioxide and the oxides of nitrogen to a level [that will] protect the … most sensitive environment” and stated that “human stewardship is not a dominion of mastery” and called us to exercise “respect for the integrity of natural systems and for the limits that nature places on economic growth and material consumption” (Minutes, 1984, Part I, p. 348–49).

1987  The 199th General Assembly (1987) voted to urge the United States government to assure acceptable disposal sites for high-level nuclear waste. It also voted to urge each presbytery and local church to encourage and support alternatives to pesticides and support the victims of pesticide poisoning (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 796).

1988  The Environmental Justice Office was created to study past environmental policies of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the Presbyterian Church in the United States to create a combined report of environmental concerns for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Environmental Justice Office is a ministry of the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), lodged in the National Ministries Division, Social Justice Program Area, and is now actively involved in creation care and environmental justice issues.

1990  The 202nd General Assembly (1990) passed “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” affirming “creation cries out in this time of ecological crises,” calling the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to respond to this cry and engage in an effort to make the 1990s the “turnaround decade,” providing the foundation for the work of the Environmental Justice Office. Also, the 202nd General Assembly calls attention to the problem of global warming and encourages the United States government to take steps toward incorporating environmental damage and depletion into “full-cost pricing” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp.646–70).

The Affirmation of Faith from that General Assembly noted that “Restoring Creation is God’s own work in our time” and that “The love of neighbor, particularly ‘the least’ of Christ’s brothers and sisters, requires action to stop the poisoning, the erosion, the wastefulness that are causing suffering and death. The future of our children and their children and all who come after is at stake. In this critical time of transition to a new era, God’s new doing may be discerned as a call to earthkeeping, to justice, and to community” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 647).

1992  The 204th General Assembly (1992) directed all future General Assemblies to “print all official reports on recycled and recyclable paper” and directed “all related bodies … to use recycled and recyclable paper” for all reports and publications (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 846).

1993  The 205th General Assembly (1993) reaffirmed the “Call to Restore Creation,” received the document “World Scientists’ Warning to Humanity” as a prophetic word to the church, urged President Clinton to follow new policies from the Earth Summit, and directed the Social Justice and Peacemaking Unit to advocate for policies that will reduce carbon dioxide emissions (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp. 896–97).

1994  The 206th General Assembly (1994), within the context of its “Resolution on the United States in Its Asia-Pacific Relations,” listed five basic principles by which past General Assemblies have been guided related to international affairs. One of the principles, and the resolution that follow it, relates specifically to the environment. “The General Assembly has advocated new understanding of the relationship among human life, institutions, and the total stewardship and care for the planet, which is the common heritage of all peoples. …”(Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 310)

1998  The 210th General Assembly (1998) called upon the United States to “ratify the protocol negotiated in Kyoto” and urged “Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations and institutions to pursue energy efficiency and conservation in their buildings and property” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 740).

1999  The 211th General Assembly (1999) again called upon the U.S. to ratify the Kyoto Protocol, urged the United States to go beyond Kyoto targets for carbon dioxide emission reductions, directed the Presbyterian Center in Louisville and all other properties of the General Assembly to minimize fossil fuel energy (along with urging local congregations to do the same), and directed the General Assembly to promote education regarding global warming and other environmental concerns (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 669–70).
2001 The 213th General Assembly (2001) called to issue and disseminate the Call to Halt Mass Extinction. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) calls Presbyterians, other citizens, governments, and societal institutions to face the severity of this threat and to take steps to prevent mass extinction and preserve the biodiversity essential to the flourishing of life. (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 473–75)

2003 The 215th General Assembly (2003) called on “the United States government to join the world effort to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and to develop and enact a national emergency response, underwritten by law, with adequate financial support, and economic enforcement mechanisms, to be fully functioning by 2005, with targeted reductions by that time” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 617).

2006 The 217th General Assembly (2006) asked its members to “make a bold witness by aspiring to … carbon neutral [lives].” It was noted that “without significant changes in public policy and corporate behavior to complement actions of personal discipleship, massive and irreversible climate changes will only accelerate over the next century” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 896; see also Memorandum; Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy Dec 4, 2006).

2010 The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved an overture from the Presbytery of Charlotte entitled “On Lifting Up the ‘Call to Restore’ Creation,” reaffirming the Call to Restore Creation from the 1990 policy “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice”; commended churches that are working to care for God’s earth; and encouraged churches, members, and institutions to “adopt institutional and individual lifestyles reflecting greater stewardship of resources, particularly in energy consumption.” The overture was amended to include the affirmation that “concern for God’s creation is, for every Christian, an essential way of living faithfully”; to affirm that the best available science should shape the direction of environmental programming and policy; and that access to potable water is a human right (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 331–32 of the printed version, pp. 805–806 of the electronic version).

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Item 11-07 from the Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to (1) recognize prior statements of the PC(USA) reflecting that protection of the environment is an essential part of the Christian faith; and (2) to direct the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) to support the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) by affirming its authority to take action that will protect public health and the environment and by advocating for adequate funding to assure the EPA’s ability to take action.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises Item 11-07 be approved as amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“2. Direct the [Executive Director] [Stated Clerk and appropriate offices] of the General Assembly Mission Council to support the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) by affirming the agency’s authority to take action that will protect public health and the environment and by advocating for adequate funding to assure the EPA’s ability to take action.

“[3. Recognize the PC(USA)’s support of landmark environmental legislation such as the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act (whose 40th anniversary is in 2012), the Safe Drinking Water Act, the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), and the Endangered Species Act, which affirm the national mission of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).]

“[4. Direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) and the Office of Public Witness to urge Congress to restore the EPA’s full oversight authority under the Clean Water and Safe Drinking Water Acts (which are currently restricted) as they relate to the waters of the United States.

Providing general support for the work of the EPA and its authority to take action to protect public health and the environment clearly follows from the cited PC(USA) policies. The reaffirmation of support for specific legislation makes explicit areas of environment stewardship and authority of particular import to both the work of the EPA (e.g., clean air, clean water and endangered species), and PC(USA) policies.

Because waters of the U.S.A. often flow across state boundaries, it is especially important that authority for the protection of clean water is placed into a federal regulatory agency. Unfortunately, in the area of clean water, the EPA’s authority to take action to protect public health has been restricted by the 2005 energy bill. Critical to successful stewardship is the restoration of the authority of EPA to monitor activities that might generate water pollution.

The fifth recommendation adds the important role of PC(USA) equipping congregations with information useful to their mission of stewardship of the local environments of churches, camps and conference centers and their communities.

Comment on Item 11-07—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The Office of Public Witness supports the authority of the EPA, both regulatory and budgetary, when relevant legislation is under consideration in Congress, based on General Assembly statements approved in 1990, 1999, 2001, 2002, 2004, 2006, and 2008. These policy statements call for responsible care of God’s creation, with varying levels of specificity. At the federal level, a strong EPA is by far the most likely authority that responds to such policy statements as those mentioned above, which include protecting air, water, and land; reducing toxic pollution from power plants; protecting endangered species; putting an end to destructive extraction techniques such as Mountaintop Removal coal mining; and ensuring the U.S. shoulders its responsibility to the rest of the world with regard to global climate change.

In order to begin to restore our communities, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

2. Direct that a study be prepared and shared with the church for action at every level [showing] [investigating whether there is] the connection between ‘the war on drugs’ and incarceration as a way of social management.

3. Develop a working group to work with our ecumenical partners in creating coalitions or networks to support strategies to aid reentry of former prisoners into our communities.

4. Collaborate with mid councils and churches working with prisoners reentering our communities and gather models that can be shared across the church.

5. Direct the Office of Public Witness to advocate to Congress for fair application of existing laws and [the reduction or elimination of penalties for] [reasonable sentencing of] drug possession and nonviolent offenses that [clearly] have a disproportionate and adverse impact on the racial ethnic community[,] [and] families[,] and individuals.

6. Direct that the Office of Theology, Worship and Education to develop a [web page and] paper on God and compassion for prisoners and ex-offenders that addresses our role in helping implement God’s community as a place that is open for all and embraces all with forgiveness and love. [The web page and paper should list recommended resources from Presbyterians engaged in such ministry to be available to the whole church.]

“One can indeed come out of prison to reign, even though born poor in the kingdom” (Eccl. 4:14).

How do we live into this? What does it mean for us to be a community of forgiveness in the context of the industrial prison system? Today, when it is a large for-profit industry, how do we show compassion to hundreds of thousands of persons who have been caught up in the criminal justice system and mass incarceration?

African Americans, Native Americans, and Latino Americans have been caught up in the criminal justice system and released into our communities having lost access to health services, employment, education, and housing. Many end up on the streets or minimally employed or returned to prison.

We in the United States have reason to be hopeful about the state of racism in this nation. We are increasingly diverse and the leadership of our country is beginning to represent that diversity.

Our church demonstrates how much racism has evolved and yet remains in many ways in place. With leadership of color in the church, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) still remains 94 percent white.

African American and Latino men are disproportionately part of the prison population. Immigration is a continuing vehicle for cultural racism.

The more things change, the more they remain the same.

In each generation new tactics have been used for achieving the same goals—goals shared by the Founding Fathers.

Denying African Americans citizenship deemed essential to the formation of the original union. Hundreds of years later, America is still not an egalitarian democracy. Michelle Alexander, author of The New Jim Crow, Incarceration in the Age of Colorblindness, argues that the “war on drugs” has become a new Jim Crow, i.e. a permanent way of trapping African Americans as non-citizens.

Discussions, theories, arguments, and rationalizations have been used in support of racial exclusion. Discrimination in its many forms have evolved and changed but essentially they have remained the same.

The last legal obstacles to full citizenship for African Americans were eliminated with the 1965 Voting Rights Act. When you are a citizen, that implies that you have the right to full participation in society, including voting. This right is not available for people who have been convicted of felonies. Laws criminalizing drug use and sentencing patterns emerged with a disproportionate impact on African Americans. Almost 25 percent of all African American men in their thirties have been in prison by 2003. More than 13 percent are ineligible to vote due to felony convictions.

Some would argue that those who commit a crime need to be punished. Others argue that rehabilitation would be more effective. The U.S. judicial system tends toward punitive measures rather than restorative and often sentencing varies based on the ways in which people of different races are charged. For example, crimes for minor drug offenses are treated differently by law enforcement and the courts, depending on the racial ethnic profile of the offender. Justice has to be blind and impartial by race and gender.

The article “A History of Racism in the United States,” from the Racism Study Pack of The Thoughtful Christian shares this insight:

“The criminal justice system impacts the way African Americans in particular experience citizenship. Convicted felons who have served their time in prison and completed probation remain ineligible to vote in most states. Only Maine and Vermont allow prison inmates the right to vote. Thirty-five states prohibit felons on parole from voting. Several states do not allow felons who have completed their sentences to vote, while others require felons go through a waiting time and a process before being able to vote again. Given the disproportionate numbers of African American and Latino men in prison, and the disproportionate sentences given to people of color, we might say the result of these laws is the restriction of citizenship based on race.”

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-08

Comment on Item 11-08—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Recommendations 3 and 4 direct that a working group be formed to work ecumenically, and that a collaborative effort with mid councils be formed.
In response to the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010), the Presbyterian Health, Education & Welfare Association (PHEWA) convened a Criminal Justice Consultation at Stony Point Center, February 17–19, 2012. Per this General Assembly action, those attending this consultation “considered and proposed the creation of a Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA) network on criminal justice for education and advocacy ministries.” An interim leadership team (the Reverend Dr. Donald Shriver [New York], the Reverend Steve Werth [Pennsylvania], the Reverend Deborah Haffner Hubbard [Arizona], Elder Gail Tyree [Tennessee], and the Reverend Annie Rawlings [New York]) was selected from consultation participants for the new Presbyterian Criminal Justice Network (PCJN) and on March 7, 2012, the PHEWA Board of Directors voted to accept the PCJN as a network of PHEWA.

Since its establishment, PCJN has developed ecumenical partnerships (including the United Methodist Church, the Society of Friends, and the United Church of Christ) to address a range of criminal justice issues including restorative justice, reentry strategies, and mandatory sentencing. Its first action as a network involved direct communication with the governors of forty-eight states with a faith response to prison privatization. The PCJN has already begun resourcing local congregations engaged in or wishing to engage in criminal justice ministries.

Recommendation 5 directs the Office on Public Witness to advocate for fair application of existing laws and the reduction or elimination of penalties for drug possession and nonviolent offenses. The GAMC, through OPW, advocates for restorative justice policies, including the elimination of mandatory minimum sentences, when relevant legislation is under consideration in Congress, based primarily on a General Assembly statement, “Resolution on Restorative Justice,” from 2002.

Recommendation 6 directs the Theology Worship and Education office to develop a paper on God and compassion for prisoners and ex-offenders. However, the GAMC suggests that rather than producing a “paper on God and compassion for prisoners and ex-offenders,” that a web page be created to list recommended resources from Presbyterians engaged in such ministry to be available to the whole church.

World of Hurt, Word of Life: “Renewing God’s Communion in the Work of Economic Reconstruction”—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), grounded in its communion with the Giver of all good gifts and with one another, and acting in response to severe economic and moral disorder, do the following:

1. Approve the following framework of principles and actions for faithful response to the economic crisis, including a. a call to repentance and renewal, corresponding to the depth and danger of the economic crisis;
   b. a theological and ethical affirmation of communion principles for economic redirection; and
   c. a set of practical actions for individual, congregational, and church-wide public engagement.

2. Receive the attached supporting analysis, which documents the economic dangers we face to jobs, families, neighbors, and long-term sustainability, and probes the moral significance of these challenges based on our church’s biblical and Reformed heritage.

3. Affirm these recommendations as our church’s call for “Renewing God’s Communion in the Work of Economic Reconstruction.”

CALL TO RENEWAL

In the current severe economic recession and faltering recovery, we see the consequences of a long developing moral crisis in our culture. A distorted value system has taken hold, spreading reckless consumerism, deep insecurity, and extreme inequalities across America. These are not the values of Christianity or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), but they have infiltrated the practice of Christianity in America along with other social life. These values subvert faithful observance; they weaken our communion with family, neighbor, workers, and a world in need. Too often, we behave as children of Mammon rather than as children of God.

Yet, we cannot serve two masters. If we are to confront this moral crisis we must recover the biblical values of justice, compassion, and covenant community. We must seek nothing less than to place God—not the economy, wealth, or competition—at the center of our lives. In doing so, we will empower our church, our society, and our government to look out for the poor and the sick, the widow, the orphan, and the stranger in the land, to safeguard God’s gift of creation, and to promote and protect the common good. The depth and scale of these challenges force us to respond, not only to the obvious distress of many we know and love, but to the many more God commands us to love. This challenge is more than a call for a new ethical compass in our personal behavior. The work of economic reconstruction today requires something like a new national covenant, a new public framework derived from authentic religious values, to reorient the way wealth is produced and shared and to reclaim the role of government in securing the common good.

In the Wall Street collapse and the four difficult years since, we see the impact of four decades of growing captivity to the values of excessive individualism and a destructive antigovernment ideology. The resulting loss of wealth and stable employment for many and the spreading pain of poverty, insecurity, and extreme inequality mark this period as a turning point not only for the church’s witness in society, but for the very beliefs that define our common faith. Standing against this tide and echoing the social awakening of our predecessors in the last Gilded Age, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) opposes the market fundamentalism that has diminished Christian values in our economy and political culture—values of common sacrifice and shared prosperity, care and uplift for the most vulnerable, and responsibility for future generations.

These values are at the core of our common life as Christians. In the practice of communion, Jesus’ sacrifice and sharing became the model for all human flourishing. Jesus overturned the tables of those who would commercialize the sacred, but he shared tables with rich and poor, righteous and outcast, embodying God’s welcome and pointing to a realm where justice and peace embrace. This world has never been that realm, but at Christ’s table we are renewed in our vision of that world where everyone has enough. In the principles and recommendations below, we seek to make this vision practical for our congregations, our communities, and our nation.

Guided by the Christian tradition, we seek a sustainable stewardship society shaped for the common good, contrasted with a short-sighted consumer society ruled by economic assumptions too often accepted as unalterable truths. Guided as well by our Reformed tradition, we specifically lift up the role of government, which is ordained by God to restrain the power of sin, to correct the injustice of sinful systems, and, in wise governance, to help build a just economy. We value the market and individual initiative within a framework of democratic governance, shared prosperity, and sufficient public investment for common need. And we believe that the church can, and should, use its voice responsibly on complex matters of public importance.

COMMUNION PRINCIPLES

An economy proves its worth by the benefits it offers to all the members of a society. Christian ethicists have often used the principles of community and the common good to evaluate economic systems. While still using those norms, we take the further step of adopting the practice of communion as an interpretive lens for viewing community and the common good. Communion elevates loyalty to God as the unifying center without which community cohesion can become idolatrous, and it also strengthens the human solidarity with neighbors and the earth without which community ties can become merely contractual. With respect to the common good, communion prevents the defining of the common good from becoming the prerogative of the powerful at the expense of the vulnerable. It also refutes the claim that concern for the common good can be set aside out of trust in market forces to produce maximum benefits if all of us single-mindedly pursue our individual and group interests.

The Christian community’s practice of communion embodies an economy of grace rather than gain, the remembering of a broken body, the healing of a world of hurt. It does so because it fosters regular renewal of the community’s connections to God in Jesus Christ, to neighbors, and to the earth, but it also often mirrors the fracture and dismemberment of those connections. The apostle Paul took the Corinthian Christians to task for allowing the divisions and prejudices of Greco-Roman society to infect their practice of the Lord’s Supper. The table fellowship at Corinth was imitating the class divisions of local dinner parties. When the rich ate and drank early and some got drunk and the poor went hungry, Paul could not call such meals the Lord’s Supper. He writes that they are not “discerning the body,” meaning the community of believers as the very body of Christ. He moves immediately to describe this new social body with its many members—each with its “manifestation of the Spirit for the common good” (1 Cor. 12:7). No one is to be dishonored; the so-called inferior members are even to receive greater honor that the members may have the same care for one another and dissension may be avoided. Beyond their local numbers, the prosperous should supply the want of the poor in Jerusalem as a matter of equality (2 Cor. 8:14).

Our preeminent sacramental words of life remember the world of hurt experienced by Jesus on the cross. Christians are not only to partake of the body of Christ in communion; they are to be the body of Christ in the world, pouring themselves out for others as Jesus did. Five sets of principles follow from this model of affirming others and sharing with them. These five sets of ethical principles concern the stewardship of creation, Christian vocation, civil government, the church, and Providence for a New Creation. Each will be explored in turn.
1. Stewardship of Creation

“The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it” (Ps. 24:1).

a. We affirm that the whole of creation belongs to God; all things have intrinsic value, as interconnected gifts of God. In a communion or sacramental vision, stewardship is not only management but servanthood within creation, redirecting growth and restoring Sabbath-keeping.

b. We affirm that we are called to care for God’s gifts in ways that sustain the whole of creation, contribute to the flourishing of all God’s creatures, and provide these same gifts to the generations that follow us.

c. We reject, as incompatible with Christian understanding of the material world, any social ordering that reduces creation and humanity merely to an economic or instrumental value.

d. We reject, as incompatible with Christian stewardship, that self-interested pursuit of profit and limitless consumption are foundations of a good economy; rather, all economic arrangements must be judged by their contribution to the common good and the health of creation.

2. Community and Vocation

“Have regard for your covenant, for the dark places of the land are full of the haunts of violence” (Ps. 74:20).

“Now there are varieties of gifts, but the same Spirit ... and there are varieties of activities, but it is the same God who activates all of them in everyone. To each is given the manifestation of the Spirit for the common good” (1 Cor.12:4–7).

a. We affirm a life in covenant with our neighbors, fellow citizens, and all who live among us, and that this is a life of responsibility for the common good, before private freedom, and one that is judged by higher law.

b. We affirm the priority of human labor and individual callings in a covenant order of responsibility, with talents and character given to us not simply for the sake of our individual well-being, but for the common good of all.

c. We affirm that the talents of all should be welcomed lest the common good be compromised, the integrity of the body weakened, and the enjoyment of God’s love by individual members be impaired. Each contributor to a common enterprise deserves both a fair share in the benefits obtained and a say in the community of production.

d. We reject, as incompatible with Christian vocation, any economic system that tolerates the marginalization or exploitation of any of its members through unemployment and underemployment, insufficient wages, or extreme inequality in access to social goods.

3. Governance for the Common Good

“Let every person be subject to the governing authorities; for there is no authority except from God, and those authorities that exist have been instituted by God” (Rom.13:1).

a. We affirm that government is good, ordained by God for the maintenance of God’s commonwealth, accountable to God in drawing fairly on the capacities and resources of its members and protecting their dignity and safety.

b. We affirm that government has as its trust the furthering of the common good, in concert with the activities of private citizens and organizations. The freedom of personal creativity benefits from the social creativity enabled by wise governance, which includes independent judicial review of government itself.

c. We affirm that all citizens have the right to basic economic goods and to meaningful work, and that government, representing the whole community, is ultimately responsible for seeing to the provision and protection of these rights from unjust concentrations of market or political power.

d. We reject, as incompatible with God’s gift of government, any construal of individual liberty that denies our corporate responsibilities to neighbors near and far, for the protection of their equal liberty and opportunity to flourish.

4. Church as a Living Sign of God’s Coming Realm

“... [To] make everyone see what is the plan of the mystery hidden for [the] ages in God who created all things; so that through the church the wisdom of God ... might now be made known to the rulers and authorities in the heavenly places” (Eph. 3:8–10).
a. We affirm the church as a community and as an institution, a good ordained by God for the mission and sustenance of God’s people over time.

b. We affirm that Jesus Christ is the head of the church, and that the church must be ever reformed to embody the gracious purposes of God rather than any deterministic economic necessity or cultural force.

c. We affirm that the church is called to speak in a prophetic voice, demanding of government, citizens, and economic institutions alike, repentance from value systems that demean and marginalize people and erode the common good.

d. We reject the view that the church is an end in itself, but rather maintain that among its Great Ends are the promotion of social righteousness and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world.

5. Providence for a New Creation

“But strive first for the Kingdom of God and [God’s] righteousness, and all these things will be given to you as well” (Mt. 6:33).

a. We affirm that no power in the world, including economic forces, is ultimate, because God, as source and sustainer, is the true sovereign over all things.

b. We affirm that peace is a chief characteristic of God’s reign, and that economic reconstruction is part of embodying that peace in the just provision of goods for current and future generations.

c. We reject, as incompatible with our understanding of God’s Providence, that any human institution that furthers injustice is normative; rather, God’s order is always aligned to justice with special attention to the most vulnerable.

THE CHURCH’S WORK IN TODAY’S FALLEN ECONOMY

Practical actions for individual, congregational, and church-wide public engagement follow from the Communion Principles. These actions are proposed in three areas of the church’s work: within congregations and councils; in the public square; and in support of local, state, or federal policies that address economic behavior.

1. Embracing the Spirit of Repentance and Renewal in Congregations and Councils

In order to help renew the full sense of calling in the economic lives of Presbyterians, the 220th General Assembly (2012):

a. Invites congregations and councils of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to view their practices of hospitality, fellowship, compensation, mission, and evangelism through the lens of communion. This is to see each church as a body in which everyone has an equal place of service and honor, where no one is abandoned or reduced to second-class status, where inequality in compensation is tempered, and where God’s grace is the center of community life. These are not matters subject to economic audit, but which may have economic effects. The goal is to strengthen each congregation as it seeks to live out Christ’s distinctive values, and thereby to help each member resist the forces of class and the culture of consumption that weaken our sharing and our witness.

b. Invites congregations to develop special opportunities for reflection and education on the sacrament of communion and its economic meaning. From this reflective work, new or renewed congregational efforts are encouraged to realize a fuller Christian communion in our neighborhoods and our local and regional economies, through such means as: practices of hospitality with needful neighbors; direct service for community needs; energy conservation and other environmental efforts in our churches and neighborhoods; engagement in faith-based community organizing and advocacy; redevelopment of church properties to serve new community needs; and investment in community development enterprises, among other ways for congregations to participate in the work of economic recovery and redirection.

c. Invites mid councils to view their practices of membership, mutual accountability, mission, and evangelism through the lens of communion. This is to see presbyteries as bodies where teaching and ruling elders face directly the socioeconomic differences in their regions and develop or strengthen mission strategies to build solidarity and shared witness across those differences. Presbyteries and other regional bodies are encouraged to use Neither Poverty Nor Riches: Compensation, Equity, and the Unity of the Church (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 324ff [print version], pp. 742ff [electronic version]), a policy study approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010) to help address compensation differences and their influence on mid council life.
d. Encourages mid councils—presbyteries and synods—to organize at least one gathering on the theme of “communion renewal and economic reconstruction,” designed for education and dialogue among teaching and ruling elders, deacons, members, and others. Theological educators, economists, and other resource persons are encouraged to contribute insights on the influence of faith in the shaping of economic values, specifically with regard to the relation of communion and the common good. From these gatherings, councils and congregations are encouraged to consider new efforts to work more actively together to meet or advocate for the needs of members and neighbors impacted by today’s economic challenges.

e. Requests the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in cooperation with appropriate ministries of the General Assembly Mission Council (Presbyterian Mission Agency), provide relevant and accessible resources for such gatherings and study groups, including summaries drawn from and resources based on this report.

f. Directs the Office of the General Assembly to publish this report in its entirety on the PC(USA) website, to oversee the printing of a limited quantity of copies, and to see that copies are distributed to interested congregations and individual members, mid councils, resource centers, educational institutions related to the PC(USA), and to ecumenical partners.

2. Voicing Our Beliefs in the Public Square

In order to present a public voice for Reformed Christian values in economic reconstruction, the 220th General Assembly (2012):

a. Urges the Stated Clerk, the Office of Public Witness, and the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, as well as presbytery, synod, and congregational leaders, to take opportunities to express the church’s views on the economy in the media, at public events, and in other forums (including nonpartisan events related to the 2012 election season), to endorse or participate in ecumenical and interfaith statements or acts of witness consistent with policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

b. Directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Advocacy Committees for Racial Ethnic and Women’s Concerns, to provide resources to support the witness described above, for presenting the church’s views on economic and civic responsibility, sustainable economic development, strong public ethics, and policies for the common good, with special attention to those most vulnerable.

3. Supporting Public Policy Actions on the Economy

In accordance with the belief that “truth is in order to goodness,” (F-3.0104), that education and action go together, and in order to contribute a Christian ethical perspective based on communion, covenant, and the common good to public understanding and advocacy by Presbyterians and PC(USA), the 220th General Assembly (2012) encourages its members and directs its appropriate agencies to support the following directions for reform addressing four main areas of God’s concern in our economy, as outlined in the attached study: (1) the crisis of work, (2) family insecurity and children’s well-being, (3) the plight of our neighbors in marginalized communities, (4) sustainable growth for our environment and future generations:

While previous assemblies have affirmed both public and private responsibility for effective solutions in seeking a sustainable prosperity for all, the 220th General Assembly (2012) urges the church to support a renewed emphasis on the proper role of government in society and the economy, as taught in biblical and Reformed tradition. The church does not govern or command in society but reserves its right, and duty, to counsel political leaders from the high place of conscience and our long Reformed heritage of social witness and policy application.

a. On the Crisis of Work

To renew our communion with the working-age population, and all workers within our borders, we encourage the church’s support for policies aimed at reducing unemployment, creating quality jobs, strengthening the safety net and training programs for unemployed workers, and empowering workers in the labor marketplace. In addition to affirming the church’s existing policies on vocation, fairer compensation, and full employment, as referenced in the attached study, the 220th General Assembly (2012) supports:

(1) Stronger job-creation policies, such as tax reforms that encourage job-creation within our borders; increased public investment in new infrastructure, environmental restoration, and other public goods; direct public job creation on appropriate infrastructure projects and maintenance in areas and periods of high unemployment; and measures to maintain employment in recessions and restructurings through on-the-job retraining, work-share policies, and coordinated efforts to preserve networks of innovation and suppliers in given industries.

(2) Greater empowerment of workers, such as by indexing the federal minimum wage to an accurate inflation measure with realistic adjustments for health, education, and housing costs; by tax and other measures to decrease the enormous disproportions between top executive and line employee salaries—-sharing productivity gains more fairly; by creating a more level playing field for workers who wish to organize for collective bargaining; and by alternative institutional arrangements, such as employee ownership, cooperatives, and other wealth-building and wage-improving strategies for workers.

b. On the Crisis of Family

To renew our communion with families and children, the 220th General Assembly (2012) encourages the church’s support for policies that strengthen families, support children’s development, provide comfort to the elderly, and help to insulate decisions about family formation and child-bearing from undue economic stress. Concerned with the impact of the current crisis on families, especially low-income families, the 220th General Assembly (2012) supports policies that:

1. Protect a healthy work-family balance. These include such policies as paid parental leave; universal high-quality childcare and early childhood education; mandatory sick-pay; and mandatory flex-time alternatives to meet family care responsibilities.

2. Strengthen families through life-cycle needs. These include such policies as “baby bonds” available to average investors; public school programs to increase healthy nutrition and physical education, as well as after-school enrichment; and policies that support affordable access to post-secondary education.

3. Support families in retirement and times of serious illness. These policies include strengthening Social Security and Medicare without additional burdens on middle- and lower-income families; providing greater consumer protection and transparency in retirement savings programs; and considering ways to count the value of unpaid work by family child- and elder-caregivers.

4. Improve the accuracy of official measurements of household economic wellbeing. These include revising poverty thresholds, unemployment figures, and eligibility criteria for family-supporting programs.

c. On the Plight of Our Neighbors

To renew our communion with marginalized neighbors and the least affluent among us, we encourage the church’s support for policies that equalize opportunities for education, work, and political participation across racial and other social divides, including the divide between citizens and noncitizens. Recognizing significant historical differences in wealth accumulation, vulnerability to imprisonment, and patterns of segregation among those who are unemployed, and a nationwide poverty rate of approximately 20 percent and growing among the young, the 220th General Assembly (2012) supports:

1. A stronger social safety net for poor and low-income families, through measures such as adjustment of Temporary Assistance for Needy Families and related income support programs to extend time limits or reactivate expired eligibility in times of high unemployment, and protection of Food Stamps, WIC, SSI, Medicaid, and other programs for the most vulnerable, from across-the-board budget cuts.

2. Increased social investment in poorer communities, through measures such as expanded and enriched public schooling (longer school days and/or school years, incorporating high-quality enrichment programs), policies that improve transit equity in under-served cities and rural areas (including mass transit and rail upgrades), measures to restore healthy housing markets and well-managed public housing, and policies and funding to help cities and states develop and expand community-based crime prevention programs and alternatives to prison.

3. Increased social inclusion and community empowerment, through measures such as an earned and fairly applied path to citizenship for undocumented immigrants, fairer and consistently enforced agricultural labor laws, increased regulation of financial services in low-income communities, ensuring equal opportunity for affordable credit, and democratic reforms that reduce barriers to voting in low-income communities, including election-day registration policies and expansion of voter registration in public agencies.

d. On the Stewardship of Creation

To renew our communion with God’s creation and future generations, we encourage the church’s support for policies that transform our energy supply, restore and protect vital ecosystems, and reorient community planning and public capital investments around energy efficiency goals and other environmental benefits. Recognizing the significant scientific consensus underlying climate change warnings, the 220th General Assembly (2012) supports:

1. “Green infrastructure” planning and investment, through such means as increases in federal research and development (R&D) investment and other public support for renewable energy development; the expansion and improvement of mass transit within and between metropolitan areas; the promotion of new economic development approaches that integrate conservation, cogeneration, and renewable energy systems into residential and commercial development, with a focus on preserving and limiting pressure on ecosystems that provide important services, such as drainage and sink capacities, and the elimination of public subsidies for unsustainable sectors of our economy, including highly profitable fossil fuel and large-scale agribusiness industries.

(2) “Green shift” changes in consumption and investment incentives for citizens, through measures such as tax reforms that encourage work and saving and discourage pollution and over-consumption; higher automobile fuel efficiency standards, with public support for industry R&D; expanded recycling coverage and monitoring at the state and local level; and improvements in national statistics to better account for environmental costs and benefits in economic activity.

e. Reforming System-wide Governance

Renewing Christian communion in the work of economic reconstruction requires a systematic recovery of the proper role and functions of government, as ordained by God to serve the common good. The 220th General Assembly (2012) supports four main priorities in restoring proper governance for the common good:

(1) A strong political reform agenda to reduce big money influence in campaigns and policy-making, through such legislative and constitutional changes as necessary to preserve access to equal vote and voice of all citizens;

(2) A fiscal redesign that is balanced between cutting waste, progressive tax increases, and needed investments in health, education, and other key assets for future generations;

(3) Financial sector reconstruction, through such measures as small “Robin Hood” financial transaction taxes to reduce unproductive and risky financial speculation; public banks and endowment funds for infrastructure development, local business development, and community wealth-building; restoring regulatory firewalls between investment and retail banking to minimize public risk; integration of sustainability criteria into sovereign debt analysis and credit ratings; and

(4) Improve and expand our national accounting systems, by supplementing Gross Domestic Product and related market indicators with measures of human, social, and natural wealth.

4. Authorization of a New Study of Tax Reform

Because taxation is considered a legitimate function of government in the Christian tradition and, today, lies at the heart of debates over the role of government and the responsibilities of citizens, and because tax policy reflects the nature of social trust and mutual obligation, pushing our focus beyond the idea of “contract” to the implicit “covenant” in our society, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is directed to appoint a seven-volunteer study team to assess the values implicit in tax policy, focusing on the areas of personal income, wealth, giving, and consumption, and considering a spectrum of reform proposals. With input from a wide range of experts and policy leaders in the field, and with necessary grounding in existing church teaching on the subject and our church’s communion principles for economic reconstruction, articulated above, the study team will report its findings and recommendations to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Rationale

Responding to the deepening economic crisis of our times, the 219th General Assembly (2010) recognized a preliminary statement of concern, Living Through Economic Crisis: The Church’s Witness in Troubled Times (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 733ff of electronic copy; pp.323–24 of the print copy), and proceeded to authorize further study of the problem with recommendations for faithful action by the church. Specifically, the General Assembly asked for a study that “assesses the long-term implications of our current economic trends and practices, including their impact on the church itself, and provides appropriate recommendations for consideration by members, congregations, presbyteries, and local, state, and federal government” (Ibid., p. 733 of the electronic copy, p. 323 of the print copy).

In consultation with a broad range of experts and practitioners who work on economic policy and development, a study team appointed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy carried out this work. In addition to this report, the study team prepared supplemental discussion essays and other related materials, which will be made available on line before the 220th General Assembly (2012). A number of resources can already be found in the October 2011 issue of Unbound (www.justiceUnbound.org), titled “The Dark Night of the American Economy” (http://justiceunbound.org/journal/table-of-contents-2/). Unbound is an interactive, online journal and the official successor to Church & Society magazine.
The title, World of Hurt, Word of Life, points to the words of institution at communion, or the Lord’s Supper. That sacrament of re-membering the body of the church includes the most foundational words of life that give life to the church as a community. Using this Christian model is not intended to suggest that all U.S. citizens must become Christians, but that the equal, mutual concern of communion is our measure for economic values and practices. We do not live “by bread alone,” or secular economics alone, of whatever school or ideology, but by the Word who is ultimately God with us, seeking incarnation in our personal and social life.

The foundational, theologically grounded values of concern to the church in our assessment of the economic crisis were listed in the 2010 assembly’s action: the values of human rights, covenant community, public responsibility, vocation-affirming work, and sustainability. In applying these values, it should be clear that the Reformed approach always connects personal and social transformation, individual conscience, and the common good. In gospel language, we remember Jesus’ preaching of both the inner conversion from fear and greed to selfless faith, and the outer, institutional conversion of worldly rule into the reign of God. We remember our responsibility to the word in light of Jesus’ very example, which practiced the healing and feeding of multitudes from the ethos of the Beatitudes and his love for the least among us.

In our recommendations for the church, we find the necessary grounding in the central liturgical place and meaning of Communion in the Reformed tradition and in the lives of all Presbyterian congregations. Across the entire spectrum of its impacts and causes, the economic crisis, we submit, is fed by a common condition of weakened or broken communion. Our recommendations flow from this recognition and build on a core set of principles that define a life of communion with God and one another in contrast to the economic life that now prevails in the world and threatens our children’s future. In resetting the priorities of economic life around the practice and principles of communion, the church should not only provide for its own renewal, in relevant actions designed for congregations and other church bodies, but for a more robust Christian witness in the public square as well, including faith-based recommendations for significant changes in public policy.

The background study included in this report provides a closer examination of the manifold impacts and causes of our economic distress, in light of Scripture and Reformed tradition. The study is divided into three parts. Part One establishes the liturgical frame for reflection on the economic crisis, and sketches the broad economic trends that have brought us to this point. We then outline the contrasting principles of God’s economy, which the church is asked to affirm.

Part Two sharpens and differentiates the empirical focus to emphasize specific societal structures at risk—five key domains of God’s love that are embattled in our economy:

1. The jobs crisis and the degradation of work—because God wills that we all be productive and respected in our need to provide and take part in the continuing (or great) work of creation.
2. The family in crisis, including children and elders—because our family ties are designed to reflect God’s image and serve human flourishing.
3. The plight of our neighbors—because we remember that we were once strangers, enslaved, “and the Lord redeemed us.”
4. The stewardship of creation for future generations—because the land is God’s, “for you are strangers and live as foreigners with me.”
5. The wounded church—because the Body of Christ cannot heal if it is captive to the world.

On many issues in these areas, the General Assembly has already spoken with clear recommendations for policy. But even as we rely on the church’s extensive policy tradition for guidance, today we seek new inspiration and authority for action. The depth of this crisis combined with the glaring failures of our elected leaders has motivated us to respond anew, not only for the sake of our neighbors and communities, as we are taught, but for the very honor of a church that proclaims God’s sovereignty over all.

Finally, in Part Three of the study, we draw particular attention to a common and inter-related source of disempowerment in the embattled domains of God’s love: the ascendancy of an extreme individualist ideology and culture, and a no less radical campaign of weakening and denigrating government. We ask the church to reject these ideological assaults on the common good and on the proper role of government. The church can respond with a Reformed view of the role of governance in society and the economy. Applied today, this tradition clearly justifies a “mixed economy,” valuing the market and individual initiative within a framework of shared and sustainable prosperity, as well as public responsibility for unmet human needs.

PART ONE: WORLD OF HURT, WORD OF LIFE

A. Broken Communion

Throughout the ages, Sunday to Sunday, Christians have gathered to participate in Holy Communion. This Christian practice re-presents to the faithful, God’s oikos, God’s divine household, and its economy of grace. In this sacramental act, the fundamental character of our existence before God is revealed and renewed. As John Calvin wrote, “We call it either ‘the Lord’s Supper’ or ‘the Eucharist’ because in it we are both spiritually fed by the liberality of the Lord and also give him thanks for his kindness. … In this sacrament … the Lord recalls the great bounty of his goodness to our memory and stirs us up to acknowledge it.2

As the body of Christ is broken before us, we remember the parable of the sheep and goats: whatever we do to “the least of these” brothers and sisters of mine, we also do to Jesus himself (Mt. 25:40). We bring “a world of hurt” to the table, the hurt of “the least of these” and our own hurt. As the bread is broken, we remember the crucified Jesus, but we must also remember the hungry, naked, homeless body of Christ when he was alive in the flesh. In our world of hurt, the poor and the unemployed, the immigrant and the economically distressed, whose numbers grow, are dis-membered from the body of Christ. In remembering Jesus’ sacrifice for us, the task of “re-membering” the least among us, in the body of Christ, is both our individual promise and our shared responsibility. We recognize today the economic conditions that weaken our communion, dividing God’s oikos from within.

When Jesus announced to his followers, “This is my body that is [broken] for you” (1 Cor. 11:24), hindsight sees him assuring his disciples that he was wounded for them and that they were healed by his bruises (Isa. 53:5). When the apostle Paul called the Corinthian believers “the body of Christ and individually members of it” (1 Cor. 12:27), he was naming them as the re-membered and inspired embodiment of the risen Christ. Therefore, their gatherings for the Lord’s Supper ought to be times of re-membering for their brokenness and resuscitation to be the embodiment of Christ in the world. Instead they brought their social stratification and disconnection to the communion meal; and, failing to “discern the body” in the poor among them, they further fractured it instead of being re-membered. Paul charged that their meals were a sacrilege and not the Lord’s Supper.

At the communion table, there should be no stratification. Each member of the body is an affirmed participant in a community in quest of the common good out of gratitude for God’s gifts. When we begin to see all of our tables and all of our community connections and disconnections through the interpretive lens of communion practice, the economy of grace that is embodied there should bring critical scrutiny to our economies of gain and all of our tables where the means of sustenance are distributed and access to power is brokered.

The contrast between God’s oikos of grace and gratitude and our economic life today is visible everywhere. Over the last decade, an epidemic of reckless mortgage lending and trading fueled a massive housing bubble, precipitating a dangerous financial meltdown in 2008 and plunging the nation into recession—the biggest economic crisis in the United States since the Great Depression. $16 trillion in wealth was wiped out, and 7.5 million jobs were lost, yet a quick response by the federal government may have prevented even worse disaster by shoring up the banks, expanding the money supply, and injecting substantial stimulus spending to spur economic recovery. Now, three years later, the financial sector has recovered and businesses corporations are raking in impressive profits once again. Between two and three million jobs were also provided by the stimulus, which also helped offset state cutbacks in public employment. Banks and corporations today hold massive cash reserves. But ordinary people continue to suffer the effects of high unemployment, home foreclosures, stagnant wages, and anemic economic growth.

The immediate crisis was contained, but most Americans know that our problems go beyond the last several years. Over the last three decades, America has been transformed by extreme inequalities that have weakened the middle class, squeezed average workers, and further marginalized our poorest communities. At the root of this, we see a striking divergence between economic productivity and average wages. From the 1940s through the 1970s, rising productivity and rising wages followed the same upward trajectory, together. The prosperity our economy produced was widely shared among the people who created it, giving rise to a broad middle class. Since then, productivity has continued to rise, but average wages have been stagnant. During the same period, the income of the top 1 percent of the population has skyrocketed from 8 percent of total national income to more than 23 percent of total income in 2007—the highest it has been since 1928. Wealth is even more unequal: in 2007, the richest 10 percent controlled two-thirds of total household net worth; the wealth gap has probably grown since the housing crash, as most middle- and working-class wealth is in the form of home equity.4

The broad middle class has managed to maintain a veneer of prosperity by working more and going deeper into debt. Compared to its counterpart in the 1970s, the average household today works approximately five hundred more hours annually. Average household debt now stands at 114 percent of income, after taxes, compared to approximately 65 percent in the 1970s.5 These long-term trends, compounded by the sharp loss of wealth and the unemployment crisis since 2008, have spread anxiety, frustration, and anger across the country. From the young, who long for decent work, to the old, whose retirement security is threatened, from children, whose educational prospects are undermined, to parents, whose homes are in danger of foreclosure, from the poor who feel the safety net fraying even further, to the middle classes who sense their living standards crumbling away, all sorts of Americans continue to suffer the prolonged effects of our weakened and divided economy.

As economic pressures absorb more energy and household budgets tighten, other facets of human life are squeezed. Family life, religious communities, civic organizations, and political engagement suffer as people have less time, energy, and resources to commit to them. The richness of human social and personal existence is threatened as the imbalances within the economic system spill over into these other realms of life, further diminishing human flourishing. Symptomatically, people’s trust in public
The Christian practice of the Lord’s Supper offers a fundamentally different vision of human existence in the world, a vision of future life. Jesus Christ came into the world, saying, “Repent, for the Kingdom of God is at hand.” His words and deeds, his very existence, provoked an inversion of power and values that continues to challenge every social order.

B. God’s Economy

As Christians, we know that times of crisis carry the marks of God’s judgment, but also the promise of God’s salvation. Jesus Christ came into the world, saying, “Repent, for the Kingdom of God is at hand.” His words and deeds, his very existence, provoked an inversion of power and values that continues to challenge every social order.

The shadow of his cross falls across America and the world today, awakening us to judgment. Through Jesus Christ, we know that God does not judge in order to destroy, but in order to save, renew, redeem, and reconcile. Therefore, we can face our current crisis not only with sorrow and repentance, but also with expectancy and hope, knowing that God is preparing us, and the whole world, for new life.

As those whose hearts and minds and lives revolve around the nourishment we share in communion at the Lord’s Table, we are empowered to resist the economic materialism that bombards us from every direction. We can no longer submit ourselves to the frantic and soulless accumulation of things or be content with the shallow, yet seductive, satisfaction excess provides. The personal and social costs of this relentless materialism—over-work, deepening indebtedness, and environmental degradation—have distorted our lives almost beyond recognition of who we really are in God’s eyes.

The Christian practice of the Lord’s Supper can renew a hopeful and life-giving vision of Christian materialism. The physical elements of bread and wine reveal that God’s gracious presence is mediated to us through the mundane material of our daily life. Christians profess that God created the material world and proclaimed it good. The incarnation bears witness to God’s profound desire to sanctify and redeem our material existence. From God’s blessing of the creation—that it might be fruitful and multiply—to Jesus’ mighty deeds of power on behalf of the sick and the lame, the hungry and thirsty, God’s intention that “we might have life and have it abundantly” was revealed. This wholeness of life certainly includes our material existence. Therefore, with the psalmist we must joyously profess that the heavens—and everything under them—are declaring the glory of God.

In turn, we do not seek God apart from our material lives but in the midst of them. The economic activity of producing goods and services that contribute to material flourishing are worthy and serve God’s gracious purposes in the world. But when one part of our society accumulates to great excess even as millions around us are materially and socially deprived of basic needs, the very goodness of God’s creation is harmed and cries out for justice, according to the prophets.

To rectify great inequalities, we must resist the prevailing sense that we have earned what we possess and have a right to dispose of it however we wish. America often holds out the ideal of an “ownership society.” In Communion, however, we see that we are the recipients of gifts that we did not earn; we do not earn anything except by the grace of God and therefore we have no right, in God’s eyes, to withhold our resources from others in need. At creation, God proclaimed everything good and blessed it. When the people of Israel came into the Promised Land, God declared that “the land is mine, with me you are but aliens and tenants” (Lev. 25:23). A robust Christian vision, shaped by the Christian practice of Communion, offers the idea of a stewardship society.

A steward is someone who cares for something that belongs to another. Just as Adam was placed in the garden to till it and keep it, just as Israel recognized that God was the true owner of the land, just as Jesus told stories of servants who cared, well or poorly, for the property of their master, so we ought to think of ourselves as stewards rather than owners of the things we possess. We must consider not only their value to us but their possibly much greater worth to people in need. As John Calvin writes, “all the gifts we possess have been bestowed by God and entrusted to us on condition that they be distributed to our neighbors’ benefit” (Institutes III.vii.5).

Our economy is one in which we feel less and less connected to one another and less and less mutually responsible. To the extent that we are bound to other people, it is through the voluntary contracts we enter for the sake of mutual self-interest. The Christian practice of the Lord’s Supper offers a fundamentally different vision of human existence in the world, a vision of covenant community. Covenant community begins with the fact of creation. Surveying the creation on the final day of its making, God declared it, altogether, “very good.” Each creature is valuable, in and of itself, but together they are something... more, something better. All God’s creatures are united in a web of life-giving and life-sustaining relationships that mark them as participants in a single project and purpose—the creation. On this foundation, Christians rely on God’s grace and are bound together in the body of Christ. We are not autonomous individuals, pursuing our individual well-being; we are persons in relationship, depending on one another and ultimately on God for our common good.

The goodness of our common creation and interdependence was first codified in the Hebrew law tradition of covenant community. God liberated the people of Israel from slavery in Egypt. But they were not set free in order to become autonomous individuals. At Mount Sinai, they bound themselves to God and one another through promises of mutual responsibility. In the people of Israel God established a new social order that reflected God’s intentions for the whole creation, including legal provisions for social and economic justice—affordable credit and debt relief, widespread access to productive resources, the release of slaves, and Sabbatical respite from the burdens of work and production.7

The biblical prophets called the people back to this covenantal order when they strayed, upholding their treatment of the poor and vulnerable as the chief measure of their righteousness. Jesus of Nazareth, who declared that his ministry would be the fulfillment of this prophetic vision of social justice, summarized the requirements of God’s law, saying “You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your strength, and with all your mind, and your neighbor as yourself” (Lk. 10:27). He proclaimed and embodied God’s coming kingdom by including the outcasts and lifting up the downtrodden, saying “the last will be first, and the first will be last” (Mt. 20:16).

From Genesis forward, work has been central to our identity as human beings, to our honored place in the created order, and to the rise and fall of many social orders. Understood biblically, a significant part of who we are is captured in what we do, in the roles we play in contributing to and maintaining God’s creation. Thus, we have understood work as vocation, a calling connected to God’s purposes, and always worthy, in turn, of sufficient recompense according to a principle of equal human dignity. When he prophesies about God’s new creation, Isaiah writes, “They shall build houses and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and eat their fruit. They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat; for like the days of a tree shall the days of my people be, and my chosen shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, or bear children for calamity; for they shall be offspring blessed by the Lord—and their descendants as well” (Isa. 65: 21–23). Our well-being is connected to our work, and in God’s economy that work will not be in vain. It will be honored and justly rewarded. An economy that leaves its workers behind, discounting their needs and contributions, falls short of this expectation in the most obvious way.

In the Reformed tradition, so too, the biblical order of work and reward is further oriented toward the common good. Writing on Paul’s first letter to the Corinthians, Calvin asserts, “… he [Paul] orders every one to bring what he has to the common heap, and not to keep back gifts of God in the way of enjoying every one his own, apart from others, but aim unitedly at the edification of all in common.”9 Our commitment to each other is a central tenet of Reformed ethics, an idea that underlies any Reformed definition of work. While other philosophies of work may include, in place of the common good, exhortations to industriousness, thrift, or personal benefit, the Reformed understanding of work always obligates us to understand our labor in the context of the community in which we live and the general flourishing of each community.

Through our work and other fruitful activities, each of us assumes an individual responsibility for supporting the common good. But the common good cannot be secured by individual action alone, both for reasons of efficiency (i.e. collective goods such as public safety and commercial infrastructure cannot be provided by individuals), and, more expansively, because sinful greed and unequal power in the marketplace often prevent our neighbors and many who live among us from enjoying their share of human dignity in a common life with all the children of God. In our tradition, as in others, proper governance for the common good is not only honored, it is divinely ordained. There has never been a question about the need for a higher ordering power and a system of governance to provide essential goods and services that individuals cannot provide, and to ensure an adequate sharing of resources according to the principle of equal human dignity. With Calvin, we understand that “it is perfect barbarism to think of exterminating [civil government], its use among men being not less than that of bread and water, light and air, while its dignity is much more excellent.”9 While hardly an egalitarian utopia, Calvin’s Geneva was unusual in its time for supporting extensive public services and social reform efforts, including free education, poor relief, prison reform, consumer protections, and support for refugees. Drawing from this heritage, the question of what our Reformed principles of government mean for today is challenging, and we examine these issues more closely in Part Three.

God provides us help to right economic wrongs, but in America today there is a profound sense, even a certain kind of fundamentalist belief, that our current social and economic patterns are the result of unyielding economic laws that cannot be resisted. Such acquiescence to the “will” of the market is, without exaggeration, a form of idolatry, of disobedience to God. In the face of the economic determinism that tells us there is nothing we can do to change things, Christians profess faith in divine providence, which is the true power of change in our broken world. To those eaten up with anxiety about their material well-being, Jesus said, “strive first for the Kingdom of God and … all these things will be given to you as well” (Mt. 6:33). Acceptance of God’s love, not the illusion of rational self-interest, must be the ordering principle of a justly prosperous society, abundant for one and all. “Ask, and it will be given to you,” Jesus taught. “Search, and you will find; knock, and the door will be opened” (Lk. 11:9). In this perspective, if it were not for the self-regarding designs of those who wish to author their own destiny, life would be a gift that provides of itself for God’s creatures, for one and all in proportion to their need.
Throughout the ages, Christians have attempted to remain faithful followers of Christ in all aspects of life, including their economic lives. Martin Luther eloquently captured the attitude that shapes a Christian life: “as our heavenly Father has in Christ freely come to our aid, we also ought freely to help our neighbor through our body and its works, and each one should become as it were a Christ to the other that we may be Christ’s to one another and Christ might be the same in all, that is, that we might be truly Christians” (The Freedom of a Christian, 303). To nurture this reciprocity, we have gathered in worship since the beginning, and we have developed an extensive ecclesial life to signify our faith and nurture our witness to the world. We understand that our churches, together, comprise the Body of Christ on this earth, and in any given community, the churches should stand as a sign of the coming kingdom, prefiguring God’s reign on earth by words and deeds that disrupt the status quo and prepare God’s way.

Question 141. What are the duties required in the Eighth Commandment? (Thou shalt not steal)

Answer: The duties required in the Eighth Commandment are: truth, faithfulness, and justice in contracts and commerce …; rendering to everyone [their] due; restitution of goods unlawfully detained from the right owners thereof; giving and lending freely, according to our abilities, and the necessities of others; moderation of our judgments, wills, and affections, concerning worldly goods; a provident care and study to get, keep, use, and dispose of those things which are necessary and convenient for the sustenance of our nature …; a lawful calling, and a diligence in it; frugality; avoiding unnecessary lawsuits …; and an endeavor by all just and lawful means to procure, preserve, and further the wealth and outward estate of others, as well as our own.

Question 142. What are the sins forbidden in the Eighth Commandment?

Answer: …besides the neglect of duties required …: theft, robbery, man-stealing, and receiving anything that is stolen; fraudulent dealing, false weights and measures, removing landmarks, injustice and unfaithfulness in contracts … or in matters of trust; oppression, extortion, usury, bribery, vexatious lawsuits, unjust enclosures and depopulations; engrossing commodities to enhance the price, unlawful callings, and all other … ways of taking or withholding from our neighbor what belongs to him, or of enriching ourselves; covetousness, inordinate prizing and affecting worldly goods …; envying at the prosperity of others; as likewise idleness, prodigality, wasteful gaming, and all other ways whereby we do unduly prejudice our own outward estate; and defrauding ourselves of the due use and comfort of that estate which God hath given us.”

These detailed lists embody the Reformed tradition’s high regard for careful regulation, based on Calvin’s understanding of the positive role of law as a guide to the elect, as we seek a life consistent with our values.

Yet more and more, our churches are infected with the values of the world, rejecting Christ and standing apart from God, without heeding God’s word in any serious or consistent way. Too often, instead of comforting the afflicted and welcoming those rejected by society, our churches operate as self-serving enclaves of spiritual uplift for the already well-off. Yet from Jesus’s example, and certainly from the meaning of his sacrifice on the cross, the church should have much more to give in such a broken world. The quiet rectitude we find in many of our churches is not sufficient even for the spiritual needs of today, let alone the material needs.

To put this vision of stewardship and communion into practice, we must apply the principles of God’s economy in a reconstructive way, uplifting the key societal domains in which God’s love for humanity is especially rooted: work and family, the plight of neighbors, the natural world and future generations, and the wounded church itself. Before we act to heal our broken communion, however, we must understand how these key domains of God’s love are embattled in our economy.

PART TWO: EMBATTLED DOMAINS OF GOD’S LOVE

A. The Crisis of Work

1. Work in God’s Economy

   We must remember that in God’s economy, “my chosen shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain…” (Isa. 65: 22–23). For our economy, this is a question not just of the availability of jobs but of their quality. If many workers find that their compensation is not enough to support their households in dignity, then the economy must be judged as morally deficient. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can bring meaningful resources to bear on the current crisis if we pay attention to our traditions. As Reformed Christians, we must acknowledge that the well-being of individuals, families, and our country is threatened by long-term unemployment and underemployment. Calvin, after averring that human work is ordained by God, writes, “But what if work is removed? That would throw human life into ruin.”

2. Work in Today’s Economy

   a. Employment and Wages

   Of all the issues prompting dissatisfaction with current economic policy, none looms so large as the loss of jobs. While some economic indicators have begun to rebound from the depths of several years ago, the unemployment rate has remained frustratingly high. Understandably, for many, such a “jobless recovery” is no recovery at all.
Across the 2000s, there was no net job creation in the United States, and by the fall of 2011 we had approximately 4.5 unemployed workers for every available job. 11 At the beginning of 2012, between those looking for jobs (12.8 million), those working part time involuntarily (8.2 million), and those working-age people who have dropped out of the workforce altogether (2.8 million), our “total” unemployment rate was approximately 15.6 percent. 12 Disturbingly, more than 40 percent of the unemployed have been jobless for twenty-seven weeks or more, many at high risk of never working regularly again. 13 Even more troubling, youth unemployment, among those between 16 and 24 years old, reached 17.3 percent in 2011, a thirty-year high. For African Americans, the rate is twice as high. For all young people, the employment-population ratio (meaning the percentage of young people with jobs) fell to 49 percent in the summer of 2011, the lowest rate on record. 14 It is no coincidence that many young people of all races choose underground economic activity, and a significant share end up in prison, including approximately 10 percent of young black men. 15

Financial hardship and lost output are not the only costs of unemployment on this scale. Unemployment has massive social costs as well, taking its toll, most obviously, on public resources, but also on the well-being of families and communities, and on the deeper fabric of society. Marital problems, deferred child-bearing, declining physical and mental health, loss of trust in communities and institutions, and declining civic engagement—all are common byproducts of unemployment. This is not to mention the patterns of social unrest particularly associated with youth unemployment, visible not only in the Middle East but, increasingly, in Europe. It should be noted that when the riots broke out in England in the summer of 2011, the youth unemployment rate was 19.6 percent, not much higher than in the United States today. 16

While the spike in unemployment seems to be a recent phenomenon, we’ve had a crisis in job quality unfolding for decades. Over the last thirty-five years, average wages have stagnated for many Americans and declined for a significant minority. Real average hourly wages rose only 0.5 percent between 1973 and 2006, and for those with only a high school diploma, real earnings have actually fallen. 17 Even median household income, despite a large spike in total household work hours, has not improved very much. Adjusted for inflation, it was approximately $44,000 in 1980, and $50,000 in 2008. 18 Job quality should also be measured in terms of health and retirement benefits. But because of their major impact on household living standards, we consider these trends in the next section, on the crisis of the family.

b. Causes of the Jobs Crisis, and Alternative Approaches

The reasons for the national decline in both job availability and job quality are multiple and complex. Certainly outsourcing and automation have eliminated many jobs. Consensus numbers on outsourcing have been elusive. The estimates for outsourced jobs to date range from 300,000 to nearly a million; the most cited estimate for projected losses, from 2002, is 3.3 million service jobs over 15 years.19 But it is increasingly clear that automation may be the bigger factor in declining job availability. To take just one example, in 1955, General Motors produced eight cars for every employee; in 2009, it produced twenty-seven cars per employee (while it’s overall output declined by more than half).20 Amid such competitive pressures from technological productivity and low-wage workers overseas, we now have more than four job-seekers for every available job, as noted above. Even the much touted “education premium” in our economy—which led many to focus on educational access as our new “jobs policy” in the 1990s—may now be fading. After rising sharply in the 1980s and 1990s, the wage gap between college-educated and high school-educated workers was more or less flat across the 2000s. 21 As outsourcing and automation (and the two in combination, through information networks) begin to reach further into white collar sectors, amid potentially very slow growth in the overall economy, the average college graduate (without highly specialized knowledge) may even end up more vulnerable than high-school-educated workers (or those with some college) employed in non-exportable domestic sectors that could continue to grow, such as health care, security, energy, transportation, construction, and maintenance.

While our primary focus must be unemployment and job quality, we should also continue to affirm (as we have in the past) that not all meaningful labor takes place within the confines of what is commonly understood as economic activity. Many varieties of labor, including care for our families and our neighbors, are undervalued in our dominant economic rubric based on Gross Domestic Product (GDP). Some estimates find that the non-market “care economy,” including the human wealth created by child development in our homes, congregations, and other community settings, is potentially half as large as GDP itself and more important for future well-being than many other, more celebrated economic activities such as financial trading. 22 We should be creative in thinking about ways to compensate those whose most productive labor comes in unpaid positions, including provision for basic needs they often cannot access without paid employment, such as health care and retirement benefits.

We can provide creative thinking about job creation as well. When so much attention has been devoted to jobs in the private sector, we should be vocal in our contention that the primary function of work is to provide for the common good, not only for the marketplace. As such, public jobs programs for green renovation, repairing infrastructure, and building schools and other public facilities, may be the type of jobs policy that is most consistent with our theological commitments.

And finally, we must use our collective theological wisdom to refute some fundamental notions about the American economy. As Christians, we must privately and publicly challenge the idea that profit is the pre-eminent value of human economic activity. Economic life cannot be separated from our duties and responsibilities to God and to our neighbors, and a person’s labor is finally judged, Calvin writes, by “whether it is good and profitable for the common good, and whether his neighbors may fare the better by it.”23 So too, a society may be judged by the availability of work for its people, and the sufficiency of those jobs for human flourishing. Over decades and now with particularly severe consequences, we have failed in these responsibilities in our governance and as a people, and this must change.

3. Church Policy and the Meaning of Work

The witness of the Presbyterian church has remained consistent with these emphases on work as part of our identity and as necessarily contributive to the common good. And such witness has been clear in stating that unemployment necessarily undermines these theological convictions. The 1985 report Toward a Just, Caring and Dynamic Political Economy states, “…unemployment robs its victims not only of income but also of one of the principal sources of meaning in his or her life. After all, the Calvinist sense of Christian vocation and worth is tied tightly to work.”24 The report goes on to note how widespread unemployment acutely damages the common good by wasting human potential.

In God’s Work in Our Hands (1996) the church supported the following principles on job quality:

—The foundation upon which all just employment policies are built is access to employment at a level of compensation that allows people to live in dignity and security ….

—All conditions of paid employment, including compensation and working conditions, should sustain and nurture the dignity of individuals, the well-being of households and families, the social cohesiveness of communities, and the integrity of the global environment.25

Echoing the prophetic Social Creed of 1908, which called for full and safe employment with social protections, twenty-five years before the New Deal, A Social Creed for the 21st Century (approved by the 2008 General Assembly) reaffirms a commitment to “employment for all, at a family-sustaining, living wage, with equal pay for comparable work.”14

We have set a theological mandate for ourselves. If we take seriously our theological commitment to work, we have to understand widespread unemployment as a significant theological challenge. When our tradition places such a high value on work, because it contributes significantly both to our individual well-being and the well-being of our communities, we cannot ignore the ethical challenges posed by the increasing possibility that our neighbors may be unable to find meaningful jobs.

B. Families in Need

1. Families in God’s Economy

The importance of family life in God’s ordering of community underlies the entirety of scripture. We see the importance of family life, for example, in the creation stories in Genesis (Gen. 2:18), the celebration of family heritage through long lists of “begats” (Gen.11), in the stories of family love and loyalty under conditions of deep distress (Ruth 1:16), and in the stories of disruption and betrayal in family clans, leading to social unraveling (Gen. 27:18). The New Testament delights us with stories of Jesus’ birth and childhood (Matthew 2, Lk. 2:41) and engages us with scenes of his mother’s concern for him (Mt. 12:46). Jesus himself warns against those who would despise and harm children (Mt. 18:5–10) and challenges us with his expansion of the term “family” beyond biological ties (Mt. 12:48–50). While we no longer accept slavery or the patriarchal ordering of families assumed in biblical cultures, we understand that families are still the original human community and the one best suited for compassionate care and nurture of the person, through all the stages of life. As in the days of large extended households and interconnected clans, it is still true that families’ ability to do these things requires the support of both public and private social institutions.

2. Families in Today’s Economy

The recent recession has greatly expanded the number of families hit by economic pressures that threaten and distort family life. Reduced wages and benefits, increased job insecurity, and job loss are the primary predictors of health problems, higher mortality rates, sleep disturbances, depression, and family conflict. Every recession bring increases in domestic violence.27 At the same time, a slowing economy weakens the capacity of social institutions to respond. Businesses react by cutting labor costs and governments react by cutting public benefits. Workers and their families bear most of the losses and most of the risk in a volatile economy, with devastating consequences for many, especially for the poor.

a. Families Lose Income

Long term trends, as well as the recent recession, have caused household income to stagnate or fall, except at the top. Between 1979 and 2009, the poorest 20 percent of families lost real income (−7.4 percent); the middle 20 percent saw an increase of only 11.3 percent; while the wealthiest 20 percent, in contrast, saw significant gains, averaging 49 percent.28 We have noted that most families responded to lost or stagnant income by adding work hours, taking on debt, or (most often) a combination of both.

Yet, despite these prevalent (if unsustainable) income maintenance strategies, it is estimated that 30 percent of working families with children (and over 50 percent of Black and Hispanic families) do not earn enough to reliably provide the basic necessities for a moderate standard of living.29 The result is that families live with both greater time stress, including less time for family life, and greater economic insecurity. Shockingly, most middle-income families do not have financial assets sufficient to pay for even 75 percent of basic essentials should their income stop for three months. Many of us are one illness, job loss, or unexpected family crisis away from serious economic trouble.

b. Risking Our Children’s Futures

After dropping to a low of 39 percent by 2000, the percent of children living in low-income families rose to 42 percent (more than 31 million children) in 2009. Twenty-five percent of very young children (under six) are now living in poverty, an alarming fact given that the greatest threat to the healthy development of children is poverty and its long-lasting, negative consequences: inadequate amounts and quality of food, exposure to violence, underfunded schools and lack of early childhood educational opportunities, frequent housing mobility, exposure to pollution and other health risks. Most low-income families have at least one adult in the workforce. As they tighten their own budgets, public funding for early childhood education, public schools, childcare support, after-school programs, and summer activities that support children’s development dry up causing children to lose ground developmentally as families lose ground economically. According to the Foundation for Child Development, the recession and slow recovery we are facing today could jeopardize “virtually all progress made for children in the Family Economic Well-being Domain since 1975,” bringing declines in every variable measured in that domain.

Among family types, single mother families have, by far, the highest rate of poverty. Women, in general, are more likely than men to be poor because women earn about 77 cents for each dollar earned by a male worker. Women tend to be segregated into lower-paid, “pink-collar” occupations, and women bear a much larger share of responsibility for children than do men. As always, race/ethnicity makes a difference. Hispanic women have the lowest earnings, $509 per week, which is 59.8 percent of the median weekly earnings of White men. African American women’s median weekly wage is $592, 69.6 percent of that of White men. While more White children live in poverty than do children of other races, the highest rates of child poverty are among young children and among Black, Hispanic and Native American families.

c. Marriage Delayed or Out of Reach

In the last decade households headed by single mothers increased by 18 percent, while those headed by married couples declined to 48 percent of American households. Part of the decline in married couple families can be explained by the postponement of marriage. Seeking more education and economic stability, the age of first marriage has risen to 28 for men and 26 for women. But unmarried child-bearing is more likely among economically disadvantaged couples who also equate readiness to marry with one or both partners having a good job. Few impoverished couples are able to meet this criterion, but of those who do, a large majority marries. As one study of unmarried couples with children concludes, “… the inability to get decent paying jobs is a real constraint to marriage among low income unmarried parents.”

d. Work and Family Conflict

American workers, both women and men, report much higher levels of work-family conflict than do workers of other modern nations. Major causes of this conflict are longer work hours and balancing the schedules of two working parents. At the same time, the United States lacks the network of family-supporting public policies typically found in other modern nations. For example, we are the only advanced nation without a federally mandated paid parental leave policy. The Family and Medical Leave Act (1993) provides twelve weeks of unpaid leave and covers only 50 percent of U.S. workers. Yet, 70 percent of children live in families in which all adults are employed; 25 percent of adult children care for a dependent elder. The care needs of children and elders clearly exceed the minimal public support employed family caregivers get from public policy. In the mismatch between family needs and work demands, employers expect more than forty hours of work from higher-wage and managerial workers. They expect lower-wage workers to work only when they are needed and whenever they are needed, including mandatory overtime, or risk losing their jobs. Family time and care for dependents suffer as a result, with heavy personal and social costs.

e. Rising Health-Care Costs Shifted onto Workers

In 1979, most non-elderly Americans (over 70 percent) were covered by employer-sponsored health insurance. Today that share has shrunk to 58.9 percent, leaving more families to the mercy of the health-care marketplace where medical costs and insurance premiums have rapidly increased even as wages stagnated. In 2010, 49.1 million people under 65 were uninsured, an increase of 12.9 million since 2000. The loss of employer-provided health insurance falls most heavily on the families of low-wage workers, especially Black and Hispanic families and families headed by single mothers. About 10 percent of children remain uninsured nationwide, but these numbers are likely to grow as public health programs are targeted for budget cuts under one or another fiscal austerity plan.

f. Retirement Insecurity

The expectation that a worker should stop working in old age and enjoy a few years of leisure before death is supported in Christian ethics and by our culture. A combination of Social Security, pension income, and savings would support this deserved ease. Today, retirement security is dangerously at risk.

The first pillar of retirement, savings, has almost completely eroded. Decades of stagnant wages, reduced benefits, and unemployment have brought the personal savings rate below 5 percent and family debt is at an all-time high. The second pillar, employment pensions, is also crumbling. Pension coverage through employer-provided plans has been on a steady decline for three decades (from 50.6 percent of workers in 1979 to 42.8 percent today). And for most workers with pension coverage, there has been a shift from defined-benefit plans (contractually guaranteed by employers) to defined-contribution plans, such as 401(k)s. This transformation has shifted the burden of retirement security from government and employers to families and individuals: retirement now depends on families’ abilities to save while working, invest successfully, and retire in a bull market—a much riskier proposition for all but the most affluent. The recent deep recession exposed families’ vulnerability to a retirement dependent on a volatile stock market. As a result, retirement, like any other investment, is now exposed to market risk. In a recent poll, 61 percent of people aged 44–75 said that they feared depleting all their assets more than they feared dying. The Wall Street Journal reported that the median household headed by someone aged 60–62, with a 401K plan, had less than a quarter of what was needed to sustain its standard of living in retirement. The Center for Retirement Research estimates that less than half of American workers will have enough retirement income to support an adequate standard of living.

Social Security, the third pillar of retirement, is the one source of retirement income working families can count on. It is not in crisis. Social Security has the capacity to pay all benefits in full through 2036. After that it will still be able to pay 75–78 percent of scheduled benefits, and there are equitable ways of closing this gap—most feasible, raising or eliminating the cap on wages subject to the Social Security tax. However, strengthening Social Security for the future is not a panacea for retirement insecurity. On average, Social Security benefits replace only 39 percent of pre-retirement income (an average of $14,000 annually); and high unemployment during this recession, as well as the long-term trends of stagnant wages and low-wage work, have only further weakened Social Security benefits, particularly among racial/ethnic groups and women.

3. Church Policies for Strengthening the Family

Transforming Families, approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004), expressed the conviction that families, supported by both religious and social institutions, have the primary responsibility to care for their members, “building up one another within their families,” and to promote “virtues and habits that make for healthy and stable families and communities.” The church understands healthy families to be essential to the well-being of society. It also recognized that families do not exist as autonomous, independent units; rather, “… government and corporate policies and programs have profound effects on family life, for good and for ill, intended and unintended. …

Recognizing that economic stress and deprivation have serious negative effects on the development of children and on family stability, the church called for support of “public policies that encourage strong family life and remove impediments that families face in living out their full vocation.” Specifically, Transforming Families called for jobs with family sustaining wages, adequate and affordable child-care, paid-leave for the care of dependents, flexible work hours, and other family supporting policies. Clearly, the PC(USA) places the support of strong and healthy families as one of the essential goals of economic life and public policies.

C. The Plight of Neighbors

1. Neighbors in God’s Economy

Who are our neighbors? A Jewish lawyer once asked Jesus a similar question. Jesus replied by telling him the story of a Jewish man who was robbed, stripped, and left for dead while traveling on the road from Jerusalem to Jericho. Another man came to the assistance of the traveler, as he would have with a neighbor. Notably, he was not a fellow Jew, but a Samaritan (Lk 10:25–37). The parable answers the interlocutor’s question by suggesting that our neighbors are those around us who are in need.

In these difficult economic times, it follows from biblical tradition that our neighbors are those who are hardest hit. In the United States today, racial and ethnic minority communities are the hardest hit, and racial and ethnic differences tend to magnify the negative effects of economic downturns. For the church, love of neighbors means crossing a number of deep racial divides.

2. The Plight of our Neighbors Today

a. Poverty and Wealth: the Racial Divide

Racial/ethnic minority populations are the poorest in our nation. In 2009, the poverty rate for Blacks was 25.8 percent and for Hispanics 25.3 percent, compared to 9.4 percent for non-Hispanic Whites and 12.5 percent for Asians. Poverty rates are also higher for those who are foreign-born versus those who are native-born. In 2009, the poverty rate among foreign born was 19.0 percent, compared to 12.6 percent for native born. The poverty rate was highest for those who are foreign born non-citizens: 25.1 percent.
We have noted the wage gap for racial minorities, especially women, but the racial wealth gap is even larger and more debilitating. By any measure, people of color possess much less wealth than Whites. In 2007, the median family net worth for all groups was $120,300. Like median income measures, this number masks considerable variation among subgroups. The median net worth for White families was $170,400 while for non-white Hispanics it was $27,800, less than 17 percent of what White families had. In the wake of the Great Recession, 25 percent of households, overall, now have zero or negative net worth, compared to 35 percent of Black households and 31 percent of Hispanic households (as of 2009). Home ownership, often the only source of wealth in minority communities, is also skewed along racial/ethnic lines. In 2000, nearly three-quarters of Whites owned their home while just 46 percent of Blacks and also 46 percent of Hispanics were homeowners. Moreover, between 2005 and 2009, while White household wealth fell by about 16 percent, black household wealth fell by 53 percent and Hispanic households lost 66 percent of their wealth.

b. Financial Segregation

These racial divides in income and wealth are created, in part, by exploitative lending and financial services in minority communities. Lack of access to credit on favorable terms hinders the ability of low-income and minority communities to achieve financial stability. Assets act as an anchor that enables households to weather short-term job loss and unexpected expenses, such as those related to health. They can also serve as capital for starting or expanding small businesses. Minority communities, however, are generally blocked from participating in wealth-building activities on favorable terms.

Take personal savings as an example. Personal savings are a gateway to building wealth. Yet, an estimated 56 million individuals in the U.S., primarily from minority and low-income families, do not have a bank account, much less a savings account. The checks received by these families include government checks for Social Security benefits, welfare benefits under Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF), and Supplemental Security Income. Consumer groups report that among the reasons these families do not have bank accounts are high service charges, minimum balance requirements, and a mistrust of financial institutions. These families are forced to use high-cost cash-checking services to meet their basic needs, diminishing their ability to save and build assets.

Without access to traditional financial lenders, minority and low-income communities often turn to predatory lenders. Predatory lending occurs when the terms of the loan harms borrowers and creates a negative net social benefit. Examples of predatory lending practices include making loans without regard for the borrower’s ability to repay; frequent refinancing that allows lenders to accumulate costly refinancing fees; loan approvals dependent on more borrowing than the customer needs or desires; and steering prime-eligible customers into high-cost loans. Sub-prime loans, one example of predatory lending, were designed for borrowers who could not obtain “prime” loans because of poverty, credit blemishes, or irregular incomes. While they can work to the benefit of borrower and lender, they are often structured to inflict disproportional harm on borrowers. Low-income borrowers often forsake necessities such as heat in the winter, health insurance, or home repairs to avoid default and foreclosure. Moreover, many of these homeowners are often left without legal recourse. The result of such predatory lending practices is a surge in bankruptcies, foreclosures, and abandoned houses in neighborhoods that were once stable. Thus, predatory lenders, which disproportionately target minority communities, extract borrower equity, plunder city investments, and leave abandoned and deteriorated neighborhoods in their wake.

c. The Black Unemployment Crisis

Our racial and ethnic minority neighbors also face higher unemployment than the rest of the population. In July 2011, the unemployment rate for Whites was 8.2 percent, while for Blacks it was 16.8 percent and for Hispanics it was 11.3 percent. Meanwhile, the falling unemployment rate beginning in 2011 masks a racial gap. The unemployment rate for Whites decreased from 8.8 percent in January 2011. But for Blacks it rose from 16.5 to 16.8 percent. While there have long been disparities between White and minority employment, the 2011 unemployment trends reveal that economic downturns often make these existing inequalities even worse.

d. Strangers in a Divided Land

Immigrants are also our neighbors, and yet current immigration policies and popular attitudes make life difficult for immigrants. Several prevalent myths about the impact of immigration prevent solidarity with foreign-born neighbors.

While we often hear that “immigrants take good jobs from Americans,” in fact, immigrants tend to be concentrated in high and low skilled work that complements rather than competes with jobs held by native workers. A more educated and aging U.S. population means that citizens are unwilling or unable to take low-paying jobs often filled by immigrants. Employers hire immigrants to fill the void. This makes it easier, of course, for U.S. employers to exploit workers, and U.S. citizens generally benefit from low prices on food and other goods and services produced by immigrants working in exploitative conditions. On the other side of the spectrum, immigrant entrepreneurs create businesses and jobs for U.S. and foreign workers. High-tech companies founded by Indian and Chinese immigrants have generated billions in sales and created thousands of jobs in the United States.
We also hear that “immigrants are a burden to taxpayers and the system.” In fact, most immigrants pay sales, income, property, and other forms of taxes, as do many undocumented immigrants. In 2010, it is estimated that undocumented immigrant households paid $11.2 billion in state and local taxes. Other studies show a substantial net surplus in federal taxes paid, compared to benefits received, by undocumented immigrant households (native-born children included in many cases). Moreover, because of low fertility rates and the increasing number of retiring baby boomers, immigrant workers are likely to be of increasing importance not only for our economy but for our social insurance system. Younger immigrant workers already are and will continue to support retired baby boomers through their Social Security taxes.

In a pluralistic society like ours, racial disparities in employment, income, and wealth reflect a failure of democracy and a state of broken communion with our neighbors. Being a good neighbor, in the biblical sense, means challenging the ways in which our current economic system perpetuates inequalities along racial/ethnic lines, and exploits our immigrant neighbors as if God never told us to welcome strangers in our land. For the churches of the one God, there is no surer sign of our broken communion than this.

3. Church Policies for Helping our Neighbors

Our church has previously addressed the plight of neighbors with an emphasis on racial, class, and gender barriers, and how these barriers marginalize people and communities. Here, we emphasize how the recent and widespread economic crisis disproportionately affected such communities, but it is important to understand the historic patterns, which reflect a more permanent state of crisis in many communities, now further compounded.

On race and inequality, the 2011th General Assembly (1999) left an important mark with two major reports: Building Community Among Strangers is the church’s most detailed and richly grounded study of racial and cultural conflict, contrasted with the goodness of social diversity in God’s eyes and the Christian necessity of welcoming strangers. A second report, Fighting Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community, is a fine-grained study of the more structural rather than personal forms of racism in contemporary America. An ambitious plan for educating ourselves and for action by the church accompanied the study, calling for efforts to acknowledge and uproot continuing racism, particularly in its institutional forms.

Both of these reports provide important, still relevant background for our analysis of the plight of neighbors in the contemporary economic crisis. Racial disadvantage in particular is clearly a compounding factor in this economic downturn and a barrier to normal recovery in many communities. Although the economic problems we focus on here are notable for their widespread impact, reaching far into the middle class, racial division and differences remain acutely in force among a substantial minority of our population, inflicting deeper and more prolonged economic distress. In these distressing facts we can see that there are degrees of broken communion, which should shape our priorities in response.

D. Future Generations

1. Future Generations in God’s Economy

“The earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it” (Ps. 24:1). As Christians, we are called to be stewards of the earth both for ourselves and for future generations. Understanding the earth not as our property but as a trust from God, we can consider sustainability from the standpoint of creation.

As Christians, our ethic of environmental sustainability is derived from Scripture, beginning with Genesis 1:31, when at the end of the sixth day of creation “God saw everything that he had made and indeed, it was very good.” Then God created the first man and woman and the human race, making us stewards of creation to “till and keep” it for ourselves and for future generations. The emergence of monotheism, which provides a central ordering principle for natural phenomena, is sometimes seen to support a gradual “disenchantment” of nature, intensifying in the rise of science, modernity, and the industrialization that massively impacts the earth’s “carrying capacity.” Early Mosaic law attempted to restrain both human and natural exploitation, leaving some of each harvest for gleaners and calling for periodic debt forgiveness. An awareness of sustainability issues can even be seen in the Torah’s rules of war, including prohibitions against tactical deforestation and against using food trees to build siege-works (Deut. 20:19–20). Repeated prophetic assertions of injustice’s consequences for future generations (such as Isa. 24: 5–7, 10–11) reflect an understanding of systemic impacts over time, or social sustainability.

In addition to the Sabbath and Jubilee traditions of the Old Testament, the New Testament language of “God so loved the world” — “cosmos” in the Greek — points to a vision of salvation capped by Revelation’s “new heaven and new earth,” where the new Jerusalem is part city and part garden, Eden restored, to match the “new creation” redeemed in Christ. The groaning of creation in Romans 8 is answered by the unity of creation of Colossians 1, seen by some as a vision of a Cosmic Christ. Ethicist Larry Rasmussen surveys the ecumenical debates over stewardship and sustainability in response to the complex interactions of natural and human systems, such as the impact of sea level change on migration patterns and social conflict. He writes:
Sustainability means thinking sideways and around corners, not just up and down in hierarchies or forward and back in our usual sense of time and history. … Thinking inside multiple connections does not mean we cannot act, only that the subject of thought is the entanglement of relevant wholes rather than pieces and parts…. Sustainability thinking means latitude for both error and adaptability. ...

Rasmussen reviews data on how natural balances are in fact more dynamic than static; catastrophe comes when apparent equilibria become overloaded, but this overloading takes place incrementally. Traditional economic models may leave out “externalities,” or natural endowments of air, water, or land that are undervalued or excluded from market calculations and often polluted unless regulation or taxation require these values to be “internalized” in prices.

Economist Herman Daly presents the alternative to conventional growth most starkly, calling for a “steady state economy” that would be dynamic yet focused on minimizing “throughput” and recovering all waste products. On this model we borrow resources from the natural stock and return them on various schedules, using new forms of measurement that lift up social and environmental health rather than aggregate production or consumption.

Rasmussen and others look toward a vision of earth partnership as much as stewardship, and in line with this report’s vision of communion, a wide range of Christian thinkers—from eco-feminists to Eastern Orthodox—seek to recover a relational and sacramental approach to life in harmony with nature. Cynthia Moe-Lobeda goes precisely toward a concept of “sacramental cosmic communion” going back to Luther’s understanding of the Spirit of Christ indwelling in nature. Greek Orthodox Metropolitan John D. Zizioulas applies a traditional understanding of humans as “priests of creation,” not to worship creation, but to help it reflect God’s glory and to help heal its wounds.

In these uncertain times, Presbyterians emphasize that God is sovereign and it is God’s peace (“shalom”) that the church should seek to embody. This is a distinctive hope for the future, but not an otherworldly one. Biblical symbols of the economy of Shalom are the Garden of Eden and the coming of God’s kingdom or reign, which is prefurged by observance of the Sabbath. In an economy of Shalom, God’s grace surrounds creation and ensures that there is enough to share. Sabbath-keeping reclains time for worship and enjoyment of nature rather than consumption and rivalry, thereby modeling social sustainability.

The modern definition of sustainable development comes from the World Commission on Environment and Development in 1987, named the “Brundtland Commission” after its Norwegian chairperson. The commission defined sustainable development as “development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of the future generations to meet their own needs.” This definition was well-intended but inadequate because it defines sustainability strictly in terms of human needs, and can sometimes seem a contradiction in terms. We recognize, instead, that environmental limits set the boundaries for sustainable development along with human needs, and for wealthy countries, in particular, environmental limits require a rethinking of how we define human needs and how success and happiness in our culture are too often defined by unsustainable levels of consumption.

2. Today’s Unsustainable Economy

If “needs” are defined by current U.S. standards of consumption, meeting such needs worldwide today would require resources and sink capacities equal to five planet Earths, according to the widely used “ecological footprint” methodology. The average American consumes 500 more calories per day in 2008 compared to 1970. More than 73 percent of Americans are overweight or obese; at the same time, 26 percent of food is wasted at the consumer level. In 2000, per capita U.S. consumption of all materials was 52 percent higher than the European average; in 2009 only 1.1 lbs of municipal solid waste by one-third between 1950 and 1980, and remains 25 percent higher in 2010 compared to 1950—a slight moderation for the better, mostly due to improved efficiency, but still a large-order shift given our reliance (mainly) on nonrenewable energy sources.

Excessive consumption in wealthy societies and rapid economic development in Asia and other parts of the world are pushing our planet into ecological crisis. We are facing staggering biodiversity loss, with approximately “21 percent of all known mammals, 30 percent of all known amphibians, 12 percent of all known birds, 35 percent of conifers and cycads, 17 percent of sharks, and 27 percent of reef-building corals” now threatened with extinction, according to the International Union for the Conservation of Nature. Global fish populations are in steep, rapid decline, with a potentially “catastrophic” collapse of 100 percent of currently fished species by 2048. Scientists now count more than 400 coastal “dead zones” caused by fertilizer run-off and other pollutants—including one extending 7,500 square miles from the mouth of the Mississippi River. While we have seen improvements in air and water quality in the United States in recent decades, due to aggressive environmental regulation, many of our ecosystems are in deep trouble. We have severe pressure on freshwater systems and soil quality in drier regions of the United States—40 percent of U.S. land is categorized as vulnerable to desertification by the Bureau of Land Management. Global warming poses the biggest, potentially catastrophic problems, as heat-trapping gases threaten environmental changes ranging from severe, unpredictable weather patterns, to rising sea levels, to acidification, desertification, and other life-threatening changes in our ecosystems.
The United States has been the driver of global consumption and has set an unsustainable standard in its fixation on limitless consumption. We have 4 percent of the world’s population but consume roughly 25 percent of the world’s resources, while also producing roughly 25 percent of global greenhouse gas emissions. Our “ecological footprint”—the amount of resources and sink capacity we use to support our per capita consumption—is among the highest in the world and significantly higher than many countries with similar standards of living. For example, Dutch living standards are roughly similar to ours, but with an ecological footprint more than 40 percent smaller.

Our ecological debts are compounded by mounting social liabilities in our population and communities, even as our federal revenue has remained essentially frozen at mid-twentieth century levels. Under these constraints, particularly given the added pressure of military buildup in the 1980s and the rising costs of entitlements, our nondefense discretionary spending (our social spending) fell by 36 percent between 1980 and 2000. On this trend, large-scale declines in social well-being are likely, because we are weakening our ability to invest in knowledge and technological innovation, early childhood development and education, improved infrastructure for commercial and social needs, and other key forms of human, social, and public capital for our future prosperity and solvency as a nation. Disturbingly, based on previous failures of austerity-based policies, the current dominant prescription for our emerging fiscal problems—lower taxes and massive spending cuts—seems only likely to further weaken our ability to invest in future productivity, wealth-creation, and well-being.

3. Church Policies for Sustainability

The church’s most recent statement on sustainability issues, “The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming,” approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), recommended specific practices and policies to support a major “green transition” toward renewable energy use. Fossil fuels, primary sources of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases, were to be used as frugally as possible with advocacy for incentives and taxes to shift public investment and recover clean-up and public health costs. Given the still-unsolved problem of waste disposal and its capital and insurance costs, nuclear power was not seen as a solution. Major shifts in transportation of food as well as people, and in power generation, agriculture, industry, and urban planning were seen as vital to slowing the increase in earth’s temperature.

As we turn now to the threats to the church’s own life, we recognize in the current recession that few congregations have been able to retrofit, re-equip, or even redevelop their buildings with the newest energy-efficient technologies. Further, some congregations, camps, and conference centers have been approached by companies seeking to “frack” or use hydraulic fracturing technology to extract natural gas from their properties, a tempting option in this economy, despite growing documentation of serious groundwater risks.

E. Wounded Church

1. The Church in God’s Economy

In his letter to the Ephesians, Paul reminds us that we, like they, are called into the church as fellow “citizens with the saints and also members of the household of God, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, with Christ Jesus himself as the cornerstone” (Eph. 2:19–20). In Christ the walls of our divisions have been broken down. In Christ Jesus, we find our common purpose, as “the whole structure is joined together and grows into a holy temple in the Lord,” (Eph. 2:21) and we too are being built together to become a dwelling in which God lives by his Spirit (Eph. 2:19–22). To the Corinthians Paul writes: “the members of the body that seem to be weaker are indispensable. … God has so arranged the body, giving the greater honor to the inferior member … [that] the members may have the same care for one another” (1 Cor. 12: 22–25) This God-designed community that we work to establish within our church walls is a community we are called to replicate in the world at large, preparing a way, and preparing ourselves, for the coming reign of God. As Calvin writes, “… it appears that the name of neighbor is not confined to our kindred or people who live near us, or with whom we have connections, but extends to the whole human race.”

2. The Church in Economic Crisis

a. Economic Impacts on the Church

The Great Recession hit the Presbyterian church just like it did other American institutions. The crisis affects church budgets and church relationships. Although church giving is motivated by faith, the amount of giving is based partly on income. When income falls during a recession, church giving falls, even without faith wavering. But cyclical ups and downs of giving only tell part of the story of the church’s embattlement in our economy. Other longer trends are more troubling: church closings and mergers, large inequalities among congregations and in pastoral compensation, loss of racial diversity, radically reduced funding for global mission, service ministries, and national church agencies, and the use of secular practices in employment and compensation. We must consider the possibility that these trends manifest an even deeper, if hidden, wounding—injuries brought on ourselves by an unrecognized captivity to cultural and economic norms.

Statistically, on average, Presbyterians may be the wealthiest U.S. Christians—largely due to our older age and high levels of education. And yet we have deep divisions among our congregations, with 44 percent unable to afford “full-time, installed” ministers with full benefits, even as some of our churches use private recruiting firms and pay six-figure salaries to head pastors. How does such inequality illustrate the biblical vision of one body, one holy temple in the Lord? This is a question the church has found hard to address honestly. Meaningful revenue-sharing or revolving fund models to share congregational wealth across social divides, as Paul suggested to the Corinthians, are not widely practiced among us. Yet it is churches in lower-income neighborhoods, ministering to those with the least economic resources, which suffer most from economic stress and the broader trends of denominational decline, as decreasing national giving reduces the congregational subsidies and services that could be provided by the wider church.

Amid the stark divides between our rich and poor churches, we see that the wider “middle” of the church is struggling, too. Current data from Presbyterian Research Services point to a striking indicator: in 2010, median church membership was only 95. Attendance numbers are smaller, meaning that critical mass and ability to sustain a full-time, installed pastor is lacking in perhaps as many as 50 percent of congregations. Not surprisingly, a recent survey suggests that the financial crisis was another shock to the system, with approximately 20 percent of responding congregations reporting being very hard hit. As families have struggled to maintain themselves, sending most wives and mothers into the workforce, church members have lost the time to volunteer their skills and talents. The Barna Institute shows a 9 percent decline in church volunteering generally from 1991 to 2011, with only 19 percent of the population volunteering at local congregations. Undoubtedly, as we write, literally thousands of our churches are barely hanging on.

Other trends are worrisome. Both Presbyterian and ecumenical data confirm that congregational receipts for general mission giving and special offerings sent to denominational offices have been decreasing. Presbyterian giving on average, as a percentage of income, stood at 1.2 percent of gross household income in 2004 and stands to have declined since that time. Pastoral salaries and social status have declined and this is often felt as a wound, even as ministry involves more sacrificial levels of service. Denominations (and other nonprofit organizations) have sought to compensate by promoting “designated” giving to specific programs. As money stays increasingly at local levels, however, the work of denominational ministries becomes less effective and less understood and congregations themselves become consumers. Economic downturns, in fact, may correspond with higher likelihood of splits within denominations.

Denominations are no longer vertically integrated providers of resources for diverse communities and the whole lifecycle: from Christian education, to camps and conferences, to campus ministries, family ministries, and retirement homes. As the experience of “church” narrows and communal memories are lost, more insular, para-church, and spiritual self-help movements have grown, led by innovators more in tune with consumer culture. Smaller, self-help groups may grow, but larger scale civic involvement has declined (as in Robert Putnam’s Bowling Alone study); a vision of the whole church’s mission is reduced. Compounding the cultural drift, unemployment patterns for young adults will continue to push the mainline and Presbyterian age profile toward future irrelevance. As educated, middle-class children move back home, put off marriage, connect through cyberspace, struggle with debt, and see a decline in their future prospects even if employed, they are less likely to be sustaining members of traditional congregations. The wounding of the church, then, includes a loss of hope of connection and an erosion in its particular forms of social capital.

b. Captive to the World?

By any material measure we are less than we were before. But the losses may go deeper in many ways. Have we lost a faithful vision of what the church must be and what the church can do? In The Institutes, Calvin worries about the church losing its direction: “The communion of the Church was not instituted to be a chain to bind us in idolatry, impiety, ignorance of God and other kinds of evil, but rather to retain us in the fear of the Lord and obedience of the truth.” If we see that the biblical and Reformed values we confess are failing to shape our relationships in this one Body, have we allowed, unwittingly, economic values to determine the value of what we do and who we are? Have we responded to the economic threats we face, as families, congregations, and a denomination, by mimicking the common sense of the world? In times of crisis and chaos, it is easy to slip into behaviors seen as reasonable, even necessary, by worldly economic standards. And in this way, the Body becomes dis-membered; the poor of Jerusalem are on their own. Calvin was worried about other types of idols, but his warning is still applicable. If the economic values of our society become so much a part of our minds and hearts that we are unable to see them in ourselves, we too are in danger from the power of idols.

c. More Than Sanctuary

Wounded as we may be, the church has not ceased to be the church. Many congregations continue to welcome and nurture all God’s children. Many provide a haven, material assistance, and other kinds of support, for those who suffer. Many open their doors to refugees and displaced families. The comfort of sanctuary, spiritual and material, is known in our churches.

But a sanctuary is not a hideout, as the Dobbs Ferry, New York, church proclaims on its sign. There is a danger in viewing ourselves as a place of refuge in times of crisis. There is danger in the tempting idea that the world around us can be kept out and ignored, as we take care of our own. The church of the Reformers was never a place to escape from the world. Their vision was much bolder; indeed their mission was to actively participate in bringing about the Kingdom of God—and that included a prophetic witness to the economic order in which they lived. André Biéler, writing on Calvin’s vision of the church, noted the Gospel example: “Jesus Christ restores among Christians, the members of his church, a fair redistribution... of the goods intended for all; that sharing act prefigures the re-establishment of economic order throughout society.93 Indeed, we are about “the promotion of social righteousness; and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world.”94

d. The Power of Communion

Communion, the centerpiece of our liturgical practice, stands as a vital reminder of what the Reformed Christian believes. The meaning of communion was central to the theological debates of the Reformation, and Calvin considered it essential to Christian worship. Calvin’s words on communion are lyrical, teaching us that in communion “Christ transfuses his life into us, just as if it penetrated our bones and marrow.” It is in this sacrament that we truly meet the Reformation, for in the Lord’s Supper we are re-formed and re-membered.

We do not claim that we are the body of Christ in an attitude of privilege. We must not move from reverence into self-righteousness. Being the body of Christ to the world is not an honor, but a profound responsibility. When we remember how Christ viewed his own mission, when we remember that Christ came not to be served but rather to serve, then we understand what we are called to be in this sacrament. We are called not merely to partake of the Eucharist, but to become Eucharist, pouring ourselves out gratefully for others as Jesus did. The love we find in communion is not a love that can be idle in the face of oppression. It is a love that leads this God-designed community to embrace ever wider practices of caring inclusion and justice-oriented outreach. Calvin, for us, gave the proper perspective:

We shall have profited admirably in the sacrament, if the thought shall have been impressed and engraven on our minds, that none of our brethren is hurt, despised, rejected, injured, or in any way offended, without our, at the same time, hurting, despising, and injuring Christ; that we cannot have dis-sension within our brethren without at the same time dissenting from Christ; that we cannot love Christ without loving our brethren; that the same care we take of our own body we ought to take of that of our brethren, who are members of our body; that as no part of our body suffers without pain extending to other parts, so every evil which our brother suffers ought to excite our compassion.95

PART THREE: EXTREME INDIVIDUALISM AND THE ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

The crisis described in this report is tearing at the very fabric of life in the United States—in the workplace (or on the unemployment line), in our homes, among our neighbors, in our churches, and on the face of the earth itself. It threatens the health and well-being of body, mind, and spirit, household, community, and nation. Why, then, do we—certainly our leaders—seem so incapable of cooperating and compromising to meet our economic challenges? What is holding us back?

The failure of common action is rooted in a number of significant changes, from the polarization of party politics to broader demographic “sorting” according to lifestyle, education, and class. But the primary reason is ideological: the triumph of an extremely individualistic worldview in our politics and culture, inherited from economic theory and nurtured in powerful populist forms by ideological think tanks and media networks, over several decades.96

Most fundamentally, the ideology of radical individualism draws a bright moral line between individual deservingness and the actions of government. On one side, it places the natural distribution of the market, where individuals are said to be rewarded according to their contributions, nothing more or less; on the other side, it places an intrusive, illegitimate government, which uses taxation to “socialize” market-produced wealth, in order to serve other moral concerns or simply to grab power. But in the highly advanced society we live in today, this extreme individualism has limited factual truth and thus makes little moral sense. For the large majority of Americans who work for large companies and institutions, or who sell their products or labor to a very few bulk producers, franchisers, or distributors in a given industry, individual rights require protections from vastly disproportionate employer or monopoly power—protections that markets, on their own, do not provide.97

Of course, individuals, particularly entrepreneurs, contribute a lot to our economy. But the fact is, wealth creation also substantially depends on collective sources of productivity: cooperation and other forms of social capital, public goods such as education and research, and collective assets such as ecosystem services. For example, one major study found that 15 to 20 percent of productivity growth (and corresponding income gains) in the twentieth century was attributable to investments in public education that improved the quality of the labor force.98 Add to this the value of commercial infrastructure, public investments in scientific research and technological development, public health programs, and government contracting in many emerging fields (among many other public investments, services, and goods), and it’s clear that market income is as much if not more a product of societal development than of individual effort, intelligence, or any other unique contribution that would warrant strict claims of deservingness against other (social) claims, based on, say, essential human dignity or the priority of the common good. In Christian tradition, social contributions to income are readily understood from the logic of creation, where life is a gift, the land is God’s, and redemption is only possible though the grace of God. In America, however, extreme individualism issues in a thoroughlygoing blindness to such dependencies, and attacks on government get much of their force from this blindness.

Following Saint Paul, the Reformers always claimed that civil authority is ordained by God and has a vital role in the public order. As Calvin writes, “… the powers that be are from God, not as pestilence, and famine, and wars, and other visitations from sin; but because he has appointed them for the legitimate and just government of the world.”99 We cannot join in the chorus of those demonizing government solutions for societal problems, because we understand the role of government to be a divinely sanctioned one. Earlier assembly reports have lifted up more of Calvin’s proactive view of government’s role, such as the initiation of a silk-weaving industry in Geneva to help with unemployed refugees, and during the Great Depression years of 1932 and 1934, the General Assembly called for more democratic accountability of capital in addition to direct provision of employment, as in the Civilian Conservation Corps and Works Progress Administration. The General Assembly also adopted thorough studies of church & state relations in 1953 and in 1988.

Today we understand that government must often provide what markets, intrinsically, cannot provide. The classic example is national defense. Since the benefits of national defense cannot be packaged and sold, and those who avoid payment still enjoy the benefits, markets will not provide such a good, and thus government must use its taxing and organizing abilities to ensure that defense is produced. Other goods such as education exhibit both private benefits and social benefits. If left to the private sector alone the response is inefficient—not enough resources are devoted to education. Our nation’s productivity suffers and our standards of fairness would collapse as some young people are outbid by others in an unregulated competition for educational advantage. Basic research, too, is not efficiently provided by markets, because the diffuse flow of benefits from such knowledge is too risky for private investment. Thus, if anti-government fervor continues to control our politics, and public investment in these and other areas is reduced, market failures from which we were previously fairly well-insulated could seriously imperil our national productivity and future well-being.

To be sure, we cannot counter uncritical rejection of government with equally uncritical support for all forms of government action. Governments, while ordained by God, are human institutions and subject to errors like all such institutions. We must be clear that when we defend the role of government, we also claim the right to critique government as well and to demand that civil authorities act in ways that are consonant with their special vocation. “[T]hey are not to rule for their own interest, but for the public good; nor are they endued with unbridled power, it is restricted to the wellbeing of their subjects.” So, as a church, we speak a nuanced message about governance. We are committed to the role of government in ordering our civil society and assisting in human flourishing. At the same time, we are vigilant about the power of government, that it will serve the common good and not simply the interests of the few.

A particular challenge in the maintenance of legitimate government is the influence of money in the political process. The concentration of extreme wealth in the hands of a tiny minority in this country has brought a corresponding shift in the power of government, from serving the many to protecting the few. If the church is to present a plausible defense of the role of government, we must also challenge the increasing role that moneyed interests play in the creation of our economic policy.

Much as the church has a valuable role to play in upholding the proper role of government, the church can also provide valuable counsel regarding taxation. Perhaps no other issue arouses such vehement opposition. Indeed, a large segment of our political leadership has made opposition to taxation the primary issue in their campaigning. It should be clear, however, that the Reformed tradition has always maintained the legitimacy of taxation, that taxation is not “theft,” and that it is crucial for the maintenance of the common good. Solutions to the current economic crisis that depend solely on spending cuts, without any new revenue from taxation, must be rejected by people of faith, especially as the impacts of such spending cuts often fall most heavily on the poor and dispossessed in our society. Taxation does carry with it a high responsibility, of course. As Calvin writes, “… whatever [the princes] receive from the people is as it were public property, and not to be spent in the gratification of private indulgence.”

We must also remember that, as citizens of a democracy, the success of our country is our responsibility. We have a voice in the system, and our voice should be informed by our theological convictions. It should also be heard. For people of faith, voting should not be seen as a privilege, but rather as a moral duty. But that is just the beginning of our public responsibility. We must understand that the practice of governance demands courage of the people we elect and may force them, in service to the common good, to take actions that may be politically unpopular. In many cases, our most effective means of steeling their courage is to speak to their own personal faith. If we, and all Christians, attest to the higher power and assert the moral imperatives from our tradition—boldly, in public life—the people may finally be heard; the economy could be healed.

CONCLUSION

From our liturgy, we have the image and practice of communion, the work of “re-membering” the body of Christ. From Jesus’ example and teachings, we have our model for changing the world in communion with others. With Jesus, we see our future in the vision of Isaiah, who foretold of a new heaven and a new earth, where the fruits of the earth reward the laborer who brought them forth, and each has enough to live peaceably one next to another, like brothers.

From our own church heritage, we confess that God is sovereign, and we hope that God reigns in our love, turning every action toward the common good. From our century-old tradition of social witness, the church has authority to address the economic crisis at hand, but now the urgency is greater than before. We hold these truths in common and they prepare a new way for us to live.

For those we love, and for all we should love, who are suffering in our economy, we must open the way. May God’s grace empower our work of communion in these times of real testing for our faith, yet even greater opportunity in our hope.

It heard from a range of experts on job creation, retirement security, children in poverty, social protections, international competitiveness, and tax policy. It drew on the expertise of its members for theology, ethics, economics, analysis of economic impacts on the church and its work of synthesis and new application.

1. The roots of the word “economy” are traced back to the Greek words “oikos,” which means “household,” and “nomos,” which means “law” or “rule.” Economy, therefore, means “the rules of the household.” In Christian tradition, the classical understanding of economy has continued to persist in ideas of a “moral economy,” subject to human and social needs.

The budget includes rented housing, the USDA’s low-cost food budget, child-care, transportation, health insurance, taxes and other essential expenses, such as clothing. As a national average, a two-parent, two-child family would need an income of $48,778 to provide these basic needs.

Moreover, home ownership is defined simply as having a mortgage, which is hardly a sign of wealth when so many homes are underwater—worth less than their mortgages.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 11-10

[The assembly approved Item 11-10. See pp. 28, 32.]

A Resolution on Workers’ Rights and Income Inequality—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns requests that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Recognize its historic support for the just compensation, pension, and benefits that offer life and health to people and speak loudly and clearly on behalf of these rights.

2. Renew the PC(USA)’s commitment to a living wage for all people and support for minimum wage campaigns at the state level.

3. Recognize the PC(USA)’s historic support of collective bargaining rights regarding wages, benefits, and unemployment.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk to write a pastoral letter to congregations about the plight of the working poor and the reality of the cycle of poverty in which people are entrapped, calling congregations to support and advocate for collective bargaining rights for all people.

5. Direct the Office of Public Witness to engage in advocacy for collective bargaining rights for all workers as part of a comprehensive strategy to preserve the middle class in the United States, who have a crucial role in the economic recovery.

Rationale

- “You shall not defraud your neighbor; you shall not steal; and you shall not keep for yourself the wages of a laborer until morning” (Lev. 19:13).
• “Woe to him who builds his house by unrighteousness, and his upper rooms by injustice; who makes his neighbors work for nothing, and does not give them their wages…” (Jer. 22:13).

• “Then I will draw near to you for judgment; I will be swift to bear witness against the sorcerers, against the adulterers, against those who swear falsely, against those who oppress the hired workers in their wages, the widow and the orphan, against those who thrust aside the alien, and do not fear me,” says the Lord of hosts” (Mal. 3:5).

• “The disposition to admire, and almost to worship, the rich and the powerful, and to despise, or, at least, to neglect persons of poor and mean condition is the great and most universal cause of the corruption of our moral sentiments.” ~Adam Smith, Scottish political economist (1723–1790)

• “No society can surely be flourishing and happy, of which the far greater part of the members are poor and miserable.” ~ Adam Smith, Scottish political economist (1723–1790)

• “Inequality, then, is not just unattractive in itself; it clearly corresponds to pathological social problems that we cannot hope to address unless we attend to their underlying cause. There is a reason why infant mortality, life expectancy, criminality, the prison population, mental illness, unemployment, obesity, malnutrition, teenage pregnancy, illegal drug use, economic insecurity, personal indebtedness, and anxiety are so much more marked in the U.S. and U.K. than they are in continental Europe. The wider the spread between the wealthy few and the impoverished many, the worse the social problems: a statement, which appears to be true for rich and poor countries alike. What matters is not how affluent a country is, but how unequal it is.”

A. Introduction

Income in equality, long a problem in our society, has been exacerbated in recent years during the current economic crisis. While the damage done by extreme income inequity and the loss of worker rights has been disproportionately borne by racial ethnic persons, families, and communities, losses have been experienced by a majority of U.S. residents across the society. The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns calls the General Assembly to commit to helping reverse the trends of the last thirty years that have contributed to the erosion of the middle class, the rapid rise of inequality, and the increase of injustice and economic oppression for racial ethnic persons, families and communities.

Three strategies have been identified as crucial to ending and reversing extreme inequity and supporting the rights of workers:

1. Ending wage theft, payroll fraud, and low-wage standards;
2. Ending the erosion of collective bargaining rights that lead to greater inequality, the deterioration of the middle class, and more economically segregated communities; and
3. Ending cutbacks of benefits (pensions, medical insurance, unemployment, and disability benefits) that cause a further waning of people’s ability to participate fully in community life.

B. Income Inequity, Employment, Collective Bargaining Rights, and Race in the U.S.

Many families and communities continue to struggle in the aftermath of the economic crisis, but evidence shows that the struggle is comparatively deeper and more difficult for African Americans and Hispanics. A Pew Research Center study published in July 2011 showed a significant gap between the median wealth of white households and that of African American and Hispanic households, with white households holding a net worth of 18–20 times that of Hispanic and African American, respectively. Much of the gap, which grew significantly between 2005 and the end of the last decade, was shown to be due to losses in the collapse of the housing market, which hit African American and Hispanic families harder than white residents. The vast increase in foreclosures has been directly related to these communities being targeted for subprime loans. Research shows that in some communities, nearly half of all loans offered to racial ethnic homebuyers over the last decade were high-risk and financially exploitative. When the recession produced greater rates of unemployment in these communities, the concentration of subprime lending greatly increased the profound depth of financial disaster and has made recovery all the more difficult.

Employment trends in racial ethnic communities do not hold hope for a turnaround in inequities in wealth across racial lines. Public sector job losses, which began in the early days of the economic crisis and which continue as cities, states, and the federal government continue to seek ways to cut costs, weigh more heavily on racial ethnic communities and families. The public sector has long been a primary source of employment for African Americans and Hispanics, as compliance with employment law in government has long offered greater opportunity to them than private business.

The loss of collective bargaining rights, particularly for public sector employees, has thus increased the difficulty for African American and Hispanic families and communities and increased income inequities along racial and ethnic lines. Racial ethnic persons are more likely to join unions because of the greater risk to employment and income instability that are part of the experience for many persons of color in the U.S. Regaining these rights makes for justice for all workers and will have a particularly positive impact on racial ethnic families and communities.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-10

Comment on Item 11-10—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The GAMC, through the Office of Public Witness (OPW), advocates for collective bargaining rights when relevant legislation is under consideration in Congress, based on General Assembly statements from 1952, 1959, 1969, 1980, and 1995. Most notably, the General Assembly statement from 1980 addressed these issues:

“In view of our theological understanding of liberation, justice, community, and the reality of sin, we affirm the right of all workers, except those on whom national or community security depends, to join labor organizations and participate in collective bargaining …

In view of our theological understanding of life of Christian servanthood we affirm the necessity for the Church to view economic issues from the side of the lowly and oppressed and for Christians active in our economic system to be concerned for serving the needs of the world.

The Presbyterian Church in the U.S., which is disproportionately represented in its membership by managers and professionals will need to engage in a conscious effort to view labor-management issues from the perspective of the unskilled, uneducated, and underpaid … The style of servanthood means that economic activity needs to be viewed as serving the needs of the world. Decisions should not be based solely on the self-interest of corporations, workers or social interest groups. Servanthood also means that a stronger emphasis needs to be placed on a mutual sharing of burdens instead of the shifting of risks to other people, groups, or societies in a time of growing economic uncertainty.

In view of our theological understanding of grace beyond justice we affirm the need for new approaches to labor-management relations. The point of the Parable of the Laborers and the Vineyard (Mt. 20:1-16) is that while all workers receive a just wage, God's grace reaches beyond the demands of justice. The Church affirms the rights of labor organization and collective bargaining as minimum demands of justice but also points beyond the current adversary system in urging exploration of new methods of labor-management relations, seeking arrangements which offer opportunities for workers through their efforts and productivity to share greater economic rewards.” (Minutes, PCUS, 1980, Part I, p. 229.)

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Recognize with joy and thanks to God the historic stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in pursuit of justice as a central mandate of our church, a mandate that calls us to uphold the need to be faithfully partisan in situations of injustice and to speak truth to power, wherever necessary as we pursue justice, without fear of retribution or the delay of deflection.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this joyful recognition through a pastoral letter to congregations and mid councils.

Rationale

In order to fulfill our call to live out The Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns recommends a recognition of our call to engage the work of justice in church and society. This call is based in part on the last three of the Great Ends: “the preservation of the truth; the promotion of social righteousness; and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world.”
All of these call us to justice work. Our Great Ends parallel biblical teachings (including Deut. 16:20: “Justice, and only justice, you shall pursue.”) and the statements of faith of our church, including this section from A Brief Statement of Faith:

We trust in Jesus Christ,
fully human, fully God.
Jesus proclaimed the reign of God:
preaching good news to the poor and release to the captives, teaching by word and deed and blessing the children, healing the sick and binding up the brokenhearted, eating with outcasts,
forgiving sinners, and calling all to repent and believe the gospel. (The Book of Confessions, 10.2, Lines 7–18)

In sovereign love God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community. (The Book of Confessions, 10.3, Lines 29–32)

In a broken and fearful world the Spirit gives us courage to pray without ceasing, to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced,
and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace.
In gratitude to God, empowered by the Spirit, we strive to serve Christ in our daily tasks and to live holy and joyful lives, even as we watch for God’s new heaven and new earth, praying, “Come, Lord Jesus!” (The Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 65–76)

In a time of great transition in our church and the general society, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns calls the church to recognize justice as central to the understanding we hold of Christ’s call to the church.

_A Resolution to Continue the Work of Deborah’s Daughters—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns._

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Direct that the [coordinator of Women’s Leadership Development in the] Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area of the General Assembly Mission Council continue [her] [its] work with the program, Deborah’s Daughters, for the next two years and report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

2. Direct that the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, after receiving the 2014 report from the review done through the Deborah’s Daughters program, make recommendations to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) that contribute to a proactive, health-giving ministry to and relationship with our clergywomen.

_Rationale_

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: _2004 Referral: Item 05-03. Recommendation 4. That the General Assembly Request the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, Following Review of Resources Currently Available to Meet the Needs of Clergywomen in the Call Process and in Pastorates, to Make Recommendations That Contribute to a Proactive, Health-giving, Ministry to and Relationship with Our Clergywomen—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns_ (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 77, 389–90).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns continues to determine whether any entity within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has done a thorough review of resources specifically designed to meet the particular needs of clergywomen. Since this referral was assigned, the Office of Committee on Ministry (to which this referral was originally directed) was dissolved in the last restructure of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). The work of this office has been incorporated into the Office of Vocation, leaving no single staff person with the responsibility for resourcing committees on ministry.
Inquiries to presbyteries regarding what resources they have available have gone unanswered. Contact with the Board of Pensions and Research Services concerning the possibility of discovering resources available to clergywomen has been initiated by ACWC, but responses have not been received in time for this report.

In the time that ACWC has been seeking out whether a real review of resources has been done, the coordinator of Women’s Leadership Development in Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/PW has initiated a new program called Deborah’s Daughters. This staff person, the Reverend Dr. Nancy Young, in leading this program is discovering what issues clergywomen face in their ministries and what resources they need to be sustained in their work. She is essentially doing the review, live and direct with the clergywomen.

One of the top priorities for the coordinator of Women’s Leadership Development is to implement processes in order to assess the leadership development needs of women clergy and to develop programs and ministries to meet those needs. Deborah’s Daughters was created as a response to this priority. It is a program of conversation with clergywomen, commissioned lay pastors, and other women leaders in the church, based on the story of Deborah in Judges 4–5 and drawing upon four roles that Deborah holds in her story: judge, prophetess, strategist, and mother of Israel. Although these four roles and the accompanying gifts are found in men as well, for the purpose of this work, the roles and gifts are examined in context of women in leadership.

For the program Deborah’s Daughters, the coordinator of Women’s Leadership Development began by sending out an informational e-mail to all the presbyteries of the PC(USA). The e-mail explained the goal of meeting with clergywomen and commissioned lay pastors for the purpose of assessing leadership development needs. She was willing to come to the presbyteries to meet with the women but needed a place to meet, some publicity, and the presence of women. In the beginning, she expected to get five or six invitations. To date, she has received more than forty invitations, clearly portraying the need for such a program. In 2011, Deborah’s Daughters has made it to women in more than twenty presbyteries.

While Deborah’s Daughters was started with the intention of being an assessment tool, it has become much more than that. Women are talking to one another, planning strategies for making sure their voices are heard in the church, and looking at their ministries with renewed hope and energy. The face-to-face meetings are invaluable. Deborah’s Daughters brings women together and provides a venue for women to speak and be heard. The gifts women bring to ministry will have a great influence on the future of the church. These gifts—and these women—deserve respect, honor, and support. Through these sessions, the coordinator of Women’s Leadership Development is learning what helpful resources are available to clergywomen throughout the denomination as well as what kinds of resources are still needed to fully support them in their calls to ministry.

Given the overlap that this work has with the incomplete review to which ACWC was to respond and the fact that this is a program already in place, ACWC believes the continuation of Deborah’s Daughters to be a natural response to this unfulfilled referral. The information ACWC will receive from two years of listening and assessing need via Deborah’s Daughters will be a sound basis for making meaningful recommendations “that contribute to a proactive, health-giving, ministry to and relationship with our clergywomen” to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-12

Comment on Item 11-12—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/PW is happy to work with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns to assess the needs of clergywomen in the PC(USA) through its listening visits in presbyteries and synods. While these listening visits, designed as an assessment tool to begin to determine programs and ministries to facilitate with women in the church, could certainly continue, we are prepared to share with you now our discoveries. Please see below the Deborah’s Daughters Listening Visits Assessment Report. We share this report with the General Assembly as well as the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, who are welcome to use the information gathered in this report to respond to its General Assembly referral.

Deborah’s Daughters Listening Visits Assessment Report

Deborah’s Daughters is primarily conversations with clergywomen throughout the church, although commissioned ruling elders and other women leaders have also been a part of these conversations. The name Deborah’s Daughters is based upon the story of Deborah in Judges 4–5 and draws upon roles that Deborah held and the gifts of women for leadership in the church.

One of the goals of the Women’s Leadership Development Office the last two years was to implement processes in order to assess the leadership development needs of women clergy and members and develop programs and ministries to meet these needs, in consultation with other GAMC offices, mid councils, congregations and other appropriate groups. And, the staff person in Women’s Leadership Development was to engage in conversation and determine strategies for addressing issues facing women in the larger church.
Initially, invitations were sent to presbytery staff requesting meetings with clergywomen and commissioned ruling elders, primarily in order to assess leadership development needs of women in the church. The only requirements for these meetings were a place to meet, some publicity, and the presence of women. In 2011, Women’s Leadership Development staff visited more than twenty presbyteries to hold listening visits. A Deborah’s Daughters group was also formed on the “All Women in the Church” website of the PC(USA), and a Deborah’s Daughters Facebook page was created.

1. Discoveries for Women’s Leadership Development

Besides the anecdotal stories that were shared in conversations with clergywomen and commissioned ruling elders, the following issues and concerns were raised.

a. Issues and Concerns Raised

(1) Family Leave Policies

There is no consistency in regards to family leave policies. Some presbyteries have them for presbytery staff but not for congregations, for instance. Women have taken calls as single women, gotten married, become pregnant, and been told they have two weeks of sick leave. Some congregations rejoice with their pastor and are incredibly supportive, providing paid leave and a willingness to accommodate flexible schedules. However, this is not simply about maternity leave. There is a need for family leave policies for all church workers, as any illness of a family member may require leave time.

(2) Pay Equity

The Vocation ministry area has made available a pay equity tool. However, presbyteries have not responded to a request for information from their use of it. There were stories of women accepting a call as pastor and later discovering that their pay was as much as $10,000 less than the previous male pastor. Many women are working below presbytery minimum pay scales, due to the limited ministry budgets of their congregations. And, very few women have been willing to challenge congregations to pay them more.

(3) Attitudes

Most of the women engaged in the listening visits expressed dealing with misogynistic attitudes from both men and women. This is especially true of young women pastors; they are often treated as though they are not pastors, but apprentices. There were also stories of sexual harassment. Some of the stories were from 20–30 years old and were as recent as last year. Sexual harassment and abuse stories ranged from comments made to women about clothing, hair, and body type to rape.

(4) Practical Ministry Training

There was a need for practical ministry training sessions for effective parish ministry, i.e. how to run a session meeting, manage a budget, manage a staff, put together an agenda, engage in conflict management, and mediation with church leadership. The Reverend Dana Fearon, who was the pastor of Lawrenceville Presbyterian Church in Lawrenceville, N.J., for more than thirty years, used to run a one-day workshop for graduating seniors at Princeton Seminary called “ARC,” Actually Running the Church. It was a valuable workshop for pastors going into their first parish.

(5) Negotiating, Pension Plan, and Retirement

Many women talked about the difficulty of negotiating a package as they were moving into a new call or negotiating a raise beyond the cost-of-living increase. A related topic was the amount of the congregation’s contribution to the Board of Pension plan, as many small congregation pastors felt this expense was a hardship for their congregations. Retirement planning is also an issue, as many women are anxious that they will not be able to retire with any sense of security.

(6) Loneliness

This is a recurring issue for women clergy. They often feel that they are not welcomed at ministerial associations in their communities. Some are the only women clergy for miles around and have no women colleagues within close driving distance. Very few presbyteries have clergywomen who gather together, even in presbyteries that are geographically small enough for monthly gatherings. Communities of women from seminaries and other shared experiences sustain clergywomen over long distances and time. Most clergywomen—not all—desire the community of other women.

(7) Spiritual Nurture

Some of the women who participated in Deborah’s Daughters conversations made a point to seek out spiritual directors or continuing education opportunities to deepen and enliven their spiritual lives. Some felt ill-equipped to take care of their own spiritual needs. The majority of women engaged in the listening visits expressed a desire to have some kind of spiritual care. Most also felt that they were often spiritually depleted by the demands of caring for their congregations.
b. Ministries That Emerged, Which Could Be Facilitated for the Leadership Development of Women

   (1) Models of Covenant Community

   There are communities of women in our presbyteries and in other denominations that are effective. These range from monthly lunch meetings, to once-a-year retreats, to virtual internet communities. Many women would participate if offered different models of covenanting communities, which specifically reflect upon and respond to the needs of women and nurture the women who participate.

   (2) Mentorship Programs

   There are several models of mentorship programs. Several young clergywomen in the listening visits would point to older, more experienced women in the room and say, “I wouldn’t know what to do without her.” As the experiences of women are different than the experiences of men, it would be beneficial to pair up newly ordained clergywomen with other women who have had some experience in ministry. This would be a source of empowerment and encouragement.

   (3) Regional Gatherings for Leadership Development

   Most clergywomen do not have the financial resources to attend national gatherings and when they use their continuing education funds, they want to be sure that they will gain something significantly beneficial in return for the funds they expend. Regional events that include training, conversation, and workshops on some of the issues raised above would be welcomed by many clergywomen. Some have said that they want more intellectual stimulation with theologians. Others want communion and community with others. Some want practical ministry training in order to gain skills. Regional gatherings for leadership development with a variety of foci are an option for meeting some of the expressed needs as a result of the listening visits.

   (4) Online Connectivity

   The Deborah’s Daughter’s group on the All Women in the Church website could be used more effectively. It would be helpful to discover more ways for women to connect and gather online.

   (5) Addressing Pay Equity and Family Leave

   Pay equity and family leave policies are issues best addressed at the mid council level, and specifically in presbyteries. Conversation on these and similar issues are best addressed by committees on ministry, committees on preparation for ministry, and mid council executives. The Office of Women’s Leadership Development is hopeful that with the number of mid council executives who responded favorably to invitations for Deborah’s Daughter’s Listening Visits, that mid councils may be willing to take the next steps to facilitate ministries specifically with women and begin to address some of the issues and concerns that women in their mid councils have raised.

2. Conclusion

   Deborah’s Daughters listening visits began as a means to assess the needs of women in the church, starting specifically with clergywomen. The next step is to begin to facilitate ministries with women across the church based on the discoveries gleaned from this assessment. These listening visits have become more than an assessment tool, in that women are talking to one another, planning strategies for making sure that their voices are heard in the church, and looking at their ministries with renewed hope and energy. The face-to-face meetings held with women in the church have been invaluable. These listening visits brought women together and provided venues for women to speak and to be heard.

   The gifts that women bring to ministry already have greatly impacted the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Church of Jesus Christ. These gifts—and these women—deserve respect, honor, and support.

_A Resolution Commending Study of the 2011–2012 Horizons Bible Study and the Accra Confession—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns._

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) commend the 2011–2012 _Horizons_ Bible Study on _Confessing the Beatitudes_ and the World Communion of Reformed Churches’ Accra Confession (included in the study) to the whole church for prayer and study.
Rationale

The 2011–2012 Horizons Bible Study on Confessing the Beatitudes includes a detailed study of Jesus’ Sermon on the Mount and the World Communion of Reformed Churches’ Accra Confession. The Bible study is timely in that it addresses issues of poverty, wealth inequalities, and economic injustices in light of the biblical witness and a global and ecumenical confessional statement. According to the World Bank:

- Two thirds of the world’s people live in poverty.
- 95 percent of people live on less than $49 a day.
- 75 percent live on less than $10 a day.
- 48 percent live on less than $2 a day.
- 19 percent live on less than $1 a day.

The 2011 U.S. Census data showed that 46.2 million people in the United States are living in poverty. In the wake of the Great Recession of 2007, wealth inequalities in the U.S. and in the larger global community are weighing more heavily on the minds of people around the world. Commending Confessing the Beatitudes to the whole church for prayer and study would signal our solidarity with people who are the most vulnerable in our nation and around the world and invite individuals and our whole community to consider our own faithful Christian witness in the midst of a fragile global economy.

A Resolution to Encourage Participation in the Words Matter Project—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Call on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to promote and encourage participation in the Words Matter project of the Justice for Women Working Group of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

2. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to include the Words Matter project on its website’s carousel of rotating features for one week each quarter, beginning September 2012, and continuing through June 2014.

3. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, in cooperation with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), to develop and distribute a bulletin insert promoting the Words Matter project.

4. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to provide support to the National Council of Churches’ Justice for Women Working Group for Phase 2 of the Words Matter project in the amount of $4,000.

Rationale

The National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. Women’s Ministries’ Justice for Women Working Group has been involved in an initiative over the past two-and-a-half years to re-direct attention to the lack of progress being made throughout member communions regarding the use of expansive language with reference to God and inclusive language with reference to the people of God. It has been a challenge to develop innovative methods and involve greater numbers of people to explore this issue.

Words Matter, the name for this project, has been designed to incorporate more than words for God and God’s people. Words Matter, according to the current site calling for Lenten prayer submissions, “values relationship and storytelling, expansive rather than restricted language, cultural attentiveness, and an understanding of how words are tied to systems of power” (http://hosted-p0.vresp.com/562830/e8cf257e94/ARCHIVE). According to the Words Matter site, “Those who agree that Words Matter believe that the words we use shape our realities. We believe that real, personal and social justice is tied together with the language we use. We believe that the words we use can even reinforce the very systems of injustice we say we want to dismantle. Words Matter” (http://wordsmatter.org/more-information/about/).

Phase 1 of Words Matter began with a symposium held in Chicago, in August 2010, made up of thirty people from many member communions and a wide variety of ages, races, professions, and sexual orientations. Seven Presbyterian men and women participated in the symposium. It was a transforming experience for all participants. A Lenten devotional, made available via the internet, was developed for 2011 by the Words Matter group as a follow-up. This more updated communication vehicle was used extensively and was quite well-received.

Information regarding Words Matter needs to be communicated widely throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Using current resources, such as bulletin inserts and the denomination’s website carousel of rotating features on a regular basis will assist in disseminating the information and will promote the use of Words Matter.

Phase 2 of Words Matter, which is now underway, will include several strategies. The major thrust will be re-vamping www.WordsMatter.org. The budget for Phase 2 is $30,000. A challenge grant of $15,000 has been received from Women of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America and the United Church of Christ Justice and Witness Ministries. To date, Presbyterian Women’s Justice and Peace Committee of the Churchwide Coordinating Team has contributed $3,000 and a small Presbyterian fellowship in Southern California has contributed $1,000. A grant from the PC(USA) in the amount of $4,000 to match the two Presbyterian contributions would be a solid commitment on the part of the PC(USA) to this project.

For Advent 2011, devotionals were prepared for daily use on the Words Matter website. Extremely positive results were received, which affirms investing in a new website is moving in the right direction. There were 4,546 total visits, with 3,673 different people having visited the site. Seventy-seven percent were new visits. The website is attracting a younger constituency and, by its nature, is evangelistic. Prayers will be the focus for the 2012 Lenten devotional series.

The ACWC continues to advocate on behalf of the Words Matter project and our work together with other communions in the Justice for Women Working Group of the National Council of Churches of Christ. In these days of a continuing difficult economy, working together with other denominations is wise and helpful for everyone. We urge the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to join in supporting Words Matter.

Comment on Item 11-15—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The General Assembly Mission Council recognizes and supports the Words Matter project of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., initiated by the Justice for Women Working Group. This inclusive and expansive language project includes devotionals, resources, and videos in an effort to bring inclusive and expansive language out of the academy and church government and into congregations and the stories of people’s lives.

The Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area has supported Phase I and Phase II of the Words Matter project. Presbyterian Women, Inc. (PW) sent contributions in 2010 and 2011, and PW funded two staff person’s participation in the Words Matter project. Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries sent a contribution in 2011, and a grant is planned for 2012, and grants have also been budgeted for 2013 and 2014.

A Resolution to Ensure Implementation of Updated and Detailed Safe Child Policy in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, with the aid of the Child Advocacy Office, to create a new resource concerning safe child measures in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that can be available for presbyteries and individual churches.

2. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, with the aid of the Child Advocacy Office, to create sample safe child policies that would be available online for use in presbyteries and individual churches as a resource for developing their own safe child policies.

[Financial Implications: (2013) $5,700—GAMC—Unrestricted]
Currently the Office of Child Advocacy in the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has provided some extremely helpful resources regarding safe child measures and safe child policies, which are available online. The primary resource is the “We Won’t Let It Happen Here!” training model.¹ The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) asks that the GAMC direct a more updated and detailed resource be created and posted online as a resource model in place of this training model. Certain sections such as the “Procedures for Selecting and Screening Staff and Volunteers” and “Providing a Safe Environment” are in need of changes to meet evolving matters in current safe child policies. There are many issues that have evolved with safe child policies over time, such as technology use with children/youth, which are not addressed in this resource.

The focus of safe child policies is to ensure a safe, thriving, and nurturing environment for children and youth in our churches and church-sponsored events. These policies address screening child and youth workers and volunteers, how to implement mandatory training, simple rules involving transportation and adult/youth/child ratios, minimum age requirement of volunteers, facility security and safety, etc. It is important to understand in developing these policies that these policies and procedures are separate from sexual misconduct policies, and there is a need to differentiate between these resources and policies.

It would also be advantageous for PC(USA) churches and presbyteries to have sample safe child policies available online. These policies would not be used verbatim, but would be used in correlation with individual church/presbytery insurance company advice and individual state regulations for creating safe child policies. It would helpful for these sample policies to be accompanied with a resource that gives churches and presbyteries direction in beginning to create their own safe child policies. The resources currently given on the PC(USA) website give ideas for creating safe child policies, but no sample policies are given.

It is the church’s responsibility to provide a safe, thriving, and nurturing environment for children and youth, and we must take seriously how our faith informs this responsibility. Our theology of the child is reflected in how we care and nurture these children and youth in our churches. And this theology must reflect the love, care, and high regard for the humanity and dignity of the child reflected in the Gospels.

Rationale

“The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. ...”
(Book of Order, F-1.0403, Unity in Diversity)

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2008 Referral: Item 09-16. Creating a Climate for Change Within the PC(USA) Report to the 218th General Assembly (2008)—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 54, 55, 1009–55).

One of the greatest challenges facing the church today is the call to become a truly diverse and inclusive community of faith. If the church is to take this call seriously, it must work to dismantle the systems of power and privilege that create barriers to change in all aspects of church life. The Climate for Change Task Force, created by the 218th General Assembly (2008) to review the equal employment, affirmative action, supplier diversity, and cultural proficiency policies for the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly, calls the church to examine its organizational life and commit itself to systemic change in its work and life together. Therefore, the task force urges the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve the above recommendations.

The Climate for Change Task Force was charged to examine General Assembly policy, and it has done so with an understanding that the work of the General Assembly-related agencies has an impact on the life of the larger church. The effort to become culturally proficient is both a response to the church’s historical call to be a prophetic witness to justice and an opportunity to develop the expertise necessary to equip leadership across the church, to transform the organizational culture of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in ways that will support the denomination’s goal of becoming a more diverse community of faith.

The PC(USA) has a long history of General Assembly action supporting equal opportunity and affirmative action, and a commitment to reflect the diversity of God’s people in its institutional life. Despite this commitment, effective change within the life of the PC(USA) has been painfully slow. The task force also recognizes that change has become a constant in church life and organizational structures are becoming more fluid. In order to sustain an effective commitment to the transformative vision of becoming a culturally proficient community of faith, the recommendations of the task force seek to accomplish the following:

- Encourage effective leadership of cultural proficiency by senior management, promoted by their respective governing boards, councils, or committees;
- Develop and maintain a strong system of accountability, built on committee oversight and regular reporting to the General Assembly; and
• Affirm interactive and cooperative roles and responsibilities for the existing General Assembly committees (General Assembly Committee on Representation, Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns).

The recommendations delineate responsibilities between monitoring achievement of affirmative action goals and the implementation of a strategic plan for cultural proficiency:

• The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) has responsibility for affirmative action employment and supplier diversity goals. Numerical goals and accomplishments are a critical measure of compliance and progress. Affirmative action is one tool in the larger process of equipping agencies to be culturally proficient organizations. This role for GACOR is consistent with their responsibilities as defined in the Book of Order. They are also the one General Assembly-related body that has explicit charter to advocate for persons with disabilities within the system.

• The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), working in partnership and consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), serves as the lead committee to monitor implementation plans for cultural proficiency in General Assembly-related agencies. This review, assessment, and consultation process will now happen in a six-year cycle, in conjunction with each agency’s overall review. While GACOR gathers the biennial statistical reports from each agency, ACREC will be able to look at longer trends as part of their review of cultural proficiency and the agencies’ implementation plans.

• The participation of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) in the process will ensure a gender lens is part of the on-going assessment of cultural proficiency.

There is an intentional intersection in the work of these committees, recognizing that the roles and responsibilities of each committee complement the others, and that each committee works more effectively when they are working in consultation with each other.

Finally, reflected in the name chosen for this document, the task force wants to underscore what it considers an essential shift in focus required if vision is to become reality. Unexamined systems of privilege and entitlement in any organization are powerful barriers to change. Recognizing and redefining racism, sexism, and other “isms” as systems that create privilege is critical to understanding what is at stake and what kinds of change need to occur to create an organizational culture that is truly welcoming of all people. De-centering privilege means redefining power within an organization—who holds it, how it is used, and how people within a system participate.

In a truly culturally proficient organization the diversity of the members helps to shape organizational life and define organizational identity—it does not expect all newcomers to adapt and conform to what is. This is the transformation that needs to happen to move General Assembly policy from words on paper to lived reality in the agencies of the denomination and throughout the life of the church.

At its roots, the transformation that must happen is a spiritual one. It is the call to give expression to Christ’s abundant hospitality in the life of our institutions. It is the call to all Presbyterians to recognize the commitment to sustaining diversity in community as a fundamental expression of our deepest held theological beliefs and values—our spiritual DNA—the call to embody God’s boundless love in creation to be God’s agents of justice and reconciliation in the world.

I. Introduction

We live in a complex, pluralistic, and rapidly changing world—the world that our Creator God loves, sustains, and continues to redeem. While the world around us is changing rapidly, the cultural identity of the PC(USA) is deeply rooted in the dominant culture of U.S. society. Our membership remains 92 percent white despite concerted efforts to increase our diversity while the communities we serve are increasingly multicultural. There are communities in our nation today where there is no majority group and these demographic trends are projected to continue into the future. As a denomination, we need to learn to communicate the good news of the gospel, interpreting our reformed tradition both in language and practices that connect to this increasingly diverse world. As we seek to grow the church deep and wide, denominational policies of nondiscrimination, affirmative action, and cultural proficiency take on new significance as tools that equip the church to be an effective witness. Intrinsically to this task is the challenge to confront the ways in which our traditions and organizational culture continue to embody the realities of systemic privilege. We need to redefine racism, sexism, ableism, etc., as systems that create privilege for some, at the expense of others. Such a reorientation of perspective and perception is essential to garner the energy and motivation for the kind of deep change required to transform our organizational life from one that confronts diversity as a problem, to one that thrives on the gifts of diversity.

The Climate for Change Task Force was created to review the denomination’s EEO, affirmative action, supplier diversity, and cultural proficiency policies for the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly. Over time, some of these policies became dated, and subsequent actions of the assembly created confusing and overlapping reporting requirements. The task force began its work by reviewing the existing policies. It met with the executives and other representatives of all six agencies to learn how the current policies are being implemented and to gather input from the agencies involved. They also met with the committees of the General Assembly that have a stake in the process: Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR), and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. They also met with members of the racial ethnic caucuses to learn about the impact of these policies at the grass-roots level of the church. Finally, the task force invited subject matter experts who discussed the “state of the art” for these programs in education and in business, as models for the church.3

The Climate for Change Task Force was created to examine church policy and has done so with a consciousness that simply revising policy is not enough to transform the church. To equip the agencies of the General Assembly to serve in an increasingly diverse society and support local congregations and mid councils in ways that increase their capacity to minister in an increasingly diverse society, there must be a deep commitment throughout each agency and effective, forward-looking leadership to create organizations that thrive on the rich benefits of diversity.

This will not happen accidentally. It requires a greater awareness of the ways in which systemic racism, sexism, and other systems of oppression create barriers to the goals of diversity, inclusion, and equity. It requires courage to confront the ways in which white privilege and other forms of systemic privilege are embodied in our organizational life. It requires intentional strategies for change and the development of organizational capacity to effect change. It requires new standards of excellence for management and employees alike that recognize cultural proficiency as a mark of the highest professional standards. It requires vigilance on the part of the church and visionary leadership on the part of both its elected and employed leaders. And it requires courage that leads to radical discipleship—a willingness to engage in critical self-examination and open dialogue with those who have been marginalized, so that vision may become reality.

II. The Current Context

The agencies of the General Assembly currently employ a number of strategies to effect change in the workplace and conduct the business of the church in a manner consistent with the church’s policies and commitments to justice, equity, and diversity in community. These strategies include:

- The Churchwide Affirmative Action Plan,
- Minority Vendor Policy,
- Affirmative action policies for major contracts,
- Cultural Proficiency Initiative.

Each of the agencies related to the General Assembly is working in a variety of ways to achieve the goals established by the General Assembly and the churchwide plan. One goal that challenges every agency is the need to increase diversity in upper management. In addition to agency efforts aimed directly at their own employment posture, Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries (GAMC) has developed a number of leadership institutes to help identify, nurture, and develop the leadership of women and people of color across the church. In 2010/2011 they sponsored the following events:

- Racial Ethnic Clergywomen’s Leadership Institute, Montreat Conference Center, September 19–22, 2010,
- Clergywomen’s Leadership Institute/Young Women’s Leadership Development event, PC(USA) Big Tent, June 30–July 2, 2011,
- Racial Ethnic and Immigrants Convocation, PC(USA) Big Tent, June 30–July 2, 2011,
- Continuing Education Seminar for Hispanic/Latino-a Presbyterian Ministers, July 13–18, 2011,
- African American Executive Leadership Seminar, August 28–31, 2011,
- Women of Color Consultation, October 20–23, 2011.

The 2004 ACREC report to General Assembly, Creating a Climate for Change, called for the creation of an online recruitment database targeting potential candidates for executive and leadership positions within the church. The Diversity in Leadership Network (http://gamc.pcusa.org/ministries/diversity/) was created through the Office for Organizational Diversity, Education and Recruitment (GAMC). It works with all six of the General Assembly-related agencies. As stated in the website, the network is designed:

- “To equip the church in the creation of diverse and inclusive environments.”
- “To assist in the identification of individuals for key leadership opportunities within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).”
The Diversity in Leadership Network provides a platform for:

- “culturally rich information,”
- “valuable recruitment and retention resources,”
- “referral resources in the identification of potential leaders,”
- “interactive open-forum discussion on issues of diversity and inclusion within the church.”

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), in its 2008 report to the General Assembly, raised a number of questions concerning the implementation, reporting, and accountability requirements of these strategies. They found:

- Agencies reported employment data in two different formats, one to ACREC, as part of its review of the implementation of cultural proficiency, and in a separate report to the General Assembly, in response to the Churchwide Affirmative Action Plan (AAP).

- Affirmative action goals established in the Churchwide AAP had not been revised or updated since 1991, despite significant change in the representation of women and people of color in the labor force over the past twenty years. The affirmative action employment goals identified in the Churchwide AAP are for 20 percent total racial ethnic representation and 40 percent for women.

- The 10 percent goal established for the Minority Vendor Program had not been reviewed or updated since 1985. (It does not reflect the growth in racial ethnic populations and expansion of minority- and women-owned businesses.)

- Minority vendor goals are not applied consistently to all General Assembly-related agencies. Only the GAMC (which provides some purchasing services for OGA and PILP) reports its accomplishments under this policy.

- The current Minority Vendor Policy does not reflect critical changes over the past two decades that have created a vastly different purchasing environment, including the use of credit cards by a significant percentage of employees and the growing use of online purchasing.

- The Churchwide AAP directs agencies to use the services of Project Equality to ensure that major contractors with which the church does business are in compliance with the church’s affirmative action policies. Project Equality, a nonprofit organization created to provide these services, is now defunct. Agency practices continue to comply with the intent of the Churchwide AAP but the task force found that an accountability system is needed to ensure that agencies continue to maintain these practices.

III. The Recommendations

The task force offers the following assessments, based on its review of policy and information-gathering sessions with agency representatives, General Assembly committees, and subject matter experts. These assessments provide the context and rationale for their recommendations.

A. Systems of Accountability

Historically, responsibility to review and monitor implementation of the Churchwide EEO/ AAP was assigned to the GACOR. While agencies regularly report their employment data to the General Assembly, this data has not been shared with, or requested by GACOR, in recent years. In the course of the task force’s inquiry, the current committee membership asserted its interest in reclaiming a more active role, as outlined in the Churchwide Plan and the Book of Order.

While the impetus for cultural proficiency emerged out of the work of ACREC and oversight is lodged with that committee, ACWC shares a common role and purpose related to advocating for gender equity in the church and its predecessor groups prior to reunion have had an active role in advocating for the creation and implementation of affirmative action in church employment policies and practices.

Staff turnover, organizational downsizing, and restructuring have also impacted committee effectiveness. Sharing roles and responsibilities between GACOR, ACREC, and ACWC is one way to sustain continuity in the work of the committees as it is less likely that all three committees and their staff would experience significant turnover at the same time.

Having an effective system of accountability is essential to sustain organizational commitment and effective action. The recommendations in this report seek to:

- Strengthen accountability while reinforcing and clarifying the distinctive roles of the three General Assembly committees (GACOR, ACREC, ACWC);
• Encourage shared responsibility and capacity for sustained engagement; and
• Maintain consistent assessment and regular reporting of agency activity to the General Assembly.

The recommendations make a clear delineation between affirmative action efforts (which include supplier diversity and contract compliance,) and cultural proficiency, which has a wider, more systemic focus on embracing diversity and transforming internal organizational culture to support a more diverse workforce.

• Committee responsibilities are divided along these lines, with GACOR having responsibility for affirmative action and ACREC, in consultation with ACWC, having responsibility for monitoring cultural proficiency.

• The GACOR will receive statistical reports from all six agencies in a two-year cycle, reporting on all six at each General Assembly.

• The ACREC, as outlined in their 2010 report to General Assembly, will review agency implementation of cultural proficiency in a six-year cycle, in conjunction with each agency’s overall review by the General Assembly. The ACREC’s review focuses on agency implementation plans. The statistical reports gathered by GACOR will serve as one source of data, allowing ACREC to look at trends over time, rather than one-time snapshot data. They will not need to gather separate or duplicate statistical data.

There are three committees of the General Assembly that participate in the system of accountability related to the church’s commitments to full inclusion and participation of all persons in the life of the church. They are:

• Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC),
• Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC),
• General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

Each of these committees has a distinct purpose and perspective, as well as distinctive roles and responsibilities. The advocacy committees include persons who represent constituency based organizations within the church, where GACOR has representation from, and relationship with, the mid councils of the church. The advocacy committees are tasked with addressing the concerns of specific constituency groups (women and people of color), where GACOR is tasked with addressing issues of diversity and inclusion more broadly, including categories such as age and disabilities. Together, these committees work to equip the church to live in to its vision and constitutional mandates. In its review, the task force found that the distinctive role of each committee is essential to maintaining a comprehensive system of accountability. The recommendations of this report seek to reaffirm and enhance the interactive relationship and strengthen collaboration between the committees, while clarifying their distinctive roles.

B. Churchwide Affirmative Action Plan (AAP)

The Churchwide AAP establishes broad numerical goals for employment and minority vendor purchases (supplier diversity). These goals, which have not changed since they were established in 1985, are dated and do not reflect rapidly changing demographics. The Churchwide AAP also directs agencies to ensure that major contractors are aware of PC(USA) policy and are also in compliance with AA/EEO principles and regulations.

The Churchwide AAP was never intended to be a static document. If it is to be an effective tool, the Churchwide AAP

• needs to be reviewed and updated on a regularly recurring basis;
• needs to have updated numerical goals in a regular recurring schedule;
• needs to support goals with a strategic action plan, with measurable objectives and target accomplishment dates; and
• agencies must report goals, action plans, and accomplishments to the General Assembly on a regular, recurring schedule.

C. Supplier Diversity

In government and industry, the term “minority vendor policy” is no longer used. The term “supplier diversity” is more accurate and consistent with current practice.

The purchasing practices of any corporate entity are no longer the exclusive purview of a purchasing agent. The expanded role of employees in making purchases online and/or with their credit cards means that each employee becomes an agent in meeting the General Assembly’s goals. This new environment mandates less reliance on a compliance-oriented approach and greater focus on education efforts to train, resource, and promote employee support for supplier diversity goals.
An educational approach to supplier diversity could help to link that goal to other equity initiatives of the PC(USA), including support for self-development, sweat free, fair trade, and green initiatives, and the standards developed by the Mission Responsibility Through Investment committee, reinforcing the understanding that the agencies and their employees are agents of the church and should conduct their business in all ways in a manner consistent with the policies of the General Assembly.

D. Cultural Proficiency

Cultural proficiency describes an approach to managing diversity in ways that respond constructively to the challenges of diversity and create a working environment that enables all employees to contribute to their fullest. It is designed to address multiple dimensions of diversity that might create tension within an organization, and create a culture that adapts well to learning about difference. Depending on the needs of an organization, Affirmative Action strategies (such as targeted recruitment or supplier diversity purchasing goals) may be a critical component to implementing cultural proficiency. Antiracism and prevention of sexual harassment training may also be components of a cultural proficiency initiative. An effective plan will also communicate top management’s commitment to its goals and train managers for effective leadership in a diverse environment. In any setting, becoming culturally proficient will include unique strategies that address the challenges of that particular organization. Based on their study of the implementation of these strategies in private industry and education, the task force recommendations:

- are based on an understanding of cultural proficiency as both a process and a vision for organizational life that flourishes on the strengths of diversity;
- recognize strategies such as affirmative action, supplier diversity, prevention of sexual harassment, and antiracism training currently employed by the church as tools that contribute towards achieving the larger vision of cultural proficiency—not competing initiatives; and
- affirm the use of these strategies and other tools, in support of the deeper commitment to organizational and cultural transformation expressed in its cultural proficiency initiative.

E. Statistical Data for Affirmative Action

As part of its consultation process, the task force met with representatives of the racial ethnic caucuses in the PC(USA). It was very clear in these conversations that for these communities within the church, these policies are not idle words on paper to satisfy legal obligations. Women and people of color within the church expect the church as an employer to practice the highest standards of performance in this arena and keenly feel the injustice when the church fails to live up to its own proclamation. Statistical data and numerical goals for employment and purchasing are tools for identifying where there are problems and where progress has been made. Representatives of the caucuses expressed deep concern that the church’s failure to live up to its commitment to affirmative action and cultural proficiency has wide-ranging consequences that limit the church’s capacity to adequately support the needs of their congregations and perpetuate their invisibility and marginalization in the life of the denomination. They also look to the agencies of the General Assembly to provide leadership and establish models for mid councils that can help the whole church live into its vision of becoming a community of faith that truly reflects the diversity of God’s people, equipped to proclaim the gospel to all God’s people.

A specific issue was raised by the Middle Eastern Caucus, relating to the establishment of numerical goals and the collection and reporting of statistical data for affirmative action and supplier diversity. The collection of data on race and ethnicity related to contracting, purchasing, and employment is governed by federal law, which recognizes four protected groups. These are: African American, Asian American and Hawaiian/Pacific Islander, American Indian or Native American, and Hispanic or Latino/a. The racial ethnic caucuses of the PC(USA) reflect this same construction of racial identity, with one addition—the Middle Eastern Caucus—which is recognized and incorporated in the overall structure of racial ethnic mini-societies. An educational approach to supplier diversity could help to link that goal to other equity initiatives of the PC(USA), including support for self-development, sweat free, fair trade, and green initiatives, and the standards developed by the Mission Responsibility Through Investment committee, reinforcing the understanding that the agencies and their employees are agents of the church and should conduct their business in all ways in a manner consistent with the policies of the General Assembly.

The basic intent of federal law is protective, that is, to measure compliance with equal employment opportunity law and to facilitate affirmative action planning. Originating in the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960s, the scope of this body of law is limited and applies specifically to groups that were identified as having experienced historic racial discrimination in U.S. society. Thus, under current federal law it is not lawful for any employer to collect data identifying employees or vendors as Middle Eastern.9

While federal law limits data collection, it does not limit the parameters of the church’s cultural proficiency initiative, which encompasses a broader and more flexible understanding of diversity. Within the parameters of cultural proficiency, the agencies of the church can and should work to ensure that Middle Eastern Presbyterians are fully incorporated in the life of the church. The Middle Eastern Caucus, like each of the PC(USA) racial ethnic caucuses, may address the leadership of PC(USA) agencies whenever there is a concern. Middle Eastern Presbyterians are also represented in the membership of ACREC, where they participate in the ongoing processes of oversight and accountability for the implementation of cultural proficiency.
Similarly, questions have been raised about establishing numerical goals and gathering data on the workforce participation of people with disabilities. In this area, employers are guided by the Americans with Disabilities Act that does not permit data collection but does prohibit discrimination and mandates that employers provide reasonable accommodation, where needed, to enable qualified employees to do their job. This mandate to create a welcoming work environment, including reasonable accommodations where needed, fits well within the framework of becoming a culturally proficient organization. In the PC(USA), structures for accountability and oversight concerning full participation of persons with disabilities is included in the scope of responsibilities assigned to the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR). The GACOR also maintains a liaison relationship with Presbyterians for Disability Concerns. Moreover, the recommendations of this report address strengthening the active participation and consultation between GACOR and the advocacy committees (ACREC and ACWC), facilitating effective oversight of agency efforts through the strategic planning and implementation of cultural proficiency.

IV. Biblical and Theological Foundation

“Just then there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out, ‘What have you to do with us, Jesus of Nazareth? Have you come to destroy us?’” (Mk. 1:23–24a)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a rich and deep history with its roots firmly planted in the church in Jerusalem. As the early church evolved and moved into the 16th century, its members began to acknowledge the “unclean spirit” in the church and to critique those practices that were detrimental to the church’s mission. The Reformers called the church to accountability, challenging it to live in faith and integrity, practicing the radical discipleship of the Gospel.

From its arrival on the shores of America in 1706, however, the ethical practices of the Presbyterian church were questionable when it came to the enslavement of African people in the new country. Some found biblical and theological justification for the practice of slavery. Others found slavery to be a grievous sin and out of step with the teaching of Scriptures and the theology of the church. The biblical and theological discourse for slavery was highly contentious and an “unclean spirit” lingered in the midst of the denomination. During the 19th century, disagreement over slavery and evangelism broke the church into northern and southern branches. The two branches reunited in 1983 to form the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Although we are now one church, we are still broken when it comes to racism and the acceptance, not just mere toleration, of people from racial and ethnic backgrounds other than Caucasian. The denomination also struggles in our response to persons with disabilities, and to people who have sexual orientations other than heterosexual. These struggles are best seen in employment statistics and purchasing practices. Although our denomination believes in justice and equality for all, it has yet to achieve it fully. Although we have written about matters of equality in papers such as Facing Racism, we have yet to practice such equality. We can point to untold passages of Scripture, such as Gen. 5:1–2, 1 Cor. 12: 25, Gal. 3:28, to affirm our beliefs in equality for all, but we have difficulty in living them out. Though the voice of the unclean spirit of racism and discrimination is heard and presented in papers, at conferences, workshops, and at various levels of the church—it has yet to be destroyed as evidenced by the 218th General Assembly (2008) appointment of the Climate for Change Task Force.

The church acknowledges a need to create an atmosphere that not only tolerates, but fully welcomes and includes persons of diverse backgrounds. This climate needs to be created because it is not evident in all levels of the church. By creating an atmosphere free of the unclean spirit of racism, sexism, and inequality, it is the hope of our church to enrich our Christian work and witness. And while policies are important and must be in place to facilitate change and concurrence, the real challenge of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) lies deeper. There must be a change of heart and a new attitude that helps us put corresponding actions to our professed beliefs.

This is the question Jesus asks the man at the Pool of Bethsaida. Interestingly enough, he did not answer Jesus’ question directly. Instead, he proceeded to explain why he was not able to get in the pool. In many ways, the Presbyterian church takes the same stance when it comes to issues of diversity in the workplace: we explain why we are not able to get into the pool of diversity among all levels of management. We discuss why our church’s workplace does not reflect the diversity on all levels of management. It becomes apparent that if the church wants to be healed, the reality of white privilege and biblical righteousness must be addressed.

Writing on the concept of white privilege, Peggy McIntosh states:

As a white person, I realized I had been taught about racism as something that puts others at a disadvantage, but had been taught not to see one of its corollary aspects, white privilege, which puts me at an advantage. … The silences and denials surrounding privilege are the key political tool here. They keep the thinking about equality or equity incomplete, protecting unearned advantage and conferred dominance by making these taboo subjects.

In order to become righteous, the church must find creative ways to deal with white privilege that we may be found righteous in God’s eyes. In his article Fundamental for Preaching the Book of Proverbs, Part III, Bruce K. Waltke presents the following definition of the term “righteousness”:

‘Righteousness’ is a social term signifying that people do right by each other as defined by God’s covenants with Israel. In a nutshell ‘righteousness’ means ‘to disadvantage oneself as necessary in order to advantage others,’ and ‘wickedness’ means ‘to disadvantage others in order to advantage oneself as necessary in order to advantage others.’
White privilege impedes our healing and transformation because it requires some in the church to “disadvantage ourselves” in order to advantage others. Although this seems hard, this is the work of the Gospel demonstrated in Jesus Christ.

“Therefore, my beloved, just as you have always obeyed me, not only as in my presence, but much more now in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God who is at work in you, enabling you both to will and to work for his good pleasure.” (Phil. 2:12–13)

Like the early church in Philippi, the Presbyterian church today is being challenged to work out our salvation with fear and trembling. Our role as partners with God must be strengthened so that we engage in actions that allow God to work in us and accomplish God’s will. Simply put, we must be willing to make the necessary changes and struggle with the inconveniences required in order to make our record regarding affirmative action, cultural proficiency, and vendor policies consistent with our proclamations. As once quoted, “we must preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, and if necessary use words.” The world needs to see our sermon rather than hear it. It is time for the church to acknowledge the Holy One of God, and let Christ have his way in our lives. Community is the heart of who we are and who God is. We are the community of the “called out ones,” called to be an inclusive denomination.

V. The Tools for Change

A. Equal Opportunity

A legal principle established in the 1964 Civil Rights Act, equal opportunity prohibits discrimination or disparate treatment based on a person’s race, color, national origin, religion, or sex. Non-discrimination law applies to employment, contracting, housing, access to public facilities, education, etc. Federal law defines the protected racial categories as: African American, Hispanic/Latino, American Indian/Native American, Asian, and Hawaiian/Pacific Islander. Reporting requirements now include a category for persons who identify with two or more categories. Equal opportunity laws have also expanded since the 1960s to include age (for persons forty years and older), persons with disabilities, and in some states and local governments, sexual orientation.

B. Affirmative Action

Affirmative action emerges out of the recognition that simply removing legal barriers does not change systems or create a level playing field. Historic patterns of discrimination have created inequality in socioeconomic status and resources that put the members of targeted groups at a competitive disadvantage. The term comes out of recognition in the 1950s and 1960s that positive, proactive, intentional efforts needed to be implemented to make the promise of equal opportunity and equal access in education and employment a reality. Affirmative action strategies encompass a wide range of activities. In the employment arena “it involves planning and acting” to increase diversity and overcome historic practices of discrimination “based on race, color, ethnicity, sex, age, or disability. It can include recruitment and outreach programs, mentoring, training, employee development, management development, and special support programs aimed at improving retention of employees.”

Affirmative action strategies may include setting numerical goals to achieve equitable representation of women and persons of color in employment in an organization. Supplier diversity programs are also an example of an affirmative action strategy, designed to ensure that racial ethnic and women-owned business have equitable opportunities to compete for business. Within the church, supplier diversity has also been seen as a way to build wealth in economically marginalized communities.

C. Cultural Proficiency

Cultural proficiency is an approach to promoting and responding to the challenges of diversity in multiracial, multicultural organizations that moves beyond the limitations of affirmative action. While affirmative action strategies focus on increasing numerical representation, cultural proficiency focuses on creating an organizational climate in which individuals of diverse identities can fully participate, without surrendering their particularity; where diversity is seen as strength rather than a deficit or problem. Cultural proficiency also employs a broader definition of diversity—acknowledging that in any particular organization, there may be dimensions of diversity that are not defined by the parameters of race and gender, and yet are significant to that organization; i.e., employees who are Presbyterian and employees who are not.

Cultural proficiency offers a set of tools to guide and equip organizations in their work for intentional, systemic change. The following tools of cultural proficiency provide the foundation and basic parameters for setting goals and identifying strategies for implementation. [For a more detailed description of these tools, see Appendix A.]

- It is built on a set of Guiding Principles, which establish the underlying values.
- The Essential Elements identify five behavioral standards that provide a way to measure progress towards becoming more culturally proficiency and planning strategies for change.
• It identifies The Barriers, recognizing that resistance to change is an expected part of the change process, and promotes constructive responses.

• The Continuum provides language and a tool for defining/descending policies, practices, and individual behaviors that contribute to cultural proficiency, and those that are nonproductive or work counter to the goals of becoming culturally proficient.13

Cultural proficiency represents both a process and a vision. Creating a culturally proficient organization can involve a wide variety of strategies, and recognizes that becoming culturally proficient is not a static measurement. Organizations may function well in some areas and not so well in others. As organizations learn to incorporate some measure of diversity well, they may recognize new dimensions of diversity that need attention. Cultural proficiency aims for deep cultural transformation—a way of being that is oriented to incorporating diversity into the life of the organization. Becoming a culturally proficient organization involves individual transformation as well as organizational transformation. Organizational strategies to develop cultural proficiency should include:

• A strong expression of management’s vision and commitment to the goals of cultural proficiency;
• Assessment of organizational policies and practices to gauge consistency with cultural proficiency goals;
• Assessing organizational structure and communication patterns;
• Evaluation and assessment of organizational progress and individual performance for employees and management;
• Strong accountability systems, internally and externally; i.e., regular reporting of accomplishments and challenges within organizational systems, as well as to governing bodies or others with oversight responsibility;
• A vital affirmative action program to promote and sustain diversity in the organization; and
• Orientation and training for new employees and on-going educational activities to promote and sustain support of all employees, including:
  —anti-racism and prevention of sexual harassment training;
  —training to support supplier diversity goals;
  —training for specific skills, based on identified needs in the organization (e.g., training in cross-cultural communication, or providing an orientation to Presbyterianism for non-Presbyterian employees).

D. Supplier Diversity

Supplier diversity in the PC(USA) is a product of the church’s historic commitment to economic justice. In 1984 the 196th General Assembly (1984) adopted policy to increase “the purchase of goods and services … from businesses owned by racial ethnic people” and directed all agencies to report on their progress to the Council on Church and Race and the General Assembly in 1985 (Minutes, 1984, Part I, p. 503). Modeled on the federal program, it sets a goal for purchases from businesses owned by women and persons of color as a percentage of all purchases made by the agencies related to the General Assembly.

VI. Historical Context

“As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise” (Gal. 3:27–29).

The development of the church’s policies implementing equal employment opportunity, affirmative action, supplier diversity, and cultural proficiency reflect the denomination’s historic commitment to justice, equity, and inclusion in its prophetic witness and in its own institutional life. The definition of these policies reflects both the evolution of civil law and creative innovation in responding to the challenges of diversity in business, education, and the nonprofit sector; and they reflect the intention of the General Assembly that the organizational life of the church give witness to the theological convictions of the church. The earliest actions of the General Assembly in this arena express a commitment to racial justice in the workplace. This commitment later expands to include women, persons with disabilities, and sexual orientation. The actions of the General Assembly express a prophetic vision, a hope for change, and a recognition that for effective institutional change to happen there must be mechanisms to set measurable goals, plan strategically for change, and hold the agencies and entities related to the General Assembly accountable for their efforts.

A review of some of the critical turning points in the development of church policy gives a sense of the commitment and direction that the church has taken. They also reflect, in some instances, a pattern of frustration within marginalized communities in the church—as actions are taken with high expectations of change that do not come to fruition. Key turning points are often followed by successive actions to attempt to strengthen and clarify expectations, mandate greater accountability and call for deeper commitment. [For a summary of key General Assembly actions, see Appendix D.]

The 180th General Assembly (1968) (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1968, Part I, pp. 232–33) directed the Council on Church and Race to
- “review the employment practices of the General Assembly, its boards and related agencies;”
- “give guidance wherever it finds covert or overt discrimination; and”
- report to the 181st General Assembly (1969) on “the status of equal opportunity employment in the General Assembly, its boards and related agencies.”

The assembly also directed “the General Council, boards and related agencies … to immediately establish programs wherein all purchase of and contracting for goods and services and all construction be done under a program of affirmative action toward equal opportunity employment.” The Council on Church and Race was directed to establish guidelines and procedures for implementation, and synods were encouraged to establish similar commitments.

Two years later, the 182nd General Assembly (1970) acknowledged that continuing de facto discrimination restricted the full participation of women and called on the church at all levels, in all judicatories, in the ecumenical bodies it participated in and in early discussions of reunion between the UPC(USA) and the PCUS, to work for the full participation of women.

An Office of Equal Employment was created. The General Assembly Mission Council also began working with Project Equality, a nonprofit organization created with support from the Presbyterian church and other denominations to provide assistance with implementation of affirmative action. Project Equality became a critical resource for all General Assembly-related entities—providing affirmative action audits for major contractors and a buyers’ guide for other purchasing.

In 1973, the 185th General Assembly 1973 (Minutes, 1973, Part I, pp. 506–508) adopted a formal policy of equal employment opportunity, proclaiming

In determining its own witness to the world and its service to humanity, the church of Jesus Christ ... sounds the note of liberation, reconciliation and healing, and calls all persons to the more abundant life in Christ. … Such a mission ha[s] many implications, one of which is the removal of discriminatory practices that deny individuals the opportunity to achieve their highest employment potential.

The new EEO policy addressed employment practices (recruitment, hiring, promotion, compensation, benefits, and termination), contracting, and purchasing. It further directed the church to support its policy of equal opportunity and nondiscrimination through an affirmative action program, defining affirmative action as “the execution of a set of specific and results-oriented procedures designed to eliminate unconscious discriminatory practices in the employment of women and minority groups.”

With reunion, the PC(USA) reaffirmed its commitment to assuring the full participation of women and people of color in the Articles of Agreement (Articles 8 and 9). A Churchwide Affirmative Action Plan (AAP) was developed defining the PC(USA) commitment to equal employment opportunity and affirmative action in its own employment practices. The Churchwide AAP also spells out the commitment in contracting and purchasing to do business with companies and contractors who maintained the same standards of practice. Subsequent actions of the General Assembly added persons with disabilities and sexual orientation as protected categories—i.e., prohibiting discrimination by General Assembly-related entities based on these categories.

Reunion created new structures of accountability. The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) was established with representation from each synod. Its members also reflect the diversity that they are tasked with protecting/promoting (Book of Order 2009–2011, G-9.0105). The GACOR is given specific responsibility in both the Book of Order (Book of Order 2011–13, G-3.0103) and the Churchwide AAP to provide advice and oversight on employment practices and the implementation of affirmative action.

The two advocacy committees—the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns—were also formed as a result of reunion. The foundational principles for these committees, which are formed with direct access to the General Assembly to be a voice for advocacy and accountability in the denomination, are found in Articles 5, 8, and 9 of the Articles of Agreement. Each committee is structured to include representation of caucuses and other organizations that represent the interests of women and persons of color within the church.

VII. Conclusion

“Lamentably, it is an historical fact that privileged groups seldom give up their privileges voluntarily. Individuals may see the moral light and voluntarily give up their unjust posture; but as Reinhold Niebuhr has reminded us, groups tend to be more immoral than individuals.” (The Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. in A Letter from the Birmingham Jail)
The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stands at a crossroads. It is time to do the hard work of confronting the barriers to change within our own institutional life, to choose a path that demands we listen to the voices of those who have been marginalized by systems of privilege, and exhibit the courage to change ourselves. The lesson learned in the review conducted by the Climate for Change Task Force is that deep change in our organizational life will not happen without the commitment of the whole church. It most certainly requires visionary leadership in each corporate entity, but it also requires the vigilance of the General Assembly committees and agency governing boards and councils responsible for oversight and accountability. It requires the participation of agency employees and the support of congregations and mid councils willing to participate in a culture of change. And it requires that each time the assembly gathers it take seriously its responsibility to monitor and assess the church’s progress towards the goals it sets for its corporate entities. God has blessed the human family with a rich diversity of talents, traits, and experience. As a community of believers, we are called to give full expression to the gospel through the rich diversity of who we are, to break down the barriers that cut us off, one from the other, and grow in the fullness of who God created us to be.

Endnotes

4. The ACREC reports to the General Assembly from 2004 to the present document both agency efforts to implement cultural proficiency strategies and statistical representation of women and persons of color in employment at all levels.

F-1.0403 “The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person. …”

G-3.0103 “The councils of the church shall give full expression to the rich diversity of the church’s membership and shall provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices (F-1.0403).”

7. For more information about the membership, purpose, and work of each committee, see their respective pages in the PC(USA) website: www.pcusa.org.

8. The EEOC is responsible to enforce the laws related to discrimination based upon certain protected categories, including race and national origin. Employers are required to submit an annual EEO-1 report, which includes the categories that the EEOC recognizes in its enforcement efforts. Instructions for an EEO-1 can be found at this link: http://www.eeoc.gov/employers/eeo1survey/ and include this definition: “White (Not Hispanic or Latino)—A person having origins in any of the original peoples of Europe, the Middle East, or North Africa. Therefore, the PC(USA) agencies, in conforming to federal law, recognize this definition imposed upon it by the EEOC for purposes of data collection.

While federal law limits data collection, there is no such limitation on protection from discrimination. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or protected activity. “Congress drafted the statute broadly to cover … anyone—Whites, Blacks, Asians, Latinos, Arabs, American Indians and Alaska Natives, Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders, persons of more than one race, and all other persons.” EEOC Compliance Manual (http://www.eeoc.gov/policy/docs/race-color.html#VIC).

9. “An employer is required to make a reasonable accommodation to the known disability of a qualified applicant or employee if it would not impose an ‘undue hardship’ on the operation of the employer’s business. Reasonable accommodations are adjustments or modifications provided by an employer to enable people with disabilities to enjoy equal employment opportunities. Accommodations vary depending upon the needs of the individual applicant or employee. Not all people with disabilities (or even all people with the same disability) will require the same accommodation.” Americans With Disabilities Act (http://www.eeoc.gov/facts/fs-ada.html). Employers are barred by the ADA from inquiring about disabilities before and after hire, except in very limited circumstances. (See e.g. http://www.eeoc.gov/policy/docs/guidance-inquiries.html). After hire, employers can ask employees disability-related question only if they are job-related and consistent with business necessity. The EEOC does not consider asking employees about their disabilities for the purpose of data collection as job-related or consistent with business necessity.

Cultural Proficiency is an approach to building organizational capacity to thrive on the strengths of diversity. It is a process for intentional systemic change within organizations to nurture and sustain diverse community. It encompasses both

- the policies and practices of an organization, and
- the values and behaviors of individuals, that enable an organization or person to interact effectively in a culturally diverse environment. Cultural proficiency defines diversity as a strength rather than a problem in organizations. As a process for strategic, intentional transformation, cultural proficiency addresses organizational culture, commitments, practices, and skills. It engages a set of tools for change and a vision of community that nurtures the diverse gifts of all its members.

As a transformational tool, cultural proficiency is an inside-out process that builds on the core values, norms, and traditions within the existing organizational structure to equip the organization to live out its vision with integrity. This approach creates a platform for creative, innovative leadership for change.

The Tools of Cultural Proficiency are not strategies or techniques. They provide a framework for assessing organizational practices and individual behaviors with an eye to giving direction to change and setting parameters for developing strategies for change within an organization.

- The Continuum

  Language for describing both healthy and nonproductive policies, practices, and individual behaviors.

- The Essential Elements

  Behavioral standards for measuring and planning for growth toward cultural proficiency.

- The Barriers

  Caveats that assist in responding effectively to resistance to change.

- The Guiding Principles

  Underlying values of the approach.

The Continuum recognizes that change processes are fluid and do not happen uniformly. There are six points along the cultural proficiency continuum that indicate various ways of perceiving and responding to differences. They provide a vocabulary for assessing policies, practices, and behaviors. Organizations and individuals may have practices at multiple points on the continuum at any time.

- Cultural destructiveness works to eliminate any vestige of culture or difference defined as “other,” practices exclusion, or segregation.

- Cultural incapacity works to define culture or difference defined as “other” to be wrong, requires assimilation to the normative culture.

- Cultural indifference refuses to acknowledge the culture of others, treats difference as insignificant, and of no value to the organization.

- Cultural pre-competence accepts difference as normal, reflects an initial awareness of the need to adapt in order to incorporate diversity in a constructive manner in an organization, and work effectively as an individual in a diverse environment.

- Cultural competence works to build individual skills and organizational capacity to incorporate cultural diversity in an interactive manner, creates a culture that welcomes cultural difference.

- Cultural proficiency values difference, works to learn from the “other,” nurtures full participation and contributions of diverse cultural and social groups.

The Essential Elements of cultural proficiency provide the standards for building individual competencies and organizational practices. Organizational change begins with individual actions.

- Assessing Cultural Knowledge: Aware of one’s own cultural identity and organizational norms, aware of what you know about other’s cultures, about how you react to difference, and what you need to do to be effective in cross-cultural situations.

- Valuing Diversity: Makes intentional effort and adaptation to be inclusive of people whose cultural perspectives and experiences are different from yours or the normative culture of the organization, in order to enrich the conversation, decision-making, and problem-solving processes.
• Managing the Dynamics of Difference: develops problem-solving and conflict resolutions strategies that are accessible to everyone and attend to cultural differences as normal processes within the organizational culture.

• Adapting to Diversity: Develops habits and ways of being within the organization that facilitate learning about differences of experience and cultural perspectives as normative practices.

• Institutionalizing Cultural Knowledge: Learning about cultural differences, developing skills for cross-cultural communication, and problem-solving become integral to the organizational culture and standards for professional excellence.

The Barriers to cultural proficiency area present in varying degree in any organization. Effective strategies for change will be cognizant of the need to educate and motivate employees to gain support for change. The barriers also point to the importance that each individual plays in effecting change within an organization.

• Unawareness of the need to adapt (resistance to change): Persons who are served well by the existing organizational culture may see the pressure to change as unnecessary and respond with indifference or see it as threatening. Resistance can create adversarial relationships within an organization if not addressed.

• Systems of oppression: Racism, sexism, classism, heterosexism, etc. are historically embedded in the internal cultures of organizations and the external culture of society. Systems of oppression create barriers for members of non-dominant groups and extend unearned privilege to the members of the dominant group. Being able to recognize these systemic patterns apart from individual behavior is critical to effecting change within an organization, just as recognizing ways that the organization is impacted by external systems is important.

• The presumption of privilege and entitlement: When one group is defined as marginal and denied access to rights and privileges within a system, those same rights and privileges accrue to those who are by definition members of the dominant group, through no effort of their own. Failure to recognize this impact of systemic oppression leads to the presumption of privilege and entitlement as normative. This skewed sense of reality can lead to negative perceptions of persons in marginalized groups and undermines the moral force for organizational transformation.

The Guiding Principles provide the core values and assumptions on which cultural proficiency is built. They reflect the significant role of culture in perpetuating systems of oppression, the complexity of attempting deep systemic change, and the potential for culture to be an instrument of change and transformation.

• Culture is a predominant force in people’s lives and in organization’s lives. Within an organization, you cannot NOT participate or be influenced by the organizational culture.

• People are served in varying degrees by the dominant culture.

• Acknowledge group identities. People have group identities and personal identities. The group identities that an individual participates in are important to that person as an individual.

• Diversity within cultures is important. Cultural groups are neither homogenous nor monolithic. Persons within a cultural group are unique individuals.

• Respect unique cultural needs. Culture shapes every aspect of life. Members of different cultures bring different needs to organizational life. In a culturally proficient organization, the dominant culture is attentive to the needs of non-dominant groups.

APPENDIX B
Glossary of Terms

Affirmative Action: “In order to address past, present, and future discrimination, affirmative action is the execution of a set of specific and result-oriented measures designed to eliminate both conscious and unconscious discriminatory practices in order to promote equal opportunity and access to the entire church” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 87).

Ableism: A pervasive system of discrimination and exclusion that oppresses people who have mental, emotional, or physical disabilities. People with disabilities experience discrimination, segregation, isolation as a result of prejudices and institutional barriers, and not because of the disability itself.

Ageism: Bias and discrimination on the basis of age. Age as a protected class in federal equal employment law applies to persons age forty and over.

Antiracism: An action-oriented strategy to identify and dismantle systemic and institutional racism and interconnected systems of social oppression. Antiracism training is designed to equip people with knowledge and skills to acknowledge how racism impacts them personally, creating internalized oppression or privilege, and to work for social change.
Class: A social category defined by economic indicators including income, inherited wealth, formal education, networks of influence, and access to resources. Classism refers to the cultural practices and belief systems that assign value to individuals based on their perceived class status.

Culture: Everything you believe and do that identifies you as a member of a group and distinguishes you from other groups. You may belong to more than one cultural group. Cultures reflect the belief systems and behaviors that are informed by ethnicity as well as other sociological factors like gender, age, sexual orientation, and physical ability. Both individuals and organizations are defined by their cultures.

Cultural Proficiency: The policies and practices of an organization, and the values and behaviors of individuals, that enables an organization or person to interact effectively in a culturally diverse environment. Cultural proficiency defines diversity as a strength, rather than a problem in organizations. It is a process for strategic, intentional organizational transformation that addresses culture, commitments, practices and skills.

Diversity: In organizational systems, diversity refers to the range of social differences within the organization. It includes race, ethnicity, language, gender, age, ability, sexual orientation, and other culturally defined factors. Diversity, as an organizational concept, does not provide a framework for addressing disparities in social power within an organization.

Dominant Culture: Refers to a person or group whose social identity confers on them unearned power and privilege. The dominant culture defines what is considered normative in a given context, and conveys greater access to the benefits of group membership or participation. In U.S. culture, the most prevalent dominant culture identities are white, male, English-speaking, heterosexual, able-bodies, Christian, affluent and middle class, college-educated.

Ethnic: The beliefs, practices, and traditions held in common by a group of people who share an identity, whether linguistic, historical, geographical, religious, or racial. While everyone belongs to an “ethnic” group, the word is often used to identify only non-dominant or marginal ethnic groups.

Equal Employment Opportunity: Refers to non-discrimination law and practice in employment. The 1964 Civil Rights Act identifies race, color, sex, religion, and national origin as protected classes. Age was added in 1967 and persons with disabilities in 1990. Sexual orientation laws have been passed in twelve states and many local governments also have non-discrimination laws based on sexual orientation.

Gender: The socially constructed roles, identity, and expectations associated with male and female. It encompasses behavior, appearance and other culturally defined expectations.

Intersectionality: Refers to the ways in which racism, sexism, classism, and other systems of oppression interact and compound one another in the lived experience of persons. It is most frequently employed to describe the experience of women of color.

Internalized Oppression: Communities oppressed by systemic racism, sexism, etc., develop and internalize false constructs—ideas, beliefs, actions, and behaviors that support or collude with their oppression. Internalized oppression has its own systemic reality and its own negative consequences in the lives of people of color, women, people with disabilities, etc. Systemic internalized oppression participates in, and expands the power of systemic privilege by actively undermining the power of marginalized groups. Internalized oppression provides a rubric for oppressed groups to talk about the work that they must do within themselves and with other oppressed groups to effect change.

National Origin: One of the protected categories under anti-discrimination laws. National origin discrimination involves treating people unfavorably because they are from a particular country or part of the world, because of ethnicity or accent, because they appear to be of a certain ethnic background (even if they are not), or are associated with a person, organization, or group of a certain national origin.

People of Color: This term originates with racialized people as a positive construction for naming themselves, rather than as “non-white,” “minority,” or “ethnic.”

Prejudice: A prejudgment drawn in the absence of evidence and held in the face of evidence that contradicts it. Prejudices based on stereotypic ideas about groups of people promulgate attitudes of superiority or inferiority. Prejudice is often hard to change because in an environment of discrimination, systemic patterns of oppression may make stereotypes appear to be normative.

Race: A social category used to classify people by physical attributes such as skin color, hair texture, facial characteristics, or stature. Race assigns meaning and value to racial differences in ways that have disparate impact on racial groups.

Racism: Refers to systemic oppression rooted in racial prejudice and the social power ascribed to white identity. It impacts social, cultural, economic, and political well-being. It encompasses beliefs, attitudes and actions of individuals that perpetuate racial stereotypes; the complex network of institutional structures, policies, and practices that create and/or perpetuate racial disparities, resulting in the exclusion or marginalization through socially constructed invisibility for people of color.

Racialization: The process through which groups come to be designated as different, and on that basis subjected to different and unequal treatment. Racialized groups include people who might experience differential treatment on the basis of race, ethnicity, language, religion, or culture.

Sexism: Refers to systemic oppression rooted in stereotyping of men and women as hierarchically ordered (men over women) and also as confined to limited cultural identities and roles as “masculine” and “feminine.” Sexism ascribes privilege and social power to men, excluding women from certain types of leadership roles, restricting access to employment opportunities, and marginalizing their voice in the public arena. Sexism may be expressed in interpersonal, cultural, economic, legal, and political terms.

Stereotype: A fixed notion or conception of a person or group that ascribes personal characteristic based on the group identity. Stereotypes are broad, false generalizations that are often used to justify discriminatory actions or to rationalize disparate treatment of individuals.

White Privilege: The concrete benefits resulting from access to resources and social rewards, and the social power to shape the norms and values of society that white people receive, consciously and unconsciously, by virtue of their skin color in a racialized society. White people generally receive these benefits without consciously choosing to do so and help to perpetuate it when they do not recognize that the same systems exclude people of color from full participation or access to the social benefits of the dominant culture.

General Assembly Policy Highlights:

1. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) Report: Creating a Climate for Change within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), 218th General Assembly (2008). Created a task force to review the current Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Affirmative Action/Equal Employment Opportunity (AA/EEO), contracting, and purchasing policies; and recommend revisions. The task force was directed to provide a final report to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

2. God’s Work in Women’s Hands: Pay Equity and Just Compensation, 218th General Assembly (2008). Called for the church at all levels to ensure equity in compensation for women and men. Directed the Office of Vocation, with ACWC, to prepare a tool for use by presbytery committees on ministry and provide training “with regard to gender and racial/ethnic sensitivity in hiring and employment.”

3. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) Task Force to Examine General Assembly Entities: Report on Creating a Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), 216th General Assembly (2004). Recommendations in this report initiated cultural proficiency programs and established ACREC consultations with the six General Assembly entities, to create a corporate church culture, including its boards, agencies, and institutions that is equipped to address the issues that arise in a diverse environment.

4. On Affirming Civil Rights and Nondiscrimination for All Persons, Regardless of Sexual Orientation, 214th General Assembly (2004). Reaffirmed resolutions adopted by the 190th General Assembly (1978) of the UPCUSA, and called upon Presbyterians to work for the passage of laws that prohibit discrimination in the areas of employment, housing, and public accommodations based on the sexual orientation of a person.
11 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL JUSTICE ISSUES

5. Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community, a report from the Initiative Team on Racism and Racial Violence, 211th General Assembly (1999). Outlined a strategy to equip the church to be an agent for change in the struggle to dismantle racism. Directed the General Assembly Council to provide antiracism training to the staff at the Presbyterian Center.

7. Affirmative Action (Overture 95-53), 207th General Assembly (1995). Reaffirmed the commitment of the General Assembly to affirmative action as a means of achieving equal employment opportunity and to undoing historical and institutional effects of discrimination based on age, disability, marital status, race, or gender. It directed the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns to monitor the fulfillment of these recommendations in cooperation with the Office of Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action and directed the church’s Office on Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action to monitor affirmative action within the church and with church-related enterprises.

   "A racial ethnic group is a group that defines itself and is defined by others as being phenotypically (physically) or culturally divergent from the dominant White American group. And, most crucial is the fact that the racial ethnic group has held and continues to hold ascribed and unequal status in participation and representation in most, if not all, major institutions of American society. The racial ethnic groups in America include Black Americans, Indian Americans, Asian Americans, and Hispanic Americans.” (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 565)

11. Joint Report of the Committee on Women’s Concerns and the Council on Women and the Church, 198th General Assembly (1986). Reaffirmed the assembly’s opposition to sex-biased wage discrimination, urged all governing bodies and agencies of the General Assembly to evaluate their own wage scales to ensure pay equity for both women and men. Supported effective affirmative action to achieve the goal of employment equality.

   "It is the policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to provide equal employment opportunity/affirmative action for all qualified persons; to prohibit discrimination in employment based upon age, disability, marital status, racial ethnic group, or sex; and to correct any existing patterns of discrimination. The realization of inclusiveness and diversity in employment is promoted through positive, results-oriented, equal employment opportunity/affirmative action practices.” (p. 1)
   The Churchwide Plan provides instruction to all governing bodies:
   • In accordance with the Book of Order (G-9.0105) the General Assembly Committee on Representation shall develop and establish guidelines for governing bodies and their related Committees on Representation (pp. 4, 11);
   • Gives the General Assembly Council “a leadership role in coordinating the churchwide plan.” (p.11);
   • Directs the General Assembly Council to — Develop and implement an overall plan for coordinating the equal employment activities of the General Assembly –level; and — recommend periodically to the General Assembly
   • EEO/Affirmative Action goals
   • Annual summaries of performance for GA related entities
   • Proposed corrective action when necessary” (pp. 11–12).

13. Minority Vendor Policy: Report of the Council on Church and Race, 196th General Assembly (1984). Directed the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) adopt policy to increase the purchase of goods and services for the operation of its national agencies from businesses owned by racial ethnic people. Directed all agencies provide a progress report to the 1985 General Assembly and to the Council on Church and Race, and urged other governing bodies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) to adopt similar policy.

   In determining its own witness to the world and its service to humanity, the church of Jesus Christ is bound by the gospel mandate to “announce good news to the poor, to proclaim release for prisoners and recovery of sight for the blind, to let the broken victims go free, to proclaim the year of the Lord’s favor.” Thus it sounds the note of liberation, reconciliation and healing, and calls all persons to the more abundant life in Christ.
   In the modern world such a mission had many implications, one of which is the removal of discriminatory practices that deny individuals the opportunity to achieve their highest employment potential. Therefore, it is the policy of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America to provide equal opportunity in employment and upward mobility for all qualified and qualifiable persons, to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, religious affiliation, color, national origin, sex, age, or marital status, and to promote the full realization of equal employment opportunity through a positive and continuing program of affirmative action.
"There shall be no discrimination on the part of department heads or other supervisory officers, based on sex, marital status, ethnic origin, color, or religious affiliation, in making recommendations for the advancement, remuneration, application of benefits, etc., of any employee in the clerical and elected and appointed staffs of the boards and agencies of the General Assembly." (Minutes, 1968, Part I, p. 233.)

182nd General Assembly (1970):

"The 182nd General Assembly (1970) requests all judicatories including the sessions of churches, agencies, boards, councils, and committees to include women fully in their tasks and ministries and to remove causes of de facto discrimination against the full participation of women within the boundaries of their jurisdiction." (Minutes, 1970, Part I, p. 434.)

183rd General Assembly (1971):

"Boards and agencies shall take affirmative action and judicatories are urged to take affirmative action to insure that employment policies include equal opportunity in employment, salary level, promotion, transfer, recruitment, advertising, employee benefits, vacation, termination rates of pay or other forms of termination." (Minutes, 1971, Part I, p. 313.)

In compliance with the above and the Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1968, The Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, The Equal Pay Act of 1963, New York State Human Rights Law, the Equal Pay Law of New York State, and the applicable executive orders, the policy of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America not to discriminate in employment includes, but is not limited to, the following:

1. The General Assembly of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America will recruit, hire, and promote all job classifications without regard to race, religious affiliation, color, national origin, sex, age, or marital status except where religious affiliation is a bona fide occupational qualification.

2. The General Assembly of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America in line with the above statements, will periodically conduct analysis of all personnel actions and develop plans to insure that equal opportunity is supported through an Affirmative Action Program.

Affirmative action is the execution of a set of specific and result-oriented procedures designed to eliminate unconscious discriminatory practices in the employment of women and minority groups.

3. The General Assembly of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America will provide equal opportunities in training during employment.

4. The General Assembly of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America will insure that all other personnel actions such as compensation benefits, transfers, leaves of absence, lay-offs, return from lay-off, education, tuition assistance, and any others will be administered on a non-discriminatory basis.

5. The General Assembly of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America as purchaser, shall contract or purchase services, supplies and goods, whenever possible only from businesses which have committed themselves to the goal of equal employment opportunity and which are willing to cooperate with Project Equality Incorporated.

The General Assembly of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America shall utilize the Project Equality process and all its forms, so that whenever a reasonable choice exists, the agency will favor suppliers who are listed in the Buyers’ Guide and supplements.

6. The General Assembly of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America as investor, shall invest wherever possible in businesses that are committed to Equal Employment Opportunity.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) respectfully advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve Item 11-17 and offers this comment:

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church, in the Book of Order, has given to committees on representation the function of advising their respective councils on the employment of personnel since reunion in 1983, establishing the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (PCUSA). Committees on representation are mandated at all councils above session (G-3.0103). The General Assembly Committee on Representation serves at the assembly level and advises all General Assembly entities as well as the assembly itself. The references in the Constitution to its functions are found in the Form of Government at G-3.0103 (before July 10, 2011, it was found at G-9.0105e). At Reunion and the inception of GACOR, the structures of the assembly level employers (the six entities) and their capacities were drastically different. The committee in recent years, after restructures removed offices dedicated to Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action, met confusion as to where it was to connect and whom in a staff role had the relevant portfolio and the information GACOR needed. The GACOR continues to meet stiff resistance to its inquiries for data and its responsibilities in this regard. The GACOR has not been adequately provided with the necessary data and information to provide this counsel since staff with portfolios of equal employment opportunity and affirmative action were removed from the structure of the General Assembly Council (now General Assembly Mission Council). Reporting is impossible and not useful without the requisite data. When the task force was created by action of the 218th General Assembly (2008), GACOR engaged them about the barriers they have experienced to fulfilling their function in this aspect of their assigned work. While the direct reference to the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action (adopted in 1985, last updated in 1994) is no longer mentioned by name in the Book of Order, it remains the implementation plan of record and contains within it, for direct references to GACOR and its role in the work. The GACOR concerns are informed by the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity (F-1.0403) that outlines the communities for whom they show particular concern. These communities are specifically listed not as a reward or achievement but because persons in these groups experience chronic and systemic discriminatory practice, under-representation, and under resourcing merely because of their identification of being in the group. The "other"ness expressed here is wider than its sister advocacy committees.

The GACOR welcomes the distinctions in separate mandates that the task force has drawn in their report and the clear roles they recommend for an adaptive and effective accountability system within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The complimentary missions and mandates of the GACOR and its sister advocacy committees (Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns), work together to provide accountability and advice to the institutions empowered by the assembly for the mission and ministry of the national church. Clarifying the distinct roles and responsibilities between GACOR, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns regarding the monitoring and reporting of employment of personnel, supplier diversity, cultural proficiency, and other institutional means impacting the church’s employment and purchasing actions efficiently uses the volunteer resources of committee service and will enhance diversity and inclusiveness within the body of Jesus Christ. Having a system in place monitored by elected committees, holding national entities accountable to the assembly with regard to the employment of personnel, supplier diversity and cultural proficiency provides a witness to the Body of Christ, to the society at-large, and models equitable practices how the church operates with its own staff. As a committee of elected persons from across the church, GACOR welcomes the specificity of tasks offered in this description of its responsibility in implementing its assigned role, and the clarity provided to the entities with which it must engage to do the work. The GACOR welcomes the 220th General Assembly (2012)’s approval of these recommendations as restoring its ability to fulfill its constitutional functions and by the assembly reminding the council’s six entities of their tasks to provide GACOR the information, to engage in consultation, and to receive feedback and advice.

The task force was asked to, “[u]pdate churchwide AA/EEO policies to reflect the church’s commitment to using the tools of cultural proficiency for organizational change; provide guidance and standards for consistent application of the Minority Vendor Policy in the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly; in consultation with staff, develop new guidelines and procedures to be used in lieu of services formerly provided by Project Equality; and revise and update AA/EEO and Minority Vendor policies to reflect changes in the agencies related to the General Assembly and the changing business environment created by emerging technology” (Presbyterian News Service article, February 26, 2009, titled “GA moderator continues work on filling special committees and task forces” accessed on the web at http://www-
The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of sixteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from ruling and teaching elders from across the church. Its mandate and functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).
• Monitoring the implementation of women’s or racial justice policies and programs relative to women’s or racial ethnic concerns.

• Through advocacy maintaining a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women’s or racial ethnic concern.

In addition, the General Assembly has given the GAMC responsibility for: “Approval and monitoring of the ‘Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action’” (Organization for Mission, V.D.5.)

The General Assembly Mission Council has been a leader in exceeding the denomination’s Equal Employment Opportunity goals of 40 percent women and 20 percent racial ethnic persons. The GAMC’s 2011 Equal Employment Opportunity report shows a workforce of 312 members that is 70 percent female and 25 percent racial ethnic. Over the past six years, the GAMC workforce has decreased by 152 members, yet the percentages have continued to exceed the goal, and remain remarkably consistent (2005—71 percent female and 26 percent racial ethnic).

The GAMC is committed to the highest levels of excellence with regard to Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action, in the areas of employment, supplier diversity, and cultural proficiency. The recommendation rightly notes GAMC competence in these areas when it directs GAMC personnel to train and guide other General Assembly agencies in these areas.

The GAMC would also note that many of the recommendations in this item retain an outdated understanding of the role of the GAMC. From 1987 through 2006, the General Assembly Mission Council had a superintending role among the General Assembly agencies; that is, it had some responsibility for providing coordination between assembly agencies, and providing centralized support for equal employment opportunity, etc. In 2006, the Book of Order mandate for the work of the GAMC was amended to focus its work on mission activities.

For example, changes included:

• To institute and coordinate a churchwide plan for to provide resources to support equal employment opportunity and affirmative action for members of racial ethnic groups, for women, for various age groups, for persons regardless of marital condition (married, single, widowed, or divorced), and for persons with disabilities;

• To develop and engage in churchwide planning to propose, for General Assembly approval determination, the mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities of the church General Assembly Mission Council, doing so by taking into account the mission work being done by sessions, presbyteries, and synods, and to propose for General Assembly approval an accompanying budget that will implement the mission work plan of the General Assembly Council;

• To coordinate the work of General Assembly agencies and bodies, synods and presbyteries, in light of the these mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities;

• To review the work of General Assembly agencies and bodies in light of General Assembly mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities;

While the GAMC engages in ministry collaboratively with the other assembly agencies, readily commits staff members to joint projects, and shares best practices, it no longer has a supervisory role with respect to the other agencies.

GAMC ADDITIONAL COMMENT ON ITEM 11-17
[Received June 29, 2012]

Additional Comment on Item 11-17, Recommendation 2.a.–g.—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

In 2006, the General Assembly amended the Book of Order with respect to GAMC responsibilities, eliminating the GAMC’s superintending role for the six agencies. This action came at the request of the GAMC in view of the changing structures of General Assembly agency structures in the years that followed reunion in 1983, the new structural design for mission in 1987, and the proliferation of General Assembly agencies that has transpired since that time (OGA/COGA, PPC, PILP). Prior to 2006, the GAMC had the responsibility to implement the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action, as stated in the plan itself from 1985. After 2006, GAMC’s role was to “provide resources to support equal employment opportunity and affirmative action” and to approve and monitor the Churchwide Plan. This created a gap in implementation for the General Assembly’s commitment to equal employment opportunity and affirmative action. The Climate for Change Task Force recommendation suggests that GACOR fill that gap, and become responsible for reviewing and revising the goals, both for employment and purchasing. The GAMC believes that this is a function that should remain individually charged to the assembly’s agencies with input from other professionals in the field. The GAMC understands the role of GACOR is to bring advice to the assembly’s agencies in this area, and that the role of ACWC and ACREC is to monitor implementation of policy and advocate for change.
In keeping with this understanding, the GAMC suggests that a task force be formed to include

- the Human Resource directors of the six General Assembly agencies (or their designees);
- two members of GACOR and the primary staff member for GACOR;
- two at-large members with expertise in Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action implementation (one upon recommendation from ACREC and another upon recommendation from ACWC).

Further, the GAMC suggests that Recommendations 2.a–2.g be referred to this task force for study, along with the paragraph from the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action that deals with oversight of Equal Employment Opportunity implementation (Section Two, II.A.). The task force will bring specific recommendations for revisions and implementation to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

A Resolution on Justice for Survivors of Sexual Assault—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council to seek advice from the Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C., on how to educate and advocate for ending the problem of rape kit backlogs in the United States.

2. Direct the PC(USA) to stand behind the Justice for Sexual Assault Survivors Act of 2011 and advocate for its passing.

Rationale

According to the Human Rights Watch, there are currently approximately 400,000–500,000 untested rape kits sitting in police evidence storage facilities and crime labs throughout the United States. Rape kits are comprised of the physical and DNA evidence taken from survivors of rape during a five-to-six-hour exam. Currently, many of these kits sit until the evidence has deteriorated to the point of not being testable or until the statute of limitations on crimes of rape expires. This leads to many persons being victimized a second time by the system of justice that was supposed to protect and seek justice for them. The city of Detroit reports that in 2010 there were 12,000 rape kits unprocessed and sitting in storage, and some of those kits were more than ten years old. Rape is a terribly underreported crime, and the fact that many communities struggle to fund and process these rape kits may discourage survivors of rape from reporting these crimes. It is estimated that a rape kit costs anywhere from $900–$1,000 to process. The Debbie Smith Act was passed in 2004, which uses federal funding to help cities and states pay for rape kits through grants. However, this act does not require states to report and set up a system to prevent backlogs, and these funds also cannot be used to hire staff in cities where these labs are sorely understaffed.

Currently, the Justice for Survivors of Sexual Assault Act of 2011 is being sponsored by Senator Al Franken and co-sponsored by nine other senators (Michael Bennet [D-Colo.], Richard Blumenthal [D-Conn.], Richard Burr [R-N.C.], Robert Casey [D-Pa.], Dianne Feinstein [D-Calif.], Charles Grassley [R-Iowa], Kay Hagan [D-N.C.], Frank Lautenberg [D-N.J.], and Bernard Sanders [I-Vt.]). This bill has been introduced and referred to committee, but has not moved forward since. This bill’s purpose is to redirect how federal grant money can be used to better solve this problem and also to require states and cities to not only report what their rape kit backlog is, but also to have a plan prepared to end and prevent rape kit backlogs. This bill will amend the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 to better address the problem of rape kit backlogs.

Rape is a crime against a person that horrifically assaults every aspect of personhood. It is a crime that affects one’s body, mind, and spirit, and has long-term implications in the survivor’s life. Our faith informs our action, as we are called as the Church to stand up in the face of injustice and work towards freedom from systems of oppression and injustice. The writer of the final chapters of Isaiah proclaims, “Is not this the fast that I choose: to loose the bonds of injustice, to undo the thongs of the yoke, to let the oppressed go free, and to break every yoke?” (Isa. 58:6). We are called to action through our faith and the Gospel message, and in the case of injustices transpiring involving the backlog of rape kits, we are called to stand and act alongside persons who have already survived a tremendous evil.

For these reasons, we recommend that the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) seek advice from the Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C., on how to educate and advocate for this issue. We recommend that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stand behind the Justice for Sexual Assault Survivors Act of 2011 and advocate for the passing of this bill.

On Advocating for Trade Reform and Accountability—From the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks.

The Presbytery of Plains and Peaks respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to address the American Free Trade Agreements that affect immigration and economic development, particularly the United States’ role in the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), through the following measures:

1. Encourage PC(USA) members, congregations, and presbyteries to advocate for corrective measures to mitigate trade imbalances, unemployment trends, and market distortions related to NAFTA, the current recession, and to longer term patterns of inequality and underdevelopment, such as:
   - The Trade Reform, Accountability, Development, and Employment (TRADE) Act, designed to enhance the lives of farmers and factory workers, to free poor children to attend school, and to help lift people out of poverty.
   - Revisions to trade agreements that often privilege corporations over citizens and protective agencies of government, and other measures to challenge both governmental and corporate dangers of corruption or collusion.
   - Similar mitigating measures and trade reforms that would relate to many areas of the world such as Central and South America[ ], Jordan[ ], and Peru[ ].
   - Appropriate investigation of violations of land, water, labor rights, and tax-shelters by corporations taking advantage of World Trade Organization and free trade agreement provisions.

Rationale

As Christians we have a biblical mandate to establish justice, and care for the powerless. For example:

- Micah 6:8 tells us that we are to “do justice and love kindness”;
- Amos 2:6 speaks of God’s judgment on those who “sell the righteous for silver and the needy for a pair of shoes.”

As Presbyterians we have a constitutional imperative:

- to promote social righteousness (F-1.0304)
- to promote acts of compassion and advocacy (W-7.3003)

A. Five Key Points of the TRADE Act

1. Labor
   - Acceptable minimum wages, fair hours of work, work health, and safety standards
   - Rights to collective bargaining, elimination of force labor, and child labor

2. Human Rights
   - Sustains fundamental human rights (defined by United Nations Universal Declaration to Human Rights)
3. Environment and Public Safety
   - The partner country’s established environmental, public health, or safety standards upheld
   - Prohibits illegally harvested resources and prohibits illegally extracted natural resources

4. Food and Product Health and Safety
   - Food and non-food products imported to US must meet or exceed existing US standards concerning safety, pesticides, inspections, packaging, labeling, etc.
   - The partner country may impose standards to protect public health and safety

5. Agricultural
   - Ensure adequate and stable market returns for each country
   - Encourage conservation through best practices in management and production of crops
   - Prevent dumping of agricultural commodities at below cost production (undercutting prices of agricultural goods by transnational businesses)
   - Protect rights of partner country to establish policies that determine fair remuneration for management and labor costs

All key points will preserve or uphold:
- US laws relating to antitrust and anticompetitive business practices
- Policies which do not conflict with current agricultural policies and laws of United States
- Enforcement of these standards (included in each key point)

B. Examples of Relevant Economic Developments
   1. North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA)
      - “(In) 1989 Mexico was self-sufficient in the production of rice and corn. Today Mexico imports about 80–90% of its needs from the USA, because NAFTA requested that the Mexican Government not provide support to the Mexican farmers.”
      - “Many schools are abandoned as underage children work in the fields to help parents earn enough to feed them. A child might produce twenty to thirty bunches—half the total produced by an adult. Companies pay 80 or 81 centavos (11 cents in 1996) for a dozen bunches of onions.”
      - “In many Mexican factories, working conditions are threats to the health of the workers. No ventilation in plants and some workers suffer from “metal fume fever,” a condition caused by welding, which causes damage to lungs and eyes.”
      - “The Increase of poverty and unemployment resulted in the growth of the drug cartels. Gangsters rich on profits brought hell to Juarez, a dusty border city. Mexico has become the major transit route for drugs from Central America.”
      - “[The drug cartels’] mobsters are putting Mexico’s halting democracy to a test, using violence and bribes to influence elections for governor, the legislature and all 113 mayors.”

   2. Central American Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA)
      - Guatemala: The women and their families are trapped in extreme poverty, earning 76 cents to $1.15 an hour.
      - El Salvador: The women are paid just 94 cents for each $165 North Face jacket they sew – meaning that their wages amount to less than six-tenth of one percent of the jacket’s retail price.
      - In 2010 the drug smugglers ensured that Honduras, El Salvador, Belize, and Guatemala were among the world’s seven most violent countries.
      - Nicaragua: The consequences of neoliberal trade policies in towns like El Regadio, made it difficult for rural communities to compete with U.S. subsidized agricultural exports. Many farmers had to leave their land to work in factories.

   3. Other
      - U.S.—Jordan Free Trade Agreement Descent into Human Trafficking: Tens of thousands of Foreign Guest Workers Stripped of their Passports and Trapped in Involuntary Servitude.
La Oroya, Peru, a smelting plant has put out so much pollution that 97% of children, in that area, have had high levels of lead in their blood.\(^1\)

Endnotes

3. Ibid.
CAFTA, we are now facing the reality that not only have the economic gains not been realized as promised, but these trade agreements have lead to significant problems for labor standards, workers’ rights, and collective bargaining rights.

The erosion of these rights is of particular concern to communities of people of color as well as to women workers. As always, women of color are at the crossroads of this erosion of rights. As workers’ rights erode, there is an exponential impact on people of color. Racial ethnic communities hold a disproportionately higher number of jobs in the industries that are most affected by NAFTA and CAFTA. Additionally, these groups have a history of discrimination in the workplace, needing greater protections such as those historically provided by union memberships. Collective bargaining emphasizes equal pay and fair treatment in the workplace, two areas of rights that are essential for women and people of color. ACREC believes that in this depressed economy when we find the middle class struggling more than ever before, trade agreements need to shore up keep workers’ rights not strip them away.

Additional Comment on Item 11-19—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The GAMC suggests that the American Free Trade Agreements be changed to Free Trade Agreements enacted by the United States to more accurately reflect that these are FTAs that are initiated by the U.S. government. We also suggest that Peru be omitted (it is part of South America).

The PC(USA) has long history of policies related to trade and globalization. The 217th General Assembly (2006) (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 826) passed the Resolution on Just Globalization: Justice, Ownership and Accountability http://www.pcusa.org/resource/resolution-just-globalization/ which is a comprehensive guide for working towards trade policies within the context of “globalization that reflects justice, community, and the sustainability of creation.” The rationale from pages 7–10 and 40–50 is applicable to this overture.

The Resolution on Just Globalization supports advocating for the corrective measures listed above related to NAFTA and bilateral free trade agreements. The PC(USA) policy instructs that PC(USA) agencies engage “in creating guidelines and mechanisms to help balance appropriately the interests of transnational corporations and of host or trading nations with weakened internal governance structures” (B.2.e.). It also challenges Presbyterians to undertake cross-cultural dialogue in order to understand other cultures and assist them in their struggle for survival (F.5.). Church partners and mission co-workers in Mexico, Peru, Colombia, El Salvador, and Nicaragua are increasingly highlighting the profound impact that U.S. trade agreements have on communities, the environment, and national services including schools, health, and infrastructure. They bring to our attention guidelines or mechanisms needed to balance more appropriately the interests of transnational corporations. Presbyterians have visited partners in some of these countries and are supportive of campaigns such as No Greater Rights in Peru to focus attention on the unfairness of some of the clauses, such as the Investor State Clause, of these agreements that allow transnational corporations to sue governments in international tribunals (while the reverse is not possible—governments have no recourse to sue transnational corporations). You can learn more about the structural imbalance created by the Investor State Clause of these Free Trade Agreements at http://www.ips-dc.org/reports/the_new_us_model_bilateral_investment_treaty_a_public_interest_critique or http://www.ips-dc.org/reports/mining_for_profits_in_international_tribunals.

Since the passage of Just Globalization in 2006, a number of bilateral free trade agreements have been passed and the intended and unintended, positive and negative impacts of NAFTA and these agreements have emerged. Item 11-19 focuses PC(USA) attention more specifically on the areas where corrective measures are needed.

[The assembly referred Item 11-20 to Mission Responsibility Through Investment to report back to the 221st General Assembly (2014). See pp. 28, 34.]

A Statement on the Housing and the Mortgage Crisis—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Urge all councils (sessions, synods, and General Assembly) of the PC(USA) to examine their financial ties to large banks that continue to operate against the common good of their communities at the expense of their own parishioners and communities.

2. Urge all PC(USA) entities (including, but not limited to, the Board of Pensions, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) Foundation, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., etc.) to examine their financial ties to large banks and Wall Street institutions that continue to operate against the common good and against the Socially Responsible Investment Policies of the General Assembly.

3. Investigate moving monies out of large Wall Street institutions and into local banks, saving and loans, and credit unions who act in partnership with their depositors instead of financial adversaries.

4. Urge the Congress of the United States to form an independent investigator or commission and fully investigate the links between large banks and the FDIC and the practices put in place that places higher value on foreclosure than modifying existing loans.

5. Ask the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), and Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to find ways for the church at large to respond to this crisis.

As of June 2010, East Contra Costa County, California, was at ground zero of the “housing crisis.” This crisis was triggered by the government, Wall Street, and banks as the housing market was turned into another vehicle for illusory financial “gain” and “profit” using creative and deceptive loan products that artificially inflated the housing market. When the inevitable bubble burst, the large banks stood back and refused to take any responsibility for the loss in value, instead maintaining that it was the client who should bear the full responsibility of the loss and continue to pay on loans that are now up to 233 percent of their homes new market value (i.e. current home market value of $325k on an original loan/market value of $725K). Banks have refused loan modifications in mass and continue to put corporate profits ahead of community and societal welfare using “legal” tactics at the expense of the greater good in the name of “profit.” The artificially created mortgage market heated up the housing market as government and Wall Street created/pushed ever more “creative” and risky loan products causing home prices to be inflated far past their intrinsic or sustainable value. The borrowers were lent money based on the value of the property WHEN PURCHASED (therefore on an artificially high price and appreciation rate to start with) and the home was taken as collateral by the lender as an appreciating asset. If the lender was not forming a business relationship based on the value of the property, then they would not have insisted on the home as collateral. When the bubble burst and home prices fell precipitously the lenders have refused to take any responsibility for the loss of value in the asset, that they approved and accepted via formal appraisal (again artificially high due to artificial demand created by their own loan products), and are instead leaving the loss of value 100 percent on the shoulders of the homeowners. How can this possibly be fair to the business partner called the “homeowner”? If the banks would revalue the asset and split the “loss” 50 percent with the borrower while locking in a current fixed rate this would share the burden and responsibility of the loss while resetting the market and leveling the playing field. Instead the lenders are only focusing on their own balance sheets and refusing to share any responsibility for the losses. These “losses” are write-offs for the corporations but the homeowners do not have the same option, except to emulate the banks and walk away from depressed or nonperforming assets. When banks do this they call it “strategic default,” when homeowners do it the bank’s call it “immoral” and “walking away.”

Banks are refusing loan modifications on the same homes that they went into financial partnership on with their borrowers on the basis that the same home no longer has enough “equity” for them to loan money on and they refuse to lower the existing interest rate or reduce the principle even though they already hold the mortgage on the same property at a higher and increasingly punitive interest rate. Analysis of these homes shows it will take approximately 10 to 15 years for many of these homes to approach a “break even” point for these homeowners. These homes hold an unsustainable mortgage rate that is increasing the payment, based on the original loan when the appreciation of the home was in double digits, dramatically above the original rates. The banks refuse to even lock in the current existing rates that new applicants enjoy and even when the existing borrowers would be willing to continue to pay on hundreds of thousands of dollars in “blue sky,” or illusory, equity in order to stay in their homes. Current interest rates under 5 percent are simply unavailable to existing homeowners.

As of June 2010, the large banks have completed approximately 10 percent of those eligible under federal guidelines for loan modifications. Many thousands have been given “trial modifications” only to find that at the end of the ninety-day period, despite having made all payments on time, they are told “sorry, you no longer qualify,” “we have lost your paperwork,” or “we have canceled your loan modification at YOUR request,” despite written contracts and instructions from the banks stating otherwise. In one case when the written contract was called to the attention of the bank’s loss mitigator, the client was told “yes we did send that contract and yes you did comply with all requirements, however, we were never bound by the contract because we ‘did not SIGN it.’” These stall tactics and deceptive practices only exacerbate the problem and, apparently, are done to collect partial payments from the clients while the banks wait for the market to recover and THEN foreclose on the property to maximize their profit.

Many banks sold their toxic assets to investor groups while other larger banks or independent investor groups with the “help” of the government, acquired them from failed banks by way of the FDIC, at 70 percent of par value and received a “loss share agreement or LSA” from the FDIC for 80 percent to 95 percent of any loss taken on those loans based on their Organizations that work for the betterment of our all of our people and all of our communities. It is incumbent upon us to investigate other avenues of investment that support our communities and support those organizations through the court systems. When such organizations as the major banks and Wall Street Investment have lost their moral center by greed, profiteering at the expense of our citizens and communities, and constructive fraud that is still to be adjudicated by the court.

By 2011 many local communities and church groups have banded together or acted unilaterally and removed millions of dollars of deposits from the large banks that continue to act only on behalf of their profit motive. Most Holy Trinity Catholic Church has closed accounts with Bank of America totaling more than $3 million dollars. Other churches are following suit and groups such as PACT—People Acting in Community Together as part of PICO—are helping to lead the bank and housing accountability actions across the nation.

Since the summer of 2010, the foreclosure nightmare has continued for millions of Americans. The following is from Marian Wang of ProPublica, Dec 27, 2011 as part of www.ProPublica.org’s on-going coverage:

If last year was the year in which faulty foreclosures and bank errors became a full-blown scandal, this has been the year of waiting for something to be done about it. First, there’s the still-to-come multi-state settlement over alleged fraud on the part of the country’s five largest mortgage servicers. That’s the settlement being brokered by a coalition of state attorneys general and once touted as homeowners’ best bet for redressing banks’ flaws in foreclosure and mortgage documentation. Over the past year, one story after another declared such a deal was imminent, but the details—the total price tag, the deal’s framework, and the expected date—have continually been changing.

Earlier this month, the Des Moines Register reported Iowa Attorney General Tom Miller—a point man for the attorneys’ general probe—as saying that the final deal should be complete before Christmas and would include a measure to reduce the total debt owed by underwater homeowners. No deal has yet been announced. Miller wouldn’t disclose a dollar figure on the size of the settlement—or whether California, one of the hardest-hit states, would participate.

Finally, it bears mentioning that despite the efforts on both the federal and state level to address the systemic failures of banks and mortgage servicers, errors are continuing—and they’re still causing wrongful foreclosures.

According to the government’s own figures, of 1,639,382 Trial Modifications started the banks have only made permanent 40.1 percent and have canceled more than 46 percent. This does not take into consideration the millions more loans that were not deemed “qualified” to begin a trial modification at any price because they had “lost” too much of their value. i.e. negative equity typically beyond 20 percent or where the loan product was not “covered.” Additionally, there has been documented mortgage fraud, both with the origination of some loans and the practice calling “robo signing” where notary publics have fraudulently signed loans at a later date when the original paperwork was not to be found.

From 2007 to June 2010 an estimated 2.36 MILLION homes have been repossessed by foreclosure (RealtyTrac data).

According to CNN, for the year 2011 more than 50,000 homes per MONTH were being foreclosed upon by banks. (CNNMoney, December 15, 2011).

Outgoing Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Chairwoman Sheila C. Bair’s exit interview by the New York Times included this statement. Bair said that the mortgage’s industry’s reluctance to provide mortgage modifications stems in part from the industry’s “disdain for borrowers.” “I think some of it was that they didn’t think borrowers were worth helping,” she said (New York Times via www.ProPublica.org July 13, 2011).

In 2011 many local communities and church groups have banded together or acted unilaterally and removed millions of dollars of deposits from the large banks that continue to act only on behalf of their profit motive. Most Holy Trinity Catholic Church has closed accounts with Bank of America totaling more than $3 million dollars. Other churches are following suit and groups such as PACT—People Acting in Community Together as part of PICO—are helping to lead the bank and housing accountability actions across the nation.

With this information the writers reaffirm our commitment to the Statement on Housing and the Mortgage Crisis and ask that it be included in the 220th General Assembly (2012) actions in the summer of 2012.

The PC(USA) congregations and their collective influence controls or influences literally billions of dollars of investments and holdings with the large commercial banks across the country and around the world. It is the history of PC(USA) to stand against financial tyranny and against profiting from the suffering of others. The mortgage crisis was created and driven by greed, profiteering at the expense of our citizens and communities, and constructive fraud that is still to be adjudicated through the court systems. When such organizations as the major banks and Wall Street Investment have lost their moral center it is incumbent upon us to investigate other avenues of investment that support our communities and support those organizations that work for the betterment of our all of our people and all of our communities.

The American financial system has lost its moral center. It’s time to turn over the tables of the moneychangers, and insist that they be good corporate citizens.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-20—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-20 overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to urge all Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) councils and entities to review their financial ties to large banks and Wall Street institutions to determine whether any of them operate against the common good or the socially responsible investment policies of the General Assembly and, if so, to move their monies into local banks, savings and loans, and credit unions. It further requests that the 220th General Assembly (2012) urge Congress to initiate an independent investigation of large banks, their links with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), and practices that put corporate profit ahead of community and societal welfare.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that this overture be approved with the following amendments to Recommendations 3–5: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“3. [Request PC(USA) councils and investing bodies to] investigate the costs and benefits of moving monies out of large Wall Street institutions and into local banks, saving and loans, and credit unions who act in partnership with their depositors instead of acting as financial adversaries, and to report to these boards and councils on the feasibility of doing more business with more accountable local institutions.

“4. Urge the Congress of the United States to form an independent investigator or commission fully investigate the links between large banks and the FDIC and the practices that place higher value on foreclosure than modifying existing loans.

“5. Ask the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), and Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), to find ways for the church at large to respond to this crisis] analyze the growing lack of accountability to clients for the consequences of their actions among large banks, financial management services, and related transnational firms, and to recommend to the 221st General Assembly (2014) appropriate responses to the growing corporate practice of denial of responsibility for actions that are not in the best interests of their clients."

Rationale

The financial exploitation of clients and the injustices it generates have been addressed in Scripture since the origins of the Hebrew Bible (specifically in prohibitions of usury), but is a relatively recent topic for policy attention within the General Assembly. In fact, PC(USA) policy on this subject originated just six years ago with approval of A Reformed Understanding of Usury for the 21st Century (http://www.pcusa.org/media/uploads/resolutions/usury.pdf) by the 217th General Assembly (2006). While noting the dangers in subprime lending, that document did not focus on housing and the practices that led to the housing and credit bubble, the subsequent loss of home value, and the continuing foreclosure crisis.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) resolution, however, did recommend support for less costly financial services, church-wide education on the ethics of lending, and advocacy for more just regulation. It also posed three criteria for determining modern day usury:

1. Does a practice or a law promote financial relationships that take advantage of the financial distress of those economically disadvantaged?

2. Is a practice or a law structured in a manner that balances the economic benefits for both the lender and the borrower?

3. Does a practice or a law lead to the conduct of financial transactions in a fair and just manner, e.g. characterized by truthfulness, nondiscrimination to the borrower; full and understandable disclosure; and the absence of coercion?

On the basis of these criteria, the practices by large banks and financial institutions which form the focus of this overture clearly constitute usury.

But the larger question is why these unjust practices seem to be increasingly common among institutions that previously sought to serve the interests of their clients. The proposed analysis would explore the sources of growing corporate irresponsibility and seek to identify mechanisms of accountability that might curb these abuses.
Advice and Counsel on Item 11-20—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The impact of these practices has been disastrous for poor and working class communities. It has been especially difficult for racial ethnic communities.

The impact of this activity has caused many racial ethnic people to lose their homes, some to become homeless and many have difficulty finding help in working through the legal implications and ramifications.

As the unemployment picture gets worse more and more people have been forced to give up or walk away from mortgages and homes. There are many that with modification are still struggling.

The PC(USA) continues to stand against financial practices that are exploitative or that destroy the quality of life for our communities.

Commissioners' Resolution. On Appointing Two Seasons of Prayer to Seek the Will of Almighty God in This Year's Election.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), at its meeting in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, appoints two seasons of prayer. The first on Saturday morning, July 7, 2012, before the assembly adjourns, and the second on Sunday morning, November 4, 2012, in our churches across the nation. [These] [The] purpose of these seasons of prayer will be to seek the will of Almighty God in this year’s election, and to ask the Almighty God to lead the political parties of our nation to seek the peace, unity, and purity of our nation and world, not their own individual political ideologies] [common good of the nation and the world].

Rationale

The Book of Order, W-2.1002, declares that: “In prayer we respond to God in many ways. In adoration we praise God for who God is. In thanksgiving we express gratitude for what God has done. In confession we acknowledge repentance for what we as individuals and as a people have done or left undone. In supplication we plead for ourselves and the gathered community. In intercession we plead for others, on behalf of others, and for the whole world …”

On November 6, 2012, the citizens of the United States of America will be given the opportunity to claim one of the highest privileges and duties of all citizens—to vote in a national election.

The political climate of our nation has taken on more of the character of a political war between Democrats and Republicans than the original intention of the constitutional writers who sought a cooperative endeavor of American citizens who seek the patriotic good of all the land, and all its citizens.

As in our churches we seek to further the peace, unity, and purity of the church, so should we, as citizens of our nation, seek the very same for our society.

That prayer is, at all times, proper for Christians to use to respond to God in many ways.

Comment on Item 11-21—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The Office of Public Witness (OPW) is in the process of launching a new Respectful Dialogue Initiative. The OPW will welcome the opportunity to incorporate these seasons of prayer into its work to encourage our nation to move past partisan politics and to treat one another with respect.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Prolonged Solitary Confinement in U.S. Prisons.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Calls upon the fifty states and the federal government to follow the example of Maine, Colorado, and Mississippi in significantly limiting the number of prisoners held in solitary confinement, and to limit a prisoner’s duration of solitary confinement, and to instead offer alternatives that address the mental health needs of prisoners, offer skill building opportunities such as anger management, job training, and educational classes that effectively contribute both to prisoners’ rehabilitation and to their successful transition back into society.

2. Joins in the call of U.S. faith leaders to urge the president to sign [and the senate to ratify] the Optional Protocol to the Convention Against Torture in order to reduce risk of torture and abuse in U.S. prisons.

3. Urges presbyteries, congregations, and individual Presbyterians to participate [in the efforts of the] with the Presbyterian Criminal Justice Network, and presbyteries may also wish to participate in the work of PHEWA, on the National Religious Campaign Against Torture to significantly limit the use of solitary confinement.

God created human beings, endowed with inherent dignity, to live in fellowship with one another. Hebrews 13:3 states: “Remember those who are in prison, as though you were in prison with them; those who are being tortured, as though you yourselves were being tortured.”

Prisoners held in solitary confinement are often detained in a cell by themselves for twenty-three hours a day; some prisoners are kept in these conditions for months, years, or even decades. Scientific studies have found that prisoners held in isolation for extended periods experience symptoms akin to delirium, including hallucinations, perceptual distortions, palpitations, panic attacks, and suicidal ideation. The impact of isolation on mentally ill prisoners and juveniles is especially damaging.

The United States reportedly has 5 percent of the world’s population, 25 percent of its prisoners, and the vast majority of prisoners in long-term solitary confinement. The U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics reports that in 2000 there were more than 80,000 prisoners in restricted housing units in the United States.

Prisoners are sometimes released from solitary confinement units directly to their communities when they complete their prison sentence and such prisoners are significantly more likely to recommit crimes. Holding prisoners in solitary confinement units is significantly more expensive than keeping them in the general prison population. Instituting humane alternatives makes sense, both financially and morally. States including Maine, Colorado, and Mississippi have significantly limited the use of solitary confinement in their prisons and as a result, have experienced cost savings and decreased prison violence.

The Optional Protocol to the Convention Against Torture treaty that would establish independent monitors to prevent torture and abuse that occurs in our nation’s prisons, detention centers, and police stations, has not been signed by the president nor ratified by the U.S. Senate.

The National Religious Campaign Against Torture, organized at a conference at Princeton Theological Seminary, led by several Presbyterians with membership that includes the General Assembly Mission Council, operates a major effort to limit the use of solitary confinement.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-22—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 11-22.

Rationale

The ACREC recognizes that African American and Latino/Hispanic men are disproportionately part of the U.S. prison population. As a result, they bear the brunt of extreme penalties that are imposed including prolonged solitary confinement. We encourage the church to address the issue of mass incarceration including prolonged solitary confinement of the poor who are largely people of color and to refocus societal resources from imprisonment and punishment to rehabilitation and successful transition of our brothers and sister back into society.

The financial burden of this resolution can be minimized by use of electronic media, such as the PC(USA) website, internet publications, as well as email communication to church bodies.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-22

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-22—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-22 be approved with amendment to Recommendation 3 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a brackets and strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

Rational

The Presbyterian Criminal Justice Network (PCJN) of the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA) was established through action of the 219th General Assembly (2010) to develop and implement education and advocacy ministries around issues of criminal justice. The PCJN is currently addressing the issue of solitary confinement in the context of prison conditions.

Comment on Item 11-22—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

Members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) took the lead in the debate on torture and were instrumental in forming the National Religious Campaign against Torture (NRCAT). Staff from the Office of Public Witness (OPW) was present at the initial conference where the campaign was formed and the OPW has been working closely with the campaign since its inception on issues such as the following:

- Ending the practice of extraordinary rendition.
- Urging President Obama to sign the Optional Protocol to the Convention Against Torture (OPCAT). This treaty would protect all prisoners in U.S. custody from torture by setting up mechanisms to assure that U.S. laws prohibiting torture are followed in all detention facilities, including domestic prisons.
- Advocating for the State Department to prepare a “Torture Watch List” of countries engaged in torture and then to make U.S. assistance available for efforts to end the use of torture.

The Office of Public Witness is currently working with NRCAT to end the practice of solitary confinement. The office advocated along with other members of the faith community for a public congressional hearing on the subject that was held on June 18th. Director Rev. Dr. J. Herbert Nelson joined other faith leaders in a twenty-three hour fast representing the number of hours that persons are allowed under the present law to be held in isolation. Rev. Nelson led his colleagues in breaking the fast at a press conference after the hearing.

This year, funds were given to the office for a summer fellow specifically to cover the issues related to torture (such as solitary confinement). The summer fellow is currently on staff.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Alternate Giving Options for Union Members.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) instructs the Office of the Stated Clerk to provide e-mail notice to sessions, presbyteries, and synods, announcing that members of our PC(USA) congregations who belong to organized labor unions can claim employee choice with the “Beck Rule” (see below) to “unbind” and enable those members to authorize redirecting the union fees unrelated to representation issues, to charitable causes such as for our neighbors in need, our churches, or Presbyterian missions.
A. Background

• The Presbyterian church has responded to the harshness of the early 20th century industrialization when we embraced organized labor and unions with the Social Creed of 1908.

• In the 1930s and 1940s unions were much needed to secure safety and working conditions that enabled human dignity and quality of life.

• In 2006, we offered a Social Creed for the 21st Century so in our era “We offer a vision of a society that share more and consumes less … seeks compassion over suspicion and equality over domination … and finds security in joined hands rather than massed arms.” Through the Social Creed, the churches declared that they would stand together and work toward addressing the needs of all workers. This Social Creed remains focused on economic issues but also addresses issues that fell outside the earlier reformers’ line of vision. Language chosen for the creed may be seen as optimistic by some, but is intended to express the gospel conviction that real freedom and power in life consist in sharing, rather than in an abundance of things. Jesus came not to be served, but to give his life for others: his life and example still challenge us to confront injustice and preach the Good News. (ref: November 9, 2006, background to Social Creed for the 21st Century)

• Labor Day Sunday 2011: We begin with an affirmation: the PC(USA) does have something to say to the approximately 25 million unemployed, under-employed, and discouraged workers. We have something to say to the 46-47 million who are on food stamps, often despite living in families with at least one person employed—though in a low-wage job … we favor an adequate minimum wage and freedom for workers to bargain collectively. And, we are starting a new interactive journal of Christian Social Justice, UNBOUND, which brings to mind unshackling prisoners. UNBOUND will also call to mind Jesus’ words at Lazarus’ tomb: “unbind him”! (Jn. 11:44) (ref: Salt and Light, Helping the church to use its voice for justice, Labor Day Sunday 2011)

• 1959 Statement—Minutes, UPCUSA, 1959, Part I, p 383. “[The General Assembly]: “… Believes that union membership as a basis of continued employment should be neither required by law nor forbidden by law, Condemns unequivocally violence and threats of violence in labor disputes, Urges federal legislation to insure the honest use of union funds and to guarantee the right of appeal and the right of secret ballot, Calls upon individual Presbyterian union members to take a responsible part in the activities of their unions.”

• 1977 Statement—Minutes, UPCUSA, 1977, Part I, p 126. The 189th General Assembly (1977): “… Reaffirms the actions of previous General Assemblies supporting the right of every employable person a job, decent and safe working conditions and a salary adequate to meet at least his or her basic needs.”

• 1980 Statement—Minutes, PCUS, 1980, Part I, p 229 “… The style of servanthood means that economic activity needs to be viewed as serving the needs of the world. Decisions should not be based solely on the self-interest of corporations, workers or social interest groups. Servanthood also means that a stronger emphasis needs to be placed on a mutual sharing of burdens instead of the shifting of risks to other people, groups, or societies in a time of growing economic uncertainty.”

… The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should provide educational materials so that its members can become informed voters and advocates for economic policies that will serve to alleviate poverty, empower marginalized groups, and generate environmentally sustainable economic growth around the world.

All sectors of society—including labor, management, and government—must be engaged in the task of economic renewal of our life together. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should play a significant role as a catalyst for conversation among these sectors. Justice demands that social institutions guarantee all persons the opportunity to participate actively in economic decision making that affects them.….

B. Observations and Basis

• Unions automatically negotiate payroll deduction dues, which are a combination of fees from their members for the expenses related to representation issues and expenses not related to representation issues, such as political contributions over which individual members have no say. The leadership only of labor unions can decide to give portions of members’ fees to political causes that may not reflect the individual member’s choice of donation or support.

• Members of unions pay fees that include portions for union expenses unrelated to representation issues.

• The “Beck Rule” after the Supreme Court’s decision in Communications Workers of America v. Beck, In 1988,

The Supreme Court concluded that the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) does not permit a union to collect and expend dues beyond those necessary to finance collective bargaining, contract administration, and grievance adjustment. Further, Employees have a right to know how their union dues are spent and have a right to stop money from being taken out of their pockets that is not used for legitimate collective bargaining purposes.
This rule, often referred to as “Beck Rights,” sets forth such employee rights, as not to pay fees for union expenses unrelated to representation issues.

- [This resolution does not suggest reducing or increasing union fees that are payroll deducted. It suggests educating union represented workers that they can redirect that portion of fees not required for union business to mission/charitable uses.]

C. Biblical and Theological Foundation

- Jesus’ words at Lazarus’ tomb: “unbind him”! (Jn. 11:44).
- Obviously justice and freedom and other themes are found widely in Scripture.

D. Mission and Charitable Needs

Mission and charitable needs continue their long decline in the PC(USA) as well as reductions in other philanthropy sectors. These resources document the facts.

- The Center of Philanthropy at Indiana University in December 2008 said that: “Nearly 94 percent of nonprofit fundraisers surveyed said the economy is currently having a negative (65.3 percent) or very negative (28.5 percent) effect on fundraising” [http://www.philanthropy.iupui.edu/About/].

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-23

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-23—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 11-23.

Rationale

This item has the impact of weakening collective bargaining rights. The ACREC, in ACREC’s resolution Item 11-10, supports collective bargaining rights. The ACREC does not challenge any person’s right to challenge any acts that may be unlawful. This item, although entitled as an “alternate giving option” for union members to contribute financially to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and other charitable causes, appears to be a disguise for an effort to weaken unions and collective bargaining.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-23

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-23—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-23 be disapproved.

This commissioners’ resolution would instruct the Stated Clerk to provide notice to PC(USA) sessions, presbyteries, and synods that members of PC(USA) congregations who belong to labor unions, or who work under union contracts, could claim employee choice with the “Beck Rule” to authorize redirecting a portion of their union fees unrelated to the representation issues, to charitable causes including PC(USA) activities.

Rationale

Previous General Assemblies have supported the right of every employable person to a job, decent working conditions, and a salary adequate to meet at least his or her basic needs. The Social Creed for the 21st Century, approved in 2008, expresses strong support for labor organization, for example.

We believe that this resolution would negatively impact collective bargaining and lessen the ability of workers effectively to join together for jobs, decent working conditions, and salaries adequate to meet their needs. It would do this in two ways. It would reduce the funds available to unions to complete their missions, and cause administrative burdens on unions as they respond to redirection requests. It could also add administrative costs for receiving bodies such as churches depending on the manner in which percentages of union dues might be sequestered, the number of unions involved, etc.
There have been many interpretations around the National Labor Relations Act, the Beck Rule, and more than one Executive Order on the subject, varying by presidential administration and National Labor Relations Board composition. The commissioners’ resolution does not reflect settled law. Additional legal costs would be needed to develop a substantial legal basis and financial mechanisms if its objectives were desired. As such, we urge a disapproval of this resolution.

We also think that any church notice on any redirection of dues would have a chilling impact on collective bargaining, and that would not represent historical church guidance.

A. Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) Agency Summary

“The Lord is a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble” (Ps. 9:9)

“The Spirit told me to go with them and not to make a distinction between them and us.” (Acts 11:12)

...[Be] doers of the word, and not merely hearers …” (Jas. 1:22)

1. Introduction

The context of women’s advocacy is a human situation where women experience injustice because they are women. Grounded in communal faith in God who liberated the people of Israel from oppression and covenanted with Israel that they might do justice, and motivated by painful recognition of sexism within and without, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) explicitly articulated in the Articles of Agreement its commitment to work against gender-based discrimination. The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is a contemporary fulfillment of this promise. The new Book of Order continues to uphold this commitment: “In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. There is therefore no place in the life of the Church for discrimination against any person” (Book of Order, F-1.0403). Created by the mandate of the 205th General Assembly (1993) at the recommendation of the Report of the Task Force on Shape and Form, ACWC is charged with the responsibility of assisting the church to:

- give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 ... monitor[ing] and evaluat[ing] policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church...and advocate[ing] for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society [as a whole]. (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 262)

2. Assigned Responsibilities

The ACWC’s assigned functions are delineated in the GAMC Manual of Operations (Appendix I, VII.C., p. 23).

They include:

a. Prepar[ing] policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and Advice and counsel memoranda on women’s concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Mission Council, or on its own initiative.

b. Advis[ing] the General Assembly Mission Council on matters of women’s concerns including statements concerning pressing issues the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

c. Provid[ing] advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women’s concerns.

d. Assist[ing] the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on women’s concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

e. Provid[ing] the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on women’s concerns.

f. Monitor[ing] the implementation of women’s policies and programs relative to women’s concerns.

g. Through advocacy maintain[ing] a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women’s concerns.

The ACWC is housed in the Office of the Executive Director, General Assembly Mission Council. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly and General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). The ACWC has organized itself with a leadership team of three co-chairs: two serve as corresponding members to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council respectively. One member of ACWC is a voting member of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI). There are twelve voting members of the committee; ten members are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) and elected by the General Assembly. They are chosen based on their individual qualifications and do not represent any constituencies. One member is the current moderator for Justice and Peace of Presbyterian Women and one member is a member of the General Assembly Mission Council, chosen and sent by that body. The committee also has a number of liaison members: Carmen Rosario from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), Erica Harley from the National Association of Presbyterian Clergywomen (NAPC), KT Ockels from World Mission of the General Assembly Mission Council, andMargryette Boyd from Racial Ethnic Young Women Together (REYWT), who joined the committee as liaison in 2011. During this term, the committee had representation from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) through Marsha Fowler, Gloria Albrecht, and Eric Mount, who each attended one or more meetings in that role. Members who rotated off the committee in July 2010 are Gay Byron, Adeline de Castro, and Maria Cardenes-Baez. Members who were elected to the committee in July 2010 were Barbara Adams Smelter, Samuel Chung, and Joann Haejong Lee. Samuel Chung’s position was declared vacant after two unexcused absences and has not yet been filled. Voting members who continued on from the previous term were Terry Alexander (MRTI), Jerri Rodewald, Jan Martin (GAMC), N’Yisrela Watts-Afriyie, Bill Gray, Darcy Metcalfe, and Chris Wolf (PW).

The ACWC met five times:

a. September 9–11, 2010, in Louisville, Kentucky

• The committee spent a significant amount of time on introductions as this was the first meeting for those elected at the 219th General Assembly (2010).

• The committee reviewed their work at General Assembly and looked ahead to what items they would need to monitor in the coming years.

• Nancy Young, coordinator for Racial Ethnic & Women’s Leadership Development Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges, met with the group to share her vision for her work and to hear about the work of ACWC.

• Vince Patton, who was soon to be Executive Administrator, joined the group for lunch and conversation.

• Unzu Lee, Presbyterian Women associate, reported to the group about the National Council of Churches’ project “Language Matters,” (later to be called “Words Matter”).

• Linda Valentine, Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) shared some of the work of the GAMC with the committee.

• The committee spent significant time determining how to divide their work into smaller working groups, and then spent time in those groups to determine work for the next two years. The committee organized themselves into three working groups: Health and Sexuality, Women and the Church, and Violence Against Women.

• The committee’s focus in this meeting was ecumenical and interfaith relations, which influenced their decision to meet in New Orleans, where the National Council of Churches (NCC) was holding their general assembly.

• The committee heard from Meagan Manas and Ann Tiemeyer of the NCC on the many ecumenical projects of the NCC related to gender justice. In particular, they heard about the beginnings of the project, “Words Matter,” as well as the Fistula Stories Project. They also learned about the NCC’s Justice for Women Working Group, a group of ecumenical women who focus on partnering to work on various gender justice issues. One member of ACWC, as well as ACWC’s staff person, participate in the work of this group. This keeps ACWC connected to the work of other denominations, which often serve as good resources in a time when resources are limited.

• The committee participated in a group-building session as part of bringing on the new members and strengthening the work relationships of those who had been on ACWC for a time.

• The committee heard Cecilia Casal’s report of the ecumenical trip she participated in to Columbia, Ecuador, and Venezuela.

• The committee working groups decided which issues they would focus on for this two-year cycle.

• The committee was able to attend a portion of the NCC’s general assembly.

• The committee met in Washington, D.C., in conjunction with the Ecumenical Advocacy Days Conference, which was focused on gender justice issues. Following their meeting, the committee attended the conference.

• The Reverend Dr. J. Herbert Nelson met with the committee to share some of the work of the Office of Public Witness.
Committee member, Darcy Metcalfe, reported on her experience at the United Methodist Church’s Sexual Misconduct Conference and expressed her interest in looking further into the Safe Child policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Committee member, Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty, reported on her time in Hungary.

Committee member, Belinda Rice, reported on her work with the General Assembly committee assigned to study the situation of violence on the Mexico-U.S. border.

Committee member, Jerri Rodewald, reported on her time in New York at the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women.

Glenn Northern of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America and Nicolette Paterson of the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice met with the committee to discuss reproductive justice in the current context of the United States.

Linda Valentine, Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council, met with the committee to hear more about their work.

d. September 15–17, 2011, in Louisville, Kentucky

The committee worked on updating the ACWC manual of operations.

SanDawna Ashley, associate for Gender and Racial Justice, met with the committee and shared some of her work with them.

Tom Hay, director of operations, Office of the General Assembly, came to have a conversation with the group about the lack of childcare provided at General Assembly.

The committee spent time discussing the importance of the ACCRA confession and the Bible study written by Dr. Margaret Aymer and published by Presbyterian Women.

Committee member, Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty, gave an update of the work of the Status of Women Task Force.

Lisa Robbins and Ruth Gardner from the General Assembly Mission Council’s Human Resources department shared with the group the gender equity audit they are preparing for the next General Assembly.

Valerie Small, manager of General Assembly Nominations, met with the group to discuss best ways to include and encourage the participation of younger women on the advocacy committee.

Vince Patton, Executive Administrator of the General Assembly Mission Council, discussed the staffing for the committee.

The Health and Sexuality working group met with Claire Lewis and Michael Harper to discuss the church’s new online adolescent development curriculum.

e. January 17–19, 2012, in Louisville, Kentucky

The committee met to finalize its work going into the 220th General Assembly (2012).

Valerie Small, manager of General Assembly Nominations, and Amy Kim Kyremes-Parks of the General Assembly Nominating Committee met with ACWC to discuss nominations to ACWC going to General Assembly.

Patrick Heery, managing editor for Unbound, met with the committee to discuss his work with this interactive, online journal of social witness.

The committee met jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to discuss their work for General Assembly.

Three members of ACWC had attended the Women of Color Consultation in October of 2011, and Joann Lee led a discussion on her experiences at that event and on the consultation report going to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

4. Highlights

a. Status of Women Task Force

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns continued to stay connected to and support the work of the Status of Women Task Force, and is looking forward to the potential acceptance of the task force’s recommendations. The 218th General Assembly (2008) approved ACWC’s recommendation to study the status of women at all levels of the church, calling for the creation of the Status of Women Task Force. While restructuring slowed the initiation of this group and its work, the Status of Women Task Force has been created and met once in January 2010. The task force will continue its assigned function and report back to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

b. Protecting Access to Reproductive Health Services

The Health and Sexuality working group of ACWC monitored the development of legislative limitations on the availability of and access to reproductive health services for men and women in the United States and internationally. They studied “truth in advertising” issues related to self-described “abortion counseling clinics,” and questioned the availability of adequate scientific sexuality education. Further, they examined the inactivity by the PC(USA) in advocating for existing church policies and reviewed new PC(USA) materials and policy regarding sexual misconduct.

c. Ecumenical Focus

The committee has found that connections made through various ecumenical channels have provided resources and information for the committee that would otherwise have not been possible. Connections to the National Council of Churches’ Justice for Women’s Working Group and intentional participation in conferences like Ecumenical Advocacy Days and in groups like Ecumenical Women at the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women have deeply benefitted and informed the work of ACWC. The committee values ecumenical partnerships, particularly in a time when resources are limited in all denominations.

d. Young Women

The committee continues to be committed to working toward intentional inclusion of younger women in the work of the committee, and has spent considerable time considering the ways in which it could be more welcoming to younger women. Some of the younger members currently on ACWC have been instrumental in considering ways in which serving on the committee could be made more accessible to young women.

e. Intersectionality

The committee has worked to become more aware of and intentional about the places where women’s issues intersect with those of race, class, disability, etc., recognizing that most women find themselves at the intersection of more than one social identity marker that may influence the way they are treated and experience the world.

f. Partnering with Programmatic Staff of the GAMC

The committee is still working to adjust to the still relatively new separation of gender justice policy and program work. They have been intentional about staying connected with the staff of Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/ Presbyterian Women, and look forward to continuing to build their relationships with these women in order to make the work of gender justice in the church as effective as possible.

g. Staffing Shifts

As of shortly following the 219th General Assembly (2010), ACWC has begun sharing their staff person with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC). This provides a definite challenge to both committees in having adequate access to the resources staff provides and in finding meeting times that don’t overlap or occur too close together. The committee is concerned about how staff will manage at the General Assembly, when demands of both committees will be extremely high.

5. Actions of the Committee for Consideration of the 220th General Assembly (2012)

a. Resolutions in Response to Assigned Referrals

• A Resolution to Continue the Work of Deborah’s Daughters (Response to 2004 Referral: Item 05-03)
• A Resolution to Recommit to Celebrating the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God (Response to 2008 Referral: Item 09-13)

6. ACWC’s 2012 Resolutions

• A Resolution to Encourage Participation in the Words Matter Project
• A Resolution on Justice for Survivors of Sexual Assault

A Resolution Commending Study of the 2011–2012 Horizons Bible Study and the Accra Confession

1. Assigned Functions

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) works to fulfill its General Assembly mandate to provide advocacy and monitoring on issues affecting people of color in both church and society. The committee evaluates social trends in church and society and provides advice and counsel to the General Assembly (GA) and the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC). The committee addresses issues, including civil rights, racial justice, environmental justice, economic justice, public education, law enforcement, health care, employment, and housing as they directly impact communities of color and thereby the entire body of Christ. The committee also monitors the implementation of programs and policies approved by the church that impact the participation and quality of life for people of color within the church. The committee works in close cooperation with other agencies and entities within the church, including the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to fulfill its responsibilities. The ACREC’s assigned functions, as stated in the GAMC Manual of Operations include:

a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Mission Council, or on its own initiative.

b. Advise the General Assembly Mission Council on matters of racial ethnic concerns including statements concerning pressing issues that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.

c. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of racial ethnic concern.

d. Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on racial ethnic concerns and provide information to the church as requested.

e. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Mission Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.

f. Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies and programs relative to racial ethnic concerns.

Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concern.

The work of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) is coordinated through the Office of the General Assembly Mission Council by the executive administrator of the General Assembly Mission Council. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly, and its chair has corresponding member status with the General Assembly Mission Council and with the General Assembly.

2. Officers for 2010–2011

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns elected Stephen Hsieh as chair and Carmen Rosario as vice-chair. Patricia Petty Morse was chosen to serve as secretary. Cynthia Holder Rich was elected chair of the Resource and Referral Subcommittee, and Aida Faris was elected chair of the Study and Comment Subcommittee.

3. Accomplishments

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns used its regularly scheduled meetings to explore a wide range of topics of special interest to the committee and its work. Following the 219th General Assembly (2010), the committee met as follows:

- August 26–28, Louisville, Kentucky: The committee dedicated a large portion of its agenda to antiracism training led by the Reverend David Bowie. This prompted the group to commit to using a portion of each of their meetings on antiracism work. The group reviewed and made plans to complete its assignments from the General Assembly (GA) and had the opportunity to meet with several Louisville PC(USA) staff people, including Julia Thorne on immigration and Rhassell Hunter on racial ethnic and women’s ministries. They also had a dinner to honor and thank Curtis Kearns, retired executive administrator of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), who also served as staff person to ACREC for a year and a half.

- November 11–13, Houston, Texas: The committee heard from several guest speakers on a variety of immigration issues, including the experiences of new immigrants very much tied to racism. Representatives from the Asian Coordinating Ministry led a discussion regarding the difficulties new immigrants face when starting new church developments. The ACREC drafted a letter to those organizing the stewardship conference in Arizona requesting that they reconsider the location of the meeting, given the racist immigration law put into place there and our GA’s stance against holding national meetings there. The group also drafted letters of concern regarding the vacant Middle Eastern staff position in Louisville, as well as one regarding the consultation of ACREC in revision of the paper on Christians and Jews. The group strategized on ways to most efficiently and effectively use their budget in this two-year cycle while remaining committed to meeting face-to-face three times a year. The group updated a few procedural items in ACREC’s manual of operations, and elected new officers.

- March 3–5, Louisville, Kentucky: The committee had the opportunity to have conversations with Linda Valentine, Executive Director, GAMC, and Vince Patton, Executive Administrator, GAMC, as well as many of the staff people from Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries, including Sterling Morse, coordinator for Cross Cultural Ministries and Congregational Support. The subcommittee working on the GA-assigned task of renaming ACREC met extensively with Virstan Choy and mapped out a plan for their work. The full committee met with Julia Thorne, manager of Immigration Issues, Office of the General Assembly, to continue their education and work on immigration. The ACREC wrote letters of concern to Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries regarding the continued vacancy in the Middle East staff position, as well as the reduction in Native American staff.

- July 21–23, Stony Point, New York: The committee met at the Stony Point Conference Center. Rick Ufford-Chase introduced the group to some of the work going on at Stony Point, and some of the young adult interns led the group in a discussion around interfaith work and intentional community. The committee heard from Hans Hallundbaek and Theo Harris on criminal justice, a topic the group chose to focus on heading toward GA. The committee also spent time discussing the failure of the passage of the Belhar Confession, and considered next steps in its promotion. The ACREC continued conversation regarding concern over the vacant Middle East staff position and the reduction of Native American staff. On the final day of their meeting, the committee connected with the Mid-Council Commission and discussed the work of that group and the possibility of consultation with ACREC.

- November 10–12, Louisville, Kentucky: The committee met with the intention of gathering resources for their reports and referrals going to the 220th General Assembly (2012). As the committee is committed to participating in antiracism training at all of its meetings, Monica Cabell, associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment of the General Assembly Mission Council, led the group in this training. Kim Bobo, director of Interfaith Worker Justice, discussed with the group some of the major issues of workers’ rights. The Reverend Dr. Margaret Aymer led the committee in a Bible study that focused on issues of immigration, workers’ rights, and incarceration, giving the committee solid biblical witness to some of the issues of racial justice in our current context. A panel of experts led the committee in a discussion on the failure of the Belhar Confession to pass and what could be done to potentially bring this confession before the denomination again. Warren Cooper briefed the committee on the work of the Mid-Council Commission.

In 2012, the committee had its final full-committee meeting prior to General Assembly:
January 19–21, Louisville, Kentucky: The committee met jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to discuss business going to General Assembly. In their ACREC meeting, the committee again participated in antiracism training with Monica Cabell, associate for Organizational Diversity, Education, and Recruitment of the General Assembly Mission Council. Valerie Small, manager of General Assembly Nominations, and Warner Durnell of the General Assembly Nominating Committee discussed the nominations process for new members to ACREC. The committee worked to finalize its business for General Assembly and also nominated new officers for the 2012–2014 term, which begins following General Assembly.

4. Items of Business for the 219th General Assembly (2012)

The following items were sent to the 220th General Assembly (2012):

- 2012 Creating a Climate for Change, report and recommendations. Every two years ACREC interviews and receives reports from the chief executives of the six General Assembly agencies in order to ascertain the status of the “Creating a Climate for Change” recommendations approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004).
- A Resolution on Racism, Incarceration and Restoration.
- A Resolution to Reaffirm the Call to Prophetic Witness in the PC(USA).
- A Resolution to Reaffirm the Commitment of the PC(USA) to Making Just Immigration a Reality
- A Resolution on Workers’ Rights and Income Inequality.

On Rescinding the 219th General Assembly (2010) Action Regarding a Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians (Item 11-11)—From the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

Rationale

We affirm our historic confession that “the members of the church are emissaries of peace and seek the good of [humanity] in cooperation with powers and authorities in politics, culture and economics. But they have to fight against pretensions and injustices when these same powers endanger human welfare” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.25).

We confess that “the life, death, resurrection, and promised coming of Jesus Christ has set the pattern for the church’s mission. His life as man involves the church in the common life of [humanity]. His service to [humanity] commits the church to work for every form of human well-being. His suffering makes the church sensitive to all the sufferings of [humankind] so that it sees the face of Christ in the faces of men [and women] in every kind of need. His crucifixion discloses to the church God’s judgment on man’s inhumanity to man and the awful consequences of its own complicity in injustice” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.32).

We stand with those who authored the Theological Declaration of Barmen Declaration in the rejection of “the false doctrine, as though the church were permitted to abandon the form of its message and order to its own pleasure or to changes in prevailing ideological and political convictions” (The Book of Confessions, The Theological Declaration of Barmen, 8.18).

Introduction: There is no question that it is important for the General Assembly Mission Council to direct resources toward educating congregations regarding immigration issues and supporting targeted communities with legal resources. While we agree • that the Arizona law known as SB1070/HB2162 neither secures the border nor advances the goal of comprehensive immigration reform;

• that it unfairly targets a specific population, unduly threatening the family and community integrity of those perceived to hold immigrant status, and we believe that the recommended actions which have the effect of a boycott of the state of Arizona by the 219th General Assembly (2010) of the PC(USA) do not appropriately address these concerns. Further, we believe that this resolution has a harmful effect on congregations in the state and for the target population in general.

• that the initial proposal was born out of a deep love for the church and a strong passion for justice;

Calling the church to refrain from holding national meetings in Arizona and states with immigration legislation similar to SB1070/HB2162 represents an unprecedented decision that directly impacts congregations, presbyteries, and a synod, all of which need additional support in this time. Previous boycotts have been directed at corporations that were engaging in unjust practices. These included calling for members to avoid shopping in particular stores, buying particular investments or making use of particular products. While travel restrictions have been recommended in times of war or civil unrest, accompaniment programs such as those underway in Colombia have an important positive effect, both on broadening the ongoing knowledge of the situation “on the ground” and as well as fostering pastoral care for those individuals and congregations there.

Calling for what seems like a boycott on a particular state could have a powerful effect on the local congregations and the presbyteries of which they are a part. Insofar as the individual congregations are part of the whole body of Christ, avoiding a particular region means the church is turning away from part of itself. The action taken by the General Assembly could well result in the loss of appropriate help, resources, and support from General Assembly staff, in particular, those resources most needed to support the work of immigration reform. Further, to the local congregations and communities in the region, this action feels like abandonment by the leaders of the church.

Given current legislative trends, this kind of action is impractical and virtually impossible to sustain over time. Unless the General Assembly means to make an example out of the state of Arizona, as other states consider and pass similar laws, the resolution will necessarily be extended, significantly increasing the numbers of Presbyterians affected.
A similar action taken by the Synod of the Southwest, which was cited as a precedent example of an already “on the books” action, was, on further review, rescinded in October, 2010.

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 12-01 asks that an action of the 219th General Assembly (2010) on measures to support immigrant rights, including a selective patronage action, be rescinded.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 12-01 be disapproved.

Rationale

Item 12-01 asks the General Assembly to rescind a resolution of the 219th General Assembly (2010) calling for a refusal to hold PC(USA) national meetings in Arizona and states with immigration legislation similar to SB1070/HB2162. The reasons given are the harm caused or risked by this refusal, even to the populations the supporters of the strategy seek to help, and the sense of abandonment felt by fellow Presbyterians in Arizona and elsewhere at the precise time that they needed accompaniment as they labored on behalf of immigrants’ welfare. The overture claims that the 2010 action to refrain from locating national meetings in such states “did not appropriately address” the concerns about objectionable immigration legislation that prompted it and amounted to a boycott.

The overture does not, however, stipulate what the harmful effects have been and what specific instances of abandonment have been experienced by the congregations in Arizona and the target population in general. Nor is there any taking account of possible positive results of the policy or its impact on the mission and witness of the PC(USA). Neither did this overture address other elements of advocacy for immigrant rights contained in the assembly’s 2010 action, although several of those concerns were put in a subsequent overture. In fact, the 2010 action was not unprecedented as assemblies have authorized a range of selective patronage efforts over the years.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises disapproval for several reasons:

1. While the action of the General Assembly in 2010 was not a stated boycott and did not endorse the La Raza boycott, it has had an arguably positive impact on the enforcement of SB 1070/HB 2162. The primary purpose of the assembly’s action was to protect Hispanic Presbyterians visiting the state from racial profiling. The influence of this and other decisions, however, is estimated to have cost the state approximately $140 million. It is further said to have prompted business leaders to join with others in addressing punitive impacts of the law on citizens and immigrants in Arizona. Thus significant progress appears to be underway in Arizona, effectively modifying the enforcement of the SB 1070 legislation if not rescinding it.

2. The impact of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s witness on other state governments cannot be fully documented, but seems to have been significant in Kentucky itself and in Indiana, where a bill was modified in advance of the July 2011 Big Tent gathering in Indianapolis. The leadership of Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons and GAMC Executive Director Linda Valentine deserves commendation in their presenting the positive concern of the church through appropriate channels.

3. Both anti-immigrant legislation and the flow of immigration seem to have slowed, largely for economic reasons. Thus, while several states (notably Alabama, as well as Georgia, South Carolina, and Utah) did follow an Arizona-like pattern, that trend seems to have ended. The 2010 action authorized resources to address anti-immigrant campaigns in historical context, an educational component also retained by the Synod of the Southwest when it modified its earlier action.

4. In May of this year, the U.S. Department of Justice filed suit against the Sheriff’s office of Maricopa County (Phoenix area). “A federal Department of Justice investigation into (Sheriff Joe) Arpaio’s office made public in December described “a pervasive culture of discriminatory bias against Latinos at MCSO that reaches the highest levels of the agency.” Note: [http://articles.cnn.com/2012-04-05/justice/justice_arizona-sheriff-case_1_toughest-sheriff-arizona-sheriff-joe-arpaio-mcso_?s=PM:JUSTICE]; [http://www.azcentral.com/news/politics/articles/2012/05/10/20120510joe-arpaio-doj-lawsuit.html]

5. Thus the concerns of the church expressed in the 2010 action remain valid, although the enforcement issue is partially moot, unless the state legislature changes course, which is unlikely in the current climate. The need for an orderly, fair, and legal path to citizenship remains the overall problem that burdens some state governments more than others. The Supreme Court is currently considering whether four provisions (so far blocked) of the Arizona law usurp federal enforcement authority and impinge on foreign policy.

For those who are loathe to repudiate so quickly the action of the last General Assembly and equally loathe to turn a deaf ear to a plea for help from a presbytery that is also committed to hospitality and justice for immigrants (see Item 12-02), the 220th General Assembly (2012) could conceivably call for a temporary suspension of the assembly’s commitment to allow time for further assessment. After all, the National Coalition of La Raza decided to suspend its participation in a boycott as conditions changed. The results of the assessment could be reported to the 221st General Assembly (2014), and a future policy regarding national meetings could either be returned to the 2010 stance or changed. The Office of Immigration Issues of the PC(USA) could be a valuable aid in this endeavor.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 12-01.

Rationale

The General Assembly’s action is and was not intended to be an alert to Presbyterians but to provide additional leverage within the state to aid those who are struggling for change.

See Item 12-09, “A Resolution to Recognize the Commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Making Just Immigration a Reality,” from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 12-01

Comment on Item 12-01—From the Office of the General Assembly.

In considering Item 12-01, commissioners of the 220th General Assembly are encouraged to review the language of the 219th General Assembly (2010) resolution A Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians in Their Hour of Need. The stated purpose of the 219th General Assembly (2010) resolution is to show the whole church’s solidarity with those who may be subjected to harassment based on their outward physical characteristics while attending church-wide events. A Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians in Their Hour of Need, is in-line with principals of finding unity in our diversity (Book of Order, F-1.0403), leaving no place for discrimination in the church. Additionally, the 2010 resolution reflects the church’s call to be a community of faith, hope, love, and witness (Book of Order, F-1.0301) and is evidence of the church seeking a new openness its own membership, recognizing that we are made one in Christ (Book of Order, F-1.0404). As such, A Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians seeks to be sensitive to and benefit all of the members of the body of Christ.

In response to the 219th General Assembly (2010) resolution, the Office of Immigration developed various resources and presentations to educate and engage congregations and councils in conversations concerning these matters, which includes tracking state immigration legislation. Further, the Office of Immigration Issues continues to be a resource to the whole denomination with regard to state immigration laws and how these laws impact our church. It is also important to note that PC(USA) national staff continue to travel to and resource congregations and presbyteries regardless of the laws enacted in the states in which they are located.

[The assembly answered Item 12-02 by the action taken on Item 12-03. See p. 55.]

On Taking Action Concerning the Place and Plight of Immigrant People in Our Neighborhoods and Communities of Faith—From the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

The Presbytery of Grand Canyon overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to take actions concerning the place and plight of immigrant people (both documented and undocumented) in our neighborhoods and communities of faith. The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a resolution calling for comprehensive legislation for immigrants living and working in the United States. The conditions that brought about that resolution have not improved. Therefore, we ask the General Assembly, the presbyteries, the congregations, and individual Presbyterians and their families to do the following:

1. Affirm the scriptural call to provide hospitality to strangers, and thus welcome immigrant people to our nation and our church, as part of our national and our church’s history, and our nation’s and church’s future.
2. Hold high and measure our conduct by these principles and ideals, in the love of Jesus Christ:
   a. Welcoming the traveler who comes our way seeking help.
   b. Nurturing God’s gift of the mind.
   c. Protecting the integrity of the family unit and keeping family members together.
   d. Honoring those who demonstrate the desire to make a constructive contribution to their community while they secure a life for themselves and their families.
   e. Respecting the rights of all humans as children of God.

3. Build bridges that encourage deeper relationships between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and immigrants, and pay more attention to the presence and value of immigrant people in our neighborhoods and churches by
   a. identifying and becoming acquainted with immigrant people around us;
   b. resisting the temptation to let language and culture be a barrier in our call to meet new people;
   c. receiving the gifts immigrant people bring into our midst by listening and experiencing stories of joy and challenge and being open to how God is calling us to change and to stand with immigrants in need;
   d. encouraging and supporting pastors and congregations whose memberships and ministries are directly impacted by the immigration crisis; and
   e. encouraging and financially supporting the education of immigrant people in a holistic way, from after-school programs for young children through scholarships for college and graduate studies.

4. Educate and advocate with religious, business, community and law-enforcement leaders for legislative reform at the national, state, and local levels that strives to address the following:
   a. legal assistance in applying for resident alien status;
   b. employers’ rights to employ responsible workers, provide safe and reasonable work conditions, and assist employees in the payment of taxes;
   c. educating immigrant people, celebrating the culture and languages of their homelands and teaching the culture and language of their new home;
   d. focusing law enforcement on the elimination of criminal behavior without creating an environment of harassment for decent immigrant people, which disrupts homes and families;
   e. establishing minimum standards of care for detainees that includes legal representation; and
   f. encouraging all church councils to meet with their state’s Access to Justice Commission and encourage their work honoring the principles and values for which we stand.

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 12-02.

Rationale

Conditions have not improved. The conditions that prompted this resolution are still in existence and in some instances have grown worse because of economic and social conditions.
OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 12-02

Commissioners of the 220th General Assembly (2012) are invited to consider Item 12-02 in light of past General Assembly actions calling for a comprehensive approach to “advocacy and welcome” for immigrants and for the United States Senate and House of Representatives to work across party lines to produce comprehensive immigration reform legislation (217th General Assembly (2006)). This call recognizes that a workable immigration policy must balance a variety of concerns and priorities that impact immigrant families, the nation, and citizen workers, which have been the basis of past reforms. Item 12-02 is consistent with these actions and other General Assembly policies advocating for the humane treatment of all God’s children (216th General Assembly (2004)) and encouraging presbyteries and congregations to work closely with immigrants with issues related to legal status (218th General Assembly (2008)).

Further, commissioners are encouraged to evaluate whether a reconfiguration of Recommendation 4 would better reflect the different responsibilities of local, state, and federal officials. For example, Recommendations 4.a., c., and f. could be addressed at the local, state, and federal level. In seeking to be consistent with former policies, Recommendations 4.b., d., and e. should fall under the purview of the U.S. Congress who has the tools and resources to: (1) establish employer obligations and sanctions under immigration laws and ensure compliance; and (2) create uniform and enforceable immigration detention standards.

Regarding Recommendation 4.b., commissioners should consider this language and interpretation of advocating for “employers’ rights” and “safe and reasonable work conditions.” It seems that one issue this section may be contemplating is the fact that employers have a quasi-immigration officer role while checking immigration status of employees via the I-9 process. Other language commissioners may consider involves the effort to make participation in E-Verify, an automated employment verification system, mandatory.

E-verify is opposed by many advocates, employers, and immigrants due to higher than necessary incidence of inaccuracy, burdens on employers, and response time delays. Commissioners might consider this trend in the law when crafting a resolution that will both protect workers and ensure a verification process that is as reliable as possible. For possible economic impact see this article from the American Immigration Lawyers Association: http://www.globalimmigrationcounsel.com/uploads/file/bloomberg.pdf.

On Taking Action Concerning the Place, Plight, and Contributions of Immigrant People in Our Country, Neighborhoods, and Communities of Faith—From the Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky.

The Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to urge General Assembly agencies, presbyteries, congregations, and individual Presbyterians to [do the following:] [take actions concerning the place and plight of immigrant people, regardless of status, in our neighborhoods and communities of faith.]

[The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a resolution calling for comprehensive legislation for immigrants living and working in the United States. The conditions that brought about that resolution have not improved; therefore, we ask the General Assembly, the presbyteries, the congregations, and individual Presbyterians and their families to do the following:]

1. Affirm the scriptural call to provide hospitality to and advocate [for] justice for immigrants regardless of status.

2. Encourage presbyteries to [create] [build bridges by creating] cross-cultural ministry teams and immigration issues task forces (or their equivalent) that will[:]

   a. identify and become acquainted with immigrant people in their communities;

   b. encourage and support pastors and congregations whose memberships and ministries are directly impacted by the immigration crisis;
c. encourage and financially support the education of immigrant people in a holistic way—for example through English as Second Language programs, after-school programs for young children, and scholarships for college and graduate studies; [and]

d. provide opportunities to celebrate and learn from the culture and languages of the immigrants’ homelands while helping the immigrants to navigate within the culture and language of their new home[;]

ej. resist the temptation to let language and culture be a barrier in our call to meet new people; and

[f. lift up the gifts immigrant people bring to the Church by sharing stories of joy and challenge while experiencing mutual transformation.]

3. Educate and advocate in partnership with religious, business, community, and law-enforcement leaders for [legislative] reform and action [at the national, state, and local level] by:[

[a.—continuing to advocate on behalf of Comprehensive Immigration Reform, especially the DREAM Act (Development, Relief and Education for Alien Minors);]

[b.] [a.] offering legal assistance to immigrants applying for [resident alien] [lawful permanent resident] status or other immigration status;

[e.—advocating for employers’ rights to employ workers, provide safe and reasonable work conditions, and assist employees in the payment of taxes;

[d.—b.] focusing law enforcement on the [elimination of criminal behavior without creating an environment of harassment for immigrant people;] [maintenance of community safety and fostering the growth of positive relationships and confidence between law enforcement and immigrant populations; and]

[e.—establishing minimum standards of care for detainees that includes legal representation; and]

[f.—e.] encouraging all church councils to meet with their state’s Access to Justice Commission (or equivalent) and to encourage their work in honoring principles and values that respect and value immigrants.

4. Partner with religious, business, community, and law-enforcement leaders for legislative reform at the federal level on the following:

[a. continuing to advocate on behalf of Comprehensive Immigration Reform as outlined in the resource guide published by the American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA). Specifically, it must simultaneously create legal avenues for people to enter the U.S.; allow people already here to earn the opportunity to adjust their status; address the multyear backlogs in family and employment based immigration; and create and implement a smart border security and enforcement regime that respects core principles of due process;

[b. actively advocating for legislation such as the DREAM Act (Development, Relief and Education for Alien Minors) that offers hope for young immigrants by providing a pathway to citizenship;

[c. advocating against mandatory participation in the E-verify system, in the absence of comprehensive immigration reform, for as long as the E-verify system continues to have a higher than necessary incidence of inaccuracy; and

[d. establishing minimum standards of care for detainees that include legal representation.]

Rationale

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a resolution calling for comprehensive immigration reform with a path to legalization for undocumented immigrants living and working in the United States that would keep families together and honor the gifts that immigrants bring to our society. We recognize that now in 2012, the conditions that brought about that resolution have not improved. Through the actions described in this overture, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will reaffirm its commitment to be in solidarity with immigrant people in our communities and churches by

1. showing hospitality and sisterhood/brotherhood to the traveler who comes our way seeking help;

2. receiving the gifts that immigrant people bring into our midst by listening to and experiencing stories of joy and challenge, and being open to how God is calling us to change and to stand with immigrants in need;

3. building bridges across cultures that encourage deeper relationships between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and immigrants, and to pay more attention to the presence and value of immigrant people in our neighborhoods and churches;

4. protecting the integrity of the immigrant family unit by keeping family members together;
5. honoring those whose only desire is to make constructive contributions to their community while they secure a life for themselves and their families;
6. respecting the rights of all humans as children of God;
7. resisting the temptation to let language and culture be a barrier in our call to meet new people.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 12-03 be approved as amended below:

"The Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to urge General Assembly agencies, presbyteries, congregations, and individual Presbyterians to [do the following] [take actions concerning the place and plight of immigrant people (both documented and undocumented) in our neighborhoods and communities of faith.]

   e. resist the temptation to let language and culture be a barrier in our call to meet new people.]
3. [Text for 3.a.–f. remains unchanged.]

Rationale

The amendments incorporate language from a similar overture, Item 12-02 from the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

The theological and ethical rationale for this advice and counsel is found in Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounters With New Neighbors (211th General Assembly [1999]) and Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States (216th General Assembly [2004]). The action of the 219th General Assembly (2010) calling for the church “to stand with immigrant Presbyterians” also provides rationale. Both Items 12-02 and 12-03 cite the action of the 216th General Assembly (2004), which spells out its biblical and theological basis fully. Both call for actions (1) to provide hospitality to strangers and welcome of immigrants to our nation and our church; (2) to exemplify principles and ideals grounded in the love of Jesus Christ in welcoming the traveler, nurturing minds, protecting the family unit, honoring those who desire to make constructive contributions, and respecting the rights of all peoples; (3) to build bridges that encourage deeper relationships between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and immigrants; and (4) to work with religious, business, community, and law-enforcements leaders for legislative reform at national, state, and local levels as spelled out in the overtures. This attention to “the place and plight of immigrant people (both documented and undocumented) in our neighborhoods and communities of faith” that has been requested by several overtures to this General Assembly surely merits approval and support.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 12-03.
Conditions have not improved. The conditions that prompted this resolution are still in existence and in some instances have grown worse because of economic and social conditions.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 12-03

Comment on Item 12-03—From the Office of the General Assembly.

Commissioners of the 220th General Assembly are invited to consider Item 12-03 in light of past General Assembly action, Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounter with New Neighbors (211th General Assembly (1999)). The 1999 resolution encourages Presbyterian congregations to recognize God’s call to reach out to local communities and embrace the gifts that all neighbors bring to Christ’s church. Item 12-03 is a reminder of this call and highlights specific tasks and actions that Presbyterians can undertake to ensure our faithfulness to biblical hospitality. Christ welcomes all to his church and sends the church, Christ’s faithful evangelist (F-1.0302d), into the world to invite others to join the “community of faith to worship and serve the triune God” (W-7.2001f) and to seek reconciliation through “working for fair laws and just administration of the law” (W-7.4002).

However, commissioners are encouraged to evaluate whether a reconfiguration of Recommendation 3 of Item 12-03 would better reflect the different responsibilities of local, state, and federal officials. For example, Recommendations 3.c., d. and e., should be grouped together to illustrate that the U.S. Congress has the responsibility to: (1) establish employer obligations and sanctions under immigration laws; and (2) create uniform and enforceable immigration detention standards.

Regarding Recommendation 3.c., commissioners should consider this language and interpretation of advocating for “employers’ rights” and “safe and reasonable work conditions.” It seems that one issue this section may be contemplating is the fact that employers have a quasi-immigration officer role while checking immigration status of employees via the I-9 process. Other language commissioners may consider involves the effort to make participation in E-Verify, an automated employment verification system, mandatory.

E-verify is opposed by many advocates, employers, and immigrants due to higher than necessary incidence of inaccuracy, burdens on employers, and response time delays. Commissioners might consider this trend in the law when crafting a resolution that will both protect workers and ensure a verification process that is as reliable as possible. Item 12-04

On Advocating for Comprehensive Immigration Reform—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

“The Presbytery of Santa Fe overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Urge all congregations to consider the biblical mandate to love the stranger among us and to see Jesus in his or her face. To this end we urge congregations to

   a. reexamine reasons behind the fears that jobs will be taken away by immigrants in our communities;

   b. support denominational goals toward diversity and make efforts toward a better understanding of immigrant sisters and brothers’ language and culture;

   c. practice biblical hospitality to immigrant groups, particularly those formed for religious or self-help purposes.

2. Urge all councils within the church to join with other faith communities, business organizations, law-enforcement entities, and other civil society groups to educate and advocate for comprehensive immigration reform at the [national, state, and local] [federal] level[s]. Elements of such reform, from our perspective, must include:

   a. Making family unity a priority by avoiding separation of families, revising visa preferences and caps, and eliminating visa backlogs;
b. Providing a reasonable and inclusive path for undocumented migrants presently living in the United States to eventually gain citizenship without imposing punitive costs, wait times, or other irksome conditions;

c. Facilitating integration of immigrants into their communities by celebrating the culture and languages of their homelands, by providing civics education and legal assistance to regularize their status, and by providing access to all social services;

d. Requiring humane enforcement procedures that develop measures to reduce human smuggling and migrant deaths, and that aim to eliminate human and civil rights abuses stemming from indiscriminate raids on homes and workplaces; abolishing enforcement programs such as Operation Streamline and arrangements that involve local agencies in the enforcement of immigration laws, such as “287(g)” Agreements and the Secure Communities Program;

e. Eliminating lengthy detention for migrants, except those accused of dangerous crimes, strengthening due process protections at every stage of the system, and establishing and stringently enforcing minimum standards of care in all detention facilities;

[f. Protecting refugees, asylum seekers, and other displaced persons by more careful vetting of their conditions upon entry into the country and by rigorous training for and oversight of immigration officials;]

g. Protecting all workers from exploitation, abuse, and affronts to their dignity by enforcing labor and employment laws that provide fair wages, the right to organize and to seek redress for grievances;

[h. Providing safe, legal, and realistic paths for future migration, consistent with the needs of the U.S. economy without undercutting the employment of anyone already working in the U.S., allowing new migrants to bring their families with them and allowing them the freedom to change places of employment.

[2.] Urge all councils within the church to join Christ’s mission of building communities, encouraging them to

a. Draw from materials readily available* to provide education to congregations and surrounding communities concerning economic contributions of immigrants, problems migrants face as a result of current legislation, and its practical application during and after crossing the border;

b. Create welcoming worship services and programs with migrants in the area;

c. Build relationships with migrant communities by celebrating gifts they bring, listening to stories they tell, and accepting them all as children of God, and

d. Supporting migrant communities through providing and funding educational programs and by advocating access to higher education.

[3. Form a diverse team whose task is to create a confession, possibly to be included in The Book of Confessions, which describes and celebrates the perceived desire and movement of God, Creator, Redeemer, and Presence, regarding the issues of borders, migration, and the treatment of migrants at this point in history.]

[4. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through the Office of Public Witness and other related ministries, and the Office of the General Assembly, through the Office of Immigration Issues, to advocate for other measures that will improve the plight of immigrants in our midst:

[a. Call on Congress to immediately pass legislation comparable to the DREAM Act that provides a pathway to citizenship for eligible students. Simultaneously, urge the administration to provide temporary legal status for students eligible under the DREAM Act or comparable legislation in the meantime.]

[b. Urge the administration and Congress to enact clear, enforceable detention reforms, including rigorous medical treatment standards and increased access to pastoral care, legal counsel, and legal orientation programs. And to expedite the release of individuals who pose no risk to the community and expand the use of community-based alternatives to detention that are more humane and cost-effective.

c. Direct the Office of the General Assembly to urge the Border Patrol to cease the practice of lateral repatriation that separates migrant families.

[d. Direct the Office of General Assembly to urge the administration to end policies such as Secure Communities and 287g programs that lack oversight and transparency and have led to racial profiling and have undermined the stability of communities and their trust of law enforcement agencies.

e. Draw attention to the human rights crisis along the border region between Mexico and the United States that has lead to the deaths of thousands of migrants, affirm the right of individuals and organizations to provide life-saving humanitarian aid in the border regions, and urge church councils to support humanitarian aid efforts. Join a multitude of other communities by becoming an official member of the Interfaith Immigration Coalition, whose principles are echoed above and laid out in the Interfaith Platform on Humane Immigration Reform.

Rationale

This overture is presented by the Session of the First United Presbyterian Church of Las Vegas, New Mexico, Presbytery of Santa Fe, a church that has been involved with border and immigration issues for decades. People of this congregation have participated in educational, medical, and work trips to Ciudad Juarez, Agua Prieta, and Nogales and have hosted individuals and groups from those Mexican border communities. Our mission giving includes support of Presbyterian Border Ministry and specific ministries in Ciudad Juarez. We sell Café Justo. In late 2010 we became involved in relocating a human rights defender from Ciudad Juarez who was seeking asylum. Since that time the church has held her in prayer, hosted her, heard her story, financially supported her, and is now rejoicing with her because she and her children were given asylum last spring. Granted funding from the Synod of the Southwest, the Mission/Peacemaking Committee of the church spearheaded a conference on Border and Immigration Issues in the fall of 2011, drawing a diverse group of almost 200 participants and presenters from near and far, including undocumented migrants and those with opposing viewpoints. Through fifteen workshops and plenary sessions, we heard informed presentations and discussed issues included in this overture.

Abraham migrated from his homeland upon the urging of God.

God, hearing the cries of the Hebrew people because of harsh working conditions, called Moses to lead them from the Land of Egypt.

Jesus Christ, as a child, was taken by his parents across a national border in order to save his life.

The Bible entreats us repeatedly to welcome the strangers from other lands who dwell among us as members of our own families with love and compassion, as God welcomes us.

Jesus Christ in the Scripture teaches and commands his followers to love neighbors, especially the most vulnerable, as much as themselves.

The Brief Statement of Faith, from The Book of Confessions, urges us to speak on behalf of those who have no voice in political conversations because of lack of wealth and cultural status.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been advocating for justice concerning issues of immigration for several decades.

We sense the importance of keeping compassionate, comprehensive immigration reform at the forefront of discussion on all levels of church, community, and government.

Migrants have historically enriched and strengthened the life of our churches and nation.

“[3. http://www.interfaithimmigration.org/ -- The PC(USA) is not a member of the Interfaith Immigration Coalition, even though the church has signed onto the Coalition’s Platform.
This overture, along with similar Overture 12-06, is a logical outgrowth of past actions of the General Assembly, especially the Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States (216th General Assembly [2004]). It follows that the “Biblical and Theological Basis” developed in that approved resolution (regarding hospitality to the stranger, gifts of the stranger, justice as the distribution of power and resources, etc.) also serves appropriately as the rationale for this advice and counsel. Still another source for a rationale, cited in Item 12-06, is the Interfaith Platform on Humane Immigration Reform, of which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a signatory. The pillars of the platform, which was addressed to the 111th Congress in 2009, are the priority of family unity; the need for a process for undocumented immigrants to earn legal status and eventual citizenship; the protection of workers and provision of efficient channels of entry for new migrant workers; integration of immigrants into society; restoration of due process protections and reform of detention policies; and alignment of immigration laws with humanitarian values. Because the central tenets and recommendations of Items 12-04 and 12-06 are so similar, the amended text above combines the language of the two overtures.

Review of Items 12-04 and 12-06 will reveal an omission from Item 12-04 and revisions to Item 12-06. Recommendation No. 3 in Item 12-04 recommends that a diverse team create “a confession, possibly to be included in The Book of Confessions, which describes and celebrates the perceived desire and movement of God, Creator, Redeemer, and Presence, regarding the issues of borders, migration, and the treatment of migrants at this point in history.” There is certainly a need for creation of aids for worship that lift up immigrant issues, as cited by Item 12-07, but the effort to write a new confession seems ill-advised at this time in the life of our church and our nation because of the continuing debate about the Belhar Confession, the expense that would be involved in the work of the proposed team, and the contentious current climate for such an endeavor.

In the material incorporated from Item 12-06 (4.e.) in the amended recommendation above, the call for approval of the Interfaith Platform on Humane Immigration Reform has been changed to a call to become a member of the Interfaith Immigration Coalition, which produced the platform. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is already a signatory of the platform. Item 12-06 also requests a fact-finding team “to ascertain what effects the North Atlantic Free Trade Agreement has had on immigration and the condition of immigrants, both documented and undocumented.” Recommendation 4.f. in the amended recommendation above would broaden the inquiry to other free-trade agreements affecting immigration into the United States such as the Pacific Free Trade Agreement. It also designates the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Office of Immigration Issues and other appropriate offices, to conduct the research and report to the 221st General Assembly (2014). The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy has provided studies of trade and employment matters in the past, and also prepared the current immigration policy. Commissioners would need to consider the value and scope of such a focused inquiry and its relation to immigrant ministries.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 12-04

Commissioners of the 220th General Assembly are encouraged to consider Item 12-04 in being consistent with and in light of General Assembly policies since the 1990 statement on the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986. This includes Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States (216th General Assembly [2004]) and Advocacy and Welcome for All Immigrants (217th General Assembly [2006]). In accordance with this overture, these three prior General Assembly statements addressed components of a just and humane immigration policy that takes into account family unity, alternatives to unnecessary detention, and protection of workers.

Further, Item 12-04 is in-line with the calling of the church to be open to the guidance of the Holy Spirit (F-1.0401), to find unity in our diversity (F-1.403), and to bear witness to God’s reign through proclamation of the gospel and works of compassion and reconciliation (W-7.1001).

However, it is advised that the language of the overture in Recommendation 1 be changed to reflect the language of previous General Assembly policies to note that comprehensive immigration reform is to be undertaken by the U.S. Congress (217th General Assembly [2006]), as the federal government has the resources and expertise to create and enforce measures targeted to address Recommendations 1.a.–h.

It is advised that commissioners consider The Book of Confessions in its current form and how a confession drafted by a team that reflects the diversity of the church today and embraces the hope of the church we desire to become, may speak to the current and future generations of the church.

On the Plight of Indonesian Christian Immigrants and the Passage of the Indonesian Family Refugee Protection Act—From the Presbytery of Newark.

The Presbytery of Newark overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the PC(USA) to take action as follows with respect to a certain group of Christians [refugees] who are threatened with deportation to Indonesia and to request that the General Assembly, the presbyteries, the congregations, and individual Presbyterians and their families join in the action as follows:

1. Affirm the scriptural call to provide hospitality to [strangers] [others], and thus welcome immigrant people to [our] [this] nation and [our] [this] church as part of both the history and the future of [our] [this] nation and [our] church.

2. Educate and advocate for the passage of the bill introduced in the House of Representatives called the ‘Indonesian Family Refugee Protection Act’, H.R. 3590, together with any bill introduced in the Senate to achieve the same ends, as well as for the signature of such act upon submission to the president.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk to write a pastoral letter to congregations about the plight of the Indonesian Christian immigrants and the proposed Indonesian Family Refugee Protection Act and calling congregations to support and advocate for passage of the proposed legislation and its enactment into law.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Office of Public Witness to advocate on Capitol Hill for passage of the proposed legislation and its enactment into law.

“When an alien resides with you in your land, you shall not oppress the alien. The alien who resides with you shall be to you as the citizen among you; you shall love the alien as yourself, for you were aliens in the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God” (Lev. 19:33–34).

“For I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me drink, I was a stranger and you welcomed me” (Mt 25:35).

The persecution of Christians in Indonesia, the world’s most populous Muslim country, through church bombings, church burnings, and numerous other acts of mob violence has been well-documented by various sources: “In Indonesia, church runs afoul of Islamic street name,” Ecumenical News International, 9/20/2011 [PC(USA) website]; “Indonesian church leaders say attack on its members ‘barbaric,’” Ecumenical News International, 9/20/10 [PC(USA) website]; “Suicide bomber strikes church,” Jakarta Post, 9/26/11; Human Rights Watch, Indonesia Country Summary (January 2012); Press Statement, U.S. Department of State, 2/9/11 (“We also note with concern the recent church burnings in Central Java.”); Tampubolon v Holder, 610 F.3d 1056 (9th Cir. 2010).

About fourteen years ago, thousands of Indonesian Christians fled to this country. Through ignorance, misjudgment, or otherwise, these refugees did not apply for asylum within the required one-year deadline. Instead, they set about getting jobs, raising families, and generally becoming productive residents of the United States.

Later, when our government enacted a regulation requiring men from certain predominantly Muslim countries, including Indonesia, to register with our government, these dutiful Christians filled out the required forms. Now, our government seeks to deport them, and, because the one-year deadline has passed, they cannot be granted asylum ("Canceling Stay, U.S. Orders 72 Indonesians in New Jersey to Leave," New York Times, 12/6/11). As a result, around our land, in the final stages before deportation, Indonesian Christians have been compelled to wear ankle monitors, our modern electronic chains, so that when the final order of deportation comes, our government will be able to capture and ship these people back to Indonesia with the minimum amount of difficulty.

Representative Carolyn Maloney has sponsored a bill, H.R. 3590, that would allow these poor Indonesians to make their cases for asylum even though the one-year deadline has passed. Note carefully, if the bill were to become law these Indonesians would not be granted asylum automatically, they simply would be allowed to have their day in court. The bill has been referred to the Judiciary Committee, and there it sits, and there it will die. And thousands of Christian Indonesians will be notified, and then shackled, and then deported to meet their fates.

The passage of this bill and its enactment into law is simply the right thing to do and advocacy for this event is at the core of what we profess to believe in.
Advice and Counsel on Item 12-05—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 12-05 be approved.

Rationale

This overture seeks advocacy for the Indonesian Family Refugee Protection Act (HR 3590 and Senate equivalent) from all levels of the PC(USA) to address the plight of Indonesian Christian immigrants who fled their home country due to severe persecution and failed to apply for asylum within the one-year deadline out of ignorance or misjudgment. Due to later enacted U.S. regulation requiring men from certain predominantly Muslim countries to register, those who failed to do so now face deportation. The proposed IFRP Act, which is now stuck in the Judiciary Committee, asks not for automatic asylum but for the chance for a day in court to make a case for asylum despite passage of the deadline. In our view, the case for asylum is not weakened by acknowledging the improvement in Indonesian conditions noted in the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) comment.

The rationale for support of this legislation is the biblical admonition of hospitality to the stranger and love of the alien in your land as yourself. The overture cites Leviticus 19:33–34 and Matthew 25:35, and there is much more biblical support that could be summoned. An especially rich resource concerning refugees and asylum seekers is Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounter with New Neighbors, approved by the 211th General Assembly (1999), particularly sections entitled “Historical Perspective: Refugees and Asylum Seekers” and “Theological and Ethical Basis for Policy.” Among the statements in the latter section are these: “Churches are called to ministry with refugees, asylum seekers, and immigrants, and to public witness on their behalf.” “Christians have the responsibility to challenge and to shape government policy regarding refugees, asylum seekers, and immigrants.” “Love of neighbor requires Christians to seek justice for refugees, asylum seekers, and immigrants” (p. 15).

Notable General Assembly action in response to intense persecution of Christians in Indonesia and other human rights abuses there was taken by the 212th General Assembly (2000). As part of the Human Rights Update—1999–2000, it called “for the Indonesian government to keep the situation under Civil Emergency Law rather than Military Emergency Law” and “to keep the troubled areas open to the international press.” In addition, it called for other UN member nations to urge United Nations “action and pressure upon the Indonesian government” and for United States corporations “not to invest in Indonesia until the situation is resolved and rights for all guaranteed” (p. 1). Action on behalf of beleaguered Indonesian Christians clearly has precedent in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON OVERTURE 12-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 12-05 as amended:

“The Presbytery of Newark overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the PC(USA) to take action as follows with respect to [a certain group of Christians] [refugees] who are threatened with deportation to Indonesia and to request that the General Assembly, the presbyteries, the congregations, and individual Presbyterians and their families join in the action as follows:

1. Affirm the scriptural call to provide hospitality to strangers and thus welcome immigrant people to our nation and our church as part of both the history and the future of our nation and our church.

2. Educate and advocate for the passage of the bill introduced in the House of Representatives called the “Indonesian Family Refugee Protection Act”, H.R. 3590, together with any bill introduced in the Senate to achieve the same ends, as well as for the signature of such act upon submission to the president.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk to write a pastoral letter to congregations about the plight of the Indonesian [Christian] immigrants and the proposed Indonesian Family Refugee Protection Act and calling congregations to support and advocate for passage of the proposed legislation and its enactment into law.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Office of Public Witness to advocate on Capitol Hill for passage of the proposed legislation and its enactment into law.”

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns seeks justice for all refugees, regardless of their ethnicity, race, or religion. In this particular case, we believe that all refugees seeking asylum deserve “their day in court” and that no one, Christian or otherwise, should be deported before they are given a fair chance to apply for asylum. We understand that when immigrants, especially refugees, arrive in this country, it is not easy to take all the right steps to acquire the right documents and papers. Hence, it is understandable that these Indonesian refugees did not immediately take the right steps. Further, we believe that U.S. laws enacted requiring men from “certain predominantly Muslim countries,” to register with our government are discriminatory and encroach on rights of privacy enshrined in our constitution because they presume guilt.

The ACREC is in support of the passage of HR 3590, however, the committee urges the General Assembly not to single out standing with only the Christians immigrants from Indonesia who have found themselves in a punishing situation. The plurality of Muslim men who have had to register with the government of the U.S. and even wear ankle monitors are innocent, law-abiding residents of our society.

As the Scripture verses quoted in the overture itself say, we are called to welcome the stranger (Mt. 25:35). The Leviticus text is more compelling: The alien who resides with you shall be to you as the citizen among you; you shall love the alien as yourself … (Lev. 19:33–34). The word of God is not about loving those who share our faith, but calls us to openness to those who are “alien” to us.

For these reasons, ACREC urges the assembly to call for fully supporting the “Indonesian Family Refugee Protection Act,” H.R. 3590, without singling out one sub-group of them, in this case, a group of Christians. Special treatment and singling out particular groups of people is the basis for discrimination, which might in some situations lead to racism.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 12-05

Comment on Item 12-05—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has long stood in solidarity with Christians around the world who are persecuted and/or oppressed, and the 219th General Assembly (2010) called again for the just treatment of religious minorities. It is thus appropriate for the General Assembly to call upon Presbyterians to become educated about the plights of our brothers and sisters around the world, as well as to be aware of the way those of minority faith groups are treated in our own communities.

The PC(USA) has also affirmed the need to continue to work for justice for immigrants both in our own nation and abroad. The overture rightly calls for us to “affirm the scriptural call to provide hospitality to strangers, and thus welcome immigrant people to our nation and our church as part of both the history and the future of our nation and our church.”

The situation in Indonesia is complex. While there have been incidences of violence and persecution of Christians, especially during the period of conflict from 1997 to 2004, there are also Christian communities living vibrant, faithful lives alongside their Muslim brothers and sisters. There are more than 270 Christian seminaries openly operating in Indonesia, and the government recognizes Catholicism and Protestantism as two of the six official religions.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 12-05

Comment on Item 12-05—From the Office of the General Assembly.

Commissioners of the 220th General Assembly (2012) are invited to consider Item 12-05 in light of past General Assembly actions that recognize the plight of refugees and encourage the church to assist refugees via direct services and advocacy. In the past, the General Assembly has spoken to and requested Congressional action on specific situations regarding refugees including: (1) the needs of Vietnamese and Cambodian refugees (1975); (2) halting deportations of refugees from El Salvador and Haiti (1981); and (3) the humane treatment of Cubans, Indochinese, Japanese, and Mexicans (1982). This overture is consistent with past General Assembly statements and resolutions that promote ministry with refugees (1975) and urge action from Congress, including the 1982 Statement on the World Refugee Crisis and Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounter with New Neighbors (211th General Assembly (1999)).

Additionally, Item 12-05 is in-line with the church’s call to be Christ’s faithful evangelists (Book of Order, F-1.0302d). The overture is also an expression of the church seeking reconciliation through seeking justice and claiming rights for those without power to claim those rights themselves (Book of Order, W-7.4002).

On Adopting a Statement and Call to Action Regarding Immigration—From the Synod of the Southwest.

The Synod of the Southwest overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve and publish the following statement and call to action in regards to immigration.
The 220th General Assembly (2012) calls for the following actions by the General Assembly and by the General Assembly staff:

1. We urge congregations to consider their biblical mandate to love the alien among us, to see Jesus in her/his face, and to re-examine reasons behind the fears that jobs will be taken away by immigrants in our communities.

2. We urge congregations that, in supporting denominational goals toward diversity, efforts be made toward a better understanding of our immigrant sisters and brothers’ language and culture.

3. We encourage congregations to practice biblical hospitality to alien groups, particularly those formed for religious or self-help purposes.

4. When selecting venues for church-related activities, consider the safety and freedom from harassment of all who might attend.

5. Draw attention to the human rights crisis along the border region between Mexico and the United States that has lead to the deaths of thousands of migrants, and affirm the right of individuals and organizations to provide life-saving humanitarian aid in the border regions and to urge church councils to support humanitarian aid efforts. Join a multitude of other communities of faith in adopting and endorsing the Interfaith Platform on Humane Immigration Reform, which calls for the administration and Congress to • uphold family unity as a priority of all immigration policies;
   • create a process for undocumented immigrants to earn their legal status and eventual permanent residency and right-to-work;
   • provide efficient channels of entry for migrant workers;
   • facilitate immigrant integration;
   • restore due process protections and reform detention policies;
   • align the enforcement of immigration laws with humanitarian values.

6. Urge the Office of the General Assembly to call on Congress to pass legislation comparable to the Dream Act immediately and to urge the administration to provide temporary legal status to Dream Act eligible students.

7. Urge the administration and Congress to enact clear, enforceable detention reforms, including rigorous medical treatment standards and increased access to pastoral care, legal counsel, and legal orientation programs. And to expedite the release of individuals who pose no risk to the community and expand the use of community-based alternatives to detention, which are more humane and cost-effective.

8. Direct the Office of the General Assembly to urge the Border Patrol to cease the practice of lateral repatriation that separates migrant families.

9. Direct the Office of General Assembly to urge the administration to end policies such as Secure Communities and 287g programs that lack oversight and transparency and have led to racial profiling and have undermined the stability of communities and their trust of law enforcement agencies.

10. Appoint a fact-finding team to research and investigate how the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) has affected immigration from Mexico to the U.S.A., and to report its findings to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Endnotes
2. Passage of the Dream Act would allow for a process towards permanent residency for those who arrived in the United States prior to age 16, have proof of residency for five consecutive years, who are of good moral character, and who are either enrolled in community college, university, or serve in the U.S. military. For more information: http://www.immigrationforum.org/policy/legislation/the-dream-act-in-the-111th-congress.

Rationale

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has consistently taken actions that have been faithful to the scriptural admonitions to care for the least of these (Mt. 25:31–46) and for the sojourners amongst us (Ex. 22:21), including:

• the adoption of the “Call to Presbyterians to Recommit to Work and Pray for a Just and Compassionate U.S. Immigration Policy” by the 206th General Assembly (1994).
• and the call for a commitment from both Presbyterians and the government to work towards welcoming immigrants into our communities and to provide for just laws that affect those who live and work in the United States in both 1999 and 2004.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 12-06.

Rationale

Conditions have not improved. The conditions that prompted this resolution are still in existence and in some instances have grown worse because of economic and social conditions.

See Item 12-09, “A Resolution to Recognize the Commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Making Just Immigration a Reality,” from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 12-06

Comment on Item 12-06—From the Office of the General Assembly.

Commissioners of the 220th General Assembly (2012) are invited to consider Item 12-06 in light of past General Assembly actions calling for a comprehensive approach to “advocacy and welcome” for immigrants and for the United States Senate and House of Representatives to work across party lines to produce comprehensive immigration reform legislation (217th General Assembly (2006)).

Item 12-06 is consistent with the church’s call to be a community of faith, hope, love, and witness (Book of Order, F-1.0301) by showing hospitality to all neighbors. Additionally, the overture provides tasks to help the church strive to fulfill the Great Ends of the Church, including the shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God and the promotions of social righteousness and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world (Book of Order, F-1.0304).

Commissioners should consider the implications of referring to ourselves and our brothers and sisters as “alien” in Recommendation 3. It seems that this section is encouraging congregations to be open to sharing the property entrusted to their care and stewardship to benefit immigrant groups in their community, not just as worship space but as classroom space for English as Another Language instruction or other such tutoring and mentoring.

Regarding Recommendation 5, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a signatory to the Interfaith Platform on Humane Immigration Reform because the priorities identified in the document are consistent with policies approved by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

On Beginning Active Exploration in Communities to Seek Answers on How to Be Church Together with Immigrant Communities—From the Presbytery of Hudson River.

The Presbytery of Hudson River overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to do the following:

1. Call presbyteries and local congregations to a time of being church together with immigrant brothers and sisters. This call urges presbyteries and local congregations [of all cultures and immigration statuses] to [begin active (more than setting up a committee!) exploration in] [actively connect with immigrants] in their home communities, [seeking to answer] exploring how they can be church together [with immigrant communities] through:
Quarterly worship services centered on immigrant voices and experiences;

Spiritual disciplines that grow our willingness to have our worship and fellowship transformed by the immigrant in our midst;

Prayer meetings with immigrants;

A deepening of relationship - from “Landlord/Tenant” to Spiritual Covenant—in churches hosting immigrant fellowships.

Liturgy that shakes up and expands our vision of who is the church;

Gatherings of prayer, worship, dreaming, and planning together among churches and presbyteries that are seeking to stand with immigrant communities; and Developing best practices that can be shared via a discussion board, blog, or other free social media.

2. Provide a space for an accounting of the shared experiences of churches engaged in ministry with immigrants by asking the Office of the General Assembly and the Moderator to craft a week of worship that lifts up the “on the ground” stories of this time of exploration during the “Big Tent” August 1–3, 2013, and the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Rationale

Theological—Fear is woven through the conversations about immigration in the media, national and global politics, and, frequently, in our churches. We recognize that many churches are held back from being church together with immigrants because of fear. Those fears are manifest in our faith communities when immigration is labeled too “hot” a topic to handle, when cross-cultural worship with immigrant communities is dismissed as too risky or too cumbersome, and when our desire to welcome is limited by our unwillingness to question and reform long-held traditions in our worship and fellowship. Our fear has become a dividing wall leading congregations toward avoidance rather than engagement with their neighbors. If we are to make the movement from fear toward love for immigrant sisters and brothers, we must take steps in the direction of our fears. Our guide is Jesus who “… showed us the greater story of life, which was not about conquering our fear with aggression, nor simply surviving out of our fear of punishment. The greater story of life is not about being afraid of fear, but facing it head on. We are to approach fear as an opening, and as an invitation to mine from it the gifts and treasures buried deep below the surface. … Buried below our fear is the seed of ministry. Beyond our fear is the hope of resurrection, with new visions for us, our communities, and our nations” (Eric H. F. Law, Finding Intimacy in a World of Fear, St. Louis: Chalice Press, 2007, 64–65). Beyond our fear is the possibility of true relationship as one body in Christ, gathered from many nations.

To be church together with immigrant sisters and brothers is a call to risk and transformation; it is the Scriptural call to move through our fear into God’s abundant and perfect love. The word from 1 John 4:18–21 proclaims, “There is no fear in love, but perfect love casts out fear, for fear has to do with punishment, and whoever fears has not reached perfection in love. We love because [God] first loved us. Those who say, ‘I love God,’ and hate their brothers or sisters, are liars; for those who do not love a brother or sister whom they have seen, cannot love God whom they have not seen. The commandment we have from him is this: those who love God must love their brothers and sisters also.” As we take this journey within our communities of faith, we also equip ourselves to become agents of reconciliation in the public square, helping transform the current discourse on immigration from fear to hospitality, in the long biblical tradition of welcoming the stranger, and making houses of “prayer for all the nations” (Mk. 11:17, Isa. 56:7).

Our Perspective—This overture comes out of our lived experiences in the Hudson River Valley, an area with a burgeoning new immigrant population from numerous countries. We are the Presbytery of Hudson River, a collective of churches and other faith organizations who are in different stages of being church together with immigrants. We are:

White Plains Presbyterian Church (White Plains, N.Y.)—A church who celebrates the diversity of cultures in their community and church and looks forward to exploring the call of this overture in the context of their community and immigrant neighbors.

Presbyterian Church of Mt. Kisco (Mt. Kisco, N.Y.)—A church in Westchester County that continues seeking light for the journey, coming together to worship God, nurture faith, pursue social justice, and share love in the name of Jesus Christ. We are a More Light and Covenant Network Presbyterian Church, and we welcome both an Islamic school and Monte de Sion Iglesia Apostolica, who share our church building.

Hitchcock Presbyterian Church (Scarsdale, N.Y.)—A multiracial, multiethnic congregation that has been involved in multicultural ministry for more than thirty-five years through its “Living In America” program, as well as hosting a Japanese-speaking congregation. It seek to be faithful to its vision statement: “We come to be in the presence of God, so that we can be the presence of God in the world around us.”
• Stony Point Presbyterian Church (Stony Point, N.Y.)—A church located in Northern Rockland County, committed to having “our minds hearts, and doors open to anyone who seeks God’s glory and love.” We have a strong historical connection with the Stony Point Conference Center, the missionaries, staff, volunteers, and guests who join us in worship and mission. We share our sanctuary with the Spanish-speaking Rockland Emmanuel Seventh Day Adventist Church on Saturdays. In recent years, we have begun to ask deeper questions together about how we might live out our calling more intentionally with these many different neighbors. We look forward to expanding that dialogue through this overture.

• Cross-Cultural Network of Hudson River Presbytery—A newly formed network of church leaders who, with the support of the cross-cultural network coordinator on presbytery staff, are embodying the vision of being church together across racial, ethnic, and class divides.

• Stony Point Center (Stony Point, N.Y.)—A PC(USA) conference center committed to forming community that crosses boundaries, is home to growing number of churches made up of immigrants from around the world. As we hear the stories of those largely excluded by our society, we are repeatedly struck by the ways in which we are enriched by this fuller expression of the community of God, and by God’s call to the church to support the immigrants in our midst.

• Rural & Migrant Ministries (RMM)—A statewide, nonprofit organization in covenant with Hudson River Presbytery, which serves the rural and migrant communities through: nurturing leadership, standing with the disenfranchised, especially farmworkers and rural workers, and changing unjust systems and structures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 12-07 be approved.

Rationale

As its title suggests, this overture calls presbyteries and local congregations to active exploration of what it means to be church together with immigrant brothers and sisters through shared worship, development of liturgical resources, development of spiritual disciplines, gatherings of churches and presbyteries seeking to stand with immigrant communities, deepening relationships between host and hosted congregations, and development of best practices. It also seeks a space for an accounting of the shared experiences of congregations and presbyteries engaged in ministry with migrants, specifically in worship services crafted by the Office of the General Assembly and the Moderator for the 221st General Assembly (2014), that lift up experiences in ministries “on the ground,” such as those examples listed in the overture’s rationale.

The ACSWP’s rationale echoes the rationale of the overture as it calls for a countering of the fear underlying many hurtful attitudes and actions towards immigrants by facing it head on. Beyond the fear that is faced in faith there can be transformation. Numerous actions of past General Assemblies, such as Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounter with New Neighbors (211th GA, 1999) [http://www.pcusa.org/media/uploads/resolutions/encounter-with-new-neighbors-1999.pdf], clearly provide a theological rationale for the active exploration envisioned by the overture. Such actions as it advocates are surely to be expected and encouraged if the biblical mandate of hospitality to the stranger is to be given more than lip service.

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 12-07.

Rationale

Conditions have not improved. The conditions that prompted this resolution are still in existence and in some instances have grown worse because of economic and social conditions.

See Item 12-09, “A Resolution to Recognize the Commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Making Just Immigration a Reality,” from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 12-07

Comment on Item 12-07—From the Office of the General Assembly.

Commissioners of the 220th General Assembly (2012) are invited to consider Item 12-07 in light of the 218th General Assembly resolution (2008) to Grow Christ’s Church Deep and Wide, which calls for the church to participate in God’s activity of transforming the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Item 12-07 is consistent with this resolution in that it recognizes the church’s call to reflect the cultural and ethnic diversity of God’s people. Further, Item 12-07 is in-line with the calling of the church to be a community of faith, hope, love, and witness (Book of Order, F-1.0301), seeking to include all people (Book of Order, F-1.0302a). The overture provides practical tasks to help the church be open to the guidance of the Holy Spirit, by seeking reform and fresh direction so as to be transformed by the will God (Book of Order, F-1.0401). The worship and ministry of the church within the community of faith and in the world will bear a witness to this transformation as the Christian community strives for justice and peace in its own life and in the world (Book of Order, W-7.4001).

Further, this overture provides a new and helpful perspective on Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounter with New Neighbors (211th General Assembly (1999)).

Commissioners are encouraged to review the language of the overture to ensure that it reflects the reality of our congregations and urges all congregations, whatever the predominant immigration status of its members, to reach out beyond their congregation to worship and pray together. Further as the overture notes, church members may gain deeper insight and inspiration from the stories of immigrant Presbyterian churches that invite pastors, elders, and members of other local Presbyterian congregations, which are comprised of mostly citizen members, in order to share immigration stories.

On Adopting a Statement Urging Congregations to Commit Two Years to Building Relationships with Refugees Living in Our Neighborhoods and Towns—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the PC(USA) to [approve a statement] [urge] [urging] congregations to support and serve refugees living in our own neighborhoods, neighboring towns, and cities. This may include [matching] [setting aside] monies [already set aside for global mission trips in 2013–2014] [and] beginning new initiatives that support refugees in the local area.

“[The 220th General Assembly (2012) urges congregations to commit two years to building relationships with those who, after fleeing their homelands, now live in the United States, some of whom worship among us. We encourage congregations to form relationships of mutuality, by offering hospitality, reaching out to the specific needs of our refugee neighbors, learning about the gifts they offer the community, and how we can be Christ for one another.]”

Jesus himself was a refugee whose family fled for his life to Egypt (Mt. 2:13b–15).

Jesus has called us to serve the stranger in our midst (Lk. 10:25–37).

Jesus modeled a ministry of service that nurtured personal relationships with people he met in his daily walk (Jn. 4:4–42).

God urged the children of Israel to always consider themselves as foreigners so as to care for the foreigners among them as they would care for themselves (Ex. 22:21).

Many of our congregations are engaged in global mission trips that serve those in distant places while 56,424 refugees were admitted to our own nation from Africa, East Asia, Europe, Latin American and Caribbean, Near East, and South Asia in 2011 (source: Cultural Orientation Resource Center, http://www.cal.org/co/refugee/statistics/index.html).

Most adults and children who live as refugees in the United States struggle with language, culture, employment, and basic needs due to the minimal support that the United States government offers them once they seek sanctuary in this country.

Therefore, we call on the 220th General Assembly (2012) to urge congregations to commit two years to building relationships with those who, after fleeing their homelands, now live in the United States among us. You may find information on them at your nearest Office of Refugee Resettlement: http://www.acf.hhs.gov/programs/orr/. We encourage congregations toward forming relationships of mutuality, offering hospitality, reaching out to the specific needs of our refugee neighbors, learning about the gifts they offer our community, how they can be Christ for us, and connecting to them.

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 12-08.
12 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION ISSUES

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns supports all efforts to promote a culture of inclusion, not only on Sunday mornings, but all through the week. This overture lifts up only a fraction of the many instances in Scripture that call us to welcome the stranger and to serve them in our midst. The ACREC goes further and urges the church to not only be “welcoming to the stranger,” but also, to follow the lead of the Waldensian Church and turn to the new theology of “Being Church Together.” This theology holds the refugees not as strangers in perpetuity, but brings them into the fold where we can be enriched by their depth of experience.

Comment on Item 12-08—From the Office of the General Assembly.

Commissioners of the 220th General Assembly (2012) are invited to consider Item 12-08 in light of the 1999 statement, Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounter with New Neighbors. The 1999 statement encouraged the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to commit to rediscovering its identity as a church of the stranger and reminded the church of its call to ministry with refugees, asylum seekers, and immigrants. This ministry is described in the 1999 statement as one that is pastoral, compassionate, educational, and prophetic. Item 12-08 is in-line with this statement.

The second sentence of this resolution appears to refer to the financial resources congregations and presbyteries utilize to participate in foreign mission trips.

[The assembly approved Item 12-09 with amendment. See pp. 55, 60.]

A Resolution to Recognize the Commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Making Just Immigration a Reality—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

[1. Recognize denominational support for “A Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians in Their Hour of Need.”]

[2. Direct the Office of Immigration Issues and the Office of Theology, Worship and Education to collaborate in the development of accessible worship and study resources that will assist Presbyterians in understanding, engaging, and integrating an ecclesiology of ‘Being Church Together.’]

[3. Call for the passage of the DREAM Act, and direct the Office of Public Witness to advocate for its passage.]

Rationale

Presbyterians have engaged in advocacy regarding U.S. immigration policy and reform since at least 1953. In that year, the PC(USA) General Assembly (GA) called for a comprehensive review of the nation’s immigration policies, and the next year, the GA called for legislation to provide for the needs of migrant workers. Presbyterians have continued to call for immigration justice, most recently in 2006 (Call to Presbyterians to Work and Pray for a Just and Compassionate U.S. Immigration Policy), in 2008 (A Resolution to Study Immigration Detention in the United States; A Resolution to Expand the Church’s Ministry with and Advocacy Against Human Trafficking; a Resolution on Preventing the Trafficking of Women, Internationally and Nationally; A Resolution on Local Enforcement of National Immigration Laws That Adversely Affect Local Congregations), and in 2010 (A Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians in Their Hour of Need).

Presbyterians have been clear and consistent in calling for justice in immigration policies and practice. Recent change and increased injustice call us again to action and renewed commitment. The Secure Communities program of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) is promoted as a simple initiative targeting criminal aliens for deportation. Instead, Secure Communities has been shown to encourage abuse in the identification of persons not engaged in criminal activity, many of whom are paying taxes as productive members of U.S. society, resulting in disruption of family life for many when a parent is deported. The program has also assisted in the significant growth of the private prison industry, particularly those companies contracted to construct and run immigrant detention centers. With increased numbers of detainees, who lack the right to due process guaranteed to citizens, gross abuses have been documented in many facilities. These abuses have encouraged some falsely-accused and held detainees to plead guilty in order to escape the conditions of detention facilities. Pleading guilty has resulted in those persons, some of whom are falsely-accused, being deported.
A. “A Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians in Their Hour of Need”

The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved “A Call to Stand with Immigrant Presbyterians in Their Hour of Need,” which resulted in GA policy of refraining from holding national meetings in states where Presbyterians might be subjected to harassment due to the adoption of laws similar to Arizona Law SB 1070/HB2162. Since then, Alabama and Georgia have passed similar legislation, and other states are considering such statutes. (We stand with North Alabama, Sheppards and Lapsley, and South Alabama presbyteries in calling for the repeal of the Alabama statute.) Enforcement of these laws drain community resources to combat crime, making it more difficult for law-enforcement officials and departments to make communities safe. Additionally, there continues to be momentum around state enforced immigration laws, therefore we need to be vigilant to foster an environment where we can grow the church deep and wide by ensuring all Presbyterians feel welcome and safe at national meetings.

B. The DREAM Act

Additionally, the inability to pass the Development, Relief and Education for Alien Minors Act (known as the DREAM Act) is stifling the future for many young people brought here as infants or children, who are ready to serve, have served, and are serving in the military or attend higher education. Passage of the act would equip these young people to participate in the building of communities across the nation. For young people brought to the U.S. before their sixteenth birthday who have lived in the U.S. for five years or more, who earn their high school diploma or GED and complete two years of college or military service, the DREAM Act offers life, hope, and the opportunity to take part meaningfully in the social fabric of education, work, and service in and for the U.S. It is because of the life-giving and transformative potential in passage of the DREAM Act that we urge the General Assembly to make support for the act part of our policy.

C. Being Church Together

The image of “welcoming the stranger” has been prominent in our immigration thought, policy, and theology. We welcome people into our house, but our house does not become the guest’s or the stranger’s house as a result of our welcome. While welcoming is a pleasant activity (and certainly preferable to spurning, dismissing, or discounting), the power issues raised are not conducive to relationships between brothers and sisters in Christ. It is time for reframing the way we relate as a church to immigrants, many of whom come to the U.S. as fellow disciples of Jesus with us.

Additionally, some of those who have been “welcomed as strangers” by our church have included people from lands in the Caribbean, Mexico, and other parts of Central and South America, whose ancestors entered what is now U.S. territory as citizens of Spain, France, or Mexico. These people are not “strangers;” instead, they are returning to lands their ancestors called home. A theological and ecclesiological foundation of “welcoming the stranger” does not adequately serve the church in this time.

The Waldensian Church’s program of “Being Church Together” provides a model for us, as we reflect on relationships within the human community between those who have lived in the U.S. for years or generations and others who are newer to our shores. Conversations between representatives of the Waldensian Church and GA staff and GA committee members have already provoked deep thought and conversation on the current operative models of being church. As we learn from the scriptural witness, immigration and migration often happens not as an accident but as a movement of people in response to the will and plan of God. How can we be open to human movement as part of God’s plan? What can we learn from this? How do we go about “being church” if this is the foundational reality? If human movement could come to be understood as the norm and as a positive, constructive part of God’s intention for the world and the church, we could learn ways not only to accept but also to greet with joy the cultural change that comes with building community with people who are different from each other. We must discern models for the church that help us serve God and neighbor both in the current reality and in a projected future, and develop, engage, and live into foundational theology and ecclesiology documents that interpret these models creatively and faithfully.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 12-09

Comment on Item 12-09—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Recommendation 2 directs the Office of Immigration Issues and the Office of Theology, Worship and Education to collaborate in the development of accessible worship and study resources related to “Being Church Together.” “Being Church Together” (http://tinyurl.com/6lnl7ok; https://www.rca.org/sslpage.aspx?pid=6454) is an effort of the Federation of Evangelical Churches in Italy (FCEI). The PC(USA) has a strong link to the FCEI through our historic relationship with the Waldensian Church (the largest member church of the FCEI). The FCEI has developed “Being Church Together” as a ground-breaking way of understanding and practicing church through the integration of new immigrants and immigrant churches. Because this is new to the PC(USA), developing a similar approach for the PC(USA) will require people and resources, and thus there would be financial implications.
Recommendation 3 calls for the Office of Public Witness to advocate for the passage of the DREAM act. This work is already underway. The GAMC, through OPW and in partnership with the Office of Immigration Issues, advocates for comprehensive immigration policy reform, and for the DREAM Act as an important step in that direction, when relevant legislation is under consideration in Congress, based on General Assembly statements from 1990, 1999, 2001, 2004, 2006, 2008.

[The assembly approved Item 12-10 with amendment. See pp. 55, 60.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. Regarding Safe Communities for Everyone.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), concerned about dangers to immigrant rights in the absence of meaningful immigration reform

1. requests the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries section, with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and other appropriate offices, to address the civil liberties, racial profiling, security, and due process concerns related to the arrest and detention of immigrants through the Secure Communities program, drawing on the 2010 Human Rights Report section on immigrant detention prepared by the Presbyterian Immigration Issues office;

2. directs the Stated Clerk and the Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C., to communicate to President Obama, Director of Homeland Security Janet Napolitano, Director of Immigration, Customs and Enforcement John Morton, and the United States Congress, calling for the termination of the S-Comm program, detailing the detrimental impact of S-Comm on the security of our families and our communities (as instanced in the rationale below);

3. encourages the Stated Clerk, the Office on Immigration Issues, and the Advisory Committee on Litigation to consider participation in amicus curiae (friend of court) briefs in cases seeking to ameliorate or end S-Comm or other practices contrary to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) policies on immigration; and

4. directs the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to inform our national ecumenical partners of this action and call upon them to join us in raising concern with our elected and appointed officials.

Rationale

We are called to welcome and to not oppress the stranger: “You shall not oppress a stranger, since you yourselves know the feelings of a stranger, for you also were strangers in the land of Egypt” (Ex. 23:9, NASB). Jesus himself admonishes us when he said, “… I was a stranger and you invited me in …” (Mt. 25:35, NASB). The immigrants among us are Christ among us; we must not turn our backs on them. And again in the Letter to the Hebrews: “Do not neglect to show hospitality to strangers, for by doing that some have entertained angels without knowing it” (Heb. 13:2).

According to a report issued by Berkeley Law School, well over half of the people deported through S-Comm had either no criminal conviction or were convicted of minor offenses such as traffic violations. Latino males represent by far the largest demographic of those caught in S-Comm's net at 93 percent even though Latinos comprise only 16 percent of the population, which raises serious concerns about racial or at least poverty profiling. Consequently, S-Comm is unnecessarily sweeping up unintended members of our communities. The recent Supreme Court ruling regarding Arizona state immigration policies does not inhibit the implementation of S-Comm.

Despite the claims of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), the individuals who are detained through S-Comm have limited due-process rights that cut them off from communication with family and friends as well as making it more difficult to obtain legal assistance. Furthermore, 90 percent of those detained by ICE are incarcerated until they are deported, which means that they have no opportunity to get their affairs in order, collect belongings, or even say goodbye to family or friends. This is a cruel system that should not be tolerated.

Although the report cites that 39 percent of deportees say that they were leaving behind a spouse and/or children, data suggests that this is the result of underreporting since immigrants would likely fear the negative consequences for revealing too much. This data also suggests that tens of thousands of families are being impacted by this policy that affects their psychological and physical health, education, and employment placing the families under financial strain, and undoubtedly results in poverty, loss of homes, and the breakup of families.

There is considerable anecdotal evidence that immigrants have been arrested and deported for reporting crimes, for being the victim of a crime, and even for stopping a crime. While the program has been linked to and in part justified as a response to the “war on drugs,” those persons arrested, detained, and deported under S-Comm have only rarely been found to have any connection to drug trafficking, much less to other security concerns. In one instance in the Presbytery of San Jose, an undocumented member of the First Presbyterian Church of Palo Alto community was being battered by her husband. When she called for help, the police officers arrested the victim and placed her in detention awaiting deportation. It was only through the intervention of other members of our community that she avoided deportation.

Furthermore, because S-Comm is effectively deputizing local law enforcement agencies as immigration officers, S-Comm has created a mistrust of local law enforcement agencies that is resulting in the immigrant community’s reluctance to contact or cooperate with these agencies. According to Ron Hampton, president of Black Law Enforcement in America, “Secure Communities’ program is incompatible with community policing.” In addition, former Los Angeles Police Chief William J. Bratton succinctly explained the risks of an increased police role in immigration enforcement: “Criminals are the biggest benefactors when immigrants fear the police. We can’t solve crimes that aren’t reported because the victims are afraid to come forward to the police.”

Michael Hennessey, Police Chief of San Francisco, explains,

As the sheriff of San Francisco for more than 30 years, I know that maintaining public safety requires earning community trust. We rely heavily on the trust and cooperation of all community members—including immigrants—to come forward and report crimes, either as victims or as witnesses. Otherwise, crimes go unreported—and this affects everyone, citizens and noncitizens alike. It also leads to “street justice,” in which, residents who are too afraid to go to the police decide to take justice into their own hands, often with deadly result…the Secure Communities program violates this hard-earned trust with immigrant residents.

This resolution builds upon the 2008 commissioners’ resolution approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008), “On Local Enforcement of National Immigration Laws that Adversely Affect Local Congregations.” It addresses similar negative impacts on the immigrant community as it was referencing the impact of 287g, the predecessor program to S-Comm.

Inasmuch as our nation desperately needs comprehensive immigration reform (defined as a combination of securing the border and providing a path to citizenship for law-abiding, out of status immigrants who are already here), in order to secure the health and well being of all of our families and our communities, we must reject the politics and policies of xenophobia.

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 12-10.

Rationale

S-Comm is causing danger to immigrant rights that are contrary to the PC(USA) policies on immigration. The ACREC concurs with encouraging the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to call for either ameliorating or ending S-Comm.

The ACREC also concurs with the request of the joint efforts of the committees on Peace and Justice, GAMC, ACSWP, and the ecumenical partners to address the civil liberties, racial profiling, and due process concerns related to the arrest and detention of immigrants.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The ACSWP advises that Item 12-10 be approved, and referred to the Office of Immigration Issues for possible consolidation with the action taken on Items 12-04 and 12-06.

Rationale

This overture concerning the problems with the Safe Communities program is supported not only by the rationale offered by the commissioners’ resolution itself, but also by the ACSWP rationales for Items 12-04 and 12-06, both of which refer to the Safe Communities program and others with similar detrimental effects in their general treatments of immigration reform.

Commissioners’ Resolution. On the Plight of Immigrant People in Our Neighborhoods and Communities of Faith.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) urges our church to take the following actions concerning the plight of immigrant people in our neighborhoods and communities of faith:

1. Renew our commitment to the “Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States” (216th General Assembly [2004]) (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 737ff.)

[3-] [4.] Mindful that the problems addressed in the actions above have continued and in many cases been exacerbated since 2006, we recommend that our church councils be called upon to act in the following ways:

a. To address the plight of students who are undocumented and therefore unable to access many of the benefits of our educational institutions, specifically by advocating for the passage of the DREAM Act.

b. To address the rapid growth of detention centers and the violation of human rights by overcrowding, poor medical service, lack of access to legal aid, and inhumane treatment, specifically by urging the federal government to adopt enforceable standards of care.

c. To address the separation of families through long incarcerations in detention centers, and the imprisonment of many who have no criminal record, specifically by advocating for greater use of alternatives to detention.

d. To address the indiscriminate deportation of hundreds of thousands of persons through the merger of the criminal justice system with Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), specifically by advocating for an end to the cooperation between federal immigration officials with state and local law enforcement in the following forms: (1) the 287(g) contracts with state and local police, (2) the Secure Communities (S-Comm), (3) the Criminal Alien Program (CAP) and (4) similar programs that might emerge in the future. These programs have adversely affected community safety, increased racial profiling, stigmatized persons as criminal aliens, created fear in our communities, and resulted in denial of due process and unnecessarily separated families.

e. To address the confusion created by enforcement-only laws by several states, like Alabama, Arizona, and Georgia, specifically by calling for an acknowledgement that comprehensive immigration reform needs to take place at the federal rather than at state and local levels.

f. To direct the PC(USA) [Washington office] [Office of Public Witness] to make immigration reform one of the top policy issues in their work with members of congress and the White House.

g. To direct the PC(USA) [Washington office] [Office of Public Witness] and PC(USA) related agencies to actively seek and engage denominational partners and faith-based organizations that are working on immigration reform.

h. To direct the GAMC and related agencies to work together with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), [the Office of Immigration Issues], and PC(USA) racial ethnic caucuses in a coordinated strategy with interested presbyteries to create political will towards immigration reform.

Rationale

The resounding testimony of Scripture is that people of faith are called by God to show hospitality toward the immigrant and pursue justice on their behalf. In God’s eyes, the chosen people are themselves “but aliens and tenants” in the land (Lev. 25:23). They are a people well acquainted with the immigrant experience, having been “strangers in the land of Egypt,” (Deut. 10: 19) and so have a profound empathy for and compassion towards the immigrant. The Torah and the Prophets call upon people of faith to treat the sojourner in your midst with dignity and justice (Deut. 24:14, Jer. 22:3). They are to regard the alien as a “citizen among you; you shall love the alien as yourself” (Lev. 19:34).

This commitment to the immigrant’s welfare is emphasized by Jesus, who commended those who welcomed him in the guise of a stranger (Mt. 25:35–46) and condemned those who did not. The story Jesus told of the Good Samaritan (Lk.
10:25–37) called upon his listeners to care for the migrant in need by the side of the road. And the central command Jesus articulates in Matthew 22:39, “… love your neighbor as yourself,” reflects a core Christian ethic of treating immigrants and all our “neighbors” with the love, care, concern and respect we would hope to receive ourselves. Following Jesus’ teaching, the New Testament epistles commend showing hospitality to strangers (Rom. 12:13), and compare such practices to “entertaining angels” (Heb. 13:2).

Because our current immigration system makes it virtually impossible for many to enter the United States legally, and because undocumented immigrants are particularly vulnerable to abuse and deprivation, the call of Scripture to pursue justice for the immigrant and show hospitality seems especially apt for that community of persons. Undocumented migrants represent that category of people our Scriptures call “sojourners” or “aliens”—individuals who migrate to a new land, but lack the rights and privileges of long-term residents. Our Scriptures do not make the distinction between “legal” and “illegal” when it comes to identifying those immigrants deserving of the Christian community’s compassion, hospitality, and our justice advocacy. People of faith are called instead to seek the well-being of all immigrants, love them as our neighbors, and demonstrate in our ministry towards them our Lord’s compassion for the stranger and the vulnerable.

Given the millions of recent immigrants currently residing in the United States legally, and the estimated 11 million undocumented immigrants also living in our country, ministry towards the immigrant population specifically represents a true “cutting edge” of the church’s future. This historic moment represents an opportunity to witness boldly to Christian love put into practice, not only in our church outreach ministries towards immigrants, but in our public advocacy on their behalf.

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 12-11.

Rationale

This recommendation supports Item 12-09, “A Resolution to Recognize the Commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Making Just Immigration a Reality—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.”

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The ACSWP advises that Item 12-11 be approved and referred to the Office of Immigration Issues for possible consolidation with the action taken on Items 12-04 and 12-06.

Rationale

The ACSWP offers the same rationale previously provided for Items 12-04 and 12-06, which also deal with comprehensive immigration reform and are very similar in their coverage.
Item 13-01

On Amending W-4.9000 to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage—From the Presbytery of East Iowa.

The Presbytery of East Iowa respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall W-4.9000 of the Book of Order be amended as follows:

   "W-4.9001
   “Christian Marriage

2. Amend W-4.9002 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “a. In preparation for the marriage service, the teaching elder† shall provide for a discussion with the man and the woman two people to be married concerning”

   “W-4.9004
   “Form and Order of Service
   “The service begins with scriptural sentences and a brief statement of purpose. The man and the woman two people to be married shall declare their intention to enter into Christian marriage and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness. The service includes appropriate passages of Scripture, which may be interpreted in various forms of proclamation. Prayers shall be offered for the couple, for the communities which support them in this new dimension of discipleship, and for all who seek to live in faithfulness. In the name of the triune God the teaching elder† shall declare publicly that the woman and the man two people are now joined in marriage. A charge may be given. Other actions common to the community and its cultures may appropriately be observed when these actions do not diminish the Christian understanding of marriage. The service concludes with a benediction.”

   “Recognizing Civil Marriage
   “A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of the vows by the husband and wife two people, and the public declaration by the teaching elder† reflect the fact that the woman and man two people are already married to one another according to the laws of the state.”

Rationale

Since April 2009, Iowa has been allowing two people of the same gender to marry. Although some Iowa pastors in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have declined to perform such marriages in keeping with their conscience, many others are caught in an untenable position: their conscience tells them to exercise their pastoral responsibility and perform the marriage but the church tells them to fear prosecution. Such prosecutions have already placed tremendous financial burden on presbyteries, diminishing the church’s ability to effectively evangelize and perform necessary mission work.
We Are Called to Make Disciples

According to the Book of Order, we declare,

“The good news of the Gospel is that the triune God—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—creates, redeems, sustains, rules, and transforms all things and all people. … proclaiming the Lord’s favor upon all creation. … In Christ, the Church participates in God’s mission… by proclaiming to all people the good news of God’s love, offering to all people the grace of God at font and table, and calling all people to discipleship in Christ. Human beings have no higher goal in life than to glorify and enjoy God now and forever, living in covenant fellowship with God and participating in God’s mission” (F-1.01).

“… No person shall be denied membership for any reason not related to profession of faith. The Gospel leads members to extend the fellowship of Christ to all persons. Failure to do so constitutes a rejection of Christ himself and causes a scandal to the Gospel” (G-1.0302).

“… The invitation to the Lord’s Supper is extended to all who have been baptized, remembering that access to the Table is not a right conferred upon the worthy, but a privilege given to the undeserving …” (W-2.4011).

According to this, Presbyterians call all people to discipleship in Christ, live to glorify God, extend the fellowship of Christ to all people, and recognize that none of us earn or deserve God’s grace.

The Marriage Ceremony Is Worship

In our order for worship, we listen to the Word, proclaim the Word, and respond to the Word. Responding to the Word is a demonstration of the love of God for God’s people.

“The response to the proclamation of the Word is expressed in an affirmation of faith and commitment. … Response to the Word also involves acts of commitment and recognition. … acts of commitment which may appropriately be included as response to the Word are (a) Christian marriage, …” (W-3.3500, W-3.3502, W-3.3503).

According to this, Presbyterians view Christian marriage as an act of worship.

Our Polity

One part of our current Presbyterian polity specifically excludes a group of people when it comes to worship: those people in loving, committed, Christian relationships who are also of the same gender and wish to marry. However, elsewhere in our polity, we hold up the words of Jesus Christ:

“… There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise’ (Gal. 3:27–29). … The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. …” (F-1.0403)

Conclusion

We are all trying to discern God’s Word for us. And as surely as we are all unique creations of the loving God, we will each of us disagree from time to time. But if we profess to call all people to Christ, to call all people to proclaim God’s love for us in worship, to guarantee full participation in worship to all persons, we must give teaching elders and sessions the discretion to choose to recognize the covenant of Christian marriage for two people of the same gender just as we allow teaching elders and sessions the discretion to choose otherwise. To do anything else unfairly denies this group of our membership the opportunity to fully worship our God.

Concurrence to Item 13-01 from the Presbyteries of Baltimore, Des Moines, and Utica.

Concurrence to Item 13-01 from the Presbytery of Heartland (with Additional Rationale).

Rationale

In six states (Connecticut, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, and Vermont) and in the District of Columbia it is not factually true that “marriage is a civil contract between a man and a woman”, exclusively. This error in the Directory for Worship creates an untenable situation for teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders whose conscience tells them to exercise their pastoral responsibility and perform marriages between same-gender loving couples while the church tells them to fear prosecution if they do so. Such prosecutions place tremendous financial burden on presbyteries and faithful elders, and diminish the church’s ability to extend its mission and ministry to all persons.
1. We Are Called to Make Disciples

In the Book of Order, we declare,

“The good news of the Gospel is that the triune God—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—creates, redeems, sustains, rules, and transforms all things and all people… proclaiming the Lord’s favor upon all creation. … In Christ, the Church participates in God’s mission… by proclaiming to all the good news of God’s love, offering to all people the grace of God at font and table, and calling all people to discipleship in Christ. Human beings have no higher goal in life than to glorify and enjoy God now and forever, living in covenant fellowship with God and participating in God’s mission (F-1.01).”

“No person shall be denied membership for any reason not related to profession of faith. The Gospel leads members to extend the fellowship of Christ to all persons. Failure to do so constitutes a rejection of Christ himself and causes a scandal to the Gospel (G-1.0302).”

“The invitation to the Lord’s Supper is extended to all who have been baptized, remembering that access to the Table is not a right conferred upon the worthy, but a privilege given to the undeserving…” (W-2.4011).”

According to this, Presbyterians call all people to discipleship in Christ, live to glorify God, extend the fellowship of Christ to all people, and recognize that none of us earns or deserves God’s grace.

2. The Marriage Ceremony Is Worship

In our order for worship, we listen to the Word, proclaim the Word, and respond to the Word. Responding to the Word is a demonstration of the love of God for God’s people.

“The response to the proclamation of the Word is expressed in an affirmation of faith and commitment… Response to the Word also involves acts of commitment and recognition… acts of commitment which may appropriately be included as response to the Word are (a) Christian marriage, … (W-3.3501, W-3.3502, W-3.3503).”

According to this, Presbyterians view Christian marriage as an act of worship.

3. Our Polity

One part of our current Presbyterian polity specifically excludes a group of people when it comes to worship: those people in loving, committed, Christian relationships who are also of the same gender and wish to marry. However, elsewhere in our polity, we hold up the words of Jesus Christ:

“‘There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise’ (Gal. 3:27–29). … The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership (F-1.0403).”

4. Biblical Reflection

There is no consistent biblical model for marriage. The Old Testament patriarchs and kings were polygamists (Abraham, Jacob, David, Solomon). Jesus was unmarried himself, and preached indifference to earthly attachments as one’s primary love, including family (Lk. 9:60; Mt. 12:46–50; Mt. 22:30). Paul cited marriage as the lesser option (to celibacy) for those unable to contain their carnal desire (1 Cor. 7:8–9). Nowhere does the Bible expressly define marriage as between one man and one woman. Neither does the Bible serve us well as a how-to manual on modern marriage.

Several Scriptures that may seem to provide biblical injunction against same-gender marriage are not about marriage at all, but are focused on specific sex acts, and appear in the larger context of a range of abusive, violent, exploitive, debasing, and perverse ancient pagan practices. These bear no resemblance to the situation of modern-day, Christian, same-gender loving adults who freely wish to commit themselves to the covenant of marriage with the blessing of their church.

These isolated texts address the evils of rape (Genesis 19, Judges 19, Deut. 22.25, 2 Samuel 13); prostitution (Deut. 23.17, 1 Kings 14:24, 22:46, 2 Kings 23.7, 1 Cor. 6.9); and pagan practices or promiscuous behavior (Lev. 18:22, 20:13, Rom. 1:26–27, Jude 7), things far different from love.

They also neglect the wider sweep of significant and defining biblical themes such as Christ’s all encompassing love (John 4, Gal. 3:27–29); the value of commitment in relationships (Ruth 1:16–17, 1 Sam. 18:1–4); God’s creation of each person in God’s own image (Gen. 1:26–27); and God’s full knowledge and acceptance of our whole selves (Psalm 139, Jn. 4:29, Acts 10:34, 1 Cor. 13:12–13).

A Reformed interpretation of Scripture insists on a wider lens, as stated in the Second Helvetic Confession “… we hold that interpretation of the Scripture to be orthodox and genuine which is gleaned from the Scriptures themselves (from the nature of the language in which they were written, likewise according to the circumstances in which they were set down, and expounded in the light of like and unlike passages and of many and clearer passages) and which agree with the rule of faith and love, and contributes much to the glory of God and [our] salvation” (The Book of Confessions, 5.010).

5. Conclusion

We are all trying to discern God’s Word for us. And as surely as we are all unique creations of the loving God, we will each of us disagree from time to time. But if we profess to call all people to Christ, to call all people to proclaim God’s love for us in worship, to guarantee full participation in worship to all persons, we must give teaching elders and sessions the discretion to choose, according to their conscience, to recognize the covenant of Christian marriage for two people of the same gender just as we allow teaching elders and sessions the discretion to choose otherwise. To do anything else denies one group within our membership the opportunity to fully worship God.

ACC ADVICE ON

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

4. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, 13-11 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-04 is the most clearly worded and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Fourteen items of business come to the 220th General Assembly (2012) seeking some modification or interpretation of marriage, as defined in W-4.9000. These overtures range in effect from proposed amendments that would change the definition of marriage to “two people,” to overtures asking for a reaffirmation of the definition of marriage as it currently exists, to a group of overtures seeking authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 to allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling el-
I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for Judicial Commission in the case of marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent osexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its its faith, has drawn a dist inction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of

Book of Order

makes this theological distinction concerning marriage in W-4.9004: “In the name of the triune God the minister shall declare publicly that the woman and the man are now joined in marriage.” This and similar pronouncements declaring a new status are to be reserved for services of marriage. (loc. cit.)

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith."

These sentences require interpretation: Does the second sentence (civil contract) describe a subset of the first (gift to all humankind), or is it a description of how the gift is conferred? Does the second sentence (civil contract) control and subsume the third (Christian marriage)? Is the language of “woman and a man” descriptive or proscriptive?

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “…

civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is proscriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that questions about W-4.9000 and its relationship to same-gender couples have been addressed to the General Assembly since 1991. Increasing societal acceptance of same-gender couples, laws enacted by some states allowing marriage by same-gender couples, and our own denomination’s struggles over ordination standards have all contributed to the increase of items before the General Assembly seeking change, definition, or interpretation of this section of the Directory for Worship. The church’s concerns for the pastoral care of its members also contribute to the frequency and urgency of these questions. The appointment of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage (2008) and the request for the change in the Board of Pensions policy regarding benefits for same-gender couples are an indicator of the urgency of these matters.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168, Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:
- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that aboundeded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “...ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleannesse. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.31). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 884-85 of the electronic version, Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage)

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. [Bruce C. Daniels, Puritans At Play: Leisure and Recreation in Colonial New England (Palgrave Macmillan, 1996), p. 118.

II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather proscriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJC to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language prescriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

Presenting this section as a restatement of confessional standards, this overture seeks to apply to the Directory for Worship the same two-thirds (2/3) standard for amending the Confessions. Similar overtures regarding super majorities were addressed by the 205th General Assembly (1993) in Overtures 93-23 and 93-44, by the 212th General Assembly (2000) in Overture 98-7, and by the 219th General Assembly (2010) in Item 03-06. In all cases, the recommendations were defeated.

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judicatory or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result. …

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

Should the assembly concur with the intent of the first part of this overture, the language proposed is clear and adequate to achieve its intent. But the concluding section on requiring a two-thirds (2/3) vote is inconsistent with our historical understanding of majority rule.

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage
Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-05, Genesee Valley, includes language related to 4.9002a, who meet legal requirements of the state, and demonstrate Christian commitment

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-10, Redwoods, language does not prohibit officiating at marriage of same-gender couple

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008,

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

• Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.

• Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.

• Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

All four overtures seek to amend W-4.9000 and related paragraphs in the Directory for Worship by redefining or re-describing marriage or Christian marriage. There is currently a tension between the definition of marriage between the church and some states. Currently six states and the District of Columbia recognize same-gender marriages as legal unions; these overtures would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to perform same-gender marriages in these states. Any change in the definition of marriage in state law does not amend the church’s constitution.

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, AND 13-11

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, 13-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 from the presbyteries of East Iowa, Hudson River, New York City, and Redwoods overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to amend W-4.9000 to redefine Christian marriage to include covenants between persons of the same gender.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations.

Rationale

The 208th General Assembly (1996) approved the following resolution: “Affirming the Presbyterian church’s historic definition of marriage as a civil contract between a man and a woman, yet recognizing that committed same-sex partners seek equal civil liberties in a contractual relationship with all the civil rights of married couples, we urge the Office of the Stated Clerk to explore the feasibility of entering friend-of-the-court briefs and supporting legislation in favor of giving civil rights to same-sex partners” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p.122).

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved the policy Transforming Families. In its historical analysis, the policy points out that Scripture contains several forms of marriage and family, none of which is a “precise equivalent of contemporary marriage and family life” (C.1). It notes that the development of monogamous marriage took place over time in Hebrew (and other) societies. And it points out that “the Reformed tradition embraced marriage as a good for all in society, Christian or not” (C.1). As the Book of Order states, “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well being of the entire human family” (W-4.9001).

Transforming Families (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/transforming-families/) also states that while the marital-biological family is a basic form of family, it is neither “exhaustive nor exclusive” as a family form, and “it does not fully exemplify God’s ordering of interpersonal life” (2). Moreover, the policy recognizes that the forms and purposes of family have evolved as God’s ordering of equal gender relationships has become clearer. In these ways, the church has acknowledged that forms of marriage and family are shaped by of historical and cultural developments. Today we would find some of the previous forms and some of the interpersonal relationships that they embodied falling short of our understanding of God’s will for humankind and human well being.

Having said this, this policy did not address specifically the question of same-gender marriage and family. It assumed without comment the previous policies of the church that called for the same protections and civil rights for same-gender families that are equal to those of married heterosexual families. Equality under the law is one principle. But the church also recognizes the importance of these protections and rights to the capacity of such families to do what good families do: nurturing children, deepening love, providing material support, caring for the young and the sick and the aged, and creating a context for growth in faith. The church has understood that same-gender couples, and homosexual persons, have the same need and desire for the pastoral care of the church. Thus, it offers the blessing of the church on same-gender unions and committed itself to the wellbeing of children in same-gender unions as it has to all children (Transforming Families, p. 31).

Finally, Transforming Families ends with a vision of a church and society “which welcomes and nurtures all persons regardless of their family circumstances” and a church that rejects “attitudes or practices that value some more highly than others - based on gender, age, class, ability, ethnic origin, sexual orientation, or any outward condition” (Recommendations, #2).
However, these policies did not include same-gender couples in the church’s understanding of marriage. The intent of Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 is to embody in the church itself an equal recognition that same-gender faithful and committed relationships are included in the gift of marriage God intends for humankind. These items set before the 220th General Assembly (2012) the question of whether the church’s commitment to equality of civil rights for same-gender persons is possible if the church itself does not receive such relationships into its body on an equal basis with opposite-gender relationships.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 13-01.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-11 is applicable here as well:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given in this overture. The practice of excluding people who are gay and lesbian from marriage has its roots in the persistence of patriarchal standards for the lives of women and men. The notion that men and maleness are superior dictates that men and women behave in particular ways that abide by the constructed rules their sex has been assigned. For this reason, same-gender loving women and men are perceived as a direct threat to the norms that patriarchy lays out, as they, in their loving, challenge the models of prescribed masculinity and femininity determined by patriarchy. Gay men are a threat as they are often perceived as “too feminine,” and lesbian women are perceived as “too masculine.”

In withholding the right to marry from same-gender loving people, the church is upholding this patriarchal standard for humanity. As a group committed to standing against patriarchy and its effects within the world and the church, ACWC advocates giving access to the commitment and covenant of marriage to same-gender loving women and men in the PC(USA). The ACWC draws particular attention to the vulnerability of lesbian women in this exclusion, as they find themselves in this and many situations excluded and marginalized both for their gender identity and sexual orientation.

As we watch as state by state people in the U.S. are standing against this form of discrimination, we challenge the church to act now with a prophetic voice that joins in this justice movement, rather than responding after marriage equality has been established across the country.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169.

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133-.134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000 to Ensure Pastoral Discretion—From the Presbytery of East Iowa.

The Presbytery of East Iowa overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to provide the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000:

“Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may exercise pastoral discretion when asked to officiate at such a ceremony for two people who have obtained a civil marriage license, and sessions may permit the use of church property for such services. Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders may refuse to conduct such services, and sessions may refuse to permit the use of church property for such purposes.”

Rationale

In long-standing Christian tradition, civil authority has played a primary role in the regulation of marriage. Christians in the Reformed Tradition view marriage not as a sacrament mediated by the church but as a blessing that two people seek on a contract they are entering under auspices of the state. This blessing is a moment of great joy in the church and in the lives of those on whom it is conferred, but Christian marriage does not change the status of those two people. Marriages that are not blessed by the church are nevertheless recognized in Presbyterian churches.

Because of the integral connection between civil and Christian marriage, the church must contend with the fact that states are now passing legislation or operating under judicial rulings that make legal marriage equality an option for two people of the same gender. Since April 2009, Iowa has been allowing two people of the same gender to marry. There are now at least five states and the District of Columbia who also allow same-gender marriage. This complicates pastoral care options. The issue comes to a head in the decision about whether teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders will officiate at marriage ceremonies of two people who have legally obtained a marriage license and whether the session will permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Although some Iowa pastors in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have declined to perform such marriages in keeping with their conscience, many others are caught in an untenable position: their conscience tells them to exercise their pastoral responsibility and perform the marriage but the church tells them to fear prosecution. Such prosecutions have already placed tremendous financial burden on presbyteries, diminishing the church’s ability to effectively evangelize and perform necessary mission work.

The issue is critical because worship is the central context of pastoral care for Christians. In our order for worship, we listen to the Word, proclaim the Word, and respond to the Word. Responding to the Word is a demonstration of the love of God for God’s people.

“The response to the proclamation of the Word is expressed in an affirmation of faith and commitment. … Response to the Word also involves acts of commitment and recognition … acts of commitment which may appropriately be included as response to the Word are (a) Christian marriage,…” (W-3.3500, W-3.3502, W-3.3503).

The church has defined marriage, first, as “… a gift God has given to all humankind …” (Book of Order, W-4.9001) and at the same time said, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” (Ibid. W-4.9001). In at least five states and the District of Columbia, this civil definition is no longer true. At the 219th General Assembly (2010), the Advisory Committee on the Constitution stated,

Teaching elders and sessions need the General Assembly’s assurance of their pastoral discretion to provide the care that their members require. This is based on the same principle as W-4.9002b, which provides that pastors are free, as their judgment dictates, not to officiate at marriages their members and others are contracting. In the absence of mandatory language in the Book of Order that would prohibit a service of Christian marriage for any two people who are legally permitted to marry, the assembly should give such assurance in the form of the proposed authoritative interpretation. The authoritative interpretation will prevent deep grief to church members who might otherwise be denied the pastoral care of the church; it will protect pastors and sessions from judicial challenge for exercising their pastoral responsibilities; in the spirit of mutual forbearance widely urged in recent years by General Assemblies and their task forces, it will promote the peace, unity, and purity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that
Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is proscriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168, Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleanness. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 884-85 of the electronic version, Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage)

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender.
II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

• Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);

• Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);

• Request to amend the Book of Order to permit same-gender marriages. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 propose amending paragraphs in the Directory for Worship that define or describe marriage: W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. Most recommend some variation on amending “a man and a woman” to “two people.”

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather proscriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. [Bruce C. Daniels, Puritans At Play: Leisure and Recreation in Colonial New England (Palgrave Macmillan, 1996), p. 118.] http://books.google.com/books?id=9iBnsq2zvSMC&pg=PA118&lpg=PA118&dq=1686+puritan+marriage&source=bl&ots=18BF-UdLi_&sig=ZWLXOY7a68bDEShgFehDJpeHGWQ&hl=en&sa=X&ei=MxdzT6XnDsl0QHHiM2wAQ&ved=0CEYQ6AEwAA#v=onepage&q=1686+%20puritan%20marriage&f=false

GAPJC's to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language prescriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “... in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

states, “Meetings [of councils] shall be conducted in accordance with the most recent edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised, except when it is in contradiction to this Constitution (Book of Order, 3.0105).

Should the assembly concur with the intent of the first part of this overture, the language proposed is clear and adequate to achieve its intent. But the concluding section on requiring a two-thirds (2/3) vote is inconsistent with our historical understanding of majority rule.

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:
Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.

Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.

Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.
ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, AND 13-10

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to provide an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 permitting clergy and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at services of Christian marriage for same-gendered persons in those states where such marriages are legal.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the PC(USA) have consistently called for equal civil rights for homosexual persons, including the same rights for same-gender couples as are enjoyed by heterosexual married couples. In both cases, the church has also called for the same responsibility of covenantal fidelity. Thus, the church has supported civil unions as one means of achieving this equality. Within its own membership, the church has offered pastoral care to same-gender couples by blessing these unions in a service of worship. However, it maintained a distinction between marriage that conferred a new status on the couple and the blessing of a civil union that existed prior to the blessing.

Because, in fact, civil unions have not guaranteed same-gender couples equal civil rights, the quest for civil marriage for same-gender couples continues. The legalization of same-gender marriage in eight states and the District of Columbia now blurs the distinction the church maintained as marriage licenses are issued to same-gender couples. Church members in same-gender, committed relationships turn to their churches and pastors to receive the same gift of marriage that the church has said “God [gives] to all humankind” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

The overtures under consideration here support the church’s commitment to civil equality and nondiscrimination. They emphasize the new importance of expressing and extending that equality into the church’s worship and pastoral care in those states that have legislated marital equality. In doing so, they recognize the complementarity that has long existed in the Reformed Tradition between the role of the state in legalizing marriage and the role of the clergy who pronounce a couple married and sign their state license. None of these items would compel pastors to officiate at same-gender marriages in violation of the church’s civil conscience.
of their conscience. None of these items would apply to states that have not legalized same-gender marriage, and none presumes to restrict a theology of marriage for the church, although the General Assembly has in the past focused on such theology through the recommended forms of marriage services.

In light of the range of theological views in the church and the continuing movement toward marriage equality in the culture, ACSWP advises that all Christians, but especially seminary professors in theology, ethics, and practical theology, study the experiences of churches in those states that have legalized same-gender marriages. We advise that seminaries host informed discussions about the meaning and consequences of achieving or denying marriage equality in the church. Whether or not commissioners feel that it is time in the church’s life for either an authoritative interpretation or a change in the definition of marriage, we hope that such substantial theological work can go forward.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 13-02.

Rationale

While ACWC does believe that allowing teaching elders to conduct marriage ceremonies of same-sex couples is a movement in the direction of progress in the church (See ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-09), we hesitate to endorse an authoritative interpretation that explicitly states also the allowance of refusal to conduct services or give use of church property. The authoritative interpretation ACWC has chosen to support in Item 13-09 certainly does allow for refusal to conduct a ceremony, as no teaching elder is forced to conduct any marriage ceremony, regardless of the sex of the couple. It simply is not explicitly stated. As the church continues to make progress on this issue as state-by-state we see acceptance of same-sex marriage increasing widely, leaving the allowance for refusal unstated will make for easier movement toward full access for same-sex couples to marriage in the church in the long run.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (See ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-09), we hesitate to endorse an authoritative interpretation that explicitly states also the allowance of refusal to conduct services or give use of church property. The authoritative interpretation ACWC has chosen to support in Item 13-09 certainly does allow for refusal to conduct a ceremony, as no teaching elder is forced to conduct any marriage ceremony, regardless of the sex of the couple. It simply is not explicitly stated. As the church continues to make progress on this issue as state-by-state we see acceptance of same-sex marriage increasing widely, leaving the allowance for refusal unstated will make for easier movement toward full access for same-sex couples to marriage in the church in the long run.

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133–134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.
There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000—From the Presbytery of Boston.

The Presbytery of Boston respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to issue the following authoritative interpretation of Section W-4.9000 in the PC(USA) Constitution:

“The 220th General Assembly (2012) declares that in the states and other jurisdictions that authorize same-gender marriage, teaching elders (ministers of the Word and Sacrament) and ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service (where jurisdictions allow) may officiate at such marriages in the context of Christian worship, and sessions may permit the use of church property for such services. This authorization does not oblige anyone to act contrary to their judgment or conscience.”

Rationale

The 218th General Assembly (2008) voted overwhelmingly (516 to 151) to “request the Stated Clerk, the General Assembly Council, and other representatives of the PC(USA) to urge state legislatures and the federal government to apply the principle of equal protection to same-gender couples and their children” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 48, 49, 258, 259). In the same vote they determined to “support congregations, sessions, and ministers of the Word and Sacrament who are seeking to extend pastoral care as well as outreach and evangelism to same-gender couples and their nontraditional families who are more and more our neighbors on our streets and our fellow members in our pews” (Ibid.) In states where the equal protection principle includes marriage for same-gender couples, it would run counter to the direction mandated by the 218th General Assembly (2008) if the state were to provide more protection than the church is willing to extend to its own members and neighbors.

Where same-gender marriage is recognized under the law, it is neither fair nor pastoral to exclude members of a congregation by declining to perform their marriage on the grounds of gender alone. In practical terms, what this authoritative interpretation means is that clergy and commissioned lay pastors will be able to exercise their pastoral responsibilities without running the risk of prosecution by the church. Such prosecutions have placed a formidable financial and spiritual burden on councils of the church.

ACC ADVICE ON

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is prescriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part 1, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168, Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

220TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2012) 1185
The existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the text of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. Most recommend some variation on amending “a man and a woman” to “two people.”

Pose amending paragraphs in the Directory for Worship that define or describe marriage: W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9005, W-4.9006. Most recommend some variation on amending “a man and a woman” to “two people.”

Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. [Bruce C. Daniels, Puritans At Play: Leisure and Recreation in Colonial New England (Palgrave Macmillan, 1996), p. 118.]

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleannesse. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 884-85 of the electronic version, Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage)

II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, to affix a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather prescriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJCs to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language prescriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

Presenting this section as a restatement of confessional standards, this overture seeks to apply to the Directory for Worship the same two-thirds (2/3) standard for amending the Confessions. Similar overtures regarding super majorities were addressed by the 205th General Assembly (1993) in Overtures 93-23 and 93-44, by the 212th General Assembly (2000) in Overture 98-7, and by the 219th General Assembly (2010) in Item 03-06. In all cases, the recommendations were defeated.

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.
In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judicatory or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result. …

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-05, Genesee Valley, includes language related to 4.9002a, who meet legal requirements of the state, and demonstrate Christian commitment

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008,

same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.
- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.
- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

> This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, AND 13-10

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to provide an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 permitting clergy and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at services of Christian marriage for same-gendered persons in those states where such marriages are legal.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10.

Rationale

achieving this equality. Within its own membership, the church has offered pastoral care to same-gender couples by blessing these unions in a service of worship. However, it maintained a distinction between marriage that conferred a new status on the couple and the blessing of a civil union that existed prior to the blessing.

Because, in fact, civil unions have not guaranteed same-gender couples equal civil rights, the quest for civil marriage for same-gender couples continues. The legalization of same-gender marriage in eight states and the District of Columbia now blurs the distinction the church maintained as marriage licenses are issued to same-gender couples. Church members in same-gender, committed relationships turn to their churches and pastors to receive the same gift of marriage that the church has said “God [gives] to all humankind” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

The overtures under consideration here support the church’s commitment to civil equality and nondiscrimination. They emphasize the new importance of expressing and extending that equality into the church’s worship and pastoral care in those states that have legislated marital equality. In doing so, they recognize the complementarity that has long existed in the Reformed Tradition between the role of the state in legalizing marriage and the role of the clergy who pronounce a couple married and sign their state license. None of these items would compel pastors to officiate at same-gender marriages in violation of their conscience. None of these items would apply to states that have not legalized same-gender marriage, and none presumes to restrict a theology of marriage for the church, although the General Assembly has in the past focused on such theology through the recommended forms of marriage services.

In light of the range of theological views in the church and the continuing movement toward marriage equality in the culture, ACSWP advises that all Christians, but especially seminary professors in theology, ethics, and practical theology, study the experiences of churches in those states that have legalized same-gender marriages. We advise that seminaries host informed discussions about the meaning and consequences of achieving or denying marriage equality in the church. Whether or not commissioners feel that it is time in the church’s life for either an authoritative interpretation or a change in the definition of marriage, we hope that such substantial theological work can go forward.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 13-03.

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-09 is applicable here as well:

The ACWC concurs with the rationale given in Item 13-09 and understands implementing this authoritative interpretation to be a movement in the direction of progress in the church for fair and equal treatment of all people regardless of sexual orientation. While we advise approval, we do so with an understanding that this is only one step in moving toward a truly just approach to same-sex couples in the church. The ACWC would still advocate for full access to the covenant of marriage blessed by the church for all couples, regardless of the law of individual states. In all things, we believe the church is called to be ahead of the government when it comes to implementing just policies.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.
There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a patchwork of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state). The marriage standards of the PC(USA) have historically assumed a congruity that no longer exists between the definition of marriage by the state and by the church: “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133–134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

Item 13-04

The assembly answered Item 13-04 by the action taken on Item 13-NB. See p. 46.

On Amending W-4.9000, Marriage—From the Presbytery of Hudson River

The Presbytery of Hudson River overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

1. Amend W-4.9001 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

2. Amend W-4.9002 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “a. In preparation for the marriage service, the teaching elder† shall provide for a discussion with the man and the woman two people to be married concerning” [The remainder of this section remains the same.]

3. Amend W-4.9004 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

   “The service begins with scriptural sentences and a brief statement of purpose. The man and the woman two people to be married shall declare their intention to enter into Christian marriage and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness. The service includes appropriate passages of Scripture, which may be interpreted in various forms of proclamation. Prayers shall be offered for the couple, for the communities which support them in this new dimension of discipleship, and for all who seek to live in faithfulness. In the name of the triune God the teaching elder† shall declare publicly that the woman and the man they are now joined in marriage.” [The remainder of this paragraph remains the same.]

4. Amend W-4.9006 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]
“A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of vows by the husband and wife two people, and the public declaration by the teaching elder† reflect the fact that the woman and man they are already married to one another according to the laws of the state.”

Rationale

Marriage is beyond gender. It refers to the commitment of two people to live beside each other with a love expressed as tenderness and justice. It refers to the deep promise to live together through the thick and thin of their journey together through the years. It refers to the mystery in which the love of God meets, is joined to and made manifest in the love of two people whose hearts are a home place to each other. The notion of marriage is demeaned by any lesser definition. Recognizing this, some states are already ahead of the church in moving the legal definition of marriage beyond gender.

Changing the definition of marriage in the Directory of Worship would allow the church and its officers the option of also recognizing the lifelong, same gender commitments that many of our members are now choosing to make. It would make it possible for the church to celebrate the love of God as it is embodied in their love for each other. In states like the six, along with the District of Columbia, which already permit gay marriage, teaching and ruling elders would be relieved of the fear of ecclesiastical charges and would be able to respond equitably and pastorally to marriage requests by all, not just some, members of their congregations. No teaching elder or session would be required to perform services of marriage that would violate conscience. Changing the Directory for Worship in this way would move the church away from fear and reprisal, and closer to its own teaching on the hospitality of God and the welcome which that implies.

The proposed change allows us to step more fully in line with the Bible and The Book of Confessions and to be the church that both our Scripture and our Constitution have continually imagined, a church open to changes that support love of God and one another (Mk. 12:28–34; Lk. 10:25–37). We join those in the early church by stepping into line behind people like Philip, who, in his encounter with the Ethiopian eunuch, was moved to overturn his previously narrow perceptions and prejudices and make the circle of God’s family much wider than his previous religious upbringing had allowed him to imagine (Acts 8:26–38) and Peter, who was given a vision that the lines he had previously drawn between clean and unclean were too narrow and had to be abandoned to embody God’s loving way (Acts 10:9 –22). And we join those who, throughout the history of our denomination, have recognized the need to move away from previous barriers in the direction of love and care.

“In [God’s] reconciling love, [God] overcomes the barriers between brothers [and sisters] and breaks down every form of discrimination… The church is called to bring all men [and women] to receive and uphold one another as persons in all relationships of life: in employment, housing, education, leisure, marriage, family, church, and the exercise of political rights…. Congregations, individuals, or groups of Christians who exclude, dominate, or patronize their fellowmen, however subtly, resist the Spirit of God and bring contempt on the faith which they profess (The Book of Confessions, 9:44, emphasis added).

The proposed changes would grant all loving couples the right to have their marriages performed in our congregations, strengthening all our communities and families, gay and straight, since they allow us to recognize the love of two hearts declaring themselves to be a home to each other, before God, with gratitude.

ACC ADVICE ON

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.’)s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is proscriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168, Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

> The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:
>
> • The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
> • Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.’s) global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather proscriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJCs to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language proscriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.
In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judicatory or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result. …

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license — and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition — and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008,

same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.
- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.
- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” and “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001 and W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” in W-4.9001 and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man,” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, AND 13-11

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, 13-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 from the presbyteries of East Iowa, Hudson River, New York City, and Redwoods overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to amend W-4.9000 to redefine Christian marriage to include covenants between persons of the same gender.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations.

Rationale

The 208th General Assembly (1996) approved the following resolution: “Affirming the Presbyterian church’s historic definition of marriage as a civil contract between a man and a woman, yet recognizing that committed same-sex partners seek equal civil liberties in a contractual relationship with all the civil rights of married couples, we urge the Office of the Stated Clerk to explore the feasibility of entering friend-of-the-court briefs and supporting legislation in favor of giving civil rights to same-sex partners” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p.122).

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved the policy Transforming Families. In its historical analysis, the policy points out that Scripture contains several forms of marriage and family, none of which is a “precise equivalent of contemporary marriage and family life” (C.1). It notes that the development of monogamous marriage took place over time in Hebrew (and other) societies. And it points out that “the Reformed tradition embraced marriage as a good for all in society, Christian or not” (C.1). As the Book of Order states, “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well being of the entire human family” (W-4.9001).

Transforming Families (http://www.pcus.org/resource/transforming-families/) also states that while the marital-biological family is a basic form of family, it is neither “exhaustive nor exclusive” as a family form, and “it does not fully exemplify God’s ordering of interpersonal life” (2). Moreover, the policy recognizes that the forms and purposes of family have evolved as God’s ordering of equal gender relationships has become clearer. In these ways, the church has acknowledged that forms of marriage and family are shaped by of historical and cultural developments. Today we would find some of the previous forms and some of the interpersonal relationships that they embodied falling short of our understanding of God’s will for humankind and human well being.

Having said this, this policy did not address specifically the question of same-gender marriage and family. It assumed without comment the previous policies of the church that called for the same protections and civil rights for same-gender families that are equal to those of married heterosexual families. Equality under the law is one principle. But the church also recognizes the importance of these protections and rights to the capacity of such families to do what good families do: nurturing children, deepening love, providing material support, caring for the young and the sick and the aged, and creating a context for growth in faith. The church has understood that same-gender couples, and homosexual persons, have the same need and desire for the pastoral care of the church. Thus, it offers the blessing of the church on same-gender unions and committed itself to the wellbeing of children in same-gender unions as it has to all children (Transforming Families, p. 31).

Finally, Transforming Families ends with a vision of a church and society “which welcomes and nurtures all persons regardless of their family circumstances” and a church that rejects “attitudes or practices that value some more highly than others - based on gender, age, class, ability, ethnic origin, sexual orientation, or any outward condition” (Recommendations, #2).

However, these policies did not include same-gender couples in the church’s understanding of marriage. The intent of Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 is to embody in the church itself an equal recognition that same-gender faithful and committed relationships are included in the gift of marriage God intends for humankind. These items set before the 220th General Assembly (2012) the question of whether the church’s commitment to equality of civil rights for same-gender persons is possible if the church itself does not receive such relationships into its body on an equal basis with opposite-gender relationships.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 13-04.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-11 is applicable here as well:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given in this overture. The practice of excluding people who are gay and lesbian from marriage has its roots in the persistence of patriarchal standards for the lives of women and men. The notion that men and maleness are superior dictates that men and women behave in particular ways that abide by the constructed rules their sex has been assigned. For this reason, same-gender loving women and men are perceived as a direct threat to the norms that patriarchy lays out, as they, in their loving, challenge the models of prescribed masculinity and femininity determined by patriarchy. Gay men are a threat as they are often perceived as “too feminine,” and lesbian women are perceived as “too masculine.”

In withholding the right to marry from same-gender loving people, the church is upholding this patriarchal standard for humanity. As a group committed to standing against patriarchy and its effects within the world and the church, ACWC advocates giving access to the commitment and covenant of marriage to same-gender loving women and men in the PC(USA). The ACWC draws particular attention to the vulnerability of lesbian women in this exclusion, as they find themselves in this and many situations excluded and marginalized both for their gender identity and sexual orientation.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133-.134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

Item 13-05

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000 to Ensure Pastoral Discretion—From the Presbytery of Genesee Valley.

The Presbytery of Genesee Valley respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to provide the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000:

“Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders authorized to conduct services of marriage, may, at their sole discretion, following the discussion required in W-4.9002a, officiate at a service of Christian marriage for two persons who meet the legal requirements of the state and whom the elder determines demonstrate sufficient commitment, responsibility, maturity, and Christian understanding. Sessions may permit the use of church property for such services. Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders may decline to conduct such services, and sessions may decline to permit the use of church property for such purposes.”

Rationale

On July 24, 2011, the State of New York extended the right to marry to couples of the same gender, joining Massachusetts, Connecticut, Iowa, Vermont, New Hampshire, and the District of Columbia. More states are expected to follow suit. Many Presbyterian churches, some in our presbytery, are receiving requests to celebrate their marriages in the Christian community from their lesbian and gay congregants, who expect to be afforded the pastoral care provided to other members.

The Directory for Worship acknowledges that marriage is a “civil contract” and therefore regulated by the state. It was written before the possibility of civil marriage between persons of the same sex was contemplated. Likewise, the 1991 General Assembly authoritative interpretation that distinguished between a “same-sex ceremony” and a marriage, the 2000 Benton decision of the GAPJC, and the 2008 Spahr decision were all addressing ceremonies that were not legal civil marriages. In this interim, when the definition of civil marriage is changing, the Constitution requires interpretation to be applied to a variety of circumstances. One of the most pressing is the pastoral crisis that results when same-sex couples ask the teaching and ruling elders of their congregation to permit and participate in their marriage services under Presbyterian church auspices, and those elders must hesitate for fear of challenge in church courts.

Worship is the central context of pastoral care for Christians:

“The worship of God in the Christian community is the foundation and context for the ministry of pastoral care as well as for the ministry of nurture in the faith” (Book of Order, W-6.4000; see also W-6.3002 and W-6.3010).

Lesbian and gay Presbyterian seeking the care of their church do not wish to provoke controversy, endanger their pastors, or embroil their congregations in judicial proceedings. Like heterosexual couples, they simply want the support of their faith community as they undertake the commitments and responsibilities of marriage. When the possibility of prosecution looms over pastors who are endeavoring to fulfill their promise to “pray for and seek to serve the people with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love” (W-4.4003h), anguish extends to the couple, the pastor, the congregation, and eventually the whole church.

Therefore we propose an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 to clarify the ambiguities it contains. Much of the section is written in permissive or advisory language. The Preface to the Book of Order states that “SHALL and IS TO BE/ARE TO BE signify practice that is mandated” while “SHOULD signifies practice that is strongly recommended” and “MAY signifies practice that is permissible but not required.” The Preface to the Directory for Worship (section b) states: “In addition to the [above] terms defined in the Preface to the Book of Order, this [Worship] directory also uses language about worship which is simply descriptive.” For example there is a logical conflict between the description of “Christian marriage” as an expression of “Christian commitment” and the allowance that one of the partners might not even be “a professing Christian” (W-4.9002a.(1)). The descriptions of Christian marriage, if prohibitive of ceremonies in which every detail does not conform to the descriptions, would forbid elders from officiating at interfaith marriages because they might, among other things, “Diminish the Christian understanding of marriage.” If W-4.9000 was intended to set normative mandatory, exclusive standards for what the PC(USA) considers marriage, then those who conduct marriages would also be at risk for allowing music that fails to “[direct] attention to God and express the faith of the church” (W-4.9005). or for allowing “flowers, decorations, and other appointments” (Ibid) that do not “reflect the integrity and simplicity of Christian life” (Ibid). There is nothing in the text of W-4.9000 that makes the “man and woman” description mandatory and the other details not mandatory. If officiating at the marriage of a same-gender couple is an offense, then any ceremony not conforming to every detail of W-4.9000, even a heterosexual marriage, is likewise an offense.

The comments of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2001: “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254). There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals.

The enactment of laws that make it possible for same-sex couples to enter into a civil contract raises the question then whether the key to the performance of marriage ceremonies, authorized by sessions, to be held in a church, and conducted by ministers or commissioned lay pastors, is the civil contract or the gender of the parties. The traditional distinctions held by the PC(USA) are no longer as clear.

Pastors and sessions need the General Assembly’s assurance of their freedom and discretion to provide the pastoral care that their members require. This freedom is based on the same principle as W-4.9002b, which provides that pastors are free, as their judgment dictates, not to officiate at marriages their members and others are contracting.

In the absence of mandatory language in the Book of Order that would prohibit a service of Christian marriage for any couple that is legally permitted to marry, the assembly should give such assurance in the form of the proposed authoritative interpretation. The authoritative interpretation will prevent deep grief to church members who might otherwise be denied the pastoral care of the church, and it will protect pastors and sessions from judicial challenge for exercising their pastoral responsibilities.

Concurrence to Item 13-05 from the Presbytery of Albany.

Concurrence to Item 13-05 from the Presbytery of Southern New England (With Additional Rationale).

Rationale

At this time, more than 11 percent of the United States’ population live in states or districts that permit same-gender marriage. Around 10 percent of PC(USA) congregations are located in those places. Additional states continue to consider expanding their definition of marriage to include same-gender couples.

Decisions by our denomination’s General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission appear to permit teaching elders to lead and otherwise participate in worship services that celebrate same-gender relationships that are not called marriages. Thus, it seems it is permitted to bless a “civil union” in those states and jurisdictions where civil law provides this, but teaching elders may not perform same-gender marriages in the places where that is available.

There is an acute dilemma for teaching elders, for congregations, and for same-gender couples that are members of PC(USA) congregations. As the Synod of the Northeast PJC decision in Boston v. Southard notes, “While the action of the Reverend Southard to join a same gender couple in ‘Christian marriage’ is a violation of the Constitution of the PC(USA), failure to do so might be viewed as a violation of other provisions of the Constitution, e.g. G-3-0401 [new F-1.0404].”

This goes to the heart of ministry, pastoral care, and Christian community:

- Individuals seeking the support of their communities of faith for their most significant personal relationships may be denied that support.
- Congregations may experience significant hurt and loss when beloved friends and neighbors are forced to turn either to churches of other denominations that will perform their marriage, to abandon the idea of marriage in the church altogether and forego the blessings of building the relationship in Christian community, or even to leave church altogether.
- Teaching elders seeking to fulfill their pastoral obligations as they in good conscience understand them may face disciplinary charges for actions authorized by the civil authority.

The requested authoritative interpretation maintains the traditional role of teaching elder in exercising discretion about the suitableness of a given relationship. Recognizing that both the civil and religious understandings of marriage have entered a time of flux and transition, the hope embodied in the requested authoritative interpretation is that individuals, sessions, and congregations be allowed to seek God’s leading in the matter of marriage without fear of disciplinary reprisal, trusting them to act in good conscience, acknowledging the human potential for error.

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

4. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, 13-11 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-04 is the most clearly worded and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is proscriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “… civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is proscriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168, Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and I Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.
Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather proscriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJCs to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language proscriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,
The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judicatory or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result. …

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.
- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.
- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “eclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, AND 13-10

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to provide an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 permitting clergy and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at services of Christian marriage for same-gendered persons in those states where such marriages are legal.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the PC(USA) have consistently called for equal civil rights for homosexual persons, including the same rights for same-gender couples as are enjoyed by heterosexual married couples. In both cases, the church has also called for the same responsibility of covenantal fidelity. Thus, the church has supported civil unions as one means of achieving this equality. Within its own membership, the church has offered pastoral care to same-gender couples by blessing these unions in a service of worship. However, it maintained a distinction between marriage that conferred a new status on the couple and the blessing of a civil union that existed prior to the blessing.

The overtures under consideration here support the church’s commitment to civil equality and nondiscrimination. They emphasize the new importance of expressing and extending that equality into the church’s worship and pastoral care in those states that have legislated marital equality. In doing so, they recognize the complementarity that has long existed in the Reformed Tradition between the role of the state in legalizing marriage and the role of the clergy who pronounce a couple married and sign their state license. None of these items would compel pastors to officiate at same-gender marriages in violation of their conscience. None of these items would apply to states that have not legalized same-gender marriage, and none presumes to restrict a theology of marriage for the church, although the General Assembly has in the past focused on such theology through the recommended forms of marriage services.

In light of the range of theological views in the church and the continuing movement toward marriage equality in the culture, ACSWP advises that all Christians, but especially seminary professors in theology, ethics, and practical theology, study the experiences of churches in those states that have legalized same-gender marriages. We advise that seminaries host informed discussions about the meaning and consequences of achieving or denying marriage equality in the church. Whether or not commissioners feel that it is time in the church’s life for either an authoritative interpretation or a change in the definition of marriage, we hope that such substantial theological work can go forward.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 13-05.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-02 is applicable here as well:

While ACWC does believe that allowing teaching elders to conduct marriage ceremonies of same-sex couples is a movement in the direction of progress in the church (See ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-09), we hesitate to endorse an authoritative interpretation that explicitly states also the allowance of refusal to conduct services or give use of church property. The authoritative interpretation ACWC has chosen to support in Item 13-09 certainly does allow for refusal to conduct a ceremony, as no teaching elder is forced to conduct any marriage ceremony, regardless of the sex of the couple. It simply is not explicitly stated. As the church continues to make progress on this issue as state-by-state we see acceptance of same-sex marriage increasing widely, leaving the allowance for refusal unstated will make for easier movement toward full access for same-sex couples to marriage in the church in the long run.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133-.134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage—From the Presbytery of New York City.

The Presbytery of New York City respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall W-4.9000 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“W-4.9001 Christian Marriage

*For Christians, marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a worship service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man between two people, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

“W-4.9002 Preparing for Marriage

“a. In preparation for the marriage service, the teaching elder† shall provide for a discussion with the man and the woman two people to be married concerning

“(1) the nature of their Christian commitment, assuring that at least one is a professing Christian,

“(2) the legal requirements of the state,

“(3) the privileges and responsibilities of Christian marriage,

... [The rest of W-4.9002 remains the same.]

“W-4.9003 Time and Place of the Service
“Christian marriage service should be celebrated in the place where the community gathers for worship. As a service of Christian worship, the marriage service is under the direction of the teaching elder† and the supervision of the session. (W-1.4004–1.4006) The marriage ordinarily takes place in a special service which focuses upon marriage as a gift of God and as an expression of the Christian life… [The rest of W-4.9003 remains the same.]

“W-4.9004 Form and Order of Service

“W-4.9006 Recognizing Civil Marriage

“A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of the vows by the husband and wife two people, and the public declaration by the teaching elder† reflect the fact that the woman and man two people are already married to one another according to the laws of the state.”

Rationale

Several states have authorized the marriage of two people of the same gender. Although some pastors in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have declined to perform such marriages in keeping with their conscience, many others are caught in an untenable position: their conscience tells them to exercise their pastoral responsibility and perform the marriage.

The biblical tradition does not present one single model of marriage. Biblical testimony and clear commandments concerning marriage are outdated (unless we want to resurrect polygamy in tribal society or the even more obscure institution of levirate marriage).

The Reformers emphatically declared and defended the civil nature of institution of marriage. They dismissed the notion of the sacramental nature of marriage. Thus within the protestant theology the use of the term “Christian marriage” represents a clear example of incoherent language.

Civil authorities in several states make it legal for the same gender couples to marry. The Book of Order should respect and reflect this change in society and make appropriate changes in its language thus:

1. Following the biblical tradition in its mirroring of the development in a society and
2. Embracing the reformation principle of regarding the civil nature of institution of marriage.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is prescriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168, Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleannesse. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131).

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather proscriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJC to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language proscriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters ...” (F-3.0202), “... in councils of regular gradation ...” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008,

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.

- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.

- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex marriage. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.
Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, AND 13-11

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, 13-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 from the presbyteries of East Iowa, Hudson River, New York City, and Redwoods overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to amend W-4.9000 to redefine Christian marriage to include covenants between persons of the same gender.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations.

Rationale

The 208th General Assembly (1996) approved the following resolution: “Affirming the Presbyterian church’s historic definition of marriage as a civil contract between a man and a woman, yet recognizing that committed same-sex partners seek equal civil liberties in a contractual relationship with all the civil rights of married couples, we urge the Office of the Stated Clerk to explore the feasibility of entering friend-of-the-court briefs and supporting legislation in favor of giving civil rights to same-sex partners” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p.122).
The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved the policy Transforming Families. In its historical analysis, the policy points out that Scripture contains several forms of marriage and family, none of which is a “precise equivalent of contemporary marriage and family life” (C.1). It notes that the development of monogamous marriage took place over time in Hebrew (and other) societies. And it points out that “the Reformed tradition embraced marriage as a good for all in society, Christian or not” (C.1). As the Book of Order states, “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well being of the entire human family” (W-4.9001).

Transforming Families (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/transforming-families/) also states that while the marital-biological family is a basic form of family, it is neither “exhaustive nor exclusive” as a family form, and “it does not fully exemplify God’s ordering of interpersonal life” (2). Moreover, the policy recognizes that the forms and purposes of family have evolved as God’s ordering of equal gender relationships has become clearer. In these ways, the church has acknowledged that forms of marriage and family are shaped by of historical and cultural developments. Today we would find some of the previous forms and some of the interpersonal relationships that they embodied falling short of our understanding of God’s will for humankind and human well being.

Having said this, this policy did not address specifically the question of same-gender marriage and family. It assumed without comment the previous policies of the church that called for the same protections and civil rights for same-gender families that are equal to those of married heterosexual families. Equality under the law is one principle. But the church also recognizes the importance of these protections and rights to the capacity of such families to do what good families do: nurturing children, deepening love, providing material support, caring for the young and the sick and the aged, and creating a context for growth in faith. The church has understood that same-gender couples, and homosexual persons, have the same need and desire for the pastoral care of the church. Thus, it offers the blessing of the church on same-gender unions and committed itself to the wellbeing of children in same-gender unions as it has to all children (Transforming Families, p. 31).

Finally, Transforming Families ends with a vision of a church and society “which welcomes and nurtures all persons regardless of their family circumstances” and a church that rejects “attitudes or practices that value some more highly than others -based on gender, age, class, ability, ethnic origin, sexual orientation, or any outward condition” (Recommendations, #2).

However, these policies did not include same-gender couples in the church’s understanding of marriage. The intent of Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 is to embody in the church itself an equal recognition that same-gender faithful and committed relationships are included in the gift of marriage God intends for humankind. These items set before the 220th General Assembly (2012) the question of whether the church’s commitment to equality of civil rights for same-gender persons is possible if the church itself does not receive such relationships into its body on an equal basis with opposite-gender relationships.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 13-06.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-11 is applicable here as well:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given in this overture. The practice of excluding people who are gay and lesbian from marriage has its roots in the persistence of patriarchal standards for the lives of women and men. The notion that men and maleness are superior dictates that men and women behave in particular ways that abide by the constructed rules their sex has been assigned. For this reason, same-gender loving women and men are perceived as a direct threat to the norms that patriarchy lays out, as they, in their loving, challenge the models of prescribed masculinity and femininity determined by patriarchy. Gay men are a threat as they are often perceived as “too feminine,” and lesbian women are perceived as “too masculine.”

In withholding the right to marry from same-gender loving people, the church is upholding this patriarchal standard for humanity. As a group committed to standing against patriarchy and its effects within the world and the church, ACWC advocates giving access to the commitment and covenant of marriage to same-gender loving women and men in the PC(USA). The ACWC draws particular attention to the vulnerability of lesbian women in this exclusion, as they find themselves in this and many situations excluded and marginalized both for their gender identity and sexual orientation.

As we watch as state by state people in the U.S. are standing against this form of discrimination, we challenge the church to act now with a prophetic voice that joins in this justice movement, rather than responding after marriage equality has been established across the country.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people.” Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a patchwork of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state). The marriage standards of the PC(USA) have historically assumed a congruity that no longer exists between the definition of marriage by the state and by the church: “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133–134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery unifying a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

On an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9001, Christian Marriage—From the Presbytery of Mississippi.

The Presbytery of Mississippi overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to provide the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001:

“When W-4.9001 speaks of marriage, it is expounding how marriage is defined and understood by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), under the authority of the Scriptures and guided by the confessions. It is not merely describing how marriage was practiced in any particular society at any particular time. Therefore, this definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship is binding upon teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders authorized to perform Christian marriages. ‘Officers of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) who are authorized to perform marriages shall not state, imply, or represent that a same sex ceremony is a marriage because under W-4.9001 a same sex ceremony is not and cannot be a marriage” (Spahr v. Presbytery of Redwoods, 2008). A change in the definition of civil marriage under state law does not alter the definition of marriage under the PC(USA) Constitution (Southard v. Presbytery of Boston, 2011). The church’s definition of marriage may be changed only through amendment of both W-4.9001 and the confessional passages upon which it is based.”

Rationale

The church traces its understanding of marriage especially to the words of Jesus in Matthew 19:4–6/Mark 10:6–8. Asked a question regarding divorce, Jesus pointed back to passages in Genesis 1 and 2 and expounded God’s design for marriage: “Have you not read that the one who made them at the beginning ‘made them male and female,’ and said, ‘For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh’? So they are no longer two, but one flesh. Therefore what God has joined together, let no one separate” (Mt. 19:4–6).

This divine design for marriage is prior to the existence of any church or any state. The church is bound to this understanding of marriage that comes from Jesus, its Lord. States may choose to grant legal benefits of marriage to various combinations of persons; however, no state has the power to redefine marriage as God designed it. Nor can any state action alter the church’s understanding of marriage, which derives from God’s Word rather than state law.

The Second Helvetic Confession (5.246) states: “For marriage (which is the medicine of incontinency, and continency itself) was instituted by the Lord God himself, who blessed it most bountifully, and willed man and woman to cleave one to the other inseparably, and to live together in complete love and concord (Matt. 19:4 ff).”

The Westminster Confession of Faith (6.131) teaches, “Christian marriage is an institution ordained of God, blessed by our Lord Jesus Christ, established and sanctified for the happiness and welfare of mankind, into which spiritual and physical union one man and one woman enter ….” It also affirms, “Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live” (6.133).

The Confession of 1967 (9.47) declares: “The relationship between man and woman exemplifies in a basic way God’s ordering of the interpersonal life for which he created mankind. Anarchy in sexual relationships is a symptom of man’s alienation from God, his neighbor, and himself.” It instructs, “The church, as the household of God, is called to lead men out of this alienation into the responsible freedom of the new life in Christ. Reconciled to God, each person has joy in and respect for his own humanity and that of other persons; a man and a woman are enabled to marry, to commit themselves to a mutually shared life, and to respond to each other in sensitive and lifelong concern; parents receive the grace to care for children in love and to nurture their individuality. The church comes under the judgment of God and invites rejection by man when it fails to lead men and women into the full meaning of life together, or withholds the compassion of Christ from those caught in the moral confusion of our time.”

Based on these confessional teachings, the Book of Order (W-4.9001) defines marriage thus: “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith” (W-4.9001).

This definition is far more than a neutral description of social reality—what marriage may have been in a particular society at a particular point in history. It is a normative description of what marriage is intended to be, according to God’s design.

This passage in the Directory for Worship reflects distinctive Reformed teaching that stood and stands in conscious contrast to other extant understandings of marriage. Contrary to Roman Catholics, the Reformers insisted that marriage should be a civil contract under the jurisdiction of civil courts, rather than a sacrament under the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical courts. Contrary to some radical Anabaptists, the Reformers maintained that marriage could only be between one husband and one wife—not multiple wives.

In opposition to those who might view marriage as a narrowly Christian phenomenon, the Reformers saw marriage as a gift of God’s common grace revealed in every society. In opposition to those who might reduce marriage to a merely human contract, they esteemed it also as a covenant before God. In opposition to those who might regard marriage as simply a private bond between two individuals, the Reformers saw it as a social institution lived out in the community that witnessed the vows.

Likewise, the repetition of the phrase “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man” in W-4.9001 reflects the understanding that the “one flesh” union of the two created sexes is an essential feature of marriage as God designed. The Reformers, with every previous and subsequent generation of Christians, would have placed relationships between members of the same sex under the category of friendship rather than marriage.

A series of authoritative interpretations of the PC(USA) Constitution reinforces these same distinctions between marriage and other relationships. A 1991 authoritative interpretation of the General Assembly stated that “it would not be proper for a minister of Word and Sacrament to perform a same sex union ceremony that the minister determines to be the same as a marriage ceremony.”

A 2000 General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) decision (Benton v. Presbytery of Hudson River) allowed same-sex union ceremonies, but with the proviso: “Ministers should not appropriate specific liturgical forms from services of Christian marriage or services recognizing civil marriage in the conduct of such ceremonies. They should also instruct same-sex couples that the service to be conducted does not constitute a marriage and should not be held out as such.”

In 2008, the GAPJC ruled (Spahr v. Presbytery of Redwoods): “Officers of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) who are authorized to perform marriages shall not state, imply, or represent that a same sex ceremony is a marriage because under W-4.9001 a same sex ceremony is not and cannot be a marriage.”

A 2011 GAPJC decision concerned a PC(USA) minister officiating at a ceremony between two women in Massachusetts, where their union was recognized as a marriage under civil law. The GAPJC ruled unanimously: “The question before this Commission, then, is whether the Massachusetts law defining this relationship as a legal marriage changes the impact of the definitions in W-4.9001. This Commission holds that it does not. While the PC(USA) is free to amend its definition of marriage, a change in state law does not amend the Book of Order. It is the responsibility of the church, following the processes provided in the Constitution for amendment, to define what the PC(USA) recognizes as a ‘Christian marriage.’ Consequently, Spahr’s holding, ‘By the definition in W-4.9001, a same sex ceremony can never be a marriage,’ remains in effect.”

Since the PC(USA)’s definition of marriage is expressed in both parts of its constitution, The Book of Confessions and the Book of Order, any attempt to change that definition would necessarily involve amendments to both parts. Changing one part without making corresponding changes in the other part would generate contradictions, confusion, and disorder that would ill serve the church. A change of any magnitude in the church’s doctrine of marriage should occur only through the rigorous process of confessional amendment, requiring careful deliberation at multiple General Assemblies and in every presbytery.

ACC ADVICE ON

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.’s) current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is prescriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “… civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is prescriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.
The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168, Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue,
II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);

- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);

- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutive definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“... a man and a woman ...”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather proscriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.
Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJCs to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which itself the what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language prescriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters ...” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation ...” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

> The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.
- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.
- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06: On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, and W-4.9004 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of New York City.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overtire would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man,” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overtire would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overtire also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overtire also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overtire seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP Advice and Counsel on Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13, from the Presbyteries of Mississippi, Charleston Atlantic, and Foothills, respectively, overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to take actions affirming the church’s definition of marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman. Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001; Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9001 and require a super-majority vote by presbyteries to change W-4.9001.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 be disapproved.

Rationale

Section W-4.9000 already and clearly defines marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman. Therefore, there is no need for the actions being proposed. To support the intent of these items, commissioners need to disapprove other overtures that would expand or change the definition of marriage.

Item 13-13 seeks to make any amendments to W-4.9001 subject to a super majority vote of two-thirds of the presbyteries. This would subject one part of the Book of Order to a standard not required by other parts, such as, for example, the constitutional questions for ordination. In fact, it would elevate this issue to the same two-thirds majority required for adopting new confessions of the church. Such a change violates our historical understanding of majority rule. As the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has stated, the issue of using a super majority vote for amending various provisions of the Constitution has arisen and been disapproved a number of times in the past. It is likely that acceptance of such a standard in this case, or other cases, would lead inevitably to the desire of others to apply a super majority standard to other constitutional provisions they prefer, leading to the weakening, or abandonment, of the fundamental principle of majority rule in the Reformed Tradition.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 13-07.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-11 is applicable here as well:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given in this overture. The practice of excluding people who are gay and lesbian from marriage has its roots in the persistence of patriarchal standards for the lives of women and men. The notion that men and maleness are superior dictates that men and women behave in particular ways that abide by the constructed rules their sex has been assigned. For this reason, same-gender loving women and men are perceived as a direct threat to the norms that patriarchy lays out, as they, in their loving, challenge the models of prescribed masculinity and femininity determined by patriarchy. Gay men are a threat as they are often perceived as “too feminine,” and lesbian women are perceived as “too masculine.”

In withholding the right to marry from same-gender loving people, the church is upholding this patriarchal standard for humanity. As a group committed to standing against patriarchy and its effects within the world and the church, ACWC advocates giving access to the commitment and covenant of marriage to same-gender loving women and men in the PC(USA). The ACWC draws particular attention to the vulnerability of lesbian women in this exclusion, as they find themselves in this and many situations excluded and marginalized both for their gender identity and sexual orientation.

As we watch as state by state people in the U.S. are standing against this form of discrimination, we challenge the church to act now with a prophetic voice that joins in this justice movement, rather than responding after marriage equality has been established across the country.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a patchwork of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state). The marriage standards of the PC(USA) have historically assumed a congruity that no longer exists between the definition of marriage by the state and by the church: “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133-.134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000—From the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse.

The Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to provide the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000:

“Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may exercise pastoral discretion when asked to officiate at such a ceremony for two people who have obtained a civil marriage license, and sessions may permit the use of church property for such services. This authorization does not oblige any elder to act contrary to his or her judgment or conscience.”

Rationale

At issue is the Presbyterian understanding of the nature of Christian marriage and a pastor’s and session’s ability to extend appropriate pastoral care. The report of the Special Committee on Civil Union and Christian Marriage, which the 219th General Assembly (2010) approved and commended to the church, offers important background to the biblical, theological, historical, cultural, and pastoral issues involved here.

The following brief observations support the authoritative interpretation requested above:

- The Bible reflects many patterns and forms of legal, religiously approved marital relationships.¹ The nostalgically remembered pattern of marriage of 1940s America cannot be taken as normative from a biblical or theological point of view.

- The understanding of marriage has changed through the years and was often geared more to property rights or political advantage than to a mutual, loving relationship.²

- Marriage is a contract regulated and licensed by the state.³ This was recognized in the ancient church and in Protestant churches since the Reformation.⁴

- There are legitimate differences of interpretation of the passages regarding homosexual relationship in the Bible.⁵ The present regulation forces Presbyterian elders to act based on one interpretation, with which many disagree as a matter of conscience.

- Jesus, in his public ministry, broke down the barriers that separated people. He identified with those who were outcasts and marginalized by society. The gays and lesbians are considered outsiders by many today. The church needs to witness to the inclusive love of Jesus for all people.⁶

- To prohibit clergy and congregations from fulfilling a legitimate request for pastoral services binds the conscience of clergy and prevents them from fulfilling their pastoral responsibilities.

- In 2010, the presbyteries approved Amendment A allowing persons in same-sex relationships to be ordained. These church members should be allowed to be married if the state issues them a marriage license and their teaching elder determines that their marriage is advisable.

The statement restricting marriage to “one man and one woman” addresses polygamy in 17th century England. The statement that marriage is “between a man and a woman” reflects conventions of the mid 20th century and is descriptive, not prescriptive.

In light of the above we believe positive action on this overture is warranted.

If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-07 and 13-12 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve the language of Item 13-07, but advises that the final sentence of the item should be stricken as it is inconsistent with constitutional provisions regarding authoritative interpretations and amendments.

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit’’ (F-1.0203).
The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is prescriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “… civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is prescriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

13 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CIVIL UNION AND MARRIAGE ISSUES

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168, Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of mankind with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleanness. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131).

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather prescriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJC to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language prescriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

> The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judicatory or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result.

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not obligate anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.

- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.
Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPIC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overtue would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overtue would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overtue would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, AND 13-10

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to provide an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 permitting clergy and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at services of Christian marriage for same-gendered persons in those states where such marriages are legal.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the PC(USA) have consistently called for equal civil rights for homosexual persons, including the same rights for same-gender couples as are enjoyed by heterosexual married couples. In both cases, the church has also called for the same responsibility of covenantal fidelity. Thus, the church has supported civil unions as one means of achieving this equality. Within its own membership, the church has offered pastoral care to same-gender couples by blessing these unions in a service of worship. However, it maintained a distinction between marriage that conferred a new status on the couple and the blessing of a civil union that existed prior to the blessing.

Because, in fact, civil unions have not guaranteed same-gender couples equal civil rights, the quest for civil marriage for same-gender couples continues. The legalization of same-gender marriage in eight states and the District of Columbia now blurs the distinction the church maintained as marriage licenses are issued to same-gender couples. Church members in same-gender, committed relationships turn to their churches and pastors to receive the same gift of marriage that the church has said “God [gives] to all humankind” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

The overtures under consideration here support the church’s commitment to civil equality and nondiscrimination. They emphasize the new importance of expressing and extending that equality into the church’s worship and pastoral care in those states that have legislated marital equality. In doing so, they recognize the complementarity that has long existed in the Reformed Tradition between the role of the state in legalizing marriage and the role of the clergy who pronounce a couple married and sign their state license. None of these items would compel pastors to officiate at same-gender marriages in violation of their conscience. None of these items would apply to states that have not legalized same-gender marriage, and none presumes to restrict a theology of marriage for the church, although the General Assembly has in the past focused on such theology through the recommended forms of marriage services.
In light of the range of theological views in the church and the continuing movement toward marriage equality in the culture, ACSWP advises that all Christians, but especially seminary professors in theology, ethics, and practical theology, study the experiences of churches in those states that have legalized same-gender marriages. We advise that seminaries host informed discussions about the meaning and consequences of achieving or denying marriage equality in the church. Whether or not commissioners feel that it is time in the church’s life for either an authoritative interpretation or a change in the definition of marriage, we hope that such substantial theological work can go forward.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 13-08.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-02 is applicable here as well:

While ACWC does believe that allowing teaching elders to conduct marriage ceremonies of same-sex couples is a movement in the direction of progress in the church (See ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-09), we hesitate to endorse an authoritative interpretation that explicitly states also the allowance of refusal to conduct services or give use of church property. The authoritative interpretation ACWC has chosen to support in Item 13-09 certainly does allow for refusal to conduct a ceremony, as no teaching elder is forced to conduct any marriage ceremony, regardless of the sex of the couple. It simply is not explicitly stated. As the church continues to make progress on this issue as state-by-state we see acceptance of same-sex marriage increasing widely, leaving the allowance for refusal unstated will make for easier movement toward full access for same-sex couples to marriage in the church in the long run.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a patchwork of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state). The marriage standards of the PC(USA) have historically assumed a congruity that no longer exists between the definition of marriage by the state and by the church: “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133–134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.
There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

Item 13-09

[The assembly answered Item 13-09 by the action taken on Item 13-NB. See pp. 46, 47.]

On Approving an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore hereby overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000:

“The Constitution of the PC(USA) refers to marriage as involving ‘a couple,’ ‘a man and a woman,’ and ‘a woman and a man’ (all in W-4.9000). This wording was chosen when all legal marriages in the United States involved a couple that was, in fact, a man and a woman. However, the first sentence of W-4.9001 makes it clear that: ‘Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.’ That section continues with ‘Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.’ That statement, in a number of jurisdictions in the United States, and in a number of other nations, is no longer correct. Marriage may be a civil contract between a man and a man or between a woman and a woman, just as it may be a contract between a man and a woman. It is clear in the second sentence of W-4.9001 that the PC(USA) recognizes the importance of the civil definition of marriage. As such, in those jurisdictions that recognize same-sex marriage, the Book of Order must be understood to mean two persons who may be legally married.”

Rationale

From the earliest days of the Christian church we have tried to balance spiritual authority with civil authority. In Mark 12:17 Jesus guides us with the words: “Give to the emperor the things that are the emperor’s and to God the things that are God’s.” Further on in the New Testament, we find the Apostle Paul offering guidance to the early Christians who are still struggling with this issue as they faced a hostile Roman Empire: “Let every person be subject to the governing authorities; for there is no authority except from God, and those authorities that exist have been instituted by God. Therefore whoever resists authority resists what God has appointed, and those who resist will incur judgment” (Rom. 13:1–2). Even this does not provide easy answers when we are faced with a government whose values may be very different and even antagonistic to our Christian values. Nevertheless, the scriptural direction seems to be towards being subject to the laws of the state as much as we are able.

As we seek to live peacefully and productively together on this side of the Kingdom of God, we know that civil authority is a necessity. And so we try to find a balance: we try to honor and respect civil authority as we continually work to advance God’s will in those areas of life where civil authority may seem to work against God’s intention.

Our Presbyterian (U.S.A.) Constitution strikes this balance in several different places, including within the definition of marriage. It defines marriage as both a “gift from God for all humankind” and “a civil contract.” Further, the case could be made that, as it stands now in the Book of Order, there is no marriage without a civil contract. Participation by ministers of the Word and Sacrament and local congregations will add necessary value to a Christian marriage through prayer, through witness by the community of faith, and through continuing pastoral care. But without the civil contract there is no marriage.

At this point in our history, we need a meaningful and authoritative interpretation regarding the definition of marriage by civil authorities as compared to the definition of marriage by the church. How do we strike the balance between spiritual and civil authority that is so strongly encouraged by Jesus and the Apostle Paul?

Currently, marriage licenses are issued to same gender couples in six U.S. states (Connecticut, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, and Vermont) and the District of Columbia. In other states, civil union licenses are issued to same-gender couples. The congregations and pastors in these places find themselves trying to balance honor of civil authority (which defines marriage as between any two people) and the requirements of church law. Even more importantly, these congregations and pastors seek to balance civil and religious laws with compassionate and genuine pastoral care for members of their congregation. Same-gender couples are coming to our churches with state-issued marriage licenses in hand, asking us to... give to them an equal level of respect and pastoral care as we give to the opposite-gender couples in our congregations. They are asking us to honor our baptismal vows to support and nurture them in their life together.

As the civil definition of marriage rapidly changes beneath our feet, there has been an assumption by some in the church that we balance civil and religious authorities best when we insist that religious tradition trumps civil law. Unfortunately, that assumption is neither pastoral nor biblical. This authoritative interpretation seeks to offer a balance that is more in line with changing civil laws regarding marriage. Let us provide a thoughtful, biblical, and compassionate interpretation for a section of the Book of Order that no longer accurately reflects civil law in our country.

ACC ADVICE ON

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.’s) current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is prescriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “… civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is prescriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: [https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168], Minority report from the General Assembly committee: [https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169])

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleannesse. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 884-85 of the electronic version, Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage)

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See [http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx] for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variety in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. Daniels, Puritans At Play: Leisure and Recreation in Colonial New England (Palgrave Macmillan, 1996), p. 118.] [http://books.google.com/books?id=9ijnj2yvSMC&pg=PA118&lpg=PA118&dq=1686+puritan+marriage&source=bl&ots=18BF-UdLi_&sig=ZWLXOY7abBDEShgFeHDJpEHgwOQ&hl=en&sa=X&ei=MxdzT6XnDsLa0QHhiM2wAQ&ved=0CEYQ6AEwAA#v=onepage&q=1686%20puritan%20marriage&f=false]

II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:
Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);

Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);

Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Request to amend the Book of Order to permit same-gender marriages. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 propose amending paragraphs in the Directory for Worship that define or describe marriage: W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. Most recommend some variation on amending “a man and a woman” to “two people.”

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather proscriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJC to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.
B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language prescriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judicatory or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result.

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-05, Genesee Valley, includes language related to 4.9002a, who meet legal requirements of the state, and demonstrate Christian commitment
Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience.

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them.

Item 13-10, Redwoods, language does not prohibit officiating at marriage of same-gender couple.

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.
- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.
- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

be,” “are to be”) in sentences describing a couple as a man and a woman, it is not mandated that the couple be a man and a woman. Previous authoritative interpretations (e.g. Spahr) appear to be based on the language of the Preface that the language “between a man and a woman” “… set standards and presents norms for the conduct of worship in the life of congregations and … councils. …”

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, AND 13-10

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to provide an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 permitting clergy and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at services of Christian marriage for same-gendered persons in those states where such marriages are legal.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the PC(USA) have consistently called for equal civil rights for homosexual persons, including the same rights for same-gender couples as are enjoyed by heterosexual married couples. In both cases, the church has also called for the same responsibility of covenantal fidelity. Thus, the church has supported civil unions as one means of achieving this equality. Within its own membership, the church has offered pastoral care to same-gender couples by blessing these unions in a service of worship. However, it maintained a distinction between marriage that conferred a new status on the couple and the blessing of a civil union that existed prior to the blessing.

Because, in fact, civil unions have not guaranteed same-gender couples equal civil rights, the quest for civil marriage for same-gender couples continues. The legalization of same-gender marriage in eight states and the District of Columbia now blurs the distinction the church maintained as marriage licenses are issued to same-gender couples. Church members in same-gender, committed relationships turn to their churches and pastors to receive the same gift of marriage that the church has said “God [gives] to all humankind” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

The overtures under consideration here support the church’s commitment to civil equality and nondiscrimination. They emphasize the new importance of expressing and extending that equality into the church’s worship and pastoral care in those states that have legislated marital equality. In doing so, they recognize the complementarity that has long existed in the Reformed Tradition between the role of the state in legalizing marriage and the role of the clergy who pronounce a couple married and sign their state license. None of these items would compel pastors to officiate at same-gender marriages in violation of their conscience. None of these items would apply to states that have not legalized same-gender marriage, and none presumes to restrict a theology of marriage for the church, although the General Assembly has in the past focused on such theology through the recommended forms of marriage services.

In light of the range of theological views in the church and the continuing movement toward marriage equality in the culture, ACSWP advises that all Christians, but especially seminary professors in theology, ethics, and practical theology, study the experiences of churches in those states that have legalized same-gender marriages. We advise that seminaries host informed discussions about the meaning and consequences of achieving or denying marriage equality in the church. Whether or not commissioners feel that it is time in the church’s life for either an authoritative interpretation or a change in the definition of marriage, we hope that such substantial theological work can go forward.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 13-09.
The ACWC concurs with the rationale given in Item 13-09 and understands implementing this authoritative interpretation to be a movement in the direction of progress in the church for fair and equal treatment of all people regardless of sexual orientation. While we advise approval, we do so with an understanding that this is only one step in moving toward a truly just approach to same-sex couples in the church. The ACWC would still advocate for full access to the covenant of marriage blessed by the church for all couples, regardless of the law of individual states. In all things, we believe the church is called to be ahead of the government when it comes to implementing just policies.

GAMC COMMENT ON

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly.

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a patchwork of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state). The marriage standards of the PC(USA) have historically assumed a congruity that no longer exists between the definition of marriage by the state and by the church: “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133-134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

Item 13-10

[The assembly answered Item 13-10 by the action taken on Item 13-NB. See pp. 46, 47.]

On Issuing an Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000—From the Presbytery of Redwoods.

The Presbytery of the Redwoods overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to provide the following authoritative interpretation of the provisions of W-4.9000:
“The provisions of the Directory for Worship related to marriage (W-4.9001 and following) by their terms do not prohibit a teaching elder (also referred to as a minister of Word and Sacrament) from officiating at a marriage service of a same-gender couple.”

Rationale

This overture clarifies that the provisions of the Directory for Worship related to marriage—by their terms—do not prohibit a teaching elder/minister of Word and Sacrament from officiating at a marriage service of a same-gender couple. The overture seeks to provide clarity in response to disciplinary proceedings that have been brought against faithful teaching elders/ ministers of Word and Sacrament who have celebrated the marriages of same-gender couples, consistent with their constitutional responsibilities of pastoral care, inclusion, and non-discrimination, and consistent with their understanding of the Gospel. Those disciplinary proceedings have invoked W-4.9001 as a disciplinary offense, even though that section contains no mandatory or prohibitive language. The cost to the church is the prosecution—with no basis in the plain language of the Constitution—of pastors who are faithfully living into their responsibilities under the Constitution and Gospel.

The provisions of the Directory for Worship related to marriage are descriptive, and not prohibitive. As five members of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission have recently explained, “W-4.9001 is an introductory narrative for the whole section on marriage, outlining its biblical and theological characteristics as background to provisions of pastoral practice and nurture. Its content serves to establish a progression of four theological claims (gift, civil contract, covenant, commitment) as a foundation for the church’s general understanding of marriage.” See Southard v. Presbyterian Church (GAPJC, February 7, 2011). They have further explained that “the language in [the marriage provisions] is not obviously legislative, in the sense of providing regulatory lines that define or proscribe behavior.”

Section W-4.9001 contains four descriptive statements describing marriage as a gift, a civil contract, a covenant, and a lifelong commitment. None of these descriptive statements contains or constitutes a prohibition or mandatory standard. Section W-4.9001 is neither a mandatory nor a prohibitive directive. Moreover, this section of the Directory for Worship does not mention or address the marriage of same-gender couples. Neither does it prohibit a minister of Word and Sacrament from celebrating a legally sanctioned marriage in a service of Christian worship.

Section W-4.9001 contains none of the language that the Book of Order instructs must be present to set forth a mandate or a prohibition. Because this principle is so fundamental, it is captured on the first pages of the Book of Order: “In this Book of Order (1) SHALL and IS TO BE ARE TO BE signify practice that is mandated; (2) SHOULD signifies practice that is strongly recommended; (3) IS APPROPRIATE signifies practice that is commended as suitable; (4) MAY signifies practice that is permissible but not required” (Book of Order, Preface, [emphasis and caps in original]). Indeed, the GAPJC not long ago affirmed that the phrase “should not” in our polity “is not prohibitive” (Session of Second Presbyterian Church v. Eastern Oklahoma Presbytery, Remedial Case 217-5, at p. 4).

With respect to the performance of same-gender marriages, the Directory for Worship contains no injunction, such as “marriages ARE TO BE performed only between a man and a woman” or “ministers SHALL NOT perform same gender marriages.” Indeed, all efforts to amend the Constitution to add such prohibitory language—and there have been many such attempts—have been voted down by the majority of commissioners or presbyteries. At the 219th General Assembly (2010), the assembly declined to consider such prohibitory language, along with all other overtures that sought to amend or clarify the language of the Directory of Worship’s marriage provisions.

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does assign to teaching elders/ministers of Word and Sacrament the responsibility for pastoral care, and repeatedly advocates and mandates inclusion and the full participation of all people in the life and care of the church. Prohibiting lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) women and men from celebrating their marriages in services of Christian worship cuts them off from the pastoral care of the community that is required by our faith and our Constitution. This overture asks the General Assembly to clarify that the plain language of the provisions of the Directory for Worship related to marriage (W-4.9001 and following) do not prohibit this pastoral care—and specifically, that they do not prohibit a teaching elder (also referred to as a minister of Word and Sacrament) from officiating at a marriage service of a same-gender couple, as the couple and their families seek to celebrate marriage as a gift from God honored in Christian community.

Endnotes

1. The entire section states: “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.”

2. Such efforts, for example, included a 1994 proposed amendment to W-4.9001 to say it was “not permitted for ministers to participate in the blessing of any same sex unions”; and similar failed amendments regarding the definition of marriage in 1995, 2000, 2006 and 2008.

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is prescriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”
Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “… civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is proscriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that questions about W-4.9000 and its relationship to same-gender couples have been addressed to the General Assembly since 1991. Increasing societal acceptance of same-gender couples, laws enacted by some states allowing marriage by same-gender couples, and our own denomination’s struggles over ordination standards have all contributed to the increase of items before the General Assembly seeking change, definition, or interpretation of this section of the Directory for Worship. The church’s concerns for the pastoral care of its members also contribute to the frequency and urgency of these questions. The appointment of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage (2008) and the request for the change in the Board of Pensions policy regarding benefits for same-gender couples are an indicator of the urgency of these matters.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Mar-
As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of mankind with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleanness. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 884-85 of the electronic version, Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage)

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. [Bruce C. Daniels, Puritans At Play: Leisure and Recreation in Colonial New England (Palgrave Macmillan, 1996), p. 118.]

II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.
Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather prescriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJCs to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language prescriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253). There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.
- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.
- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex marriage. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff and some states. Currently six states and the District of Columbia recognize same-gender marriages as legal unions; these overtures would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to perform same-gender marriages in these states. Any change in the definition of marriage in state law does not amend the church’s constitution.

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of New York City.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man,” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous Al’s of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, AND 13-10

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to provide an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 permitting clergy and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at services of Christian marriage for same-gendered persons in those states where such marriages are legal.
The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the PC(USA) have consistently called for equal civil rights for homosexual persons, including the same rights for same-gender couples as are enjoyed by heterosexual married couples. In both cases, the church has also called for the same responsibility of covenantal fidelity. Thus, the church has supported civil unions as one means of achieving this equality. Within its own membership, the church has offered pastoral care to same-gender couples by blessing these unions in a service of worship. However, it maintained a distinction between marriage that conferred a new status on the couple and the blessing of a civil union that existed prior to the blessing.

Because, in fact, civil unions have not guaranteed same-gender couples equal civil rights, the quest for civil marriage for same-gender couples continues. The legalization of same-gender marriage in eight states and the District of Columbia now blurs the distinction the church maintained as marriage licenses are issued to same-gender couples. Church members in same-gender, committed relationships turn to their churches and pastors to receive the same gift of marriage that the church has said “God [gives] to all humankind” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

The overtures under consideration here support the church’s commitment to civil equality and nondiscrimination. They emphasize the new importance of expressing and extending that equality into the church’s worship and pastoral care in those states that have legislated marital equality. In doing so, they recognize the complementarity that has long existed in the Reformed Tradition between the role of the state in legalizing marriage and the role of the clergy who pronounce a couple married and sign their state license. None of these items would compel pastors to officiate at same-gender marriages in violation of their conscience. None of these items would apply to states that have not legalized same-gender marriage, and none presumes to restrict a theology of marriage for the church, although the General Assembly has in the past focused on such theology through the recommended forms of marriage services.

In light of the range of theological views in the church and the continuing movement toward marriage equality in the culture, ACSWP advises that all Christians, but especially seminary professors in theology, ethics, and practical theology, study the experiences of churches in those states that have legalized same-gender marriages. We advise that seminaries host informed discussions about the meaning and consequences of achieving or denying marriage equality in the church. Whether or not commissioners feel that it is time in the church’s life for either an authoritative interpretation or a change in the definition of marriage, we hope that such substantial theological work can go forward.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 13-10.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-09 is applicable here as well:

The ACWC concurs with the rationale given in Item 13-09 and understands implementing this authoritative interpretation to be a movement in the direction of progress in the church for fair and equal treatment of all people regardless of sexual orientation. While we advise approval, we do so with an understanding that this is only one step in moving toward a truly just approach to same-sex couples in the church. The ACWC would still advocate for full access to the covenant of marriage blessed by the church for all couples, regardless of the law of individual states. In all things, we believe the church is called to be ahead of the government when it comes to implementing just policies.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a patchwork of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state). The marriage standards of the PC(USA) have historically assumed a congruity that no longer exists between the definition of marriage by the state and by the church: “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133-.134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

Item 13-11

[The assembly answered Item 13-11 by the action taken on Item 13-NB. See pp. 46, 47.]

On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage—From the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

The Presbytery of the Redwoods overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

W–4.9001 Christian Marriage

“Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man two people and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman two people are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other between two people, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

“W-4.9002 Preparing for Marriage

“[The remainder of this section W-4.9003 remains the same.]
The service begins with scriptural sentences and a brief statement of purpose. The man and the woman two people shall declare their intention to enter into Christian marriage and shall exchange vows of love and faithfulness. The service includes appropriate passages of Scripture, which may be interpreted in various forms of proclamation. Prayers shall be offered for the couple, for the communities which support them in this new dimension of discipleship, and for all who seek to live in faithfulness. In the name of the triune God the teaching elder† shall declare publicly that the woman and the man two people are now joined in marriage. [The remainder of this paragraph remains the same.]

“W-4.9006 Recognizing Civil Marriage

A service of worship recognizing a civil marriage or civil union and confirming it in the community of faith may be appropriate when requested by the couple. The service will be similar to the marriage service except that the opening statement, the declaration of intention, the exchange of vows by the husband and wife couple, and the public declaration by the teaching elder† reflect the fact that the woman and man two people are already married to one another united according to the laws of the state.”

Rationale

Currently in our churches and communities, same-gender couples are living together in loving, committed, monogamous relationships. They are raising children, caring for aging parents, and making positive contributions to their communities. These couples include new and longtime members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Their relationships are equivalent to a marriage in every way but formal recognition by the church and by most states in which they live, though some states are recognizing their relationships as marriages or civil unions.

By changing the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship we would recognize committed, lifelong relationships that are already being lived out by our members. We would honor and support the love and commitment they practice in their lives every day. We would bear witness to the love of God as it is expressed between these couples and as we offer that love to them on behalf of the church.

In addition, as the legal recognition of same-gender relationships goes through transitions throughout the country, PC(USA) clergy and sessions are faced with complex decisions regarding ecclesiastical authority and property use. Teaching elders/ministers of Word and Sacrament currently can face ecclesiastical charges if they perform marriage ceremonies or civil unions that may be legal in their state. Same-gender couples who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can come to their minister and request that minister to perform their marriage as an agent of the state, only to be denied that important time of pastoral care and ministry because of church law. These marriages create certain privileges and responsibilities for the married couple and their families within the community and the church that cannot be ignored. Among other things, civil marriage bestows a new status on this couple and designates them as a unique social unit; it delineates their family structure and makes the other their next of kin; it establishes parental and societal rights and responsibilities for them; and establishes their rights of inheritance along with creating larger familial relationships. All of these issues affect this new family and their lives in the church. Broadening the language to offer marriage to any two people removes the religious barriers faced by ministers, sessions, church members, and other Christians while continuing to honor the laws of each state. Changing the language in this way emphasizes that the Directory for Worship defines marriage within the bounds of our denomination and does not determine what is legal or illegal in civil law. This overture recognizes that the civil, legal definition of marriage is in transition within and among the states. This overture honors the dignity of all same-gender couples and their families throughout the PC(USA).

The 219th General Assembly (2010) failed to act on the substantive marriage-related overtures that were before it, suggesting that presbyteries continue in discussion for another two years. Now, two years later, it is even more clear that this constitutional amendment is necessary to recognize the full dignity of same-gender couples and their families.

In recent permanent judicial commission proceedings, the Presbytery of the Redwoods has listened to the testimony of a number of same-gender couples who were married when the marriage of same-gender couples was legal in the State of California. They have testified to the importance of marriage in their lives and in their families, and how marriage relates to and nourishes their lives of faith. We have been moved by their testimony. Here is some of what the couples have shared with our presbytery, when asked questions like, “Why did you want to get married?”

- “Marriage was a sacred vow of commitment for us, a covenant between the two of us, between the two of us and with our community and bringing God into our marriage where God still resides as a part and parcel of our marriage and family.”

- “As I’ve been thinking about that question and listening to some of the answers—it takes me to asking the question I wonder if non-gay couples ever ask themselves do we want marriage or do we want a domestic partnership or a civil union, or a blessing.”
And of course it’s marriage. It’s what we know as what two people do when you know that you’ve met your mate. And listening to [expert testimony] about what is marriage, monogamy, yes, a long-term commitment, yes. That’s what I want with [my wife], that’s what we have now. ... It’s a union of equals, of independence, maybe too independent sometimes, but that’s what we have and that’s what it is.”

- “Well, I come from a family, my parents were married for 55 years, my grandparents were married for 50 years, it means to me that you have found the person you love, the person you’re going to spend the rest of your life with, and it’s a conclusion in bringing that union together, it recognizes that union to the community, to your family, to your friends.”

- “Marriage is what we are teaching our children to strive for as the ultimate covenant between two loving people, so our getting married is simply a reflection of what we hope they will move on to should they find lifelong partners some day in their life.”

- “It’s the ultimate commitment, it’s the ultimate promise of a life together forever, there is no going back just because you might have a little problem, it means together in love forever.”

- “I wanted to be exactly as married as everybody else, I didn’t want to pretend or [have a] second best kind of a marriage. I’m married. I wanted to be exactly as married as everybody was married.”

- “It absolutely seemed like the natural progression of our love deepening. And I have always, you know, as a pastor in terms of the weddings I have done, always thought of marriage as an incredible gift. ... At the time we had young daughters, and it was very important to us that they know that we are a family and that we are their parents, and so marriage was a way also to bring all that together.”

Moved by this testimony, the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Presbytery of the Redwoods (1) gave thanks “for the courageous and heartrending testimonies of the married couples who shared with us their great hurt through the policies of our church … [and] for the joy in marriage they shared with us”; (2) asked “for forgiveness for the harm that has been, and continues to be, done to them in the name of Jesus Christ” and (3) has implored the General Assembly “to listen to these testimonies, which are now part of this record, to take them to heart, and to do what needs to be done to move us as a church forward on this journey of reconciliation.” See Decision of the PJC of the Presbytery of the Redwoods, dated August 24, 2010. Similarly, in the recent GAPJC decision, Southard v. Presbytery of Boston, February 4, 2010, five member of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission expressly recognized that the current language of the Constitution with regard to marriage is at odds with numerous other provisions mandating “the acceptance of our gay, lesbian, and bisexual brothers and sisters into the full fellowship of the church,” and “urged the General Assembly to amend the constitution to allow for the marriage of same-sex couples in the PC(USA) and otherwise welcome gay, lesbian, and bisexual people into the full fellowship of the church.”

For the sake of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and for the good of loving, monogamous same-gender couples in our church and for the community and for the greater ministry of our clergy, sessions and churches we propose these changes to the Directory for Worship.

ACC ADVICE ON

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

4. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, 13-11 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-04 is the most clearly worded and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Fourteen items of business come to the 220th General Assembly (2012) seeking some modification or interpretation of marriage, as defined in W-4.9000. These overtures range in effect from proposed amendments that would change the definition of marriage to “two people,” to overtures asking for a reaffirmation of the definition of marriage as it currently exists, to a group of overtures seeking authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 to allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is proscriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “… civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is prescriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that questions about W-4.9000 and its relationship to same-gender couples have been addressed to the General Assembly since 1991. Increasing societal acceptance of same-gender couples, laws enacted by some states allowing marriage by same-gender couples, and our own denomination’s struggles over ordination standards have all contributed to the increase of items before the General Assembly seeking change, definition, or interpretation of this section of the Directory for Worship. The church’s concerns for the pastoral care of its members also contribute to the frequency and urgency of these questions. The appointment of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage (2008) and the request for the change in the Board of Pensions policy regarding benefits for same-gender couples are an indicator of the urgency of these matters.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).
The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. [Bruce C. Daniels, Puritans At Play: Leisure and Recreation in Colonial New England (Palgrave Macmillan, 1996), p. 118.]

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The Westminster Confession addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleannesse. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131).

II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory for Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.
Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“... a man and a woman ...”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather proscriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJCs to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language proscriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters ...” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,
The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judicatory or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result. …

The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

Should the assembly concur with the intent of the first part of this overture, the language proposed is clear and adequate to achieve its intent. But the concluding section on requiring a two-thirds (2/3) vote is inconsistent with our historical understanding of majority rule.

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-05, Genesee Valley, includes language related to 4.9002a, who meet legal requirements of the state, and demonstrate Christian commitment

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.

- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.

- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

All four overtures seek to amend W-4.9000 and related paragraphs in the Directory for Worship by redefining or re-describing marriage or Christian marriage. There is currently a tension between the definition of marriage between the church and some states. Currently six states and the District of Columbia recognize same-gender marriages as legal unions; these overtures would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to perform same-gender marriages in these states. Any change in the definition of marriage in state law does not amend the church’s constitution.

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.
Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”: rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous As of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, AND 13-11

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, 13-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 from the presbyteries of East Iowa, Hudson River, New York City, and Redwoods overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to amend W-4.9000 to redefine Christian marriage to include covenants between persons of the same gender.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy counsels the following considerations.

Rationale

The 208th General Assembly (1996) approved the following resolution: “Affirming the Presbyterian church’s historic definition of marriage as a civil contract between a man and a woman, yet recognizing that committed same-sex partners seek equal civil liberties in a contractual relationship with all the civil rights of married couples, we urge the Office of the Stated Clerk to explore the feasibility of entering friend-of-the-court briefs and supporting legislation in favor of giving civil rights to same-sex partners” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p.122).
The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved the policy Transforming Families. In its historical analysis, the policy points out that Scripture contains several forms of marriage and family, none of which is a “precise equivalent of contemporary marriage and family life” (C.1). It notes that the development of monogamous marriage took place over time in Hebrew (and other) societies. And it points out that “the Reformed tradition embraced marriage as a good for all in society, Christian or not” (C.1). As the Book of Order states, “Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well being of the entire human family” (W-4.9001).

Transforming Families (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/transforming-families/) also states that while the marital-biological family is a basic form of family, it is neither “exhaustive nor exclusive” as a family form, and “it does not fully exemplify God’s ordering of interpersonal life” (2). Moreover, the policy recognizes that the forms and purposes of family have evolved as God’s ordering of equal gender relationships has become clearer. In these ways, the church has acknowledged that forms of marriage and family are shaped by of historical and cultural developments. Today we would find some of the previous forms and some of the interpersonal relationships that they embodied falling short of our understanding of God’s will for humankind and human well being.

Having said this, this policy did not address specifically the question of same-gender marriage and family. It assumed without comment the previous policies of the church that called for the same protections and civil rights for same-gender families that are equal to those of married heterosexual families. Equality under the law is one principle. But the church also recognizes the importance of these protections and rights to the capacity of such families to do what good families do: nurturing children, deepening love, providing material support, caring for the young and the sick and the aged, and creating a context for growth in faith. The church has understood that same-gender couples, and homosexual persons, have the same need and desire for the pastoral care of the church. Thus, it offers the blessing of the church on same-gender unions and committed itself to the wellbeing of children in same-gender unions as it has to all children (Transforming Families, p. 31).

Finally, Transforming Families ends with a vision of a church and society “which welcomes and nurtures all persons regardless of their family circumstances” and a church that rejects “attitudes or practices that value some more highly than others based on gender, age, class, ability, ethnic origin, sexual orientation, or any outward condition” (Recommendations, #2).

However, these policies did not include same-gender couples in the church’s understanding of marriage. The intent of Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 is to embody in the church itself an equal recognition that same-gender faithful and committed relationships are included in the gift of marriage God intends for humankind. These items set before the 220th General Assembly (2012) the question of whether the church’s commitment to equality of civil rights for same-gender persons is possible if the church itself does not receive such relationships into its body on an equal basis with opposite-gender relationships.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-11
Advice and Counsel on Item 13-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 13-11.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given in this overture. The practice of excluding people who are gay and lesbian from marriage has its roots in the persistence of patriarchal standards for the lives of women and men. The notion that men and maleness are superior dictates that men and women behave in particular ways that abide by the constructed rules their sex has been assigned. For this reason, same-gender loving women and men are perceived as a direct threat to the norms that patriarchy lays out, as they, in their loving, challenge the models of prescribed masculinity and femininity determined by patriarchy. Gay men are a threat as they are often perceived as “too feminine,” and lesbian women are perceived as “too masculine.”

In withholding the right to marry from same-gender loving people, the church is upholding this patriarchal standard for humanity. As a group committed to standing against patriarchy and its effects within the world and the church, ACWC advocates giving access to the commitment and covenant of marriage to same-gender loving women and men in the PC(USA). The ACWC draws particular attention to the vulnerability of lesbian women in this exclusion, as they find themselves in this and many situations excluded and marginalized both for their gender identity and sexual orientation.

As we watch as state by state people in the U.S. are standing against this form of discrimination, we challenge the church to act now with a prophetic voice that joins in this justice movement, rather than responding after marriage equality has been established across the country.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a patchwork of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state). The marriage standards of the PC(USA) have historically assumed a congruity that no longer exists between the definition of marriage by the state and by the church: “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133-.134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

[The assembly answered Item 13-12 by the action taken on Item 13-NB. See pp. 46, 47.]

On Confirming the Current Definition of Marriage and Any Current Authoritative Interpretations of Marriage in W-4.9000–9001—From the Presbytery of Charleston Atlantic.

The Presbytery of Charleston-Atlantic overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to

1. confirm the constitutional definition of marriage currently at W-4.9000–9001 in the Book of Order; and
2. confirm current authoritative interpretations, if any, regarding W-4.9000–9001 in the Book of Order.

ACC ADVICE ON

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Fourteen items of business come to the 220th General Assembly (2012) seeking some modification or interpretation of marriage, as defined in W-4.9000. These overtures range in effect from proposed amendments that would change the definition of marriage to “two people,” to overtures asking for a reaffirmation of the definition of marriage as it currently exists, to a group of overtures seeking authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 to allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is prescriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”
Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “… civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is proscriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that questions about W-4.9000 and its relationship to same-gender couples have been addressed to the General Assembly since 1991. Increasing societal acceptance of same-gender couples, laws enacted by some states allowing marriage by same-gender couples, and our own denomination’s struggles over ordination standards have all contributed to the increase of items before the General Assembly seeking change, definition, or interpretation of this section of the Directory for Worship. The church’s concerns for the pastoral care of its members also contribute to the frequency and urgency of these questions. The appointment of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage (2008) and the request for the change in the Board of Pensions policy regarding benefits for same-gender couples are an indicator of the urgency of these matters.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitution-
The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of mankind with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleanness. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 884-85 of the electronic version, Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage)

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. [Bruce C. Daniels, Puritans At Play: Leisure and Recreation in Colonial New England (Palgrave Macmillan, 1996), p. 118.]

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.
Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language prescriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-12 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.
Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

> The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judicatory or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result. …

> The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

Should the assembly concur with the intent of the first part of this overture, the language proposed is clear and adequate to achieve its intent. But the concluding section on requiring a two-thirds (2/3) vote is inconsistent with our historical understanding of majority rule.

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

- Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage
- Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages
- Item 13-05, Genesee Valley, includes language related to 4.9002a, who meet legal requirements of the state, and demonstrate Christian commitment
- Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience
- Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them
- Item 13-10, Redwoods, language does not prohibit officiating at marriage of same-gender couple
- Item 13-14 Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008,

> The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.
- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.
- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

> This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

All four overtures seek to amend W-4.9000 and related paragraphs in the Directory for Worship by redefining or re-describing marriage or Christian marriage. There is currently a tension between the definition of marriage between the church and some states. Currently six states and the District of Columbia recognize same-gender marriages as legal unions; these overtures would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to perform same-gender marriages in these states. Any change in the definition of marriage in state law does not amend the church’s constitution.

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man,” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.
The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-07, 13-12, AND 13-13

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13, from the Presbyteries of Mississippi, Charleston Atlantic, and Foothills, respectively, overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to take actions affirming the church’s definition of marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman. Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001; Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9001 and require a super-majority vote by presbyteries to change W-4.9001.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 be disapproved.

Rationale

Section W-4.9000 already and clearly defines marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman. Therefore, there is no need for the actions being proposed. To support the intent of these items, commissioners need to disapprove other overtures that would expand or change the definition of marriage.

Item 13-13 seeks to make any amendments to W-4.9001 subject to a super majority vote of two-thirds of the presbyteries. This would subject one part of the Book of Order to a standard not required by other parts, such as, for example, the constitutional questions for ordination. In fact, it would elevate this issue to the same two-thirds majority required for adopting new confessions of the church. Such a change violates our historical understanding of majority rule. As the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has stated, the issue of using a super majority vote for amending various provisions of the Constitution has arisen and been disapproved a number of times in the past. It is likely that acceptance of such a standard in this case, or other cases, would lead inevitably to the desire of others to apply a super majority standard to other constitutional provisions they prefer, leading to the weakening, or abandonment, of the fundamental principle of majority rule in the Reformed Tradition.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 13-12.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-11 is applicable here as well:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given in this overture. The practice of excluding people who are gay and lesbian from marriage has its roots in the persistence of patriarchal standards for the lives of women and men. The notion that men and maleness are superior dictates that men and women behave in particular ways that abide by the constructed rules their sex has been assigned. For this reason, same-gender loving women and men are perceived as a direct threat to the norms that patriarchy lays out, as they, in their loving, challenge the models of prescribed masculinity and femininity determined by patriarchy. Gay men are a threat as they are often perceived as “too feminine,” and lesbian women are perceived as “too masculine.”

In withholding the right to marry from same-gender loving people, the church is upholding this patriarchal standard for humanity. As a group committed to standing against patriarchy and its effects within the world and the church, ACWC advocates giving access to the commitment and covenant of marriage to same-gender loving women and men in the PC(USA). The ACWC draws particular attention to the vulnerability of lesbian women in this exclusion, as they find themselves in this and many situations excluded and marginalized both for their gender identity and sexual orientation.

As we watch as state by state people in the U.S. are standing against this form of discrimination, we challenge the church to act now with a prophetic voice that joins in this justice movement, rather than responding after marriage equality has been established across the country.

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in ser vices, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a patchwork of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state). The marriage standards of the PC(USA) have historically assumed a congruity that no longer exists between the definition of marriage by the state and by the church: “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133-.134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

Item 13-13

[The assembly answered Item 13-13 by the action taken on Item 13-NB. See pp. 46, 47.]

On Amending W-4.9001 Regarding Marriage and G-4.0208 Regarding Exceptions—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

The Presbytery of the Foothills overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

1. Shall W-4.9001 of the Book of Order be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be inserted or added is shown as italic.]

   “W-4.9001  Christian Marriage

   “a. Marriage is between one man and one woman.

   “b. Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.”
2. Shall G-6.05 of the Book of Order be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be inserted or added is shown as italic.]

“G-6.05 EXCEPTIONS

“a. The provisions of G-4.0208 of this Constitution shall not be amended.

“b. Amendments to the provisions of W-4.9001 shall receive approval by a 2/3 vote of the presbyteries.”

Rationale

Changes in state laws regarding marriage have made it imperative for the church to enunciate with clarity the Christian understanding of marriage as found in Scripture and the Confessions of the church.

There is already significant concern and division in the church about recent changes in the Form of Government regarding ordination standards.

This amendment unequivocally states that marriage is between a man and a woman, and requires a super majority vote of the presbyteries to change in the Directory of Worship what is a clear teaching of the Confessions.

ACC ADVICE ON

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.
Fourteen items of business come to the 220th General Assembly (2012) seeking some modification or interpretation of marriage, as defined in W-4.9000. These overtures range in effect from proposed amendments that would change the definition of marriage to “two people,” to overtures asking for a reaffirmation of the definition of marriage as it currently exists, to a group of overtures seeking authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 to allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is proscriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was defined was not essential. With some states now providing for marriage between same-gender couples, the language of “… civil contract …” becomes problematic for the church; whose definition of marriage is proscriptive in the church?

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586). This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages:

triune God the minister shall declare publicly that the woman and the man are now joined in marriage." This and similar pronouncements declaring a new status are to be reserved for services of marriage. (loc. cit.)

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that questions about W-4.9000 and its relationship to same-gender couples have been addressed to the General Assembly since 1991. Increasing societal acceptance of same-gender couples, laws enacted by some states allowing marriage by same-gender couples, and our own denomination’s struggles over ordination standards have all contributed to the increase of items before the General Assembly seeking change, definition, or interpretation of this section of the Directory for Worship. The church’s concerns for the pastoral care of its members also contribute to the frequency and urgency of these questions. The appointment of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage (2008) and the request for the change in the Board of Pensions policy regarding benefits for same-gender couples are an indicator of the urgency of these matters.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).

The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleanness. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.1311). (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 884-85 of the electronic version, Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage)

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

- Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
- Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
- Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather prescriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJC`s to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language prescriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

> The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judiciary or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result.

> The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

Should the assembly concur with the intent of the first part of this overture, the language proposed is clear and adequate to achieve its intent. But the concluding section on requiring a two-thirds (2/3) vote is inconsistent with our historical understanding of majority rule.

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in de-considering whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-05, Genesee Valley, includes language related to 4.9002a, who meet legal requirements of the state, and demonstrate Christian commitment

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-14, Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008,

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.
- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.
- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

Each of the overtures seeking authoritative interpretation has some inconsistency with previous authoritative interpretations. All are premised on a rationale based on the Preface of the Directory for Worship that “… this directory also uses language about worship that is simply descriptive.” Item 13-10 posits that since there is no mandatory language (“shall,” “is to be,” “are to be”) in sentences describing a couple as a man and a woman, it is not mandated that the couple be a man and a woman. Previous authoritative interpretations (e.g. Spahr) appear to be based on the language of the Preface that the language “between a man and woman” “… set standards and presents norms for the conduct of worship in the life of congregations and … councils. …”

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

All four overtures seek to amend W-4.9000 and related paragraphs in the Directory for Worship by redefining or re-describing marriage or Christian marriage. There is currently a tension between the definition of marriage between the church and some states. Currently six states and the District of Columbia recognize same-gender marriages as legal unions; these overtures would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to perform same-gender marriages in these states. Any change in the definition of marriage in state law does not amend the church’s constitution.

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man,” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

ple to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 13-07, 13-12, AND 13-13

Advice and Counsel on Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13, from the Presbyteries of Mississippi, Charleston Atlantic, and Foothills, respectively, overture the 220th General Assembly (2012) to take actions affirming the church’s definition of marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman. Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek an authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001; Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9001 and require a super-majority vote by presbyteries to change W-4.9001.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 be disapproved.

Rationale

Section W-4.9000 already and clearly defines marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman. Therefore, there is no need for the actions being proposed. To support the intent of these items, commissioners need to disapprove other overtures that would expand or change the definition of marriage.

Item 13-13 seeks to make any amendments to W-4.9001 subject to a super majority vote of two-thirds of the presbyteries. This would subject one part of the Book of Order to a standard not required by other parts, such as, for example, the constitutional questions for ordination. In fact, it would elevate this issue to the same two-thirds majority required for adopting new confessions of the church. Such a change violates our historical understanding of majority rule. As the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has stated, the issue of using a super majority vote for amending various provisions of the Constitution has arisen and been disapproved a number of times in the past. It is likely that acceptance of such a standard in this case, or other cases, would lead inevitably to the desire of others to apply a super majority standard to other constitutional provisions they prefer, leading to the weakening, or abandonment, of the fundamental principle of majority rule in the Reformed Tradition.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 13-13.

Rationale

The ACWC’s rationale for Item 13-11 is applicable here as well:

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given in this overture. The practice of excluding people who are gay and lesbian from marriage has its roots in the persistence of patriarchal standards for the lives of women and men. The notion that men and maleness are superior dictates that men and women behave in particular ways that abide by the constructed rules their sex has been assigned. For this reason, same-gender loving women and men are perceived as a direct threat to the norms that patriarchy lays out, as they, in their loving, challenge the models of prescribed masculinity and femininity determined by patriarchy. Gay men are a threat as they are often perceived as “too feminine,” and lesbian women are perceived as “too masculine.”
In withholding the right to marry from same-gender loving people, the church is upholding this patriarchal standard for humanity. As a group committed to standing against patriarchy and its effects within the world and the church, ACWC advocates giving access to the commitment and covenant of marriage to same-gender loving women and men in the PC(USA). The ACWC draws particular attention to the vulnerability of lesbian women in this exclusion, as they find themselves in this and many situations excluded and marginalized both for their gender identity and sexual orientation.

As we watch as state by state people in the U.S. are standing against this form of discrimination, we challenge the church to act now with a prophetic voice that joins in this justice movement, rather than responding after marriage equality has been established across the country.

GAMC COMMENT ON

Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people”; Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10 seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral latitude in presiding at services, particularly in states where gay marriage or civil unions are legal; and Items 13-07, 13-12, and 13-13 seek to reaffirm the PC(USA)’s current marriage standards and practices.

Proposals to modify the PC(USA)’s position and practices of marriage have come before the General Assembly in the past, most notably to the 218th General Assembly (2008). In response the assembly appointed a Special Committee on Marriage and Civil Unions. That special committee reported back to the 219th General Assembly (2010). The General Assembly neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Commissioners would do well to review these two reports in preparation for dealing with similar issues at this assembly (Report of the special committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168; minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169).

These overtures have theological, ethical, cultural, legal, and liturgical implications.

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a patchwork of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state). The marriage standards of the PC(USA) have historically assumed a congruity that no longer exists between the definition of marriage by the state and by the church: “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

In Reformed and Presbyterian history there has been a consistent affirmation that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Westminster Confession states, “1. Marriage is a union between one man and one woman, designed of God to last so long as they both shall live. 2. Marriage is designed for the mutual help of husband and wife; for the safeguarding, undergirding, and development of their moral and spiritual character; for the propagation of children and the rearing of them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (The Book of Confessions, 6.133-.134. See also 6.131) This is also the understanding of marriage held by the overwhelming majority of global partner churches.

There has been more variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of our global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century.

The current forms of the marriage liturgy reflect and shape a particular theology of marriage. The Book of Common Worship describes marriage as a gift of God, blessed by Jesus Christ, and sustained by the Holy Spirit. It grounds God’s gift of marriage in the creation of human beings as male and female. Thus, marriage is the proper context for the full expression of love between a man and a woman, an aid to faithful living, the environment for the birth and nurture of children, an element in the well-being of society, a holy mystery uniting a man and a woman, and a calling into a new way of life. (See Book of Common Worship, p. 842.)

Item 13-14

Authoritative Interpretation of W-4.9000, Marriage—From the Session, Rutgers Presbyterian Church, New York, New York.

This request from the Session of Rutgers Presbyterian Church in New York City, presents the following questions upon which it seeks authoritative interpretation:

The Session of Rutgers Presbyterian Church in New York City requests that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommend the assembly approve the following authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000, Marriage:

“Teaching Elders and Commissioned Ruling Elders authorized to conduct services of marriage may exercise pastoral discretion when asked to officiate at such a ceremony for two people who have obtained a civil marriage license, and sessions may permit the use of church property for such services. Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders may refuse to conduct such services, and sessions may refuse to permit the use of church property for such purposes.”

Rationale: Since the earliest stories in Scripture, marriage has played an ever-changing role in the life of God's people. Throughout the pages of the Bible, there are varieties of marital relationships and functions. The Bible has no single point-of-view on marriage, and the complexity of what we find in Scripture is particularly challenging from a 21st century perspective—from multiple wives and concubines (1 Kings 11:3), to property-based exchanges (Deuteronomy 22), to coerced or forced marriages (Genesis 29, 2 Samuel 11). In the New Testament marriage is often discouraged (Matthew 19:10, 1 Corinthians 7). It can be argued that only one marriage in Scripture is truly pure and holy—the metaphorical marriage between Christ and the Church—and it is a marriage that defies all our definitions (Revelation 21, also Isaiah 62:5).

In the reformation times reformers explicitly and intentionally liberated the institution of marriage from the oppressive and manipulative control of the over-reaching church, excluding the marriage institution from the list of church sacraments. (For instance J. Calvin: Institutes, book IV, chapter 19, §§ 34-37) with one voice emphatically asserting the civil nature of this institution and delegating it under civil supervision. This reformed understanding of marriage is also mirrored in the Book of Order where marriage is declared to be a "civil contract."

Civil authorities are fully competent and appropriate institutions for regulating this civil institution by legislating, issuing certificates, registering marriages and establishing family courts. The church officers should be allowed to use their discretion within the limits allowed by the civil law.

This AI attempts to limit confusion out of the quandary placed before us in the highly inconsistent language of the Book of Order.

If adopted, this Authoritative Interpretation would not end the conversation in the Church. Rather, this AI would provide the needed space for pastoral discretion in those places where civil laws differ from ecclesiastical guidelines.

Most of all this AI will protect the legal integrity of marriages, which have been already conducted and are being conducted in PCUSA churches. This AI takes away the considerable danger of potential legal challenges to the legality of the whole category of marriages conducted in PCUSA churches, which otherwise would be perfectly legal and legally unassailable (strong and secure).

ACC ADVICE ON

2. If the assembly wishes to approve the intent of Item 13-13 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of the first part of the proposed amendment is clear and consistent with the Constitution but that the second part raises serious constitutional issues such that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the second part not be approved.

3. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14 [authoritative interpretations], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-05 is the most consistent constitutionally, but that if the assembly seeks to amend the definition of marriage in W-4.9000, it would be more appropriate to amend the language by approving one of the overtures in the following paragraph.

4. If the assembly wishes to accomplish the intent of Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, 13-11 [constitutional amendment], the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that the language of Item 13-04 is the most clearly worded and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

[Editorial Note: Except in direct quotes, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has chosen solely for the sake of consistency to use the term “same-gender” rather than “same sex.”]

I. Rationale Introduction on Marriage Items

In offering this advice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution is aware that the constitutional issues raised in the following sections are but one voice in the process of discerning the will of God for the church. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity reminds us that

Christ gives to the Church its faith and life, its unity and mission, its order and discipline. Scripture teaches us of Christ’s will for the Church, which is to be obeyed. In the worship and service of God and the government of the church, matters are to be ordered according to the Word by reason and sound judgment, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit” (F-1.0203).

The intent of this advice is to offer to the assembly the collective judgment of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution regarding the constitutionality of the proposed overtures. It is not intended to be advice on the theological, ethical, and legal merits of the overtures.

Fourteen items of business come to the 220th General Assembly (2012) seeking some modification or interpretation of marriage, as defined in W-4.9000. These overtures range in effect from proposed amendments that would change the definition of marriage to “two people,” to overtures asking for a reaffirmation of the definition of marriage as it currently exists, to a group of overtures seeking authoritative interpretation of W-4.9000 to allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 seek authoritative interpretation to affirm the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s current marriage language as standards, and Item 13-13 seeks a constitutional amendment to make clear that the current marriage language is proscriptive rather than descriptive. Six items and a request, Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-05, 13-08, 13-09, 13-10, and Item 13-14, seek authoritative interpretations that allow pastoral discretion in presiding at services in states where same-gender marriage is legal. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 seek to amend the definition of marriage in the Directory for Worship from “a woman and a man” to “two people” as well as related changes.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advised the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the understanding of Christian marriage as set forth in W-4.9001:

Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family. Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man. For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the community of faith.

This definition of marriage identifies four distinct contexts in which God’s gift of marriage is articulated, each of which lays a claim on the church to provide a faithful response.

First, “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family.”

Second, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.”

Third, “For Christians, marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Finally, “Christian marriage [is] a lifelong commitment … made by a woman and a man … publicly witnessed … by the community of faith.”

These are questions that apply directly to the polity issues presented by the overtures, and which create difficulties for the church as it seeks to understand what constitutes a faithful witness to the world. If God’s gift of marriage is only conferred through a civil contract, then the church’s practice (and therefore its witness) regarding marriage would be limited by the definitions set by civil authority. When state and church definitions were consistent, the question of how marriage was
The social policy witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for same-gender couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-gender unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as an act of witness, justice, and compassion to the wider community. The passage of civil laws providing for the marriage of same-gender couples creates a conundrum for church polity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on the basis of its historic interpretation of the biblical and confessional standards of its faith, has drawn a distinction between same-gender unions, which it has permitted within the church, and same-gender marriage, which it has not. This distinction was affirmed in our polity by the decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in the case of Benton, et al. v. Presbytery of Hudson River, (Remedial Case 212-11, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 586) This decision relied on a 1991 authoritative interpretation of W-4.9001, which reads (in part):

Benton then drew an important distinction between same-gender unions and marriages.

In this regard, then, the social witness of the church for equality under the law has been interpreted as being fulfilled in its affirmation for “civil unions”—but recent changes in some state laws have challenged this distinction along with the church’s liturgical practices and theological understandings of Christian marriage.

Both the Preface to the Directory for Worship and W-1.4001 make clear the connection between the church’s faith and its practice, so that forms of worship are informed biblically, theologically, and ecumenically, and the practice of worship respects both the tradition of the church and the pastoral needs of the community. In this light, changes to the language, forms, or definition of marriage should be informed by theological fidelity, ecumenical consultation, and pastoral sensitivity.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that questions about W-4.9000 and its relationship to same-gender couples have been addressed to the General Assembly since 1991. Increasing societal acceptance of same-gender couples, laws enacted by some states allowing marriage by same-gender couples, and our own denomination’s struggles over ordination standards have all contributed to the increase of items before the General Assembly seeking change, definition, or interpretation of this section of the Directory for Worship. The church’s concerns for the pastoral care of its members also contribute to the frequency and urgency of these questions. The appointment of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage (2008) and the request for the change in the Board of Pensions policy regarding benefits for same-gender couples are an indicator of the urgency of these matters.

The Final Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage to the 219th General Assembly (2010) Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) brings a useful perspective to the discussion of the overtures before the assembly on this topic. The 219th General Assembly (2010) neither approved or disapproved that report, but instead attached a minority report and sent both to the church for study. Although the report of the special committee is not within the purview of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and thus the ACC made no recommendations with respect to the constitutional implications of the study, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the report of the special committee may be helpful as an overview of the issues. (Report of the Special Committee to Study Issues of Civil Union and Christian Marriage: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3333&promoID=168, Minority report from the General Assembly committee: https://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=3335&promoID=169)

As an example of its usefulness, lines 64 through 73 provide scriptural references to marriage:

The Old Testament assumes an ancient Semitic understanding of marriage as the basis for the family, the fundamental unit of Hebrew society. Marriage provides four benefits to humanity:

- The birth and nurture of children (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; 15:1–6; 16:1–16; 21:1–7, and 29:1—30:24);
- Companionship, mutual support, and affection (Gen. 2:18–24 and 1 Sam. 1:1–28);
- Economic partnership, providing financial support for the family (Prov. 31:10–31 and the book of Ruth); and
- A political tool to form alliances between nations and advance political ambitions (1 Sam. 18:17–27; 19:11–17; 25:44; 2 Sam. 3:13–15; 6:16–23; and 1 Kings 11:1–4).
The report also traces historic understandings from The Book of Confessions. For instance, our current language defining marriage as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (W-4.9001) reflects language from The Westminster Confession of Faith, but noting that the particular problem that was being addressed was polygamy, not same-gender relationships [Line 232 through 240 of the report]. [Thus, the emphasis is on “a” rather than “man and woman.”]

The Westminster Confession of Faith addressed the excesses that abounded in England between 1640 and 1660, attacking polygamy and spousal desertion to consort with another, both advanced on religious grounds. The Westminster Confession’s original provision on marriage indicated that polygamy was the issue of concern for the Westminster divines rather than same-gender relationships: Marriage is to be between one Man and one Woman: neither is it lawful for any Man to have more than one Wife, nor for any Woman to have more than one Husband; at the same time.” The confession then outlined the purposes of marriage: “…ordained for the mutual help of Husband and Wife, for the increase of man-kinde with a legitimate issue, and of the Church with an holy seed and, for preventing of uncleannesse. (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131).

There has been a major change in context since the assembly first began considering changes in practices of marriage. The United States now has a variety of marriage laws. Most define marriage as between a man and a woman, some allow for marriage between two persons regardless of gender, and others allow for civil union between two people regardless of gender (See http://www.ncsl.org/issues-research/human-services/same-sex-marriage-overview.aspx for a summary of marriage laws by state).

Historically and culturally, there has been variance in the relation of civil marriage to Christian marriage. Some of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s global partners live in countries where services of Christian marriage occur only after a civil marriage has been established by the state. Interestingly, legal marriage by civil authorities preceding any Christian service was also the pattern practiced by our Puritan forebears in New England until the Anglican practice of a single marriage rite performed by the church became predominant in the late 17th century. II. Overview of Business Before the 220th General Assembly (2012) on the Definition of Marriage

There are fourteen items of business regarding the definition of marriage or the church’s position regarding marriage that are before the 220th General Assembly (2012). These items may be grouped by the intent or effect of the overtures and fall within the following categories:

• Requests the General Assembly to provide an Authoritative Interpretation strengthening and affirming that marriage is between one man and one woman (Items 13-07, 13-12);
• Request amending W-4.9000 to clarify and affirm one man and one woman language and require two-thirds (2/3) vote to amend that language (Item 13-13);
• Request the General Assembly to provide an authoritative interpretation of paragraphs in W-4.9000 that would affirm pastoral discretion and responsibility with regards to marrying same-gender couples with civil marriage licenses. Items 13-02, 13-03, 13-08, 13-09, and 13-10, and Item 13-14 propose language to “allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders (when authorized to perform marriages), to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license”; and would allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. Several also call for protecting the right of pastors not to perform such marriages.
• Request to amend the Book of Order to permit same-gender marriages. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11 propose amending paragraphs in the Directory for Worship that define or describe marriage: W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. Most recommend some variation on amending “a man and a woman” to “two people.”

Each of these groups and the individual overtures within them are discussed in detail in the pages that follow. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly to consider each of the fourteen items of business within the context of the above, the relationship between all of them, and the complex background and issues from which they arise.

A. Strengthening and Affirming Current Language of W-4.9000 (Item 13-07 and Item 13-12)

These two overtures, which concern the church’s understanding of marriage, seek approval of an authoritative interpretation of the Directory of Worship at W-4.9001, requesting the General Assembly to affirm a position that would define the existing language regarding marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Item 13-07 would declare that such definition would be considered “behaviorally binding” upon those authorized to perform marriages. Item 13-07 refers to two GAPJC decisions affirming this position and language and concludes with language intended to require change only by amendment to W-4.9000 and the confessions. Item 13-12 consists of two sentences seeking to confirm/affirm the “constitutional definition” presently in the Directory for Worship as well as “any current authoritative interpretations” of this section.

Items 13-07 and 13-12 would approve the position that the third sentence (“… a man and a woman …”) controls the weight of meaning of all other sentences in W-4.9001, so that marriage as a gift from God to all humankind and marriage as a civil contract are aspects of marriage subordinate to the understanding that “[f]or Christians marriage is a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship.”

Both overtures adopt a position that only heterosexual marriage is consistent with biblical and confessional standards. The overtures do not challenge the language regarding civil contracts. The interpretation proposed would affirm that the language of W-4.9001 is not descriptive but rather proscriptive; God’s very order and design defines the institution of marriage.

Item 13-07 cites in its reference for making the language of W-4.9000 “binding,” quotations from the Spahr GAPJC decision of 2008 and the Southard GAPJC decision of 2011. This creates two issues: (1) Does this mean “behaviorally binding (practice),” or “binding on the conscience”; and (2) Because parts of GAPJC decisions may themselves be authoritative interpretations, this overture appears to affirm language that is already authoritative interpretation. Finally, the last sentence of Item 13-07 is erroneous in that an authoritative interpretation cannot restrict the ability of later General Assemblies or GAPJC to modify an authoritative interpretation or that changes to the confessions are required in order to amend the Book of Order.

While the first paragraphs of Item 13-07 are a new expression of existing authoritative interpretations, they do not materially strengthen or improve existing interpretations and thus Item 13-07 may be unnecessary. However, if the General Assembly chooses to approve this language as an authoritative interpretation, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the final sentence be deleted because it seeks to create a standard of amending that is not constitutional. Item 13-12 does not actually rise to the level of an authoritative interpretation because of its vagueness in asking the General Assembly to affirm “the constitutional definition”—which is itself what is under debate in these overtures. This overture also asks to affirm existing authoritative interpretations without specifying which of those authoritative interpretations it wishes to have affirmed. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that Item 13-12 be disapproved.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) that if it believes that the shared intent of the requests in Items 13-07 and 13-12 is appropriate, the General Assembly should consider approving the first part of Item 13-12, which is a proposal to amend W4-9000ff to clarify that marriage in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can only be between one man and one woman. The committee advises that Items 13-07 and 13-12 would then be answered by the response to Item 13-13.

B. Item 13-13—On Amending Existing W-4.9000 and Amending G-6.05 to Require Two-Thirds (2/3) Vote to Change

Item 13-13 would amend W-4.9000 by making the sentence “Marriage is between one man and one woman” a separate paragraph—4.9001a—and would amend G-6.05 to require a two-thirds (2/3) vote to change W-4.9001.

Separating the language of “one man and one woman” resolves the question of which section of W-4.9000 is controlling of the sentences that follow; doing so makes this language proscriptive and thus behaviorally binding. If it is the will of the assembly to clarify the language and intent of marriage in W-4.9000 as referring solely to “one man and one woman,” then the language of Item 13-13 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overture.

If the General Assembly wishes to approve Item 13-13, then the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 220th General Assembly (2012) to disapprove the second part of Item 13-13 regarding amending G-6.05 for the reasons put forth below.

Rationale

The principle of majority rule is foundational to presbyterian polity. The Historic Principles of Church Government, adopted in the 1790s, established this principle that “This church shall be governed by presbyters …” (F-3.0202), “… in councils of regular gradation …” (F-3.0203) and “Decisions shall be reached in councils by vote, following opportunity for discussion and discernment, and a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205). The 11th edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised defines a majority as “more than half” (p. 400), that is, a simple majority. The proposed amendment to G-6.05 would create a higher standard for amending one section of the Book of Order that would create precedence for making this the standard for amending the Book of Order. This would weaken the principle of majority rule, which is one of the fundamental principles of presbyterian polity.

In 1983, the newly united PC(USA) General Assembly received the report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience, and Church Government, which states in part,

The responsibility of the majority to govern must be seen in the context of the requirement that the whole governs the parts. Majority rule is not a mystical or abstract concept. It is simply a reflection of the fact that the whole church, as it acts, can do only that which most of the church is willing to do. When through the violation or short circuit of proper procedure the will of a minority is imposed on a judicatory or on the church, seriously divisive conflict is often the result. …
The clear intent of the rule of the majority is to preserve, except in the most foundational matters, the judgment and will of the simple majority against that of an unwilling minority. To amend this principle would involve a substantial change in the governing philosophy of the Presbyterian church, and should not be adopted without considerable study and review (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 153).

Parliamentary procedure provides a mechanism by which minorities can seek to persuade the majority that a particular action would be injurious to the church, or to modify the action in order to increase support in the church. In addition, the Manual of the General Assembly provides for consensus processes prior to a vote that may persuade a majority to amend or defer an action in view of the concerns of the minority. Finally, it should be noted that currently the Book of Order contains no specific provision requiring a majority vote of the assembly to approve an overture, but is governed by G-3.0105, which states, “Meetings [of councils] shall be conducted in accordance with the most recent edition of Robert’s Rules of Order, Newly Revised, except when it is in contradiction to this Constitution (Book of Order, 3.0105).

Should the assembly concur with the intent of the first part of this overture, the language proposed is clear and adequate to achieve its intent. But the concluding section on requiring a two-thirds (2/3) vote is inconsistent with our historical understanding of majority rule.

C. Authoritative Interpretation to Provide Pastoral Discretion and Responsibility

The third group of business related to the issue of “marriage” seeks authoritative interpretations of W-4.9000 that would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders when authorized to perform marriages to use pastoral discretion in deciding whether to officiate at ceremonies for couples who have obtained a civil marriage license - and to allow sessions to permit the use of church property for such ceremonies. These are the overtures:

Item 13-02, East Iowa, to ensure pastoral discretion in services of Christian marriage

Item 13-03, Boston, to ensure pastoral discretion in marriages

Item 13-05, Genesee Valley, includes language related to 4.9002a, who meet legal requirements of the state, and demonstrate Christian commitment

Item 13-08, Cayuga-Syracuse, to exercise pastoral discretion regarding ceremonies involving two people who have obtained a civil marriage license—and does not oblige anyone to act against their conscience

Item 13-09, Baltimore, would make “civil definition of marriage” [“… civil contract between a woman and a man …”] the controlling definition—and if a state provides for marriage as a civil contract between same-gender couples, then the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would recognize them

Item 13-10, Redwoods, language does not prohibit officiating at marriage of same-gender couple

Item 13-14 Rutgers Presbyterian Church. This is actually a concurrence with Item 13-02; language is identical except for one word

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that if it wishes to accomplish the intent of these overtures, Item 13-05 provides that language which is most clear, complete, and applicable as an authoritative interpretation. However, if the will of the assembly is to modify the basic understanding of marriage itself, the assembly should consider approving one of the overtures that proposes amending the language of W-4.9000.

Rationale

At the same time, the social witness policies of the church have urged an end to discrimination against same-sex couples. Thus, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008,

The social witness policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have consistently advocated for the end to discrimination in the civil arena on the basis of sexual orientation. This commitment to equality under the law has prompted our support of civil unions for homosexual couples that would afford them protections and rights by the state equal to those afforded heterosexual couples under marriage. The church has permitted the blessing of same-sex unions as an act of pastoral care to its members and as acts of prophetic and compassionate witness against civil definitions it deemed too narrow. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 253)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution noted in 2008, “Changing civil understandings of marriage raise new questions of how pastors are to lead the church in exercising pastoral care to its members and compassionate witness and outreach to its neighbors” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 254) There is no question that the church is called to provide pastoral care to all individuals. The Marriage Task Force Report indicates that at least five states now declare relationships between same-gender couples to constitute marriages. This change complicates the pastoral care options in at least those five states.

The enactment of laws allowing the marriage of same-gender couples sets in relief whether the defining variable for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s definition of marriage is the civil contract or the gender of the parties. The traditional assumption that marriage is a civil contract between a man and a woman can no longer be taken for granted.

The Benton and Spahr cases and the 1991 authoritative interpretation rest on the following distinctions:

- Ceremonies for same-gender couples could not use liturgies for Christian marriage or liturgies for the recognition of civil marriage.

- Teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders are not allowed to perform a ceremony that they consider or represent to be the same as a marriage ceremony; nor is a session allowed to permit their facilities to be used for any such ceremony.

- Pastoral care for same-gender couples may be provided in the form of worship services that “celebrate a loving, caring, and committed relationship” such as civil unions for same-gender couples, but such couples must be advised that such a service does not constitute a marriage and may not be held out as such.

In Spahr, the PJC concluded,

This Commission has addressed the issue of same-sex unions and marriages since that time (1991) in other cases. The issue is not simply the same-sex ceremony. It is the misrepresentation that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the ceremony and the resulting relationship to be a marriage in the eyes of the church. By the definition of W-4.9001, such a result cannot be. So the critical question is not whether the definitional language creates proscribed conduct, it is whether it is permissible to represent that one is doing something which one cannot constitutionally do. The SPJC correctly stated that the term “marriage” in the charge relates to “Christian marriage” (or “ecclesiastical marriage” as that term is used in Southard), since that is the only marriage ceremony over which the PC(USA) has authority.

If the General Assembly desires to make clear that teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders who are authorized to conduct services of Christian marriage may conduct such services for same-gender couples who have obtained a civil marriage license; and that sessions may permit the use of church property for such services, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that this would be most effectively accomplished by an amendment to W-4.9000.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution continues to advise that unless and until W-4.9000 itself is amended, any attempt to amend the definition of marriage by an authoritative interpretation of this section will be problematic and constitutionally insufficient. “Where there are tensions and ambiguities between provisions, it is the task of the councils and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions” (Book of Order, F-3.03).

D. Items 13-01, 13-04, 13-06, and 13-11, On Amending the Book of Order, W-4.9000ff

All four overtures seek to amend W-4.9000 and related paragraphs in the Directory for Worship by redefining or redescribing marriage or Christian marriage. There is currently a tension between the definition of marriage between the church and some states. Currently six states and the District of Columbia recognize same-gender marriages as legal unions; these overtures would allow teaching elders and commissioned ruling elders to perform same-gender marriages in these states. Any change in the definition of marriage in state law does not amend the church’s constitution.

Item 13-01; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, to Uphold Session and Pastoral Discretion in Their Responsibility for the Covenant of Marriage from the Presbytery of East Iowa

Item 13-01 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “a woman and a man to each other,” “woman and a man,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people,” or “two people to be married,” or “between two people.” The overture also strikes the phrase, “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man” in W-4.9001, and strikes “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-04; On Amending W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006, Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of Hudson River

Item 13-04 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman,” “husband and wife,” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” “they,” “to be married” as well as striking the phrase “is made by a woman and a man to each other,” striking “civil contract” and inserting “covenant,” as well as adding “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment be changed to “two people” to allow the language to be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

Item 13-06 would amend five paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9003, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married,” as well as striking the phrase “service of Christian marriage” and inserting “worship service of marriage,” as well as striking “Marriage is a civil contract between a woman and a man.” and moving the phrase “For Christians” to the beginning of W-4.9001 and striking the phrase “by the couple” in W-4.9006. For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

Item 13-11; On Amending W-4.9000 Regarding Marriage from the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

Item 13-11 would amend four paragraphs in the Directory for Worship—W-4.9001, W-4.9002, W-4.9004, and W-4.9006. This overture would replace the current language of “a man and a woman” with the words “two people” or “two people to be married” and the language of “husband and wife” with “the couple.” The overture also seeks to strike the phrase “civil contract” in W-4.9001 and inserting “covenant,” and at the end of that same sentence, inserting “and according to the laws of the state also constitutes a civil contract.” The overture also seeks to strike “by a woman and a man to each other” and inserting “between two people.” In W-4.9006, the overture seeks to insert the phrase “or civil union” after the phrase “a civil marriage” and striking the phrase “married to one another” and inserting “united.” For overall discussions of all marriage related overtures, see the overview at the beginning of this advice as it applies to all marriage overtures.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the word “couple” in the proposed amendment Item 13-11 be changed to “two people” to allow the language be clearly translated in other languages for other racial ethnic groups in the church.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes these four overtures all seek to amend W-4.9000 and following. None of the four overtures propose to change the basic premise that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind”; rather, the overtures seek to amend the definition of marriage from “a man and a woman” to “two people.” Amending the definition of marriage to two people would alter the foundation on which previous AIs of this section have rested. A possible consequence of approving the proposed language would be that it might be challenged on the basis that it is inconsistent with Scriptures and the Confessions.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that if it is the intent of the assembly to amend the definition of marriage, the language of Item 13-04 is clear and consistent with the intent of the overtures.

Amendment: All other items in this committee are answered by the action taken on Item 13-NB.

That the 220th General Assembly (2012) approved the following resolution:

“In a desire to promote the peace, unity, and purity of the church, we move the whole Presbyterian Church U.S.A. enter into a season of serious study and discernment concerning its meaning of Christian marriage in the two-year period between the 220th General Assembly (2012) and the 221st General Assembly (2014). We would further move the Office of Theology and Worship prepare and distribute educational materials to all presbyteries and congregations. These materials should include the relevant Scriptures, key methods of biblical interpretations, current understandings of our Constitution, and some suggested guidance for prayerful and reconnecting ways of listening to one another.

“We would ask that all presbyteries report to the Office of the General Assembly on how this was conducted in their congregations at least three months prior to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

“This motion is offered in the hope and trust that such discernment will genuinely seek the rule and will of God be done in our Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as it is in Heaven under the guidance of the Triune of God.”

On Supporting the United Nations—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. [Acknowledge] [Affirm] the church’s historic support for the United Nations as an instrument of peacemaking and peace building and a guarantor of the human and legal rights of people and nations.

2. Commend the United Nations for its efforts to address global poverty, hunger, and unemployment; work for economic development; expand educational opportunities; care for creation; improve the health of the human family; combat HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria, and other diseases; and enhance the status of women, children, indigenous peoples, people of color, and others who are all too often marginalized.

3. [Call upon Presbyterians individually and collectively to pray for the efforts of the United Nations; learn about the United Nations and its work; and urge our national leaders to support fully the United Nations.] [Give thanks for the engagement of Presbyterians with the United Nations from its creation forward.]

4. Commend the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations for its long-standing witness through educational seminars, congregational programs, ecumenical and interfaith cooperation, strategic reflection, and advocacy for international justice and peace.

5. Encourage Presbyterians individually, and as congregations, mid councils, and other groups to learn about, pray for, support, and make use of the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations in its work to inspire, equip, and connect Presbyterians, Presbyterian mission personnel, and our partners for ministry as faithful disciples of Jesus in the global community and to witness to the United Nations community in the name of Jesus Christ, based on the policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assemblies.

6. Urge seminaries, universities, colleges, and campus ministries related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to provide opportunity for faculty and students to learn about the purposes and mission of the United Nations.

7. Call upon the United States government to
   a. foster peacemaking through multilateral diplomacy rather than unilateral force;
   b. support efforts to strengthen the United Nations and the rule of international law;
   c. assure that its financial obligations to the United Nations are adequately and promptly met;
   d. overturn laws that mandate an automatic cut-off of U.S. support to UN agencies that allow Palestine as a member; and
   e. show its commitments to the extension of international order by the ratification of major international treaties still pending action in the U.S., including the Law of the Sea Treaty; the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights; the Convention on the Rights of the Child; and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women.

8. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this resolution to the church, and to the president of the United States, the secretary of state of the United States, every member of Congress, the secretary general of the United Nations, the president of the United Nations General Assembly, and all missions to the United Nations.

Rationale

Inspired by Isaiah’s vision of a “peaceable kingdom,” the church must honor the dignity of every person and the intrinsic value of every creature. It is our sacred calling to pray and work for the day when none “labor in vain, or bear children for calamity” (Isa. 65:23). We do so as disciples of the One who came “that [all] may have life, and have it abundantly” (Jn. 10:10). We do so based on the directions of peacemaking among all nations in the Confession of 1967, which is grounded in God’s covenant of grace. Responding to our Creator, we celebrate the full humanity of each woman, man, and child, all created in the divine image as individuals of infinite worth. Remembering that Jesus taught, “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called children of God” (Mt. 5:9), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms that peacemaking is the believers’ calling.
The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor denominations have long recognized the need to honor the deep connections within our human family and to awaken a new spirit of international community. They have seen the United Nations playing a key role in that regard. The 155th General Assembly (1943) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America adopted a Statement of Principles on a Just Peace, two of which spoke of the need for world organization:

“We believe that international cooperation should be organized to preserve peace, maintain international law, provide adaptations to changing conditions, and that it should be directed towards cultivating the will to peace and progress” (Minutes, PCUSA, 1943, Part I, p. 167).

“We believe that by expanded collaboration of the United Nations an international conference, representative of all sovereign peoples, should be convened to work out with deliberation a comprehensive plan for a dynamic peace” (Minutes, PCUSA, 1943, Part I, p. 168).

The 156th General Assembly (1944) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America expanded this understanding:

“The usefulness of international organization in preventing recourse to force in the settlement of international disputes will depend greatly upon the scope of responsibility entrusted to it. Such a world organization must be given responsibility broad enough to exercise a constructive influence upon the life of the nations ... international organization should likewise be endowed with curative and creative responsibilities commensurate with at least the most pressing issues that arise in the relations between nations ... The provisions of peace must rest upon justice among the several races and of [humanity]” (Minutes, PCUSA, 1944, Part I, pp. 226-27).

General Assemblies since that time have reaffirmed support for the United Nations, and called for a strong United States commitment to and participation in the United Nations.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds special consultative status through the Economic and Social Council at the United Nations. The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations inspires, equips, and connects Presbyterians for ministry as faithful disciples of Jesus in the global community. The ministry advocates for peace and justice to the United Nations, based on the policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assemblies.

As the 207th General Assembly (1995) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) notes: “The commitments of the church have been grounded not only on its encounter with the world, in witness and service, but in its theological understanding of the sovereignty and love of God, and the redeeming, reconciling, peace-bringing ministry of Jesus the Christ” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, p. 489).

Rationale

Given ACWC’s yearly participation in the United Nations Commission of the Status of Women and the outstanding hosting and resourcing provided for Presbyterians at this event by the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, it stood out to us that this ministry of the PC(USA) was not mentioned in this item. For this reason along with our general appreciation for the good work done by the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, we would advise amending the item as above.

As further rationale for this advice and counsel, we cite the comment by the General Assembly Mission Council. We note the policy grounding of the overture in Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling, the Social Creed for the 21st Century and other policies indicating support for the UN’s purposes and support for its creation.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 14-01

Comment on Item 14-01—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Presbyterians have engaged with the United Nations from its beginning. We do so for theological, ecclesiastical, and practical reasons.

Reformed theology affirms God’s sovereignty and God calls us to live our faith in all aspects of life. Following the Calvin’s example, Reformed Christians, Presbyterians among them, have engaged in ministry in public life that includes serving as elected officials and engaging in advocacy that seeks to live out the church’s responsibility to assist government to become what God requires it to be.

The Body of Christ extends around the world. Our connection to our sisters and brothers calls us to active concern on their behalf. As we partner in witness to Christ around the world, events and policies impinge on our mission and call us to respond.

We live in a web of relationships. Life is bound together. As the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. reminded us, what affects one person or place directly, affects all people and places indirectly.

Rooted in this theology, expressing this ecclesiology, and recognizing this practical reality, Presbyterians have long supported international cooperation and institutions.

Even as World War II began, Presbyterians joined conversations about how to shape the world after the war. Presbyterian Elder John Foster Dulles chaired the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace of the Federal Council of Churches. The commission made a number of recommendations about the United Nations that was to come including that it should emphasize justice, human welfare, and human rights including religious freedom. It also called for membership for all countries, a commission to oversee the progress of colonies to freedom, and the limitation and reduction of arms. In 1943, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America called for the creation of an international organization that would serve humanity.

As post-war plans continued, the Presbyterians engaged in a campaign of education and advocacy that included conferences in sixty cities. When the conference on international organization that created the UN Charter met in San Francisco in April 1945, Presbyterians across the United States were called to prayer. John Foster Dulles served as an advisor to the U.S. delegation at that conference. He and others from the faith-based and secular NGO community helped draft the preamble to the UN Charter and worked to ensure a role for NGOs in relation to the UN.

Through the years, Presbyterian ministries have related to the UN as individuals, as congregations, middle governing bodies, and as a denomination. We have prayed for the UN, the nations of the world, and issues of international import. General Assemblies have passed resolutions concerning the UN’s work. Today, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds special consultative status to the UN through the UN Economic and Social Council. This allows our voice to be heard by a truly global audience and to contribute to its agenda by attending international conferences and events, making written and oral statements at these events, organizing side events at these events, and taking part in advocacy and networking.

The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations currently represents the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at the UN. The ministry inspires, equips, and connects Presbyterians for ministry as faithful disciples of Jesus in the global community. The ministry advocates for peace and justice to the United Nations, based on policies of Presbyterian General Assemblies.
In partnership with other NGOs, many of them faith-based, the ministry works on issues related to human trafficking, food and hunger, peace and security through the Security Council, religious freedom, Israel-Palestine, justice for women, and many country specific concerns. Meetings for mission partners and mission co-workers are arranged with staff members of UN programs and national missions to the UN. The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations partners with appropriate programs of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly in this work. The ministry facilitates the attendance of PC(USA) staff members at international events.

The ministry provides seminars on international issues for congregations, presbyteries, seminaries, and other groups. Sixteen groups held seminars in 2011. Every other year, the ministry cosponsors a January Term Doctor of Ministry course in partnership with Columbia Theological Seminary.

Working with Presbyterian Women, Women’s Leadership Development, the National Network of Presbyterian College Women, and Racial Ethnic Young Women Together, the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations facilitated the participation of forty-four Presbyterians in the 56th Commission on the Status of Women. The commission is the sole global-policymaking body dedicated exclusively to gender equality and the advancement of women. The Presbyterians worked with ecumenical partners to advocate on issues related to women living in rural areas around the world and their role in hunger and poverty eradication, development. This advocacy was based on policies of Presbyterian General Assemblies and input from our mission partners and co-workers as well as our partners in the World Communion of Reformed Churches.

The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations helps Presbyterians take part in concrete acts of global discipleship. Prayers for people and events around the world are provided. Trick-or-Treat for UNICEF, a project created by Presbyterians, is promoted, as is the UNICEF Tap Project that helps provide clean water for children around the world. In partnership with the Office of Child Advocacy and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, the ministry organizes Presbyterian participation in the Red Hands Campaign that addresses the use of children in situations in armed conflict. Since Presbyterians joined this international effort, eleven nations have ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. This international treaty helps establish a consensus that children are children, not soldiers.

Central to our Reformed heritage is the understanding that following Jesus involves a deep public spiritual life: taking our faith into the world to help shape the policies that guide our life together in our communities, our country, and the global neighborhood. Presbyterians live that public life as we engage with the United Nations in the name of Jesus.

On Support for the People of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC)—From the Presbytery of Boston.

The Presbytery of Boston respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take the following actions:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to call upon the United States Securities and Exchange Commission to develop and enforce regulations that fully implement the original intent of the Dodd-Frank Act’s Sections 1502 [and 1504], which require companies engaged in the extraction or use of the Congo’s minerals and resources to disclose their sources and to disclose the amounts paid to the government for access to the minerals and resources.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate to the president of the United States, the U.S. State Department, and appropriate congressional leaders the need to ensure that the fundamental human rights and the political will of the Congolese people are fully respected by the strengthening of transparent, accountable, and effective democratic institutions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and, to that end, to call upon the government of the United States to do the following:

   a. Join other nations and religious and humanitarian organizations in calling for a process that will assess the integrity of the 2011 DRC electoral processes and the extent to which the announced results accurately reflect the will of the Congolese people.
b. Join other nations and religious and humanitarian organizations in calling for the DRC government to investigate and prosecute all cases of election-related violence and to implement mechanisms to prevent further violence.

c. Work vigorously and in cooperation with the United Nations and other international agencies to stop violence against women and, in particular, the use of rape as a strategy of war.

d. Guided by the United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325, reaffirm the important role of Congolese women and children in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building, and stress the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance of peace and security, and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution.

[f.] Provide encouragement and financial and technical support to the Congolese government to provide quality education for its children and youth in order for them to become informed, active, and responsible citizens.

[g.] Urge the Congolese government to

1. Provide adequate funding for the education of all primary and secondary students;
2. Institute free primary and secondary education for all students;
3. Pay teachers adequate living wages and provide health insurance for them; and
4. Incorporate civic and electoral education into the school curriculum in order for democratic decision-making and election processes to be understood.

3. Direct the Office of Public Witness and the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations to advocate for public policy that

a. Protects the human rights of the Congolese people;

b. Promotes transparent, accountable, and effective democracy in the DRC and foster conditions conducive to free, fair, and credible elections;

c. Promotes transparency in extractive industries, monitors trade in potentially conflict minerals, and minimizes the potential for the profits of natural resources to be used to finance aggression against civilians; and

d. Promotes quality primary and secondary education in the DRC.

4. Encourage presbyteries, congregations, and individual members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to

a. Pray with the people of the Congo for justice, peace, and popular sovereignty in the DRC;

b. Learn about the history and current situation of the DRC and its people in order to forge stronger bonds with our partner churches in the DRC and to become more knowledgeable and effective advocates for justice and peace in the Congo; and

c. Engage in advocacy with U.S. public officials and policymakers to promote U.S. and international policies that foster democracy, peace, and just use of natural resources in the DRC.

[d. Contribute to the “Build Congo Schools Project” to rebuild the Presbyterian schools thru the Medical Benevolence Foundation and provide support for books, scholarships, vehicles, and teacher training thru the PC(USA)’s Congo ECO’s (E047897, E051843).]

Rationale

The Presbyterian churches of the Congo, with membership numbering more than two million, trace their roots to the 1891 missionary efforts of the U.S. Presbyterians, the Reverend William Shepherd and the Reverend Samuel Lapsley. From the outset, Presbyterian missions in the Congo modeled a holistic approach, and Presbyterians have had a particular concern for the rights, freedom, dignity, and well-being of the Congolese people. Today, as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) partners with the Presbyterian Community of Congo, the Presbyterian Community of Kinshasa, and the Eglise du Christ au Congo (the Church of Christ in the Congo), it is continually concerned by the cries of its sisters and brothers in the Congo who face violence, exploitation, and political oppression.
God has blessed the Congo with a wealth of mineral and natural resources, many of which are in high demand today as essential components in a wide range of electronic devices. Despite this great wealth, the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) remains one of the poorest nations on earth. For more than 120 years, foreign powers and a domestic elite have systematically exploited the Congo’s riches, while the vast majority of the Congolese people realize little if any benefit. Today, much of the trade in these valuable resources continues to be controlled by other countries and illegal militias. The profits that they derive from the sale of “conflict minerals” are used to finance a violent struggle for territory and power that has claimed as many as six million lives in the past twelve years and has inflicted disease, poverty, and gross violations of human rights on millions more. Women remain the primary victims of this protracted conflict, especially in the war-torn northeast region, and rape continues to be practiced with impunity as a strategy of war and subjugation. The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved a Resolution on Just Globalization that expressed its concern for the impact of global commerce on the integrity of creation, trade justice, and human rights and called, among other things, for action by U.S. agencies to promote transparency in international financial transactions. The subsequent 218th General Assembly (2008) endorsed the “Publish What You Pay” campaign for transparency in extractive industries.

Although the Congo gained independence from Belgian colonial rule in 1960, its people have never had an opportunity to taste the fruits of freedom and self-rule. The Congo quickly became a pawn in the emerging Cold War. Foreign powers, eager for access to the Congo’s immense resources, exploited regional and ethnic divisions to destabilize Congo’s first democratic government and to clear the way for the corrupt and autocratic rule of Mobutu Sese Seko. A coalition of foreign armies and local militias eventually toppled the aging Mobutu in 1997, but it was not until 2006 when the Congolese people, with the support of the United States and other nations, eventually realized their democratic aspirations by staging the country’s first free, fair, and transparent election since 1960; however, the recent election held in November 2011 was found by electoral observers from the Congolese Catholic Bishops’ Conference, the Carter Center and the European Union to be so seriously flawed that the announced results lacked credibility. Consequently, Congo advocates around the world, including the Congo Mission Network of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), have joined the Congolese Catholic Bishops and human rights groups in calling for a review of the recent election processes and their results. Both the 213th General Assembly (2001) and the 217th General Assembly (2006) called upon the U.S. government to commit resources to promote free and fair elections in the Democratic Republic of Congo.

Moreover, in the wake of the election, human rights organizations, including Amnesty International and the Center for Forced Migration Studies at Northwestern University, have recorded and validated numerous incidents of post-election violence, including assault, kidnapping, arbitrary detention, and murder. (Reports of these human rights violations can be found on the websites: www.drc.ushahidi.com and www.amnesty.org.)

In the midst of this pain, there are new shoots of hope. The Millennium Declaration issued by the United Nations member governments in 2000 urged that primary education become universally free and available. As a result, the Congo’s government has made first through fourth grades tuition free. Also, the Presbyterian churches of the Congo are helping to lay the foundation for an effectively functioning democracy and economy by providing education for 206,000 children and youth in 835 primary and secondary schools and in several tertiary education institutions.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the global community have an opportunity to support initiatives such as those of the Congolese Presbyterian churches to foster a new generation of Congolese people with an active commitment to participatory democracy, peace, and accountable governance.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

This overture addresses the sources of political instability, human rights abuses, and truncated development in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). It offers recommendations to review election processes in the DRC and institute measures to reduce violence and criminal corruption in mineral mining that are the means for maintaining rapacious political and paramilitary groups. It also proposes expanded education of the DRC population, support for its efforts as a democracy, and elimination of the criminal element from mining (by eliminating their sources of funding) so that the DRC’s ample resources can be used for the benefit of its people.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this overture be approved.

Rationale

The General Assembly has previously extended its support to the DRC in 2001 when it approved a resolution to ask the United States government to commit resources for free and fair elections (213th General Assembly [2001]), and again in 2006 for similar purposes (217th General Assembly [2006]). Yet, in spite of these efforts and similar initiatives by other... church groups such as the Congo Mission Network, human rights organizations, and concerned governments, the situation remains essentially unchanged. Its per capita income of $199 makes it one of the poorest countries in the world.\(^1\) Amnesty International states, “Throughout 2010 government forces and armed groups continued to commit serious human rights violations across the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), including extrajudicial executions, rapes and arbitrary detentions.” A long-term climate of violence has produced nearly six million deaths since 1998 and displaced more than 300,000 persons.\(^2\) In terms of governance, the DRC is ranked in the bottom 10 percent of the world’s countries on the 2011 Index of Perceived Corruption produced annually by Transparency International.\(^3\)

Corruption flourishes when there is a lack of accountability. The overture proposes a reasonable, three-pronged strategy to improve this situation. In the short-term, it seeks General Assembly support for efforts to strangle the cash cow that sustains corrupt and violent groups with illicit income from mineral wealth by calling for enforcement of the Dodd-Frank Act of 2010, which compels U.S. companies to report on the sources of minerals they utilize and prices paid to obtain them. This is one manifestation of the “Publish What You Pay” mechanism endorsed by the 218th General Assembly (2008). At the same time, the overture calls for U.S. government and United Nations assistance in building democratic institutions, protecting human rights, and ensuring free and fair elections. In the longer term, it calls upon the General Assembly to ask the U.S. government to finance the expansion of primary and secondary education in the country in order to generate over time a more informed electorate.

2. This ‘silent genocide’ compares with the more widely publicized Rwanda genocide of 1994 which produced one million deaths.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 14-02 with amendment by inserting new text as Item 2.d. and re-letter 2.d.–f. as 2.e.–g. New Item 2.d. shall read as follows:

“[d. Guided by the United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325, reaffirm the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building, and stress the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance of peace and security, and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution.]”

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns supports this and all resolutions requesting support for peacemaking. Citing a concern from the United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325 (adopted in 2000), ACWC notes that amongst civilians, women and children “account for the vast majority of those affected by armed conflict.”\(^4\) It is a well-known fact that this is the case in the DRC.

Unfortunately, what is missing from this report is the important role that women play in the peacemaking process. The United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325 cites the importance of: “Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building, and stressing the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance of peace and security, and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution.”\(^5\)

The ACWC would advise the insertion of this quotation (changing verbs to “reaffirm,” “stress,” etc.) as letter d. under Recommendation 2.

It is essential that we acknowledge (as our global leaders have) not only the victimization of women in this situation, but also the incredible abilities women have to contribute to peace in this situation if afforded the power to make decisions.

Comment on Item 14-02—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The Office of Public Witness and the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations partner in a variety of ways with our colleagues in World Mission and the Congo Mission Network to advocate for policies that pursue justice and peace in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). Both ministries involve Presbyterians in these efforts as appropriate. The Office of Public Witness advocated for, and helped Presbyterians advocate for, the Publish What You Pay campaign that calls for transparency in extractive industries and for the Conflict Minerals Act. The Office of Public Witness is leading an initiative to bring the faith community together to address the implementation of that act as well as other issues related to the DRC. The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations works with other NGOs to educate about and advocate for human rights, including free, fair and credible elections, with representatives of missions of Member States and in other parts the UN community. Both ministries provide Presbyterians with information about the DRC and opportunities for engagement in issues related to the DRC through their electronic media sources.

For Human Rights and Civic Freedom: Movements for Democratic Change in the Arab World—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Acting from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s long commitments to democracy, religious freedom, and human rights, believing these to be rooted in God’s promised reign of justice for all people, and responding to the wave of democratic changes in the Arab world begun in 2011, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

1. Approve the following affirmations and directions for its mission and witness:
   a. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), represented by its General Assembly, honors the courageous witness of millions of Tunisians, Egyptians, Libyans, Syrians, Yemenis, Bahrainis, Palestinians, and others who are seeking a major transition to democracy—sometimes despite violence and distortions—lifting up in particular commitment to peaceful change based in shared moral conviction and spiritual discipline. Movements for democratic change will continue to face obstacles (described below), reinforcing the need for wise international policies to encourage genuine self-determination, independence, and protection of minorities.
   b. “As Christians we dare not be oblivious to the erosion of human freedom wherever or to whomever it occurs. Nor dare we feel detached from the courageous actions of fellow Christians who risk life, liberty and reputation in witnessing to truth and justice in their own societies. ‘If one suffers, all suffer.’” This affirmation from “Christian Social Witness in Repressive Societies and United States Responsibility,” of the 186th General Assembly (1974) of the PCUSA, pp 160, 598, continues to represent the commitment undergirding the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s support for the “Universal Declaration of Human Rights” (1948).
   c. In mission and ecumenical partnerships with indigenous Christians, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to continue its educational, medical, religious, and justice work in ways that support the fulfillment of human aspirations and the freedom of all citizens to worship without discrimination, including ancient Christian communities and other religious minorities. In this service, the church will continue to differentiate its mission, even in humanitarian relief, from the work of the United States military and other governmental agencies.
   d. As a Christian community based in the United States, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms our heritage of separating government from religious control and yet allowing faith communities to witness for fair and wise public policies. In the Arab world, and the larger Muslim world, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) supports practices of mutual respect, tolerance, and understanding based on principles of international law and diplomacy. Aware of historic differences between Muslim and Christian understandings, the church sees these addressed best through dialogue, diplomacy, and respectful presence that recognize the importance of religion in societies. This approach is to give religious leaders standing in public debate without making religion an instrument of the state, or vice versa.
   e. Particularly in light of widespread resentment resulting from U.S. governmental support for undemocratic regimes, the church confirms its opposition to policies that support dictatorships, repress populations, and enable religious or ethnic discrimination. Such policies involve costly military aid (including security training and shared surveillance) that enables indefinite imprisonment without due process, torture of citizens and immigrants, and arrangements for military bases that exploit local weaknesses and compromise our country’s values. This approach recognizes that privileged alliances with the militaries of other nations may weaken civilian democracy in those nations and here at home, and that one people’s stability should never be sustained by another people’s subjugation.

f. The significant role of women in movements for democratic change is notable, welcome, and appropriate. Given the abuse of women that has occurred in protests and the government crackdowns on demonstrators, the church should maintain vigilance and commitment to equal rights, social protections, and access to reproductive health treatment for women in the Middle East and elsewhere, recognizing that respect for human dignity can be expressed in a range of religious and cultural forms.

g. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) finds the refusal of the United States to accept jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court to be inconsistent with respect for law, detrimental to global leadership, and destructive of human rights standards. U.S. security and policy officials, as well as the military, covert, and contractor agents of those policies, should be subject to legal accountability for abusive or criminal activities in all countries where they serve, precisely to discourage unilateral uses of force that are both costly and counterproductive.

h. Grieving the last decade of war and distraction from economic and ecological realities, the General Assembly affirms the need for extensive public debate and greater transparency on decisions to use military force. The assembly affirms the national and international legal processes of the War Powers Act and the United Nations Security Council to ensure that military intervention of any kind is undertaken as a “last resort” and reflects a high consensus among democratic nations that it may serve a “just peace.” The practices of undeclared war, including cyber attack, targeted killing by drone aircraft and other means, covert infiltration and “false flag” operations (that set up others for blame), expand government power, and threaten civil liberties as well as the national sovereignty of other nations. This recognizes that General Assemblies have supported humanitarian military intervention to prevent genocide (as in 1998), while favoring non-military intervention insofar as possible.

i. Threats of terrorism should be addressed primarily as matters of international policing and as part of the civilian criminal justice system, given the dangers of military overreaction, indefinite counterinsurgency and counterterrorism operations, and possible abuse of due process. The denial of due process to anyone, anywhere, makes everyone, everywhere, vulnerable to abuses in the name of national security.

j. In determining legitimate U.S. national interests amid changing regional alliances and shifts in power, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms that human rights standards are vital to our national identity and purpose, as well as rooted in our Reformed awareness of sin and historical complexity. Support for democratic freedoms is of greater long-term value than guaranteeing access to cheap labor or resources by military alliances and bases. Greater security is likely from an environmentally proactive strategy to minimize global disruptions due to famine, extreme weather events, forced migrations, ethnic or religious cleansing, land seizures, and states with failed governance.

2. Based on the preceding affirmations, approve the following measures:

a. For study and action by members and congregations:

   (1) Members and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are encouraged to consider prayerfully the biblical message as it relates to the behavior of nations and the role of the church in influencing government policy, understanding that Reformed Christians have consistently sought to reform society as part of their witness to God’s justice in the world. In their reflection on this resolution, members and congregations are encouraged to familiarize themselves further on the democratic and Islamist struggles across Northern Africa, the Middle East, and SW-Central Asia, and to consider appropriate forms of solidarity with Christian communities in these regions.

   (2) Church councils (sessions) and presbyteries that develop partnerships with churches and ministries in other countries are encouraged to consult with Presbyterian World Mission personnel and to consider the justice implications of travel and other arrangements. Presbyterians are encouraged to consider travel in predominantly or partly Arab and Muslim countries, taking into account justice and security concerns, and connecting when possible with Christians in those nations. The World Mission ministry area is requested to provide appropriate regional travel guidance and advice on how not to jeopardize church partners.

   (3) Members and congregations, and the church as a whole, are encouraged to consider what an “awakening” might mean for the United States, whether in counting the costs of recent wars, recognizing or memorializing all those dead and wounded in order to honor and learn from their sacrifices, or supporting social movements that deepen our own democratic processes and strengthen moral values.

b. In conjunction with the Peace Discernment process authorized by the 219th General Assembly (2010), and in relation to U.S. foreign and military experience and policy:

   (1) Members and friends of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), particularly those with experience in Arab and/or Muslim countries, are encouraged to share their responses to this resolution and other reflections on their work or service. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is directed to provide a suitable web posting of all respectful viewpoints (www.pcusa.org/acswp; a section of www.justiceUnbound.org may also be devoted to this discussion).

(2) Members, congregations, agencies, and ecumenical bodies are encouraged to consider new options in foreign policy and to support efforts of the United Nations Security Council and Department of Peace-Keeper Operations to implement alternative forms of peacebuilding, including unarmed civilian peacekeeping and nonviolent intervention, public initiatives of mutual forgiveness, and truth and reconciliation commissions, and to share their reflections on the work of these bodies and initiatives.

(3) Presbyterian elected officials, diplomats, and administrators in areas addressed in this resolution are invited to respond to the affirmations and background statement and to participate in briefings, seminars, and adult education programs. The General Assembly recognizes the moral pressure that concerns for human rights, security, self-determination, and political survival put upon all participants in the U.S. political process.

(4) Presbyterian military leaders and civilian defense officials are invited to consider and respond to the concerns of the church in light of their understanding of the complex and changing threats to the United States, its allies, and other nations. Chaplains and others teaching and supporting military or security personnel are encouraged to explore methods that work with conscience and trauma (including “soul repair”). Such new approaches to reconciliation may prevent abuses of human rights (including women in the military itself) and spiritual damage to soldiers (whose addiction and suicide rates have been increasing).

c. For action by agencies of the General Assembly:

(1) The Office of the General Assembly is directed to support the reflection and action of members by making the text of this resolution available electronically and in a limited print run suitable for sharing with elected representatives, military leaders, and ecumenical partners in the United States and overseas.

(2) The Office of Public Witness, the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, and other ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency/GAMC are directed to represent and advocate for policies consistent with the affirmations above, including measures to expand the role and funding of international diplomacy, peace-keeping, and peace-building; to encourage the protection of human rights and civil liberties, for all citizens and communities; to increase support for nuclear nonproliferation and a nuclear-free Middle East; to advocate for treaties to strengthen international justice systems; to strengthen safeguards over government (and commercial) electronic surveillance and data collection; to develop public guidelines on the use of drone aircraft in targeted killings; to reduce the influence of private contractors on military procurement policy and operation of military bases; and to strengthen ethics, disclosure, and conflict of interest policies for agents of foreign governments and others lobbying and advocating on behalf of foreign interests and military engagement.

(3) The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations and other ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are encouraged to observe Interfaith Harmony Week in the first week of February and other measures to build understanding and minimize hostility among faiths, in accordance with the General Assembly’s 1997 statement on Respectful Presence. Appropriate PC(USA) bodies are encouraged to cooperate with the Fellowship of the Middle East Evangelical (Protestant) Churches and other partners in assessing such efforts and their implications for the life and witness of Middle Eastern Christians.

Rationale

Summary:

This is a U.S. Christian response to the outpouring of hope that has challenged dictatorships in the Middle East, Africa, and several Asian countries. Along with hope, there has also been rage at injustice, sometimes misdirected, and desire for better material life. Each country has its own particularities, and our partners within these countries differ by age and institutional perspective, with younger Arab Christians often expressing more optimism. Overall this movement has changed assumptions about Arab and Muslim religion and politics, and called into question foreign policies that have too often enabled authoritarian leaders or accommodated oligarchies. The church’s traditional support for democracy and human rights is applied to this new context, with sensitivity to Christian-Muslim relations and advocacy for the rights of religious minorities—Christian in many cases. Military and political leaders have underestimated religious and ethnic dynamics, such as the assertion of Shia identity across many nations. One objective is to provide guidance to members and councils of the church that moves beyond the common image that Muslims-are-dangerous-and-undemocratic. Yet, we must acknowledge that public opinion of the U.S. in the Arab world is strongly negative and that some groups gaining power by democratic means may not be committed to religious freedom, equal rights for women, and other human rights.
This resolution thus encourages stronger U.S. support for democratic transitions and a recovery of a clearer respect for human rights. This means shifting diplomatic, aid, and military policies to back fundamental human aspirations and not sacrificing them to stability and access to oil. With the advance of their own healthy forms of democracy, and with more positive relationships between the Arab world and the Western powers, we can have realistic hope that war and terrorism will lessen and pressure on Christian and other religious minorities will diminish—though not overnight, or without risk of continued suffering. Because this calls for a significant transition in U.S. foreign policy, this background rationale summarizes some of the major recent policy debates about U.S. force projection in and beyond the Iraq and Afghan wars.

Historical Context:

The “Arab Awakening” of 2011 that has brought new leaders to power in Tunisia, Egypt, Libya, Yemen, and elsewhere has revealed a long-suppressed thirst for freedom and democracy across the Arab world and beyond. Despite the efforts of dictators and their security forces, much of the new social mobilization has been peaceful, nonviolent, and committed to freedom of press, assembly, and other forms of open communication. This widespread movement has altered power relations fundamentally even in states whose leaders remain in place and violence is used, such as Syria, and is affecting international alliances in an equally profound way. The 2011 Nobel Peace Prize was awarded to three women, one from Yemen and two from Lebanon, lifting up their work for democratic change in their countries and implicitly encouraging the further spread of peaceful methods. These women are Tawakkol Karman, Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, and Leymah Gbowee. The role of a U.S. peace theorist, Gene Sharp, has been widely debated, based on the tactics and ethos of nonviolence used. Overall, we recognize God’s Spirit at work in the countless brave struggles by Muslims, Christians, those of other faiths, and those of no formal faith. We encourage wiser policies by our government to support fundamental human aspirations, free from the lingering yoke of colonialism or empire.

The last ten years of U.S. foreign policy have been deeply marked by two wars of questionable necessity and a growth of security concerns justified by a “war on terror.” The death of Osama Bin Laden and the tenth year anniversary of 9/11 have opened perspectives on new realities and attitudes. The NATO-led air war in support of insurgent forces in Libya underlined the need to shift policies in advance of popular movements; the legacies of long support for foreign militaries can be seen in Egypt as well as Bahrain, and Pakistan; new forms of “low level” warfare with CIA and drones are underway in Yemen and Somalia and elsewhere; reluctance within the U.S. military to end occupation was evident in Iraq even as that military-based effort at nation-building has produced limited democracy, much corruption, and an undercurrent of rage. (Afghanistan, while having some similar governance and counter-insurgency challenges, is a different case beyond this resolution’s focus.) That element of rage and resentment in Iraq assures a continued attraction to terrorism by some, in the absence of a more constructive project built on mutual respect. The emergence of a nation in Southern Sudan, despite massive ongoing tragedy, suggests the need for a stronger United Nations role in raising standards for governance, plebiscites, peace-keeping, and peace-building.

Church and Interfaith Context:

Not all change is good change. We recognize how Egyptian, Syrian, and Lebanese Christians are threatened by new developments, especially in light of the score-settling and religious-cleansing that has occurred in Iraq. The U.S. is not responsible for inciting all interreligious violence in the area, but church representatives from the region have agreed that many U.S. policies have not been helpful, heightening vulnerability of indigenous Christians to popular movements and Muslim extremists (as happened already under Mubarak). Although they are not “Western,” Christians in the Arab World are sometimes perceived as proxies of the West and targeted for retaliation for Western foreign policy, particularly U.S. support for Israel’s occupation of Palestine. Through no fault of their own, this leaves Arab Christians in a no-man’s land, not at home in either East or West. In Iran, despite major international tensions, Christians, Jews, and some other religious minorities in Iran have been relatively safe, though freedom to maintain church facilities has been restricted. Zoroastrians and Bahai’s experience significant danger, and the suppression of the “Green movement” in 2009 continues to affect public life.

The Book of Order affirms that “the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels seeks new opportunities for conversation and understanding with non-Christian religious entities…. and common action with secular organizations and agencies where such approaches show promise of serving the mission of the Church in the world” (Book of Order, G-5.0102–0103). General Assemblies provide practical and theological guidance for such efforts. The 209th General Assembly (1997) stated that:

In a world of many bitter divisions to which, sadly, religious differences often contribute, there is an urgent call to all people of faith to seek understanding and cooperation. In response to this vocation, Christians should be eager to seek fellowship with people of other religions, work together with them, and celebrate our common concerns and values, all the while being alert to the great sensitivity this practice requires. (Minutes, 1997, Part I, p. 435)

The 211th General Assembly (1999) affirmed that, “In the spirit of Jesus Christ, we are called to maintain a respectful presence with people of other faiths” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 31). The 209th General Assembly (1997) defined respectful presence as “a way to follow Jesus of Nazareth, who met with people of many cultures and religions even as he fulfilled the nature and purpose of his God-given mission” (Minutes, 1997, Part I, p. 440). World Interfaith Harmony Week provides an opportunity to practice such respectful presence, which can include interfaith dialogues, shared meals, joint service projects, or praying for peace in the Middle East and around the world.
As this paper is written, efforts at regime change and government resistance are threatening intensified violence in Syria. After the removal of Yemen’s ruler, and after elections in Egypt and Tunisia, there is a worldwide debate on how much power extreme Islamists will gain in open electoral processes. An early lesson has been that the much-demonized Muslim Brotherhood is not monolithic, whether among its seventy or so national affiliates or within nations, such as Egypt, where government forces and religious extremists have attacked Christian churches and peaceful protests. Clearly, the role of communications and media is crucial for the progressive and sometimes secular forces of change in any country—well understood by Syria’s Assad—but even the conservative groups know how important public moral acceptance has become. Regional public outrage against Syria’s crackdown has prompted the Arab League to take unprecedented steps to isolate that regime, but on the ground, Christian partners report violence from forces other than the Syrian government and real dangers to religious coexistence in an expanded civil war.

Democratic stirrings have not ended Shi’a/Sunni tensions in places like Bahrain, Iraq, and Pakistan (properly part of Southwestern Asia). Saudi Arabia helped the government of Bahrain—host to the U.S. Fifth Carrier Group—crush a movement of its majority population of Shi’ites who were out in mass, protesting for reforms. King Abdullah of Jordan identifies with concern an “arc” of Iranian-Shi’ite interest across the region to Hezbollah in Lebanon. The memory of the Green Movement in Iran itself is not forgotten, even as the U.S. and Israel in particular exert force that some observers consider covert war, mysterious assassinations, explosions, and cyber warfare (the “stuxnet” virus, virtually claimed by the Israeli government). In early 2012, that cold war is getting hotter. Certainly some of the same people involved in advocating the Iraq war are now urging a more overt Iran war, undeterred by the same ambiguities about national intention and actual threat level. The need for unambiguous antinuclear proliferation on a region-wide basis makes concern for Iranian (and Pakistani) nuclear development selective; the lesson a military might draw from the Libyan revolution is to keep one’s nuclear program to prevent intervention rather than give one up as Qaddafi did.

Since World War II, U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East has been chiefly driven by dependence on oil and concern for our ally, Israel. Both during the Cold War and after 1989, these priorities have put a premium on stability of governments that accept overall U.S. influence in the region, often at the expense of the freedom for the local people. (The U.S. support of the Shah of Iran is a good example.) President Carter’s “doctrine,” that the United States had vital security interests in that access to oil, merely formalized a stance that has been confirmed in several wars and the construction of military bases throughout the Persian Gulf. The presence of U.S. forces itself increases tensions with nationalists and Muslim fundamentalists; the worsening situation of the Palestinians increases religious as well as political polarization. Religious extremists take out some of their hostilities on Christian minorities associated with the United States, which is inevitably linked to the policies of Israel’s government.

The background statement to a brief resolution can only point to the larger changes in international affairs related to what the Egyptians and Tunisians call their “revolutions.” We have maintained here that the moral dimension in the popular movements is essential to recognize; we have not analyzed the economic desperation and population forces at work as well. Nor does this background statement treat the growing reality of interdependence that increasingly constrains unilateral action, involving Russian and China in Syria and India and other nations in relation to Iran. Turkey, rebuffed by Europe on the European Communities and now glad of it, has turned more of its attention to the Middle East and, with a somewhat more democratic and Islamist Egypt, is likely to play a growing role, with Kurdistan its only Achilles’ heel. Along with Iran, Turkey now vies for regional dominance. One challenge is to see this interdependence and the mutual contaminations it involves as beneficial to peace.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its ecumenical partners have strongly supported the concept of human rights, respect for international law, and the use of diplomacy rather than force in conflict situations. At the same time, the witness of the churches and others for “principle-driven” international relations has not prevented massive military build-up in the Middle East and nuclear proliferation in nearby Pakistan and India, as well as Israel. To understand the differences between “principle-driven” and realist perspectives on the Middle East and more broadly, a debate between John Ikenberry and Stephen Walt, posted on Walt’s blog site, may be illuminating. The legacies of the second Iraq war and ensuing occupation, and the Afghanistan engagement, have not built either confidence in U.S. judgment or respect for the morality of U.S. practice. Torture and Guantanamo Bay aside, the increases in drone warfare and covert action raise questions about official U.S. war aims. Cost factors are increasingly raised at home, but overall U.S. military expenditure—apart from money borrowed for the Iraq and Afghan wars—remains almost twice its pre-9/11 levels. It is estimated at 43 percent of world military expenditure. Hence the need for the churches and others to present an alternative vision of a U.S. role that moves “beyond empire,” or into a more multilateral and less military-based framework.

The 2008 paper “commended for study” by that year’s General Assembly, “To Repent, To Restore, To Rebuild, and To Reconcile,” supported the action of that assembly to urge an orderly end to the Iraq war and a morally-appropriate contribution to the reconstruction of that country. That paper also addressed matters of “empire,” an understanding of national purpose then current in the George W. Bush administration and among neo-conservative “hawks” in foreign policy. “Full-spectrum dominance” was another expression used to emphasize the unilateral capacity of the United States military to fight at least two major wars and to project force around the globe. “Empire,” understood as a more complex set of dominating relationships—economic, political, and military—was also presented in the 2004 Accra statement of the World Alliance (now, Communion) of Reformed Churches. Accra’s understanding of hegemony, inequality, and environmental unsustainability has been increasingly seen as prescient given the credit collapse of Fall 2008 and increasing criticism of unregulated globalization as an intensifier of economic inequality within and among countries.19

This resolution does not take a particular position on the question of “empire.” It does note the extensive pattern of wars, alliances, and bases—especially in the Middle East—that give rise to the discussion of empire. Two books by Asia scholar Chalmers Johnson, Blowback (2000) and Sorrows of Empire (2004), have helped popularize the phrase, “blowback,” which comes from military intelligence to refer to the public fallout, anger, and resentment of military action, particularly overseas. This points to perhaps the largest challenge for Presbyterians and other U.S. citizens: the need to understand how we are perceived by others around the world, especially by those from very different cultures and historical experiences. Certainly there are deep resentments, and many efforts to blame outsiders for internal problems. Yet in order to move forward and to face new economic and environmental dilemmas, new approaches are needed. This resolution is an effort to prepare Presbyterians for that new thinking, and to encourage our church to play a constructive role in an often contentious, but essential, public debate.

Beyond, but emphatically including reflection on the Arab democratic movements, is the larger question of the direction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s peace witness overall. In 2010, the General Assembly approved a new process of discernment designed both to encourage members to encounter the nonviolent witness of Jesus in new ways, and to encourage “new thinking” in the church, thirty years after the landmark policy statement, Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling.20 This resolution explicitly invites thinking about how peaceful reconciliation and democratic social change can be combined, and what (very different) roles our church and our country can and should play. Commissioners are encouraged to discuss this resolution in the context of “peace discernment groups” in their congregations and presbyteries over the coming year. The discernment assignment helps commend study and action on this document in a dialogical and partly on-line way; readers may also find the invitation to the Peace Discernment process of considerable interest. Human Rights Update 2012—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) bring to the attention of the church significant trends and developments in human rights, particularly in the areas of women’s reproductive health care, workers’ rights and domestic civil liberties by:

1. Directing the Stated Clerk to post on-line this “Human Rights Update 2012,” include it in the General Assembly social witness policy CD, and encourage its study and use in advocacy on matters of Christian ethical concern and General Assembly action;

2. Requesting that “Human Rights Day,” December 10, be included in the program calendar, liturgical resources, web-postings, and public witness activities of appropriate General Assembly Mission Council offices;

3. Requesting that the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy continue to monitor and report on international and domestic trends to help Presbyterians and others understand the context for discipleship and challenges to the Gospel vision of human dignity, which includes human rights, responsibilities, and liberties for all; and

4. Encouraging members, sessions, and other councils of the church to pray for all victims of human rights violations, and for those who persecute them, while also finding ways to act on behalf of those victims.

5. Directing the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to include forced abortions, gender and disability selection based abortions, and infanticide within its next Human Rights Update study.

Rationale

Introduction

In this twenty-third Human Rights Update we focus on three areas of domestic concern: access to reproductive health care, the rights of workers, and challenges to civil liberties first guaranteed in the Bill of Rights. In each area, the General Assembly has stated its concerns in the past. Some of that social witness policy is quoted in each case, showing ways that new developments call for continued study and advocacy. It may be that commissioners will want to lift up concerns within these reports for additional action, beyond the suggestions for personal witness that follow each description of current challenges. In these areas and many others, we honor those individuals called to work on safeguarding the rights of others, and defending their own rights, knowing that “the price of liberty is eternal vigilance.” It is also the case, whether the Human Rights Update surveys developments in other nations or in our own, that attacks on human rights in any area diminish us all.

The three focal topics of this update are not today’s only pressing human rights issues. This General Assembly is also receiving a resolution on “Movements for Democratic Change in the Arab World” that makes recommendations for how the United States should respond. Past Human Rights Updates have expressed concerns for the many abuses committed by dictatorships in the Arab world, and for restrictions on the rights of Christians and other religious minorities. To mark Human Rights Day 2011, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s internet justice journal, Unbound, published a set of short articles on Indigenous Land Rights edited by Carol Robb, professor of Christian Ethics at San Francisco Theological Seminary.1 Other human rights witness is part of the regular work of the Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C., and the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, as well as part of the commitments to fairness and conscience of thousands of Presbyterians throughout the U.S. legal system.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) focused on human trafficking, torture (the most fundamental violation of human rights), and detention policies, primarily those governing immigrants and asylum seekers in the United States. That General Assembly also authorized the formation of a new network of Presbyterian advocates for restorative justice in the criminal justice system. Given the millions of U.S. citizens arrested at some point in their lives, and the millions who are convicted and imprisoned (at the highest rate in the world), the need for Christian wisdom and witness seems evident. The Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns has lifted up the great differential in incarceration rates between Caucasian Americans and persons of color.

What difference does human rights concern make? We believe it has helped shape international relations, particularly since the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, strongly supported by the churches at that time. Individuals are freed when international attention focuses on their cases, but government policy is also a focus for human rights. Last assembly’s report on torture noted the substantial difference in outlook between “mainline” and “conservative evangelical” Christians on the permissibility of torture. In some measure, that difference in outlook reflects church teaching and attitudes toward punishment and human rights. Christian witness, in groups such as “No2Torture,” then contributed to the widespread recognition of moral boundaries that helped limit government practices of “enhanced interrogation” such as water-boarding, rendition to third countries for torture, and imprisonment without due process.

David Cole, professor of Law at Georgetown University, in reviewing how developments since 9/11/01 influenced the rule of law in the United States, argues strongly for the role of public opinion and witness in shaping government behavior:

One of the most important lessons of the past decade may be that the rule of law, seemingly so vulnerable in the attacks’ aftermath, proved far more resilient than many would have predicted. … The American constitutional system ordinarily relies on courts and checks and balances to impose legal restrictions on government officials. But in this period, with one significant exception, restraint of the government was brought about neither by judicial enforcement of constitutional law nor by legislative checks on executive power, but by civil society’s demands for adherence to the basic principles of human rights. Ten years and one administration later, the threats, both to our security and to our liberty, are far from over. But the experience of the last ten years shows the importance of maintaining public pressure for fidelity to our core principles as we enter the second decade of the “war on terror.”

The biblical witness is the foundation of our understanding on how we are called to love our neighbors as we love ourselves. From the early understanding of God’s image on human beings, through the Fall and the great work of redemption in Christ, God calls us to walk in the ways of justice and righteousness. Past Human Rights Updates have contained study guides examining Bible passages in depth. The prophet Ezekiel, for example, wrestles with differences in the perceived judgments of God over the course of history in chapter twenty. Yet the call to resist idolatry and human sacrifice in all its forms is clear, as is our basic direction: “I the Lord am your God; walk in my statutes, and be careful to observe my ordinances, and hallow my Sabbaths that they may be a sign between me and you, that you may know that I the Lord am your God” (Ezekiel 20: 19-20).

I. Human Rights: Women’s Reproductive Health Care

A. The Human Rights of Women

Throughout human history, women’s health, the well-being of their families, including existing children and aging parents, and society’s need for their productive labor have required what today we call “family planning.” In ancient cultures, women used a variety of herbs that had contraceptive effects, as well as herbs and procedures known to bring on menses. While these practices were never as effective or safe on the individual level as the contraceptive drugs and procedures developed in modern times, they were effective enough to impact population levels.

Determining whether to have children, when and how often, may seem to be an especially personal matter. However, women’s control over their reproductive lives has also been a political issue in many cultures. In 1948, responding to the atrocities of WWII, the U.N. adopted The Universal Declaration on Human Rights, which states that “recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world” (Preamble).

Thirty years later, in 1979, the U.N. determined that on-going and extensive discrimination against women continued, “violating the principles of equality of rights and respect for human dignity” set forth in 1948. Therefore, it adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women. Among the convention’s enumerated rights is the right of women “to decide freely and responsibly on the number and spacing of their children and to have access to the information, education and means to enable them to exercise these rights” (Article 16.1.e).

B. In the United States

In the history of the U.S., women’s need to responsibly control reproductive capacities has been an essential part of the struggle for social and economic equality with men. For example, the ability of middle- and upper-income white women to reduce their birth rate significantly, from more than seven children in 1800 to 3.5 children by the end of that century, was part of their struggle to gain education and employment and to safeguard their health. Yet, this reduction of white birth rates gave rise to both racist and nativist fears. As a result, in the last half of the 1800s, laws were passed forbidding the use, advertisement, or provision of contraception. Performing an abortion at any stage became a felony in many states. Thus, contraception and access to abortion became illegal. At the same time, however, state health departments forcibly sterilized poor women of color and immigrant women in an attempt to keep America “American,” as President Coolidge put it.

Laws denying women access to contraception and abortion remained in effect throughout the first half of the 20th century. However, in the midst of women’s changing roles and organization for equality after WWII, and with the development of better contraceptives, public attitudes toward contraception and abortion began to change. Laws prohibiting the distribution of contraception were overturned in the 1960s. In 1966, the federal government began to subsidize voluntary family planning services for low-income families. In response to the horrendous conditions under which illegal abortions were performed, almost fourteen hundred clergy organized to refer women to physicians for safe, albeit illegal, abortions.\textsuperscript{7} In 1973, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned many federal and state restrictions on abortion, making it legal once more.

As we write this report in February 2012, a number of legislative proposals at both the federal and state levels would again restrict women’s access to contraception, abortion, and a broader range of reproductive health services for low-income families.

- Use of religious liberty arguments to exempt Roman Catholic institutions and other employers from providing, or allowing insurers to provide, contraceptive coverage or information to employees and students of all religious perspectives: This controversy arose in early 2012 in response to the federal mandate that contraception be included in all health insurance coverage. While the law exempts those institutions performing specifically religious functions, Roman Catholic bishops maintained that the law violated their religious beliefs by requiring Catholic institutions (such as universities, social service agencies, and health providers) to cooperate in acts they consider immoral, e.g., contraception. Subsequently, Senator Rubio introduced the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 2012 (S2043) which would allow any employer, based on their personal religious beliefs, to refuse to provide contraceptive coverage or coverage for related education and counseling.

If such an absolute concept of religious freedom is upheld, millions of women would be denied insurance coverage of contraception through their employment. Women would be burdened by having to purchase contraception directly or by purchasing an individual insurance plan. Depending on the type and effectiveness of the method, birth control can range from $10 to $100 monthly. This would place a severe economic burden on many families and especially on low-wage women. Moreover, the religious freedom of women whose religious traditions or personal beliefs support the use of contraception as a moral and necessary healthcare choice (98 percent of American women) would be compromised. The concept of religious freedom articulated by the Roman Catholic bishops stands in stark contrast to that in the Reformed Tradition which preserves the “[right] of private judgment, in all matters that respect religion” as a right that must be “equal and common to all others” (F-3.0101b).\textsuperscript{8}

Loss of access to reproductive health care due to the merger of public or private hospitals with Roman Catholic hospitals: Nationwide, larger and financially stronger Catholic hospitals are merging with smaller hospitals to achieve greater efficiencies. However, when such mergers occur, reproductive health services deemed immoral by the Roman Catholic Church become unavailable in that merged hospital and may become unavailable to an entire community if it has only one hospital. Such services include abortion (including emergency contraception for rape victims), sterilization, and in vitro fertilization. Doctors express concern about their freedom to treat women with various serious conditions such as an ectopic pregnancy or miscarriage. In a recent example, a Catholic nun was excommunicated for allowing the abortion of a five-week old fetus. The woman’s doctors believed the abortion to be necessary due to the woman’s severely fragile health and the strong likelihood that she would not survive the pregnancy. She was too weak to be transported to a non-Catholic hospital.\textsuperscript{9,10}

- Attempts to eliminate funding of reproductive health care services for low-income families: Media attention has highlighted attempts to deny federal or state funding specifically to Planned Parenthood—half of whose patients are Medicaid patients and more than 90 percent of whose services are related to contraception, testing and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases, pregnancy tests and prenatal care, cancer screening and prevention, adoption referrals, and primary care. Federal law already prohibits the use of federal funds to finance the 3 percent of services related to abortion.

Less attention has fallen on the bills before the U.S. House of Representatives (such as H.R. 408 and 1099) that would simply eliminate Title X, which funds family planning clinics for low-income and uninsured people, providing such services as contraception, cancer screening, screening and treatment for sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV, pregnancy diagnosis and prenatal care. While most women use contraceptive pills over other forms of contraception, almost half of those using the pill use it also to regulate menstruation and to reduce pain.\textsuperscript{11} The targeting of Title X and Planned Parenthood places in jeopardy a wide range of reproductive health care services for low-income women and men.

- Personhood Initiatives. Mississippi made the news in November 2011, when its citizens defeated a ballot initiative that would define a fertilized egg as a human person with legal rights. Voters expressed concern that the definition would not only criminalize abortion, but end the use of those contraceptives that block the fertilized egg from implanting in the lining of the uterus, such as the “morning-after” pill. It would endanger in vitro fertilization, which implants fertilized eggs in the womb (often unsuccessfully) and freezes, stores, and disposes of unused fertilized eggs. Physicians expressed concerns about its impact on their ability to treat difficult pregnancies, such as ectopic pregnancies. Sponsors of the initiative say that they intend to introduce the ballot measure in several other states in 2012: California, Florida, Montana, Ohio, Nevada, Oregon, and others.\textsuperscript{12}

- Expanding the restrictions on the use of federal funds for abortions and physician education. The Hyde amendment already restricts federal funds from paying for abortions. Several bills before the U.S. House of Representatives, such as H.R. 3, would expand this restriction to deny any federal funding to organizations and companies that provide or pay for abortions with non-federal funds. For example, it would deny tax credits to companies that offer health plans that cover abortions. It would block anyone with insurance that covers abortions from receiving federal subsidies or medical cost tax deductions, even if the abortion portion is paid separately with personal funds. Women who use tax-free Medical Savings Accounts would have to pay taxes on the costs of abortions. The Foxx amendment to H.R. 1216 would ban federal funds from being used to train physicians in abortion care. At the state level, thirteen states have passed legislation banning both private and public health insurance plans that would participate in state health exchanges from covering abortion services unless necessary to save a woman’s life.

C. Beyond the United States

The difficulties in accessing reproductive health care encountered by women in the United States are magnified on the global stage for women of many other nations, particularly those women living in poverty. Universal access to reproductive health remains an elusive goal even though codified in the 2007 modification of the 2000 United Nations (UN) Millennium Development Goals (MDG).

Reproductive health was initially defined at the International Conference on Population and Development, held in Cairo in 1994. Its definition is fundamentally an expansion of the World Health Organization’s (WHO) definition of health:

Reproductive health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity, in all matters relating to the reproductive system and its functions and processes. Reproductive health therefore implies that people are able to have a satisfying and safe sex life and that they have the capability to reproduce and the freedom to decide if, when and how often to do so. Implicit in this last condition are the right of men and women to be informed and to have access to safe, effective, affordable and acceptable methods of family planning of their choice, as well as other methods of their choice for regulation of fertility which are not against the law, and the right of access to appropriate health care services that will enable women to go safely through pregnancy and childbirth and provide couples with the best chance of having a healthy infant.

The current World Health Organization (WHO) goal for reproductive health is

… the attainment by all peoples of the highest possible level of sexual and reproductive health … [in] a world where all women’s and men’s rights to enjoy sexual and reproductive health are promoted and protected, and all women and men, including adolescents and those who are underserved or marginalized, have access to sexual and reproductive health information and services.

There are five components to the WHO strategy to achieve global reproductive health. They include:

- improving maternal care before, during, and after delivery, and newborn care;
- providing high-quality services for family planning, including infertility services;
- eliminating unsafe abortion;
- combating sexually transmitted infections, including HIV, reproductive tract infections, cervical cancer, and other sexual and reproductive health morbidities;
- promoting sexual health.

The WHO notes that addressing access to reproductive health “also contributes significantly to reducing poverty and hunger (MDG 1), promoting gender equality and empowerment of women (MDG 3) and combating HIV and other diseases (MDG 6)” all of which play a key role in access to reproductive health.

Despite modest improvements in some narrow areas, achieving greater progress toward universal access to reproductive health remains a matter of urgency. In 2010 the report on global progress toward the MDG 5B made the following data based conclusions:

- More women are receiving antenatal care;
- Most maternal deaths could have been avoided;
- Giving birth is especially risky in regions where most women deliver without skilled care;
- The proportion of women attended at least once during pregnancy by skilled health personnel is strongly correlated with socioeconomic status;
- Only one in three rural women in developing regions receive the recommended care during pregnancy;
- Progress has stalled in reducing the number of teenage pregnancies, and poverty and lack of education perpetuate high adolescent birth rates;
- Increasing access to contraception could reduce maternal death by 27 percent and reduce the number of unintended pregnancies from 75 million to 22 million;
- Almost no improvement has been made in increasing contraceptive prevalence among poor or uneducated women.

The Geneva Policy Dialogue Series on Reproductive Health, an international discussion forum on reproductive health, puts it succinctly:

Women with unmet need account for 82% of the 75 million unintended pregnancies that occur in the developing world. We know that every year more than half a million women die unnecessarily during childbirth or from pregnancy complications. The lives of these women and of their chil-
There is a direct positive correlation between the density of health workers (physicians, nurses, and midwives) and maternal, child, and infant survival. The population density of health care professionals required to ensure skilled attendance at births (at a minimum desired level of coverage) is 2.5 per 1,000 people in order to reduce maternal and infant morbidity and mortality. At least fifty-seven nations fall below this benchmark (compared with 11.93 physicians, nurses, and midwives per 1,000 people in the U.S.). The U.S. is, in part, responsible for this global health workforce shortage by its failure to pursue a policy of health workforce self-sufficiency, leading to active recruitment of migrant health workers (nurses, specifically) to sustain the U.S. health-care system. The U.S. has not implemented the WHO Global Code of Practice on the International Recruitment of Health Personnel. The Milbank Memorial Fund report Health Worker Shortages and Global Justice recommends that the United States should use bilateral and multilateral agreements to embody its specific commitments to solving the global health worker shortage. The agreements could cover health workforce self-sufficiency for the United States and partner countries; financial and technical support for health workforce capacity building; managing and monitoring health worker migration between countries; … and facilitating remittance transfers and the diaspora in the United States to assist with the development of the health systems in migrant workers’ home countries.

Faith-based organizations (FBOs) have played a significant and important role in providing maternal and neonatal health care globally, particularly in African countries. The 2007 USAID report Faith-Based Models [FBM] for Improving Maternal and Newborn Health [MNH] notes that:

In the developing world, however, faith-based health care facilities provide a significant percentage of health care services. In Sub-Saharan Africa, for example, faith-based facilities provide up to 70% of the region’s health care services. In other parts of the world, FBOs manage 10–30% of national health sectors. It is estimated that more than 90% of these FBO facility- and community-based programs offer MNH services.

In a review of FBOs providing maternal and neonatal services in Africa, Widmer and colleagues concluded that the maternal-infant services provided by FBOs were similar to services offered by government agencies, but that the quality of the care was better and care recipient satisfaction higher. The UN Population Fund (UNFPA) noted the provision of intangible services:

In addition to providing care, support and medicines, faith-based organizations often also provide less tangible assistance, such as information, encouragement, compassion and hope. Too often the strengths (efficacy, commitment, knowledge, networks and influence) and experiences of FBOs are overlooked by development planners.

There has been, is, and will continue to be a significant and critical role for all faith-based organizations in moving our own nation and the world toward universal access to reproductive health.

D. How Our Faith Responds

The PC(USA) has repeatedly affirmed the equality of women and men both within the church itself and within society. In 1971, the UPCUSA described the meaning of this equality:

The church must challenge and change anything which interferes with a person’s full development and wholeness. It must reject attempts to force persons into stereotypes which destroy personhood and deny human freedom and creativity. The church should not program lifestyles for its members. Each person living in responsible relationship with the whole community is free to decide what that style will be.

When applied to women’s reproductive capacities, this principle of freedom from socially imposed stereotypes has led the church to recognize women’s rights to responsibly manage reproductive capabilities and society’s responsibility to enable women to do so.

1. Contraception: The 1960 PCUS assembly approved “the principle of voluntary family planning and responsible parenthood.” It affirmed that “the proper use of medically approved contraceptives may contribute to the spiritual, emotional, and economic welfare of the family” and urged “the repeal of laws prohibiting the availability of contraceptives and information about them. …” The 1971 General Assembly of the PCUS commended the U.S. Congress for enacting the first comprehensive family planning legislation and called for “more vigorous, better coordinated and more adequately funded efforts to make available both the information and the means of birth control to all persons in the country.” In the following decades, the PC(USA) has continued to affirm the need for safe, effective, and available contraceptives for all people, both in the U.S. and globally. In light of rapid population growth, the church called for “encouragement and support, respect and honor” for “those who choose not to conceive children and those who do choose to conceive.” It has continued to call upon Congress to make comprehensive family planning programs available to all who need them.

2. Abortion: Since 1970, the church has spoken of the termination of a pregnancy at any stage as a serious moral matter requiring careful ethical consideration by a woman, her family, and her counselors. The church’s convictions have been grounded primarily in two principles:

a. Women’s capacity to make difficult moral decisions: “Problem pregnancies are the result of, and influenced by, so many complicated and intractable circumstances that we have neither the wisdom not the authority to address or decide each situation. … We affirm the ability and responsibility of women, guided by the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit, to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies;”

b. Religious freedom for the diversity of views on when human life begins within our church and the broader Christian community: “Affirms the civil and religious freedom both of those who hold the position that abortion is never permissible and of those who hold the position that abortion is permissible under certain circumstances.” Clearly there is both agreement and disagreement in our use and interpretation of Scripture. There is also agreement and disagreement on the basic issue of abortion. … Therefore, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) encourages an atmosphere of open debate and mutual respect for a variety of opinions concerning the issues related to problem pregnancies and abortion.”

3. Legalization of and access to abortion services: In order to protect both women’s moral agency and the religious freedom of those holding diverse views, the church has argued since 1970 against legal restrictions on abortion and urged the availability of “medically sound, easily available, and low-cost abortion services.” “No law or administrative decision should (1) limit access to abortions; (2) limit information and counseling concerning abortions; or (3) limit or prohibit public funding for necessary abortions for the socially and economically disadvantaged.” It has also expressed grave concern for the number of abortions in the U.S. and called for Presbyterians to work to reduce those numbers by reducing the conditions that lead women to consider abortion, such as unintended pregnancies, lack of medically accurate and comprehensive sex education, lack of access to health care, poverty of women and children, and workplace policies unfriendly to parental responsibilities.

4. Supporting alternatives to abortion: The church has also called upon Presbyterians to support women in finding alternatives to abortion, including the establishment of resource centers for women in each presbytery, as well as supporting public policies that provide support for such alternatives.

E. Our Call to Action

Guided by our faith, we are called to respond to political changes that threaten the right of all women to the reproductive health care they need, including adequate access to the knowledge and services needed to choose the number and spacing of their pregnancies, in order to develop their God-given personhood, support and sustain their families, and contribute their gifts to society. What can we do?

1. Learn from the theological and moral reflections that undergird the church’s policies.
   - Read the church’s policies on problem pregnancies: Do Justice, Love Mercy, Walk Humbly (Micah 6:8) (PC(USA), 1992)
   - Statement on Post-Viability and Late Term Abortions (PC(USA))

2. Learn how legislation in your state is impacting women’s reproductive health by searching websites such as:
   - National Conference of State Legislatures at www.ncsl.org,
   - The website of your own state legislature,
   - Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice at www.rcrc.org,

3. Support legislation that protects women’s access to reproductive health care, respects religious diversity, and supports alternatives to abortion for women who so choose.

   Locally:
   - Support funding of family planning clinics that provide comprehensive reproductive health care;
   - Find out if your hospitals offer rape survivors emergency contraception;
   - Find out if sex education curricula in public schools are comprehensive and medically accurate;
   - Support legislation requiring insurance companies to include contraceptive coverage in prescription drug coverage;
   - Support legislation requiring insurance companies to cover comprehensive family planning services;
   - Develop a comprehensive women’s resource center in your presbytery;
   - Find out how proposed legislation will impact women in your area, especially low-income women.

   Internationally, urge Congress to:
   - give higher priority to global health issues and impacts in all aspects of U.S. diplomacy;
   - implement the Global Code of Practice on the International Recruitment of Health Personnel;
Grounded in the biblical affirmation that all human beings are created in the image of God, the PC(USA), with its predecessors, believes that all humans have a God-given dignity, an intrinsic value, which creates an entitlement, a right, to those conditions of life necessary to sustain this dignity and enable effective participation in the decisions that impact individual and communal life. Therefore, in addition to civil and political rights, the church also champions economic rights. These include the right to adequate food, shelter, and health care. In modern countries, these rights are typically dependent on the right to employment at wages that adequately sustain families, the right to safe working conditions, the right to recuperative rest and leisure, the right to security in old age, and the right to organize and participate in collective bargaining. The movement to establish the rights of workers is global and long-standing. In 1948, the United Nations adopted The Universal Declaration on Human Rights, which affirmed these rights as integral aspects of the human right to exist and live in dignity. The Declaration was approved by the 161st General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the USA in 1949.

B. What Is Happening in the United States?

Since industrialization emerged in the U.S., balancing the human rights of workers with the property rights of owners has been a contentious undertaking. Nineteenth century courts routinely ruled against workers’ rights as they upheld the property rights of private owners. The courts assumed that all individuals, whether worker or owner, were equal in freedom and opportunity. For example, in the 1830s a court found twenty-five tailors guilty of “conspiracy to injure trade” for forming a trade union—so unnecessary in a land where each one is free, according to the judge.36 A Massachusetts judge found that an injured worker had no right to compensation because by taking the job the worker had willingly agreed to the risks.37 The right of business to pay workers in company script instead of American currency was upheld repeatedly. Courts argued that a company is free to pay in script and a worker is equally free to accept or reject the job. Child labor was upheld as a private and free family decision. Not surprisingly, workers and business owners clashed throughout the 19th century, often violently, over the number of work hours in the day, the number of working days in a week, wages, and safety conditions.

By the latter half of the 20th century, the working conditions that many of us take for granted—eight-hour days, five-day weeks, health and safety protections, child labor restrictions, overtime pay, workman’s compensation, health benefits, pensions, and the right to organize—were put into place by law or by negotiation. The unionization of about one-third of U.S. workers helped to set the standard of good jobs for all workers in a highly productive U.S. economy. Jobs are good:

- when they enable a family to care for its members; that is, to educate the young, to care for the sick and the elderly, to enjoy time together;
- when they allow time to be active at church, school, and in one’s community;
- when they offer an opportunity to contribute skills, intelligence, and creativity to the company and the community;
- when they teach skills, enhance capabilities, and fairly reward committed work.

Of course, many American workers never enjoyed these good jobs. There were never enough to go around. Opportunity was never equal for the poor, women, immigrants, and those stigmatized by race and ethnicity. For these workers, especially, business practices that violated labor laws continued to devastate families and their communities. For example, a group of restaurants in New York was recently found to have systematically erased employees’ time cards, paid less than minimum wage, paid no overtime, discriminated against Asian and Latino workers, and deducted the cost from waiters’ pay if customers left without paying.38 In America too many workers are still fired for labor organizing activities or for joining unions.39 Too many workers still experience being locked into their work places with no way to exit.40 Even in America, too many workers are still subject to extreme conditions of intimidation, exploitation, and control over their lives and mobility that constitute modern conditions of slavery.41

Today’s recession has been especially devastating to these low-wage workers. For several decades, they have seen their working conditions, wages, and benefits legally eroded as the result of several larger social and judicial trends:
• the growth of hostility to government regulations,
• the decline in government oversight of the workplace,
• the shifting of responsibility for workers from employers to subcontractors,
• the redefining of employees as contract workers or as self-employed in order to exempt them from various labor laws, and
• systematic business and some state government attacks on unions and the rolling back of long-established worker benefits.

With the deep recession of 2007—still very real for 25 million unemployed, under-employed, and discouraged workers—an extraordinarily significant phenomenon has occurred: the dramatic reduction in our expectations of what a worker deserves from working. In an historic reversal, investors’ economic risk and companies’ labor costs have been shifted disproportionately to the backs of the great majority of American workers and their families:

• wages decline,
• jobs disappear,
• working hours become “flexible,” and undependable,
• defined benefit pensions are eliminated,
• health care coverage is reduced, ended, or the cost is shifted to employees,
• no worker is indispensable, no job is secure, and
• workers are being stripped of their right to organize and negotiate.42

The loss of that once proud standard called good jobs, now said to be too costly for our economy to be competitive in the world market, is contributing to an almost unprecedented level of economic inequality in our country. Today the top 400 households in the U.S. own as much as the bottom 150 million of us.43 The widespread belief that in the U.S. our children can aspire to good jobs that support stable families is profoundly shaken. The struggle to preserve and protect the dignity of all workers has intensified.

C. Labor Rights from an International Perspective

Economic globalization has created worldwide supply chains that depend heavily on the exploitation of labor for their viability. Because most production costs, including the acquisition of physical materials and the expenses of distribution, are largely inelastic, the only way that firms can create competitive advantage is to lower manufacturing costs. This is most often accomplished by reducing the cost of labor.

For workers, this translates into stagnant wages, long hours, obligatory overtime, loss of benefits, high-intensity procedures, and stress that increase the likelihood of accidents and suicides. An investigation of ten global electronics suppliers in China (e.g., Dell, IBM, Microsoft, Apple, Hewlett-Packard, Nokia, and others) documented widespread practices of forced overtime, high-intensity work processes, worker discrimination, absence of safety precautions, and other violations of China’s own labor laws. To appreciate the strength of the incentives in play, consider that the production costs for the iPhone4, which sells for $600, are composed of materials ($187.51); operating expenses, e.g., plant, utilities, maintenance, security ($45.95); assembly labor ($6.54); and profit ($360).44 In other words, workers receive just 1 percent of what the consumer pays for the iPhone4 while corporate owners capture 60 percent apart from recovering production costs.

As capital has become more mobile in the quest for favorable profit-making conditions, employment opportunities appear and disappear with increasing frequency. Consequently workers have often been forced to follow capital in search of jobs. For example, as NAFTA vastly undercut Mexican agriculture by enabling cheap American and Canadian food imports, unemployed Mexican farmers sought to enter the United States in the quest for work. Likewise, as many as 500,000 Chinese have immigrated to Africa, lured by jobs in its oil, copper, uranium, wood, and other natural resource industries.45 The International Organization for Migration estimates total international migration rose 40 percent between 1990 and 2010.46

The intense downward pressures on wages worldwide create financial incentives for the abuse of workers’ rights. These take several different forms.

• First, organizations that defend workers’ rights, such as trade unions, are increasingly the targets of bias and intimidation. The International Labor Organization (ILO) notes that anti-union discrimination is their largest area of complaints received. Charges of employer interference in union activities, violations of collective bargaining agreements, and government interference in union affairs have all increased since 2000.47
• Second, a de facto war on trade unionists has been declared in various countries such as Colombia, where 4,000 trade unionists have been murdered since 1986.48 In other countries, notably Bangladesh, China, Indonesia, Mexico, Philippines, and Russia, union organizers are frequent victims of harassment, intimidation, and arbitrary detention.49

• Third, it also creates a global market for forced labor. According to the ILO, in 2005 an estimated 12.3 million adults and children around the world were the victims of forced labor, bonded labor, and coerced prostitution (i.e., slavery). Forced labor constitutes a lucrative international business that generates an estimated $32 billion annually.50, 51 For example, workers from Asia and Africa who migrate to the Middle East in search of higher wages have been subjected to involuntary servitude, nonpayment of wages, threats, physical abuse, deprivation of food, and restrictions on movement such as confiscation of passports.52 In Vietnam, the government partners with private firms to use forced labor by prisoners in national drug detention centers to produce export goods such as cashews, garments, toys, and soccer balls. During 2010, some 40,000 individuals were picked up in “street sweeps” and committed to these centers by administrative decision, which operates outside the criminal justice system with no right to hearing or trial by those accused.53 This practice is not unlike the use of prisoner labor in privately run U.S. prisons to carry out low-cost information processing, electronic component assembly, garment manufacturing, telemarketing, and travel reservations.54

• Fourth, child labor constitutes another cost-saving violation to established labor rights. For example, 10 to 15 percent of the global workforce in the tourism industry is estimated to be less than eighteen years old. Child labor is extensive in the cocoa industry of West Africa. A particularly onerous illustration comes from Uzbekistan, where government authorities have annually closed schools for up to eight weeks and compelled school children—some as young as 10 years—to participate in the country’s cotton harvest. Many worked ten-hour days, lived in tents, and received daily “wages” ranging from $1.50 to $3.60.55

In sum, worldwide economic competition, engendered by globalization, creates relentless downward pressure on workers’ wages, whether in the United States or abroad. In their efforts to lower wages, countries and firms often engage in illegal or unethical labor practices and seek to dismember organizations that defend workers’ rights. The net result provides consumers with cheaper products, even though workers may be less able to afford them.

D. How Our Faith Responds …

The PC(USA) responds to these circumstances with this affirmation: Our faith, rooted in the Lordship of Jesus Christ, has something to say to the 25 million underemployed, unemployed, and discouraged workers in the U.S.; to the 46 million Americans relying on food stamps; to the one-in-five U.S. children who are food insecure; to the foreclosed; to the 25 percent of U.S. workers earning poverty-level wages; to the 50 million without health insurance; and to those whose decisions shape our economy. Our faith in one sovereign God generates a message of hope for all the workers of the world:

1. “Work … is an integral part of the believer’s response to God’s call.” It provides “… not only the means for subsistence, but also a way to honor human dignity and participate in community life.”56 We are created to work, paid or unpaid, as a means of pleasing God, of developing God-given capabilities, and of contributing to the common good. Therefore, unemployment, underemployment, and work that do not protect human dignity and sustain families seriously disrupt God’s plan for human community. Calvin wrote:

   We know that people were created for the express purpose of being employed in labor of various kinds, and that no sacrifice is more pleasing to God, than when everyone applies diligently to one’s own calling, and endeavors to live in such a manner as to contribute to the general advantage.57

2. Our church states, “… servanthood means that economic activity needs to be viewed as serving the needs of the world.”58 Sin tempts us to value things over people, measuring our worth by the quantity of goods we acquire and consume, rather than by the quality of our relationships with God and with others.59 We are created to share the products and profits of our work so that all may benefit. Employment must sustain people with dignity and security. The market economy and public policies must ensure that there is sufficient employment for all who need it. Therefore, gross economic inequality is a serious violation of God’s intent for God’s children and the earth’s bounty. Calvin, commenting on Corinthians, writes:

   he [Paul] orders every one to bring what he has to the common heap, and not to keep back gifts of God in the way of enjoying every one his own, apart from others, but aim unitedly at the edification of all in common.60

3. In addition, the PC(USA) teaches, “All conditions of paid employment, including compensation and working conditions should sustain and nurture the dignity of individuals, the well-being of households and families, the social cohesiveness of communities, and the integrity of the global environment.”61 The ultimate goal of an economy is to serve people as we live out our calling to love God and neighbor. Every human economy, throughout the world, is subject to the sovereignty of God.

E. Our Call to Action …

Guided by faith, we are called by God and our church to respond to cultural and economic changes that threaten human dignity, the wellbeing of families, the just character of our communities, and the health of the earth. What can we do?

1. Learn how our faith teaches us to evaluate our economic lives by reading and networking.
1. Read PC(USA) policies, such as, “God’s Work in Our Hands,” “Hope for a Global Future,” “The Social Creed for the 21st Century,” and more;

- Join ACSWP’s Salt and Light listserv at http://game.pcusa.org/ministries/acswp/getting-involved;

2. Be an informed consumer.

- When traveling, stay only at hotels that have signed the industry’s Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism. This is an industry-driven initiative for responsible tourism. For example, Hilton Hotels have so far not signed this code.
- Consult periodically the Department of Labor’s List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor to guide your consumer purchases.
- Consider faith-based investing or socially responsible investing; for example, Oikocredit, a church-based organization making loans globally to economic development projects benefiting the poorest people in their societies.
- Buy chocolate, coffee, and tea from Equal Exchange, a fair-trade partner of the PC(USA) Hunger Program, and participate in the Campaign for Fair Food.

3. Act in your congregation and community.

- Join those supporting and advocating for the poor;
- Join those aiding the unemployed;
- Review your congregation’s beliefs and practices about work and compensation;
- Learn about worker justice issues in your community;
- Look into Interfaith Worker Justice at http://www.iwj.org/;
- Use your consumer power to urge changes in businesses you and your congregation use;
- Tell your government representatives what your faith demands of our economy; and
- Become passionate about one issue and work for values-driven change.

[NOTE: The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (another “standing” committee of the assembly) is requesting the 220th General Assembly (2012) to call the church to renew its commitment to a living wage for all people and to reaffirm its support for collective bargaining rights regarding wages, benefits and employment. Such advocacy demonstrates continued efforts within the church to respond faithfully to economic changes that threaten human dignity and the wellbeing of families.]

III. Civil Liberties and National Security in the United States Since 9/11/01: Concerns for Consideration

A. Civil Liberties as Human Rights

Domestic and foreign surveillance by the U.S. government have grown enormously since the destruction of the World Trade Center and damage to the Pentagon on September 11, 2001. Since the threat of terror moved across borders, law enforcement was seen to need more and better coordination between domestic and foreign information gathering, blurring traditional lines between the CIA and external intelligence operations and the domestic sphere of the FBI. Concern for national security increased relative to concern for civil liberties, which are based in the first ten amendments to the U.S. Constitution, the Bill of Rights, ratified on December 15, 1791. Additional threats to civil liberty, privacy, and democratic practice relate to advances in surveillance, electronic data gathering, and automated war technologies. Both the overall security-liberty balance and a range of recent threats to civil and religious liberty prompt this brief review and statement of concerns.

Any government must protect its citizens as part of its service to the common good. Yet the total elimination of risk is impossible, especially if political, cultural, and religious factors are included in threat assessment. In a summary of the ethical issues facing governments in the use of counterterrorism measures, a European expert affirms the basic truth that “transnational terrorism is substantively a battle of values, which cannot ultimately be won by force.” Put positively, we believe it is an aspect of the church’s witness to hold civil society to the highest values, in keeping with the prophetic dimensions of Christian obedience.

In describing the U.S. political and civil liberties milieu, this report offers data on the growth of the “security-surveillance complex” and summarizes reasons for concern based on the views of several professors of law active in human rights and government accountability work. The report then briefly describes the church’s approach to civil liberties and closes with thoughts for further consideration. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has very strong policies on religious freedom, civil liberty, and against torture, though its strongest statement on privacy and the restraint of government and private information-gathering dates back to 1973.

B. What Is Happening in the United States?

Perhaps the clearest recent challenge to civil liberties came in the National Defense Authorization Act signed by President Obama on December 31, 2011, which gives the president the power to order U.S. citizens, as well as alleged international opponents, held in indefinite detention. This effectively suspends “due process” for individuals defined as threats to national security, without reference to a traditional battlefield or a specific war. As seen in the targeted killing of U.S. citizen, Anwar Al-Awlaki in September 2011, after the president had placed him on a “kill or capture” list, Executive Branch power has continued to grow following its expansion under President George W. Bush. The president currently has the discretion to direct whether an alleged terrorist may be subject to civil courts or to military tribunals. Such tribunals have less strict and public standards of due process that have allowed the use of evidence gained from torture, although President Obama reaffirmed a historic ban on torture in the United States.

1. The Growth of Surveillance and Counter-terrorism Activities

In July 2010, The Washington Post published the results of a two-year investigative journalism project on secret government agencies, including those that have been created since 9/11. Here are some of the findings excerpted from their report:

- Some 1,271 government organizations and 1,931 private companies work on programs related to counterterrorism, homeland security, and intelligence in about 10,000 locations across the United States.
- An estimated 854,000 people, nearly 1.5 times as many people as live in Washington, D.C., hold top-secret security clearances.
- In Washington and the surrounding area, thirty-three building complexes for top-secret intelligence work are under construction or have been built since September 2001. Together they occupy the equivalent of almost three Pentagons or twenty-two U.S. Capitol buildings—about 17 million square feet of space.
- Many security and intelligence agencies do the same work, creating redundancy and waste. For example, fifty-one federal organizations and military commands, operating in fifteen U.S. cities, track the flow of money to and from terrorist networks.
- The U.S. intelligence budget is vast, publicly announced last year as $75 billion, 2-1/2 times the size it was on September 10, 2001. But the figure doesn’t include many military activities or domestic counterterrorism programs.
- Within the Defense Department alone, eighteen commands and agencies conduct information operations, which aspire to manage foreign audiences’ perceptions of U.S. policy and military activities overseas.
- And all the major intelligence agencies and at least two major military commands claim a major role in cyberwarfare, the newest and least-defined frontier.
- DHS (Department of Homeland Security), in existence for only seven years, already has its own Special Access Programs, its own research arm, its own command center, its own fleet of armored cars, and its own 230,000-person workforce, the third-largest after the departments of Defense and Veterans Affairs. [Special Access Programs are top secret task groups, highly insulated and administratively camouflaged to blend in with other programs—ed].

The legal trigger for this wave of development was the USA Patriot Act, formally the Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism Act of 2001. Though more than 300 pages long—incorporating some previously written material—Congress passed the bill seven weeks after 9/11. In the words of legal affairs analyst, Adam Liptak, “it quickly became a sort of shorthand for government abuse and overreach.” According to Human Rights Law professor, William Quigley,

On May 27, 2011, President Obama, over widespread bipartisan objections, approved a Congressional four-year extension of controversial parts of the Patriot Act that were set to expire. In March of 2010, (The President) signed a similar extension of the Patriot Act for one year. These provisions allow the government, with permission from a special secret court, to seize records without the owner’s knowledge, conduct secret surveillance of suspicious people who have no known ties to terrorist groups and to obtain secret roving wiretaps on people.\textsuperscript{70}

The “material support” provision refers to assistance given to terrorist organizations that may be taken to include communications, “expert advice and assistance,” with such organizations, broadly defined. Under expansive definitions, some reporting on organizations may be restricted and “Friend of Court” briefs by third parties prevented. The Obama Administration Justice Department was challenged on this, but upheld 5-4 by the Supreme Court in \textit{Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project}.\textsuperscript{71}

2. \textit{The Demands of Secrecy and the Role of Whistleblowers, the Press, and Concerned Citizens}

While all nations have some kind of intelligence service, the United States preserves its democratic character by constitutional checks and balances, including the Bill of Rights, and public accountability, including the free press. The reach of national security can thus be seen in the obstacles, good and bad, placed in front of the disclosure of government “secrets.” For Presbyterians concerned with the morality and legality of government actions, what follows are examples and important developments for consideration.

The role of Wikileaks, a self-styled cyber-accountability group, is well-known for its release of thousands of classified documents from U.S. embassies—including confirmation of official corruption in Tunisia, Libya, and other countries that aided the “Arab Spring.” Thousands of field reports from Afghanistan described lack of progress in that war and many civilian deaths not reported elsewhere, arguably making for a more truthful public debate.\textsuperscript{72} Defenders of government secrecy point to the diplomatic damage done by disclosing confidential reports and the danger to the trust and security among those who cooperate with U.S. officials, while critics point out that few specific negative effects have been presented, even for later documents not “scrubbed” with the assistance of \textit{The New York Times} and \textit{Guardian} (Britain) newspapers.\textsuperscript{73} The treatment of Corporal Bradley Manning, accused of being the source of the documents, has included prolonged forced nudity and solitary confinement in a remote prison, raising questions about his own due process.\textsuperscript{74}

The \textit{Washington Post} study cited earlier claimed that the culture of secrecy was self-perpetuating and hard to monitor. Another test case for the treatment of whistleblowers occurred in a case carried over from the Bush to the Obama Administration, that of senior National Security Agency (and former military officer) Thomas Drake. Prosecuted under the Espionage Act, Drake was accused of being a primary source for reporter Sioban Gorman of the \textit{Baltimore Sun}. Gorman “wrote a prize-winning series of articles for the \textit{Sun} about financial waste, bureaucratic dysfunction, and dubious legal practices in N.S.A. counterterrorism programs.”\textsuperscript{75} Jane Mayer provides a lengthy analysis of the case,\textsuperscript{76} which William Quigley summarizes:

\begin{quote}
They charged a National Security Agency adviser with ten felonies under the Espionage Act for telling the press that government eavesdroppers were wasting hundreds of millions of dollars on misguided and failed projects. After their case collapsed, the government, which was chastised by the federal judge as engaging in unconscionable conduct, allowed him to plead to a misdemeanor and walk.\textsuperscript{77}
\end{quote}

Other reasonably well-known censorship cases include the memoir by former CIA agents; Ali Soufan’s \textit{The Black Banners},\textsuperscript{78} and Glenn Carle’s \textit{The Interrogator}.\textsuperscript{79}

Any particular case can be debated, of course; concerned citizens have to assess broader patterns. In the Drake case and those two books, long-time U.S. agents involved in the “war on terror” claim that they crossed moral lines that became hard for them to justify in terms of the values and purposes of their country. To make sense of testimonies like theirs, Mark Danner speaks of the United States after 9/11 entering a “state of exception,” when traditional moral restraints were and remain suspended.\textsuperscript{80}

In assessing the policies and practices of the United States, the once covert use of drone aircraft in Pakistan provides an example of the limits of secrecy. Admiral Denis Blair, former director of National Intelligence for the Obama Administration, publicly argued that this program should be run by the military rather than the CIA, as “Covert action that goes on for years doesn’t generally stay covert.”\textsuperscript{81} The use of drones in Pakistan as well as Afghanistan raised two sets of questions for U.S. citizens, one related to the morality of targeting individuals outside an established battlefield setting (including rules on evidence and collateral damage),\textsuperscript{82} and one related to foreign relations, specifically the deterioration of relations with Pakistan.\textsuperscript{83} Since drones are used for surveillance now along U.S. borders and were used extensively in supporting the Libyan insurgency, more public debate may be needed on operations that may be secret from the American people, but not necessarily secret from people in other nations.

The range of government data collection that concerned the 217th General Assembly (2006) related to the disclosure of large scale warrantless wiretapping that appeared to violate provisions of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) of 1978.\textsuperscript{84} That act established a secret intelligence court and the use of “national security letters.” Other information disclosed the use of electronic “data mining” among all the international e-mail and phone transmissions harvested by the government’s listening posts. Subsequent legislation has updated FISA with some restrictions on the roles of internet service providers subject to government access and other forms of warrantless information gathering now deemed not to violate the Fourth Amendment against unreasonable search and seizure.\textsuperscript{85}
Technological advances in data-gathering can appear benign or worrisome, depending partly on how aware citizens are of the limits to their privacy. Recent concern has focused on the amount of personal information disclosed for commercial purposes by such companies as Facebook and Google, whose value is partly constituted by once-private data provided by users that is linked to advertising. Most users of those services willingly trade privacy for connection and convenience. Another source of data are GPS applications in mobile phones; such devices can also be put on vehicles without a warrant for ease in tracking suspects. Potentially more worrisome are developments lifted up by William Quigley, drawing on studies by the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) and Center for Constitutional Rights:

- Wiretaps for oral, electronic or wire communications, approved by federal and state courts, are at an all-time high. Wiretaps in year 2010 were up 34 percent from 2009, according to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

- The Electronic Frontier Foundation documented thousands of violations of the law by FBI intelligence operations from 2001 to 2008 and estimate that there are over 4000 such violations each year. President Obama issued an executive order to strengthen the Intelligence Oversight Board, an agency that is supposed to make sure the FBI, the CIA, and other spy agencies are following the law.

- Western companies sell email surveillance software to repressive regimes in China, Libya and Syria to use against protestors and human rights activists. Surveillance cameras monitor residents in high-crime areas, street corners, and other governmental buildings. Police department computers ask for and receive daily lists from utility companies with addresses and names of every home address in their area. Computers in police cars scan every license plate of every car they drive by.

- There are at least 72 fusion centers across the U.S., which collect local domestic police information and merge it into multijurisdictional intelligence centers, according to recent report by the ACLU. These centers share information from federal, state and local law enforcement and some private companies to secretly spy on Americans.

C. How Our Faith Responds

In the 2006 “Resolution on Human Rights in Time of Terrorism and Torture,” the General Assembly called for the humane treatment with due process for all combatants held by U.S. forces anywhere in the world, and supported the provisions of the Bill of Rights and the principles of judicial review and congressional oversight over Executive Branch operations, now including counterterrorism, Homeland Security, and domestic surveillance programs, both classified and publicly acknowledged.

That resolution also called for “the protection of the right of privacy for U.S. citizens against intrusion by government or private entities.” This update follows most clearly upon that 2006 statement.

Traditionally, the focus of Presbyterian and other religious engagement with civil liberties is the First Amendment’s first phrase, the “Establishment clause,” which guides the separation of church and state. Yet the founders wisely saw the freedoms of worship, speech and press, and “to petition for redress of grievances,” connected with each other, and combined them all in the First Amendment. Particular Christian concerns for freedom, justice, and peace are addressed in various later amendments (now totaling twenty-seven), but the First Amendment itself ensures the capacity of individuals and groups to address any of those and other topics. A notable example of the Presbyterian church’s use of its voice on behalf of civil liberties in general was the 1953 Letter to Presbyterians of the General Assembly Council that challenged McCarthyism and its distortion of national security fears.

The General Assembly’s most extensive treatment of religious and civil liberties, God Alone Is Lord of the Conscience (1988), is named for the key Presbyterian belief in God’s direct address to the individual conscience. That thorough statement considered civil disobedience, aid to religious schools, prayer in public schools, Sabbath observance, tax exemption, and other questions, including government intervention in religious affairs. This last matter has direct bearing in the current climate.

In 1984 and possibly before, the U.S. government sent covert agents into several congregations of the Presbyterian and American Lutheran churches in order to investigate the “Sanctuary Movement,” which protected persons fleeing from government-sponsored violence in El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and other countries. In January 1986, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the American Lutheran Church, and four of their congregations, filed suit alleging that the undercover operation (later acknowledged) violated the free exercise of religion. Freedom of the pulpit and of parishioners to speak truth was clearly connected to freedom of speech.

That lawsuit, described in the booklet, “Why Churches Fight Government Infiltration,” bears some analogy to efforts by Muslim congregations in the U.S. to address more recent government surveillance and use of informers, intended to track down terrorism. Though the issues are different, the First Amendment principle of noninterference and the need for warrants for entry, search, and seizure stipulated by the Fourth Amendment, have clear bearing. Government surveillance and pressure under an expanded understanding of the “material aid” statute has severely limited Muslim charities that give funds overseas for any purpose, and thus jeopardizes any religious giving across borders that the government may wish to discourage. The Associated Press uncovered a specific program of the New York City Police Department, done in cooperation with the CIA, that involved “mosque crawlers” who investigated worship services based on the ethnic profile and reputation of the mosques.

In the current context, all PC(USA) funds sent overseas must comply with the Treasury Department’s Office of Foreign Asset Control, which means assuring that each grant or disbursement to recipient or intermediary does not go to someone on a published list of proscribed persons and entities (that listing is available on line: 1326 220TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2012)
To recognize the context of fear of Muslim and other terrorism is not to enter into a full analysis of its scope and of the status of allegations and arrests made over the years since 9/11. Nor is this report to address specifically the use of torture, which the assembly strongly condemned in 2006 when it also called for the closing of extraterritorial prisons (such as Guantanamo). And neither is this to deny the need for accountable government investigation and targeted surveillance capacities. Yet the “mission creep” of police power, in a country already characterized by the highest level of incarceration in the world, raises concern for overreaction and the weakening of legal safeguards already in debate. Before 9/11, church concern about torture (the Eighth Amendment’s “cruel and unusual punishment”) had to with the U.S. criminal justice system, including the effects of prolonged solitary confinement on the mental health of inmates.93

D. For Further Consideration and Reflection

This update is not comprehensive, but has tried to point to some of the major trends in post 9/11 domestic civil liberties. Most church members’ conscious experience of increased surveillance may be at the airports, especially if travelling overseas, but the scope of state security operation is far more pervasive and linked to everyday police operations. Beyond personal concern for privacy, however, is the church’s historic concern for the rights to dissent, to protest, to exercise one’s conscience in freedom, and to have a say and a vote in governance structures. Not all dissenters are prophets, but some are. The church itself, as a corporate body, has also valued its corporate social witness as part of its responsibility in society. How much may the church’s concern for reconciliation and peace, for example, attract government surveillance and endanger international partners? How much do church members in prison ministry, for example, encounter a more militarized environment?

In these areas, there are observers who are quite worried that the “war on terror” has a momentum of its own, based in enormous investment without oversight. Fear can also feed upon itself, magnify distrust, and narrow our willingness to act on Gospel imperatives of love and justice, even with strangers. And while Presbyterians value the role of government for both protection and provision for the common welfare, limits are also needed.

What this review has revealed, however, is that technical advances in surveillance, commercial data collection, and new forms of warfare raise major new questions about civil liberties. The latest substantial treatment of privacy itself goes back to 1973, when the 185th General Assembly adopted a strong statement that called for “public and private agencies to provide for maximum protection of privacy” and recommended guidelines for self-regulation for such agencies and the church itself in dealing with bank credit, insurance, welfare, law enforcement, education, personnel, counseling, and medical data. That assembly addressed domestic surveillance, whistleblowing, and protective regulation dealing with secrecy and technology in that pre-Watergate, pre-cyberspace time:

- Regarding domestic security, we favor action to: (a) prohibit any branch of the Department of Defense from engaging in surveillance of, or data collection on, domestic political activity, and (b) require the destruction of all such political surveillance files accumulated by the military.
- Regarding confidential relationships, we urge: (a) enactment of uniform state legislation and consistent federal legislation to establish guidelines that protect legitimate news professionals from being compelled to testify about their sources, (b) development of legal guidelines for limiting the use on privacy grounds of subpoenas and immunity provisions in the conduct of grand juries, and (c) review of current statutes.
- We recommend the creation of an independent regulatory body with carefully defined authority to review, oversee, and approve the collection and dissemination of personal data by governmental bodies...and by entities that collect and disseminate personal data for public and commercial purposes. Despite the fears and deficiencies which seem inherent in regulatory administrative bodies, we feel that such a regulatory agency offers the hope of flexibility and expertise to meet the threat of dehumanization in an area of rapidly developing technology.
- Then, after emphasizing the inability of all agencies to regulate themselves, the Assembly called “for the formation of a National Privacy Service Office...in the manner of an ombudsman...” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1973, Part I, pp. 535–42).

For Reflection

The area of civil liberties is quite wide, but its core remains the freedom of conscience that for us is linked to the presence of the Holy Spirit in our lives. The threats that all developed societies face are continuously reshaped by new technologies, and then protective technologies themselves need oversight. Freedom and privacy are closely related, and the data collection of government and digital age corporations are also closely related. In this environment shaped by flows of information, advertising, and virtually inescapable monitoring, not only our personal liberties but the independence of the Church is potentially at risk. In such a setting, new legal protections may be necessary and new questions opened about intelligence technology in our society.

To provide historical perspective, we include the Bill of Rights in its original language as an appendix, and close with two quotes from wise judges; from Learned Hand, cited by David Cole:

Liberty lies in the hearts of men and women; when it dies there, no constitution, no law, no court can even do much to help it. While it lives there it needs no constitution, no law, no court to save it.94
And along with liberty is moral connection, addressed as “Ethics” by Earl Warren:

In civilized life, law floats in a sea of ethics. Each is indispensable to civilization. Without law, we should be at the mercy of the least scrupulous; without ethics, law could not exist. . . Society would come to grief without Ethics, which is unenforceable to the courts, and cannot be made part of the Law. . . Not only does Law in civilized society presuppose ethical commitment; it presupposes the existence of the abroad area of human condition controlled only by ethical norms and not subject to Law at all. There is thus a Law beyond the Law, as binding on those of us who cherish our institutions as the Law itself, although there is no human power to enforce it.95

If ethics are a sea, it is one of the church’s tasks to help that sea level rise. Paul’s efforts to receive due process under Roman law in the Book of Acts (such as 23: 26–35) do some of that extending ethical awareness. Similarly, when people fear speaking out and claiming their rights, may the Holy Spirit give us courage to witness to Christ and unmask idolatries, as A Brief Statement of Faith affirms. Then we may hear the echo of Peter’s words from earlier in Acts, “we must obey God rather than human beings!”

E. Our Call to Action

Guided by our faith, we are called to respond to political changes that threaten the freedom of religious practice and the civil liberties of God’s children, both abroad and in the United States. What can we do?

1. The General Assembly may want to request several experts in civil liberties and cyber-intelligence to update the 1973 study, in light of new technological advances, focusing particularly on matters related to the First Amendment.

2. Education for individuals and congregations:
   a. Read “God Alone Is Lord of the Conscience” (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/god-alone-lord-conscience/), adopted by the 200th General Assembly (1988), referring to the Book of Order, F-3.0101. and The Book of Confessions, 6.109. In addition to containing excellent guidelines for all areas of church/state interaction (such as public school and public religious display questions), this policy statement explains why the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has had such a significant history in the progress of religious liberty. Additional information on church/state issues and “government intervention in religious affairs” can be obtained from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).
   b. Read the “Friend of Court” (amicus curiae) briefs filed in notable legal cases when recommended by the Advisory Committee on Litigation and authorized by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. Information can be obtained from the Office of the General Assembly: http://oga.pcusa.org/section/departments/constitutional-services/amicus-curiae-briefs/.
   c. Conduct an adult education class using a past Human Rights Update study guide, several of which can be found on the ACSWP website: http://game.pcusa.org/ministries/acswp/.
   d. Before participating in public protest and acts of civil disobedience, inform participants of their legal rights in case of arrest, possible injury, and probable surveillance. The American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) can provide this information: http://www.aclu.org/free-speech/know-your-rights-demonstrations-and-protests. Many ACLU state-affiliates provide further details: http://www.aclu.org/maps/aclu-affiliate-involvement-occupy-movement-around-country. Click on a state and see “know your rights / materials”.

4. Take action:
   a. Review and consider getting involved in public interest groups active in the area of civil liberties: ACLU, Lawyers’ Committee for Civil Rights, Center for Constitutional Rights, Brennan Center for Justice, and Human Rights First are examples.
   c. If you are facing a serious ethical quandary about the misuse or suppression of information in your work, you may wish to contact the Government Accountability Project at: http://www.whistleblower.org/.

e. On the rights of refugees and asylum seekers, a source for information is: http://www1.umn.edu/humanrts/asylum/refugee_index.html Advocates connected to the new sanctuary movement may be found at: http://www.religionlink.com/tip_081208.php.

f. Write or call your elected officials to voice your concerns for civil liberties.

g. Contact the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Advisory Committee on Litigation with concerns for specific legal proceedings that might warrant an amicus brief.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 14-04

Comment on Item 14-04—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Each year, General Assembly program staff are invited to submit programmatic emphases for inclusion in the Presbyterian Planning Calendar. The GAMC has established guidelines by which proposals are reviewed. Nominations occur in the summer, for approval by the GAMC at its September meeting. In September 2011, the programmatic emphases for the 2013 Presbyterian Planning Calendar were approved.

“Human Rights Day” (December 10) is already included in the list of programmatic emphases for 2013. This date has also been listed in every Presbyterian Planning Calendar from 1993–2012.

Encountering the Gospel of Peace Anew: An Invitation to Discernment and Witness, an Interim Report to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Peace Discernment Steering Team.

Both the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommend that the 220th General Assembly (2012)

2. Direct that any policy changes from the Peace Discernment Steering Team be brought to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in coordination with the General Assembly Mission Council.
3. Encourage Presbyterians to participate in churchwide discernment on current matters of peace and violence in light of the witness of Jesus Christ and Christian teaching and to encourage congregational, presbytery, college, and seminary groups to engage in the process described in the interim report.

Rationale

Encountering the Gospel of Peace Anew: An Invitation to Discernment and Witness Interim Report of the Peace Discernment Steering Team

INTRODUCTION

“In a broken and fearful world, the Spirit gives us courage … to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace” (The Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, 10.4, Lines 65–66, 71).

The 219th General Assembly (2010) directed the General Assembly Mission Council, through the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the [Presbyterian] Peacemaking Program, to appoint a five-person steering team, at least one of whom shall be a college student or other young adult, to work with ACSWP and Peacemaking Program representatives to design and implement a broadly participatory four-year process to do the following:

1. Seek clarity as to God’s call to the church to embrace nonviolence as its fundamental response to the challenges of violence, terror, and war; and
2. Identify, explore, and nurture new approaches to active peacemaking and nonviolence, reporting to the 221st General Assembly (2014) with recommendations for policy and action. … (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 68)

Item 13-11 also asked that an interim report be made to the 220th General Assembly (2012), that would “include specific recommendations of strategy and policy to invite the broader church into the time of discernment, framing the conversation, naming the best partners, and laying out a process to help our congregations to wrestle with these important ethical questions” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 69).

This interim report is an invitation from the Peace Discernment Steering Team to the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to participate in a time of discernment, looking at peacemaking and nonviolence in the 21st century. We “invite Presbyterians, individually and corporately, across the church into a time of study and reflection on the root causes of violence and responses to it, and on peace, justice, and ministries of peacemaking and justice—seeking that honor the gospel, the history of the church, and the movement of the Holy Spirit as the church attempts to live out Christ’s command to love one another, even those we call our enemies” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 69).

Words alone cannot contain the horror of violence, the cruelty of sadistic torture, the pain of bullets entering flesh, the burning of white phosphorous on a child’s skin, the sight of a beloved spouse splattered against a wall, the loneliness of a young teenager in prison, the fear of a trafficked woman in a cage, the tearing muscles of a naked man on a cross. God knows.

Violence comes in many forms related to power and property, personhood, and peoplehood. Evil is larger than violence, but violence is perhaps its clearest marker. Mercifully, God’s goodness and grace are larger yet, enduring in unimaginable suffering, strong enough to overcome vengeance and hatred, and their names are sometimes peace, forgiveness, and reconciliation.

Each one of us has encountered violence at some point in our lives, if only on the periphery of it. Any discernment process in this terrain will open difficult doors, and may re-introduce us to an inner victim or tyrant, although more likely both. This is one reason we seek also to re-introduce Jesus of Nazareth as the “Prince of Peace.” Christ knows who we are and his greatest name is Love.

One of the overtures shaping the 219th General Assembly (2010)’s action clearly sought to encourage our church to become a “peace church,” not simply opposing particular wars but affirming nonviolence as a basic orientation toward conflict—abroad, at home, and in our everyday lives. The assembly was not asked to take that position in 2010, but rather to put that basic question of war and violence before the whole church in relation to a wide range of Christian responses to our changing context in our nation and our world. Taking into consideration the other overtures, the assembly recognized that the church needed to update its thirty-year-old overall policy stance in light of significant international changes that have transformed widely-held notions of what constitutes peace and violence. With that updating, the church’s peace programs guided by assembly policy would, in turn, also be updated.
Why engage in this new exploration of peace now? Because the world has changed dramatically since 1980, when the 192nd General Assembly (1980) adopted Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling and established the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program. The world is much larger (population has grown from 4.5 billion in 1980 to 7 billion today), and it is more connected (through economic globalization and improved communications systems such as the World Wide Web). With the Cold War over, the Berlin Wall fallen, and the Soviet Union no more, what was an East-West ideological divide has given way to a North-South economic divide between rich and poor countries. With this divide has come greater recognition of the presence of structural violence (social and economic injustice) and its role in undermining human dignity.

Terrorism has replaced communism as the number one threat to U.S. national security, particularly since the tragedy of September 11, 2001. The military budget, never declining much from Cold War levels, is larger than all other programs except Social Security. United States military superiority coupled with America’s view of itself as exceptional has raised questions about the United States’ involvement in the world. Many consider the United States to have become an empire, with military power the key to its domination in many parts of the world. And yet, recent wars in Iraq and Afghanistan have been extremely costly in human and economic terms both for the U.S. and these countries, and it is not at all clear what they have achieved. This adds to an “increasing sense of the impotence of military might” (p. 11) and the belief that “the main problems of the world will not yield to military solutions,” (p. 15) as Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/peacemaking/) put it.

At the same time, there is growing recognition that nonviolent direct action can be a powerful, alternative means of responding to conflict, as it has proven successful in struggles for justice, human rights, and self-determination around the world—even overthrowing some of the most brutal dictatorships the world has seen. From the Independence Movement in India to the U.S. Civil Rights Movement, from the anti-communist revolutions in Eastern Europe to the role that peaceful protests played in overturning white minority rule in South Africa, from the role of the churches in delegitimation of violence in Northern Ireland to the “Arab Spring” protests in North Africa and the Middle East, and the Greenbelt Movement in Kenya, highlighting the connection between sustainable practices, ecological conservation, and development—there are many examples of nonviolent action producing massive social change.

Indeed, nonviolent direct action is one of ten practices for reducing violence and promoting peace that were identified by an ecumenical group of Christian ethicists brought together by Professor Glen Stassen of Fuller Theological Seminary and later taken up by the 210th General Assembly (1998) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in its Resolution on Just Peacemaking and the Call for International Intervention for Humanitarian Rescue:

1. Support nonviolent direct action.
2. Take independent initiatives to reduce threat.
3. Use cooperative conflict resolution.
4. Acknowledge responsibility for conflict and injustice and seek repentance and forgiveness.
5. Advance democracy, human rights, and religious liberty.
6. Foster just and sustainable economic development.
7. Work with emerging cooperative forces in the international system.
9. Reduce offensive weapons and weapons trade.
10. Encourage grassroots peacemaking groups and voluntary associations.

We seek to build upon the broad understanding of peacemaking put before the church in Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling. We affirm that peace is much more than the absence of war. It also involves the presence of justice for all people and the health of our planet for all creatures who dwell on it. We also acknowledge the problem of interpersonal violence and affirm the need for peacemaking at all levels of our life together—in our individual lives, families, congregations, communities, nation, and world.

Thus we believe there is an urgent need today for U.S. Presbyterians to question the extent to which violence and injustice pervade our society and dominate our relations with one another and with other nations. Living in the world’s only superpower, spending more on the military than all other developed countries combined, and facing growing poverty at home, we suggest it is time for us to spend more time thinking through:

- our involvement in war, injustice, and environmental degradation;
- our participation in more complicated structures of violence and oppression; and
• the purposes and costs of international policing and war in a highly interconnected world.

This brief document invites members, congregations, and all councils and organizations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to prepare to participate in a process of discernment, to “encounter the Gospel of Peace anew.” This is the outline of the process requested by the last General Assembly. And while we are now preparing a guide and resource packet for discernment, our hope is not simply to help the church “count the costs” of grievous wars and violence in our culture, but to “meet the Prince of Peace again, as if for the first time.”

We recognize that this is not the way some Presbyterians see the world and we acknowledge that this open process will be open to much criticism as well as confirmation. In the spirit of inviting diverse conversations that engage the whole church, we have sought an accessible rather than academic approach, yet know that creative thinking requires reliable information—a standard for all conversation partners.

A PROCESS OF DISCERNMENT

Discernment is a serious, spiritual task, and one entirely consistent with our historic Presbyterian ethos of public responsibility for the common good. It is both personal, involving our God who “alone, is Lord of the conscience,” and communal, involving the church as a community of moral discourse, shaped in the Reformed tradition by an understanding of covenant. Discernment involves clear perception of facts and our relation to them, for the sake of faithful action.

As Presbyterians, we believe that God is the source of truth found throughout creation, even though our perception is distorted by sin or our finitude, which sometimes prompts us to respond to evil through fear, ignorance, and a grasping for power. Discernment is needed to untangle self-interest and to remove blinders so that the church and our individual witness will be open to God and neighbor. It can be a challenging process, both personally and when attempted on a church-wide scale.

Discernment involves slowing down and listening together for God’s voice speaking in our midst. Through discernment, we seek wisdom, clarity, and insight as to what God is calling us to be and do, here and now. In discernment, we try to see the world through God’s eyes and align our words and actions with God’s will. Discernment was invoked and put to good use by the Task Force on the Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Church (2008). The Peace Discernment Steering Team also has experienced its benefits in our own reflections on nonviolence.

There is a fruitful paradox at the heart of discernment: on the one hand, if discernment is to be genuine, it cannot have pre-determined outcomes; on the other hand, we never come to discernment with a blank slate, but must always bring ourselves, our values, and our experiences. Authentic discernment involves a fresh encounter with the Spirit of the Living Christ.

So, while nonviolence is a clear option to be presented, our discernment process is open-ended. The outcome of this process is not predetermined. Nor do we expect all Presbyterians to agree with even a consensus view of the best approaches to different kinds of violence and conflict. Yet, just as individual members bring their own experience and conviction, so the faith that we share brings with it a tradition and wisdom about how to live out the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Peace Discernment Steering Team (PDST) proposes the following timeline for engaging the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in a participatory policymaking process on these concerns over the next four years:

OCTOBER 2011 The PDST consults with Christian ethicists at the Social Ethics Network gathering at San Francisco Theological Seminary.

APRIL 2012 The PDST conducts “listening project” in Washington, D.C., to hear from Presbyterians involved in military/industrial complex, war veterans, military families, chaplains, policymakers, and other D.C. constituencies. The PDST also consults with Presbyterian Peace Fellowship at its Convocation of Peacemakers held at Stony Point Center.

MAY/JUNE 2012 The proposed Peace Discernment Process and selected background pieces are posted on PC(USA) website. A short five-minute video is produced, inviting individuals, churches, and presbyteries to be part of the Peace Discernment Process. The process proposed will include ways to explore and experiment with peacemaking approaches but also emphasize the need to hear all voices and to uncover resources in one’s own community.

JULY 2012 The 220th General Assembly (2012) receives the interim report/invitation document from the Peace Discernment Steering Team and its parent bodies. If the assembly approves this document, it is sent to all councils and agencies of the church for appropriate consideration and response over the next ten months, allowing for analysis of responses and recommendations to be made to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

The Peace Discernment Process is presented at the Presbyterian Peacemaking Conference at Ghost Ranch. Participants are encouraged to involve their congregations and presbyteries in the Peace Discernment Process.
Sept./Oct. 2012 The PDST attempts to engage a broad cross-section of the church by intentionally inviting diverse congregations into conversation, both those that have a history of participating in peacemaking and those that may be new to peacemaking. Sessions are invited to form peace discernment teams in their own congregations to elicit people’s personal stories of their encounters with the Prince of Peace in a violent and unjust world. They send a commitment form to their presbytery and to the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program declaring their intention. (Goal: at least 15 percent of churches in every presbytery.)

At the same time, all presbyteries are invited to schedule one-day peace discernment conversations, facilitated by a member of the Peace Discernment Steering Team or other resource person. These could be held at a church, a college, a camp/conference center, or a military base. Presbyteries contact the Peace Discernment Steering Team to schedule a date and enlist the help of a facilitator. (Goal: A facilitated peace discernment conversation in at least 25 percent of presbyteries.)

Nov. 2012–May 2013 Using a small group discernment process developed by the PDST, the congregational peace discernment teams gather for a series of meetings or for a weekend retreat. They submit a summary of their findings (highlighting particularly gripping stories and creative/new peacemaking initiatives) to their presbytery and to the Peace Discernment Steering Team, using a response form provided to them.

Presbyteries hold their facilitated peace discernment conversations and submit a summary of their findings (also highlighting particularly gripping stories and creative/new peacemaking initiatives) to the Peace Discernment Steering Team, using a similar response form provided.

Individuals may also submit personal stories on-line, via the website, in prose or poetry, art or video.

February 2013 The PDST holds Peace Convocation for up to 150 “individuals who are engaged in action and reflection on peacemaking and justice seeking, including faculty and students from Presbyterian-related colleges, universities, and seminaries, activists, individuals engaged in nonviolent witness, grassroots persons working for justice and peace, others engaged in peacemaking in congregations, [mid councils], Presbyterian Women, and other Presbyterian-related entities.”

College, university, and seminary representatives are encouraged to involve students and young adults in the peace discernment process and to incorporate peace and justice studies in longer-term curriculum development. Other participants are encouraged to involve their congregations and presbyteries in the Peace Discernment Process if they have not already done so. Keynote speeches and a summary report are posted on-line.

June 2014 The PDST presents its report and recommendations to the 221st General Assembly (2014), asking for that assembly to receive the report for a two-year period of study before final action in 2016. The 221st General Assembly (2014) may affirm the recommendations (and/or amend them) and send them out more formally for responses from the presbyteries. While this is not seen to involve constitutional changes, if the 221st General Assembly (2014) approves significant changes to the church’s stances towards war and violence, it is felt that the presbyteries should again be engaged in a way that may test the recommendations and guide a final decision at the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

July–Dec. 2014 A video and study guide is produced to accompany the peace discernment report and recommendations.

June 2016 The 222nd General Assembly (2016) takes final action.

[Note: A small group discernment process and response forms for use by congregational peace discernment teams and presbyteries are being developed by the Peace Discernment Steering Team and will be available at the 220th General Assembly (2012).]

The current position of the church

The most comprehensive current policy on matters of international violence and war is Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling (1980), a response to overtures from thirty-one presbyteries. This twenty-seven-page policy was developed by a team of experts over a five-year period and includes two appendices and a study guide. It led to the creation of the very influential Presbyterian Peacemaking Program. Through a special offering, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program has raised between $1–$2 million each year since its creation and has developed a host of resources, annual peacemaking conferences, international study tours, and other initiatives. It arranges annually for PC(USA) congregations to host international peace makers. Approximately 50 percent of Presbyterian congregations have affirmed the Commitment to Peacemaking over this period, with large differences among presbyteries and regions. Some peacemaking funds have supported the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations; other funds, in stipulated proportions, have supported peacemaking activities in congregations and presbyteries.

When the church spoke in 1980, it broadened the Vietnam era concern for individual conscience to affirm that peacemaking was the calling of all believers, particularly to face nuclear and other cold war dangers, and in ways that would recognize global interdependence and encourage a wide range of church engagement. Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling provides a broad biblical, theological, and ethical basis for Christian peace mission but also identifies some general directions; to reverse the worldwide arms race, examine “conversion of the economy from military to civilian production,” and relate peace to justice concerns.

Since that time, careful studies and prophetic statements have addressed the nuclear danger, particular military interventions and their rationale, and the relation of religion, violence, and terrorism. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), since 1986, has held a virtual “nuclear pacifist” position, opposing first use and retaliation and calling repeatedly for disarmament. “Just Peacemaking” categories were introduced in 1996, designed to advance the ecumenical church’s thinking beyond the traditional categories of “Just War,” “Crusade,” and “Pacifism.” General Assemblies have also called for responsible withdrawals by the U.S. from Iraq (2004) and Afghanistan (2010); the 2004 assembly prophetically and controversially termed the Iraq war, “unwise, illegal, and immoral.” (The 2008 assembly “commended for study” a careful ethical assessment of that war entitled, “To Repent, To Restore, To Rebuild, and To Reconcile.”)

This effort differs from previous studies in seeking broader participation and in focusing more on the example as well as teaching of Jesus and the early church.

This effort, however, returns to an earlier model of church decision-making on war and peace used by our church long before 1980. In proposing a two-stage process for inviting responses, reflecting on them, and then sending out preliminary recommendations to the presbyteries, this process echoes a model used by our church in the 1930s, before World War II, Korea, and Vietnam.

In 1936 and 1938, the General Assembly of Presbyterian Church in the United States of America affirmed and sent to the presbyteries a proposal to remove “just war” language from the Westminster Confession, then the only confessional standard for the church. On both occasions, a majority of presbyteries voted for the proposals, but the number did not reach the super-majority required for confessional change.

The church changed the nature of its peace witness in “The Confession of 1967,” in an affirmation that is central to the thinking of Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling and which remains vital today:

God’s reconciliation in Jesus Christ is the ground of the peace, justice, and freedom among nations which all powers of government are called to serve and defend. The church, in its own life, is called to practice the forgiveness of enemies and to commend to the nations as practical politics the search for cooperation and peace. This search requires that nations pursue fresh and responsible relations across every line of conflict, even at risk to national security, to reduce areas of strife and to broaden international understanding. Reconciliation among nations becomes particularly urgent as countries develop nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons, diverting their [human]power and resources from constructive uses and risking the annihilation of [human]kind. Although nations may serve God’s purposes in history, the church which identifies the sovereignty of any one nation or any one way of life with the cause of God denies the Lordship of Christ and betrays its calling. (The Book of Confessions, Section 9.45).

The current position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), then, tilts strongly toward peace and develops means for peacemaking, but considers wars on a case-by-case basis, often adapting “just war” criteria to assess justifications for and conduct of hostilities. In ecumenical terms, several of the alternatives to war commended by the assembly would be considered, “Just Peacemaking,” though the Presbyterian policy by that name is focused on humanitarian intervention, as in Bosnia or Libya most recently.

The Peace Discernment Process into which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is now being invited is concerned principally with the following questions:

- How can the PC(USA) hasten the day when humankind no longer considers violence and war acceptable or inevitable means of resolving conflicts?
- Should the PC(USA) continue its “just war” theology, or have the conditions of modern warfare and the politics and economics of war rendered our historic stance obsolete? Are there new and different biblical alternatives to consider, such as “Just Peacemaking”?
- Is the PC(USA) now being called to become a “peace church,” opposed to all wars and affirming nonviolence as a basic orientation toward conflict—abroad, at home, and in our everyday lives? And if so, what would the implications of such a stance be for those in the military, those in military industries, and for our witness in society?
JESUS, THE EARLY CHURCH, AND NONVIOLENCE

Jesus and Nonviolence

Nonviolence can be thought of as both a means and an end. It is an end in that it refers to the future world we long for—a world free from violence and war, free from hunger and poverty, free from injustice and oppression. Jesus called it “the kingdom of God;” Martin Luther King Jr., called it “the beloved community;” and Walter Wink has called it “the domination-free order.” Nonviolence also can be thought of as a means in two ways: as a technique for engaging in conflict, and as an ethic or philosophy for living one’s life.

There is a clear predilection for nonviolence in both the example and teaching of Jesus and in the practice of the early church.

When members of Jesus’ hometown synagogue were so infuriated by his preaching that they drove him out of town, intending to throw him off a cliff, “… he passed through the midst of them and went on his way” (Lk. 4:30). Jesus didn’t try to run away. Nor did he try to defend himself with violence. Instead, he seemed to choose a third response. He stood his ground with courage, faced down the angry mob, and made his way through the crowd without striking one blow.

The Peace Discernment Steering Team follows Walter Wink and other scholars who see in Jesus a “third way” that resists evil through nonviolent means, an approach that outflanks and reverses aggression, sometimes by choosing to suffer. From this perspective, turning the other cheek, offering more clothing than a coat, and going a second mile, are examples of (the “weaker” party) taking the moral initiative and humanizing one’s opponent, forcing him or her to recognize one’s own humanity without resorting to violence. This is a strategy with social and cultural implications, potentially breaking cycles of subjugation and humiliation, exposing injustice in power dynamics, and neutralizing and undermining the threat of violence [Wink, Engaging the Powers: Discernment and Resistance in a World of Domination, (Minneapolis, Minn.: Fortress Press, 1992), pp. 186–87.]

Without imposing one text or one view on the whole picture of Jesus, the “third way” interpretation is a way of accounting for a prophetic and nonviolent life that threatened both the Roman and Temple authorities. It presents a Jesus of inner power who, when a Samaritan village refused to host him, refuses his disciples’ idea that he ask God “to command fire to come down from heaven and consume them.” (In contemporary terms, they could have been calling for a missile or divine airstrike to take out that village.) Jesus rebukes them, saying: “You do not know what spirit you are of, for the Son of Man has not come to destroy the lives of human beings but to save them” (Lk 9:51–62, esp. 55–56, NASB). Even when Jesus demonstrated his strong passion for justice and the integrity of God’s sacred house, cleansing the Temple, overturning the tables of the moneychangers and driving them out, he stopped short of violence against persons.

When Jesus was about to be arrested, one of his disciples struck a slave of the high priest with a sword and cut off his right ear. But Jesus said “No more of this!” And he touched the slave’s ear and healed him. Matthew quotes Jesus saying: “Put your sword back into its place; for all who take the sword will perish by the sword” (Mt. 26:52, NRSV). Jesus didn’t resort to violence to protect his life or legacy. Instead of taking up the sword, he chose to endure the suffering of the cross with words of forgiveness on his lips: “Father, forgive them; for they do not know what they are doing” (Lk 23:34, NRSV).

Of Jesus’ death on the cross, Martin Luther King Jr., said: “Jesus eloquently affirmed from the cross a higher law. He knew that the old eye-for-an-eye philosophy would leave everyone blind. He did not seek to overcome evil with evil. He overcame evil with good.”

While we emphasize the witness of Jesus in this resource for discernment, a fuller discussion would compare his teaching with the broad range of approaches to violence in the Old Testament. During the reigns of kings, for example, we see leaders who exercise power and sovereignty over their own people, and wage offensive and defensive war. The prophets (closest models for Jesus) hold the royal figures to moral accounting based on law and teaching received from God in the earliest period of liberation and community formation. There are stories of victory and defeat in warfare, descriptions of captivity and exile, and accounts of battle and its aftermath. In the earlier periods, the people do not have power and face disordered violence, as in the book of Judges; later books describe internal divisions within a Hebrew kingdom and rebellions by vassal states against oppressive empires.

Some scholars have seen the biblical books unfolding a progressive revelation leading from the initial wars in Canaan toward more profound models of faithfulness such as that of the “suffering servant.” Others spiritualize the narratives of all-out wars of conquest, or de-emphasize the commands to kill women and children as well as male fighters, a style of war sometimes called “holy war” or later in history, “crusade,” although some crusading campaigns followed rules of chivalry. Whichever approach to the “holy war” and sacrificial passages one uses, the Reformed tradition takes the Hebrew Bible very seriously and we are reluctant to impose one schema upon it.

The Early Church and Nonviolence (Adapted from 2010 Item 13-06)

The history of Christian responses to violence tells a compelling story of the initial embrace of the nonviolent witness of Jesus. Early Christians in Rome refused to engage in any violence because they trusted that their love for fellow citizens would point people to the new day dawning in Jesus Christ (Justin Martyr, First Apology, 14.3; Origen, Against Celsus, 8.68, 75; Arnobius, Against the Nations, 1.6). The first Christians lived according to a nonviolent code, with frequent martyrdom.
Moreover, taking with utmost seriousness the Hebrew prophets, Micah and Isaiah, early Christian theologians asserted that the coming of the Messiah removed the need for members of the beloved community to do anything other than beat their swords into plowshares when it came to matters of violence (Justin Martyr, Dialogue with Trypho, 110; Origen, Against Celsus, 5.33; Tertullian, An Answer to the Jews, 5; cf. also Cyprian, On the Advantage of Patience, 14). They did not interpret the violence in their Scriptures (our Old Testament) as giving them license to kill.

Indeed, there is no affirmation of killing or war anywhere in the writings of the early church, nor is there anywhere the idea that Christians making war would make the world a better or safer place. The early writings are replete with prohibitions against killing of any sort, some of which even carried the explicit sanction of forbidding admission to the Eucharist directed at persons engaged in such acts (Canons of the Synod of Illiberis, 56; Hippolytus, Apostolic Tradition, Canon 16; Lactantius, Divine Institutes, 6.20.16–17). The early Christians would not even watch killings, either by observing the carrying out of legal death sentences or by attending the gladiatorial games (Minucius Felix, Octavius 30.6, 31.6; Athenagoras, A Plea for the Christians, 35).

Christians today who interpret the apostle Paul as giving divine sanction to violence and war (Rom. 13:4) cannot ignore the history of the early church and even Paul’s own words immediately before and after that passage about caring for enemies, overcoming evil with good, and fulfilling the law through loving others (Rom. 12:20–21 and Rom. 13:8–10). Indeed, recent scholarship indicates that the letters of Peter, Paul, and other authors call for Christians to adopt a new behavior toward those who do harm to them (Rom. 12:14–21; 1 Pet. 3:9–19; James 3:13–4:3). Though generally poor and powerless, these early Christian communities were also vibrant and threatening to the Roman empire and its institutions of slavery and expansionary war.

The history of the Christian response to violence changed in the fourth century. Following the conversion of Constantine, Christians began to take up arms on behalf of the Roman Empire, sometimes with inducements of money, property, and power. The change was such that while in 303 CE it was forbidden for Christians to serve in the military, by 416 CE only Christians were allowed to serve.

Christian participation in the wars of the Roman Empire contributed to the creation of the “Just War” Doctrine or Theory, developed primarily by Bishop Augustine of Hippo. The Just War Theory established the ground rules under which a Christian might be understood to be acting morally when killing another human being.

Even Augustine, though he believed that protecting the innocent made killing justifiable, nevertheless taught that a Christian killing in self-defense was immoral. After Augustine, the justification for killing on the part of Christians expanded to include self-defense and even further, to the killing of other Christians, if considered aggressors. This practice has continued until our own times.

The practice of granting exceptions or expansions (and exclusions) to the basic principles of the Just War Theory has resulted in an ever-expanding definition of “just war” as weapons technology and cultural patterns have changed over the centuries. It is sometimes argued that each new exception becomes the new standard, which then gets broadened to embrace the next exception, but space prevents a full discussion of the influence of the church on international law and state relations that also shaped Just War theory. In principle, however, the church moved from a counter-cultural nonviolence to accepting the killing of human beings for the sake of public order when certain legal limits were applied.

Questions for Reflection/Discernment

• Do the example and teaching of Jesus and the practice of the early church require us to be nonviolent?

• In what ways does the church today practice (or fail to practice) Jesus’ message of nonviolence?

THE CHALLENGES OF VIOLENCE, TERRORISM, AND WAR

Since the terror event of 9/11/01, involving four hijacked civilian airplanes and approximately 3,000 civilian casualties, the U.S. has been engaged in two significant wars and a more recent intervention in Libya. The war in Afghanistan has been a joint operation with NATO member armies as was the recent military intervention in Libya. The war in Iraq was inaugurated without United Nations authorization and involved a “coalition of the willing,” with Great Britain most notable among the U.S. allies.

The Iraq and Afghanistan Wars have been extremely costly in both human and economic terms. More than 6,100 U.S. soldiers have been killed and more than 46,000 have been injured. The number of Afghans, Iraqis, and Pakistanis who have died in the fighting are estimated to be in the hundreds of thousands. War refugees and internally displaced persons number 7.8 million. The Iraq and Afghanistan Wars will cost the U.S. alone an estimated $3–4 trillion when current and future veterans’ costs are added up; the costs of reconstruction, rehabilitation, and military activity by other countries involved is estimated to be another $3 trillion. Most Americans now question whether these military interventions have been worth the enormous cost in lives and national treasure.

For most of our history, the size of the military mirrored the immediate threat or task to which it was directed. In times of war, the U.S. drafted an army, and when the war was over, most of the army disbanded. This was the case after the American Civil War and after both the first and second world wars. But since the end of the cold war, the size and capability of our military has increasingly taken on a life of its own, independent of any specific threats. Americans have grown to see it as their right and responsibility to police the world. Without credible threats to the U.S. itself (as distinct from threats to individual citizens), have we come to value military power for its own sake?

The U.S. spends more money on its military than the next seventeen countries combined. It retains some seven hundred military bases around the world from which to project force, carry on surveillance, and protect oil and other resources. United States military intervention has become commonplace since the end of the Cold War—Haiti, Somalia, Bosnia, Kosovo, the Persian Gulf, Afghanistan, Libya, the list goes on. Hardly a year or two has passed without a significant military action. Living in a state of war has become the rule rather than the exception.
Furthermore, and perhaps more importantly, the entire spectrum of our nation’s engagement with the world is becoming more militarized. United States military forces are increasingly being used to do things that have not usually been considered part of their job—things like nation-building, which had been handled by the State Department and through international diplomacy.

The growth of military spending has been driven, in part, by military manufacturers and a host of contractors and private security companies. President Eisenhower’s prophetic warning about the “unwarranted influence” of the “military-industrial complex” has become more relevant than ever. However, today the concept has expanded to include the role of congressional leaders, many of whom receive campaign contributions from military contractors or are hired as arms industry lobbyists once they leave public office. Now called the “congressional-military-industrial complex,” or “iron triangle,” it is an interlocking system of mutually reinforcing interests with very little outside oversight. Supported by “political engineering,” that distributes contracting across many congressional districts, the complex creates and sustains its own bureaucratic momentum and is largely impervious to criticism or serious reform.

“National Security” has become the overarching interest with which the U.S. approaches the world. Since the “war on terror” began, covert operations, surveillance, and drone missiles have taken on a central role. The growth in the U.S. intelligence community has been staggering. The Washington Post, September 17, 2012, page 1341

The United States’ vast military and intelligence establishments go far beyond the intent or imagination of our nation’s Founders, whose views could loosely be called “isolationist,” opposed to foreign “entanglements” in John Adams’ words. George Washington himself counseled against a significant standing army: “Overgrown military establishments are under any form of government inauspicious to liberty, and are to be regarded as particularly hostile to Republican liberty.” (Farewell Address, September 17, 1796). And James Madison wrote: “Of all enemies to public liberty, war is, perhaps, the most to be dreaded, because it comprises and develops the germ of every other. War is the parent of armies; from these proceed debts and taxes; and armies, and debts, and taxes are the known instruments for bringing the many under the domination of the few” (http://en.wikiquote.org/wiki/James_Madison, quote 33)

What may be most disturbing is how these developments have taken root largely without public debate. As our military spending remains at unprecedented levels, and as the tasks of the military continue to expand, an almost permanent state of war becomes the new "normal." Rather than a “peace dividend,” our military planning recently sought “full spectrum dominance,” and is still predicated on maintaining overwhelming superiority.

Within the military itself, however, there are voices for change. One of the more comprehensive comes from Captain Wayne Porter, USN, and Colonel Mark Mykleby, USMC, whose proposal for a new “National Strategic Narrative” was endorsed and summarized by Anne-Marie Slaughter, a professor of international affairs and briefly Director of Policy Planning in the State Department. Their proposal is for five shifts in approach:

1. from a dominant position of control to credible influence in a more open geopolitical system;
2. “from containment to sustainment,” based on domestic re-development and better modeling of the behavior we seek in other nations;
3. “from deterrence and defense to civilian engagement and competition,” which would re-emphasize trade and diplomacy, while still modernizing “a security complex that includes all domestic and foreign policy assets;”
4. “from zero sum to positive sum global politics/economics,” preferring interdependence and universal values to isolation and exclusion of other nations;

In Slaughter’s summary, she sees the officers adjusting the balance between exceptionalism and universalism toward the latter value, still seeking to be “leader of the free world,” but in a healthier and actually less military way. http://www.wilsoncenter.org/sites/default/files/A%20National%20Strategic%20Narrative.pdf

Questions for Reflection/Discernment

• Have the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan changed the way you think about war? If so, how? What lessons have you learned from the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan?
• Do you, in your own life, see signs of a “military-industrial-congressional” complex supporting our tendency to use force or threat of force?
• What effects do you see in the shift from the citizen-soldier model to the volunteer or professional soldier model, with contractor support?
LIVING IN A CULTURE OF VIOLENCE AND FEAR

The fear that drives our military policy also erodes our relationships with one another. This erosion becomes normalized as structural violence. It is evident in practices of suspicion towards the “other” (people from other countries, other racial/ethnic groups, other religions), in practices of wealth accumulation that create and perpetuate economic inequality, and in practices of preemption that cause people and nations to react with force as a first resort.

Violence pervades American culture. Examples abound:

- A young teenager lives in a drug-infested neighborhood where warring gangs fight over turf. He is caught in the crossfire on his way to school and killed outside his home.
- A wife leaves her husband and seeks the safety of a battered women’s shelter after the last beating left her hospitalized with stitches and a concussion.
- About 30,000 people are killed by firearms each year in the U.S., including suicides, with thousands more wounded.
- In the U.S., one in every four women will experience domestic violence in her lifetime.
- On average, children’s cartoons contain large amounts of violence, as do adult television crime shows and movies, including horror movies.
- Popular video games for boys especially include “single shooter” games with constant killing and destruction.
- Many sports involve partly ritualized and partly controlled violence, sometime simulated in the case of professional wrestling, but often bloody in cage-fighting and other extreme combat.
- A man is convicted of armed robbery, sent to prison, where he is then raped repeatedly with the tacit acceptance of the guards.
- A young woman assembling U.S. cell phone components for sixty hours a week for four years in a free trade zone becomes profoundly depressed and jumps to her death from a dormitory window.

While direct physical violence may be more visible and attract more attention, there is another form of violence that is far more widespread in the world and arguably does far more harm over time. It is known as “structural violence” and refers to social and economic structures that oppress and impoverish people, preventing them from meeting their basic human needs and realizing their full human potential.

Corporate-led globalization has resulted in a growing gap between the rich and the poor. The world’s income distribution resembles the shape of a champagne glass, with the top 20 percent of the world’s people who live in the world’s wealthiest countries receiving 83 percent of the world’s income. The next 20 percent receive 10 percent of the world’s income. The remaining 60 percent of the world’s people share the 7 percent of world income that is left.

From this global perspective, Americans are among the richest 20 percent of the world’s population. (Consider that 40 percent of the world’s people attempt to live on less than $2 a day. ) Most Americans live on much more than that. But within the United States there is also a growing gap between the rich and the poor. The U.S. economic and political system has enabled 1 percent of Americans to take in almost a quarter of our nation’s income every year and to control more than 40 percent of our nation’s wealth. This growing economic inequality is becoming untenable. Millions in the U.S. are not working. Millions more have lost their homes to foreclosure. Retirees and those nearing retirement see their retirement savings plummet every time the stock market takes a dive. Poverty in the United States is the highest it has been in fifty years!

Some Americans have taken to the streets, calling for change. They are no longer willing to give their consent and cooperation to a system that allows so much wealth and power to be concentrated in the hands of one percent of the population. The protesters say they represent “the other 99 percent.”

Global economic inequality is nothing new, sad to say. In 1948, George Kennan, head of the U.S. State Department planning staff, wrote the following in a secret policy planning study:

We have about 50 percent of the world’s wealth, but only 6.3 percent of its population. … In this situation, we cannot fail to be the object of envy and resentment. Our real task in the coming period is to devise a pattern of relationships which will permit us to maintain this position of disparity. … To do so, we will have to dispense with all sentimentality and day-dreaming; and our attention will have to be concentrated everywhere on our immediate national objectives. … We should cease to talk about vague and … unreal objectives such as human rights, the raising of living standards, and democratization. The day is not far off when we are going to have to deal in straight power concepts. The less we are then hampered by idealistic slogans, the better.

How do we “maintain this position of disparity?” What does it mean to “deal in straight power concepts?” Enter the military-industrial complex. Thomas L. Friedman, the foreign affairs columnist for the New York Times, explains it this way: “The hidden hand of the market will never work without a hidden fist. McDonald’s cannot flourish without McDonnell Douglas, the first designer of the F-15. And the hidden fist that keeps the world safe for Silicon Valley’s technologies to flourish is called the U.S. Army, Air Force, Navy, and Marines Corps.”

We maintain our privileged economic position in the world through U.S. military might, as well as through military aid and weapons sales to governments around the world. The United States is the largest supplier of arms in the world. In many cases, these weapons are used by militaries against their own people in order to maintain a stable environment for corporate investments. Militarization makes corporate-led globalization possible.

Examples of structural violence also include the patterns of inequality and exclusion called the “isms” of racism, sexism, classism, ethnocentrism, and nationalism, as well as homophobia. These patterns operate at interlocking levels—institutionalized (policies and practices), interpersonal (group and individual), and cultural (social norms and valuing).

Most Americans know that the “isms” exist, but the common discourse in our country narrowly addresses discrimination that happens at the interpersonal level—when someone makes a blatantly derogatory comment or is accused of doing so. This myopic focus stymies people’s understanding of the more insidious institutional and cultural forms of the “isms” that crush the human spirit and deny people access to adequate food, water, shelter, education, health care, and self-determination. So while the theories of oppression have become much more nuanced (e.g. critical race theory and Chester M. Pierce’s work on “microaggressions”) and reveal how the “isms” perpetuate deeply entrenched power disparities; most Americans are both unfamiliar with how the “isms” operate and unaware of their exacting toll.

Yet, these forms of oppression do cause harm. We dehumanize ourselves and degrade others by unconsciously supporting patterns that pin our opportunities for well-being on our neighbors’ marginalization. In each case, structural violence prevents us from fulfilling our Christian calling to be in authentic loving relationships with our neighbors, near and far.

The structural violence of injustice and oppression often leads to the violence of revolt and rebellion that then leads to the retaliatory violence of government repression, which then only compounds the structural violence of injustice and oppression and leads to further revolt followed by yet more repression. This dynamic is the Spiral of Violence to which Martin Luther King Jr. referred when he said: “The ultimate weakness of violence is that it is a descending spiral, begetting the very thing it seeks to destroy. Instead of diminishing evil, it multiplies it. … Returning violence for violence multiplies violence, adding deeper darkness to a night already devoid of stars. Darkness cannot drive out darkness: only light can do that. Hate cannot drive our hate: only love can do that.”

Matters of social and economic justice hold a central place in the Bible. These issues are found all through the Hebrew prophets. Jesus talks more about wealth and poverty than almost any other issue. Indeed, if we tried to cut out all the references to the rich and the poor in the Bible, our Scriptures would be left in shreds.

A central theme of Jesus’ public ministry, empowered by God’s Spirit, was about nonviolent liberation—freeing people from spiritual, physical, social, and economic forms of bondage. His healings, for example, often also involved restoration to community and recognition of a measure of personal identity. It was good news for the poor, the captives, the blind, the oppressed, the landless and enslaved—all people marginalized or excluded by the culture. This good news extended beyond the nation of Israel to include Gentiles as well. But Jesus’ radically inclusive message of liberation for all, while welcomed by the poor and the outcast as a sign of hope, was rejected by those in power. The leaders of his own people collaborated with the Roman government to have him executed.

Jesus’ teachings run counter to the popular theologies of Jesus’ day and our day, theologies which suggest that poverty and suffering are consequences of unrighteousness, indications of God’s judgment, while material wealth and physical well-being are consequences of righteousness, indications of God’s blessing. Jesus turns this thinking upside down. His words challenge us to look critically at our lives, to take a second look at our priorities. The whole law and the prophets are summed up in love of God and love of neighbor, Jesus tells us. (Mt. 22:34–40) That law of love, applied to situations of everyday life, serves as the central criterion for the Last Judgment.

We are also doing violence to the earth and its creatures. We are destroying ecosystems, depleting precious natural resources, and causing a massive extinction of species. We are now using natural resources like fresh water faster than the earth can replenish them. And we are generating waste products like greenhouse gases that are altering the ecology of the entire planet. Global climate change is creating desperate refugees and the potential for serious violence in many regions.

The challenge of our culture is that it increasingly seems to be low in empathy, high in fear, and willing to sacrifice the future for the present. Some of the factors listed at the beginning of this reflection section may contribute to that lack of empathy and the related lack of community and feelings of powerlessness. As followers of Jesus, we are to love our neighbors as ourselves. It is incumbent upon us to treat others with respect and dignity and to ensure that their basic human needs are met.

Questions for Reflection/Discernment

• How have your experiences with violence and/or war affected you, your faith, and/or your views about peacemaking?
• Would you agree that discrimination against particular sections of society, such as sexism, racism, classism and ethnic or religious prejudice, is a form of violence (structural violence)?
• Do cultural practices such as violence in entertainment media actually lead to greater violence, or to greater passivity? Are we in some sense bullied and disempowered by the world of fantasy?
• Are economic practices of unemployment, poverty-level wages, and work without health or retirement benefits forms of structural violence?

NEW DIRECTIONS FOR PEACEMAKING: NONVIOLENT ACTION, CONFLICT TRANSFORMATION, AND RECONCILIATION

During the past twenty years, the field of peacemaking and conflict transformation has taken off. Peace and conflict studies programs in colleges and universities have been established in increasing numbers across the U.S. and the world. There are now four hundred such programs globally, several in the sixty-six colleges and universities affiliated with the PC(USA). Nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) have proliferated, helping to strengthen civil society. Think tanks, research centers, and foundations, such as the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, the U.S. Institute of Peace, the International Crisis Group, Search for Common Ground, and the Oxford Research Group, have developed innovative methods of conflict analysis and intervention. More than one thousand organizations work explicitly on peace and conflict issues globally.

Methods of conflict prevention, conflict management, diplomatic peacemaking, and post-conflict peacebuilding have been developed significantly. We have seen a greater acceptance of alternative dispute resolution (ADR) in the international community as well as the creation of the International Criminal Court (ICC). More conflicts are being ended through negotiation rather than victory by one adversary over another. More “post-conflict” countries are forming Truth and Reconciliation Commissions. Civil society and women, in particular, are increasingly seen as important actors in peacebuilding.

Additionally, there is the Responsibility to Protect (R2P), which represents a push to strengthen the international community’s commitment to intervening to prevent and stop genocides, war crimes, ethnic cleansing, and crimes against humanity.

Since the end of the cold war, conflicts between nation-states have actually been declining in number. But at the same time, the number of conflicts within nation-states has surged. Some of these intrastate conflicts have been predominantly violent in nature, coinciding with a dramatic uptick in the proliferation of small arms and other light weapons being used by a variety of armed actors (the state, paramilitaries, insurgent groups, and the like). Other intrastate conflicts have been predominantly nonviolent in character, with populations undermining the power of their governments using methods of nonviolent resistance such as street marches, mass rallies, strikes, boycotts, and civil disobedience. Repressive governments, in turn, may use techniques of both counterterrorism and counterinsurgency against nonviolent leaders and their communities, prompting forms of anonymous and collective leadership.

A recent study published in International Security (“Why Civil Resistance Works: The Strategic Logic of Nonviolent Conflict,” by Maria J. Stephan and Erica Chenoweth) compared the effectiveness of violent and nonviolent resistance campaigns in conflicts between non-state and state actors between 1900 and 2006. The study found that “major nonviolent campaigns have achieved success 53 percent of the time, compared with 26 percent for violent resistance campaigns.”

Nonviolent struggle has proven to be a powerful means of wielding power in a variety of conflicts. The nonviolent “people power” revolution in the Philippines brought down the Marcos dictatorship in 1986. Pro-democracy movements in Poland, East Germany, and Czechoslovakia ousted communist regimes in 1989. Presbyterians, other Protestants, and Catholics gradually reclaimed peace in Northern Ireland. The anti-apartheid movement in South Africa, supported by international economic pressure, brought an end to white minority rule. A nonviolent student movement in Serbia led in ousting Slobodan Milosevic in the year 2000. Christians participated in these movements for social change, using methods of nonviolent action reminiscent of the civil rights movement that changed America. Then, in early 2011, Arabs all across North Africa and the Middle East took to the streets calling for freedom and democracy in what has become known as “the Arab Spring.” Their struggles continue, despite violent repression and civil war in some states.

Nonviolent “people power” movements have shown themselves capable of overthrowing dictators, thwarting coups d’état, defending against invasions and occupations, challenging unjust systems, promoting human rights, and resisting genocide. Jesus’ “third way” of nonviolent action may not work in all circumstances, but the historical record shows that it is a powerful means of engaging in conflict, and can be used successfully in struggles for justice, human rights, and self-determination.

In addition, at the individual and community levels there are new models for engaging in active peacemaking and working for justice, including the use of social media technologies for advocacy and organizing, nonviolent communication, consensus decision-making processes, restorative justice, nonviolent accompaniment, conflict resolution techniques, artistic expressions, and methods of church-based community organizing.

As followers of Jesus, it is incumbent upon us to examine the common acceptance and even reliance on violence as a response to conflict and to consider exploring and risking nonviolent alternatives. The founding document of the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program also said that “the church must struggle against the cynicism that regards [the pursuit of peace] as idealistic rather than realistic. It must find a central purpose in the intention to make peace. Peacemaking is an indispensable ingredient of the church’s mission. It is not peripheral or secondary but essential to the church’s faithfulness to Christ in our time.” The fact is, church-based initiatives have had demonstrably successful results, appealing to the best in individuals and groups, and finding God present and full of new life.

Questions for Reflection/Discernment

- Have you ever been offered an opportunity to take a bold stand for peace? If so, how did you respond? If not, do you wish you could have such an opportunity?
- How can the PC(USA) hasten the day when humankind no longer considers war an acceptable or inevitable means of resolving conflicts?
- How could the PC(USA) do a more effective job of teaching nonviolence to its members?

DISCERNING GOD’S CALL TO PRESBYTERIAN PEACEMAKERS IN THE 21ST CENTURY

Presbyterians today face a difficult dilemma. Our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, who we know as the Prince of Peace, calls us to embrace nonviolence and reconciliation. And yet, the world around us persists in doing violence—in response to conflict, in social and economic relationships, and in relation to the earth. Overall, rather than seeing nonviolent responses to conflict, we see many who have embraced the “myth of redemptive violence.” How much do we, too, put our faith and trust in military power, disregarding Scripture like Psalm 33? Instead of pursuing social and economic justice in our relationships with others, have we not also been seduced by materialism, consumerism, and an “American way of life” that is unsustainable, except by structural violence? Instead of making the lifestyle and policy changes necessary to protect planet earth from severe climate change, we still seem culturally addicted to nonrenewable resources and the power relations necessary to obtain them.

The Peace Discernment Steering Team asks if it is time for Presbyterians in the United States to reclaim greater responsibility for our own actions and those taken in our name. Napoleon aptly pointed out that: “The world suffers a lot. Not because of the violence of bad people, but because of the silence of good people!” As a church and as a society, should we learn to move from violence to nonviolence, from war-making to peacemaking, from a permanent war economy to a sustainable peace economy, from being citizens of an empire to members of God’s peaceable kingdom? What are the true dangers we face, the security we long for, and the liberty that comes with “justice for all?” How do we better align ourselves with God’s vision of justice and peace? How can we hasten the day when humankind no longer considers violence and war acceptable or inevitable means of resolving conflicts?

While we do not presume to know what the Spirit is calling the PC(USA) to be and to do in this particular historical moment, we strongly affirm that “the Church is sent to be Christ’s faithful evangelist … participating in God’s mission to care for the needs of the sick, poor, and lonely; to free people from sin, suffering, and oppression; and to establish Christ’s just, loving, and peaceable rule in the world” (Book of Order, F-1.0302(d)). “The Church is to be a community of faith, entrusting itself to God alone, even at the risk of losing its life” (Book of Order, F-1.0301).

We invite you to join with us on this adventure, to help us explore hard choices, to hear many voices, to discern God’s calling for us as Presbyterian peacemakers in the twenty-first century.

The Peace Discernment Steering Team

Members of the Peace Discernment Steering Team are: the Reverend J. Mark Davidson (chair), pastor, Church of Reconciliation, Chapel Hill, North Carolina; Dr. Kathryn Poethig, associate professor of global studies, California State Monterey Bay; Shaya Gregory Poku, program associate for Sub-Saharan Africa, Search for Common Ground, Washington, D.C.; Jessica Hawkinson, M.Div. student, Princeton Theological Seminary, and former staff of the Presbyterian UN Office; Shaheen Amjad-Ali, lecturer in world religions, Metropolitan State University, St. Paul, Minnesota; the Reverend Craig Hunter, pastor, Trinity Presbyterian Church, Denton, Texas.

The steering team is being staffed by the Reverend Christian T. Iosso, Ph.D., coordinator of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), and the Reverend Roger Scott Powers, a part-time consultant with the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, who also serves as pastor of Light Street Presbyterian Church (Baltimore) and co-moderator of the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship.

Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) Agency Summary

1. Assigned Responsibilities: Strengthening Presbyterian Social Witness

Social witness is part of what it means for the church to be “salt” and “light” in the world today. Coming from Jesus’ words in Mt. 5:13–14, the images of Salt & Light also give name to the ACSWP on-line newsletter. They undergird the committee’s faithfulness to its charge:

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) serves the prophetic calling of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by providing the General Assembly with careful studies of pressing moral challenges, media for discussion and discernment of Christian responsibilities, and policy recommendations for faithful action.

This brief narrative summarizes the committee’s responsibilities, its procedures and personnel, its accomplishments and activities.

In every age, the Spirit calls on the church to discern afresh God’s redemptive purpose in our particular time and place in history. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s work is to help the church discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in relation to contemporary society. In this work, the ACSWP and its task forces draw upon a great wealth of resources:

• the voices of the biblical text;
• the wisdom of theological discourse;
• the guidance of the Reformed confessions;
• the tradition of past policy statements;
• the insights of sociopolitical disciplines;
• the advice of members and all governing bodies of the church;
• the insights of people who are poor, victims of existing policies, and those who have not had a voice in councils of the church; and
• the counsel of ecumenical partners. (Minutes, 1993, Part I, p. 769). Social witness can occur at many different points: in a church session, in a presbytery, in an advocacy group, in the participation of Christians in mission, in the participation of Christians in mission, in a meeting of the ecumenical church, in an individual Christian’s brave refusal to “go along” with injustice. For Presbyterians, however, decisions about the church’s social witness are made by persons elected to serve in governing bodies (session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly). As councils of the church meet, the elected persons are commissioned “… not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ …” (2011–2013 Book of Order, F-3.0204). The advisory committee’s structure and function go back to 1936 when “consecrated” and justice-oriented persons from the Boards of Christian Education and National Missions were elected to a Social Education and Action Committee. In providing service and resources to meet the needs of congregations, “mid councils,” and the General Assembly, ACSWP members find guidance in the mission statement quoted above. Theologically grounded ethical reflection is part of the salt and light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The ACSWP engages with the grassroots in assisting the General Assembly to discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in a world that remains too grim for too many. At the same time, the committee’s membership contains persons with expertise in theology, social ethics, and various other disciplines, more than half of whom hold advanced degrees.

Making a personal social witness begins with very individual ways of growing and developing as a Christian—prayerfully studying the Scriptures, being inspired by Jesus, the prophets, and courageous stands of the church, gaining insight from past ethical witness, connecting one’s faith with others in the Christian community, and then being faithful in the world beyond the church. The ACSWP seeks to be a partner in the ministry of reconciliation, for “each member [who] is the church in the world …” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.38).

The churchwide work of the ACSWP is based on ethical guidance from the Scriptures, The Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order. The 1993 General Assembly policy statement, Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness (OGA-93-019), provides extensive documentation of key biblical passages and is a useful document in congregational interpretation of the ACSWP and its mission.

All of those biblical texts have a common theme. The Gospel says that to confess Jesus Christ as Lord is to believe that God can and has overcome the powers of sin in the world. Christians do not work alone, but join the Lord Jesus Christ who is already at work in our world. John Calvin said that social concern, expressed by action on behalf of our neighbors, is a central part of the faith. Our historic confessions, the work of theologians, and the actions of 219 General Assemblies have reaffirmed that message. Our faithfulness as Reformed Christians means action.
a. New Developments

In 2011, the Advisory Committee launched an internet justice journal, with the support of the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries Area and the larger General Assembly Mission Council. The new journal, Unbound: An Interactive Journal of Christian Social Justice, is designed to strengthen the social witness of the whole church and to be an open forum on areas where new witness is needed. The url (internet address) for the journal is http://justiceunbound.org/; the name, “unbound,” refers not only to the lack of binding, but to Jesus’ words at the resurrection of Lazarus, “unbind him,” and to images of prisoners freed.

A key goal has been to reach twenty and thirty-something readers, using an intergenerational editorial staff. Despite limitations in the committee’s budget, a recent seminary graduate, Patrick Heery, was hired as managing editor and has done an excellent job. In September 2011, the General Assembly Mission Council designated the journal to be the successor to Church & Society magazine, which itself continued the work of print journals going back to 1908 (the Amethyst, Moral Welfare, and Social Progress). Back issues of all of these journals are to be made available through the American Theological Library Association, and will provide depth to go with the very current style of on-line engagement: for the history track, think of a mix-tape with church insights from the 1930s, ’60s, as well as recent General Assemblies.

In addition to the internet journal, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy maintains a website and distributes an e-newsletter, “Salt & Light.” Unbound links to these and to the various sites of other compassion, peace, and justice ministries. The emphasis on new technology and nurturing communities of people reflects the findings of the self-study ACSWP presented to and which was approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Another new development has been the addition of a “Social Teaching” track to the inter-seminary course taught at the General Assembly by former Moderator Jack Rogers and David Tomlinson, both professors at San Francisco Theological Seminary. That course, “Presbyterianism: Principles, Practice, and Social Teaching,” is designed for seminarians but also welcomes auditors and others seeking to understand the assembly in-depth and see it as a window into the church. The “Social Teaching” track will be taught by a social ethicist, Teresa Saucedo, and by former Stated Clerk Cliff Kirkpatrick, who will also augment the ecumenical dimension.

Since the 2010 General Assembly, the committee met at Stony Point, New York; San Diego, California; Big Tent, Indianapolis, Indiana; Denver, Colorado; Highland Presbyterian Center, Allenspark, Colorado; and Louisville, Kentucky. At each place, the committee met with representatives of the presbyteries and organizations and congregations doing vital forms of social witness, including:

- At Stony Point Conference Center, their residential program of the three Abrahamic Faiths, their expanded organic gardening initiative, their offerings of spiritual guidance and retreats as well as hospitality, their witness for peace.
- At First Presbyterian Church, San Diego; a panel of speakers on new social ministries in San Diego, including work in public high schools combining tutoring, mentoring, and an in-school food pantry, new church development with young people as leaders, outreach to and inclusion of homeless persons as members of the congregation, an overnight downtown shelter, and other outreach and social service ministries. In addition to orientation from the presbytery executive, the pastor of First Presbyterian Church, San Diego, described social ministries and witness intrinsically linked to witness to the Savior. The committee also heard from a mission co-worker based in Tijuana, a pastor involved in peace education, and a professor opening up moral discourse in adult education programming. The coordinator spoke in a local congregation twice on the near Sunday.
- At Big Tent, the co-chairs of the Economic Crisis study team presented a workshop, inviting input, and ACSWP saw the first prototype of the Unbound website, and many names were proposed. The committee also explored formats for the General Assembly “Social Teaching” class, revised its Manual, and heard from Middle East Christians on the impacts of the Iraq war and the beginning of the Arab Awakening.
- In Denver, the committee met with forty members of the presbytery for a hearing on the economic crisis and also held the formal “launch” of Unbound at the presbytery offices. A further discussion was held before a presbytery meeting, and a communications specialist from one of the Denver churches also coached the committee on addressing controversial issues with the press.
- In Allenspark, Colorado, ACSWP met with leaders from the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks, discussing the history, situation of rural churches and environmental (especially water) issues in that large presbytery.
- In Louisville, on two occasions, the committee met with a range of staff members, including the deputy director of the General Assembly Mission Council.

b. Procedures and Personnel

In support of the work of the assembly, the ACSWP is given direct access to the assembly as it meets biennially. Between sessions of the assembly, the ACSWP also assists the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), the Office of the Accomplishments

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) members and staff make themselves available for interpretive events as requested and as time allows. Such events included preaching at Newton Presbyterian Church, Newtown, Pennsylvania; speaking at Christ Presbyterian, Carlsbad, California; a visit to Arcadia University’s Peace Studies program, and speaking at three conferences, one with peacemakers, one on the Middle East, and one with Evangelical Christian environmentalists. The committee welcomes inquiries through its office in Louisville. All governing bodies, churches, and members are encouraged to use the “Presbyterian Social Witness Policy Compilation,” which contains the core of the assemblies’ social policy statements since 1946. It is revised regularly to meet the needs of the church and can be downloaded from the worldwide web at (www.pcusa.org/acswp). The ACSWP holds a stated meeting following each General Assembly to discern and prioritize its work; periodically between the assemblies, to review progress on papers and projects; and in January before an assembly, to edit and approve final drafts for submission to the assembly. This year the committee has prepared the following reports to strengthen current social witness policies.

- Human Rights Update 2012
- World of Hurt, Word of Life: Renewing God’s Communion in the Work of Economic Reconstruction
- Interim Report: Encountering the Gospel of Peace Anew: An Invitation to Discernment and Witness
- For Human Rights and Civic Freedom: Movements for Democratic Change in the Arab World
- ACSWP Agency Narrative

In preparing this year’s General Assembly reports, ACSWP took into consideration the comments and reflections shared by individual Presbyterians and adult education classes, General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) program ministry areas, and other bodies within our church. Staff also consulted with the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association in developing a consultation on criminal justice for early 2012.
From 2010–2011, the committee assisted the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) in the publication of the following reports: Gun Violence and Gospel Values: Mobilizing to Respond to God’s Call; Becoming an HIV and AIDS Competent Church: Prophetic Witness and Compassionate Action; Living Through Economic Crisis: The Church’s Witness in Troubled Times (A Social Involvement Report); Loving Our Neighbors: For Equity and Quality in Public Education (K-12); Neither Poverty nor Riches: Compensation, Equity, and the Unity of the Church; and the Human Rights Update 2010. These resources can be downloaded at http://oga.pcusa.org/documents-resources/list/publication/ or http://www.pcusa.org/acswp/resources.htm. Committee members and staff also continued to support use of the gun violence and AIDS policy statements. A survey of compensation practices in comparable church and nonprofit groups remains an assignment from the Theology of Compensation policy; the committee revised a study guide on Just Globalization that complements a shorter resource on globalization done for high school and college mission trips. The ACSWP works collaboratively with the six mission and ministry areas of the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), other entities of the GAMC, and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA). The ACSWP has liaisons from the Compassion Peace and Justice ministry area, and from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC). When possible, the committee spends time with local church members, relevant presbytery committees, and with ecumenical contacts during its stated meetings. Members of the committee have distributed policy statements and resources at meetings of the Denver and Eastern Virginia presbyteries and participated in the Ecumenical Advocacy Days cosponsored by the Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C.

As invited, the committee assists in programming an annual gathering of the Social Ethics Network (SEN) (formerly known as the Theological Educators for Presbyterian Social Witness (TEPSW)). This group is composed primarily of Christian Presbyterian ethicists currently or formerly serving in seminaries and other educational institutions related to and/or in covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Since the last General Assembly, the committee assisted with two such gatherings. In the fall of 2010, the SEN met at Columbia Theological Seminary (CTS), Decatur, Georgia; and in the fall of 2011, the Social Ethics Network (SEN) led a Planning Consultation on Peace Teaching and Discernment in Presbyterian Seminaries, Colleges, and Universities at the San Francisco Theological Seminary (SFTS), San Anselmo, California. The ACSWP also hosts a reception for Presbyterians at the annual meeting of the Society of Christian Ethics; the January 2012 meeting was held at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, Washington, D.C. The ACSWP will focus on emerging social witness issues and future priorities at its summer 2012 stated meeting, including the guidance of the General Assembly. Other responses by the committee to General Assembly (GA) work may be found in the responses to referrals section of the reports to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

On Recognizing that Israel’s Law and Practices Constitute Apartheid Against Palestinian People—From the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley.

The Presbytery of Muskingum Valley overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to recognize that Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people. The General Assembly urges its members, congregations, presbyteries, synods, and national staff units, including the Office of Interfaith Relations, to study this matter and to seek appropriate ways to bring an end to Israeli apartheid.

Rationale

A. Purpose

This overture is pursued with the hope it will lead to a peaceful reconciliation for the people of Israel and Palestine similar to that which occurred in South Africa when apartheid was internationally acknowledged.

Just twenty years ago there was serious injustice, widespread suffering, and major human rights abuses in South Africa because of apartheid laws, practices, and policies that established a preferential legal status and material privileges to one group of people based on their identity while discriminating against another group based on their inferior status. The favored group received preferential access to land, water, other resources, and to government benefits and services while the disfavored group was confined to ever shrinking noncontiguous territorial enclaves. The peaceful reconciliation of the peoples in South Africa and the creation of a stable political state were accomplished only after the churches and the nations of the world recognized that South Africa’s laws, practices, and policies constituted apartheid. In the 1990s, South African soccer teams were banned from international soccer competition because of the government’s apartheid policies. Twenty years later, South Africa hosted soccer’s World Cup, a remarkable demonstration of the political transformation that can take place when the world recognizes apartheid and a government responds by granting human rights for all people. It is hoped that the Israeli government policies toward the Palestinian people will undergo a similar transformation if Israeli apartheid is internationally acknowledged.

B. Why Presbyterians Must Act

To solve a problem, one has to honestly recognize and acknowledge that the problem exists. The rationale section of this overture will demonstrate how Israel’s practices and actions in the occupied Palestinian territories combined with Israel’s physical changes to the land and infrastructure of the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, fit the United Nations and World Court definitions of apartheid. As Presbyterians we believe the prophetic mission of the church is to speak the Word of God courageously, honestly, and lovingly in the local context and in the midst of daily life. Following the example of Jesus, the church is called to stand alongside the oppressed to help bring about justice, peace, and reconciliation. Christians spoke out in the 1950s against segregation in the United States and later on against apartheid in South Africa. They must again raise their voices and speak out against Israel’s forty-four-year-old occupation of Palestinian territories and give a name to the crime against humanity that this occupation represents, the crime of apartheid.

By honestly recognizing the apartheid situation in the holy land, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can add its voice to an international dialog to which Israeli leaders will listen and respond. We ask the church to join the witness of others, such as those quoted below, who have recognized that Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people.

- Nelson Mandela, past president of South Africa and Nobel Peace prize winner, said, “Apartheid is a crime against humanity. Israel has deprived millions of Palestinians of their liberty and property. It has perpetuated a system of gross racial discrimination and inequality. It has systematically incarcerated and tortured thousands of Palestinians, contrary to the rules of international law. It has, in particular, waged a war against a civilian population, in particular children.” (2001)

- Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the South African Nobel Peace prize winner said “If I were to change the names, the description of what is happening in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank could describe events in South Africa.” (1989) “I have been to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and I have witnessed the racially segregated roads and housing that reminded me so much of the conditions we experienced in South Africa under the racist system of Apartheid. I have witnessed the humiliation of Palestinian men, women, and children made to wait hours at Israeli military checkpoints routinely when trying to make the most basic of trips to visit relatives or attend school or college, and this humiliation is familiar to me and the many black South Africans who were corralled and regularly insulted by the security forces of the Apartheid government. It is not with rancor that we criticize the Israeli government, but with hope, a hope that a better future can be made for both Israelis and Palestinians.” (2010)

- Jimmy Carter, former president of the U.S. and Nobel Peace prize winner said: “Israel does occupy this territory deep within the West Bank, and connects 200-or-so settlements with each other, with a road, and then prohibits the Palestinians from using that road, or in many cases even crossing the road. This perpetrates even worse instances of apartness, or apartheid, than we witnessed even in South Africa.” (2006)

- Israeli human rights group B’Tselem said: “Israel has created in the Occupied Territories a regime of separation based on discrimination, applying two separate systems of law in the same area and basing the rights of individuals on their nationality. This regime … is reminiscent of distasteful regimes from the past such as the Apartheid regime in South Africa.” (2002)

- Henry Siegman, former director of the American Jewish Congress & Synagogue Council of America, said, “successive Israeli governments have long sought to preclude the two-state solution. Israel has crossed the threshold from ‘the only democracy in the Middle East’ to ‘the only apartheid regime in the Western world.’” (2007)

- Michael Ratner, president of the Center for Constitutional Rights, after a visit to Yad Vashem in Jerusalem said: “the powerful narrative of the Holocaust that the museum was trying to make me (as a Jew) accept, or at least justify, what was unacceptable: Israel’s apartheid state. … To truly honor the lessons of the Holocaust would be to end the apartheid system that is the Israel of today.” (2010)

- Yitzhak Laor, Israeli playwright and novelist said “the bi-national state is already here. It has a rigid apartheid legal system as the high Court of Justice fades away. The system preserving this apartheid is more ruthless than that seen in South Africa. (2009)

- Ilan Pappe, Israeli and former Haifa University history professor said, “Israel is now one of worst apartheid regimes in the world. It controls almost all of Palestine (apart from Gaza which it imprisoned hermetically since 2005). It has the largest number of apartheid laws and regulations than any country in the world and the longest imposition of emergency laws and regulations that rob citizens of their most basic human and civil rights.” (2011)

- The Human Sciences Research Council of South Africa, after two years of studying Israeli practices towards the Palestinians, concluded that Israel practices the “three pillars” of apartheid in the occupied territories in a manner calculated to prevent Palestinians from participation in the political, social, and cultural life of their country. (2009)

— Israeli laws and policies establish Jewish identity for purposes of law and afford a preferential legal status and material benefits to Jewish people over non-Jewish people.

— Israel’s policies and practices fragment the Occupied Palestinian Territories and ensure that Palestinians remain confined to the reserves designated for them while Israeli Jews are prohibited from entering those reserves but enjoy freedom of movement throughout much of the Palestinian territory.

— Israel invokes the need for “security” to impose sweeping restrictions on Palestinian rights to freedom of opinion, expression, assembly, association and movement. The true underlying intent is to suppress dissent to its system of domination and maintain control over Palestinians as a group.

C. Why Christians Cannot Be Silent

Palestinian land and businesses have been expropriated, homes demolished, and property and farmland destroyed as a half-a-million Israeli settlers have moved into the West bank, including East Jerusalem. The illegal settlement colonies, the bypass roads that connect them, and the Separation Wall imprison Palestinians in isolated enclaves, eviscerate the Palestinian economy, and prevent the creation of a viable, contiguous, sovereign, and independent Palestinian state. And the pace of Israeli human rights abuses and violation of international law appears to increase every year.

The Israeli policies in the West Bank and the infrastructure of the illegal Israeli settlements, bypass roads, checkpoints, and separation wall/barrier that constitute an apartheid regime are in plain view for all to see and have been denounced by the PC(USA) at the last two General Assemblies. However, it is difficult for many Americans and Christians to recognize these Israeli actions as apartheid. One reason may be fear of disturbing our relationships with some of our Jewish or Christian brothers and sisters. It is difficult for many Christians to publicly criticize the policies of Israel’s government for fear that even legitimate criticism may be seen as anti-Israel or anti-Semitic or characterized as “picking on Israel.” Some Christians believe they must silence their criticism of Israel’s policies because of the history of the holocaust and the failure of many Christians to speak out at the time. Some believe that using the word “apartheid” has a harsh or jarring effect that can hamper constructive dialog.

Our call as Christians means we must sometimes get out of our comfort zone and risk controversy and criticism from people or organizations with which we are in relationship. It is because of this call that we must recognize what we witness in occupied Palestine, which is that Israel’s laws, practices, and polices constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people.

The PC(USA) 219th General Assembly (2010) was presented with an overture asking it to recognize that Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people. The official action of the General Assembly was to acknowledge the facts on the ground that constitute apartheid by approving parts 1 and 2 of the Middle East Study Report, but failing to recognize it as such because “‘while we are deeply concerned with the policies implemented by Israel in relation to the Palestine territories and Palestinians under its jurisdiction, we believe that dialogue is hampered by words like “apartheid.”’ In essence, the PC(USA) chose to be silent on the issue of apartheid because it is a word that might offend Jews and Christians whose relationships we hold dear. While acknowledging the reality of apartheid, the PC(USA) balked at speaking this reality out loud.

After World War II, when the horror of the holocaust was revealed, Jews around the world said “never again.” Many Christians around the world were shamed by their silence during the 1930s as Jews in Germany were given special cards identifying their religion, had their businesses shut down, had their land expropriated, and were forced to live in ghettos. Christians vowed that never again would they be silent if a government passed laws establishing and maintaining the domination by one ethnic group over another ethnic group through systematic separation, oppression, and denial of basic human rights. Silence in the face of evil was wrong then, and it is wrong now.

D. Overture Rationale Outline

The rationale portion of this overture is organized by the following sections:

1. Reference Maps
2. PC (USA) statements acknowledging Israeli human rights violations
3. PC (USA) policies and statements on the occupation of the West Bank
4. United Nations and World Court definition of apartheid
5. How Israel’s practices and policies constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people
6. Current PC (USA) statement on Israel apartheid towards Palestinians
7. Responding to criticisms by extreme defenders of Israel’s government actions, right or wrong

1. Reference Maps

In order to visualize how the expropriation of Palestinian land and construction of Israeli settlements in the West Bank, Israeli only bypass roads, and the separation wall/barrier combine to restrict Palestinians into isolated and ever shrinking enclaves, it is necessary to refer to the four reference maps that are included in this overture. It is helpful to refer to these maps when reading the PC(USA) statements below.

Map 1: Bypass roads linking settlement colonies in the West Bank with Israel allow unrestricted settler movement but allow limited or no access to Palestinians (see 021-muskval-apartheid-maps; also page1438).

Map 2: The separation wall is not on the internationally recognized Israel and Palestine boundary. Large swathes of Palestinian territory are on the “Israel side” of the wall (see 021-muskval-apartheid-maps; also page 1438).

Map 3: Encircled enclaves (reserves or ghettos) confine Palestinians into 64 isolated and totally surrounded canton-like reserves in the West Bank (see 021-muskval-apartheid-maps; also page 1439).

Map 4: Palestinian Loss of Land 1946–2010 (see 021-muskval-apartheid-maps; also page 1439).

2. PC(USA) Statements Acknowledging Israeli Human Rights and International Law Violations

The 219th General Assembly (2010) approved the information, commentary, and policy statements in Chapters 1 and 2 of “Breaking Down the Walls,” a report of the Middle East Study Committee. These chapters of this report were approved by the GA Middle East Peacemaking Issues Committee by a vote of 43-0 and were overwhelmingly approved by the General Assembly. Through its actions at the 219th General Assembly (2010), the church expressed the following statements and concerns about Israel’s occupation of the West Bank and Gaza. All information below in italics is a direct quote from the statements approved by the General Assembly.

• “The Israeli occupation leads to the denial of many human rights and the violation of international laws” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1046 of the electronic version).

• “One of the hopes of the Oslo Interim agreements was that settlement growth would cease; however, the opposite has occurred, resulting in a current population of the West Bank settlements at 285,000 and 198,700 settlers in East Jerusalem” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1045 of the electronic version). (See maps 2, 3, 4.)

• “The continued growth of the number of settlements and settlers is perceived by many as an attempt by Israel to prevent the establishment of an economically viable Palestinian state” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1045 of the electronic version). (See maps 2, 3, 4.)

• “The number of house demolitions is alarming and shocks the human conscience. It is estimated that some 24,145 Palestinian homes have been demolished in the Occupied Territories since 1967” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1045 of the electronic version).
• “Another concern of the occupation is the number of “Israeli-only bypass roads” that carve up the Palestinian homeland and connect one settlement to another. This has a devastating effect on the ability of Palestinian residents to live out a normal life—to visit family, farm family property; to seek medical treatment; to secure employment; and to travel freely in one’s own country” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1045 of the electronic version).

• “While few would deny the right of any government to put a barrier on its own property line … three-quarters of this barrier is inside the West Bank on Palestinian land. This is often perceived by the Palestinians as an effort to secure an illegal settlement, claim water sources, and annex Palestinian land. The location of the barrier is a violation of international law and thus is perceived as a means to preempt a just peace” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1045 of the electronic version).

• “[The] overwhelming consensus of all [Middle East Study committee] members was that Israel’s occupation of the West Bank and Gaza is a sin against God and other fellow human beings” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1045 of the electronic version).

These facts on the ground are irrefutable and acknowledged by Israel. The settlement colonies, the bypass roads that connect them, and the separation wall/barrier imprison Palestinians in isolated enclaves, eviscerate the Palestinian economy, and prevent the creation of a viable, contiguous, sovereign, and independent Palestinian state. In approving this report, the PC(USA) acknowledged these conditions.

3. PC(USA) Statements Acknowledging Israeli Human Rights Violations

The PC(USA) 219th General Assembly (2010) reaffirmed “Israel’s right to exist as a sovereign nation within secure and internationally recognized borders in accordance with United Nations resolutions” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1022 of the electronic version; p. 367 of the print version). The General Assembly (GA) also recognized the daunting and mounting obstacles to the viability of a “two-state solution,” and affirmed with great urgency the historic Presbyterian stances with specific regard to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, calling for:

a. an immediate cessation of all violence, whether perpetrated by Israelis or Palestinians; …

c. the end of the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories and diversion of water resources;

d. an immediate freeze both on the establishment or expansion of Israeli settlements in the West Bank and on the Israeli acquisition of Palestinian land and buildings in East Jerusalem;

e. the relocation by Israel of the Separation Barrier to the 1967 border;

f. the withholding of U.S. government aid to the state of Israel as long as Israel persists in creating new West Bank settlements;

g. continuing corporate engagement through the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment with companies profiting from the sale and use of their products for non-peaceful purposes and/or the violation of human rights;

h. a shared status for Jerusalem;

i. equal rights for Palestinian citizens of the state of Israel;

j. the cessation of systematic violation of human rights by any party, specifically, practices of administrative detention, collective punishment, the torture of prisoners and suspects, home demolitions and evictions, and the deportation of dissidents

k. the immediate resumption by Israel and Palestine of negotiations toward a two-state solution. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 1022-23 of the print version)

In addition, the General Assembly approved the following policies or calls for action:

• “Calls on the U.S. government to exercise strategically its international influence, including … compliance with international law and peacemaking efforts” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1024 of the electronic version; p. 368 of the print version).

• “Call for the allocation of U.S. military aid funds to be contingent on compliance with”: (a) “the U.S. Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 which prohibits giving assistance to the government of any country which engages in a consistent pattern of human rights violations;” (b) “the U.S. Arms Export Control Act of 1976 which prohibits using U.S. weapons against civilians and civilian infrastructure;” and (c) “the U.S. foreign policy insofar as it pertains to recommendations for steps toward peace, in this instance, between Israelis and Palestinians.” “Expresses its extreme disappointment with the U.S. government that while the State of Israel has been found not to comply with the above statutes, it continues to be the recipient of U.S. military aid.” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1120 of the electronic version; pp. 370–71 of the print version).

• “... Strongly denounces Caterpillar’s continued profit-making from non-peaceful uses of … its products [and presses] Caterpillar to [review] carefully its involvement in obstacles to a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine, and to take

- “Calls on the Israeli and Egyptian governments to limit their blockade of Gaza solely to military equipment/devices and to guarantee adequate levels of food, medicine, building supplies, and other humanitarian items, and to allow free commercial exchange in and out of Gaza, and calls on the U.S. government to end any support for the blockade that interferes with the adequacy of such items or such exchange” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1024 of the electronic version; p. 368 of the print version).

- Calls on the U.S. government to exercise strategically its international influence and the withholding of financial, economic, and military aid to countries other than Israel, as we might with Israel, until such a time as the civil, religious, and other freedoms of their peoples are fully exercised; and to end U.S. taxpayer support for regimes that perpetuate inequality, and popular frustration (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1025 of the electronic version; p. 369 of the print version).

- Does not recognize that Israel’s laws, polices, and practices constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people because “While we are deeply concerned with the policies implemented by Israel in relation to the Palestine territories and Palestinians under its jurisdiction, we believe that dialogue is hampered by words like ‘apartheid’” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 994 of the electronic version; p. 363 of the print version).

The PC(USA) resolutions on Israel-Palestine are consistent with U.N. resolutions regarding the Israel-Palestine conflict and with international law. There have been many PC(USA) resolutions calling for an end to occupation of the West Bank since 1967. Unfortunately, to date these resolutions and words have had no effect on Israel’s occupation of Palestine. Nor have they changed Israel’s disregard for international law in the occupied territories.

It is because Israeli governments have ignored U.S., U.N., PC(USA), and other church and nongovernmental organization (NGO) calls for an end to the occupation for forty-four years that this overture asks the church to recognize that Israel’s laws, practices, and policies towards the Palestinian people constitutes apartheid. Until the churches and others call it what it is, Israel has little motivation to end the occupation and change its laws to conform to UN resolutions and international law.

4. United Nations and World Court Definition of Apartheid

The U.N. Apartheid Convention states that the term “crime of apartheid” applies to acts committed for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial group over any other racial group and systematically oppressing them. Practices constituting apartheid include:

- Denying basic human freedoms, including the freedom of movement, residence, opinion, expression, and peaceful assembly and freedom from arbitrary arrest and imprisonment.
- Denying basic human rights, including the right to a nationality, to education, to leave and to return to one’s country, to work, and to form recognized trade unions.
- The expropriation of landed property belonging to a racial group or groups or to members thereof.
- Legislative measures, designed to divide the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos for the members of a racial group or groups.

Government leaders can be accused of committing the crime of apartheid if they institute or administer laws, practices, and policies that establish apartheid conditions. It is up to the United Nations or the World Court to prosecute those guilty of apartheid. However, individuals, and churches can recognize apartheid and witness to that effect. This procedure is much like our criminal justice system. If a citizen who witnesses a crime like a robbery or assault, they can recognize that a crime has been committed and witness to that effect even though only the court system can legally prosecute the crime. The following sections are a witness to how Israel’s practices and policies constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people.

5. How Israel’s Laws, Policies and Practices Constitute Apartheid Against the Palestinian People

Israel’s laws, polices, and practices towards Palestinian citizens of Israel and Palestinians in the occupied West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem establish and maintain the domination of one ethnic group of persons over another ethnic group through systematic discrimination and oppression in violation of the U.N. International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the World Court definition of Crimes Against Humanity.
Israel has created a system where one ethnic group, Israeli Jewish nationals, have a superior status and another ethnic group, Christian and Muslim living in Palestine and Israel, have an inferior status. Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically take actions to prevent Palestinians from participating in the political, social, economic, and cultural life of their country. The expropriation of Palestinian land, restrictions on the freedom of movement and residence, confining Palestinians to ghettos, arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of Palestinians, the restriction or denial of Palestinian rights to work, education, peaceful assembly, and religious practices are all part of Israeli measures calculated to prevent Palestinians from full participation in the economic, environmental, and social life of their country. This discriminatory system benefits Israeli Jews and causes irreparable harm to non-Jews both in Israel itself and in the occupied Palestinian territories.

This overture highlights the following seven areas in which the state of Israel’s laws, policies, and practices violate the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid ratified by the United Nations.

a. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid through the expropriation of landed property belonging to Palestinians.

Under the 1947 United Nations Palestine partition Resolution 181, 56 percent of the land area of Palestine was designated for a Jewish state and 44 percent for an Arab state. This resolution stipulated that the equal rights of minorities within each state must be protected. However, in the war that followed Israel’s declaration of independence in May 1948, Israel occupied 78 percent of the land thereby expropriating much of the land designated by the United Nations for an independent Arab state.

In 1947–48, 750,000 non-Jewish residents of land designated by the U.N. for the Jewish state and much of the Arab state were either forcibly removed from their landed property or not allowed to return to their homes in defiance of international law. The land was expropriated by Israel for Jewish housing, farms, roads, businesses, parks, and cemeteries.

In June 1967, East Jerusalem was occupied by the Israeli military. Twenty-seven square miles of East Jerusalem were annexed to Israel. More than 30 percent of the land in East Jerusalem has been expropriated to build new settlements where approximately 190,000 Israeli’s reside in 46,978 units of housing.

Between 1967 and 2009, vast areas of West Bank land have been expropriated to allow more than 121 settlements and 100 outposts for Jewish residents. Nearly half a million settlers now live in the occupied West Bank, including 190,000 in East Jerusalem.

Separation walls/barriers are constructed on land in the West Bank and will expropriate an additional 11.9 percent of Palestinian land in the West Bank when completed.

The agricultural Jordan Valley area, about 30 percent of the West Bank, is now off limits to most Palestinians.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually expropriates the landed property of Palestinians in violation of the International conventions on apartheid.

b. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by denying the right to freedom of residence to Palestinians in the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem.

Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically prevent Palestinians from freedom of residence through denial of building permits for the construction of Palestinian housing and the demolition of Palestinian housing. In those areas of the West Bank and East Jerusalem where Palestinian housing is destroyed or denied, homes for Jewish settlers are permitted and constructed and only Jewish people can live in the settlement colonies.

Between 1967 and the end of 2001, almost no Palestinian housing units were given construction permits in East Jerusalem. In that same time period, 46,978 housing units were built for Jewish settlers in East Jerusalem.

In 1967, the population of East Jerusalem was almost entirely Palestinian. Today there are approximately 190,000 Jewish settlers. Palestinians now constitute one-third of East Jerusalem’s population.

From June 1967 to June 2009, more than 24,000 Palestinian homes have been demolished in the occupied territories.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually denies the freedom of residence to Palestinians in violation of the international conventions on apartheid.

c. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by denying Palestinians the right to freedom of movement in the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem.

Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically deny Palestinians the right to movement. Israel uses a number of means to restrict Palestinian movement in the West Bank, which include: permanent and temporary checkpoints, physical obstructions, the Separation Wall, roads on which only Israelis can drive, and the movement-permit regime.
Israel's restriction on freedom of movement for non-Jewish Palestinians is discrimination based on ethnic origin since these restrictions apply only to Palestinians. Jewish residents are permitted to enter and leave settlements without restriction.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually denies the freedom of movement to Palestinians in violation of the International conventions on apartheid.

d. Israel's laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by dividing the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos for the Palestinians.

Sections a, b, and c, above, and maps 1, 2, and 3 show how Israeli laws, policies, and practices in the West Bank combined with the infrastructure of illegal settlements, bypass roads, checkpoints, and the separation wall/barrier systematically create separate reserves or ghettos for Palestinians. Palestinians are forced to live in isolated enclaves that in turn eviscerates the Palestinian economy, and prevent the creation of a viable, contiguous, sovereign, and independent Palestinian state.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually divides the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos for the Palestinians in violation of the international conventions on apartheid.

e. Israel's laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by denying Palestinians the right to a nationality.

• On November 29, 1947, the United Nations adopted a Partition Plan for Palestine that divided the League of Nations’ British Mandate of Palestine. In this partition plan, 44 percent of the land was allocated for an Arab state and 56 percent was allocated for the Jewish state. While Israel did become an independent state in 1948, the independent Arab state did not come into existence because the land designated as an independent Arab state was militarily occupied.

• Between1948 and 2009, the state of Israel has systematically occupied and/or annexed most of the land that had been designated by the United Nations for an independent Palestinian state. In doing so, Israel has denied the Palestinians a right to a nationality.

• In 1967, Israel annexed East Jerusalem in violation of international law.

• Between 1967 and 2009, Israel has controlled the rural undeveloped part of the West Bank, called Area C in the Oslo Peace agreement. Through the construction of settlement colonies, bypass roads, the separation wall/barrier, buffer zones, and the creation of land reserves, Israel has left Palestinians in control of only 13 percent of the land area of the British mandate of Palestine.

• Israel has failed to implement the November 22, 1967, United Nations Resolution 242 requiring Israel to withdraw its forces from the West Bank and Gaza.
In 1978, Israeli Menachem Begin signed the Camp David Accords, which stated, “the Israeli military government and its civilian administration will be withdrawn as soon as a self-governing authority has been freely elected by its inhabitants.” By not implementing this agreement to end its occupation of the West Bank and Gaza, Israel has denied the Palestinians right to a nationality.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually denies Palestinians the right to a nationality in violation of the International conventions on apartheid.

f. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by deliberate imposition of living conditions calculated to cause the physical destruction of Palestinians in whole or in part.

The physical wellbeing of any people is determined in large part by their access to adequate housing, drinking water, agricultural irrigation water, food, agricultural areas, utilities, employment, education, and wastewater treatment. The laws, policies, and practices of Israel systematically deprive many Palestinians adequate living conditions in some or all of the above areas. Israeli practices deliberately impose on Palestinians living conditions calculated to make life intolerable. Israel exploits Palestinian natural water and land resources through restricting water supply to Palestinians, not investing in infrastructure for economic development, uprooting olive and fruit trees of Palestinian farmers, and preventing the freedom of commerce for Palestinian farmers and workers.

• Over one and a quarter million olive and fruit trees and thousands of acres of farmland have been destroyed in Palestinian territories since 1967. Nearly 465,000 olive trees were uprooted between 2000 and 2005.

• Since the beginning of the occupation in 1967, Israel’s strict control of the water sector in the occupied territories has prevented development to meet Palestinian water needs, and caused shortages and a water-quality crisis.

• Israel has neglected construction of infrastructure to connect the Palestinian rural population to a running water network as well as proper maintenance of existing networks. In 2008, 227,500 Palestinians in 220 towns and villages were not connected to a water network. Another 190,000 Palestinians are only partially served.

• Of the water available from West Bank aquifers, Israel uses 83 percent, (10 percent for illegal Israeli settlers in the West Bank and 73 percent residents in Israel). West Bank Palestinians use the remaining 17 percent.

• Israel generally restricts Palestinian water use to the municipal and limited commercial and industrial sectors by limiting the extraction of groundwater for agricultural irrigation purposes.

• In the West Bank, about 50 groundwater wells and more than 200 cisterns have been destroyed or isolated from their owners by construction of the separation barrier, affecting the domestic and agricultural needs of more than 122,000 people.

• Only 7 percent of the water in the Gaza Strip meets World Health Organization standards.

• West Bank Palestinian water consumption is 40 liters per day less than the minimum global standards set by the World Health Organization.

• Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem pay taxes, but receive few benefits. The municipality has failed to invest significantly in infrastructure and services, such as roads, sidewalks and water and sewage systems, in East Jerusalem’s Palestinian neighborhoods.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and deliberately imposes living conditions calculated to cause the physical destruction of Palestinians in whole or in part, in violation of the international conventions on apartheid.

g. Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid by enacting legislative and other measures calculated to prevent Palestinians from participation in the political, social, economic, and cultural life of their country.

 Israeli laws, policies, and practices systematically take actions to prevent Palestinians from participating in the political, social, economic, and cultural life of their occupied country. The expropriation of Palestinian land, restrictions on the freedom of movement and residence, confining Palestinians to ghettos, arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of Palestinians, the restriction or denial of Palestinian rights to work, education, peaceful assembly, and religious practices are all part of Israeli measures calculated to prevent Palestinians from full participation in the economic, environmental, and social life of their country. This discriminatory system benefits Israeli Jews and causes irreparable harm to non-Jews both in Israel itself and in the occupied Palestinian territories.

The net result is that the state of Israel systematically and continually enacting legislative and other measures calculated to prevent Palestinians from participation in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the occupied country, in violation of the international conventions on apartheid.

Sections 2 and 3 above summarize the actions of the PC(USA) 219th General Assembly (2010), which acknowledge how Israel’s laws, practices, and policies in the West Bank, combined with the infrastructure of the illegal settlement colonies, the bypass roads that connect them, and the separation wall/barrier result in the imprisonment of Palestinians in isolated enclaves, eviscerate the Palestinian economy, and prevent the creation of a viable, contiguous, sovereign, and independent Palestinian state.

Section 5 summarizes the ways in which Israel’s action in the West Bank constitutes apartheid and the first two pages of the rationale section quote some of the notable Christian and Jewish voices around the world who have named Israeli apartheid. So what is the position of the PC(USA)?

At the 219th General Assembly (2010), the PC(USA) was presented with an overture asking it to recognize that Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people. The official action of the General Assembly was to say this overture was “answered by” the approval of Parts I and II of the Middle East Study Report with the comment that “while we are deeply concerned with the policies implemented by Israel in relation to the Palestine territories and Palestinians under its jurisdiction, we believe that dialogue is hampered by words like ‘apartheid’” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 994 of the electronic version; p. 363 of the print version).

In summary, the General Assembly acknowledged the facts on the ground and the Israeli practices that fit the definition of apartheid by the U.N. and the World Court, but did not want to recognize it was apartheid because using the word “apartheid” creates conflict. Our theological tradition has always recognized that opposition to injustice is part of Jewish and Christian faithfulness to God. In spite of the painful conflict, Jesus declared, “Blessed are the peacemakers.”

To help solve a problem, one must accurately name it. Only after the churches and nations of the world acknowledged apartheid and embraced the conflict-filled struggle for change in South Africa was the problem addressed. When the PC(USA) showed leadership to help end segregation in the U.S. in the 1950s and 60s, it took courageous and controversial positions at a time when many white Americans and Christians opposed measures to end it. The church did not refrain from using the word “segregation” because it “hampered dialog.” Likewise, when the church evaluated the facts on the ground in South Africa in the 1970s and 80s, it took leadership to help end it and expressed no concern that calling South African practices “apartheid” would hamper dialog. The prophetic voice of the church, while true, is often unsettling to some. But silence in the face of injustice should be more unsettling.

On the other hand, Israel fought a six-day war with Jordan and Egypt in 1967 and occupied the West Bank and Gaza with their infrastructures intact with people who had already enjoyed most of the human rights and freedoms that are characteristic of a modern state. Under Israel’s occupation, Palestinians’ human rights and freedoms have been drastically diminished each year. The occupation of the West Bank by Israel is not a temporary situation that is getting better, it is a permanent situation that is getting worse. The PC(USA) must recognize the facts on the ground for what they are: apartheid.

7. Responding to Criticisms by Extreme Defenders of Israel’s Government Actions, Right or Wrong.

Those who criticize Israel’s actions in the occupied West Bank are sometimes falsely accused by extreme defenders of Israel, right or wrong, as anti-Israel or anti-Semitic and try to deflect, confuse, and conflate issues to divert attention from the facts on the ground. Those who support this overture may receive such criticism. Below are responses to such criticism.

a. This overture is not anti-Israel.

This overture intentionally focuses on Israel’s laws, practices, and policies that promote the occupation of Palestinian territories. Most critics of Israel’s occupation of Palestine also strongly recognize Israel’s existence within the internationally recognized 1967 borders and emphatically condemn violence against civilians by all parties. Israel, like all nations, has the right to provide security for their citizens by taking appropriate measures that are consistent with international law. Holding Israel accountable to these same global standards is not anti-Israel.

Many Israeli and American Jews oppose settlement colonies on Palestinian land, all of which are illegal under international law. Within the Israeli and U.S. Jewish communities there is a growing, active, and passionate debate about whether Israel’s occupation of the West Bank and Gaza is in the best interest of Israel. Each side in this debate is pro-Israel, trying to discern how to assure a secure, viable, and sustainable state. Christians must support the pro-Israel positions that advocate for human rights and justice for the Palestinian people and reject the positions that promote the systematic oppression of the Palestinian people. When patriotic Americans spoke out against slavery, racial segregation, or the Vietnam and Iraqi wars, some Americans falsely accused them of being anti-American. Critics of Israel’s occupation of Palestine may also be falsely accused of being anti-Israel, but they are not. They are pro-human rights.

b. This overture is not anti-Semitic.

This overture is not critical of Jews as people or of Jewish religion or culture. It intentionally states it is Israel’s laws, polices, and practices towards the Palestinian people that constitute apartheid. Many Jewish individuals and human rights organizations in Israel and the U.S. recognize that Israeli actions in the West Bank and Gaza constitute apartheid. Christians must, with confidence, reject any politically motivated charges of anti-Semitism that are made to silence legitimate criticism of Israel’s apartheid practices. This kind of hyperbolic language is untrue, harms civil discourse, and serves to hamper efforts to monitor, and prevent Israeli human rights violations. Not engaging in morally responsible action when faced with the clear findings of human rights organizations and the international community is morally indefensible.

c. This overture is part of an honest inter-faith dialog between Jews and Christians.

Building strong interfaith relationships with our Jewish brothers and sisters is important for many Christians and churches. They are built on mutual interest, honesty, and integrity. Interfaith conversations encompass social justice issues such as hunger, homelessness, poverty, discrimination, human rights, war, and peace. Israel’s policies in occupied Palestine are but one issue. The Jewish community itself is a divided on it. An honest dialog ultimately builds stronger relationships while silence erodes them. Through honest dialog we may find some Jewish people who support the occupation and some who agree it must end. We must have confidence that the interfaith relationships we have built on many social justice issues are strong enough to sustain a disagreement on the wisdom of Israel’s continued occupation of the West Bank and Gaza. Some relationships may be strengthened and some may be strained, but they are unlikely to break if they are based on honoring each other’s call to be faithful to their interpretation of Scripture.

d. Israel’s militarily occupation of Palestine is not needed for security reasons.

At any time since 1967, Israel could have allowed the United Nations to occupy the West Bank and provide security. U.N. peacekeeping missions have been successful in dozens of countries. However, if the U.N. had occupied Palestine to provide security in 1967 or anytime thereafter, it would have preserved the land for residents of a Palestinian state and not allowed Israel to expropriate Palestinian land to build Jewish settlement colonies. Israel does not need to occupy the West Bank for security reasons. It chooses to occupy the West Bank so it can expand its borders and dominate the Palestinian people.

e. Is it appropriate to criticize Israel’s human rights violations?

There are human rights violations and injustices in many countries in the Middle East besides Israel, and all such violations should be equally condemned. However, one reason to focus on Israel is that it receives more than one-third of all U.S. foreign aid. Americans therefore have a special responsibility to make sure that money is used to prevent social injustice, not to perpetuate it. Israel is the sixteenth richest country in the world, has the fourth largest army, is the third largest arms producer, the fourth largest nuclear power, refuses to sign the nuclear nonproliferation treaty, and has defied seventy United Nations Security Council resolutions seeking peaceful reconciliation between Israelis and Palestinians. The U.S. government complicity with Israel obligates us to speak out.

Each year the ordeals and injustices suffered by the Palestinian people in the West Bank, Gaza, and Israel continue. Land is expropriated, homes are demolished, and freedom of movement is restricted. The combination of Israeli settlement colonies on Palestinian land, the bypass roads connecting these settlements, and the Separation Wall creates a network of barriers that confine Palestinians to live in separate reserves and ghettos. The rights to work, education, freedom from arbitrary arrest, peaceful assembly, and freedom of expression granted under international law are restricted or denied.

Many political, social, and religious leaders have looked at Israel’s laws, policies, and practices in occupied Palestine and have asserted that they constitute apartheid. The PC(USA) has not been one of those voices. Our silence can be seen as complacency with the Israeli government actions. It is time to end our silence and give a name to injustices already condemned by many PC(USA) resolutions. In response to the urgent call from our Palestinian Christian sisters and brothers, now is the time for the PC(USA) to recognize that Israel’s laws, policies, and practices constitute apartheid against the Palestinian people.

Adopted and opened for signature, ratification by General Assembly resolution 3068 (XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, entry into force 18
July 1976, in accordance with article XV

The States Parties to the present Convention, have agreed as follows:

Article I

1. The States Parties to the present Convention declare that apartheid is a crime against humanity and that inhuman acts resulting from the policies and practices of apartheid and similar policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination, as defined in article
II of the Convention, are crimes violating the principles of international law, in particular the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and constituting a serious threat to international peace and security.

2. The States Parties to the present Convention declare criminal those organizations, institutions and individuals committing the crime of apartheid.

Article II

For the purpose of the present Convention, the term “the crime of apartheid”, which shall include similar policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination as practiced in southern Africa, shall apply to the following inhuman acts committed for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial group of persons over any other racial group of persons and systematically oppressing them:

a. Denial to a member or members of a racial group or groups of the right to life and liberty of person:
   1. By murder of members of a racial group or groups;
   2. By the infliction upon the members of a racial group or groups of serious bodily or mental harm, by the infringement of their freedom or dignity, or by subjecting them to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment
   3. By arbitrary arrest and illegal imprisonment of the members of a racial group or groups;

b. Deliberate imposition on a racial group or groups of living conditions calculated to cause its or their physical destruction in whole or in part;

c. Any legislative measures and other measures calculated to prevent a racial group or groups from participation in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the country and the deliberate creation of conditions preventing the full development of such a group or groups, in particular by denying to members of a racial group or groups basic human rights and freedoms, including the right to work, the right to form recognized trade unions, the right to education, the right to leave and to return to their country, the right to a nationality, the right to freedom of movement and residence, the right to freedom of opinion and expression, and the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association;

d. Any measures, including legislative measures, designed to divide the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos for the members of a racial group or groups, the prohibition of mixed marriages among members of various racial groups, the expropriation of landed property belonging to a racial group or groups or to members thereof

e. Exploitation of the labour of the members of a racial group or groups, in particular by submitting them to forced labour;

f. Persecution of organizations and persons, by depriving them of fundamental rights and freedoms, because they oppose apartheid.

Article 7: Crimes against humanity

7.1 For the purpose of this Statute, “crime against humanity” means any one of 11 specifically identified acts committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, including murder; extermination; deportation or forcible transfer of population; imprisonment or other severe deprivation of physical liberty in violation of fundamental rules of international law; torture; persecution against any identifiable group or collectivity on political, racial, national, ethnic, cultural, religious, gender or other grounds that are universally recognized as impermissible under international law, the crime of apartheid, and other inhumane acts of a similar character intentionally causing great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health. …

7.2.(h) “The crime of apartheid” means inhumane acts of a character similar to those referred to in paragraph 7.1, committed in the context of an institutionalized regime of systematic oppression and domination by one racial group over any other racial group or groups and committed with the intention of maintaining that regime.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 15-01 requests the General Assembly to recognize that laws and practices of the State of Israel constitute apartheid or racial-ethnic separation of the Palestinian people from Israelis.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012), in response to Item 15-01, approve the following alternate resolution:

“The 220th General Assembly (2012)

“1. recognizes that the State of Israel’s laws and policies restricting Palestinian movement, legal status, rights of family unification, and the practices of checkpoints, indefinite detention, land confiscation, home demolition, and inferior education, healthcare, and public services constitute a form of apartheid or ethnic separation that systematically favors one ethnic and religious group over another;

“2. directs the Middle East Staff Team to report to the 221st General Assembly (2014) on the legal ramifications if the United Nations were to determine that Israeli controls over the Palestinian population and land constituted apartheid, to provide a listing of specific laws that enforce separation and differential standards between the population groups, and to consult with U.S. State Department and Human Rights organizations on what “crimes of apartheid” might be considered under such a determination;

“3. directs that the information provided in the rationale be posted on the Middle East Liaison Office website, including a concise chart comparing practices in Israel and the occupied territories (Palestine) with the criteria provided in Appendix A; and

“4. urges Presbyterian members and appropriate GAMC offices, to study the situation in Israel and occupied Palestine and to seek ways to bring an end to Israel’s particular form of apartheid or separation.”

Rationale

Item 15-01 is correct in saying that the word, “apartheid,” is not used primarily so as not to offend members of the Jewish community. It is seen as a conversation-stopper and more, deeply offensive and insulting. Yet in sheer scale, the monumentally ugly separation wall, the Jewish-Israeli only roads, the lack of mobility and rights, the continual violence and brutality around the checkpoints and night raids, all impress South Africans as more stringent than the system of separation they suffered from. This item argues that for the sake of truth, it is time to name a process that has been compared to the construction of a set of open-air prisons or ghettos. And the name that carries with this sense of complete discrimination is apartheid.

Needless to say, there are differences between South African practice and that of Israel. The international legal definition of apartheid indicates that “similar” to South African practice is enough for the determination. Whether or not the word is used, it can be argued that the process of separation under the Israeli occupation has some of the same results, creating more hostility and mistrust than before the violence of the Second Intifada. On April 28, 2012, for example, former Israeli domestic intelligence chief, Yuval Diskin warned of the dangers of general Israeli trends, among settlers in particular:

Over the past 10–15 years Israel has become more and more racist. All of the studies point to this. This is racism toward Arabs and toward foreigners, and we are also becoming a more belligerent society. (http://www.haaretz.com/news/diplomacy-defense/israel-s-former-shin-bet-chief-i-have-no-confidence-in-netanyahu-barak-1.426908)

It should be stated, whether the commissioners wish to approve, reject, or modify the position of this overture, that the use of the word, apartheid, does not materially change the policies of the church. Divestment, in particular, does not require a determination of apartheid. It is a condition of discriminatory racial and ethnic separation that reinforces inequality and does not make for peace.

It should also be noted that the General Assembly positions on Israel and Palestine seek to reflect accurately the far greater power of the State of Israel and do not imply that all Palestinians are innocent victims. The report approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010), “Break Down the Walls,” used the work of former Knesset speaker, Avraham Burg, to understand how both Israelis and Palestinians have historic traumas that affect their abilities to understand the suffering of the other group. Those wounded and threatened feelings are significant, yet the power to affect current wounding processes is more with those physically in control of the other population. The hope of those advocating use of the word, apartheid, to describe the occupation, is to use another kind of power.
Advice and Counsel on Item 15-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 15-01.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns strongly supports this overture because we agree with B’Tselem, The Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, who state “Israel has created in the Occupied Territories a regime of separation based on discrimination.” The facts on the ground qualify as apartheid according to the U.N. Apartheid Convention because they apply to actions committed for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial ethnic group over another, and on that basis, result in oppressing an entire ethnicity.

Palestinians are denied nationality, and Israeli Jewish nationals (settlers) have a superior status over Christians and Muslims living in Palestine on the basis of racial ethnic reasons. Jewish settlers live in the Occupied Palestinians Territories (OPT) under civil law, while the indigenous people live under military law. The separation is complete and based on race and ethnicity. The ACREC believes this kind of injustice should be confronted and not be conditional on who is being oppressed by whom.

According to The Abraham Fund, an initiative working since 1989 “to promote coexistence and equality among Israel’s Jewish and Arab citizens,” there is great inequality in Israel’s population, which is far worse in the OPT. This wide inequality gap is foundational for keeping Israel’s official policy of Hafrada (separation in Hebrew) in place. (Apartheid means separation in Afrikaans.)

“Although Israel’s Arab citizens account for one-fifth of the country’s population, the economy of Israel is largely oriented toward its Jewish population. The Poverty Report (National Insurance Institute, 2006) indicates that over 54% of the country’s Arab citizens were living in poverty in 2006, compared to 14.7% of the country’s Jewish citizens. The widespread poverty among Arab families is attributed, for the most part, to the low employment rate of Arab citizens. (The Abraham Fund)

The ACREC points to this data as foundational to attitudes that have developed in Israel and the OPT, which contribute to keeping the populations separate and unequal. As early as 2007, the popular Israeli news source, Ynet News, reported on the rise of racism in Israel:

Association for Civil Rights in Israel publishes annual report; reveals country overwhelmed by racism, restriction of personal freedoms, discrimination, especially towards Israeli-Arabs. Report not surprising, say Arab MKs [member of Knesset]

The Association for Civil Rights in Israel’s (ACRI) report on civil rights in Israel paints a bleak picture: Increasing racism, restriction of personal freedoms and discrimination even within the Knesset walls – and that’s just scratching the surface.

Published Saturday, the report revealed that Israeli youths are bombarded with stereotypic, racist imagery, and their opinions have developed accordingly: Over two-thirds of Israeli teens believe Arabs to be less intelligent, uncultured and violent. Over a third of Israeli teens fear Arabs all together.

The report becomes even grimmer, citing the ACRI’s racism poll, taken in March of 2007, in which 50% of Israelis taking part said they would not live in the same building as Arabs, will not befriend, or let their children befriend Arabs and would not let Arabs into their homes.

Fifty percent of those polled also said they believed Israel should encourage its Arab citizens to emigrate. Racism in Israel is on the rise, said the report: in 2006 there was a 26% increase in racist incidents towards Arabs and the general sense of hatred towards them has doubled.

Reinforcing a negative image

The media, said the ACRI, played a major part in fanning the flame, intensifying the Arab image as negative and terrorizing.

The Knesset was not absent from the report as well, as it allows bills which delegitimize Israel’s Arab citizens before the plenum, preconditions social rights in IDF or national service and make its Arab MKs swear allegiance to a Jewish State.

The report devotes a special section to the recently approves JNF bill, which allows Jewish National Fund land – which make up 13% of all State owned land—to be allocated to Jews only.

According to the report, Israeli Arabs are subject to constant racial proofing, which defines them as a security threat; resulting in demeaning and degrading treatment at airports and public venues. Furthermore, in the Second Lebanon War, some 40% of the citizens killed were Israeli-Arabs, mostly due to a severe lack of shelters, but still—the rehabilitation and fortification of Arab towns remains, according to the report, ridiculously low.

“This report doesn’t come as a surprise,” Hadash Chairman MK Mohammad Barakeh told Ynet Saturday. “No one should be surprised by them. These findings are a natural outcome of the racial slurs by political leaders and the racial policy that have been implemented by the Israeli governments towards the Arab population for the past 60 years. “Such racism,” added Barakeh, “can only be cured by changing the Israeli government’s racial mentality.”

“Racism has become the norm in Israeli society,” said MK Ahmad Tibi (United Arab List-Ta’al). “Israel is ridden with discrimination through and through. (Racism in Israel on the rise by Aviram Zino, Ynet News, December 8, 2007)
The ACREC notes that the situation has only worsened since this article was written, and settler violence against the indigenous population in the OPT is at an all-time high.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 15-01

Comment on Item 15-01—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

The overture accurately describes many laws, policies, and practices of the Israeli government and the suffering and human rights abuses they inflict on the Palestinian people.

Our Palestinian Christian partners, as well as most mission personnel of American mainline denominations serving in the region and some Israeli human rights organizations, describe the situation this creates in Israel/Palestine as apartheid.

In 2009, Palestinian Christians issued a statement, Kairos Palestine, in which they request the international community to “stand by the Palestinian people who have faced oppression, displacement, suffering, and clear apartheid for more than six decades. The suffering continues while the international community silently looks on at the occupying State, Israel. Our word is a cry of hope, with love, prayer, and faith in God. We address it first of all to ourselves and then to all the churches and Christians in the world, asking them to stand against injustice and apartheid, urging them to work for a just peace in our region, calling on them to revisit theologies that justify crimes perpetrated against our people and the dispossession of the land” (http://www.kairosPalestine.ps/sites/default/Documents/English.pdf).

Others in Israel/Palestine do not use the term apartheid to describe the situation and believe the use of that term may undermine progress on improving the situation.

Commissioners will have to discern whether the PC(USA)’s use of the term apartheid will enhance the church’s understanding of the situation in Israel/Palestine and if it will advance the search for a just resolution.

The rationale for this overture refers to the International Criminal Court (ICC) as the “World Court.” However, in international bodies, the term “World Court” actually refers to the International Court of Justice (ICJ). The International Court of Justice (ICJ) adjudicates disputes between nations, while the International Criminal Court prosecutes individuals. This correction has no impact on the substance of the overture.

The situation faced by Palestinians and Israelis cries out for continued prayer, study, and faithful engagement by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

On Boycotting Ahava Dead Sea Laboratories and Hadiklaim (an Israeli Date Growers Cooperative)—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. [Condemn the production and sale of Israeli products that come from the Occupied Palestinian Territories.] [Call upon all nations to prohibit the import of products made by enterprises in Israeli settlements on Palestinian land.]

2. Call for the boycott of all Israeli products coming from the occupied Palestinian Territories, including AHAVA Dead Sea Laboratories Beauty Products] and all date products of Hadiklaim, The Israel Date Growers Co-Operative Ltd, often marked by the brand names: King Solomon Dates and Jordan River (not Israeli products from Israel.)

3. [Call for the boycott of all date products of Hadiklaim, the Israel Date Growers Cooperative, Ltd., often marketed by the brand names: King Solomon Dates and Jordan River.]

4. [4.] [3.] Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to all other PC (USA) councils and entities and invite and strongly encourage those groups and organizations to endorse this boycott [until significant progress toward Palestinian rights and independence can be reported to the General Assembly or General Assembly Mission Council.]

5. [5.] [4.] Direct the Stated Clerk to inform our ecumenical partners of this action, both nationally and globally, and call upon them to join in the boycott of these companies.
Since the occupation of the Palestinian territories in 1967, Israel has used its military rule to the advantage of Israeli corporations and economic interests, many times to the detriment of the Palestinian economy under its control.

All Palestinian imports and exports have been controlled, restricting the competition with Israeli producers, and making the Palestinian consumer market into a captive market for Israeli goods. Severe restrictions on movement of Palestinian labor and products inside the occupied territories and to neighboring areas have further increased the dependency of the Palestinian economy on Israeli companies as employers and retailers. The growing network of checkpoints and walls has all but destroyed Palestinian local production and the Palestinian labor bargaining power.

Israelis companies have a relatively high concentration of capital, freedom of movement, and favorable legal conditions. When operating in the occupied territories they also enjoy special governmental support, access to cheap resources, tax incentives, and a very lax enforcement of labor laws and environmental protection laws. These advantages often result in the exploitation of Palestinian labor, Palestinian natural resources, and the Palestinian consumer market (http://www.whoprofits.org/involvement/economic-exploitation).

1. What is AHAVA, what international laws does AHAVA violate and why are we calling for a boycott?

Ahava Dead Sea Laboratories (www.ahava.co.il) is a privately held Israeli cosmetics company that manufactures products using minerals and mud from the Dead Sea. Ahava’s products—such as Grape & Avocado Body Wash, Dead Sea Mineral Mud, and Mineral Foot Cream—are widely available in high-end department stores and pharmacies throughout the United States and in Europe. The Hebrew word “Ahava” means love, but there is nothing loving about what the company is doing in the Occupied Palestinian territory of the West Bank. The company’s practices are against international law.

The company’s main factory and its visitors’ center are located in the Israeli settlement of Mitzpe Shalem in the Occupied West Bank. Ahava products are labeled as of “Israeli origin,” but according to international public law, the West Bank cannot be considered to be part of the State of Israel. Ahava uses in its products mud from the Dead Sea, excavated in an occupied area, and thus it exploits occupied natural resources for profit, which is a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention (http://www.stolenbeauty.org/article.php?id=5015).

2. What is Hadiklaim and why are we calling for a boycott?

Hadiklaim is an Israel date growers cooperative that deals with several major supermarkets internationally. Hadiklaim exports under the “King Solomon Dates” and “Jordan River” brand names. Their products are exported by the Israeli company, Almog Tradex Ltd, which claims to export 10,000 tons of Israeli fruits annually. Hadiklaim boasts that Hadiklaim growers and packing houses have approvals from international standard setting bodies (including Bio USDA), as well as the Israeli Ministry of Agriculture and the Bio-Organic Agriculture Association. Hadiklaim packages dates under U.S. supermarket labels, the Hadiklaim name may not show up on the label, yet the fact that the USDA is involved makes it clear that their dates are getting here under some form of packaging.

Hadiklaim signage is displayed on packing houses in the settlements of Beit Ha’Arava, close to the Dead Sea Coast, and Tomer, close to the Palestinian village of Fasayil. In October 2007, a group of campaigners from the Brighton Tubas Friendship and Solidarity Group (www.brightontubaspalestine.org) entered Tomer settlement in the occupied Jordan Valley and photographed Hadiklaim medjoul dates, packaged by Carmel Agrexco, labeled “Made in Israel” and marked as bound for Tesco stores (UK). Products exported as “Made in Israel” benefit from the preferential trade terms of the EU-Israel Association Agreement, which came into effect in 2000, when ITN (a British broadcaster) screened an expose in 2007 accusing supermarkets of misleading British consumers. Tesco admitted it had acted “in error” and stated that Israeli dates originating solely in the West Bank will (in the future) be labeled as such.

Date picking in the Jordan Valley is a hazardous business. Workers are hoisted into the trees with a cherry picker and are often left to work on a platform high above the ground for the duration of the working day without meal or toilet breaks. The majority of workers are Palestinian or Thai migrants—who are uniformly paid below the minimum wage. For more info on labor conditions for date pickers in the Jordan Valley see Kav’La Oved and UNISON’S 2009 film, Bitter Dates at http://www.leedspsc.org.uk/?p=1671, http://corporateoccupation.wordpress.com/2010/08/12/hadiklaim-in-the-jordan-valley/

3. Why are AHAVA and Hadiklaim being singled out by the PC(USA)?

There is a lengthy list of Israeli, U.S., and international companies involved in making a profit as the result of illegal occupation in the Palestinian territories. The AHAVA and Hadiklaim have been named because they are two of the most blatant violators of international law that prohibits exploitation of occupied natural resources for profit.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is no stranger to calling for boycotts, both nationally and internationally, because corporate practices violated the human rights, and even threatened the lives of peoples being exploited. In the early 1980s, it called for a boycott of the Swiss corporation, Nestle, because of its promotion of breast milk substitutes in less economically developed countries contributing to the unnecessary suffering and deaths of babies. In 2002 it called for the boycott of Taco Bell as a result of its parent company’s (Yum Brands Food) exploitation of farm workers from Immokalee, Florida. Both boycotts were successful and achieved their desired ends.

The boycott of AHAVA and Hadiklaim is especially relevant because these companies engage not only in the exploitation of Palestinian workers (along with others), but are also inextricably tied to Israel’s illegal occupation of the West Bank. This makes these company’s activities both illegal, according to international law, and immoral, in accordance with the witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in very recent history.

4. Does boycotting the Israeli occupation harm Palestinians?

Yes, it can have an economic impact. Any kind of economic pressure is bound to harm first and foremost the Palestinians, who are already economically vulnerable because of the restrictions that the Israeli occupation imposes on their ability to study, work, and move people or goods. Despite Israel’s exploitation of Palestinian labor, Palestinian natural resources, and the captive Palestinian consumer market, Palestinians themselves have asked for boycotts, divestments, and sanctions because they see them as effective tools to express international solidarity to oppose the Israeli occupation.

We call upon the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to remain consistent in its historical witness against human exploitation for the sake of power and profit anywhere that may occur in the global community.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 15-02 be approved with amendments as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“1. [Condemn the production and sale of Israeli products that come from the Occupied Palestinian Territories.] [Call upon all nations to prohibit the import of products made by enterprises in Israeli settlements on Palestinian land.] …

“4. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to all other PC(USA) councils and entities and invite and strongly encourage those groups and organizations to endorse this boycott[ , until significant progress toward Palestinian rights and independence can be reported to the General Assembly or General Assembly Mission Council].”

Rationale

The language of the first recommendation of Item 15-02 proposed here comes from the action of the United Methodist General Conference on May 2, 2012, and is a public policy position that would reflect the consistent call of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to end support for the forty-five-year-old military occupation of Palestine. The growth of settlements supported by the Israeli government has increased settler population to more than 500,000 persons, making a two-state solution virtually impossible. The new language proposed would be consistent with the intent of the original language and overall set of recommendations. Peter Beinart, author of The Crisis of Zionism and supporter of a general boycott of settlement products, maintains that “One of those simple truths is that holding territory in which one ethnic group enjoys citizenship, the right to vote, free movement and due process while another ethnic group is denied those rights is unjust and corrosive of a country’s democratic fiber” (New York Times, 4/29/12, Book Review, p. 6).

The second amendment proposed clarifies the purpose and potential duration of the boycott, in accordance with criteria suggested for Presbyterian engagement in such acts of advocacy outlined below. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would continue to support commercial activity with enterprises in the State of Israel but not support the continuance of a military occupation and its attendant settlements and resource exploitation.

The item rationale correctly notes that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has approved boycott positions in the past, and notes two dealing with food products: the Nestle Boycott (concerning improperly marketed infant formula in countries lacking adequate clean water) and the Taco Bell Boycott (to increase farm worker wages).

The Presbyterian church’s history of “selective patronage” and consumer boycotts is presented more fully in the booklet commended for study by the General Assembly Mission Council in 1979: “Boycotts: Policy and Criteria” (http://www.pcusa.org/resource/boycotts-policy-analysis-and-criteria/). That study notes that all “consumer spending reflects personal and group values,” and is thus broadly selective, while what it terms “selective patronage” is reflected in decisions not to patronize discriminatory businesses (such as in “Project Equality”) as well as alcohol, tobacco, and gambling enterprises.
The basic moral logic of not supporting or profiting from activities contrary to Christian values comes through in a General Assembly action in 1937: “We favor the adoption by the Congress of legislation … which forbids the shipments of Child Labor goods in interstate commerce, and which requires informative labels to be attached to Child Labor goods” (such labels would assist boycotting).

The language of the principle-based first recommendation would also make it clear that the two Israeli companies in question, Ahava and Hadiklaim, are being named due to their salience in the U.S. marketplace, but are not being focused on in isolation from other enterprises taking advantage of the conditions of occupation. Purchasers would be encouraged to look carefully at all settlement products. This is a position taken not only by U.S. Methodists but also the General Council of the United Church of Canada, meeting this August, which has received a twenty-six-page report recommending that its members:

- take concrete actions to support the end of the occupation by:
  - encouraging members of the United Church to avoid any and all products produced in the settlements;
  - directing the Executive of the General Council to give high priority to establishing a church-wide campaign of economic action directed against one or more settlement products that can be identified as produced in or related to the settlements or the occupied territories;
  - identifying the goal of the campaign as building awareness of United Church members of the illegal settlements’ unjust continuation of the occupation and its impact on the lives of Palestinians and Israelis.

The Canadian Jewish News reported the chair of the study committee, former Moderator David Giuliano: “To buy settlement products is the same as buying stolen goods; in other words, benefiting from the crime,” Giuliano said. He added, however, that “this is not a call for a boycott of Israel or Israeli products” (http://www.cjnews.com/?q=node/89927).

The 1979 study provides criteria for engaging in boycotts and some theological reflection on how the church takes moral stands. In terms of criteria, these include: consistency with church policy, lack of other alternative means of influence (such as shareholding and U.S. legislation), timeliness, effectiveness, impact on other aspects of our mission, and provision for review. The ACSWP finds that these criteria are generally met by the boycott of Ahava and Hadiklaim products, as such non-violent economic pressure is called for by both Palestinian civil society and broad ecumenical and evangelical groups of Palestinian Christians (in the Kairos Palestine document and more recent “Christ at the checkpoint” conference).

In terms of effectiveness, the Israeli government has passed various measures to prevent or hamper the boycott of settlement products (http://articles.latimes.com/2011/jul/12/world/la-fg-israel-boycott-20110712; http://www.thejewishweek.com/editorial_opinion/opinion/why_anti_boycott_laws_are_democratic). It has also been argued that both the Gaza blockade by Israel and the restrictions on East Jerusalem and the West Bank constitute boycott and sanctions against Palestinian goods (http://972mag.com/are-israelis-boycotting-palestinian-goods/37117/). Thus, while there is little doubt that the boycott action would be timely, its effectiveness needs to be seen in a context where there is little likelihood of negotiations with the current Israeli government. In fact, all words-only efforts have not deterred the Israeli government from expanding settlements, including the purported “legalization” of three once “illegal” settlements in late April. Thus the boycott strategy may be an effective and very participatory way to support greater justice for the Palestinians, and seems to be regarded by the Israeli government and its supporters as a danger to their control.

At this relatively early stage in the Ahava and Hadiklaim boycott efforts, the strictly financial impact seems unclear. Yet even when companies do not lose major market share, they are concerned about damage to their reputation and its influence on retailers who carry their products. The principle behind the boycott would continue to hold: purchasing these products helps support a military occupation that deprives Palestinians of their land and freedom. Thus not purchasing those products is a form of practical integrity that applies moral standards to market relationships.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 15-02 as amended:

“The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Condemn the production and sale of Israeli products that come from the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

2. Call for the boycott of [all Israeli products coming from the Occupied Palestinian Territories, including] AHAVA Dead Sea Laboratories Beauty Products, [and all date products of Hadiklaim, the Israel Date Growers Cooperative, Ltd., often marketed by the brand names: King Solomon Dates and Jordan River. (Not Israeli products from Israel).]

3. Call for the boycott of all date products of Hadiklaim, the Israel Date Growers Cooperative, Ltd., often marketed by the brand names: King Solomon Dates and Jordan River.
15 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MIDDLE EAST PEACEMAKING ISSUES

“[4.] Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to all other PC(USA) councils and entities and invite and strongly encourage those groups and organizations to endorse this boycott.

“[5.] Direct the Stated Clerk to inform our ecumenical partners of this action, both nationally and globally, and call upon them to join in the boycott of these companies.”

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns supports this overture because all Israeli companies operating in the Occupied Palestinian Territories are exploiting the natural resources of a people and territory that is under military occupation. These people have lost all power to assert their rights.

In light of the overwhelming vote by our sisters and brothers at the United Methodist General Conference in April 2012 for a sweeping boycott of ALL goods from ALL Israeli companies operating in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, ACREC recommends widening this overture from two companies to all Israeli companies based in the illegal settlements (not Israeli products from Israel).

The ACREC believes that the call by Peter Beinart, to “boycott non-democratic Israel,” meaning the settlements in the West Bank, is an effective non-violent way to protest the exploitation of Palestinian land and people. (See: To Save Israel, Boycott the Settlements, By Peter Beinart, The New York Times, Op-Ed March 18, 2012 – Beinart self-identifies as an Orthodox Jewish Zionist).

The call of our Christian sisters and brothers in Palestine to support them by not buying products from companies in the settlements has parallels to the call for boycotts from the African American community during the civil rights movement. The companies in question profit from illegal exploitation of not only natural resources that belong to the rightful owners of the land, but also migrant workers from Thailand, The Philippines, and others.

Item 15-03

[The assembly answered Item 15-03 by the action taken on Item 15-11. See p. 41.]

On Divestment from Caterpillar—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

1. Affirm that the worsening occupation of Palestine is destroying lives and entire cultures and that it needs to end for the sake of justice between Jews, Christians, and Muslims.

2. Affirm that equipment being used to support this occupation is for Israeli military purposes and violates the investment policy of the PC(USA).

3. Affirm that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), along with its responsibility to all peoples affected by this conflict, has a special obligation and witness to Christian communions in Jerusalem and the West Bank and, as a result, must stand up with its Christian brothers and sisters as their communities of faith face extinction as a result of military oppression.

4. Instruct the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to begin the process of disinvestment from Caterpillar, Inc., and not to reinvest in this corporation unless the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is fully satisfied that Caterpillar, Inc., no longer engages in the selling of equipment to Israel that is used to build illegal Israeli settlements, construct walls that illegally encroach upon Palestinian lands that cut Palestinians off from their own property and natural resources, destroy Palestinian life and property, and otherwise continue to support the occupation of Palestinian territories.

5. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to all other PC(USA) councils and entities, and invite and strongly encourage those groups and organizations that hold assets in Caterpillar, Inc., to divest as well.

6. Direct the Stated Clerk to inform our ecumenical partners of this action, both nationally and globally—particularly within Israel and Palestine—encouraging them to hear this witness and consider following suit in applying social responsibility and human rights criteria to other companies in their portfolios that support the occupation of Palestine.

Rationale

The following is a brief history of the PC(USA)’s corporate engagement with Caterpillar, Inc.:

2004: The 216th General Assembly (2004), in Richmond, Virginia, voted to begin the process of engaging in selective divestment from U.S. corporations that provide support, technology, and military equipment to the Government of Israel.
of Israel to sustain the occupation of the Palestinian territories. Caterpillar, Inc., was on the list of five corporations named. In accordance with PC(USA) investment policy, the process of selective divestment began with corporate engagement. (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 66)

2006: At the 217th General Assembly (2006), in Birmingham, Alabama, with new overtures for divestment coming before the assembly, the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) of the PC(USA) reported that corporate engagement with Caterpillar, Inc., and four other corporations was ongoing and yielding positive results. This General Assembly chose against divestment in order to allow corporate engagement to continue as reported. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 944–45)

2008: Once again, divestment overtures came before the 218th General Assembly (2008) in San Jose. By this time, one corporation had been dropped from the potential divestment list and MRTI reported to General Assembly Committee 11 that corporate engagement was continuing with the four other corporations. With three of those corporations there was good progress. It was reported that progress with Caterpillar, Inc. (CAT) was not quite as good as with the other three but that talks were continuing and meetings were taking place. As a result of that report, even though many substantive overtures were passed in support of Palestinians in their struggle, the General Assembly once again opted for corporate engagement rather than divestment. (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 47, 116–18)

At the time of this report to the 218th General Assembly (2008), Caterpillar corporate behavior had shown no signs of change. CAT bulldozers were still being used to destroy Palestinian homes and ripping up Palestinian agricultural lands. They also continued to be a primary tool in the nonstop construction of illegal Israeli settlements in the West Bank. Following this meeting of General Assembly, no change in CAT corporate behavior was forthcoming.

2009: At Caterpillar’s annual meeting, investors rejected an effort by human rights activists, dissident shareholders, and the interfaith coalition of Christian and Jewish investors with whom the PC(USA) partnered to stop the firm from selling bulldozers to Israel. Corporation CEO, Jim Owens, told the body that: “If you don’t like how CAT does business, you don’t have to hold your shares.”

At its meeting on November 5–7 of that year in Cincinnati, Ohio, it was reported to MRTI that corporate engagement, in the manner in which it had been employed since 2004, was no longer working in regard to CAT. The MRTI voted to recommend to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC)—at its February 2010 meeting—adoption of a statement of denouncement in regard to the behavior of Caterpillar, and send it to the 219th General Assembly (2010) in Minneapolis for action.

2010: The Middle East Study Committee (MESC), which was appointed by the 218th General Assembly (2008) to investigate and examine issues related to the Israel/Palestine conflict and then report to the 219th General Assembly (2010), made its report public in the early part of the year. One of MESC’s recommendations was to denounce Caterpillar, Inc., for its business practices in Israel/Palestine.

Under pressure from interest groups, Caterpillar, Inc. prohibited all its worldwide dealerships from selling equipment to Iran, hence proving to the world that CAT does indeed have control over what their dealerships do with their equipment.

During the Rachel Corrie civil trial, CAT suspended sales of bulldozers to the Israeli military, again proving that the corporation has more control over sales of its products than it has previously said it does.

At the 219th General Assembly (2010) meeting in Minneapolis, Minnesota, the assembly approved an amended version of the MESC report, which included a denouncement of Caterpillar, Inc., for its business practices in Israel Palestine. Although there were two overtures submitted from two PC(USA) presbyteries to divest from CAT, the assembly did not pass either one. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 50, 52, 985–91, 1021-1119 of the electronic version; pp. 50, 52, 362–63, 366–70 of the printed version)

2011: On September 8–10, the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee of the PC(USA) met in Chicago, Illinois, and approved its report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) recommending that three companies be added to the General Assembly divestment list: Caterpillar, Inc., Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions. The MRTI chairperson, the Reverend Brian Ellison, made the following statement to the Presbyterian News Service: “The General Assembly asked us to do everything we could to bring about change through dialogue, and we have done this, even asking the assembly for more time over the years. Today we are sadly reporting that these efforts have not produced any substantive change in company policies or practices, and that there is little reason for hope they will do so in the future. According to the assembly’s prior directives and the church’s ordinary engagement process, we have little choice but to recommend divestment.”

The writers and endorsers of this overture believe that the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee has done its due diligence, and commends MRTI for its faithful work at corporate engagement with CAT and other corporations for more than six years. We also believe that the 216th, 217th, 218th, and 219th General Assemblies of the PC(USA) have been careful to listen to all sides of the debate and have been faithful to MRTI recommendations, trusting that the committees we appoint to do the important work of our denomination do so with responsibility and integrity. We also believe, that as in the past, it is time for the General Assembly to hear and approve the recommendation of a committee that has been both fair and faithful in its assigned task for more than six years. We regret that Caterpillar, Inc., has not been willing to engage in PC(USA) corporate engagement in a meaningful and productive way, but believe that now is the time to disassociate ourselves financially from this company until such time that it shows it is willing to be a good corporate citizen in regard to its business practices throughout the world. This recommendation to divest is not about changing CAT’s behavior. Rather, it is about choosing not to invest in a business in which its practices contribute to the loss of Palestinian life, the destruction of Palestinian property, and the ongoing support of illegal and immoral occupation by the Israeli government in the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

The writers and endorsers of this overture are convinced that as circumstances presently stand, we can do no less than divest from corporations whose business practices violate our church’s financial investment policies. If the actions of Caterpillar, Inc., in regard to its business practices with the Israeli government do not violate PC(USA) policy in regard to sustaining a military occupation, what actions ever would? It is our plea that through faithfulness towards the justice taught by our Lord Jesus Christ, the investment policies and decisions of our denomination will be consistent with the following statement: We are the Church of Jesus Christ. When the powers of the world decide that they will conduct business as usual, and that business is contrary to the teachings of Christ and the will of God for humanity, then it is time for the church to end its complicity in this sinful behavior. If we do not, then we remain unrepentant.

It was amazing. At first you go in and see lots of houses. A week later, after the razing, you see the horizon further away, almost to the sea. They simply took down all the houses around so terrorists would have nowhere else to hide.”

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 15-03 AND 15-08

Advice and Counsel on Items 15-03 and 15-08—from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Items 15-03 and 15-08, as amended below: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]
“5. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate [an action in support of MRTI recommendations] to all other PC(USA) councils and entities[; and to ecumenical partners,] [and invite and strongly encourage] encouraging those groups and organizations that hold assets in Caterpillar, Inc., [Motorola Solutions, and Hewlett Packard,] to divest as well.”

Rationale

The amendment to this item reflects the agreement of the sponsors of the overture and of its concurrences with the full recommendations of the report of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) committee. That is, they support the divestment of the three corporations recommended by MRTI. Their focus on Caterpillar reflects the use of company equipment in highly visible home demolitions and construction of the separation wall, as well as the legal campaign to have a public investigation of Rachel Corrie’s death. Armored Caterpillar bulldozers were also very active in destroying houses during the 2009–2010 war on Gaza.

The recommendations in MRTI’s report, however, represent a more inclusive, methodical, and ecumenical process that considers the importance of high technology from Motorola Solutions and Hewlett-Packard in the enforcement of control of the Palestinian population, including the protection of illegal settlements. Attempts at reaching even low levels of agreement with all three companies have gone on for more than four years while all have been expanding their strategic business relationships with the occupation. It is consistent with the MRTI recommendations to propose that, if approved, they be shared with ecumenical partners as well as Presbyterian bodies. This Advice and Counsel is thus meant to support MRTI’s recommendations as well (Item 15-11).

Commissioners considering the overall divestment recommendations may consider three dimensions of this act of witness:

1. Is it consistent with the theology and policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)?
2. Is it an act of investment responsibility that reflects the key moral criteria of integrity, effectiveness, and solidarity?
3. Does it support other witness to the key problem of the occupation and the failure of political, diplomatic, and violent measures to affect the situation?

1. A strong theological and ethical basis for divestment in support of freedom for Palestinian Christians and Muslims can be found not only in The Confession of 1967 (the basis for the 1971 mandate for MRTI itself), but in the Barmen Declaration and A Brief Statement of Faith. In its resolution on the Middle East in 2008, the General Assembly:

Affirms the obligation of the church to speak to the governments of the United States and all other nations where it sees those governments violating the commandments of God. In the words of Theological Declaration of Barmen, which speaks to the dependence of the Church on the Word of God and its independence from any state or ideology, “we reject the false doctrine, as though there were areas of our life in which we would not belong to Jesus Christ, but to other lords ... . The state has by divine appointment the task of providing for justice and peace ....” (The Book of Confessions, 8.15, 8.22). The sovereignty of God thus judges all claims of sovereign nationhood, all boundaries, all exercises of force, and all uses of resources by human beings. The Church is thus called to help discern where the Spirit is working in the world, guided by Scripture and its confessions.

In A Brief Statement of Faith, we affirm that:

In a broken and fearful world the Spirit gives us courage to pray without ceasing, to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace. [emphasis added] (The Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 65–71)

The words in italics, in this case, may refer particularly to the Christians of Palestine and Israel whose voices are often disregarded in deliberations focused on the attitudes of Jews or Muslims.

In terms of policy, the Middle East report approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010) introduced its recommendations with several summary statements:

We deeply value our relationships with Jews and Muslims in the United States, Israel, and the predominantly Muslim countries of the Middle East. Yet the bonds of friendship must neither prevent us from speaking, nor limit our empathy for the suffering of others. Inaction and silence on our part enable actions we oppose and consequences we grieve. ...

We also recognize that our concern to end support for both violence in all its forms and the ongoing occupation and settlement of Palestine places demands of integrity on how the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) uses its own resources and investments. Let us be clear: we do affirm the legitimacy of Israel as a state, but consider the continuing occupation of Palestine (West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem) to be illegitimate, illegal under international law, and an enduring threat to peace in the region. Furthermore, we recognize that any support for that occupation weakens the moral standing of our nation internationally and our security. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1027 of the electronic version)
2. The General Assembly Mission Council comment describes some of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) policy and process, which include Military-Related Investment Guidelines (1982) and an extensive study, The Divestment Strategy: Ethical and Institutional Context (1984). The 1982 guidelines led the church to restrict its investments in nuclear warhead makers and the largest military contractors, whose securities continue to be proscribed for church investment agencies. The 1984 study focuses on the two values of effectiveness and integrity, analyzed in light of trusteeship and Christian mission. These values led to a range of strategic criteria that guided the church in the “selective, phased divestment” of securities in thirteen companies as part of the larger campaign against apartheid. In broad strokes, then, there were three key values undergirding considerations such as impact on those suffering, urgency, technical feasibility, coordination with partners, limitation of other strategies, and clarity of message.

In terms of effectiveness, historically, church-led nonviolent economic pressure of all kinds, including divestment, contributed to the eventual departure of 214 of the 324 U.S. corporations operating in South Africa in 1981, representing an equity decline from $2.6 billion to $714 million, a substantial move toward isolating South Africa economically. As is well known, after the 1994 end of apartheid, figures such as Nelson Mandela, Desmond Tutu, and Allan Boesak credited the churches with decisive impact, as did studies such as Robert K. Massie’s Loosening the Bonds: The United States and South Africa in the Apartheid Years (Doubleday, 1998).

The 1984 study describes how divestment of securities, through removing access and influence “inside” a corporation as a stockholder, may have more impact on corporate policy from the “outside.” Divestment’s effectiveness is not primarily financial but impacts the reputation and legitimacy of the behaviors focused on in ecumenical and sometimes international campaigns. Vigorous opposition to divestment by the Israeli government and its supporters indicates a real fear of being associated with the occupation and oppression of Palestinians, affirming that divestment carries an effective message that justice is needed.

In terms of the second criterion, integrity, this is not to be seen as a purity or “cleansing the portfolio.” The Reformed tradition does not favor separation from the world or a position of moral perfection, unattainable in any event. We do, however, affirm that our principles should be backed up by action, lest we profit from practices we decry. The phrase in the Preliminary Principles of the Book of Order is that “truth is in order to goodness,” with the implication that the church should be a truth-teller and a truth-doer.

The church’s action, from this perspective, is less about strictly economic consequences and more about the prophetic nature of the church, acting in obedience and without being compromised. Yet seeking integrity can also make for effective witness against practices accepted by majorities or those in power.

The nature of Christian mission in the Middle East involves the church in acts of solidarity with the remaining Christians, and with all who seek a peace with justice. Although support for divestment and other forms of economic pressure is strongly discouraged by the Israeli government, an unprecedented ecumenical group issued the Kairos Palestine affirmation in December of 2009. Among the nonviolent methods of resistance to the occupation that they endorse is divestment:

4.2.6 Palestinian civil organizations, as well as international organizations, NGOs and certain religious institutions call on individuals, companies and states to engage in divestment and in an economic and commercial boycott of everything produced by the occupation. We understand this to integrate the logic of peaceful resistance. These advocacy campaigns must be carried out with courage, openly sincerely proclaiming that their object is not revenge but rather to put an end to the existing evil, liberating both the perpetrators and the victims of injustice. The aim is to free both peoples from extremist positions of the different Israeli governments, bringing both to justice and reconciliation. In this spirit and with this dedication we will eventually reach the longed-for resolution to our problems, as indeed happened in South Africa and with many other liberation movements in the world.

4.3 Through our love, we will overcome injustices and establish foundations for a new society both for us and for our opponents. Our future and their future are one. Either the cycle of violence that destroys both of us or peace that will benefit both. We call on Israel to give up its injustice towards us, not to twist the truth of reality of the occupation by pretending that it is a battle against terrorism… (From Kairos Palestine Document: A Moment of Truth: A Word of Faith, Hope, and Love from the Heart of Palestinian Suffering; http://www.kairosPalestine.ps)

As to overall Palestinian views of the occupation and divestment as a strategy, the position of the Kairos church leaders seems to articulate a broad desire for resistance. An April 22, 2012, report by 60 Minutes confirms that Christians view the occupation as the primary impetus to their departure (http://mondoweiss.net/2012/04/60-minutes-profiles-palestinian-christians-michael-oren-falls-on-his-face-defending-israel.html).

As a strategy, then, the divestment of securities in three key corporations would strengthen the integrity of the church’s moral opposition to the occupation, focus attention effectively on the means by which the occupation is profitably maintained, and be a clear sign of support for the Palestinian Christians and others seeking peace with justice. It would also be an action consistent with international law and a witness against the political failures that enable an oppressive situation to continue.

3. Relation of divestment to the “peace process.”

Since the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzak Rabin by a fundamentalist Jew in 1995, the Oslo peace process has never recovered. The Second Intifada included suicide bombings and severe punitive raids on Palestinians, acts of terrorism fueled by increasing Islamist and Jewish fundamentalism. Settlement growth continued through the 1990s and 2000s, despite purported suspensions and the removal of 7,500 settlers from Gaza in 2005. Rockets by radical groups—a terrifying, if largely inaccurate, threat—were a cause or pretext for a one-sided war on Gaza (http://www.uruknet.info/?p=74717).

The failure of the second Camp David process in 2000, though blamed largely on Yasser Arafat by Israeli and U.S. sources, reflected a substantial Palestinian willingness to concede land colonized by the major settlement cities, but an unwillingness to give up on a coherent Palestinian state with some shared sovereignty in Jerusalem. With the separation wall extensions, continued annexations and removals in East Jerusalem and Area C (60 percent) of the West Bank, stranglehold of Palestinian land such as at the Tent of Nations (http://www.tentofnations.org), and violent responses to peaceful Palestinian protests, little hope is seen for a renewed peace process.

Public policy advocacy by the churches and human rights groups has been massively outgunned by well-funded groups dedicated to the defense of all Israeli interests, despite the emergence of more critical groups in the U.S. Jewish community. Diplomatically, although the US calls for renewed negotiations, it has blocked international efforts to allow Palestine membership in the United Nations and vetoed efforts to hold Israel accountable to international law more than thirty times, while continuing more than $3 billion in military aid every year. This one-sided support for the State of Israel and its occupation, along with the U.S.-led wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, has weakened the international reputation of the United States, particularly among the world’s 1.4 billion Muslims.

General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and many other good people have called repeatedly for an effective end of the occupation since 1974, only to see both nonviolent and violent liberation efforts of the Palestinians suppressed. While interfaith dialogue has had some value during this time, the U.S. political and media context allows relatively little debate over the nature of the occupation of Palestine, much less opposition to its continued support. Similarly, the exodus of Christians from the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem, will continue unless voices coupled with action are raised challenging the conditions that are designed to push Arabs out of desirable areas.

For the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to back its moral concerns with divestment would be a dramatic act of conscience and leadership. Although the 2009 Presbyterian Panel survey data indicate that a majority of Presbyterians support divestment for human rights reasons, considerable pressure will be applied and allegations of anti-Semitism would be expected, encouraging conflict in the church. Thus commissioners have to determine how important it is to act on a clear matter of justice in the face of open opposition.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-03

Advice and Counsel on Overture 15-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 15-03.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns strongly supports this item because consecutive General Assemblies have confirmed church policy that we should not be invested in companies profiting from “non-peaceful pursuits.” Caterpillar Inc.’s equipment in particular is crucial to maintaining the infrastructure of the Israeli occupation, including the building of roads in the West Bank connecting the illegal settlement to each other and to Israel proper. These roads are fully segregated and only cars with Israeli license plates are allowed to use them. These roads are built on Palestinian land in the West Bank but Palestinians are not allowed to use them.

Further, Caterpillar (CAT) equipment is used to destroy agricultural lands and civilian homes of Palestinian families; ACREC strongly condemns this destruction. Likewise, CAT equipment is used to build and maintain the Separation Barrier, which is a key cog in the Israeli policy of Hafrada, which means “separation” in Hebrew. (Apartheid also means separation, in Afrikaans). Israel’s policy of keeping the populations separate based on race and ethnicity is at a minimum highly discriminatory. The ACREC does not condone this separation policy or the use of CAT equipment in building and maintaining this separation policy. Unless the company changes its policy of supporting the infrastructure of occupation and separation, ACREC supports divestment from CAT shares.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 15-03

Comment on Item 15-03—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

In all its corporate actions, the Board of Pensions strives to support the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including the social witness policies approved by the General Assembly. Sometimes there is apparent conflict between the social witness desires of the denomination and our legal duties to members of the Benefits Plan. It is clear that our mutually approved long-term policies and procedures have worked well to avoid conflict and we urge the General Assembly to take no actions that would displace these very helpful policies and procedures.
The General Assembly has delegated oversight responsibility for Benefits Plan and Assistance Plan monies to the Board of Pensions. This responsibility makes the Board a “fiduciary,” a status that carries both certain duties and the potential for certain liabilities if carried out improperly. This delegation and separation of oversight duties is intended to relieve the General Assembly from both fiduciary duties and liabilities. The Board of Pensions, acting through its board of directors, chooses the actual investment managers and determines how the money is allocated among various classes of securities to achieve the long-term investment objectives required of the Plans. The Board of Pensions does not select specific investments (either to buy or to sell): security selection is the job of the investment managers themselves.

As indicated below, managers of individually managed portfolios are made aware of our social witness policy and are required to justify to the Board of Pensions any deviation from that policy.

These are all important separations of roles and responsibilities that are in the best interests of commissioners, of the denomination, of the Benefits Plan and of Plan members. For these reasons, the General Assembly does not direct the Board of Pensions to divest the portfolio of an investment held by the Benefits Plan and does not direct that the Board of Pensions affirmatively invest in any specific security.

The General Assembly does, however, determine the social witness policies of the church, including how they pertain to investments of money held by or under the aegis of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It does advise the Board of Pensions (and the Foundation) and it does urge us to take certain actions from time-to-time. We in turn are mindful of the General Assembly’s wishes.

To confuse this important definition of roles and responsibilities, would risk potential liability to the General Assembly, and possibly incur more investment risk for the Pension Trust and other benefits and assistance assets than would otherwise be desirable. We cannot, and the General Assembly would not have us avoid or compromise our legal duties and threaten the security of the Benefits Plan and Assistance Program.

There are two specific duties for us to consider when it comes to the question of divestment.

First, the Board of Pensions has a “duty of loyalty” to act in the sole and exclusive interests of the Benefits Plan members. That means our decisions must be in the interests of that group taken as a whole, not in the interests of the Board, and not in the interests of some other group or some special part of the church. The Board of Pensions has established procedures that it believes are completely faithful to this obligation.

Second, the Board of Pensions has a “duty of care” to see to it that sufficient funds are available to keep the promises made to Plan members, both current and future. Selling or buying securities based on social witness principles alone could easily translate into taking on too much or too little risk at any given point in time. The board of directors has adopted detailed investment policies governing the allocation of the Plan’s investments in various asset classes and the selection of managers for those asset classes. This allocation is the primary way we manage investment risk. The investment managers are responsible for the selection of individual investment holdings. We are responsible for selecting the investment managers, and this selection process is another of our risk management tools, and is an equally important separation of duties. The result is that the Board of Pensions must make its own, independent judgments based on its legal duties of loyalty and care.

Having said that, it is our often-expressed objective to support the declared social witness policies of the denomination as best we can. Fortunately, specific policies on divestment adopted by the General Assembly in 1984 have served our mutual interests well, have promoted a united voice and have avoided conflicts within the denomination.

Divestment

The Board of Pensions participates in the church’s MRTI activities. Under the 1984 policies of the General Assembly, the denomination’s Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment recommends that a company be added to the General Assembly’s divestment list after several steps. Three of those steps include (a) undertaking a thorough and comprehensive research of the company’s involvement in an objectionable practice, (b) engaging the company in constructive dialogue about those practices through meetings and submission of shareholder resolutions; and (c) it is determined that no lesser alternative to divestment is available. Ultimately the General Assembly determines, upon receiving such a recommendation, what is the effective social witness action for the church and its entities to undertake (including divestment or affirmative investment). The General Assembly has long recognized that the divestment practice of the Board of Pensions is one of a “prohibition of ownership” rather than one of an “immediate sale” of securities listed for divestment.

When and if a security is added to the prohibited securities list (there are currently 631 securities on the list), the Board of Pensions has adopted a formal process to ensure that the failure to own the security will not harm the financial soundness of the Plan. At this point, there are two levels of decision because of the differing responsibilities and accountabilities of the decision-makers. The first decision is for an investment manager. The investment manager must decide whether not owning a divestment list security will harm their portfolio results. If it decides that failure to own will not harm results, there is no issue as to portfolio performance, and the security is not held. Since, as a general rule our investment policies provide for observance of the General Assembly’s divestment policies, if the manager decides that failure to own will harm portfolio performance, it must ask us and provide justification for an exception.

The second decision now becomes one for the Board of Pensions. It is inappropriate for us to fail to act. In other words, we are obligated to independently decide whether or not to initiate divestment, or to grant an exception. In the event of a request for exception, if the Investment Committee determines that the request is reasonable and appropriate in the context of our duty of care, it may grant the exception. Currently, there is only one security held by the Board of Pensions under an approved exception request.

For example,

Stock A is placed on the divestment list for the first time. Manager X owns Stock A. When the divestment list is updated, we advise Manager X that Stock A may be held as a part of their normal investment program until such time as the security becomes part of the manager’s sell discipline for all clients. Any subsequent purchase requires an exception from the Board of Pensions.

If a manager does not own the stock, any purchase requires an exception.

From time to time, securities are removed from the divestment list, and managers are so advised.

Affirmative Investment

The duties of care and loyalty apply equally as limitations on the purchase of securities. In addition, the separation of roles and responsibilities between the Board of Pensions and our investment managers is breached when we begin telling our investment managers to actively purchase specific securities. At that point we become portfolio managers ourselves, and to date that is not a responsibility we have undertaken because it would impose additional regulatory burdens and administrative expenses on the Plan that we have chosen to avoid.

Shareholder Resolutions and Proxy Voting

We do hold a small portfolio of securities outside the Benefits Plan specifically at the request of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment in order that the church can use these shares to propose shareholder resolutions from time to time. These holdings are at minimum levels required to submit shareholder resolutions.

It is also appropriate to note that the Board of Pensions does vote all shares held by or through us in accordance with the actions of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment. The Board of Pensions respectfully requests that the General Assembly take this comment into account when considering the several recommendations on divestment or affirmative investment proposed to the General Assembly. The processes in place have served us well for over twenty years, and will continue to serve us well going forward.

On Supporting a Peaceful, Diplomatic Solution to the U.S.-Iran Issues—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Acknowledge the church’s support of a peaceful, diplomatic means to resolve the tensions developing as a result of Iran’s nuclear program between the United States, Iran, European Union nations, Iran’s Arab neighbors, and Israel, and affirm that the provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons should apply to all nations in the region without double standards.

2. Call for the direct, unconditional negotiations between the United States and Iran with the goal of finding and implementing a peaceful resolution and affirm the longer term goal of reestablishing diplomatic relations.

3. Oppose preemptive military action by any nation against Iran and by Iran against any nation.

4. Call for a renewed effort at all levels—people-to-people, interfaith groups, nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), and government—to help the United States and Iran eliminate the tensions that have existed between our two nations and to unite the [American and Iranian people] in efforts for their common good in solving the problems of poverty, illness, and climate change.
5. Encourage members, councils, and appropriate offices of the General Assembly Mission Council/Presbyterian Mission Agency to support measures both to prevent war and to open channels for citizen diplomacy, cultural exchange, and rebuilding long-valued relationships with the church in Iran in a new context.

5- [6.] Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this resolution to the church, and to the president of the United States, the secretary of state of the United States, every member of Congress, [the government of Iran,] the secretary general of the United Nations, the president of the United Nations General Assembly, and all missions to the United Nations.

Rationale

Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ has called upon us to be peacemakers: “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called children of God” (Mt. 5:9).

The people of the United States and Iran want to live in peace. They do not want war. Visits by citizen peace delegations have shown that there is much goodwill on the part of Iranians toward Americans.

We are convinced that collateral damage and loss of innocent civilian life would be severe and unjustified in any such attack, let alone the possible deaths of millions of civilians should the war escalate or become nuclear.

Such a war would likely cause Iran to strike against U.S. interests in the Middle East.

Such a war could lead to moves by Iran through its surrogates Hamas and Hezbollah that would greatly complicate the process of finding a basis for peace in Israel-Palestine.

We are not confident, judging from past experience, that the U.S.A. has given sufficient thought and planning to the consequences of such an attack in Iran itself and across the Middle East.

United States or Israeli military action against Iran would likely cause increased terrorism throughout the world, including here in the United States.

War with Iran could result in a partial or complete shutdown in the flow of Persian Gulf oil, causing a massive increase in the price of fuel and a major economic crisis.

With a weakened economy and consumer and investor confidence already shaken by a series of financial crises, another major shock such as war with Iran and the shutdown of Persian Gulf oil could be the straw that breaks the camel’s back and sends the world into a prolonged recession or even a depression. Millions of people would suffer greatly if this comes to pass.

This resolution is in harmony with the peacemaking principles of the PC(USA) as recognized by the 210th General Assembly (1998), including “the promotion and preferential use of nonviolent means for conflict resolution and social change,” “the strengthening of international cooperation through the United Nations, including its peacemaking and peacekeeping roles,” “the use of unilateral [peacemaking] initiatives to reduce risks of conflict,” and “the importance of self-examination and repentance in international relations as steps in the healing of conflict and the promotion of reconciliation” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, pp.75, 457).

A successful, peaceful, diplomatic solution to the U.S.-Iran issues would give humanity renewed hope that lasting peace and justice are indeed possible and plant the seeds of future peacemaking endeavors all over the world.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 15-04 be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. [Acknowledge] [Affirm] the church’s support of [a] peaceful, diplomatic means to resolve the tensions developing as a result of Iran’s nuclear program, between the United States and Iran, and affirm that the provisions of the Nuclear Non-proliferation Act should apply to all nations in the region without double standards.
“2. Call for the direct, unconditional negotiations between the United States and Iran with the goal of finding and implementing a peaceful resolution [and with the longer term goal of reestablishing diplomatic relations].

[Text for Recommendations 3.–4. remains unchanged.]

[5. Encourage members, councils, and appropriate offices of the General Assembly Mission Council/Presbyterian Mission Agency to support measures both to prevent war and to open channels for citizen diplomacy, cultural exchange, and rebuilding long-valued relationships with the church in Iran in a new context.]

[5.] [6.] Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this resolution to the church, and to the president of the United States, the secretary of state of the United States, every member of Congress, the secretary general of the United Nations, the president of the United Nations General Assembly, and all missions to the United Nations.”

Rationale

Commissioners need to evaluate the dangers posed both by a potential Iranian nuclear weapons program and by a potential Israeli or Israeli/U.S. preemptive strike on Iran. The overture rightly cites General Assembly policy guidance from 1998. The 2008 Social Creed also summarizes the PC(USA) position: “Peacemaking through multilateral diplomacy rather than unilateral force … and a strengthening of the United Nations and the rule of international law.”

The amendments proposed are designed to increase the long-term role of international law and diplomacy in a situation that is likely to remain a political rallying point in Israel and the United States, despite the beginning of negotiations with Iran and the imposition of sanctions, and increasingly vocal opposition by intelligence and military analysts (as cited below). The added language would also remind Presbyterians of our significant mission history in Iran and the continuing presence of Christians, Jews, and other religious minorities in that country. None of the additions idealize the current Iranian government, which might be strengthened by outside attack.

On February 21, 2012, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons wrote President Obama in opposition to the campaign for war in Iran:

The Christian tradition we share urges us to seek limits to violence and, therefore, requires us to oppose any rush to initiate another war in the Middle East. It seems that the lessons of the second Iraq war and the continuing war in Afghanistan are being ignored, and the deaths of hundreds of thousands of people, including our own soldiers, are being disregarded. As you know, representatives of almost all churches in the U.S.--and many around the world--opposed the second Iraq war and were proven right as to its lack of sufficient cause and enormously tragic consequences.

In light of uncertainties regarding the actual status of Iran's nuclear program and doubts raised about its intent and time line by your own advisors and many in the Israeli intelligence service, we strongly encourage you to take the greatest possible steps to prevent hasty action on either side. Such initiatives should involve the wider international community, which is already engaged in recently intensified economic sanctions. A firm stand by you cautioning against any sort of preemptive military attack on Iran is all the more imperative in light of statements by Israeli leaders that clearly raise the danger of escalation.

From your speech in receiving the Nobel peace prize, and from your measured support of the Libyan insurgency, we are aware that you are familiar with Just War criteria, such as the use of force as a last resort in defense, legitimate authorization, proportionality, and the probability of a just order after hostilities. At this time, we do not see that any of these criteria for war have been met; therefore, our intention should be focused on improving options for the Iranian people and seeking to reduce rather than magnify tensions.

We are aware that the U.S. is sending more forces into the Persian Gulf, and that various members of Congress are proposing legislation that would restrict diplomacy and further demonize Iran. Yet, just peace is the larger goal toward which we believe the United States should deploy its “hard” and “soft” power.

As of late April, no Iranian nuclear weapons program has been confirmed, although some observers believe that Iran is enriching uranium so that it may have the capacity to build a bomb at some future date. Iran’s leadership is seen as divided, with the Supreme Ayatollah condemning nuclear weapons but its partly figurehead President Ahmadinejad sometimes making defiant but ambiguous statements. The Israeli government is considered the source of the “stuxnet” virus that damaged Iranian computers and the assassinations of nuclear scientists and technical personnel. Joint military maneuvers between Israel and the U.S. were allegedly scheduled to rehearse responses to a potential Iranian counterstrike, but have been postponed. Majority Israeli opinion sees Iran as a threat, but less than half are willing to go to war without U.S. support. Both U.S. and Israeli leaders say that “all options are on the table.”

Resistance to war threats by Israeli President Netanyahu and Defense Minister Ehud Barak:

On March 11, 2012, “Former Mossad chief Meir Dagan said that an Israeli strike on Iran would lead to a missile attack on Israel that would have a ‘devastating impact’ on the country, in an interview that aired Sunday on CBS’s 60 Minutes. According to Dagan, an attack will start a regional war. ‘And wars, you know how they start. You never know how you are ending it,’ he said” (http://www.haaretz.com/news/diplomacy-defense/ex-israeli-spymaster-iran-response-to-israeli-attack-would-be-devastating-1.417898).

Dan Meridor, Deputy Premier and Minister for Intelligence and Atomic Energy, on April 16, 2012, while noting that Iranian leaders disdain Israel, admits that the claim that Ahmadinejad wanted Israel “wiped off the map” was mistranslated, however frequently repeated (http://www.aljazeera.com/programmes/talktojazeera/2012/04/2012413151613293582.html).
Military Chief of Staff General Benny Gantz affirms on April 25, 2012, that Iranian leaders are rational and do not have a nuclear weapons program (http://www.cnn.com/2012/04/25/world/middleeast/israel-iran/).

Former head of domestic intelligence, Yuval Diskin, on April 28, 2012, states his distrust of the “messianic feelings” of Netanyahu and Barak: “They are misleading the public on the Iran issue. They tell the public that if Israel acts, Iran won’t have a nuclear bomb. This is misleading. Actually, many experts say that an Israeli attack would accelerate the Iranian nuclear race” (http://www.haaretz.com/news/diplomacy-defense/israel-s-former-shin-bet-chief-i-have-no-confidence-in-netanyahu-barak-1.426908).

A U.S. intelligence summary:

The current March/April issue of Foreign Affairs magazine contains an article, “Clear and Present Safety,” that illuminates the overall exaggeration of military threats to the United States pervasive in U.S. politics and military spending justifications. Authors Micah Zenko and Michael A. Cohen maintain that despite political and economic insecurities, and a continuously stoked fear of terrorism, the U.S. is vastly stronger than any potential threat within “a world with fewer violent conflicts and greater political freedom than at virtually any other point in human history” (p. 80). As for a threat from Iran, “then the U.S. can breathe easy: Iran is a weak military power. According to the International Institute for Strategic Studies, Iran’s ‘military forces have almost no modern armor, artillery, aircraft or major combat ships, and UN sanctions will likely obstruct the purchase of high-technology weapons for the foreseeable future’” (p. 87; http://justiceunbound.org/action-alerts/iran-bombing-threat-creating-a-mindset-that-leads-to-war/).

In sum, this item remains timely and points to the continued power of Israeli and U.S. political leaders and interests who favor unilateral war, despite the lessons of Iraq and Afghanistan.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns agrees with this peacemaking overture and supports a diplomatic approach as a solution to differences between the U.S. and Iran. As stated in the rationale of the overture, the 210th General Assembly approved “the promotion and preferential use of nonviolent means for conflict resolution” and ACREC strongly supports pressing for diplomacy over use of military force. The Presbyterian church has a long history of working with the people of Iran going back to the early years of mission in the mid 1800s. In the current standoff, we should not forget our historic connection to the people of Iran, with whom Presbyterian mission workers established many schools, hospitals, and churches.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 15-04.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns concurs with the rationale given by the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and would further lift up the importance of the role of women in peacemaking efforts. The ACWC would encourage future peacemaking reports and resolutions to include an affirmation of the essential role that women play in peacemaking, in much the same way that the UN Security Council Resolution 1325 cites the importance of “Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building, and stressing the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance of peace and security, and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution.”

The ACWC lifts this up for the consideration of those writing future resolutions.

Endnotes

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 15-04

Comment on Item 15-04—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Iranian minority Christians are concerned over the escalating war rhetoric and the possibility of a strike against their country. Iranian church leaders of all denominations (Orthodox, Assyrian, and Protestant) have expressed their opposition to such a military strike, and believe it would have dire consequences for not only Iran, but also the region and the United States. They urge the continuation of negotiation and diplomatic means to mitigate the tension between their government and the United States.

Item 15-05

[The assembly answered Item 15-05 by the action taken on Item 15-11. See pp. 41, 42.]

On Ethical Investment and Divestment—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to:

1. Express appreciation to Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) for their diligent efforts to ensure that the investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) reflect the principles of ethical Christians.

2. Direct Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to expend no further efforts in regard to the instruction of the 216th General Assembly (2004).

3. Disapprove the MRTI’s recommendation of divestment from Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions.

4. Encourage future General Assemblies to thoroughly document, discuss, and debate the rationale for phased selective divestment of specific companies before initiating the process of phased selective divestment.

5. Direct MRTI to include information in future efforts on phased selective divestment regarding the existence and implementation of corporate policies in each company being investigated including, but not limited to, environmental stewardship, fair hiring and employment practices, and pursuits that encourage and/or support peace so that the General Assembly may have a more comprehensive understanding of how investment in these companies does and does not reflect business principles which the PC(USA) supports.

6. Direct MRTI to provide information in the future concerning the underlying investments, including the number and value of shares outstanding for each company being investigated on the date the members of MRTI agree on a divestment as well as the number and value of shares owned by PC(USA)-related entities that might be sold pursuant to a divestment decision on that same date.

7. Direct that all PC(USA)-related entities whose investment practices are affected by General Assembly decisions to divest publish electronically a list of all organizations in which those entities currently have investments with such lists to be updated annually.

8. Direct the MRTI, the Stated Clerk, and the General Assembly Mission Council to provide more information to the members of the PC(USA) about ethical investment and divestment, including clear explanations of General Assembly investment policies and what divestment is as well as clarification about the relationship, or lack thereof, between ethical investment and the mission of peacemaking, through electronic articles, publication in existing PC(USA) journals and newspapers, statements through other already-existing means of communication, and other means of education and discussion within the PC(USA).

Rationale

The 216th General Assembly (2004) instructed Mission Responsibility through Investment (MRTI) to begin “a process of phased selective divestment in multinational corporations operating in Israel, in accordance to General Assembly policy on social investing, and to make appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly Council for action” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 66) without prior General Assembly study.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) replaced those instructions with the following: “To urge that financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israeli, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 944).

The 217th General Assembly (2006) stated in reference to the action of the 216th General Assembly (2004) on phased selective divestment, “We acknowledge that the actions of the 216th General Assembly (2004) caused hurt and misunderstanding among many members of the Jewish community and within our Presbyterian communion. We are grieved by the pain that this has caused, accept responsibility for the flaws in our process, and ask for a new season of mutual understanding and dialogue” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 944).

The 217th General Assembly (2006) directed
Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to ensure that its strategies for engaging corporations with regard to Israeli and Palestinian territories:

a. Reflect the application of fundamental principles of justice and peace common to Christianity, Islam, and Judaism that are appropriate to the practical realities of Israeli and Palestinian societies.

b. Reflect commitment to positive outcomes.

c. Reflect awareness of potential impact upon the stability, future viability, and prosperity of both the Israeli and Palestinian economies.

d. Identify affirmative investment opportunities as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank.” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 945)

Singling out a country as a basis for phased selective divestment is an extraordinary step, which should be based on evidence of singularly egregious behavior.

Multiple nations involved in the Middle East have exhibited non-peaceful intent and behavior worthy of our attention.

Identifying Israel as a focus of phased selective divestment has damaged relationships between Presbyterians and Jews.

The Presbytery of New Covenant believes the 216th General Assembly (2004) did err in initiating a process of phased selective divestment without the benefit of prior substantiated, objective, and verifiable documentation of companies operating in Israel in opposition to the General Assembly policy on social investing.

The MRTI has discharged the instructions of the 216th General Assembly (2004) by engaging, or attempting to engage, corporations doing business in Israel in which PC(USA)-related entities have investments in order to discourage those corporations from pursuing non-peaceful profits.

The charge to MRTI did not include instruction to consider how corporations doing business in Israel follow the corporate practices encouraged by the PC(USA) as well as how such corporations pursue non-peaceful profits.

Some reaction to MRTI’s recommendation has indicated that the General Assembly policies concerning investment as well as the implications of divestment are not clearly understood by all members of the PC(USA).

There appears to be some confusion in the PC(USA) and among the general public about the relationship between divestment and peacemaking.

Additional Rationale

In the mid-afternoon of Friday, July 2, 2004, the 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a response to an overture seeking support for the Geneva Accord. This response, written by commissioners on the General Assembly Committee on Peacemaking, raised twelve points regarding peace between Israel and the Palestinians, ranging from “the sovereignty of God over all nations, states, governments, and peoples,” to a call to all governments to forge “negotiated compromises that open a path to peace.” The last of these points was a one-sentence historic call for Mission Responsibility Through Investment “to initiate a process of phased selective divestment in multinational corporations operating in Israel, in accordance to General Assembly policy on social investing, and to make appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly Council for action.” This action was taken by the General Assembly despite having no detailed information on why Israel, of all nations in the world, should be singled out as deserving the potential punishment of divestment or which corporations would be targeted. In essence the General Assembly gave “carte blanche” to the MRTI to find corporations operating in Israel in which the PC(USA) has investments that might be in opposition to our policy on social investing.

Two years later, on Wednesday afternoon, June 21, 2006, the 217th General Assembly (2006) approved a resolution to “replace” the instructions of the 216th General Assembly (2004) to MRTI with the following: “To urge that financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal.” This resolution was written by commissioners serving on the General Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues in response to overtures from seventeen presbyteries (10 percent of all presbyteries) calling the General Assembly to rescind the instructions of the 216th General Assembly (2004) to the MRTI initiating a process of phased selective divestment.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) issued the following extraordinary statement to clarify its desire to change the direction set in motion by the flawed process of the 216th General Assembly (2004): “We acknowledge that the actions of the 216th General Assembly (2004) caused hurt and misunderstanding among many members of the Jewish community and within our Presbyterian communion. We are grieved by the pain that this has caused, accept responsibility for the flaws in our process, and ask for a new season of mutual understanding and dialogue.”

We believe that the action of the 217th General Assembly (2006) redirected the MRTI Committee away from a divestment process and toward a peaceful investment process. However, the MRTI Committee has continued to operate as if their
We believe the 220th General Assembly (2012) needs to issue clear, unequivocal, and binding instructions to MRTI to cease pursuit of a strategy that was replaced in 2006 and to disapprove their recommendation of divestment. We prayerfully and strongly encourage the 220th General Assembly (2012) to provide clear instruction to MRTI regarding the types of information the General Assembly expects if it is asked to initiate a process of phased selective divestment or approve divestment from specific corporations. We ask the 220th General Assembly (2012) to advise future General Assemblies to require thorough documentation, discussion, and debate of the rationale for initiating a process of phased selective divestment prior to making such an historic decision. If phased selective divestment is a viable strategy for peacemaking in today’s complex world, we believe PC(USA) members should receive more information about ethical investing and the mission of peacemaking.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 15-05 AND 15-07

Advice & Counsel on Items 15-05, and 15-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

These items would specifically forbid the church to engage in divestment in pursuit of justice for Palestine and restrict the church’s peacemaking efforts to a set of actions focused largely on dialogue with the U.S. Jewish community and the Israeli government. They would not prohibit the church from pursuing divestment in other areas, but would effectively re-write the mandate of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI).

The ACSWP advises that Items 15-05 and 15-07 be disapproved.

These overtures would restrict both the witness of the church and the hope of the Palestinians for justice. Items 15-05, 15-07, and 15-10 advocate a words-only approach that has failed to achieve a two-state solution and is enabling the de-Christianization of Palestine. These overtures would prevent the full exercise of corporate responsibility by the church itself, regardless of the facts on the ground in occupied Palestine. They confuse the church’s calling to be a truthful place with being a neutral place, and attempt to equate the negotiating position of a long-subjugated people with that of a powerful and prosperous nuclear-armed state. And they ignore the call for solidarity from the Christians in Palestine and elsewhere in the Middle East.

Commissioners are faced with a stark choice: to believe the evidence of Palestinians—Christian and Muslim—who experience the daily restrictions and humiliations of the occupation, or to accept the arguments of an Israeli government that repeatedly invokes the Holocaust experience and perceptions of anti-Semitism to ward off nonviolent economic pressure. Many commissioners will have heard from representatives of the American Jewish community who make solidarity with Israel—no matter what its policies—a test of friendship and cooperation. Some may have accepted tours paid for by U.S. and Israeli organizations seeking to influence their votes. The church, however, must apply its own ethical judgment to this emotionally charged situation, based upon its own theology, values, and identity as an international community dedicated to love and justice.

Our concern to repent of past anti-Semitism is clear and often repeated, as is our concern for the safety of Israelis as well as Palestinians. Yet it should be equally clear that criticism of the policies of hardline Israeli governments is not anti-Semitism. This is a position supported by a growing number of American Jews who are dismayed at the anti-democratic consequences of the occupation. Just like the Christian and Muslim communities, the Jewish community is not monolithic. More and more courageous Jews are speaking out, some publicly supporting divestment. A recent book by Peter Beinart, a former neoconservative voice for Israel and the Iraq war, has attracted notable discussion for proposing a boycott of settlement products as a means to end the occupation and preserve democracy.

Our support for the divestment strategy, based on the three criteria of effectiveness, integrity, and solidarity developed by the General Assembly in 1984, is stated in the Advice & Counsel memoranda on Items 15-03 and 15-08. Good Calvinist investment policy assumes that no one has a monopoly on virtue but that meaningful distinctions can be made. In 2004, the General Assembly vote for divestment from companies supporting the military occupation and violence revealed that many Presbyterians were already convinced that the “words-only” approach had reached a dead-end. Item 15-05 makes much of a 2006 statement that the 2004 General Assembly had not signaled its divestment action before that action was taken, and, by selective quotation, tries to separate that initial action from the careful development of a corporate engagement process focused on companies supporting the occupation.

Item 15-05 purports to instruct MRTI on its mandate, but does not mention the Military Related Investment Guidelines adopted in 1982, which have restricted investments in nuclear warhead makers and other contractors. Nor does it mention the extensive study of 1984, The Divestment Strategy: Principles and Criteria, which provided the framework for the 1985 selective, phased divestment of strategic investments undergirding apartheid in South Africa. By neglecting to understand how the “customary corporate engagement process” seeks to change corporate policy, in this case toward “peaceful pursuits,” item 15-05 mistakenly speaks of “singling out a country” rather than key corporations engaged in non-peaceful pursuits.
Items 15-05 and 15-10 call for “positive investment” but do not provide any examples or documentation on how this is to be done effectively under the restrictions of occupation. Certainly the Palestinian Authority under Salam Fayyad has done much with the aid it receives, but numerous studies confirm why foreign enterprises do not invest in the semi-isolated Palestinian cities and cannot invest with Palestinians in Area C (60 percent of the West Bank) or in Gaza due to the blockade. In the words of a 2010 Norwegian government/World Bank study:

The uncertainty and lack of a political horizon created by Israeli closure regime are hindering the potential of any future investments. The combined effect of the closure regime in the West Bank, the restrictions on the access and movement of investors, and the constricted trade between West Bank and Gaza have resulted in substantial increase in transaction costs, lowered the competitiveness of Palestinian products, and created a very poor investment climate in Palestine. (www.paltrade.org/...Investment%20in%20Palestine%20-%20The%2...)

In fact, many Presbyterians have worked diligently to contribute to the building up of the Palestinian economy. They have been guided by a study by Dr. Don Mead, Michigan State professor emeritus of agricultural economics. They have focused on the tourism industry by leading group visits to Palestine; the sale of Palestinian crafts, art work, and olive oil; and agricultural initiatives for planting olive trees and aiding in the harvest. While these acts of solidarity have supplemented some incomes, and built and cemented relationships between Presbyterians and Palestinians, they have not slowed the Occupation, or prevented the Israeli military from uprooting thousands of olive trees in the meantime.

Commenting on the three settlements “legalized” by the Israeli government in late April, 2012, The Financial Times, saw this as yet another setback to peace. Their editorial reads:

Mr. Netanyahu is unlikely to be impressed by words, or swayed by those Israelis who care what the world says. Countries that want Israel to be safe—which requires a peaceful resolution of the conflict—must look for ways to go beyond mere rhetorical condemnation.

As millions of Palestinians continue to languish under Israeli control but without a vote in Israeli affairs, the conflict will look ever more like an anti-apartheid struggle. Most Israelis know this is a battle they would be likely to lose.” (The Financial Times, April 25, 2012).

The “occupation” is a term for the entire military and economic enterprise of taking land slated to become a Palestinian state, restricting the Arab population to smaller and smaller areas by an extensive wall, and a network of surveillance and checkpoint installations. Armored Caterpillar bulldozers have been key in home demolitions, in destroying parts of Gaza, and in constructing the security or separation wall. Hewlett Packard biometric security equipment and Motorola Solutions surveillance and motion-detection equipment form an integral part of the military occupation. Consequently, these firms and their products are not engaged in peaceful purposes.

Item 15-10 cites the 2008 General Assembly’s statement advising against approving a “caricature” that would oversimplify the Israeli-Palestine conflict. That same assembly, however, recognized the enormous power imbalance, pledged not to abandon the Palestinians, continued the MRTI process, and invoked the clear judgment of the Barmen Declaration on “the responsibility both of ruler and of the ruled.”

In this context, Items 15-05, 15-07, and 15-10 would not only restrict the church’s voice and action, but they would place the church in the same political impasse that has immobilized the U.S. government, to the detriment of U.S. interests and reputation in the region and throughout the world. What the three overtures against MRTI seek to avoid is making a tough moral choice. Sometimes obeying Christ means making such a choice and standing with the weak. Divestment exemplifies choice. In this case, it is a very Presbyterian choice made “decently and in order,” after a solid process and repeated debate over eight years. It is also a very “positive” choice that affirms that God is sovereign over our economic resources, and that there should be no wall of separation between our moral and financial stewardship.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) disapprove Item 15-05.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns believes this item does not fully acknowledge the long and careful process that Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) has followed since its mandate from the 216th General Assembly (2004). The MRTI report carefully documents the reasons why the committee has arrived at the final step of corporate engagement, but this item does not take into account those reasons and the years of work by MRTI.

The item does not provide any reasons why past General Assembly policies identifying specific human rights abuses in the Occupied Palestinian Territories (OPT) as obstacles to peace should be contravened. The ACREC holds that as long as the denomination policy holds that we should not profit from “non-peaceful pursuits,” and as long as the three U.S. companies identified by MRTI are doing so, it is the policy of the church not to profit from these companies’ shares.
Further, this item claims that “identifying Israel as a focus of phased selective divestment has damaged relationships between Presbyterians and Jews.” This is an inaccurate statement at multiple levels:

The 216th General Assembly (2004) did not “identify Israel as a focus” of phased selective divestment; it called for identifying U.S. companies profiting from the Israeli Occupation of the OPT.

While it is true that some Jewish groups and organizations have said the 216th General Assembly (2004) directive to not profit from the Israeli Occupation has “damaged relationships between Presbyterians and Jews,” not all Presbyterians and not all Jews agree with this statement. In fact, the call for divestment has strengthened relationships between some Presbyterians and some American and Israeli Jewish groups and individuals who oppose the occupation, as evidenced by the support for MRTI from the Israeli Committee Against House Demolition (ICAHD) and the Rabbinic Council of Jewish Voice for Peace.

The very claim that this has affected our relationships with all Jews in some kind of blanket way commits the serious error of classifying an entire people into one monolithic category.

General stereotyping can and often does lead to racism in situations where decisions are made by assuming all people of one race or ethnicity hold the same viewpoints.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 15-05

Comment on Item 15-05—from the General Assembly Mission Council.

This overture addresses corporate engagement of some corporations doing business in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories as assigned by the 216th General Assembly (2004), and affirmed by the General Assemblies in 2006, 2008, and 2010. This work has been carried out according to the policy of the 116th General Assembly (1976) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (Minutes, PCUS, 1976, Part I, pp. 513–18) on Social Responsibility and Investments that listed eight investor actions, including divestment that can be utilized to assess corporate practices, and if appropriate, promote a change in those practices. The 196th General Assembly (1984) (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 193–94) affirmed the use of divestment as an ethical strategy for socially responsible investment, and outlined principles and criteria for its use. The following year, the 197th General Assembly (1985) (Minutes, 1985, Part I, pp. 228–32) adopted a process of “selective, phased divestment” built around a corporate engagement process of careful research informed by General Assembly policies on the issues involved, interaction with identified corporations, use of engagement tools available to shareholders (correspondence, dialogues, proxy voting, posing questions at corporate annual meetings, and filing of shareholder resolutions that may lead to further dialogue), and ecumenical consultation whenever possible. As a last resort, divestment may be recommended to the General Assembly if corporate engagement has not succeeded, and is unlikely to succeed in the future in changing corporate practices. Thus, General Assembly policies on socially responsible investing are rooted in how the church can use whatever investments it has, however large or modest, to promote its mission goals and values. Past General Assemblies have entrusted similar assignments to MRTI regarding corporate activity in Sudan and Burma.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved MRTI’s report on its work since 2004, and clearly stated its goal that “financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal.” Divestment is the final step of the “customary corporate engagement process” when all other efforts are unsuccessful and when future efforts are not likely to produce results. Both the Assembly committee and the full Assembly were clearly informed of this fact prior to their votes affirming the process.

The extensive work of MRTI on this assignment has been publicized throughout the church. In addition, full reports were made to each meeting of the General Assembly Mission Council, and to the 218th and 219th General Assemblies (2008 and 2010), which affirmed MRTI’s continued work on its assigned task. Those reports, along with the MRTI report to the 2012 General Assembly also note that the customary corporate engagement process has achieved positive and constructive outcomes with some companies (Citigroup, ITT Industries, and United Technologies). Interpretative materials and General Assembly policies on socially responsible investing and the PC(USA) are available in printed form on the MRTI web site and Facebook page. Stories of MRTI’s work have appeared in the Presbyterian News Service, Presbyterians Today, and other publications.

On Responding to the Call from Palestinian Christians for Economic Solidarity—from the Presbytery of Scioto Valley.

The Presbytery of Scioto Valley overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to encourage all Presbyterians, as individuals and in their lives together as congregations, presbyteries, and institutions to prayerfully...
1. consider how to respond to the call of “A Moment of Truth: A Word of Faith and Hope from the Heart of Palestinian Suffering” (the Palestinian Christian Kairos document) “to say a word of truth and to take a position of truth with regard to Israel’s occupation of Palestinian land”;

2. examine the ways in which our economic power as consumers and investors may be complicit with the abuses of Israel’s occupation of Palestinian land; and

3. consider how to respond to the call of the Palestinian Christian Kairos document to engage in “boycott and divestment as tools of nonviolence for justice, peace, and security for all.”

Rationale

The 219th General Assembly (2010) commended for study the Kairos Palestine document, and endorsed the document’s emphasis on hope for liberation, nonviolence, love of enemy, and reconciliation. Many Presbyterians have responded to the invitation to read and study this document, and have found in it a compelling call to action.

As the document explains, “Palestinian civil institutions, as well as international organizations, NGOs and certain religious institutions call on individuals, companies, and states to engage in divestment and in an economic and commercial boycott of everything produced by the occupation. We understand this to integrate the logic of peaceful resistance. These advocacy campaigns must be carried out with courage, openly [and] sincerely proclaiming that their object is not revenge but rather to put an end to the existing evil, liberating both the perpetrators and the victims of injustice. The aim is to free both people from extremist positions of the different Israeli governments, bringing both to justice and reconciliation. In this spirit and with this dedication we will eventually reach the longed-for resolution to our problems, as indeed happened in South Africa and with many other liberation movements in the world” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1012 of the electronic version).

Jesus Christ, the Head of the Church, teaches “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called children of God” (Mt. 5:9). The Book of Confessions states “God's reconciliation in Jesus Christ is the ground of the peace, justice, and freedom among nations which all powers of government are called to serve and defend. The church, in its own life, is called to practice the forgiveness of enemies and to commend to the nations as practical politics the search for cooperation and peace. This search requires that the nations pursue fresh and responsible relations across every line of conflict, even at risk to national security, to reduce areas of strife and to broaden international understanding” (The Book of Confessions, 9.45). Our church Constitution also states “Wherever there is brokenness, violence, and injustice the people of God are called to peacemaking” (Book of Order, W-7.4003). We believe that Christians bear a significant responsibility to listen to, respect, and strive to understand the history of the Jewish people, and the ways in which Christians so often have been perpetrators of violence against Jews throughout our two thousand year history. We are particularly aware of the ugly, horrific reality of the Holocaust and seek to be sensitive to its impact on Jews both in Israel and around the world. It is impossible for us to fully comprehend the insecurity felt by the Jewish people in the wake of the murder of six million Jews just a generation ago.

Similarly, our relationship with our Muslim sisters and brothers has been fraught with violence, in too many instances initiated by Christians. In various moments, each of our communities has been both victim and perpetrator. As we work with Muslims regarding Israel and Palestine, we attempt to understand the implications of the Nakba for the Palestinian people, and to appreciate the impact of the unrelenting devastation that event and the ensuing occupation has meant for Muslims in Israel and Palestine and around the world.

We are painfully aware of the growing insecurity and desperation of our Christian sisters and brothers in Palestine and Israel and throughout the Middle East. In too many places, Christians have been forced to flee their own homes in order to save themselves and their families. When church leaders from this region of the world speak, we listen with the greatest attention, and we feel a special responsibility to lift up and respond to the voices of this ever-shrinking minority of those with whom we feel the closest possible bond. Their common faithfulness to Jesus over the centuries, shared among numerous Christian traditions, is an inspiration to us.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 15-06.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns strongly supports this item because economic solidarity with oppressed peoples is a time-honored principle and practice of the church. This call from the Holy Land is not only in line with that tradition, but it is also in accord with calls from our Christian sisters and brothers in Palestine. The Palestinian Christian call for boycott and divestment has been influenced by our church’s position that popular resistance to the Israeli occupation must be through non-violent means.

The shrinking numbers in the Palestinian Christian population through emigration because of occupation and oppression in Palestine must be a matter of great concern for all Christians everywhere. Today, Palestinian Christians represent the closest historical link to the New Testament Church. The continued flight of Palestinian Christians from the birthplace of Christianity will not only serve to diminish Palestinian culture as a whole but also contribute to the destabilization of Israel as Israeli Jews and Palestinian Muslims continue to oppose each other without the moderating witness and influence of the Palestinian Christian community.

The PC(USA) should continue to foster interfaith relations with the American and Israeli Jewish communities, but not at the expense of the ancient Christian community in Palestine. Ours must be a prophetic stance in which we speak truth not only to power, but also to friends and partners in the interfaith community.

Item 15-07

[The assembly answered Item 15-07 by the action taken on Item 15-11. See pp. 41, 42.]

On Rejecting the Use of Boycott, Divestment, and Sanction Policies in Peacemaking Efforts Between Israelis and Palestinians—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to do the following:

1. Reject the MRTI recommendation to divest from Caterpillar, Motorola, and Hewlett-Packard.
2. Reject any use of boycott, divestment, and sanction policies in peacemaking efforts between Palestinians and Israelis.
3. Commit itself to remaining an advocate for peace in the Middle East, with special attention to
   a. the region’s changing dynamics in reaction to the “Arab Spring” movements,
   b. the widespread pattern of attacks on Christians in the region,
   c. affirming the PC(USA)’s historical position in favor of a two-state solution to the Israel/Palestine conflict,
   d. the need for Israel to stop all settlement construction,
   e. a return by all parties to the negotiating table.

Rationale

There is a long and ugly history of Christians using economic boycotts and sanctions against Jews and, given that history, the economic divestment issue has placed enormous strains on Jewish-PC(USA) relations since 2004. The American Jewish community was quite open to PC(USA) statements critical of Israel’s policies prior to 2004 but highly critical of PC(USA) actions related to possible divestment decisions aimed at Israel since 2004.

The American Jewish community has been open even to strident advocacy against Palestinian suffering in the statements and actions of other Protestant denominations that have taken the particular tool of divestment off the table. The passage of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) recommendations to divest from Caterpillar, Motorola, and Hewlett-Packard for reasons related to their business activity in Israel threatens to end Jewish-PC(USA) dialogues and collaboration on social justice concerns in many parts of the country.

There are many ways other than economic boycotts, divestments, and sanctions to express PC(USA) opinions and values regarding peacemaking in the Middle East and for the PC(USA) to play an active role in promoting justice and peace.

Advice & Counsel on Items 15-05, and 15-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Just like the Christian and Muslim communities, the Jewish community is not monolithic. More and more courageous Jews are speaking out, some publicly supporting divestment. A recent book by Peter Beinart, a former neoconservative voice for Israel and the Iraq war, has attracted notable discussion for proposing a boycott of settlement products as a means to end the occupation and preserve democracy.

Our support for the divestment strategy, based on the three criteria of effectiveness, integrity, and solidarity developed by the General Assembly in 1984, is stated in the Advice & Counsel memoranda on Items 15-03 and 15-08. Good Calvinist investment policy assumes that no one has a monopoly on virtue but that meaningful distinctions can be made. In 2004, the General Assembly vote for divestment from companies supporting the military occupation and violence revealed that many Presbyterians were already convinced that the “words-only” approach had reached a dead-end. Item 15-05 makes much of a 2006 statement that the 2004 General Assembly had not signaled its divestment action before that action was taken, and, by selective quotation, tries to separate that initial action from the careful development of a corporate engagement process focused on companies supporting the occupation.

Item 15-05 purports to instruct MRTI on its mandate, but does not mention the Military Related Investment Guidelines adopted in 1982, which have restricted investments in nuclear warhead makers and other contractors. Nor does it mention the extensive study of 1984, The Divestment Strategy: Principles and Criteria, which provided the framework for the 1985 “selective, phased divestment” of strategic investments undergirding apartheid in South Africa. By neglecting to understand how the “customary corporate engagement process” seeks to change corporate policy, in this case toward “peaceful pursuits,” item 15-05 mistakenly speaks of “singling out a country” rather than key corporations engaged in non-peaceful pursuits.

Items 15-05 and 15-10 call for “positive investment” but do not provide any examples or documentation on how this is to be done effectively under the restrictions of occupation. Certainly the Palestinian Authority under Salam Fayyad has done much with the aid it receives, but numerous studies confirm why foreign enterprises do not invest in the semi-isolated Palestinian cities and cannot invest with Palestinians in Area C (60 percent of the West Bank) or in Gaza due to the blockade. In the words of a 2010 Norwegian government/World Bank study:

The uncertainty and lack of a political horizon created by Israeli closure regime are hindering the potential of any future investments. The combined effect of the closure regime in the West Bank, the restrictions on the access and movement of investors, and the constricted trade between West Bank and Gaza have resulted in substantial increase in transaction costs, lowered the competitiveness of Palestinian products, and created a very poor investment climate in Palestine. (www.paltrade.org/.../Investment%20in%20Palestine%20-%20The%20...)”

In fact, many Presbyterians have worked diligently to contribute to the building up of the Palestinian economy. They have been guided by a study by Dr. Don Mead, Michigan State professor emeritus of agricultural economics. They have focused on the tourism industry by leading group visits to Palestine; the sale of Palestinian crafts, art work, and olive oil; and agricultural initiatives for planting olive trees and aiding in the harvest. While these acts of solidarity have supplemented some incomes, and built and cemented relationships between Presbyterians and Palestinians, they have not slowed the Occupation, or prevented the Israeli military from uprooting thousands of olive trees in the meantime.

Commenting on the three settlements “legalized” by the Israeli government in late April, 2012, The Financial Times, saw this as yet another setback to peace. Their editorial reads:

Mr. Netanyahu is unlikely to be impressed by words, or swayed by those Israelis who care what the world says. Countries that want Israel to be safe—which requires a peaceful resolution of the conflict—must look for ways to go beyond mere rhetorical condemnation.

The “occupation” is a term for the entire military and economic enterprise of taking land slated to become a Palestinian state, restricting the Arab population to smaller and smaller areas by an extensive wall, and a network of surveillance and checkpoint installations. Armored Caterpillar bulldozers have been key in home demolitions, in destroying parts of Gaza, and in constructing the security or separation wall. Hewlett Packard biometric security equipment and Motorola Solutions surveillance and motion-detection equipment form an integral part of the military occupation. Consequently, these firms and their products are not engaged in peaceful purposes.

Item 15-10 cites the 2008 General Assembly’s statement advising against approving a “caricature” that would oversimplify the Israeli-Palestine conflict. That same assembly, however, recognized the enormous power imbalance, pledged not to abandon the Palestinians, continued the MRTI process, and invoked the clear judgment of the Barmen Declaration on “the responsibility both of ruler and of the ruled.”

In this context, Items 15-05, 15-07, and 15-10 would not only restrict the church’s voice and action, but they would place the church in the same political impasse that has immobilized the U.S. government, to the detriment of U.S. interests and reputation in the region and throughout the world. What the three overtures against MRTI seek to avoid is making a tough moral choice. Sometimes obeying Christ means making such a choice and standing with the weak. Divestment exemplifies choice. In this case, it is a very Presbyterian choice made “decently and in order,” after a solid process and repeated debate over eight years. It is also a very “positive” choice that affirms that God is sovereign over our economic resources, and that there should be no wall of separation between our moral and financial stewardship.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns strongly opposes this overture because it is replete with misleading oversimplifications and does not address the fundamental problem on the ground, which is a military occupation. The rationale equates criticism of Israel with anti-Semitism, and conflates non-violent economic pressure with Jewish persecution.

The item converges three very separate issues into one: financial divestment, the Arab Spring, and the situation of the various Christian communities across the region. This item makes wide generalizations about the Christians of the Middle East and stereotypes them into one group with one set of values and problems. Each Christian community in each country across the region has a different situation resulting from different political problems. (For example, the Christians of Iraq lived in harmony with their Muslim neighbors for millennia until the U.S. invasion of 2003 when they became a proxy easy target for the Christian West).

Furthermore, the generalization of widespread attacks on Christians across the Middle East is not accurate—rather it is true only in isolated and very limited scale given the history of co-existence over centuries. This is confirmed by our Middle Eastern church partners who reject the claim that Christians are leaving the holy land because of persecution by Muslims. They have repeatedly indicated that the primary reason for their emigration is the human rights abuses inflicted on them by the Israeli military occupation that equally affects their Muslim neighbors with whom they share a culture, language, and deep bond.

Finally, this item claims that “the economic divestment issue has placed enormous strains on Jewish-PC(USA) relations since 2004” and that the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) recommendation “threatens to end Jewish-PC(USA) dialogues and collaboration on social justice concerns.”

This is blatant and dangerous stereotyping of both Jews and Presbyterians:

- While it is true that some Jewish groups and organizations have said the 216th General Assembly (2004) directive to not profit from the Israeli Occupation has “damaged relationships between Presbyterians and Jews,” not all Presbyterians and not all Jews agree with this statement. In fact, the call for divestment has strengthened relationships between some Presbyterians and some American and Israeli Jewish groups and individuals who oppose the occupation, as evidenced by the support for MRTI from the Israeli Committee Against House Demolition (ICAHD) and the Rabbinic Council of Jewish Voice for Peace.

- The very claim that this has affected our relationships with all Jews in some kind of blanket way commits the serious error of classifying an entire people into one monolithic category. General stereotyping can and often does lead to racism in situations where decisions are made by assuming all people of one race or ethnicity hold the same viewpoints.
This overture seeks to end corporate engagement of some corporations doing business in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories as assigned by the 216th General Assembly (2004), and affirmed by the General Assemblies in 2006, 2008, and 2010. This work has been carried out according to the policy of 116th General Assembly (1976 of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. (Minutes, PCUS, 1976, Part I, pp. 513–18) on Social Responsibility and Investments that listed eight investor actions, including divestment, that can be utilized to assess corporate practices, and if appropriate, promote a change in those practices. The 196th General Assembly (1984) (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 193–94) affirmed the use of divestment as an ethical strategy for socially responsible investment, and outlined principles and criteria for its use. The following year, the 197th General Assembly (1985) (Minutes, 1985, Part I, pp. 228–32) adopted a process of “selective, phased divestment” built around a corporate engagement process of careful research informed by General Assembly policies on the issues involved, interaction with identified corporations, use of engagement tools available to shareholders (correspondence, dialogues, proxy voting, posing questions at corporate annual meetings, and filing of shareholder resolutions that may lead to further dialogue), and ecumenical consultation whenever possible. As a last resort, divestment may be recommended to the General Assembly if corporate engagement has not succeeded, and is unlikely to succeed in the future in changing corporate practices. Thus, General Assembly policies on socially responsible investing are rooted in how the church can use whatever investments it has, however large or modest, to promote its mission goals and values. Past General Assemblies have entrusted similar assignments to MRTI regarding corporate activity in Sudan and Burma.

The General Assembly should be aware that MRTI’s recommendation comes as a direct result of the actions of the General Assembly in 2004, 2006, 2008, and 2010. It is part of the customary corporate engagement process. It is not a response to, nor a part of, any broader movement advocating boycott/divestment/sanctions against Israel or any other country. The General Assembly has not acted upon any proposal to participate in such a movement and MRTI only enacts the General Assembly’s directives. The MRTI recommendations make no mention of a boycott or of sanctions against Israel. And the divestment recommended is not a general divestment, nor one aimed at companies who merely do business in Israel. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) agencies invest—and will continue to invest—in many companies doing business in Israel but who are not, to our knowledge, involved in non-peaceful pursuits. Examples include American Express, Intel, Proctor & Gamble, Coca-Cola, Oracle, among others. The three named companies in the MRTI recommendation are American companies, not Israeli, profiting from particular pursuits identified as roadblocks to peace, as explained in the report.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved MRTI’s report on its work since 2004, and clearly stated its goal that “financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal.” Divestment is the final step of the “customary corporate engagement process” when all other efforts are unsuccessful and when future efforts are not likely to produce results. Both the assembly committee and the full assembly were clearly informed of this fact prior to their votes affirming the process.

It should be noted that the 1984 General Assembly’s principles and criteria for considering divestment includes the desire that the church addresses the issue, in this case the establishment of a just peace in Israel and Palestine, in a variety of ways. Decades of General Assembly statements have been coupled with educational efforts, support for PC(USA) partners in the region, advocacy at the United Nations and with the U.S. and Israeli governments and the Palestinian Authority, and corporate engagement since 2004. Corporate engagement has been pursued on an ecumenical basis drawing upon the research, documentation, and collaboration with Palestinians, Israelis, and Jewish Americans who share a commitment to ending the Occupation, and corporate profiting from roadblocks to peace.

The extensive work of MRTI on this assignment has been publicized throughout the church. In addition, full reports were made to each meeting of the General Assembly Mission Council, and to the 218th and 219th General Assemblies (2008 and 2010), which affirmed MRTI’s continued work on its assigned task. Those reports, along with the MRTI report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) also note that the customary corporate engagement process has achieved positive and constructive outcomes with some companies (Citigroup, ITT Industries, and United Technologies).

[The assembly answered Item 15-08 by the action taken on Item 15-11. See pp. 41, 42.]

On Approving the GAMC’s Recommendations on Selective Divestment Made by MRTI—From the Presbytery of the Palisades.

The Presbytery of the Palisades overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to approve the recommendations on selective divestment made by the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI), and to proceed to approval and timely implementation of all of the recommendations that were passed by the General Assembly Mission Council at its appointed meeting on February 17, 2012. (See Item 15-11).
Advice and Counsel on Items 15-03 and 15-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Items 15-03 and 15-08, as amended below: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“5. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate [this action] [an action in support of MRTI recommendations] to all other PC(USA) councils and entities[,] [and to ecumenical partners,] [and invite and strongly encourage] [encouraging] those groups and organizations that hold assets in Caterpillar, Inc., [Motorola Solutions, and Hewlett Packard,] to divest as well.”

Rationale

The amendment to this item reflects the agreement of the sponsors of the overture and of its concurrences with the full recommendations of the report of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) committee. That is, they support the divestment of the three corporations recommended by MRTI. Their focus on Caterpillar reflects the use of company equipment in highly visible home demolitions and construction of the separation wall, as well as the legal campaign to have a public investigation of Rachel Corrie’s death. Armored Caterpillar bulldozers were also very active in destroying houses during the 2009–2010 war on Gaza.

The recommendations in MRTI’s report, however, represent a more inclusive, methodical, and ecumenical process that considers the importance of high technology from Motorola Solutions and Hewlett-Packard in the enforcement of control of the Palestinian population, including the protection of illegal settlements. Attempts at reaching even low levels of agreement with all three companies have gone on for more than four years while all have been expanding their strategic business relationships with the occupation. It is consistent with the MRTI recommendations to propose that, if approved, they be shared with ecumenical partners as well as Presbyterian bodies. This Advice and Counsel is thus meant to support MRTI’s recommendations as well (Item 15-11).

The basic argument for divestment is that words-only approaches have simply failed to halt the growth of Israeli settlements and the intensification of the occupation by the separation wall and other means, virtually ending the prospect of a two-state solution and hastening the de-Christianization of Palestine. Several items before the General Assembly address other aspects of the political impasse, religious liberties, and support for a war with Iran. Overall, however, only a deliberate naiveté on the church’s part can ignore the deliberate subversion of the peace process since the death of Yitzak Rabin in 1995.

Commissioners considering the overall divestment recommendations may consider three dimensions of this act of witness:

1. Is it consistent with the theology and policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)?
2. Is it an act of investment responsibility that reflects the key moral criteria of integrity, effectiveness, and solidarity?
3. Does it support other witness to the key problem of the occupation and the failure of political, diplomatic, and violent measures to affect the situation?

1. A strong theological and ethical basis for divestment in support of freedom for Palestinian Christians and Muslims can be found not only in The Confession of 1967 (the basis for the 1971 mandate for MRTI itself), but in the Barmen Declaration and A Brief Statement of Faith. In its resolution on the Middle East in 2008, the General Assembly:

   Affirms the obligation of the church to speak to the governments of the United States and all other nations where it sees those governments violating the commandments of God. In the words of The Theological Declaration of Barmen, which speaks to the dependence of the Church on the Word of God and its independence from any state or ideology, “we reject the false doctrine, as though there were areas of our life in which we would not belong to Jesus Christ, but to other lords .... The state has by divine appointment the task of providing for justice and peace ....” (The Book of Confessions, 8.15, 8.22). The sovereignty of God thus judges all claims of sovereign nationhood, all boundaries, all exercises of force, and all uses of resources by human beings. The Church is thus called to help discern where the Spirit is working in the world, guided by Scripture and its confessions.

In A Brief Statement of Faith, we affirm that:

In a broken and fearful world the Spirit gives us courage to pray without ceasing, to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace. [emphasis added] (The Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 65–71)

The words in italics, in this case, may refer particularly to the Christians of Palestine and Israel whose voices are often disregarded in deliberations focused on the attitudes of Jews or Muslims.

In terms of policy, the Middle East report approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010) introduced its recommendations with several summary statements:

We deeply value our relationships with Jews and Muslims in the United States, Israel, and the predominantly Muslim countries of the Middle East. Yet the bonds of friendship must neither prevent us from speaking, nor limit our empathy for the suffering of others. Inaction and silence on our part enable actions we oppose and consequences we grieve...
We also recognize that our concern to end support for both violence in all its forms and the ongoing occupation and settlement of Palestine places demands of integrity on how the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) uses its own resources and investments. Let us be clear: we do affirm the legitimacy of Israel as a state, but consider the continuing occupation of Palestine (West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem) to be illegitimate, illegal under international law, and an enduring threat to peace in the region. Furthermore, we recognize that any support for that occupation weakens the moral standing of our nation internationally and our security. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1027 of the electronic version)

2. The General Assembly Mission Council comment describes some of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) policy and process, which include Military-Related Investment Guidelines (1982) and an extensive study, The Divestment Strategy: Ethical and Institutional Context (1984). The 1982 guidelines led the church to restrict its investments in nuclear warhead makers and the largest military contractors, whose securities continue to be proscribed for church investment agencies. The 1984 study focuses on the two values of effectiveness and integrity, analyzed in light of trusteeship and Christian mission. These values led to a range of strategic criteria that guided the church in the “selective, phased divestment” of securities in thirteen companies as part of the larger campaign against apartheid. In broad strokes, then, there were three key values undergirding considerations such as impact on those suffering, urgency, technical feasibility, coordination with partners, limitation of other strategies, and clarity of message.

In terms of effectiveness, historically, church-led nonviolent economic pressure of all kinds, including divestment, contributed to the eventual departure of 214 of the 324 U.S. corporations operating in South Africa in 1981, representing an equity decline from $2.6 billion to $714 million, a substantial move toward isolating South Africa economically. As is well known, after the 1994 end of apartheid, figures such as Nelson Mandela, Desmond Tutu, and Allan Boesak credited the churches with decisive impact, as did studies such as Robert K. Massie’s Loosening the Bonds: The United States and South Africa in the Apartheid Years (Doubleday, 1998).

The 1984 study describes how divestment of securities, through removing access and influence “inside” a corporation as a stockholder, may have more impact on corporate policy from the “outside.” Divestment’s effectiveness is not primarily financial but impacts the reputation and legitimacy of the behaviors focused on in ecumenical and sometimes international campaigns. Vigorous opposition to divestment by the Israeli government and its supporters indicates a real fear of being associated with the occupation and oppression of Palestinians, affirming that divestment carries an effective message that justice is needed.

In terms of the second criterion, integrity, this is not to be seen as a purity or “cleansing the portfolio.” The Reformed tradition does not favor separation from the world or a position of moral perfection, unattainable in any event. We do, however, affirm that our principles should be backed up by action, lest we profit from practices we decry. The phrase in the Preliminary Principles of the Book of Order is that “truth is in order to goodness,” with the implication that the church should be a truth-teller and a truth-doer.

The church’s action, from this perspective, is less about strictly economic consequences and more about the prophetic nature of the church, acting in obedience and without being compromised. Yet seeking integrity can also make for effective witness against practices accepted by majorities or those in power.

The nature of Christian mission in the Middle East involves the church in acts of solidarity with the remaining Christians, and with all who seek a peace with justice. Although support for divestment and other forms of economic pressure is strongly discouraged by the Israeli government, an unprecedented ecumenical group issued the Kairos Palestine affirmation in December of 2009. Among the nonviolent methods of resistance to the occupation that they endorse is divestment:

4.2.6 Palestinian civil organizations, as well as international organizations, NGOs and certain religious institutions call on individuals, companies and states to engage in divestment and in an economic and commercial boycott of everything produced by the occupation. We understand this to integrate the logic of peaceful resistance. These advocacy campaigns must be carried out with courage, openly sincerely proclaiming that their object is not revenge but rather to put an end to the existing evil, liberating both the perpetrators and the victims of injustice. The aim is to free both peoples from extremist positions of the different Israeli governments, bringing both to justice and reconciliation. In this spirit and with this dedication we will eventually reach the lanced-for resolution to our problems, as indeed happened in South Africa and with many other liberation movements in the world.

4.3 Through our love, we will overcome injustices and establish foundations for a new society both for us and for our opponents. Our future and their future are one. Either the cycle of violence that destroys both of us or peace that will benefit both. We call on Israel to give up its injustice towards us, not to twist the truth of reality of the occupation by pretending that it is a battle against terrorism… (From Kairos Palestine Document: A Moment of Truth: A Word of Faith, Hope, and Love from the Heart of Palestinian Suffering: http://www.kairospalestine.ps)

As to overall Palestinian views of the occupation and divestment as a strategy, the position of the Kairos church leaders seems to articulate a broad desire for resistance. An April 22, 2012, report by 60 Minutes confirms that Christians view the occupation as the primary impetus to their departure (http://mondoweiss.net/2012/04/60-minutes-profiles-palestinian-christians-michael-oren-falls-on-his-face-defending-israel.html).

As a strategy, then, the divestment of securities in three key corporations would strengthen the integrity of the church’s moral opposition to the occupation, focus attention effectively on the means by which the occupation is profitably maintained, and be a clear sign of support for the Palestinian Christians and others seeking peace with justice. It would also be an action consistent with international law and a witness against the political failures that enable an oppressive situation to continue.
3. Relation of divestment to the “peace process.”

Since the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzak Rabin by a fundamentalist Jew in 1995, the Oslo peace process has never recovered. The Second Intifada included suicide bombings and severe punitive raids on Palestinians, acts of terrorism fueled by increasing Islamist and Jewish fundamentalism. Settlement growth continued through the 1990s and 2000s, despite purported suspensions and the removal of 7,500 settlers from Gaza in 2005. Rockets by radical groups—a terrifying, if largely inaccurate, threat—were a cause or pretext for a one-sided war on Gaza (http://www.uruknet.info/?p=74717).

The failure of the second Camp David process in 2000, though blamed largely on Yasser Arafat by Israeli and U.S. sources, reflected a substantial Palestinian willingness to concede land colonized by the major settlement cities, but an unwillingness to give up on a coherent Palestinian state with some shared sovereignty in Jerusalem. With the separation wall extensions, continued annexations and removals in East Jerusalem and Area C (60 percent) of the West Bank, strangulation of Palestinian land such as at the Tent of Nations (http://www.tentofnations.org), and violent responses to peaceful Palestinian protests, little hope is seen for a renewed peace process.

Public policy advocacy by the churches and human rights groups has been massively outgunned by well-funded groups dedicated to the defense of all Israeli interests, despite the emergence of more critical groups in the U.S. Jewish community. Diplomatically, although the US calls for renewed negotiations, it has blocked international efforts to allow Palestine membership in the United Nations and vetoed efforts to hold Israel accountable to international law more than thirty times, while continuing more than $3 billion in military aid every year. This one-sided support for the State of Israel and its occupation, along with the U.S.-led wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, has weakened the international reputation of the United States, particularly among the world’s 1.4 billion Muslims.

General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and many other good people have called repeatedly for an effective end of the occupation since 1974, only to see both nonviolent and violent liberation efforts of the Palestinians suppressed. While interfaith dialogue has had some value during this time, the U.S. political and media context allows relatively little debate over the nature of the occupation of Palestine, much less opposition to its continued support. Similarly, the exodus of Christians from the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem, will continue unless voices coupled with action are raised challenging the conditions that are designed to push Arabs out of desirable areas.

For the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to back its moral concerns with divestment would be a dramatic act of conscience and leadership. Although the 2009 Presbyterian Panel survey data indicate that a majority of Presbyterians support divestment for human rights reasons, considerable pressure will be applied and allegations of anti-Semitism would be expected, encouraging conflict in the church. Thus commissioners have to determine how important it is to act on a clear matter of justice in the face of open opposition.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 15-08.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns sees this item as one that recognizes the long and careful process followed by MRTI, which was given a mandate by the 216th General Assembly (2004) on the Israel/Palestine issue. This mandate was to engage with U.S. corporations in an attempt to change their policies that result in profiting from the Israeli military occupation of the Palestinian Territories. This item acknowledges MRTI’s faithful and methodical eight-year process and agrees that the church has exhausted all other avenues.

The ACREC believes that the same standards that have guided votes on MRTI recommendations over the last forty years of corporate engagement by the committee, should also guide the General Assembly on this vote, no matter who is committing the human rights violations, where, and against whom. To use different standards to judge the evidence is at best, discriminatory, and at worst, sets a bad precedent of racism that will diminish the effectiveness of MRTI’s future work.

Item 15-09

[The assembly disapproved Item 15-09 see pp. 41, 42.]

On Human Rights and Religious Freedom of Arab Christians and Other Palestinian Citizens—From the Presbytery of San Jose.

The Presbytery of San Jose respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to:
1. Commend the U. S. State Department for its annual published listing of incidents of religious discrimination by the State of Israel affecting the human rights and religious freedom of Arab Christians and other Palestinian citizens.

2. Commend the U. S. State Department for reporting on the failure of Israel to protect Christian Holy sites throughout Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza.

3. Urge the Israeli government to end any and all religious discriminatory practices.

4. Urge the Israeli government to enforce its own legal obligation to protect Christian holy sites throughout Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza.

5. Direct that the Stated Clerk contact President Obama and the Israeli ambassador to the U. S. asking them to assist in ending all religious discriminatory practices and to protect religious groups’ holy sites in Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza.

Rationale

The decline of the population of the Arab Christian community has been reported by many sources including the State Department, the World Council of Churches, and the Palestinian Authority. The Jewish Council for Public Affairs [JCPA] describes the pressures faced by the Christian community including “restrictions on visas and travel, family reunification, poor economic opportunities, and the difficulties of everyday life including checkpoints and in some instances residential separation from places of work due to the security barrier. These conditions are real.”

In its 2009 Human Rights Report the U. S. State department described a failure by Israel to protect Christian holy sites. It reports that while “the 1967 [Israeli] Protection of Holy Sites Law applies to holy sites of all religious groups within the country and in all of Jerusalem … the Government implements regulations only for Jewish sites. [emphasis added] Non-Jewish holy sites do not enjoy legal protection under it because the Government does not recognize them as official holy sites.”

At the end of 2008, there were 137 designated holy sites, all of which were Jewish. Furthermore, the government has drafted regulations to identify, protect, and fund only Jewish holy sites … many Muslim and Christian sites are neglected, inaccessible, or threatened by property developers and municipalities. The Christian pilgrimage sites around the Sea of Galilee face periodic threats of encroachment from district planners who want to use parts of their properties for recreation. In the past, only diplomatic interventions have forestalled such efforts by the U. S. State Department.”

Religion-based violence against civilians has been reported by the U. S. State Department in its International Religious Freedom Report on Israel and the Occupied Territory. “Israeli settlers in the West Bank on several occasions during the reporting period framed violence against Palestinian persons and property as necessary for the defense of Judaism. In November 2009 the dean of the extremist Od Yosef Hai yeshiva in the West Bank settlement of Yitzhar published what he described as a guide to killing non-Jews, which condoned among other things the killing of Christian and Muslim infants.”

A World Council of Churches delegation has commented that “In every country that respects and implements freedom of worship, worshipers of different faiths live their faith and express their prayers without restrictions from the governing authorities. … In Jerusalem, and for the past decade, this has not been the case. The occupying power is denying free access to holy places of worship to both Christians and Muslims on several important occasions … the local faithful see that the restrictions made against them are violations of basic human rights and religious freedom as well as a violation of … centuries of religious traditions for the indigenous Christians of this land.”

The World Council of Churches delegation also observed that “many factors were contributing to the high rates of emigration of Palestinian Christians … including discriminatory housing policies, the demolition of Palestinian homes to make way for Israeli settlements, high rates of unemployment, and violence from Israeli settlers. … The Israeli government severely restricts, or in many cases prohibits, the movement of Palestinians within (and to and from) the West Bank. These restrictions affect all aspects of Palestinian life, making everyday activities like selling farming produce, obtaining access to medical treatment, obtaining education and visiting friends and relatives difficult, hazardous and often impossible.”

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 15-09 be approved, as amended below:

“The Presbytery of San Jose respectfully overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to:

1. [Text remains unchanged.]

2. [Text remains unchanged.]

3. Urge the Israeli government to end any and all religious discriminatory practices [such as those regarding employment, permits for family reunification, residency, visas (including non-Jewish religious pilgrims, mission volunteers, and mission staff), travel (particularly on holy days), construction of religious facilities or employee housing (as at the Lutheran Augusta Victoria Hospital in East Jerusalem), and annexation of religious properties].

4. [Text remains unchanged.]

5. Direct that the Stated Clerk contact President Obama and the Israeli ambassador to the U.S. asking them to assist in ending all religious discriminatory practices and to protect religious groups' holy sites in Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza [and that the Stated Clerk make publically available his correspondence on the other four matters].”

Rationale

The decline of the Christian population in occupied Palestine is due to a number of factors, some listed in the documentation provided for this overture. The lack of equal rights and religious freedom for both Christian and Muslim Palestinians is clearly part of the picture. The overture calls for specific advocacy for Christian Palestinians while also, in Recommendations 1, 3, and 5, including Muslim Palestinians. Likewise, it is appropriate to focus on the lack of protection for Christian holy sites in particular as many Presbyterians will seek to visit them and not realize that they are vulnerable to encroachment by commercial development, lack of access, and possible disruption due to archeological efforts. The political nature of much archeology in Jerusalem is particularly notable, as indicated the examples of excavations at Silwan and the Mamilla cemetery. The amendment to Recommendation 3 is made to focus on particular concerns that restrict the lives of both native Palestinian Christians and Muslims, and the capacity of internationally supported Christian institutions to maintain their historic missions. As written, though clear in principle and in theory the practice of any democratic state, the recommendation could be read to challenge the officially Jewish nature of Israel, which is always in some tension with its treatment of non-Orthodox Jews, Christians and Muslims. Israel does not have a formal constitution but relies on several interrelated laws, as summarized in the 2009 U.S. State Department Religious Liberty report:

While the Basic Law on Human Dignity and Liberty does not specifically refer to freedom of religion, it does refer to the Declaration of the Establishment of the State of Israel, which explicitly provides for the protection of religious freedom. In addition, numerous Supreme Court rulings incorporate the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including their religious freedom provisions, into the country's body of law. The Declaration describes the country as a Jewish state, establishing Judaism as the dominant religion while also promising full social and political equality, regardless of religious affiliation. The Basic Law describes the country as a "Jewish and democratic state." Government policy continued to support the generally free practice of religion, although governmental and legal discrimination against non-Jews and non-Orthodox streams of Judaism continued.

The amendment to Recommendation 5 simply clarifies who will be the General Assembly’s agent and that the Stated Clerk’s letters, and any replies, will be available to Presbyterians.

It is expected that the 2011 Religious Liberties report of the State Department will be published in June of 2012, and thus may be available at the General Assembly.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 220th General Assembly (2012) approve Item 15-09.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns is very troubled by the lack of protection for Christian and Muslim holy sites by the government of Israel. The failure to protect Christian holy sites throughout Israel/Palestine is a problem and challenge for all Christians throughout the world who look to this land as the birthplace of their faith. Likewise, because Jerusalem is home to the third most holy site for Muslims, the lack of protection of Muslim holy sites concerns all Muslims around the world.

The Israeli military occupation, now in its fifth decade, has made life more and more difficult for Christians and Muslims who are the indigenous people of the Occupied Palestinian Territories (OPT), which is leading to emigration. Lack of access to holy sites, and a continuing and progressive lack of permits to live where they have ancestral connections, is seen as a policy of forced separation.

Example: When a Palestinian from Israel-proper marries a Palestinian from the West Bank, they are not given permits to live together in Israel-proper. The same holds if a Palestinian in the West Bank marries a Palestinian from the Diaspora in other parts of the world; Israel does not allow the couple to live in the West Bank. This forced separation is seen by some human rights groups as a form of ethnic cleansing, as it makes life so difficult for the indigenous people, that they often abandon their ancestral lands and home. The fact that any Jewish person from the Jewish Diaspora can get instant residency aggravates the situation.

The ACREC believes that Israel should afford its citizens equal rights as stated in their Declaration of Independence, and not discriminate, especially in regards to access to holy sites.

Item 15-10

[The assembly answered Item 15-10 by the action taken on Item 15-11. See pp. 39, 41, 42.]

On Pursuing a Creative Course of Action Regarding the Palestinian-Israeli Conflict—From the Presbytery of Philadelphia.

The Presbytery of Philadelphia overtures the 220th General Assembly (2012) to

1. call for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to pursue a positive and creative course of action with respect to the current Palestinian-Israeli conflict that will make a difference in the lives of those who are most vulnerable on all sides and that will preserve an effective witness to peace in the entire region;

2. call for a process of engagement that will bring Jews, Christians, and Muslims from the U.S. into effective partnering for study, travel, and social action;

3. advocate for the development of educational programs that expose U.S. Christians, Jews, and Muslims to the varied experiences of both Palestinians and Israelis;

4. devise a plan of active investment in projects that will support collaboration among Christians, Jews, and Muslims and help in the development of a viable infrastructure for a future Palestinian state. We also encourage greater denominational engagement with Christians in the West Bank around issues of job creation and economic development.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has consistently affirmed the right of the State of Israel to exist and to thrive within secure and internationally recognized borders, while simultaneously acknowledging the legitimate claims of the Palestinian people to its own national homeland.

It strives to avoid policies and recommendations that exacerbate tensions between Israelis and Palestinians, while recognizing that the burden and the responsibility for the current stalemate falls on all participants in this conflict. As stated at the 2008 assembly, “We will avoid taking broad stands that simplify a very complex situation into a caricature of reality where one side clearly is at fault and the other side is the victim.”

The General Assembly has repeatedly called on the Israeli government to halt the construction of settlements within the occupied territories and called on Palestinians to pursue their political goals through nonviolent activities. It has continued to advocate regional and international negotiations that will lead to a two-state solution. Presbyterians recognize that the long-term success and effectiveness of any response to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict will require the active participation of both Israelis and Palestinians, and include Jews, Muslims, and Christians in the region, the United States, and around the world.

Our denomination has developed deep friendships with American Jews and is actively engaging larger numbers of Muslims in interfaith initiatives who share a commitment to the peaceful resolution of the conflict. One of our continuing contributions to the larger Christian church is that we model successful ecumenical collaboration and interfaith partnerships on international, national, state, presbytery, congregational, and interpersonal levels.

We therefore reject a policy of divestment that polarizes and antagonizes Christians, Jews, and Muslims within both the United States and Israel.
We ask the General Assembly to

1. reject a strategy of economic coercion that singles out Israel as the source of the conflict and the ongoing obstacle to peace;

2. reject a policy that goes beyond a constructive critique and condemns Israel as an apartheid state;

3. reject the use of threats and intimidation (such as the withholding of economic aid); this tactic is inconsistent with the demands of the gospel and has failed to produce positive changes in Israeli policies in the past;

4. reject the targeting of companies who are used as a proxy for Israel, and who would be required to implement policies that are illegal under American law.

The Middle East is in the midst of a seismic political, cultural, and religious transformation. The region remains in flux, and civil unrest threatens the emergence of a stable and democratic rule of law. Various ethnic and religious groups are particularly vulnerable. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a vital role to play in presenting a balanced and constructive witness to interfaith collaboration and peacemaking. In addition to calling the international community, most especially our own government, to safeguard the basic rights of minorities, we urge the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to pursue a course of action that offers substantive grounds for hope among Palestinians and Israelis and that provides a model of cultural and economic partnerships in which Christians, Jews, and Muslims work together for the common good.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON 15-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 15-10 requests engagement, education, and “active investment” in projects that will provide infrastructure, jobs, and development in the West Bank.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that this overture be disapproved.

The objectives of this item—long practiced and attempted by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its ecumenical and interfaith partners—have been insufficient to affect the growth of settlements, the exodus of Christians, and the virtual end of the two-state solution. Like Items 15-05 and 15-07, this overture is designed to oppose the corporate engagement of Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), as is made clear in its rationale. It terms the church’s corporate engagement, “economic coercion,” and alleges falsely that MRTI requests U.S. companies to adopt “policies that are illegal under American law.” This item, in fact, takes the side of the actual economic coercion of the occupation and conveys a false neutrality between a powerful state and a people under unrelenting pressure and dispossession. While we share the hope of nonviolent social change, Palestinians are the main parties practicing nonviolence at this point (as in the recent hunger strikes among the thousands of uncharged Palestinian prisoners). They see nonviolent economic pressure and international solidarity among their chief hopes in the face of violent settlers under Israeli army protection taking their land.

In this context—which the overture avoids considering—the hope of “positive investment” has been investigated over the years, but founders on the fact that capital is not the chief Palestinian need. Instead, they need: secure property rights; freedom of travel, transportation, and communication; dependable water and electricity, and a range of other factors that Palestinians are prevented from having, especially in Gaza and Area C of the West Bank (60 percent, where no Palestinian development is allowed). Responding to a commissioners’ resolution in 2004, a Presbyterian economist conducted a survey of business opportunities in the West Bank and found that only travel, crafts, and housing were competitive without major subsidies from outside (Item 12-09 in 2004; Feasibility Study on Economic Development in Israel/Palestine). In other words, under the network of Israeli settlements, Israeli-only roads, and the Wall, the West Bank is not a viable economic unit, and Gaza is under a rigorous economic and military blockade.¹

The overall obstacles to the engagement and economic development desired by this item are summarized in a recent European Union report:

The 27 foreign ministers of the European Union published on Monday (May 14, 2012) a strong denunciation of Israel’s policies in the West Bank. The announcement, reported for the first time by Haaretz, says that Israel’s policies pose a threat to a two-state solution.”

“The viability of a two-state-solution must be maintained,” the message reads. “The EU expresses deep concern about developments on the ground which threaten to make a two-state solution impossible.”

The announcement criticizes settler violence against Palestinians. “The EU expresses deep concern regarding settler extremism and incitement by settlers in the West Bank,” the statement read. “The EU condemns continuous settler violence and deliberate provocations against Palestinian civilians. It calls on the government of Israel to bring the perpetrators to justice and to comply with its obligations under international law.

The announcement lists a series of actions taken by Israel in the West Bank in recent months - marked acceleration of settlement construction following the end of the 2010 Moratorium, the decision grant legal status to the Bruchin, Sansana and Rechalim outposts, and the plan to move the illegal outpost of Migron to a different area in the West Bank and create a new settlement.
The foreign ministers also point to the continued house demolitions in East Jerusalem, the expansion of Jewish neighborhood and “the prevention of peaceful Palestinian cultural, economic, social or political activities.”

They also said that there living conditions in Area C, in which Israel has civilian and security control, have deteriorated: “There are limitations for the PA to promote the economic development of Palestinian communities in Area C,” they said. “Social and economic developments in Area C are of critical importance for the viability of a future Palestinian state, as Area C is its main land reserve. The EU calls upon Israel to meet its obligations regarding the living conditions of the Palestinian population in Area C, including... forced transfer of population and demolition of Palestinian housing.”

The EU document also states that “settlements remain illegal under international law, irrespective of recent decisions by the government of Israel. The EU reiterates that it will not recognize any changes to the pre-1967 borders including with regard to Jerusalem, other than those agreed by the parties.” They also reaffirmed their commitment to implement existing EU legislation applicable to settlement products. http://www.haaretz.com/news/diplomacy-defense/eu-israel-s-policies-in-the-west-bank-endanger-two-state-solution-1.430421

Item 15-10 also calls for support of a peace process that the two architects of the Oslo accords see as defunct: (http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2012/apr/24/middle-east-two-state-solution)

The kind of “peace” efforts that Item 15-10 advocates also do not recognize the political realities in Israel. A recent interview with the former head of the Shin Bet, or Israeli FBI, Yuval Diskin, directly contradicts the claim of Item 15-10 that “the burden and responsibility for the current stalemate falls on all participants in this conflict.” According to Jodi Rudoren of The New York Times,

Many here saw Mr. Diskin’s comments on the government’s dealings with the Palestinians, which was in his direct purview, as even more significant than those on Iran. While Mr. Netanyahu has insisted that the peace process is stalled because he does not have a willing partner, Mr. Diskin declared: “This government has no interest in talking with the Palestinians period. It certainly has no interest in resolving anything with the Palestinians, period.” (New York Times, April 29, 2012, p. 17)

Item 15-10 cites one statement from the 218th General Assembly (2008) cautioning against oversimplifying the Israeli/Palestinian conflict, but neglects the overall witness of the 219th General Assembly (2010) report, “Breaking Down the Walls,” which recognizes the great power imbalance between the two main parties in the conflict, while refusing to idealize either party. Item 5-10 also neglects the initial statement of the 218th General Assembly (2008) about the Israel Palestine struggle, which was to invoke the Barmen Declaration against Nazi domination as an example of when the church needs to speak out against unjust rule. As Noelle Damico of the Presbyterian Hunger Program has said, the church is called to be “a truthful place, not a neutral place,” if such a place were possible to find.

If the General Assembly were to want to reassure the more pro-occupation parts of the Jewish community of its desire to maintain friendly relations, it could approve a statement such as: “We are bound by the witness of Palestinian Christian community and the larger standards of international law to seek nonviolent diplomatic and economic measures to help bring an end to the occupation of Palestine. In the absence of a meaningful peace process, and with continuing settlements and denial of citizenship rights or independence for Palestinians, this means that our unwavering support for Israel’s right to safe, secure, and internationally accepted borders is coupled with an insistence on justice as the key to peace. Our friendship and respect for the Jewish people and the witness of Judaism are reflected in the prophetic fairness we honor in the Hebrew Scriptures and seek to apply in a difficult situation.

As we seek to stand by the dispossessed, we do not forget the humanity and aspirations of all who love Israel and Palestine. Thus we seek to engage in dialogue, honest debate, education, and engagement toward the clearest understanding of how attitudes and policies can be changed in the direction of peace with justice. May the One God help us all take responsibility for the influence and power we have and give us an awareness of the risks that all sides must make for peace to be achieved.”

Endnote

“Israeli control of 60 percent of the area of the West Bank, its control of the water sources, the restrictions on the movement of people and goods within and outside the West Bank, the Israeli market’s blockage of Palestinian goods, the lengthy process of importing raw materials from abroad and of exporting - all these limitations mean the Palestinian manufacturers’ inputs are much higher than the Israelis’. Land for leasing or purchase is more expensive because of its scarcity, water and electricity cost more and a Palestinian manufacturer’s waiting time for raw materials is longer than that of his Israeli counterpart. Therefore production in the PA areas of the West Bank are more expensive by 30 to 40 percent than production in neighboring countries....

Smerait’s findings reinforce the Palestinian national economy ministry’s view as manifested in its study of the price the occupation exacts from the Palestinian economy. According to this study (Haaretz, November 11 2011), the Israeli restrictions depicted as security restrictions are connected to the colonial nature of the Israeli occupation, and are aimed at preventing competition from the Palestinian economy.” http://www.haaretz.com/print-edition/features/the-real-cost-of-israel-s-occupation-of-the-palestinians-1.395839

“The Israeli occupation is exacting a high price on the Palestinian economy, according to a report by the Palestinian Ministry of National Economy and the Applied Research Institute - Jerusalem - which puts the damage at $6.9 billion a year - what it calls a conservative estimate. The figure is about 85% of the Palestinian GDP for 2010, $8.124 billion.
The calculation includes the suspension of economic activity in the Gaza Strip because of Israel’s blockade, the prevention of income from the natural resources Israel is exploiting because of its direct control over most of the territory and the additional costs for the Palestinian expenses due to restrictions on movement, use of land and production imposed by Israel…"

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns strongly opposes this item because the committee believes it fails to recognize that a military occupation, not lack of investment, is the cause of hardship, misery, and collective punishment for all innocent Palestinians. It is presumptuous of American Christians to define what we believe Palestinians need, i.e. “positive investment,” when Palestinians themselves have been calling for divestment from the occupation since 2005.

Dominant cultures easily miss signals given by people living under oppression, but we have no excuse when it comes to knowing what the Palestinians are asking for. Kairos Palestine, A Moment of Truth, is a confessional document signed by all Palestinian Christian leadership calling for non-violent action through hope, peace, and love. They ask Christians around the world to stand with them in this hour of need by non-violent actions such as boycott, divestment, and sanctions. They do not ask for us to “invest” in Palestine; quite to the contrary, they have been saying, “do not invest in our prison,” so that the system that enforces the “imprisonment” will end.

The ACREC finds the language of this overture deceptive. Effective investment in the Occupied Palestinian Territories is simply not possible without deconstructing the Israeli-imposed matrix of control. This matrix is an infrastructure that supports the expansion of massive, illegal Jewish-only settlements on Palestinian land, and restricts the movement of Palestinians on the segregated Israeli-only roads. None of the recommendations of this overture will be helpful in ending this decades-long occupation.

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 15-10

Comment on Item 15-10—From the General Assembly Mission Council.

Our Palestinian Christian partners have called for selective disinvestment and/or boycott as nonviolent means to end the Israeli military occupation of Palestine. Orthodox, Catholic, and Protestant Christians throughout the Middle East have repeatedly called for nonviolent direct action by Christians everywhere to help end the suffering of the Palestinian people under the Israeli occupation. In 2009, Palestinian Christians issued a statement in which they state:

Palestinian civil organizations, as well as international organizations, NGOs and certain religious institutions call on individuals, companies and states to engage in divestment and in an economic and commercial boycott of everything produced by the occupation. We understand this to integrate the logic of peaceful resistance. These advocacy campaigns must be carried out with courage, openly sincerely proclaiming that their object is not revenge but rather to put an end to the existing evil, liberating both the perpetrators and the victims of injustice. The aim is to free both peoples from extremist positions of the different Israeli governments, bringing both to justice and reconciliation…

We ask our sister Churches not to offer a theological cover-up for the injustice we suffer, for the sin of the occupation imposed upon us. Our question to our brothers and sisters in the Churches today is: Are you able to help us get our freedom back, for this is the only way you can help the two peoples attain justice, peace, security and love?

We call on you [the Churches of the world] to say a word of truth and to take a position of truth with regard to Israel’s occupation of Palestinian land. As we have already said, we see boycott and disinvestment as tools of non violence for justice, peace and security for all. Item 15-11

[In response to Item 15-11, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 39, 42–43.]

The General Assembly Mission Council, upon recommendation from the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, recommends that the 220th General Assembly (2012) do the following:

2. Joining previous General Assemblies, we call all corporations doing business in the region to confine their business activity solely to peaceful pursuits, and refrain from allowing their products or services to support or facilitate violent acts by Israelis or Palestinians against innocent civilians, construction and maintenance of settlements or Israeli-only roads in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory, and construction of the Separation Barrier as it extends beyond the 1967 “Green Line” into Palestinian territories.

3. Continue to urge all corporations doing business in the region to seek proactive ways to promote respect for human rights, peace building, and equal employment opportunity.

4. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), to conclude the corporate engagement process with ITT, since the company now appears on the General Assembly divestment list as a large military contractor; and with Motorola Mobility, as it appears that its business no longer includes profiting from non-peaceful pursuits.

5. Direct the General Assembly Mission Council, through its Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), to continue the corporate engagement process with United Technologies, together with ecumenical partners, as part of MRTI’s regular work plan, in accordance with the previously identified positions and priorities of the General Assembly, and subject to ordinary reporting to the next General Assembly.

6. Approve the following resolution:

The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment has been seeking to engage companies profiting from non-peaceful pursuits in Israel-Palestine since the directive of the 216th General Assembly (2004) and the reaffirmations and actions of each subsequent assembly. This process of engagement has, in the case of three companies, produced no substantive change and, in the judgment of this assembly, is likely not to do so in the future. Under the church’s regular process of corporate engagement (approved by the 116th General Assembly (1976) of the PCUS and reaffirmed as policy after reunion), the final step is to recommend divestment from companies where engagement is not resulting in any change. Therefore, in accordance with the actions of prior assemblies, we direct that Caterpillar, Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions be placed on the General Assembly Divestment List until such time as they have ceased profiting from non-peaceful pursuits in Israel-Palestine, as defined by prior General Assembly actions.

Alternate Resolution

1. call for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to pursue a positive and creative course of action with respect to the current Palestinian-Israeli conflict that will make a difference in the lives of those who are most vulnerable on all sides and that will preserve an effective witness to peace in the entire region;

2. call for a process of engagement that will bring Jews, Christians, and Muslims from the U.S. into effective partnering for study, travel, and social action;

3. advocate for the development of educational programs that expose U.S. Christians, Jews, and Muslims to the varied experiences of both Palestinians and Israelis;

4. devise a plan of active investment in projects that will support collaboration among Christians, Jews, and Muslims and help in the development of a viable infrastructure for a future Palestinian state. We also encourage greater denominational engagement with Christians in the West Bank around issues of job creation and economic development.

5. The 220 General Assembly (2012) instructs the GAMC to create a process to raise funds to invest in the West Bank and the program will be inaugurated no later than the meeting of the 221st General Assembly (2014).

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referrals:

The 216th General Assembly (2004) instructed the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to begin a process of “phased, selective divestment” related to corporations doing business in Israel. Following the assembly, MRTI initiated a process consistent with General Assembly (GA) policy. First, MRTI reviewed the 1984 GA policy on the use of divestment as a strategy for socially responsible investing, and the criteria for consideration of any recommendation for divestment. Also reviewed was the 1985 GA policy describing the process of phased, selective divestment.

In November 2004, at its first meeting following the General Assembly, MRTI identified GA policy positions on the obstacles to a just peace in Israel and Palestine. These included the ongoing violence perpetrated by Israelis and Palestinians against innocent people; the Israeli occupation of the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem in violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations’ resolutions; the presence of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories; the construction of the separation barrier; and the need for a viable Palestinian economy to enhance the possibility of a successful Palestinian state. These GA policies were incorporated into criteria to focus the research into corporations that may be profiting from involvement in any of the obstacles to a just peace. The MRTI also adopted a clear statement on the process of progressive engagement of any such companies that affirmed the cycle of dialogue, shareholder resolutions and proxy voting and more dialogue before MRTI would be in any position to consider recommending possible divestment action to the General Assembly. This was reported to the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC) in 2005, and publicized widely through the PC(USA) web site.

The MRTI conducted research to determine which corporations, if any, met the criteria. In August 2005, MRTI reviewed the research to select from among the identified companies an initial group to engage. These were Caterpillar, Citigroup, ITT Industries, Motorola, and United Technologies. The MRTI also maintained contact with various ecumenical partners that were committed to engaging companies on the issue of their involvement in Israel and Palestine. These included the Episcopal Church, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the United Methodist Church, the United Church of Christ, and several Roman Catholic religious orders.

The MRTI began the process of contacting and meeting with the five companies (meetings were held with Citigroup on February 2, 2006, ITT Industries on February 3, 2006, and Motorola on November 10, 2005), communication with the presbyteries where the companies are headquartered, and continued interpretation of the process to the church and the general public. The MRTI also worked ecumenically on strategies for proactive investment in Israel and Palestine by churches and corporations in consultation with James Wolfensohn, special envoy for the Quartet (the United States, the European Union, the United Kingdom, and Russia), whose charge included helping to rebuild the Palestinian economy.

B. 2006–2008

The 217th General Assembly (2006) responded to numerous overtures regarding corporate engagement on Israel-Palestine issues, and approved a statement urging that “… financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 944).

1. Ecumenical Activities

The MRTI continued its work with considerable time devoted to fostering ecumenical cooperation on engagement. To that end, an informal table called the Ecumenical Action Group: Investment for a Just Peace in Israel-Palestine (EAG) was created. As a result, corporate dialogues were expanded to include participation by representatives of other Protestant denominations and Roman Catholic religious orders. These have included the Episcopal Church, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, United Church of Christ, United Methodist Church (General Board of Global Ministries, General Board of Church and Society, General Board of Pensions and Benefits, and the New England Conference), United Church of Canada, Mercy Asset Management, the Passionists, Ursuline Sisters, and the Dominican Sisters. Also participating has been KAIROS Canada and the World Council of Churches.

In October 2007, the World Council of Churches convened a meeting of U.S., Canadian and European churches working on corporate engagement. As a result, there has been increased sharing of research, and broader participation in dialogues and shareholder resolutions. United States and Canadian churches continue to cooperate in the EAG.

In Europe, churches in the Netherlands have reported on engagements with Heineken. The Dutch company owned 40 percent of Tempo Beer Industry whose Israeli subsidiary subsequently moved its facilities out of the Barkan Industrial Zone in the occupied West Bank, and back into Israel proper. Swedish churches were instrumental in convincing Assa Abloy, a locksmithing company, to move its facility out of the Barkan settlement in the West Bank to the other side of the Green Line. This ecumenical cooperation has helped identify several European and other companies with extensive ties to the Occupation including Veolia, AIG, Ahava, and Alstom.

2. Corporate Engagement

During 2006 to 2008, dialogues were held with the five companies (described below). These dialogues were the first step of the corporate engagement mandated by the 216th and 217th General Assemblies (2004 and 2006). Corporate engagement is a deliberate process outlined in the basic policies of the General Assembly on socially responsible investment, dating to 1971, 1976, and 1984. Elements of this process include research, correspondence, dialogue, proxy voting, and the possible filing of shareholder resolutions. Only after all other options fail to achieve the desired results, the committee on MRTI, through the GAMC, may recommend to the General Assembly (GA) divestment from particular corporations.

a. Citigroup

The Citigroup dialogue of February 2, 2006, was highly productive. The primary concern with Citigroup involved an allegation that Citigroup had provided insufficient controls to prevent the transfer of funds to Palestinian organizations supporting violence. In conversation with MRTI representatives, the company provided assurance that the bank had robust controls in place to monitor and prevent questionable money transfers. There have been no subsequent reports alleging inappropriate funds transfers by Citigroup. In addition, Citigroup expressed willingness to assist the religious community with exploring how to increase microcredit lending in the region to address the lack of adequate investment opportunities in Palestine. Therefore, in June 2007, MRTI removed Citigroup from its focus list of companies for corporate engagement.

b. Motorola

The dialogue on June 18, 2007, focused on human rights standards and conventions, and explored the company’s involvement in the occupation through sales of military communications products, fuses for bombs, security technology for Jewish Israeli settlements on the West Bank, and operating a cell phone business in the West Bank. Motorola denied that any of its activities implicate it in the Israeli occupation, or raise human rights concerns. A shareholder resolution addressing broader human rights issues was filed by several religious shareholders in the fall of 2007. In response, Motorola requested a follow-up meeting, which occurred on January 7, 2008. The company indicated its intent to review and amend its policies but would not specify the particular changes under consideration and made clear that its human rights policies would not be applied to their business relationships with foreign governments. This lack of clarity and limited scope led the religious investors, including MRTI representatives, to decline to withdraw their resolution, which went to a vote at the annual shareholders meeting on May 5, 2008. It received more than 12 percent of the shareholder vote, enough to be resubmitted in 2009. Although the conversation with Motorola has been less productive than hoped, religious shareholders agree that more in-depth dialogue on corporate social responsibility and human rights might potentially create a more productive arena for analyzing the Israel-Palestine conflict and other world situations and ought to be continued.

c. Caterpillar

The shareholder resolution at Caterpillar was submitted in the fall of 2007 for consideration at the 2008 annual meeting. It requested the board of directors to review the company’s human rights policies and amend them where applicable. Caterpillar also received a resolution on foreign military sales from a coalition of shareholders including several Roman Catholic religious orders and Jewish Voice for Peace.

There were two developments at Caterpillar. First, several religious shareholders sent a letter to the company requesting a meeting to discuss non-military sales of company products in Israel and Palestine. The company replied by letter on December 13, 2007. While not responding to the request for a meeting, the company said for the first time that “As an industry leader, Caterpillar advocates responsible use of our equipment. We expect our customers to use the products they purchase from us in environmentally responsible ways and consistent with human rights and requirements of international humanitarian law.”

Secondly, the resolution submitted by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Dominican Sisters produced a dialogue on January 30, 2008. Caterpillar representatives reviewed their Worldwide Code of Business Conduct. Discussion focused on the human rights dimensions of the code, what it included or omitted, and who beyond the company’s employees it affected or not. Religious shareholders, including MRTI representatives, raised the need to address the end-use of company products, particularly in countries with human rights challenges. After further discussions, the shareholders agreed to withdraw the resolution from consideration at the 2008 annual meeting in exchange for an ecumenical dialogue with the company on human rights and the end use of Caterpillar products.

The dialogue was held on July 18, 2008, on the subject of the end-use of Caterpillar products in light of the company’s statement on its expectations for the use of its products. The dialogue included the Episcopal Church, Mercy Asset Management, United Church of Christ, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and three Boards of the United Methodist Church. The discussion focused on human rights and humanitarian law and conventions, and the company’s expectation that its customers would abide by these standards. The company considers its dealers as its customers. While it meets with its dealers regularly, and would terminate this relationship if it learned that a dealer was offering bribes, it has no mechanism for enforcement of its human rights expectations. The church representatives also requested information from Caterpillar on the customers of its Israeli dealer, particularly major construction companies that are involved in building the illegal settlements and roads that Palestinians are prohibited from using in the Occupied Territories, the construction of the separation barrier on Palestinian land, and the demolition of Palestinian homes.

d. ITT Industries

The resolution at ITT Industries requested a report on foreign military sales. On March 4, 2008, religious shareholders, including MRTI representatives, met with ITT Industries. The company wanted to discuss its new corporate ethics program rather than foreign military sales. The position of ITT is that it will not disclose its foreign military sales claiming that all the information is publicly available. The ITT had challenged the resolution at the Securities and Exchange Commission. The SEC’s decision upholding the shareholders was announced later in March. Sister Valerie Heinonen of the Ursuline Sisters of Tildonk presented the resolution when it was voted on at the ITT Industries annual meeting on May 13, 2008, receiving more than 7 percent of the proxy vote.

e. United Technologies

The resolution to United Technologies requested that ethical criteria be applied to foreign military contracts, and, with the Episcopal Church as the primary filer, was supported by 23.8 percent of shareholders voting at the annual meeting; a very strong showing, considering resolutions of this nature submitted to major defense contractors routinely receive 3 to 5 percent of the shareholder vote. The vote was sufficient to qualify the resolution for automatic reconsideration at next year’s annual meeting. The Episcopal Church had a brief phone conversation with company officials, and received a commitment to a dialogue on developing a human rights policy.

C. 218th General Assembly (2008)

Regular reports on the corporate engagement process were made to the GAMC from 2005 to 2008. The 218th General Assembly (2008) received a comprehensive report on MRTI work that included the committee’s belief that more engagement was the appropriate course of action at that time. The General Assembly also called upon corporations doing business in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank “… to confine their business activity solely to peaceful pursuits, and refrain from allowing their products or services to support or facilitate violent acts by Israelis or Palestinians against innocent civilians, construction and maintenance of settlements or Israeli-only roads in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory, and construction of the Separation Barrier as it extends beyond the 1967 ‘Green Line’ into Palestinian territories” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1223).

The General Assembly also directed MRTI “to continue the corporate engagement process, and report on its status with any recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010)” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 1223).

Similarly, the 219th General Assembly (2010) received MRTI’s report, and renewed the calls of previous General Assemblies to all corporations to cease any involvement in road blocks to a just peace in Israel and Palestine. It also continued to urge all corporations doing business in the region to seek proactive ways to promote respect for human rights, peace building, and equal employment opportunity. The General Assembly also called for continued corporate engagement with Hewlett Packard, ITT Industries, Motorola, and United Technologies. With Caterpillar, the General Assembly called for continued engagement in the context of statement of denunciation (see below).

D. 2008–2011 Summary of Corporate Engagement

In accordance with this directive, the corporate engagement process continued through late 2011.

1. Caterpillar

A second dialogue was held on September 10, 2009, to continue the discussion of the previous year. Additional information had become public that was added to the agenda for discussion. An article in Haaretz, an Israeli newspaper, dated March 11, 2009, reported on the close relationship between Caterpillar’s Israeli dealership and the Israeli military. This includes selling the Caterpillar D-9 bulldozers to the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) who have them weaponized by an Israeli company. The article notes that the IDF has used these bulldozers from the mid-1980s, and has hundreds of them in its arsenal. After that, the Caterpillar dealer provides maintenance work. The dealership’s mechanics provided maintenance in the recent Gaza war (these dealership employees maintained and serviced Caterpillar equipment near the battlefield during the Gaza War of January 2009, when more than 1,300 civilians were killed and the entire civilian infrastructure of the territory was destroyed) and the Second Lebanon War. The dealership noted publicly its close working relationship with the IDF, according to Haaretz in an article dated March 17, 2009, the IDF also “is planning to draft civilian bulldozer-maintenance personnel for reserve duty, marking the first time the army will be conscripting the staff of a private firm in wartime.” This would permit the IDF to use Caterpillar dealership employees on the battlefield in future operations.

The dialogue clarified several issues, but did not produce any progress. Company officials made it clear that the company took no responsibility for the use of its products even by its dealers (the only party considered to be a customer), had no procedure in place for monitoring or ensuring compliance with Caterpillar’s stated expectations even in a situation with a documented historic pattern of the equipment being used in human rights violations, and no desire to develop such a procedure. Further, they indicated that Caterpillar, although a global company doing business in virtually every country except where prohibited by U.S. law, had no capacity to evaluate whether particular actions are in accord with human rights conventions or international humanitarian law. Finally, Caterpillar did not provide information on whether its dealership was selling equipment to major construction companies building the illegal settlements, the separation barrier, or the Jewish Israeli-only roads in the occupied territories as requested.

Meanwhile, a shareholder resolution requesting a report on foreign military sales was refiled by Jewish Voice for Peace and several Roman Catholic religious orders for consideration at the 2009 stockholders meeting in June. The resolution garnered slightly less than 6% of the shareholder vote, and failed to re-qualify automatically for the 2010 meeting. Thus, the resolution for the 2010 shareholders meeting was altered to call for the company to review and amend its human rights policy to bring it into greater conformity with human rights and international humanitarian law. The company did not take advantage of this additional opportunity to discuss the resolution, and also declined to facilitate a requested meeting in February 2010 between church members of the Ecumenical Action Group and Caterpillar’s dealer in Israel. When the annual meeting was held in June 2010, the resolution received 24.9% of the proxy vote.

Under pressure from non-shareholder interest groups, Caterpillar announced that it was instructing its European dealerships not to sell any Caterpillar products that might then be transshipped to Iran. This violated Caterpillar’s previous statements to religious shareholders that the company did not have the authority to tell its dealers where and to whom they could sell Caterpillar products. A letter from the United Methodist Board of Church and Society on behalf of eight religious shareholders (including PC(USA)) to the then-CEO James Owens was sent on June 8, 2010, seeking clarification of this contradiction. There was no response.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) action called for continued engagement within the context of the following clear and public policy denouncing the company from profiting from involvement in serious human rights violations and obstacles to a just peace in Israel and Palestine: “... the [General Assembly] strongly denounces Caterpillar’s continued profit-making from non-peaceful uses of a number of its products. We call upon Caterpillar to carefully review its involvement in obstacles to a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine, and to take affirmative steps to end its complicity in the violation of human rights. We hope that, by God’s grace, Caterpillar will come to exercise its considerable power and influence in the service of a just and lasting peace in Israel-Palestine” (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 363 of the printed version, p. 986 of the electronic version).

While the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010) denouncing the company’s continued profiting from its involvement in human rights violations was designed in large measure to convince Caterpillar that the church was serious about the gravity of this complicity, the company remained unresponsive. On April 19, 2011, MRTI sent its own letter to new CEO Douglas Oberhelmer, expressing hope for a new spirit of conversation around these issues and requesting dialogue (see Appendix 1 in game-mrti-recommendations-appendix1.pdf; also page 1440). There was no response. On July 26, 2011, the United Methodist Board of Church and Society retransmitted the 2010 letter (see above) from eight religious shareholders to the new CEO requesting a meeting to discuss the issues described in the correspondence. Again, there was no response.

These attempts at correspondence were carried out against the backdrop of ongoing submission of shareholder resolutions in 2010 and 2011, each of which presented an opportunity for dialogue. There was no response; indeed, our shareholder resolution on human rights was challenged by company management with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Their challenge was rejected, and the resolution received another strong vote: 25.2% percent. However, despite the strong shareholder votes in 2010 and 2011, new CEO Oberhelmer reiterated to shareholders that Caterpillar has not changed its policies regarding involvement in Israel-Palestine. Because the number of votes significantly exceeded the required threshold, the resolution can be resubmitted for 2012.

Through this multiyear process, MRTI met several times with representatives of the Presbytery of Great Rivers where Caterpillar is headquartered. A listening session was held in 2005 at the outset of the process, and presbytery staff and leadership have met with the full committee and separately with staff. Throughout, MRTI has kept the presbytery informed of the filing of resolutions and the status of communications with the company.

2. Motorola

A shareholder resolution similar to the one from 2008 was filed with Motorola requesting that the company amend its human rights policies “to conform more fully with international human rights and humanitarian standards.” The resolution was co-filed by the General Board of Pensions and Health Benefits of the United Methodist Church, Mercy Investment Program, and the Episcopal Church. The company did not respond to a request in the filing letter for a meeting to discuss the resolution. When the filers tried to set one up following the annual meeting, the company declined, but offered to answer written questions. The stockholder meeting was held on May 4, 2009. Speaking in support of the resolution, which received 9.7 percent of the vote, were representatives of the United Methodist Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Following the 2009 annual meeting, religious shareholders requested another dialogue, but by June 12, an e-mail from Motorola’s legal department refused to meet in person saying the company would only answer questions in writing. Questions were submitted, but answers did not adequately respond to the concerns expressed. In an e-mail of January 13, 2010, the company also declined to facilitate a meeting with Motorola Israel during the February 2010 visit of religious shareholders to Israel and Palestine. The 2010 shareholders meeting was held on May 3 where the human rights resolution was voted on again. It received a vote of 11.8 percent. Motorola also announced that it would be splitting into two new companies by the end of 2010: Motorola Solutions and Motorola Mobility.

Meanwhile, the involvement of Motorola in the Occupation lessened in some important ways. The sale of armaments work by Motorola Israel meant that it no longer made bomb fuses for the Israeli military. Motorola also announced its intention to sell its Israeli cell phone company, and has sought bids from potential buyers. The company supplied cell phones to the Israeli soldiers operating in the Occupied Territories, and built cell towers in the illegal settlements. However, the company maintained its stance of no face-to-face dialogues, but would answer some written questions.

On November 4, 2010, in the filing of the shareholder resolution on human rights for the 2011 annual meeting, MRTI expressed its hope that the company would respond positivly through constructive dialogue. The company did not respond. The corporate restructure was completed on schedule. The shareholder resolution was voted on at the annual meeting of Motorola Solutions on May 2, 2011. However, this time it received a lower vote total (5.4 percent), and could not be resubmitted for 2012. At the meeting, the CEO of Motorola Solutions announced that the company would be concentrating on the Middle East for its integrated communications products. Following the meeting, MRTI sought to determine how the restructure had affected the company’s business in Israel-Palestine. Motorola Mobility confirmed that the Israeli cell phone company had been sold to a French company, and that its business was now limited to marketing cell phones in civilian markets. It also confirmed that the business lines with the Israeli government remained with Motorola Solutions. Motorola Solutions did not respond to MRTI’s information request of July 11, 2011.

As noted, representatives of the Presbytery of Chicago attended the first dialogue with Motorola, and have been kept apprised of subsequent engagement, filing of shareholder resolutions, and MRTI decisions related to the company.

3. ITT Industries

The company has supplied the Israeli military with night-vision and communications equipment. Following up on the resolution from last year, an updated version was filed requesting a report on the company’s foreign military sales (ITT Industries derived 46 percent of its fiscal 2007 revenue from military business). The resolution was co-filed by the Dominican Sisters of Hope, the Mercy Investment Program, and the Episcopal Church. A meeting was held on March 4, 2009, at the company’s offices. The company was represented by its senior corporate counsel, the counsel for its defense division, and its public affairs official. The staff of MRTI was joined by a representative of the Presbytery of Hudson River, and Sr. Valerie Heinonen of the Mercy Investment Program. The ITT Industries continues to maintain, however, that it cannot discuss specific sales, even in countries with serious human rights’ challenges. However, as the company is currently barred from military contracts unless a special exemption is given, there does not appear to be recent sales to the IDF. The ITT Industries is interested in developing a more specific human rights policy, but has made clear it would not prohibit future sales to the IDF.

The resolution received nearly 7 percent of the shareholder vote at the May 2009 annual meeting where the Reverend Bruce Tischler, representing the Presbytery of Hudson River, presented the resolution. In 2010, Elizabeth Lertzler, a member of the MRTI committee presented the resolution, which received a similar 7 percent vote. On April 8th, prior to the 2010 annual meeting, a dialogue was held with ITT about its emerging human rights policy and foreign military sales, but no progress was made. In 2011, MRTI member Noushin Framke presented the resolution at the annual meeting where it again received 7 percent of the proxy vote.

The major development with ITT was the company’s announcement that it would split into three separate companies at the end of 2011. These would be a company focused on its water related products and services, a company devoted to its manufacture of electronic components, and a company focused on its military-related business including its night vision and communications equipment. The size of ITT’s military-related business already had found the company affected by the General Assembly’s divestment criteria, and it was already on the one-year waiting period required by the General Assembly divestment policy. When the corporate restructure occurs, the new military-related company will be on the 2012 General Assembly divestment list.

Throughout this multiyear process, representatives of the Presbytery of Hudson River supported the work of MRTI by participating in the dialogues and shareholder meetings as their schedules permitted, and they were kept informed of resolution filings and communications with the company.

4. United Technologies

The Episcopal Church filed a resolution with United Technologies asking for a report on the ethical criteria for its foreign military sales. The company agreed to develop the report, and a meeting was held on August 17, 2009, to discuss how the report and a policy on sales would be implemented. This was the first meeting with company officials, and was a productive session according to the participants. Subsequently, the engagement with the company in 2010 has focused on the implementation of a policy and developing benchmarks for performance.

5. Hewlett-Packard

On March 5, 2009, several religious shareholders were scheduled to hold a conference call with Hewlett-Packard (HP), and had submitted a detailed list of questions for the discussion. The company then cancelled the call saying it would respond in writing, and only then consider a meeting. The shareholders reviewed the company’s written answers, and noted that they were vague or incomplete. The General Board of Pensions and Health Benefits of the United Methodist Church contacted the company to renew the request for a dialogue. Hewlett-Packard again declined saying they would only respond in writing. Two rounds of letters produced only vague answers to the shareholders’ questions.

The company sells hardware to the Israeli Navy, and as a contractor manages all Information Technology (IT) including operational communications, logistics, and planning including the ongoing naval blockade of the Gaza Strip. This blockade has included interdicting humanitarian supplies by attacking or turning back international vessels carrying the supplies, and attacks on Palestinian fishermen.

The company also is involved through its ownership of Electronic Data Systems in providing electronic biometric identification scanning equipment to monitor only Palestinians at several checkpoints inside the West Bank, including as part of the separate road system, restricting Palestinian movement. At these checkpoints, the 2.4 million West Bank Palestinians are required to submit to lengthy waits as well as the mandatory biometric scanning, while Israelis and other passport holders transit without scanning or comparable delays.

Hewlett-Packard also has extensive involvement with the Israeli Army. Soldiers in the IDF are issued a Tadiran Communications ruggedized personal digital assistant (RPDA) based on the Hewlett Packard IPAQ (handhelds and smart phones) as part of Israel’s Anog soldier modernization program. This equipment is used to enforce the Occupation. In July 2009, Hewlett-Packard won a contract for the installation of software products in a three-year IDF virtualization tender worth an estimated $15 million, with a two-year option to extend.

Hewlett-Packard also has business relationships with the illegal settlements in the West Bank. A subsidiary, HP Invent, outsources information technology services to Matrix and to its subsidiary Talpiot, which has its main outsourcing center in the illegal West Bank settlement of Modi’in Illit. By using Talpiot’s services, clients of the company are profiting from the company’s relationship with an illegal settlement and are helping solidify the Occupation.

In addition, Hewlett-Packard worked with the government of the illegal settlement of Ariel in the occupied West Bank to develop specialized solutions for government data storage, and used this project in marketing publicity. Despite the fact that Ariel is deep in the Occupied West Bank, the company’s published description of this work claims that Ariel is within Israel, including the use of a map making no reference to the West Bank as a separate occupied territory.

In addition, as with Motorola Israel, its Israeli subsidiary does not disclose its equal employment opportunity record of its hiring practices.

A shareholder resolution was developed requesting a review of Hewlett-Packard’s human rights policies, and a report on their implementation. It was filed by the PC(USA), United Methodist General Board of Pensions and Benefits, and four Roman Catholic religious orders. The filing letters requested an opportunity for dialogue, and prompted a positive response by the company. On October 28, 2009, several religious participants met with company officials by conference call. The discussion reviewed Hewlett-Packard’s policies and procedures, and identified issues of concern for further discussion. Participants were grateful for the positive atmosphere, and willingness to cooperate. As the company agreed to initiate a board of directors level review of its human rights policy, and committed to positive follow-up to the issues identified in the dialogue, the shareholders decided to withdraw the resolution.
However, the follow-up was spotty in some areas, and nonexistent in others. One positive aspect of the engagement though was meeting with a representative of HP Israel in Jerusalem in February 2010. The discussion was informative about the extent and variety of Hewlett-Packard’s businesses. Requested information on the company’s employment practices and how the human rights policy influences the company’s business with governments was not provided.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) directed MRTI to continue its efforts to engage Hewlett-Packard on these issues. Although efforts began to schedule dialogue with company management in November 2010, the company repeatedly deferred and postponed this meeting. Attempts to schedule conference calls met with delays, but one was finally held on April 19, 2011. Unfortunately, it was not a productive dialogue. While the religious shareholders had communicated clearly their desire for an in-depth discussion of the biometric scanners at the checkpoints, Hewlett-Packard’s representatives, including its person in charge of implementing its human rights policy, said that they were not knowledgeable on the issue and could not discuss it. They also did not offer to set up a subsequent call with Hewlett-Packard representatives who could. In addition, they announced that the human rights assessment they were conducting (which would include Israel-Palestine) would concentrate on systems evaluation, and any specifics would not be included in Hewlett-Packard’s public reporting. Indeed, Hewlett-Packard’s public report contained no reference to its business operations in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

Hewlett-Packard produced a Global Citizenship Report for 2010, its most recent one. It states in its Global Issues section: “At HP, we believe technology is a driver of social progress, environmental sustainability and economic opportunity. We’re committed to helping individuals everywhere use technology to connect and create a better world.” The company reviews its involvement in the United Nations Global Compact, and its support for the Universal Declaration on Human Rights. It notes that it is one of eight founding members of the Global Business Initiative on Human Rights (GBI). However, nowhere does Hewlett-Packard discuss the relationship of its policy commitments to its involvements in non-peaceful pursuits in Israel-Palestine.

The MRTI also kept the Presbytery of San Jose, where HP is headquartered, informed about shareholder resolution filing, and the status of dialogue with Hewlett-Packard.

6. Additional Companies

In the past two years, initial letters were sent to Microsoft regarding its human rights policy and the company’s provision of specialized software to the Israeli Navy and the government of the illegal settlement of Ariel. In addition, the Israeli research organization, Who Profits, has released a detailed report on the important role Israeli banks and financial institutions, many of them publicly traded, play in the illegal settlement enterprise. The Ecumenical Action Group is researching whether international banks operating in Israel are similarly involved.

E. Summary

The roadblocks to a just peace in Israel-Palestine could not be sustained or be so effective without the complicity of private corporations and their involvement in the infrastructure of violence and occupation that violates human rights and degrades human dignity. Accordingly, the General Assembly has stated that the church’s investments in companies doing business in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank be in companies involved in only peaceful pursuits. For eight years, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through its Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), and other ecumenical partners have worked diligently to engage several companies about their involvement and complicity in non-peaceful pursuits and human rights violations.

While this corporate engagement has taken place, the situation in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories has deteriorated. The obstacles to a just peace identified in 2004 remain, and have become more intractable. The continued building of Israeli settlements in the West Bank, illegal under international law, has picked up renewed speed leading to the number of Israeli settlers in the West Bank (excluding East Jerusalem) increasing 57 percent from 191,000 to 297,000 between 2000 to 2009 (Peace Now) while the Israeli population as a whole increased only 19 percent between 1999 to 2009 [Israel Central Bureau of Statistics]. The total number of Jewish settlers living on Palestinian land is nearly half a million, including 191,960 in East Jerusalem (Jerusalem Institute for Israel Studies). With the illegal settlements comes the construction of Israeli only roads on Palestinian land, and continued construction of the Separation Barrier beyond the 1967 borders, known as the “Green Line.” This leads to a deterioration of Palestinian life as access to agricultural land is restricted, Palestinian land is confiscated, housing permits for Palestinians are denied while home demolitions increase, Palestinian movement on the West Bank is further limited through checkpoints, barriers, and prohibition of using some roads. Increased settler violence against Palestinians grows as settlements expand, and Israeli military and police action increases. Access to water is restricted as allocations to the illegal settlements far outstrip allocations for Palestinians. For example, the water allocation to the illegal settlements in the Jordan Valley and the Northern Dead Sea regions (for less than 10,000 illegal settlers) is almost one-third of the quantity of water that is accessible to the 2.5 million Palestinians living in the West Bank (B’Tselem: May 2011). All of the companies being engaged continue to profit from their involvement in the occupation and the violation of human rights in the region.
The results of corporate engagement with the companies:

With Motorola’s separation into two companies, the problematic involvements in non-peaceful pursuits are now primarily confined to Motorola Solutions. These involvements remain significant. However, Motorola Solutions is unresponsive to all efforts by religious shareholders to engage in serious discussions about its involvement in non-peaceful pursuits. There is no indication that the company’s position will change through continued corporate engagement.

The restructuring of ITT into three separate companies has changed the situation significantly. All of the company’s involvements in non-peaceful pursuits will be confined to the new company that focuses on military-related contracts. Already, the sharp rise in military-related contracts has meant that ITT, even before the separation, receives more than 50 percent of its revenue from military contracts, and is now affected by the General Assembly’s military-related investment guidelines. This will place the current company on the 2012 General Assembly Divestment List anyway, and certainly place the new company devoted to military-related products on the General Assembly divestment list in future years.

United Technologies was always less involved in the region than some others, with most of their involvement coming as a subcontractor for companies with larger financial stakes. The company is open to further conversation.

Although Hewlett-Packard (HP) has been open to meet with religious shareholders on an annual basis, the discussions have been very disappointing. The company declines to engage the serious issues of its involvement in non-peaceful pursuits. It has never addressed the issue of how its human rights policy, about which the company is very proud, informs its decisions about its business with governments, especially governments involved in serious human rights violations. Without a major change in HP’s willingness to engage in serious discussions, corporate engagement is not likely to achieve positive results. Regrettably, there is no indication at present that Hewlett-Packard will change its present course.

Caterpillar’s serious involvement in non-peaceful pursuits led the 219th General Assembly (2010) to denounce the company’s profiting from involvement in human rights violations. Sadly, despite significant support for the shareholder resolution calling for a review of its human rights policy, Caterpillar has become even more intransigent. It has cut off all communication with the religious shareholders. Caterpillar continues to accept no responsibility for the end use of their products. Over many years, the company has not indicated a willingness to review its policies for distribution or sales in conflicted areas like Israel-Palestine, and does not acknowledge a responsibility for its dealers’ adherence to human rights law in these areas. Caterpillar’s stated commitment to global citizenship is being undermined by its unwillingness to critically self-assess its own conduct in Israel-Palestine. It is the conclusion of MRTI that further efforts to engage Caterpillar through ordinary means (including shareholder resolutions, and written and oral communications) will not be successful.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Rationale

The MRTI was given a mandate by the 216th General Assembly (2004) on the Israel/Palestine issue to engage with U.S. corporations in an attempt to change their policies that result in our church funds profiting from the Israeli military occupation of the Occupied Palestinian Territories (OPT). The ACREC acknowledges MRTI’s methodical eight-year process and thanks them for their faithful service. The ACREC agrees that the church has exhausted all avenues to bring about changes in corporate policies through corporate engagement. The ACREC also agrees that as long as the denomination’s policy holds that we should not profit from “non-peaceful pursuits,” and as long as the three U.S. companies identified by MRTI are doing so, it is the policy of the church not to profit from these companies’ shares.

The ACREC believes that the same standards that have guided votes on MRTI recommendations over the last forty years of corporate engagement by the committee, should also guide the General Assembly on this vote, no matter who is committing the human rights violations, where, and against whom. To use different standards to judge the evidence is at best, discriminatory, and at worst, sets a bad precedent of racism that will diminish the effectiveness of MRTI’s future work.

Further, ACREC believes groups who claim that the PC(USA) was “identifying Israel as a focus of phased selective divestment has damaged relationships between Presbyterians and Jews” are in fact promoting inaccuracies at multiple levels:

- The 216th General Assembly (2004) did not “identify Israel as a focus” of phased selective divestment; this is a misinterpretation. The assembly called for identifying U.S. companies profiting from the Israeli Occupation of the OPT.

- While it is true that some Jewish groups and organizations have said the 216th General Assembly (2004) directive to not profit from the Israeli Occupation has “damaged relationships between Presbyterians and Jews,” not all Presbyterians and not all Jews agree with this statement. In fact, in some cases, the opposite is true. The call for not profiting from the occupation has strengthened relationships between some Presbyterians and some American and Israeli Jewish groups and individuals who oppose the occupation. This is evidenced by the support for MRTI from

—The Israeli Committee Against House Demolition (ICAHD)

—The Rabbinic Council of Jewish Voice for Peace.

- The very claim that this has affected our relationships with all Jews in a blanket way commits the serious error of classifying an entire people into one monolithic category. General stereotyping can and often does lead to racism in situations where decisions are made by assuming all people of one race or ethnicity hold the same viewpoints.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 15-11

Comment on Item 15-11—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

In all its corporate actions, the Board of Pensions strives to support the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including the social witness policies approved by the General Assembly. Sometimes there is apparent conflict between the social witness desires of the denomination and our legal duties to members of the Benefits Plan. It is clear that our mutually approved long-term policies and procedures have worked well to avoid conflict and we urge the General Assembly to take no actions that would displace these very helpful policies and procedures.

The General Assembly has delegated oversight responsibility for Benefits Plan and Assistance Plan monies to the Board of Pensions. This responsibility makes the Board a “fiduciary,” a status that carries both certain duties and the potential for certain liabilities if carried out improperly. This delegation and separation of oversight duties is intended to relieve the General Assembly from both fiduciary duties and liabilities. The Board of Pensions, acting through its board of directors, chooses the actual investment managers and determines how the money is allocated among various classes of securities to achieve the long-term investment objectives required of the Plans. The Board of Pensions does not select specific investments (either to buy or to sell): security selection is the job of the investment managers themselves.

As indicated below, managers of individually managed portfolios are made aware of our social witness policy and are required to justify to the Board of Pensions any deviation from that policy.

These are all important separations of roles and responsibilities that are in the best interests of commissioners, of the denomination, of the Benefits Plan and of Plan members. For these reasons, the General Assembly does not direct the Board of Pensions to divest the portfolio of an investment held by the Benefits Plan and does not direct that the Board of Pensions affirmatively invest in any specific security.

The General Assembly does, however, determine the social witness policies of the church, including how they pertain to investments of money held by or under the aegis of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It does advise the Board of Pensions (and the Foundation) and it does urge us to take certain actions from time-to-time. We in turn are mindful of the General Assembly’s wishes.

To confuse this important definition of roles and responsibilities, would risk potential liability to the General Assembly, and possibly incur more investment risk for the Pension Trust and other benefits and assistance assets than would otherwise be desirable. We cannot, and the General Assembly would not have us avoid or compromise our legal duties and threaten the security of the Benefits Plan and Assistance Program.

There are two specific duties for us to consider when it comes to the question of divestment.

First, the Board of Pensions has a “duty of loyalty” to act in the sole and exclusive interests of the Benefits Plan members. That means our decisions must be in the interests of that group taken as a whole, not in the interests of the Board, and not in the interests of some other group or some special part of the church. The Board of Pensions has established procedures that it believes are completely faithful to this obligation.

Second, the Board of Pensions has a “duty of care” to see to it that sufficient funds are available to keep the promises made to Plan members, both current and future. Selling or buying securities based on social witness principles alone could easily translate into taking on too much or too little risk at any given point in time. The board of directors has adopted detailed investment policies governing the allocation of the Plan’s investments in various asset classes and the selection of managers for those asset classes. This allocation is the primary way we manage investment risk. The investment managers are responsible for the selection of individual investment holdings. We are responsible for selecting the investment managers, and this selection process is another of our risk management tools, and is an equally important separation of duties. The result is that the Board of Pensions must make its own, independent judgments based on its legal duties of loyalty and care.
Having said that, it is our often-expressed objective to support the declared social witness policies of the denomination as best we can. Fortunately, specific policies on divestment adopted by the General Assembly in 1984 have served our mutual interests well, have promoted a united voice and have avoided conflicts within the denomination.

Divestment

The Board of Pensions participates in the church’s MRTI activities. Under the 1984 policies of the General Assembly, the denomination’s Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment recommends that a company be added to the General Assembly’s divestment list after several steps. Three of those steps include (a) undertaking a thorough and comprehensive research of the company’s involvement in an objectionable practice, (b) engaging the company in constructive dialogue about those practices through meetings and submission of shareholder resolutions; and (c) it is determined that no lesser alternative to divestment is available. Ultimately the General Assembly determines, upon receiving such a recommendation, what is the effective social witness action for the church and its entities to undertake (including divestment or affirmative investment). The General Assembly has long recognized that the divestment practice of the Board of Pensions is one of a “prohibition of ownership” rather than one of an “immediate sale” of securities listed for divestment.

When and if a security is added to the prohibited securities list (there are currently 631 securities on the list), the Board of Pensions has adopted a formal process to ensure that the failure to own the security will not harm the financial soundness of the Plan. At this point, there are two levels of decision because of the differing responsibilities and accountabilities of the decision-makers. The first decision is for an investment manager. The investment manager must decide whether not owning a divestment list security will harm their portfolio results. If it decides that failure to own will not harm results, there is no issue as to portfolio performance, and the security is not held. Since, as a general rule our investment policies provide for observance of the General Assembly’s divestment policies, if the manager decides that failure to own will harm portfolio performance, it must ask us and provide justification for an exception.

The second decision now becomes one for the Board of Pensions. It is inappropriate for us to fail to act. In other words, we are obligated to independently decide whether or not to initiate divestment, or to grant an exception. In the event of a request for exception, if the Investment Committee determines that the request is reasonable and appropriate in the context of our duty of care, it may grant the exception. Currently, there is only one security held by the Board of Pensions under an approved exception request.

For example,

Stock A is placed on the divestment list for the first time. Manager X owns Stock A. When the divestment list is updated, we advise Manager X that Stock A may be held as a part of their normal investment program until such time as the security becomes part of the manager’s sell discipline for all clients. Any subsequent purchase requires an exception from the Board of Pensions.

If a manager does not own the stock, any purchase requires an exception.

From time to time, securities are removed from the divestment list, and managers are so advised.

Affirmative Investment

The duties of care and loyalty apply equally as limitations on the purchase of securities. In addition, the separation of roles and responsibilities between the Board of Pensions and our investment managers is breached when we begin telling our investment managers to actively purchase specific securities. At that point we become portfolio managers ourselves, and to date that is not a responsibility we have undertaken because it would impose additional regulatory burdens and administrative expenses on the Plan that we have chosen to avoid.

Shareholder Resolutions and Proxy Voting

We do hold a small portfolio of securities outside the Benefits Plan specifically at the request of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment in order that the church can use these shares to propose shareholder resolutions from time to time. These holdings are at minimum levels required to submit shareholder resolutions.

It is also appropriate to note that the Board of Pensions does vote all shares held by or through us in accordance with the actions of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment. The Board of Pensions respectfully requests that the General Assembly take this comment into account when considering the several recommendations on divestment or affirmative investment proposed to the General Assembly. The processes in place have served us well for over twenty years, and will continue to serve us well going forward.
Item 15-12

[The assembly approved Item 15-12 with amendment. See pp. 41, 43.]

Responding to the ongoing agony of a virtual civil war in Syria, the 220th General Assembly (2012) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) calls for the following steps of prayer, witness, and action on behalf of the Syrian people:

1. Invite all Presbyterians to join in prayer for Syria, using this one and others:

   “Lord Jesus Christ, Prince of Peace, as you appeared to Paul on the road to Damascus, shine forth in these dark days to show us your way of peace. Put an end to violence and murderous threats. Fill every heart with the Spirit of peace; in your holy name we pray. Amen” (based on Acts 9).

2. Stand with the Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon, our partner church, and other churches who [are facing unprecedented challenges now and are attempting to respond through new forms of witness] [have already helped Christian refugees from Iraq, understanding the dangers that surround religious and other minorities in times of violence].

3. Encourage Presbyterians to become more fully informed about what is actually happening in Syria and within the peace-seeking efforts of the international community.

4. Request the Middle East Office, the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, and other offices of the General Assembly Mission Council to post this resolution and other relevant information online, including communication from our partner churches, noting that objective information is often scarce and highly politicized.

5. Respond to this ongoing tragedy by generously giving to the One Great Hour of Sharing offering and to the designated giving account DR000081 – Middle East/Syria.

6. Urge the U.S. government

   “[•] to support a mediated process of cessation of violence by all perpetrators, including the Assad regime and armed opposition groups,

   “[•] to call for all outside parties to cease all forms of intervention in Syria,

   “[•] to support a strong and necessary role for the United Nations, possibly including observers and peacekeeping forces, and

   “[•] to refrain from military intervention in Syria.”

7. Support full, public congressional debate of any potential U.S. [military] intervention, including cyberwar, weapons supply, training (as is already reported), and drone warfare, to examine carefully the possible humanitarian benefits, costs, and outcomes of such intervention, including its impacts on religious communities and those imprisoned by the Assad regime] [the Syrian people], and to support review of the impacts of sanctions and other pressure on both Syrian society and the regime.

Rationale

Our Christian friends in Syria continue to endure great suffering—along with all the Syrian people—under the escalating violence between the Assad regime and armed opposition groups. The international community seems unable to agree on ways to bring the violence to a halt or to find a path of engagement that can lead to a peaceable resolution of the conflict. United Nations’ observers in Syria recently came under direct attack, resulting in the suspension of the United Nations Supervision Mission in Syria on June 16, 2012. This suspension is being reviewed on a daily basis.

As believers in Jesus Christ, who declare that our God is “able to find a way when there is no way,” we must go to God in prayer on behalf of all who are suffering and ask for wisdom as to how we might provide comfort and support. Our prayers include all victims of violence, their perpetrators, and members of the international community who are seeking ways to support a peaceable outcome to this disaster.

We must pray especially for our Christian partners, knowing that as in other places in the region, they will remain a minority at risk regardless of the outcome. Christians in Syria—who are an essential component of the fabric of Syrian culture and history—trace their Christian heritage back to the apostolic era and make up about 10 percent of the population of 22 million. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has partnered with Syrian churches for most of the last two centuries. Our hearts join in prayer for our sisters and brothers with whom we have been made one in the body of Christ.
Background material provided by our mission partners and others can help us begin to get a perspective on what has happened, and there are numerous paths to keeping our prayers informed and relevant through media coming from the U.S., Europe, and the Middle East.

Gifts to One Great Hour of Sharing and to the designated giving account DR000081 – Middle East/Syria will be used to provide humanitarian assistance to displaced families and others impacted by this crisis. Funds will also help our mission partners in the region as they respond, for instance, as they provide humanitarian assistance to displaced families and others impacted by this crisis.

Military intervention by the U.S. government or multilateral forces would likely result in more loss of life and further de-structuring of the Syrian social order, including further increases in the numbers of refugees and patterns of ethnic and religious cleansing so visible in Iraq. With stronger regional action (including Turkey’s response to Syria’s shooting down of a plane, potentially involving NATO allies of Turkey), and further defections from Syrian armed forces, the international community’s role of supporting peace with justice is increasingly engaging Russia and China and reversing previous U.S. patterns of “not talking” to enemies, there is still some hope of a managed transition in government and end to human rights violations. The example of Lebanon is also in the minds of many in the region, where external interference, assassinations, and invasions have reinforced religious and ethnic divisions (including the presence of refugees going back to the creation of Israel) and make for weak governance.

The strategic position of Syria and its links to Iran differentiate it from Libya and increase the geopolitical stakes for the United States and Israel, Europe and Turkey, and Russia and China, to group the major outside players. The initial democratic hopes of the “Arab Spring” (considered in Item 14-03) should remind Christians and all others of good will that moral and human rights concerns are valued by all human beings and that their suppression leads to greater suffering. Thus a wise international response to Syria should keep open the hope of reconciliation of all citizens there and minimize the score-settling and opportunism of outside interests.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 15-12 be approved.

Rationale

It is true that violence and political impasse are escalating in Syria with potential spillover effect in the region. The numbers of displaced and refugees seem to increase.

It is also true that information and status reports seem to be limited.

Our partner church in Syria, The National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon, continues to reach out to refugees and displaced Syrian Presbyterians. This is in addition to large numbers of Iraqi refugees in Syria and Lebanon in the aftermath of the war and political unrest in Iraq.

Christians in general and Presbyterians in particular represent a minority in Syria. The resources of the National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon are limited, and we urge Presbyterians to support the church in Syria with prayers and financial resources including the support of the Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA).

GAMC COMMENT ON ITEM 15-12

Comment on Item 15-12—From the General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC).

The GAMC has three comments with respect to this commissioners’ resolution:

1. Representatives of the Synod of Syria/Lebanon and the Greek Orthodox Church of Antioch are present at this assembly. The committee may wish to hear directly from these individuals regarding the situation in Syria.

2. The U.S. has instituted economic sanctions against Syria that restrict the church’s ability to send financial support to Syria. The One Great Hour of Sharing Offering and other resources specifically designated for response to this crisis will be sent to partners in the region as permitted by law.
3. Recommendation 6 may be misread as currently worded, especially with respect to UN involvement and whether it is considered a form of intervention. The GAMC suggests that this may be resolved by formatting Recommendation 6 as follows:

“6. Urge the U.S. government
   • to support a mediated process of cessation of violence by all perpetrators, including the Assad regime and armed opposition groups,
   • to call for all outside parties to cease all forms of intervention in Syria, to support a strong and necessary role for the United Nations, possibly including observers and peace-keeping forces, and
   • to refrain from military intervention in Syria.”

Item 15-Info

Middle East Monitoring Group Report.

The Middle East Monitoring Group (MEMG) is seven people, appointed to serve a two year term by the current and immediate past Moderators Cynthia Bolbach and Bruce Reyes-Chow in consultation with GAMC staff. The mandate from General Assembly was to have the committee consist of at least one (but no more than two) members of the Middle East Study Committee (MESC). New appointees were chosen on their demonstrated experience with knowledge of the complex dynamics of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict within the larger concerns of the Middle East, and together comprise an authentic balance representing a fullness of the spectrum of the commitments of the PC(USA) toward the people and issues in the region.

This group was appointed in September of 2010: Roula Alkhouri, Laurie Anderson (chair), J. C. Austin, Bill Borror, Laura Cheifetz, Jeffrey DeYoe, and Ron Shive.

Staff support: Gradye Parsons, Mark Koenig, and Amgad Beblawi.

After the first face-to-face meeting in Louisville in November of 2011, the group created a vision to guide them in living out the mandate of the General Assembly:

• To ensure that the work and spirit for the Middle East peacemaking that took root at the 219th General Assembly (2010) continues to bear fruit.
• To help the church hear and understand the needs, hopes, perspectives, and concerns of the multiple voices of the region.
• Lift up and respond to the particular voice of Palestinian Christians in their experience of suffering and faithfulness.
• Assist the General Assembly Mission Council as it fulfills the policy directions approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010).

The Middle East Monitoring Group had three main responsibilities, as outlined in the mandate (approved resolutions) of the 219th General Assembly (2010):

1. Assist the appropriate General Assembly Mission Council offices and the Middle East staff team in monitoring progress and guiding actions to ensure adequate implementation of policy directions approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010), given the growth in complexity and interrelatedness of issues in the region.

2. The Monitoring Group is tasked with the creation of a study guide for the Kairos Palestine document (A Moment of Truth). The 219th General Assembly (2010) commended this document for study and endorsed its emphases on hope for liberation, nonviolence, love of enemy, and reconciliation.

3. Replace the deleted items of Breaking Down the Walls, with a series of eight narratives of comparable length, four arising from the range of authentically Palestinian perspectives (including both Christian and Muslim), and four arising from the range of authentically Israeli perspectives, along with an annotated bibliography for additional understanding about the breadth and depth of both authentically Palestinian and Israeli spectrum of perspectives but above all authentically pro-justice and pro-peace. These narratives and the bibliography will be collected and approved by the Monitoring Group on the Middle East.

In May 2011 the MEMG released the Kairos Palestine Study Guide; designed for ordinary Presbyterians who may have little experience with the plight of Palestinian Christians or the dynamics of the larger Israeli-Palestinian struggle. The MEMG tried to emphasize the often-neglected voice of Palestinian Christians as mandated by the resolution. The guide is comprised of three sessions structured around the documents own governing themes of faith, hope, and love. The study guide integrates the General Assembly’s endorsed emphases of hope for liberation, nonviolence, love of enemy, and reconciliation.

Since the summer of 2011 the MEMG has been focused on working towards replacing the deleted narratives to Breaking Down the Walls with the eight narratives as mandated by the 219th General Assembly (2010). In addition, the MEMG has worked to assemble an annotated bibliography to accompany these narratives. While acknowledging the challenges, the MEMG is confident that the eight narratives submitted are a faithful fulfillment of the directives given by the 219th General Assembly (2010). The expected release date of these works is March 2012.

As a committee without a financial line item, we held numerous conference calls. After the initial meeting in Louisville we realized the need for face-to-face meetings. The MEMG would like to thank Stony Point and Rick Ufford-Chase for generously making it possible for us to have three face-to-face meetings in New York. It was in the face-to-face meetings and in the retreat setting we found the essentials to creating relationships in the group.

During our two-year appointment together we made some discoveries and as individuals we felt our representative viewpoints were heard and validated; the differences around the table reflected the diversity of views on the issue. We found ways of working together, not always agreeing, yet in the end, we could see the individual transformation that had taken hold; by definition this was not necessarily a transformation that changed one’s mind or opinion, but a transformation as a way to work together in the midst of disagreement and commitment to justice and peace. The spirit of this model is a group committed to seeking, hearing, and responding; recognizing that addressing the conflict in the Middle East cannot be a question of winners and losers. We operated under the premise that if someone loses, everyone loses. We sought authentic balance in the study and teaching about the complexities of the Middle East while understanding such an endeavor requires all of us to remain partners in the Spirit.

We would like to thank the assembly for the risk taken in a new endeavor in assembling a monitoring group.

PREFACE TO NARRATIVES

The 219th General Assembly (2010) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through its approval of the Middle East Study Committee report, created the Middle East Monitoring Group (MEMG) and gave it the following mandate: (1) To create a study guide for the Kairos Palestine document entitled “A Moment of Truth;” and, (2) To replace Part 3 of the original Middle East Study Committee report with eight narratives arising from authentically Palestinian (Muslim and Christian) and Israeli perspectives that are pro-justice and pro-peace, along with an annotated bibliography for additional understanding about the breadth and depth of both Palestinian and Israeli perspectives, but above all authentically pro-justice and pro-peace (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1026).

Shortly following the meeting of the 219th General Assembly (2010), the MEMG was appointed by the Moderators of the 218th and 219th General Assemblies (2008 and 2010) and began its work in November 2010. The Kairos Palestine document study guide was completed first and posted to the PC(USA) website in mid 2011. The group then turned to the gathering of narratives for the purpose of arriving at the mandated eight (four Palestinian, four Israeli). The first discussion that took place in this regard had to do with the definition of the following terms contained in the mandate: (1) “authentic”; (2) “narrative”; (3) “pro-justice”; and (4) “pro-peace.” As the committee began to receive and consider narratives, the concern about these definitions became more acute as the Middle East Monitoring Group recognized that the terms were more complex and/or vague than what would be indicated at first glance. In addition to these concerns, the group also discussed seeking balance according to the gender and age of contributors.

The following initial steps were taken for the purpose of collecting narratives, a process that was subject to the denominational resources that were available to the group: (1) an open call for these narratives was made through PC(USA) media outlets; (2) MEMG members utilized their own networks for gathering names of potential contributors; and (3) MEMG members issued personal invitations to those suggested to us.

There was greater difficulty than anticipated when it came to the collection of narratives. The open call itself did not yield any responses. Following that, responses to MEMG members were mixed and initially called into question whether or not the MEMG would be able to fulfill the General Assembly’s mandate. Eventually, an appropriate number of narratives to achieve the necessary balance was reached after extending the deadline multiple times.

While acknowledging those challenges, the MEMG is confident that the eight narratives submitted here are a faithful fulfillment of the directive given to us by the 219th General Assembly (2010). They are a set of diverse yet authentic perspectives within the spectrum of the Palestinian and Israeli narratives of the conflict that together represent a significant breadth of thought, both among each other and within their respective narrative streams. The MEMG wants to stress that neither we as a group nor as individuals are endorsing all these narratives in terms of our own agreement with their perspectives or positions; similarly, none of these authors have seen the others’ work, and their inclusion should not be taken in any way to imply agreement or approval of one another’s work. Rather, it is precisely because of disagreement between narratives that the General Assembly wisely directed the collection of multiple examples, in order to show the diversity of opinion among the primary stakeholders in the conflict.
However, we feel that there are still key stakeholders mission and that a strict reading of our mandate does not include the voices of American Jews, Christians, and Muslims who would identify with various positions across the spectrum of the conflict. Without including such voices, we feel that the General Assembly’s mandate is fulfilled but its intentions are not yet complete.

Furthermore, the General Assembly mandate required that selected narratives embody a “pro-justice, pro-peace” perspective. While we agree that the denomination is best served by a breadth of narratives falling under this perspective, we wonder whether there might be a place for hearing narratives that have a notable constituency within the conflict yet would be difficult to justify in terms of their adherence to a strict definition of “pro-justice, pro-peace.”

“Modeling the solution rather than modeling the conflict,” continues to ring true in the life of the Middle East Monitoring Group that is part of the fruit of the work and the spirit of the 219th General Assembly (2010). The spirit of this model is a group committed to seeing, hearing, and responding; recognizing that addressing the conflict in the Middle East cannot be a question of winners and losers. If someone loses, everyone loses. It was the trust in the Holy Spirit as much as the trust in each other that sustained our ability to build relationships among each other. Central to achieving collaboration and having conversations is the spirit of creating and sustaining relationship with each other. This process began with an intentional act of the General Assembly to bring us together, including the manner in which we were appointed by the Moderator. In coming together, our monitoring group became bold enough to realize we were more faithful and effective in seeking peace and justice together, rather than separately. Even though there are still very passionate opinions and viewpoints held by individuals, we are willing to take the risk, and trust each other. Frankly, it takes intentional work of the spirit to maintain a process of discernment and consensus building to ensure this authentic fairness. We still have disagreements on some items, on methods to be used, and voices to be heard. But by God’s grace we have discovered that together we are more faithful and more effective, than when we seek as individuals.

We tried to achieve a desire for broader understanding in the quest for peace and justice. We wanted to remain in the pursuit for authentic balance in the study and teaching about the complexities of the Middle East and at the same time realized it will require us all to remain partners in the Spirit.

At the end of our last face-to-face meeting, the style of meeting that we found essential to creating relationships, we made some discoveries; as individuals we felt our representative viewpoints were heard and validated, the differences around the table reflected the diversity of views on the issue, we found ways of working together but not always agreeing, and, in the end, we could see the individual transformation that had taken hold. By definition this was not necessarily a transformation that changed one’s mind or opinion, but a transformation as a way to model the solution rather than modeling the conflict.

NARRATIVES

1. A Palestinian Narrative, August 2011—Dr. Mahdi Abdul-Hadi, Jerusalem

One way to read the current Palestinian-Israeli impasse is to look at it through a conceptual triangle. On the base of the triangle are the two political tribes of Fateh and Hamas. The PLO, with its head, Mahmoud Abbas, is at the top of the triangle. At the heart are the people, embodied in civil society. A number of major external players are crucial in influencing and, to a fair extent, shaping the decision of these component; they are the U.S., E.U., Islamic and Arab countries, as well as Israel, the occupying power.

President Abbas is leading the Palestinians to the international arena through a bid to the UN General Assembly in September requesting recognition of a Palestinian state on the borders of 1967 with East Jerusalem as its capital, and a solution to the refugee question. Abbas managed to water down the geopolitical separation between West Bank/Gaza and Hamas/Fateh by reaching a reconciliation document in Cairo on the fourth of May 2011. He also succeeded in obtaining a PLO Executive Committee decision as well as PLO Central Council endorsement for the UN September initiative. In addition, Abbas managed to keep this decision in the lap of the Arab Summit Committee, to support it at the UN. However, some members of the Fateh movement, in spite of the official decision they reached, are reflecting different views. Voices have been heard, suggesting that Abbas is climbing a tree and doesn’t know how to come down, i.e. the UN September decision cannot be translated into reality on the ground by practicing sovereignty and challenging Israeli military occupation as well as a half million settlers in the West Bank. Other voices have been heard saying that we don’t have a tree in the first place, with cynical remarks that the settlers chopped down most of the trees in the West Bank, poisoned the water, closed the roads, and burned the crops while the Palestinians have no power to stop them. In addition, people are living in the culture of a prison with fear and no tools to counter these aggressions. A third voice is heard to say that it is a contradiction to keep the two baskets together, the first, to go to the UN, and the second at the same time, saying we want to go to negotiating table. But, at the end of the day, there is an understanding in Fateh that this UN bid is the beginning of a process to internationalize the conflict and to challenge the Israelis from a different position, if and when negotiations can be resumed.

As for Hamas, their leadership in Damascus has issued various statements saying that the UN bid is President Abbas’s full responsibility; he did not share his decision with Hamas and they will leave its consequences upon his shoulders. At the same time, some Hamas members in the West Bank are reflecting cynicism, saying, “Of course we will celebrate statehood by bidding farewell to the Israeli occupation army on their withdrawal day, as well as to settlers leaving the West Bank, and we will hoist up the Palestinian flag in every city and town, village and refugee camp.”

As for the civil society, we come to notice that most leading NGOs and research institutes are conducting a series of public and closed meetings debating the UN bid in September, and issuing reports endorsing, encouraging, or trying to inject a few scenarios or alternatives in case of obstacles. Meanwhile, the youth of Palestine have been empowered with the contagious Jasmine Fever of Tunis and the Arab Spring in every Egyptian city and town, mainly Tahrir Square in Cairo. However they, as most of the youth in the Arab World, are without leadership and confused as to the priorities of the democratization process, i.e. civil state and not religious, a new constitution, new elections, and ending the corrupted Arab political system as well as keeping a distance with the West and the influence of their donors.

A small window was opened in the West Bank during the election of the Chamber of Commerce last May. We witnessed the interest of the many independents from the business community running for election and demanding to share decision-making and shaping their own future. Although the elections brought back major Fateh and Hamas representatives, there is a strong component of independents sharing the chambers. This might be an example of future elections for the PLC and the president, which has been a demand of the people: as-sha'ab yureed intikhabat: “the people demand elections.” Another window was opened the first week of August by resuming the reconciliation talks between Fateh and Hamas in Cairo where an agreement was reached to start implementing major items in the reconciliation agenda, as long as there was no decision on naming the prime minister. President Abbas emphasized again that the new government is not a unity government, nor a factional government, but independent professionals and technocrats for a transitional mission, i.e. the reconstruction of Gaza, implementing the reconciliation agenda, and conducting elections within a year. In spite of all the above, the status quo of geopolitical partition/separation between West Bank/Gaza, Fateh/Hamas is very much there and uncertainty lies ahead.

As for Israel, the official strategy has been laid down in the consecutive Herzliya Conferences where the top Israeli military and strategic officials have for the last three years promoted the policy of Israelization of three main areas: the Galilee, Jerusalem, and the Negev, a policy of moving Israeli Jewish Citizens to these areas and expelling Palestinians by various methods through Israeli political and administrative laws.

In addition, Netanyahu’s favorite political slogan has been the demand of recognizing Israel as a “Jewish state.” As for negotiations, Netanyahu was very clear with his “seven no’s” statement and speeches during his Washington visit last May, and by challenging the Palestinian leadership to resume negotiations with no conditions on freezing settlements or halting the Israelization of Jerusalem. Although the Arab Spring contagious fever reached Israel on the socioeconomic level, shaking the right wing government, Netanyahu and Barak are redirecting attention through military incursions on Gaza, expecting from their provocations a counter-response from Palestinians in Gaza, in particular Hamas. This strategy is in order to contain the Israeli awakening about where Netanyahu is hijacking the future of the two-state solution: towards an apartheid system and a culture of fear and war, blood and destruction. These politics will empower a school of thought that says this is an endless conflict, a question of land, identity, history, culture, obsession, exclusivity, and religion: a zero-sum game. This is taking us towards the end of a two-state solution, and a process towards an apartheid system governing two people in one state.

In Israel today, there is a majority of two million Russians, two million religious, and one million Israelis with EU passports (dual citizens who are chasing Europe and would rather be part of Europe), and one and a half million Arabs who are demanding equal citizenship and the recognition of their culture, heritage, and belonging to the land of Palestine. The Russians (who are primarily businessmen with their own newspapers, ignoring the Palestinian question) and the religious (who are exclusive, believing “God gave us the land, it is only ours, anybody else should leave”) are four million who are hijacking the future of Israel. There are not currently enough sufficiently credible vocal opponents ranged against them to challenge them. The one million looking towards Europe are only looking for a better life, Western-style. Meanwhile the Labor Party and the Peace Now movement are with no influence whatsoever, and the Kadema party is desperate to return to power. The three political groups are happy to use the socioeconomic awakening in the streets of Tel Aviv and other major cities to challenge Netanyahu for early elections.

The second school of thought is saying that, since the whole Middle East is moving from pan-Arabism through the political left and recently political Islam, and now towards the human dignity and the pride of identity and the right of sharing the political system on an equal basis, Israel is very much invited to reconsider the idea of Zionism, at the core of which has been the separation between Jews (i.e., Jewish immigrants) and the indigenous population. This required the transfer of the latter and has de facto led to a movement concentrating on colonization and land acquisition, not last in a bid to meet some expectations of the Jewish question that has transferred from Europe to the Middle East. This worked for a while, like pan-Arabism, like communism, like political Islam, but it is time for it to end as the political culture we are entering is now about citizenship and a civil state system with an end to the colonization process. People must be identified as equal human beings with a recognized culture, heritage, and language. However, their lifetime aspiration is a shared future ending occupation and colonization.

Voices are heard in the Israeli civil society saying that the Israeli government has been misleading the people towards fear of the Arabs who are now in their second Arab awakening, toppling their dictatorships and looking for democracy and rule of law, with no mention of Israel as an obstacle or a challenge. At the same time, the Israeli government has been misleading the people into fearing the Palestinians who are unarmed, divided, and contained in two big prisons (West Bank and Gaza), and controlled by military forces as well as half a million settlers. The voices are saying, it is time to free ourselves from this false fear and get out of the ghetto, demand a better life, advance democracy, and open borders with our Arab neighbors by recognizing Palestinian rights for self-determination and statehood.

In the U.S., it is well-known by now that President Obama will not come out with an “historic” initiative during his reelection campaign, nor support the Palestinian bid at the UN—if not veto it. On the other hand, some of the twenty-seven EU member states will have the confidence to support the Palestinians in September and continue their financial backing. Turkey, along with the newly-elected general secretary of the Arab League, Nabil Al-Arabi, are in full support of Palestine’s statehood bid and consider the September episode as a “test” in a process to internationalize the conflict and call for international protection for the Palestinians.

One thing is sure: Palestinians after the September mission will not be the same before. The Palestinian leadership and the people will have to translate the state recognition into real issues on the ground. The most important challenge, however, will be to hinder Israel from disturbing the new Palestinian enjoying “sovereignty.” Then, international protection is the key to follow words (recognition with deeds or Palestinians will continue bleeding and suffering.

2. A Palestinian Narrative—Living in the Shadow of Conflict, the Reverend Alex Awad

I lived all of my life under the shadows of the Arab-Israeli conflict and throughout my life I have struggled to reconcile my faith in Christ with a persisting conflict. When I was born in Jerusalem in 1946, Great Britain ruled Palestine under what was called the British Mandate. At that time, Jerusalem was restless and the British were looking for a way out. A year after my birth, the United Nations drew a map to partition Palestine in order to tackle the competing claims from Jewish and Palestinian factions. The partition angered the Palestinians and created the conditions for the eruption of the first Arab-Israeli war. Although I was only two years old at the outbreak of that war, I still did not escape its horrible consequences. My father, who was a civilian, was shot and killed in crossfire between the Haganah militia fighters and the Jordanian army. A few days after my father’s death, my family received orders to evict our home. In fear for our lives and under rounds of sporadic shooting, we fled at night with just the clothes on our backs from our neighborhood of Musrara in the western side of Jerusalem and ran to the Old City. We never again were able to return to live in our home. My mother had the challenge to make sure that her seven children survived in an East Jerusalem that became home to nearly 30,000 Palestinian refugees. Through the grace of God and the hard work of a dedicated and determined Christian mother we all survived. My mother’s motto in life was, “Never look back, but always look forward. Never ask ‘Why God?’ but always ask ‘How God?’ Never harbor feelings of bitterness or hate in your heart, but always forgive.” Her attitude helped me and my siblings as we struggled to survive in war-torn East Jerusalem.

As I grew up I wanted to follow mother’s advice and forget the conflict. I sought refuge in faith and religion in order to find meaning for life. But the conflict and its negative effects on my life, on my family, and on my people did not disappear but rather it got more complicated as I grew up.

In 1966, I left Jerusalem (at that time it was ruled by Jordan) to pursue theological education in Switzerland. The following year, as a result of the conquest of the West Bank in the 1967 War, I became a man without a country. Our home in Bethlehem was occupied by the Israeli forces. When I applied for a reentry visa to the West Bank, I was refused. At the same time, the Swiss government did not want me. This became the fate of thousands of Palestinian students and workers who lived in foreign countries during the war.

Through an act of God’s grace, in 1968, I was granted a scholarship by a biblical and liberal arts college in Cleveland, Tennessee. Although I appreciated the opportunities I was given and valued the education in what is sometimes referred to as the Bible Belt in the United States, I found myself at the heart of Christian Zionism. Most students and faculty at my college believed that the victories of Israel in both the 1948 and 1967 wars were due to divine intervention on behalf of Israel. Many of my teachers and fellow students did not make a distinction between ancient Israel and the modern State of Israel. Arabs, Muslims, and Palestinians were considered by many as the enemies, not only of Israel, but of God. I was astonished, in the U.S., to see how both the secular media and the religious media were extremely anti-Arab and anti-Palestinian. Meanwhile, my family in Bethlehem were struggling to adjust to living under a brutal military occupation. One of my brothers was arrested in the aftermath of the 1967 war and several of my siblings determined to flee the country rather than live under Israeli military control. Upon finishing my bachelor degree in the U.S., once again I requested reentry from the Israeli authorities and once again I was refused.

In 1979, the only brother that was left in Bethlehem sent me a letter asking if I and my wife, Brenda, would come and help him start a Bible college in Bethlehem. We accepted the challenge, left our teaching positions and the church that we were serving, and returned to Bethlehem on a tourist visa. We helped my brother to start Bethlehem Bible College. On one occasion, when our visas on our U.S. passports expired, the Israelis threatened to deport us from the country or worse to imprison me if we stayed without a permit. In spite of the fact that I was born in Jerusalem, as a Palestinian, I have no protection by the Israeli Law of Return. Palestinian refugees live with the agony of seeing thousands of Jews welcomed to their land of birth while they are banned from reentering it. Consequently, we left Palestine and our ministries and were not allowed to return until a year after the signing of the Oslo Peace Accords in 1994. Our return was not due the benevolence of the Israeli Since 1994, we have been serving the church in Bethlehem and in Jerusalem under the sponsorship of the General Board of Global Ministries of the United Methodist Church. In our ministries we have not only been witnesses of the daily injustices against the Palestinian people, but we stand in solidarity with people who daily face land confiscation, house demolitions, imprisonment, closures, and expulsions.

We continue to pray and hope for the day when Israelis and Palestinians will discover that they can live in peace in Israel/Palestine and that they can create a model of reconciliation that will inspire all nations that are going through conflicts around the world.

3. An Israeli Narrative—The Doctrine of Peace, Avrum Burg

My grandfather was the Rabbi of Hebron until the summer of 1929. Then, on one horrific Saturday, a local Arab mob mercilessly slaughtered the Jews of Hebron and the relationship between Jews and Palestinians changed forever, not only in Hebron, but throughout the region between the Jordan River and the Mediterranean Sea. Dozens of people, including one half of my family, were murdered on that deadly Shabbat. The second half of my family, my beloved mother amongst them, was saved from the onslaught by their Arab landlord. This brave and human gentile risked his own life to save not just my mother and her sisters, but about saving humanity, no less.

Many times throughout my life I imagined myself in this situation that occurred so many years before my birth. This significant event has a great impact on the historic community and it remained embedded in the collective memory that shaped the twisted relationship between Israelis and Palestinians to date. Much was written about this tragedy, about its barbaric nature, about the deaths of the innocent who gradually acquired a mythological status. Others looked into the major role played by British negligence in allowing such a bloodbath to occur. Little attention, however, has been attributed to the astounding heroism of Abu Shakar and other Palestinians like him who, amidst the terror, planted seeds of peace and dialogue. Today, when everything seems so uninspiring and at a deadlock, we must go back to such historical moments; in order to retell the story—yet differently—from the beginning.

Abu Shakar could have had many reasons to play the hero on that dreadful day. Maybe this is how his parents raised him. It is possible that his values of humanism and justice, although deep and existential, were abundant in him. There was also a deep personal relationship between him and my grandfather, of blessed memory, as he was their landlord for many years. In my family the story is remembered slightly differently. It is said that at an old age, two sons were born to a man. The eldest son—Shakar—became sick one day and the doctors were hopeless. In Hebron during the 1920s, there was no advanced medicine and penicillin had not yet been discovered. On his deathbed, when the entire community feared for the eldest son’s life, my grandfather sat by the sick boy’s bed and prayed. God listened to him. God did not differentiate between the religion and faith of my praying grandfather and that of the young, sick Muslim boy. To God—then—all of mankind was equal. God sent his medicine from heaven and the next morning, a miracle happened. The boy came back to his health. His parents never forgot my grandfather’s spiritual gesture.

This story was about my grandfather, a humanist and a Jew, and Abu Shakar, a humanist and a Muslim, and God who they both share.

For me and half of my family, peace begins with prayer; prayer to the Creator of the world, to the One responsible for all of creation. There is no defined prayer intended exclusively for others who do not share my religion and my faith. This is a prayer to God of Adam, the first human and his counterpart, Eve. It is a prayer for the world that preceded the schisms between different faiths and nationalities. We do not belong to a world where our God wins and all the other peoples’ gods are defeated and their memories’ obliterated. Oh no. We believe, respect, and contain. We are fearful for every person who is sick, especially when the sick person is the entire world, our entire society. We pray for the well-being and for peace to all who were created because we are all, together, partners in the act of creation.

When we proclaim “peace” we mean that peace is, first and foremost, a religious narrative and only then can it be a political goal and policy matter. Especially now when the long conflict between us and our Palestinian neighbours seems to be spiralling out of control, passing from the national dimension to dangerous and absolute religious expanses, we must ask again: what is the role of religion in the conflict and in the conflict’s deterioration and what are the chances of being assisted by other values of faith to end the bloodshed.

In order to suggest a new key to the locked Middle East, I must describe—if only in short—the paradigm that brought us to this new low point. In the beginning there was much ignorance and denial. Early Zionists related to Israel with the following phrase, “a people without a homeland is coming to a land without a people.” They believed they were coming to an empty unsettled land. When they arrived, some of them ignored the existence of those that were already living on the land, while others denied the just historical arguments of the Palestinians. Nearly everyone saw a desolate land. Maybe this was because the landscape was emptier than the cities, villages, and metropolises from which they emigrated. Or perhaps it was because they considered the locals to be inferior just as all of white Europeans used to ignore the presence of the natives in their colonized empires. And they never bothered to examine the depths of the local narrative that began its journey towards modern nationalism at the same time as Zionism.

This strategy of ignoring and denying reality was not exclusively a problem of that time. It has been characterizing the patronizing-ignoring attitude of the Israeli institution until today. Time and again this pattern is repeated. During her tenure as Israeli Prime Minister, Golda Meir, who should have known by then that the picture was larger than the simplistic image accepted by the mass public, said: “when I made Aliya to Israel, there was no such thing as the ‘Palestinian people.’” This message was not even hidden in her words. When Israeli heads of state say, “we have no partner,” they essentially see the other side as void of any human existence, because there are plenty of partners there. Maybe they are not easy partners, maybe they have demands and claims, but they certainly exist. The height of this model occurred during the unilateral withdrawal from Gaza that relied heavily on the psychological feeling that there was no one to talk with on the other side. We were free to enter and leave at will, since, the house next door was already vacant.

While I have no intention of analyzing herein the models on the Arab-Palestinian side, I cannot ignore the sense that their models are in line with ours. Just as Israelis tend to ignore Palestinian existence, the Arab-Palestinian narrative also ignores Jewish and Israeli claims and calls for “pushing us into the sea”—a phrase that is understood as: the Israeli presence here is temporary and will soon cease to exist. Therefore, according to this model, there is no reason to relate to Jewish claims as an actual and binding reality.

Therefore, according to this model, there is no reason to relate to Jewish claims as an actual and binding reality.

Human models are, at their core, dynamic. Very few human situations stagnate. By ignoring the existence of Palestinians in Israel, we fail to acknowledge them and their rights as individuals and as a collective. But as the act of ignoring continues, the obsession grows, focusing on the Arab presence in our lives as a coercive and ceaseless traumatic disturbance. It is apparent that the ongoing confrontation with the Palestinians crystallized the Israeli national identity. While it is hard to define who we are in a positive way, by standing next to them we know better who we are not—we are not Arabs!

As time passed, this model of ignoring the Palestinians developed and cleared the way for the next model of the conflict—national identification. The new Israeli nationalism is a renewed version of Jewish identity. Its definition is based on a combination of ethnic origins, religious faith, and geographic location with sovereignty and a common language. Only some of these elements characterize the historic Jewish nation.

As this new Jewish-Israeli nationalism emerges, a new kind of nationalism develops: the new Palestinian nationalism. Some say it originally emerged from nothing, while others say it grew naturally from previously existing roots. However, there is one thing that cannot be disputed: today there is a Palestinian people with a compelling collective consciousness, narrative, and loyalty that is engaged in an enveloping nationalistic confrontation with its Israeli neighbor.

The Palestinians’ honest and legitimate desire for their own state derives much of its energy from Israeli national homeland models that originated in the national policy dialog of old Europe. However, movements all over the world have worn out the terms “state” and “homeland” since the time when these concepts dominated European thought. Israeli secular nationalism, among others, was worn out by the reemergence of the religious element within our national identity. The same Zionism that rebelled against the “Jewish mother” has now become the main carrier of resurrecting the same powers against which it rebelled. The Jewish state that was founded as a secular and socialist state has become a religious and capitalist state. On the other side, the emergence of religion as part of the Palestinians’ values is very well-known and does needs to be repeated. This intertwining of nationalism that is largely comprised of extremist and fundamentalist patriotism and religion feeds the unending Israeli-Palestinian confrontation that no longer seems to have a solution. It is possible to overcome community-based conflicts and it is possible to find compromises to national conflicts. However, it is nearly impossible to build bridges over faith-based chasms driven by religion and extremism. Even if this was possible, overcoming everything described above is overwhelming and full of despair.

Now, the fourth model: after ignoring each other, nationalism and religion, it is time to introduce ideology into the equation. The largest missing element in today’s peace dialog is ideology. Without ideology, any peace dialog lacks hope and faith. Peace, in any language, is one of the most ideologically saturated words. However, in its realistic and political contexts, it has become superficial and empty. In Israel we immediately associate peace with security, border arrangements, and land deals. Regional peace has become equal to “no war” and is void of the values of justice, loving thy neighbor, and transforming your enemy into your friend.

In this context it is hard to ignore the decisive element that is brought to the table by the negative influence of religion in current political processes. Religions play such an important role here both in terms of defining issues in absolute terms and fanaticism. Jewish Messianic fanatics who are supported and funded by Christian Messianic fanatics are fighting the growing fundamentalist Muslim movement in the region. This situation of absolutes has turned our complicated Israeli-Palestinian conflict into a global iconic conflict. Nearly every conflict around the world somehow involves our conflict. Al-Qaida against the West covers the Israeli Palestinian conflict and emigrants in Europe direct their anger towards us. White supremacists all over the world—those who wish all of Europe and America to be exclusively white and Christian—suddenly see Jews as an alibi in their Islamaphobic arguments, which are directed at them. Our greatest challenge opposing these religious fundamentalists is to change the iconic conflict into no less of an iconic solution. For this reason we must replace the religious element that is exacerbating the conflict with pacifying and settling religious elements. Therefore, we need entirely new partners and a partnership unlike what we have known until now.

The borders and delimitation lines can no longer pass in one dimension between religions and faiths. Not every Jew is entirely my partner. The same as not every Christian and Muslim are entirely and forever my enemy. There is an unwritten collusion that crosses camps. There are Jews, Christians, and Muslims that uphold—each one in his or her own way—faith that is based on humanity and on liberties, peace, and the understanding that we are all God’s children. And in spite of ourselves, there is another coalition that is not human-centric that strives, with all its might, to achieve a decisive, violent war.
God against Elohim against Allah. These believers do not believe in the power of dialog and accepting differences between the different theologies. They do not believe in their respective god’s power to exist alongside other gods. These are people who see the world as black and white and from here they march towards the third and final world war. They look to Armageddon, to blowing up the Dome of the Rock or to relentless global Jihad that recognizes no borders.

Today, these fanatics are making the religious content in global and local conflicts. As a result, we witness so much bloodshed and so many tears. The time has come for a religion of love, of respect between synagogue, church and mosque and of holding hands, together. Not in order to fight, but rather to scatter again and again the DNA of peace. This is how Shakar’s father from Hebron and my mother from Jerusalem were raised. This is how my children are brought up and this is how we believe the entire world should behave—believing in peace and not war.

4. A Palestinian Narrative—The Lost City of Oranges, Nahida Halaby Gordon

I was born in Jerusalem to a Presbyterian family in 1939, the year that marked the end of the Great Palestinian Uprising (1936–1939) and the beginning of the Second World War. These two events served as bookends to the year of my birth and defined my life in ways I could not appreciate until much later.

At the age of two, our family moved from Jerusalem to Jaffa, known to me in Arabic as “Yafa.” Yafa’s history as well as most of Palestine has been one of occupation by invaders and empires. The most recent invaders were the British and the Irgun Zva’i Leumi and Hagana forces of the Yishuv (the Jewish community in Palestine). Yafa, before its surrender on May 13, 1948, was sometimes called the Bride of Palestine. It was a major cultural center with twelve newspapers, and many business and commercial interests. Yafa’s seaport was believed to be one of the oldest continually used seaports in the world.
Yafa was also famous for its oranges and was at times called the City of Oranges.

Some of my most vivid memories are connected with our home, which I visit whenever I am in Palestine. The latest visit was in October 2010. It is emotionally distressing to think of my lost home in Yafa. The distress arises not from the loss of bricks and mortar as some people think, but the loss of my Palestinian life and a sense of belonging in my own community.
To Palestinians, connectedness within family, community, and land is vital and extends over generations.

We lived in the land of the Bible and so much of our surroundings made it seem alive as though the events told there happened only yesterday. Yafa is the city where Simon the tanner (Acts 9) lived. His home is thought to be close to the shore and a short walking distance from our house. Peter was staying with Simon when he had a vision that he interpreted as God telling him to carry the message of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles. It is a message of inclusiveness of people of differing ethnicities. In Acts 9:36–40, we read the story of Tabitha who was brought back from death by Peter. My school, the Tabitha School for Girls, was named after Tabitha of Acts and was established in 1863 by the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. It was a short two blocks from our home, and my memories of school, as everything else in my life in Yafa, was a mixture of the happy and sad.

In November 1947, not too long after the beginning of the school year, the United Nations General Assembly, with strong lobbying by the world Zionists and the support of the United States’ Truman Administration, chose to recommend partition of Palestine against the wish of the majority of its people. This was an egregious violation of my human rights and the human rights of all Palestinians who were the majority population. In addition to being against international law, the partition plan privileged the Jewish minority population at the expense of the Christian and Muslim majority population. Yafa was to be part of the Palestinian state surrounded completely by the new Israeli state thus making Yafa a target of the New Israeli State. As the battle for Yafa began, it had its effects on every part of our lives.

A few of my childhood memories will draw a picture of the atmosphere then—an atmosphere filled with the tension among the adults in our lives and among the visitors to our home. Our house was adjacent to the old city and near the waterfront a few hundred yards from the lighthouse. Its sweeping light would shine through the door transoms from the veranda and I could watch it at night as I was falling asleep. It was a constant and a comfort. It made me feel safe from the chaos outside. In the spring of 1948, we fell asleep at night to the sound of bombs aimed at Yafa. In my childish imagination, the bombs sounded like large pipes being thrown around by giants. The memory is strong and vivid to this day. It was frightening and going to sleep was difficult. The lighthouse became a friend as I watched its hypnotic recurring sweep of light through the transom of my bedroom door and this friend lulled me to sleep every night. To this day, a lighthouse elicits a feeling of warmth and safety.
Snatches of sound and sights from this period persist vividly in my mind to this day. As a historical background to one of my most frightening memories is a description I read in Adam LeBor’s City of Oranges. “On January 4, 1948, a truck, piled high with oranges, was parked in an alley off Clock Tower Square, alongside the New Seray, which housed Yafa’s municipal offices, welfare workers, and a kitchen for needy children.” My father’s office was in the Clock Tower Square. “Soon after the truck driver and his companion left, a thunderous explosion shook the city. Broken glass and shattered masonry blew out across Clock Tower Square. The New Seray collapsed in a pile of rubble. Windows shattered for yards around, and a thick choking cloud of dust billowed out. After a moment of silence, the screams and moans began. Twenty-six were killed, and hundreds injured. Most were civilians, including many children who had been eating at the charity kitchen.”

That day Mother was nervous. It was cold outside with a persistent rain with thunder mixed in with the sound of explosions. She was worried because Father was late arriving home. We heard a car up the street. She asked me to run out to the veranda to see if it was Father. He had come into the side gate and garaged his car. When I arrived at the veranda and looked over the parapet, I saw him walking below me. He had his over coat on with the collar turned up high. He had what looked like a dirty handkerchief around his forehead and his hair was smoky white. I ran in to tell Mother that it was indeed Father and that he was dirty and had pebbles in his hair. My next memory is looking into the bathroom. Father was standing over the washstand and Mother was trying to clean him up. His necktie and shirt were soaked in blood and he had grit and dirt all over his face and hair. The handkerchief was one lent to him by a fellow victim and was also soaked in blood. My father, the anchor of our life, had just survived a Zionist terror bombing. Father was wounded, but he had remained behind to help move some of the wounded to the hospital. That evening as we sat by the fireplace, I told my father that I was cold. His reply to me was “you are not cold—you are frightened!”

During this time, the students in my class were thinning out. It came to a point when I remember that class consisted of three students and no teacher. We played school and took turns playing the role of teacher. Our favorite pastime was drawing the flag of Palestine. Soon after that, the bombing in our neighborhood increased. The Zionist paramilitary, probably the Hagana, used to come in an armored car and pepper the street with bullet fire. One day, as my sister recalled, there was a fight outside our house between the Israelis and the defenders of Yafa. Father was not at home and Mother was terrified. She locked up all the windows and doors and we hunkered down. My brothers collected empty bullet shells and the spent bullets that landed on the veranda from the previous night’s fighting. As Ilan Pappe relates in his book, ethnic cleansing “operations were also Yigael Yadin’s brainchild. They began on 13 February 1948 and focused on several areas. In Jaffa, houses were randomly selected and then dynamited with people still in them.” Yigael Yadin was the acting chief of staff of the Israeli armed forces.

No wonder we were never allowed out on the street! As a child I have no memories of the streets of Yafa. I thought that school was far away from home because my older sister and I were driven there each school day in the morning and home at the end of the school day. It was only when I visited our old neighborhood as an adult, that I was astounded to discover that school was a short two blocks away from home. The house had two large verandas overlooking the Mediterranean Sea. One adjacent to my parents’ bedroom and the second much larger veranda was our playground from which we could see and interact with the children living in the Old City. Interacting with other children was always a matter of setting a play date, to use the modern language of my grandchildren. Mothers and their children would come to visit. Mothers would visit with each other and we children would play together. We were never allowed out on the street and never went anywhere unescorted.

An event in April of 1948 lives very clearly in my memory. On the night of April 9, 1948, the Irgun Zva’i Leumi (Menachem Begin’s terrorist group), surrounded the Palestinian village of Deir Yassin, located on the outskirts of Jerusalem and attacked the village of 700 people, killing and wounding men, women, and children. I remember clearly the terror I felt when hearing about the loudspeaker broadcasts from vans of the newly arrived European immigrants going about telling the inhabitants that if they do not want the same thing to happen to them as what happened in Deir Yassin that they should flee. I agonized as a child about what I would do if they were to come to my house to kill my family as they did in Deir Yassin.

One day, I heard a noise out on the street. I ran to the balcony outside my brothers’ bedroom which faced the street. I saw a coffin cover carried vertically by a man who was walking down the street towards me. The cover had a cross down its entire length. Following the coffin cover was the coffin itself being carried by six pall bearers. The noise I heard was the shuffle of their feet. As the coffin arrived just below me, I saw its occupant—a very young smooth faced man. He was incredibly beautiful and peaceful. He was dressed in charcoal gray pants with pin stripes and a black jacket. He looked as though he was dressed for his wedding which was never to be. Then I noticed a woman walking behind—he was my mother’s friend—a frequent visitor to our house. She was dressed in black and had a veil down across her face. She was weeping inconsolably, and was supported on each side by two other women whom I did not recognize. The funeral cortège continued to move below me and then went into the churchyard that was further down the street towards the waterfront. Later I found out that he was her younger brother who was killed by the Zionist forces.

Days later during the night, the bombs fell across the street and hit the church where the funeral of the brother of Mother’s friend was held. A few feet farther northeast and they would have hit our house! By now, April 1948, my father, having had enough of violence, decided to take our family to safety away from Yafa. It was our custom to leave every summer to the mountains of Lebanon or to Ramallah to escape the heat of the seacoast. So my father decided that we would leave early for our summer stay and return at the end of the summer in time for school. Alas, we were not allowed to exercise our right to return!

On April 22, we hurriedly packed and drove to the Liddeh airport, which now is the location of the Ben Gorion Airport. On the way, I remember seeing houses burning. My father and mother worried about whether the Jewish soldiers would let us leave. Again we did not realize that they would be more than glad to have us leave. We boarded a small twin engine plane that my father had chartered. We flew to Beirut and arrived in the evening. I remember several men bringing steps to the airplane door and helping us out with the few suitcases we had. All was left behind—our pets, a dog and cat, all family pictures, all mementos of a life—all gone! As soon as we were safely settled in Lebanon, my Father returned to Yafa and remained for a few weeks, but then shortly after May 15, rejoined us in Lebanon.

And what would we have experienced had we stayed in Yafa? “By April 25, 1948, using the tons of shells that the Irgun had taken from the British munitions train, the battle for Jaffa began in the early hours of Sunday, 25 April. Irgun gunners directed a steady rain of mortar fire onto the city. In theory the gunners were not supposed to target hospitals, religious sites, or consulates. In practice the shells fell indiscriminately across Clock Tower Square, smashing into the markets, and south into the heart of Ajami (where our house is located), killing and wounding large numbers of civilians. Panic and hysteria swept through the city.”

Going through my father’s papers after his death, I discovered a three-page document issued by the Hagana. The document is dated May 13, 1948, just two days before Israel declared itself a state and the U.S. shamelessly recognized it within hours. This document is discussed in some detail by Rosemary Esber. In this document, signed by the Hagana and four leaders of the Yafa community, the Hagana admonishes the citizens of Yafa to obey all statements in the agreement and the Hagana pledged to the Palestinians of Yafa that “IT IS UNDERSTOOD that the Hagana always does respect and will respect the Geneva Convention and all International Laws and Uses of war.” This is just another deception presented to the Palestinian people and to the international community that continue to the present day, first by the Hagana and then the Israeli government once it came into existence.

The fourth article of the instructions proclaims: “(a) All males in the area defined in the Agreement will concentrate in the area between Feisal Street, Al Muktar Street, Al Huwa Street and the Sea until everybody has identified himself under arrangements, the particulars of which will be notified later, and (b) During this, any male found outside this area will be severely punished, unless in a possession of a special permit.” I had two teenaged brothers at this time. We knew what this meant—that they will probably at best be transported elsewhere leaving my mother, sister, and me alone and defenseless. In the eighth article, it assured residents of Yafa that if they left, they can return. Article nine claimed: “All public offices, Municipal and Government, must be kept intact and all documents and registers therein must be kept safely in good condition so that any claim of residents may be checked.” Articles 8 and 9 together reassured residents that leaving would be alright since a return was assured. In fact, shortly after Yafa fell, the Hagana destroyed documents in municipal and government offices as well as schools. They entered Tabitha School, where I and my sister were students and destroyed school registers. The registrar of the Tabitha School, who is a Palestinian, managed secretly to save a few registers. When visiting her in Yafa in 2006, she showed me the register where I could see my name. Here is another deception from the Hagana and the new Israeli government once it came into existence.

One frequently hears that Palestinians wanted to drive the Israelis out to sea. When in fact in Yafa and Haifa, it was the Israelis who put many of its Palestinian inhabitants into small boats and pushed them out to sea where many drowned. Furthermore, as these frantic Palestinians went to the boats they were shot at by Israeli snipers. I often wonder had we stayed in Yafa after May 15, would we have been forced onto one of these boats! Another claim by the Israeli government is that the Arab leaders told the Palestinians to flee. Reality was quite the contrary. We were terrorized and fled for our lives.

On occasion I think about one of my childhood friends from Palestine. Her mother, I was told, was Jewish and her father was Christian. She would come with her mother and mothers and daughters visited. My musings on this is that here we were in Palestine, probably in 1944–46 and Mother had a Jewish friend and I had a Jewish/Christian friend both of Palestinian origin.

I have visited our house several times since April 22, 1948. Our property consisted of my father’s place of business below and our home above. We think the property was formerly a consulate building for a South American country. My father bought it and remodeled it to suit our family. The first time I went back to Yafa to visit our home, it was made into a restaurant and the lower floor of the property was made into a small shopping mall. They had removed the small verandas outside the doors of the two bedrooms facing the street. One was my brothers’ bedroom and the second was a guest bedroom. They also had covered the veranda next to my parents bedroom and made it part of the restaurant. Wanting to see the backend of the property, my sister, husband, and I walked through an alley east of the house and then climbed a set of stairs leading to a second story apartment in the Old City complex. When we reached the top of the steps, we were able to take photographs of the restaurant, which was vacant and abandoned at that time. We also encountered the occupant of the apartment whose steps we climbed. She was a young woman, sitting on her doorstep and smoking a cigarette. When asked whether she felt guilty about living in someone else’s home she replied “No, I have had a hard life and deserve this apartment. I was born on a kibbutz and life was hard there.” So here we have a glimpse into why some Israelis seem to have no compunction about living in stolen property. They feel entitled because of their past suffering. They do not seem to understand that it was not we Palestinians who caused their suffering. They may not be the original thieves but they are benefiting from their government’s theft.

My second visit was in 2003 at which time the property was undergoing a major renovation. The façade was the same and this time they had replaced the two small verandas adjacent to the street facing bedrooms. When my driver told one of the workmen that I used to live in the house, their reaction was “she better leave if she knows what is good for her.” At a later visit in 2006, the house was further transformed with apartments below and some above. Our large playground veranda now contained apartments with views of the Mediterranean Sea. Surprisingly, the door leading to the steps to our house was still there. However, the two steps leading to the door were removed. These two steps contained a little treasure. My father said that when he remodeled the property, he built in a chamber within the steps into which he placed several bottles of wine. He planned to remove the bottles and serve the guests at my older brother’s wedding. That wedding did not take place in Yafa but in the Diaspora. Someone else had the pleasure of drinking that wine!

On October 20, 2010, I had the opportunity to visit Yafa once more and of course I included a side-trip to view our old house. My travelling companions were my husband, my older brother, the pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church in Wooster, and two friends from church. The entire trip was a memorable experience and may be the last time that I will ever visit Yafa. I had two encounters with Israelis that afternoon. They were as totally different as two encounters can be. The first one was a man of about forty who was coming out of a small shop on the first floor of the property and facing west. His shop is called the “The Israeli Experience,” and as he was walking to his motorcycle, I asked him why he does not also talk about the “Palestinian Experience”? He became irritated and started talking rapidly telling me that he knew nothing of these things.
I told him softly that I had the deed to the property. The volume of his talk increased markedly and he started yelling at me, telling me that I am attacking him with unsubstantiated claims

My second encounter was very different. Thanks to my brother who pressed every one of the buzzers of the fifteen apartments carved out of our family home, we were invited into one of them by its Israeli occupant, a woman. She generously welcomed us to her living room and gave us water to drink. I will preface my remarks by saying that she was a brave and thoughtful person. She allowed us into her home even though she knew who we were. We sat and reminisced about the house as though it was a common acquaintance, which it was! We told her about her apartment—that it used to be part of the ve-rranda next to our parents’ bedroom. I asked her if the lighthouse still operates, and she said “No.” I told her how I used to go to sleep watching its light move across the walls of the hallway leading out to the veranda. She listened with respect, acknowledging my sorrow and loss. She told us that she rents the apartment and that she thou ght that it was owned by the Catholic Church, which had a large property on the high point of the old city overlooking our house. She now had in front of her the previous dispossessed owners.

We then began talking about present day politics in Israel. She told us that even though she owns a house in Jerusalem, she prefers to live in Yafa. She was concerned about the rising fascism in Israel. I asked her if she thought Lieberman could or would become prime minister. She shrugged her shoulders and said that she hoped that he would not. She was progressive in her thinking and I found much with which to agree. In a different place and time, I think we could have been friends. With gentle questioning, she told us about her life and her parents’ life. They came from Pinsk in Eastern Russia to Palestine in the 1920s. The family wanted to escape discrimination and the pogroms. She ended her recounting of her family’s experiences by saying that she just wants to live a normal life. This is yet another tragedy—how can she live a normal life when she is living in stolen property and a stolen country. I felt her suffering and was deeply touched. We both struggled with our em o-tions. I hugged her when we left and she returned the hug. We shared a bond of suffering inflicted by a senseless and unfeeling world.

I began this account by asking myself why it is so distressing to visit my home in Yafa. I think the answer may be in seeing the present day reality, which is a death to warm and wonderful childhood memories. It may be less painful to forget the present and just hold onto old memories. This is particularly so when I see what has been done to my grandmother’s house in Jerusalem. I always envied those Palestinians who were able to remain. During this last visit to Yafa, I met with three of our friends from childhood days. During dinner, one of them asked me: “Nahida, who do you think is better off—you who left Yafa or me who stayed?” Her question was asked with a combination of bitterness and sadness. I then realized that even though she is still living in her childhood home, she also lost her community. I and all Palestinians are scattered throughout the world—she was just as cut off from our Palestinian community as I was!

To continue my family story, we emigrated from Lebanon to the U.S. in 1951. I arrived here barely a teenager. It was here that I and my sister received our high school and university educations and my brothers their university educations. I am now a grandmother happily married to my husband of fifty years. We are immensely proud of and grateful for our three children. I am also a professor of statistics in the Schools of Medicine and Nursing of a prestigious American university. My husband’s ancestors were immigrants from Scotland, England, and Germany who came to America, some decades before this country was founded, to escape political persecution.

I am active in my local Presbyterian church and in the PC(USA) at the national level on behalf of Palestinians, especially the Palestinian Christians who remain in Palestine. But, I sometimes wonder whether my church here in the U.S.A. has room in it for Palestinians. When Presbyterians continue to affirm Israel’s “right to exist” even though they qualify it by saying
On my wall there are two remarkable photographs that define my biography. One hangs at home, and one in my office. At home, is a picture of a family sitting around a table, it is both Old world and New world. It is my father’s family; my father is seven years old. His mother is immigrating to Canada, with five children and an aging father. They are saying goodbye to his mother. She is a tiny, aged woman surrounded by her three sons, my great-grandfather, dressed in traditional Chasidic garb that originated in the 17th century and his two brothers, who are seated with their wives dressed as the “visiting Americans.” They are clean-shaven, in modern dress. What a picture! It encapsulates Polish Jewry in 1930. My father and his family will be saved, the two American uncles are already on their way to modernization, and the other couple in the corner, my grandmother’s sister, husband, and daughter will perish in the Holocaust.

The year 1939, my birth year, marks a period of history of profound tragedy for human kind with the outbreak of World War II. Persecution, pogroms, and discrimination experienced by Jews for many centuries in Europe and in addition the killings during World War II brought some of them to Palestine in search of a safe homeland. The leaders of these Europeans proceeded to compound their tragedy by inflicting upon Palestinians a modern form of programs, persecution, discrimination, and killings. But this has not always been the history of the Land of Palestine. For centuries Christians, Jews, and Muslims lived together peacefully in Palestine. This Palestinian and many others only wish for the two peoples to live together in this land that both call their own. It should be one land where we all enjoy equality, an equality of political, legal, economic, cultural, religious, and educational rights. I echo the wish of the Israeli woman who is currently living in one of the apartments of my former home. I wish that we both can live a normal life united as human beings in the common suffering of our humanity.

5. A Israeli Perspective—Narrative on Israeli-Palestinian Conflict, Naamah Kelman

This morning, the report on the radio brought a smile of hope to my face—some 200 Palestinians were joining a bike ride in the area of Sodom. These Palestinians are from the territories; Ramallah, Jenin, etc. The organizer reflected, if we are not getting anywhere in the “high places” of diplomacy, then perhaps on the ground, shoulder to shoulder let’s start “peddling towards peace.” I had just come back from that area, the expanse of raw beauty of the Dead Sea and Jordan Valley. There it seems that there is room for everyone. There exciting innovations in re-harnessing the earth’s energies offer a possibility of living together on this fragile planet without fighting over square miles. The sun’s energy is endless, wind too; and thoughtful recycling of everything may give our grandchildren and great grandchildren a chance.

It is Friday morning, when I have some time to listen to the radio, and then go to the open air market, where Israelis of every stripe gather to shop and sightsee. It is a festival of sights, smells, and tastes. Israeli Arabs work alongside Israeli Jews. One of my favorite stalls employs an Arab. Recently, some rightwing extremists threatened to “out” any shops with Arab employees. This was squelched pretty fast by the shop owners, not necessarily known for leftwing positions. I want to ask my stall guy what he thinks, but I do not have to; they are working side-by-side. Hard to imagine the years when so many fled the market. The “shuk” was a scary place, where too many terrorist attacks hit hard. The Intifada seems far away … but so does the “two-state solution.”
The other photo is in my office. It is a photograph of my father, now a leader of American Judaism. He is attending the convention of his Rabbinic organization of which he is the chief executive. They have invited the Reverend Martin Luther King Jr. to speak. This is a photo of Dr. King, Rabbi Abraham Joshua Heschel (the great Jewish theologian of the late 20th century), and my father. King was assassinated two weeks after this picture was taken. These two images have followed me everywhere, in every home and every office. In my office, I yearn for a religious leadership working side-by-side for justice; like King and Heschel. At home, I look at my family table; they are sitting at a Passover Seder, reciting hymns and prayers for redemption from slavery. They believed, despite their poverty, their lives so precarious and full of change, that we have to have hope and celebrate hope!

In 1976, I arrive in Israel. I have been here before, but now I will live here for a year or two perhaps, no firm plans. I am an American Jewish feminist liberal Jew. This does not flow with ease with the Zionist narrative. The Zionist narrative envisioned a new kind of Jew and Judaism living as a sovereign people on their land, able to protect themselves and sustain themselves without fear or dependence on others. The Zionist ethos and the first generations were secular Zionists with a Socialist bent. There was little room for a Judaism that tries to bridge tradition and modernity, it was either/or. You were either a Hebrew speaking, Bible quoting, secular Israeli who eschewed religious worship but re-envisioned the traditional Jewish holidays with a civic and cultural meaning … OR you were Orthodox, hopefully modern enough to serve your country and pray in the synagogue that reflected your ethnic background. This was the deal made at the founding of the Jewish state. All matters religious regarding personal status would be handled by an official Rabbinate that would see to your needs at birth, marriage, divorce, and death.

No one could foresee the incredible rise and growth of the Ultra-Orthodox, whom do not define themselves as Zionist. No one could foresee the turn of the majority of Modern Orthodox veering right in wholehearted support of the Settler Movement in the West Bank and Gaza. No one could predict a growing secular population alienated from Jewish sources although they speak fluent Modern Hebrew.

Yet, I could never have imagined that I would become the first woman rabbi in Israel. Nor the fact that over these thirty-five years, there is an emerging Reform Movement. We are committed to equality and inclusiveness.

All these phenomena and more occur over decades, while the Palestinian story is emerging. Whether we Israelis like it or not, there are two competing claims on this piece of land. And after all my years here, and all the time spent marching for peace, seeking justice, praying for a just solution, it boils down to this. Does the Occupation begin in 1948 or in 1967? If the Occupation begins in 1948, well, we are looking at a “one-state” resolution.” If it is a one-state solution then the demographic will determine which state will prevail. At the moment the Ultra-Orthodox and Orthodox settlers are reproducing, as are the Palestinians. So a one-state solution would mean a stand-off between extremists. A two-state solution will keep Israel a Jewish Democratic state and make room for Palestine.

The narrative of suffering doesn’t work anymore. It is a competition, or worse, two tone-deaf monologues. In order for reconciliation to begin, we must listen to the suffering of the other. We must listen to the stories of the other. It is remarkable that it was the daughter of Pharaoh who heard the cries of baby Moses, and she risked her station and position to save him. Even more remarkable, that some passages later, Moses is grown up and running from Egypt and he encounters God. God speaks to Moses from a burning bush and proclaims “I have heard the suffering of the children of Israel!” God is following the daughter of Pharaoh, God is imitating her! Can we risk our station and status or can we give up our state of suffering and reach out to the other side?

The Occupation must end. We must find a way to negotiate coexistence. We must find a way for healing and perhaps forgiveness. Lately, this seems more distant. While terror has subsided; extremism has not.

So, I remain an anomaly. I remain a religious progressive, Jewish feminist, a socialist Zionist. There are not many of us. But we are a voice and a movement. To this I remain passionately committed; to teach and raise the next generations of progressive Jews ready to make peace with our Palestinian brothers and sisters.

6. A Palestinian Narrative—Liberating Palestinians and Israelis, Mazin Qumsiyeh, PhD

My late grandfather was a spiritual kind man who got along with everyone but he was not a religious man. He explained to his grandchildren (thirty-two in all) how he also had great respect for all people who lived here. He would describe life before the state of Israel was created on the destruction of Palestinian civil society. He would mention how his family (Palestinian-Arab Christians) lived in peace and harmony with another minority (Palestinian-Arab Jews) and both lived in complete harmony with the Palestinian-Arab Muslim majority. Life was bountiful and good until World War I when Ottoman conquest of men (of all religions), destruction of the environment, and moving the food towards war efforts all created a humanitarian catastrophe. My grandfather lost his siblings and his parents and was left penniless and homeless orphan. But there were always kind helping hands along the way and they came from various backgrounds. My grandfather did well with hard work despite British occupation, upheaval, and economic dislocation in the 1930s, the ethnic cleansing of 1948, and the numerous deadly wars that took some of his friends and transformed our country.
My grandfather would tell me that this multiethnic, multireligious, multicultural society had its flows before 1948 (tribalism, male domination, weak educational system). But he insisted it was the best place on earth and had more things than people gave credit for. It was a land of milk and honey and also of great religious shrines, great scenery, great and bountiful agricultural fields (olives, figs, citrus, grapes, wheat, barley, vegetables of all kinds). It had great cuisine, music orchestras, libraries, publishers, tourist industries. Our own area of Bethlehem was a Mecca for tourists from around the world and people did well selling souvenirs made from olive wood and mother pearl in addition to the bountiful agricultural products.

My grandfather was born in 1908 and died in 1997 so he saw the transformation of his country in ways that made him die satisfied with his own accomplishments despite incredible odds but sad for the state of this “holy Land.” Looking out the balcony of his house the last time I saw him, he lamented the beginning of a new colonial settlement (called Har Homa on Jebal Abu Ghneim) that was being built and that would change the landscape.

My village of Beit Sahour (the Shepherds’ field where Shepherds were told of the birth of Jesus just up the hill in Bethlehem) joined the protests against the Balfour Declaration and the British occupation starting in 1919. Two thousand years ago, our ancestors did not just get the message of peace on earth, good will to man, but they thought it was their duty to pass it on. We still feel the same obligation and this is part of why I write and work for human rights and justice, which are the pre-requisite for peace.

My grandmother, Emilia, comes from Nazareth and it became part of the newly founded state of Israel in 1948. Five hundred thirty-one Palestinian villages and towns were depopulated (the largest ethnic cleansing post-World War II). Half the refugees were actually created before the state of Israel was formally declared on 15 May 1948. It is thus a myth that this had to do with war between the nascent state and “Arab countries.” There was also a secret agreement between the Royal Family that was ruling Trans-Jordan (appointed by the British) and the Zionist leaders before 1948 to allow splitting Palestine between them and thwart Palestinian self-determination (see Avi Schlaim’s books on the subject).

Later I would find out that some relatives, even before I was born, had confrontations with the ruling Jordanian royal family. Two of my uncles on my paternal side were jailed by the Jordanian government for advocating Palestinian nationalism. My mother delivered my older brother in 1956 during the riots in Bethlehem against Jordanian rule.

I was ten-years-old in 1967 and that year provides some of my most terrifying memories. I remember panicked people passing through our village and heading toward the Jordan River. I remember ducking under beds when the sirens sounded. I remember Israeli tanks rolling down the hills toward our village, my father hiding us in a cave while an Israeli tank passed, until neighbors motioned us that the coast was clear. I remember Israeli jets streaking overhead. I remember sleeping with cloths and shoes on in case we had to run. I remember heated discussions among the adults about the wisdom of leaving; those who had left their homes in 1948, during the conflict when Israel became a state, were never allowed back. But in just six days, Israel took the remaining 22 percent of Palestine—the West Bank from Jordan and the Gaza Strip from Egypt (plus the Sinai and the Golan).

For a few days after the guns fell silent, no one knew what to expect. The Israeli authorities took their time before giving us any instructions. They were busy securing a long new border to keep out the more than 300,000 Palestinians who’d fled (some becoming refugees a second time). A few managed to get back, but many, like my cousins Samir and Makram, we would not see for more than twenty years. We waited while food and supplies trickled in, followed by some semblance of order imposed by village elders. Schools were closed, and my cousins and I spent even more time at my grandparents’ house.

Two weeks after the war ended and on a day I will never forget, my grandfather received an extraordinary visitor: a Jewish friend separated from him for nineteen years. In the years between 1948 and 1967, no one could travel in either direction between the parts of Palestine that became Israel and the parts that came under Jordanian and Egyptian rule. I recall watching, not really understanding, as the two old men cried on each other’s shoulders. Later that evening my grandfather tried to explain why people could not visit each other across borders. Sido (as we affectionately call a grandfather) talked about how, against the wishes of its native people, including his Jewish friend, Palestine was divided.

The years of the Israeli occupation of the West Bank were not kind to our people. While we exchanged Jordanian for Israeli rule, there were stark differences. Immediately after 1967, Israel started to confiscate Palestinian land in the areas acquired and to build Jewish-only colonies/settlements there. Palestinians were mostly employed in agriculture, and as their best land was being taken, many were forced to find other jobs. Thousands were forced to work in building the Jewish settlements and the roads that now cover 42 percent of the Palestinian occupied territories.

Our own Bethlehem district is a case in point. Tens of thousands of refugees had flooded here 1948–1950. Some later would be forced out again (in 1967 and beyond). The district has a population of more than 180,000 and of those more than 45,000 are refugees or displaced people. Israel built more than twenty-one colonial Jewish settlements and sixteen outposts since their military occupation of Bethlehem in 1967. The Israeli colonial settlement activity meant that nearly 90,000 Jews moved into our district and we were reduced to a ghetto (Bantustan) representing 13 percent of its size before 1967. Further, most of the water sources and other natural resources have been taken over by Israel. And increasingly, a wall is being built...
I am proud of the history of nonviolent resistance carried out despite brutal violence from the occupiers. While international law says we have a right to armed resistance to occupation, a tiny minority of our people picked up arms. By contrast Israel is a militarized society where everyone is supposed to serve in the army. As a result, ten times more Palestinian civilians were killed by Israeli occupiers than the other way around. But a less reported issue is that most of us resist occupation and colonization by nonviolent methods (see my article “Where Is the Palestinian Gandhi,” The Link, Volume 43, Issue 3, July–August 2010 http://www.ameu.org/page.asp?id=291&aid=621&pg=1). In my latest book, I showed examples of hundreds of forms of nonviolent resistance from the thousands of forms and millions of cases that we engaged in over the past 130 years.

We still struggle to describe the Orwellian reality we live in. In this land, a new colonial settler from Russia or Poland or America can roam free, get all sorts of financial gifts (from U.S. and other taxpayers), and settle on land stolen from people whose ancestors farmed it and cared for it for 4,000 years. The natives, considered children of a lesser God, are removed from their lands, live in nearby countries in refugee camps, or live in shrinking concentration camps in their own homeland. They cannot return to their homes and lands simply because they are Christians or Muslims. Those of us who remain here are living in increasingly shrinking concentration areas—people warehouses are what a friend calls them. We are not even allowed to travel freely between these warehouses. I am not even allowed to visit friends and colleagues in East Jerusalem (merely five miles away).

The Zionist program is unwavering in its original goals, goals that are shared by all major factions in Israeli politics (Likud, Labor, Shas and other religious parties). Its consensual program includes: the rejection of complete withdrawal from all areas illegally occupied in 1967; the rejection of refugees’ right to return to their homes and lands; the rejection of concepts of full sovereignty or self-determination for Palestinians; and a refusal to change Israel’s basic laws that discriminate against non-Jews. While all of these policies are contrary to basic human rights and international law, Western countries have been reluctant so far for various reasons to pressure Israel like they did with Apartheid South Africa.

Because of the Israel lobby, billions of U.S. tax money is spent on a country that has the largest number of violations of UN resolutions and provisions of international and humanitarian laws. Because of this lobby, eighty-one of our U.S. Congress decided to spend the August recess not dealing with their constituents’ concerns but instead took a trip paid for by this same lobby to Israel (for many of them it was their first trip abroad). Indeed, how else to explain a superpower being stripped of its dignity, its wealth, and its reputation around the world by a domestic lobby working for a foreign country to push for endless wars “on terror” when they are the ones perpetrating the worst terror on earth?

I am optimistic. Many have shed the illusions of “us here, them there.” The racist laws in this apartheid state are simply not sustainable on long-term basis. Peace cannot be built upon injustice; restorative justice is a prerequisite for peace. I got arrested regularly with Israeli human rights activists who join us in nonviolent resistance against occupation and colonization.

The efforts of some people to defend apartheid and separation can only be described at best as symptoms of cognitive dissonance and at worse as symptoms of racism. In their Orwellian world, occupation becomes “security,” a relentless war of colonization and occupation becomes “advancing democracy,” and a “peace process” that goes on for twenty years while more land is gobbled. The apartheid and land-theft wall becomes a “security fence.” Being anti- or post-Zionist is morphed into being anti-Jewish or being a “self-hating Jew.”

In July 2005, more than 170 Palestinian civil society organizations issued a historic document. It articulated Israel’s persistent violations of international and humanitarian laws and conventions and called upon “international civil society organizations and people of conscience all over the world to impose broad boycotts and implement divestment initiatives against Israel similar to those applied to South Africa in the apartheid era.”

The call stated that “these non-violent punitive measures should be maintained until Israel meets its obligation to recognize the Palestinian people’s inalienable right to self-determination and fully complies with the precepts of international law by: ending its occupation and colonization of all Arab lands and dismantling the Wall; recognizing the fundamental rights of the Arab-Palestinian citizens of Israel to full equality; and respecting, protecting, and promoting the rights of Palestinian refugees to return to their homes and properties as stipulated in UN resolution 194.”

We propose that global civil society take this call seriously and build a coalition open to all people for a global movement against Israeli apartheid. This would bring peace with justice to all people regardless of their religion or ethnicity. We believe this is good for the Israeli society in the long-term. We believe occupation and repression not only harms its intended victims but distorts and harms the occupiers. By challenging the system of repression we help reclaim our collective humanity.

My grandfather and his Jewish friend died years ago and their bodies long became part of the soil and air that surrounds us all in this land. Their molecules were incorporated in new life that has since arisen here. Children who are born here or in refugee camps in Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, and elsewhere are not born “Jewish” or “Muslim” or “Christian” or “Israeli” or “Palestinian.” They are born human babies. It is up to us to get them to see this common humanity and teach them to share this (still beautiful) land without walls, without ghettos, without racist laws. Working to achieve it together, we made thousands of friends over the years. The journey itself has been a rewarding experience. The Promised Land is not some distant area to be received by a subset of human being in the past or in the future. This is the promised land of peace with justice in the present and it is for all human beings who believe. We ask ALL to come be part of it. Ahlan wa sahlan.

7. An Israeli Narrative—Zionism: Past, Present and Hopes for the Future, David Rosen

Names often acquire different meanings and associations that are very different from the intention of their originators. The term “Zionist” is seen in much if not most of the Arab world—and indeed in the wider Muslim world—as reflecting some kind of expansionist Jewish territorialism that is hostile to Arab and Muslim interests.

However for most of us who would describe ourselves as Zionist—and for the founders of the Zionist movement more than a century ago—nothing could be further from the truth.

The name Zion was originally an ancient Jewish synonym for Jerusalem. It appears more than a hundred and fifty times in the Hebrew Bible (the Tanakh) especially in the book of Psalms. Perhaps the most famous of these references is in Psalm 137 that gives expression to the distress of the Jewish exiles expelled from the land in the 6th century BCE by the Babylonians.

“By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down; yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion. … For there, our captors required of us to sing a song … [saying] sing us a song of Zion. How shall we sing the Lord’s song in a strange land? If I forget you, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget its ability. If I do not remember you, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I do not place Jerusalem above my main joy.”

The bond between the Jewish people and the land of their origins was also maintained in the second exile that followed Roman occupation (and the destruction of the Temple in the years 70 C.E.)

In addition to turning to Jerusalem in prayer three times a day and praying for the return to the land and the city in these prayers and in grace after every meal, the whole Jewish calendar and its seasonal religious celebrations was orientated to the land of Zion. (Thus Jews who live in Australia for example, celebrate the Passover Spring festival in their autumn season.) Indeed the names Zion and Jerusalem were used as synonyms for the land as a whole.

While some Jews continued to live in the land and others returned to it over the ages out of religious ties, for most Jews it was simply the land of their dreams, of a future hope.

With the Enlightenment in Europe that ushered in a spirit of universal freedom (often rejecting the traditional attachments of religion) and with the gradual collapse of empires, the nineteenth century saw more and more nations seeking to take their destinies into their own hands. It was against this backdrop that a Jewish nationalist movement also emerged, seeking to give political form to the abovementioned age old bond between the people and the land; and because the name Zion served to personify the land as a whole, the movement took the name Zionism.

However this movement was predominantly secular, reflecting the zeitgeist of the enlightenment and nascent nationalisms. For most Zionists, the attachment of the Jewish people to the land of Palestine was of essential cultural and historic national importance; but religious ideas or practice were irrelevant for them. In fact it was a secular socialist world view that emerged as the dominant strand within the Zionist movement. Nevertheless, in addition to including other secular nationalists, the movement also included those who described themselves as Religious Zionists.

For many of these, Zionism was a Divinely inspired movement, not only fulfilling the promise in the Torah and the Prophets guaranteeing the people’s return to the land, but actually ushering in the Messianic era. Other Religious Zionists were more modest in their view and saw Zionism simply as the means to enable them to live a full and independent Jewish religious life in the land.

All strands of Zionism however, saw the movement as having an ethical purpose, not only in terms of the well-being of the Jewish people, but also in relation to others. They envisioned a Jewish state (in the sense that it would be a state of the Jewish people) that would at the same time guarantee franchise, dignity, and equality before the law for all its citizens, Jews and non-Jews alike (and this vision is expressed in Israel’s Declaration of Independence).

Accordingly the Zionist movement as a whole sought early on to achieve a modus vivendi both with the local Arab communities and with the Arab world. In 1919 the preeminent Arab leader, the Emir Faisal, co-signed a document with the president of the World Zionist Organization, Dr. Chaim Weizman (later to become the first president of the State of Israel), welcoming the Zionist enterprise and expressing the hope that Jews and Arabs would work together to bring about a flourishing of the region for the benefit of all. The unfolding political developments meant that that dream was lost and conflict ensued with both Arab nationalism and nascent Palestinian nationalism.

This conflict has caused much bloodshed, suffering, displacement, and enmity. The consequences for Palestinian Arabs have been tragic—a source of much distress to us who are proud to be called Jews and Zionists, for the vision of Torah and the vision of Zionism is one in which not only Jews, but all people live in peace and dignity.

And the conflict has been painful and costly for Israeli society.

Generally, I believe that Israel can be proud of the fact that despite the conflict, it has guaranteed equality of franchise and equality before the law for all its citizens. However it would be disingenuous to deny that the conflict does also impinge on the freedoms and opportunities of Israeli Arabs citizens—a matter of ongoing political and legal debate in Israel’s robust democracy.

Similarly, Israeli settlement policy, while motivated by a historic attachment as well as political, security, and in certain cases religious agendas, affects both Palestinian and Israeli society. This matter is not only one of fierce debate on the national level in Israel, but also within Religious Zionism itself.

That is why many Israelis like myself believe that a peaceful resolution of the conflict and the establishment of a democratic, non-militarized Palestinian state alongside the State of Israel is essential not only for Israel’s security, and for the right of Palestinian national self-determination, but also for the health of Judaism, and of the principled enterprise of Zionism.

The primary debate in Israel is not whether a negotiated two-state solution is desirable but whether it is feasible. Recent and past experiences do not instill Israelis with much confidence in that regard; Palestinian efforts to circumvent talks and internationalize the conflict have only heightened Israeli skepticism. Tragically, the absence of a resolution to the conflict and the ongoing violence will continue to impinge deleteriously on the lives of both Israelis and Palestinians.

There is arguably no parallel in human history to the success of Zionism, in restoring the Jewish people to independent life in its ancestral homeland; just as there is no parallel to the degree of fidelity that an exiled people maintained in relation to its land for two millennia. However the future success of Zionism depends substantially on finding a way out of the present political stalemate, so that the land that contains two peoples, and which different faiths call holy, may be a place of flourishing for us all.

8. An Israeli Narrative—At Home in Israel, S. Ilan Troen

My name is Selwyn Ilan Troen. My mother named me Selwyn, an Anglicized version of the name of her mother who was murdered in a pogrom during World War I. Ilan is the Hebrew name I took for myself, a name that means tree, recalling the more than 250 million trees planted in Israel by the Jewish National Fund to reforest the land and halt desertification. Thirty-five years ago I built my home in Omer, a garden community outside Beer-Sheva in the northern Negev desert. Our six children as well as their children all live in Israel and are rooted in this land.

When we built our home, aside from a couple of tents inhabited by a Bedouin family, there were no houses or tents between our home and the old “Green Line,” the armistice border that separated Israel and Jordan, about five miles to the north. We erected a chain link fence to keep our little ones in, and to prevent the Bedouins’ goats from devouring what slowly became a garden, the first trees and green shrubs planted in the vast brown and ochre desert that surrounded us. In those early years, there were no sidewalks or streetlights and no other settlements beyond. We had an unhampered view of the Judean Hills, and at night a clear view of the uncountable bright stars and the Milky Way, much as Abraham and his earlier descendants must have seen them.

Today this area is dotted with Jewish settlements and planned Bedouin towns as well as Bedouin squatter encampments built without government approval. Today the Negev landscape reflects the diverse populations that inhabit it. In addition to Jewish cities and development towns it includes the green fields of Jewish kibbutzim and moshavim (cooperative farms), suburban garden settlements, Bedouin cities and towns like Rahat, Tel Sheva, and Laquiya, and numerous unrecognized/illegal villages and encampments, all with mosques and towering minarets for calling Muslims to prayer.

This filling in of landscapes with separate communities is consistent with the history of the country at-large over the last two centuries. In 1800 there were only 250,000 inhabitants in all of Palestine, the land between the Jordan River and the Mediterranean and between The Lebanon and the Sinai desert. By 1900 the population had grown twofold to 500,000. Today, following a century of extraordinary growth, the population is around 10 million, twenty times greater than just 100 years earlier. In the 20th century Israel/Palestine became one of the most dynamic regions on the face of the globe. This area that until so recently was an underdeveloped backwater of the defunct Ottoman Empire now supports a population larger by a factor of at least three than was found at any time in the ancient period.

Jews played the key role in this growth and vitality. It is not mere coincidence that Ben-Gurion University of the Negev, the university I joined in 1975, is a world leader in arid zone research. It is not a metaphor to assert that Jews have made the desert bloom, enabling all the inhabitants of the region, Jews and non-Jews, to live better and healthier lives. The university draws students from Palestine, Jordan, and Egypt, as well as China and Africa, where rampant desertification is devastating the environment and threatening to decimate the population with drought and famine. The commitment to this field of research and teaching manifests the biblical injunction and Zionist intent to be a light unto the nations.

Founded by the state with the generous assistance of Diaspora Jewry, the university serves a diverse population of students, including immigrants and the children of immigrants from the former Soviet Union, Ethiopia, and North Africa, Israeli Arabs and Palestinians, and both male and female Bedouin students who are actively recruited and supported in their studies. Currently, chairs of such departments as Social Work and Computer Science are Arabs who received part of their education at the university. The university-affiliated hospital, the Soroka Medical Center, the only hospital in the area, similarly serves the medical needs of close to 750,000 of this very diverse Negev population. A majority of the 13,000 babies born each year at Soroka are Bedouins. It isn’t by chance that the first Bedouin woman to join the faculty of an Israeli medical school trained at the Ben-Gurion University Medical School and now teaches there. These are examples of a national Jewish and Zionist commitment that I take personal pride in. They do not pretend that Israel has created a perfect social fabric. They do demonstrate that education to further the pursuit of social justice is an ongoing moral and ethical commitment in what has been a very complex and often hard context.

In my private life, I also have deep personal satisfaction that diverse paths are available in education. Two of our grandchildren attend a Keshet school where religious and secular Jews learn together in a context that highlights shared values. Four are enrolled in the more liberal end of Orthodox Jewish education. Several attend a bilingual Jewish/Arab school where classes are taught jointly by two teachers, Jewish/Hebrew and Muslim or Christian/Arabic. The parents and staff are committed to learning about each other’s cultures, concerns, and fears, and spend long and intense hours, within their own group and with “the others,” negotiating what their children will learn about the more difficult parts of this shared past in a curriculum that includes the Naqba along with Israel Independence Day and Passover together with Ramadan and Easter. Our oldest granddaughter, a third-year student in Social Work at Sapir College, where rockets fired from Gaza killed a student just a few years ago, is currently recruiting Palestinian and Jewish youth for an extracurricular project she’s undertaken.

Lest it appear I am painting a deliberately rosy picture, let me emphasize that I am painfully aware that the pluralistic and tolerant intimacy and amity I am describing are too rare in Israel/Palestine. Israel struggles with an immense number of ethical and moral questions that arise from the conflicting demands of a very diverse population that includes recent Jewish immigrants, Palestinian Arabs, Druze, Bedouin, Christian, and Circassian minorities, as well as increasingly significant numbers of African refugees who cross our borders legally and illegally.

But none of our failures justifies or supports the all too frequent portrait drawn to demonize Israel and the Zionist endeavor. It is this point that I feel compelled to address head on. It is my perspective on rectifying what I see as a misinformed and often malicious campaign to delegitimize the Jewish state that I want to share.

We live in a conflicted land where distance is geographical and social. We do have mixed Jewish/Arab cities and towns like Haifa and mixed Muslim/Christian Arab ones like Nazareth. Nevertheless, most Israelis tend to be separated from one another even within the same city or village by such internal bonds as family, clan, place of origin, religious custom, and cultural tradition. This is the norm in our part of the world, reflected in, and by no means an imposition of the Zionist state. It is an ongoing and publically addressed challenge to Israel as both a Jewish and democratic state to maintain a basis for unity and harmony that simultaneously allows for political and ideological diversity and safeguards social justice for individuals and groups in this contentious and multifaceted polity.

Vociferous critics, whether they are residents or observers, often fail to provide useful insight because they do not grasp and grapple with the very complexity of the context. They seem satisfied to condemn Israel with infuriating smugness without acknowledging and confronting the reality of the “other.”

To rephrase a truism that reflects this “other” reality as I see it: Jews are the majority in Israel but in important respects, they view themselves as a minority. Arabs in Israel are a minority but in significant ways, they act as if they are the majority.

Israeli Jews are uneasy and lack security, their military and economic power notwithstanding. For one thing, no other state in our tumultuous world, however iniquitous, is denied repeatedly in vehement public attacks its right to exist. The repeated assaults in the UN and other international forums cause continual distress. It is no secret that we are surrounded by Arab and Iranian Muslim states. It is less well-known and not often publically acknowledged that many of these reject the reality or possibility of Jewish independence and sovereignty, at best accepting the traditional view that Jews must remain in their proscribed place as “dhimmis”—a second-class community. Yet simultaneously, the Palestinian Arab minority that constitutes only 20 percent of the population of Israel proper makes extraordinary demands. In their recent Future Vision document (2006) and elsewhere, a significant part of the Palestinian intellectual leadership protest the legitimacy of Israel and its Jewish identity and claim forms of autonomy that are granted nowhere else, not even in democratic Europe.

Neutering Israel into a “state of all its citizens,” has long been recognized as unfeasible. The British acknowledged this in concluding Palestine must be partitioned into Jewish and Arab states in the Peel Commission Report of 1937, later the basis for the UN partition plan of 1947 and for a host of international position papers through the present. Why should we still have to defend the idea that Jews are entitled to sovereignty and independence?

The League of Nations granted Britain a Mandate over Palestine to enable Jews to “reconstitute” themselves [the term used in the document] as a modern people with responsibility for a polity of their homeland. This is how Zionists understood themselves: we have “re-turned,” “re-claimed,” and “re-built” ourselves and the land.

The “re” is crucial: it emphasizes the notion of “again.” International and legal institutions acknowledged that we Jews are a historic people with deep and longstanding ties to the land. The current discourse brands us as colonial-settlers, interlopers with no prior claim and no rights to the land. It asserts that the land belongs to others. I resent the charge and reject the claim that we are a colonial-settler society. The four generations of my family currently living in Israel are all deeply rooted there. The fact that some family members trace their roots back 500 years in the Land of Israel, that some of our children were born here and others were not, does not entitle them to “belong more” than recent arrivals. All our individual and collective identities are real and inseparable from this land.

We live in Hebrew. Zionism revitalized this language spoken and written in the land in the past, kept alive over two thousand years, and recovered for modern use. Hebrew is the language of sacred texts and their commentaries composed by long-deceased Jews. It is also the authentic and living language in which a vigorous national life is conducted with advanced science, great literature, slang, and popular songs. It is the language in which I converse, write, and dream.

This same process of recovery is expressed in naming the land. European colonizers established New England, New Amsterdam, and New Orleans. In Israel there is no New Berlin, Vienna, Warsaw, Lodz, or Odessa. Even our street names resonate with biblical associations and with those who dreamed of the return and worked for it.

Contemporary critics might enhance the discourse if, like those engaged in the Peel Report and in earlier UN discussions over Palestine, they did not presume to judge who was right and who was wrong. Both sides in this conflict are committed to their beliefs and love the land. Giving thoughtful, attentive, and sympathetic reception to the narratives of each side without assigning virtue or truth to either, might make it possible to reach a pragmatic compromise.

I personally deplore the steady growth of Israeli occupation that threatens the desired outcome, a final and lasting peace based on partition of the land into two states for two peoples. But I do not see the Israeli occupation of the West Bank in a vacuum.

Israeli settlers were rightly compelled by government decision to leave flourishing settlements they had built in the Gaza strip, but this unilateral withdrawal did not result in peaceful coexistence. The development town of Sderot and other Israeli cities, towns and agricultural settlements within range of rockets and missiles have been and continue to be subject to repeated missile attacks. On too many occasions, and as recently as November 2011, a siren warned my family that we had forty-five seconds to get adults and children into our home bomb shelter. These attacks are generally ignored in the media since they are local, not massive. But I assure you they take a toll. As I pointed out above, we feel uneasy. Missiles were rained on the Galilee in the aftermath of withdrawal from Lebanon. Missiles fell on Haifa. We do not see an end to this; we are promised, in fact, that the attacks will continue.

In this same vein, I do not like the separation barriers between Israel and the West Bank in the central part of the country but these are not “apartheid” walls. They provide some security, a barrier to terrorists, and have been effective. Like many observers, I too see hope in the “Arab spring.” But I am acutely aware there are many “Arab streets” and no one knows which will prevail.

So for me, this is a core issue: I want and need you to recognize the legitimacy of my existence and purpose in the Promised Land. It is disturbing to have my belonging rejected and my country viewed as a pariah-state. The threats are physical but also made through wrongly critical and often sanctimonious discourse. I believe they are often founded on distorted history, couched in misapplied theoretical, legal, and moral principles, and at times offered in theological undertones.

Muslims freely imagine the night ride of Mohammed on the winged horse el-Burak to the masjid al-aqsa on Jerusalem’s holy mountain; Christians walk in the footsteps of Jesus and offer devotions at Gethsemane or at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Why is the authenticity and validity of the connection of Jews to the land open to question?

For the first time in history fundamentalist Muslims have claimed all of Palestine as a Waqf in which Jews are proscribed and under threat. Even secular and moderate Palestinians have denied the connection of Jews to Jerusalem and have yet to affirm the legitimacy of the Jewish presence even if they accept the need for pragmatic compromise. While some Christian fundamentalists support Israel, anticipating the role Israel may play in an awesome Christian drama, other Christians have refused or been reluctant to offer Israel a place in history. With more than a whiff of Supersessionism, some still reject the realities of an active Jewish presence in the modern world. The Vatican opposed the creation of a Jewish state and recognized it only in 1993, or after the Oslo Accords. Liberation theologians supplant the Hebrews with the Palestinians in an appropriation of the Exodus story.

My impression is that the voice of Israel is rarely heard within Christian churches. Two years ago I was apparently among the first Israeli Jews ever invited to address a committee of the Synod of the United Churches of Christ on the issue of BDS. One may inquire how often church movements engage in dialogue with moderate Israelis as they consider yet another resolution criticizing Israel and call on opposition to the Jewish state through one means or another.

My own work is in the field of Israel Studies. I try to sensitize my students to the complexity of the issues. I offer neither templates nor advocacy. Rather I attempt to bring multiple perspectives. My students can only learn if they address contradictory and competing narratives. This is no mere relativism. Human actions must be subject to scrutiny and moral judgment. Yet simplistic moralizing distorts truth and inhibits appreciation for the complexities of the conflict.

Another way of expressing this is that, while in geometry parallel lines do not meet, apparently parallel narratives in human affairs are often intricately interwoven. Examining them together is unlikely to produce a unitary and agreed replacement. Rather, genuine attention to the other may engender mutual respect and understanding.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Introduction: The following is an annotated bibliography compiled by the Middle East Monitoring Group as mandated by the 219th General Assembly (2010) to serve as a resource for individuals and congregations. The intent was not to compile a list that conformed to current PC(USA) positions, but rather provide some of the more important works from a breadth of perspectives for those who wish to engage in further study of this complicated and multifaceted issue.

1. Historical Perspective

Venerated by three faiths, torn by conflict, conquered, and rebuilt again and again, Jerusalem a sacred city that has endured terrible tragedy. Armstrong traces the history of how Jews, Christians, and Muslims have all laid claim to Jerusalem as their holy place, and how three radically different concepts of holiness have shaped and scarred the city for thousands of years.

Scholars from seven countries explore the historical treatment of Jerusalem and its multi-religious tradition. The book ranges from the fourth century B.C.E. to the present, covering Jewish, Muslim, and, to a lesser extent, Christian heritage. The essays present a balanced picture, helping to correct often distorted images of the city presented over the last forty years.

A leading Israeli political philosopher for decades, Avineri traces the rise of the Zionist idea from its origins in the 19th century to the present day. He argues that Zionism was not primarily a religious response to persecution, a common view, but rather a complex and diverse conglomeration of ideas, motives, and hopes. Considered a modern classic on the subject.

This is a definitive study of the events, secret diplomacy, and politics during WWI by the European powers in the Middle Eastern theatre. Particular attention is paid to the various often-contradictory policies and promises made by the British to both Arab and Jewish factions and the post war carving up of the Ottoman Empire.

The culmination of nearly six years of research by more than thirty participants, this authoritative reference work describes in detail the more than 400 Palestinian villages that were destroyed or depopulated during the 1948 war. The body of the text is devoted to describing the villages before 1948, summarizing their history from a wide variety of Arab and Western sources and a description of the current status of the sites, including post-1948 Israeli settlements established on confiscated village lands.

This work covers the spectrum of the Israel-Arab conflict from the earliest days, through the wars and peacemaking efforts, up to the Israel-PLO and Israel-Jordan peace accords. It includes speeches, letters, articles, and reports dealing with all the major interests in the area from relevant political parties and world leaders.

This is a collection of more than fifty scholarly and historical perspectives to help shed light on the historical and contemporary issues affecting the Palestinian people. Topics covered include politics, culture, society, history, economics, and geography.
Noted British historian and international bestseller Simon Sebag Montefiore’s comprehensive and balanced study traces the history of the city from its prehistoric inhabitants to its emergence as the religious center for the three major monotheistic religions. Particular attention is paid to the dichotomy between the “earthly” and the “heavenly” cities from the perspectives of pilgrims, conquerors, and its diverse citizens throughout the ages.

Morris provides an inclusive history of the conflict, detailing relationships between Israel and the Arabs since the beginning of the modern Zionist movement in the late-19th century. Relying on a vast array of Hebrew, Arabic, and English sources, he digs beneath politics and diplomacy to get at the broader social and cultural history of Palestinian Arabs and Israeli Jews.

A fascinating study that traces the history of America’s fascination and involvement in the Middle East, that looks at the interplay between religion, millennialism, politics and U.S. foreign policy. Oren is an historian and the current Israeli Ambassador to the United States.

This book revisits the formative period of the State of Israel. Pappé argues that the claim about the Palestinian population leaving of its own accord during the War of Independence is myth and offers archival evidence to demonstrate that a central plank in Israel’s founding ideology was the forcible removal of the indigenous population. This book makes a plea to acknowledge the ethnic cleansing of Palestine in 1948 as the root cause of the ongoing Palestine-Israel conflict.

Dr. Qumsiyeh synthesizes data from hundreds of original sources to provide the most comprehensive study of nonviolent civil resistance in Palestine. The book contains hundreds of stories of the heroic and highly innovative methods of resistance employed by the Palestinians over more than 100 years, analyzing the successes, failures, missed opportunities, and challenges facing ordinary Palestinians. This is the only book to critically and comparatively study the uprisings of 1920–21, 1929, 1936–39, 1970s, 1987–1991, and 2000–2006.

Simha Flapan (1911–1987) was an Israeli historian and politician. He served as the national secretary of the left Zionist Mapam party, and the director of its Arab Affairs department from 1959 to the mid 1970s; he also edited New Outlook magazine—a non-party monthly that promoted Arab-Jewish rapprochement.

2. Theological

In this book Ateek outlines a vision that is threefold: the unity of all Palestinian Christians, dialogue between Christian and Muslim Palestinians, and peace between Israelis and Palestinians. Ateek, who is an Episcopalian priest and an Arab citizen of Israel, presents a critical voice to this discussion through his passion for justice and his biblical and theological perspective.

This book describes first-century Jewish and Christian beliefs about the land of Israel and surveys New Testament passages that directly address the question of land and faith. It also looks at present-day tensions surrounding “territorial religion” in the modern Middle East, helping contemporary Christians develop a Christian theology of the land. Gary M. Burge is professor of New Testament at Wheaton College in Illinois.

A collection of essays from a group of scholars that touches on various themes of Jewish theology regarding the Land of Israel. Of particular importance is the essay, “The Biblical Concept of the Land of Israel: cornerstone of the covenant between God and Israel,” by Harry Orlinsky, which provides a broad examination of this crucial theme.

A historical review of Jewish theological commitments to the Land, this thorough book is written by a rabbi prominent in the field of Jewish-Christian relations. Korn moves from a deep examination of Scripture to the meaning of covenant and Jewish understandings of the modern State of Israel.

A scholarly Roman Catholic reappraisal of Jewish theologies of land and the state of Israel as analogous to Christian sacramental thought. He traces both the supercessionist tendencies of many Christian theologies prior to World War II and reviews different Christian theologies regarding the Jews through a covenantal lens, examines Christian attachment to the Holy Land, and wrestles with the theological significance of the modern State of Israel.

This book presents a biblical theology of land that interweaves the contemporary Israeli and Palestinian conflict over territory with theological reflection on the biblical claim that God owns all land and that humans are never more than momentary caretakers. The book is structured around a dual focus on the past of the Bible and the contemporary history of war in the Middle East. It provides a clear summary of the evolution of treaties, wars, and negotiations between the two parties in the past sixty years. It also has many helpful many maps that bring the geopolitical developments into clear light.

This book through different articles explores the potential that religion has in resolving conflicts that have been irresolvable through secular initiatives. The contents of this volume reflect contributors’ responses to the conference title and range from polemical, jurisprudential, sociological, to esoterical. Based on experiences in the Holy Land and beyond, including Lebanon, Ireland, Central and South America, and South Africa, this book articulates the religious challenge to oppression and injustice in the context of the Palestinian struggle for justice.

As the title indicates, this book focuses on the Christian relationship to historic Israel/Palestine and the theological understanding of it. He traces the origins and development of the Christian concept of “Holy Land,” paying particular attention to the key period of the fourth through the seventh century, and considers how Jews have reacted to those developments.

3. Biographical/Memoir

Anna Baltzer is a Jewish American Columbia graduate, former Fulbright scholar, granddaughter of Holocaust refugees, and an activist for Palestinian human rights. Witness in Palestine follows Baltzer’s eight months of working with the International Women’s Peace Service in the West Bank, documenting human rights abuses and supporting Palestinian-led nonviolent resistance.

Ben-Ami is a former foreign minister of Israel and played a major role in the 2000 Camp David peace talks as well as many other negotiations. As such, he is able to give a firsthand account of many of the most important events and figures in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict of the last few decades, and provides his own take on the major historical issues from Israel’s independence (such as the 1967 war and its impact) to the present day.

Braverman, Mark. Fatal Embrace. Austin, Tex.: Synergy Books, 2010

Trained in clinical psychology and crisis management, Mark Braverman devoted his professional career to working with groups and individuals undergoing traumatic stress. Tracing his own journey as a Jew struggling with the difficulties of modern Israel, he shows how the Jewish quest for safety and empowerment and the Christian endeavor to atone for centuries of anti-Semitism have united to suppress the conversations needed to bring peace.

In a series of moving and provocative conversations, nine members of the Israeli Defense Force tell why they refused to serve in the Occupied territories of the West Bank and Gaza. In this book, the nine describe their risky moral decision against the background of the Israeli-Palestinian struggle.

Elias Chacour is the archbishop of Akko, Haifa, Nazareth, and All Galilee of the Melkite Greek Catholic Church. Noted for his efforts to promote reconciliation between Arabs and Israelis, he is the author of two books about the experience of Palestinian people living in present-day Israel.

Gordis, Daniel, If a place can make you cry. New York: Crown, 2002

In 1998, Gordis and his family went to Israel on what he thought was a one-year sabbatical from his congregation in Los Angeles. Once in Israel, though, they decided they needed to move there permanently. This book is a unique set of reflections based on emails and articles that Rabbi Gordis sent to friends in the United States over time, describing how and why his family made their home in Israel, what life was like as the Second Intifada broke out, and how his own understandings of both Israel and the dynamics of the conflict evolved during this time.

A Palestinian medical doctor and founder of the Daughters of Life Foundation, Abuelaish describes his pain and grief at the loss of three daughters in the January 2009 incursion into Gaza when they were killed by an Israeli tank shell. It is a redemptive story describing how this horrific tragedy strengthened his resolve to act for the whole of humanity.

A spiritual memoir of grief, faith, and healing by an American-born Israeli whose thirteen-year-old son was murdered in 2001 near their home in the West Bank. Hauntingly beautiful and unflinchingly honest, Mandell invites the reader into her journey of loss and hope.

In this memoir Miko Peled chronicles his journey as the son and grandson of renowned Israeli leaders and pioneers who, in his own life, has become committed to building a single democratic state in Israel/Palestine in which Palestinians and Israelis will all enjoy full equality. Miko was born in Jerusalem in 1961 into a well-known Zionist family. His grandfather, Dr. Avraham Katsnelson was a Zionist leader and signer on the Israeli Declaration of Independence. His father, Matti Peled was a young officer in the war of 1948 and a general in the war of 1967 when Israel took control of the West Bank, Gaza, Golan Heights, and the Sinai.

Written by a Nobel Peace Prize winner, the current president of Israel, and a protégé of ben-Gurion himself, this book examines the dominant figure of the Zionist movement in British Mandate Palestine who became the first prime minister of the independent State of Israel and exerted massive influence over the creation and development of the state.

In portraits of Arabs and Jews from all walks of life and political perspectives, Shipler examines the “attitudes, images, and stereotypes that Arabs and Jews have of one another, the roots of their aversions, and the complex interactions between them.” The effects of war, nationalism, terrorism, religion, and history come to life, illuminated by insights drawn from Shipler’s five-year residence in Jerusalem.

Jean Zaru is a longtime activist and Quaker leader from Ramallah. In this book, she shares her convictions about Christian nonviolence in the context of the Israeli/Palestinian conflict. Zaru presents an alternative vision for peace and justice through a theology of nonviolence.

4. Contemporary Issues

Citing decades of impasse in negotiating an equitable two state solution, Ali Abunimah contends that Israeli’s and Palestinians are so intertwined geographically and economically that separation cannot lead to the security Israelis need or the rights Palestinians must have. Modeling his approach on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Belfast Agreement, he attempts to envision a single federalized state that protects both Jewish and Palestinian interests.

Omar Barghouti is an independent Palestinian commentator and human rights activist. He holds a graduate degree from Columbia University and another from Tel Aviv University. Barghouti’s book argues for a rights-based Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions Campaign for the purposes of ending Israel’s occupation of Palestine.

Ben-Ami is the founding director of J Street, the new “pro-Israel, pro-peace” Jewish advocacy organization. While his family helped found Tel Aviv, Ben-Ami believes that the traditional Jewish defense of Israel is problematic and that a new conversation needs to take place that combines an affirmation of Israel’s future with letting go of some of the myths used to support that affirmation in the past. A crucial resource for understanding some of the dynamics of the debate among mainstream American Jews over the best way to support Israel.

Benvenisti, former deputy mayor of Jerusalem, raises the possibility of a confederation of Israel/Palestine, the only solution that he feels will bring lasting peace. He argues that the seven million people in the territory between Jordan and the Mediterranean are mutually dependent regarding all spheres of human activity. Each side must accept the realities that two national entities live within one geopolitical entity and that their conflict will not be resolved by population transfers or land partition.

Burg argues that the Jewish nation has been traumatized by its memories of Hitler and the Holocaust and has lost the ability to trust itself, its neighbors, or the world around it. He contends that this is one of the causes for the growing nationalism and violence that are plaguing Israeli society and reverberating through Jewish communities worldwide. Burg uses his own family history—his parents were Holocaust survivors—to inform his innovative views on what the Jewish people need to do to move on and eventually live in peace with their Arab neighbors and feel comfortable in world at large. Avraham Burg is the former speaker of the Knesset in Israel (1999–2003). He has been active in politics as a leader in the Labor Party and the One Israel party.

Written by an Israeli journalist and security analyst, Goodman reviews the real and perceived threats to Israel’s existence beyond its borders, but also argues that these threats have enabled Israel to ignore its pressing threats from within, particularly the problem of Israel’s ability to maintain its democratic character and Jewish identity while continuing to maintain control over the Palestinian Territories captured in 1967. Goodman argues that these internal issues are the most dangerous current threats to Israel, even the rise of Iran.

This volume offers a wide range of articles from both Jewish and Christian scholars exploring an assortment of issues that have risen in the modern period between Judaism and different Protestant groups. Included are articles on WCC relation with Judaism; Cooperation between Christian and Jewish millennial groups; Presbyterian-Jewish relations; American evangelicals and the state of Israel.

Gorenberg provides a provocative critically acclaimed analysis of the contemporary state of Israel in the aftermath of the Six Day War. He traces how the rise of influence from the religious right and the consequences of the occupation have created the current crisis that threatens the very principles of the Israeli democracy.

Horovitz takes the reader into the daily experience of violence experienced during the Second Intifada by both sides, both in actual attacks and in the constant tension of expecting the next one. An invaluable insight into the grim effectiveness and impact of violence on prospects for peace and the ability to believe that the other side would be willing to live in peace.

Co-written by the former director of the Office of Theology, Worship, and Education in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the executive director of the National Council of Synagogues, this book is the fruits of a sustained conversation in 2005 between the two groups on various issues and differences between Judaism and Christianity.

The author brings many years of scholarship and experience in the area of Islamic Studies and Christian-Muslim dialogue. The great portion of the book is taken up with three general topics: models of Christian-Muslim dialogue in the United States, what can go wrong in the exercise of dialogue, and Christian and Muslim perspectives on religious pluralism. Smith reviews the history and legacy of engagement between Christians and Muslims.

This book is a collection of addresses from “The Invention of History” conference held in Bethlehem, Palestine, in 2009. It analyzes major theological trends and shifts of the twentieth century in several contexts and focuses on the interplay between theology and politics regarding Israel and Palestine. The Reverend Dr. Mitri Raheb is the pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran Christmas Church in Bethlehem and is the president of the Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Jordan and the Holy Land.

The late Edward W. Said was University Professor of English and Comparative Literature at Columbia University. In fifty essays (most of which were originally published in the Cairo Ahram Weekly and London’s al-Hayat), Palestinian writer and Columbia University literary scholar Said offers a bleak view of the Middle East peace process since Oslo. Deeply concerned with the Palestinian people, Said argues that peace can exist only if equality and respect exist.

The author, a member of the New York Times editorial board and adjunct professor at Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, argues that by the middle of the 21st century, there will be an uneasy peace established between Israelis and Palestinians, manifested through the creation of an independent state of Palestine alongside Israel. Unger sketches the possibilities and problems inherent in other potential solutions, acknowledges the challenges to achieving a two-state solution, and then makes a case for why a two-state solution will eventually be accepted by both sides as the only acceptable resolution to the conflict.

Wagner, Donald E. Dying in the Land of Promise. London: Melisende, 2001

The history of Palestinian Christianity is tragic and inspiring, calling for a response to a community that is endangered in the “land of promise,” given the present rates of emigration, economic blight, and an all too delayed resolution to the political conflict in the Holy Land today. With a just resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, Wagner envisions Palestinian Christians playing a pivotal role in building bridges of reconciliation. With the help of Western Christians, these Palestinians might well see a different future whenever peace follows justice.
5. Filmography & Literature

The daughter of Palestinian refugees of the 1967 War, Susan Albuwaha grew up in Kuwait, Jordan, occupied East Jerusalem, and the United States. In this novel, she tells the story of the Abulhejas who are forcibly removed to the Jenin refugee camp. This is the Palestinian story told through four generations of a single family.

Tolan is a teacher and radio documentary producer. The Washington Post selected this book among its top nonfiction titles for 2006. He has reported from more than thirty countries, especially in the Middle East, Latin America, the Balkans, and Eastern Europe. This novel is the story of Dalia, an Israeli college student, and Bashir, a Palestinian, who began a rare friendship, forged in the aftermath of war and tested over the next thirty-five years in ways that neither could imagine on that summer day in 1967. Based on extensive research, Tolan brings the Israeli-Palestinian conflict down to its most human level, suggesting that even amid the bleakest political realities there exist stories of hope and reconciliation.

Paradise Now. 2005 Augustus Film, produced by: Warner Brothers

Golden Globe award winning film (also an Academy Award nominee for Best Foreign Language Film) that tells the story of Said and Khaled, two young Palestinians who plan a suicide mission into Tel Aviv. It ultimately tells of two different outcomes, laying bare both the humanity and horror of acts that are impossible to understand, arising from a context in which there are no easy answers.

2048—a film by Yaron Kaftori (Israel 2010)

A young cinematographer discovers that his grandfather, who was a documentary filmmaker, made a film about Israel’s 60th Independence Day. However Israel no longer exists and its former citizens are scattered all over the globe, living as modern day refugees. After watching his grandfather’s tapes and in an effort to understand what went wrong, the young man travels the world interviewing former Israelis who, each from his own perspective, tells the story of what happened during the last forty years.

Beaufort (2007) by Joseph Cedar Set as the last Israeli soldiers are withdrawing from Lebanon in 2000, it explores the feelings, fears, and moral dilemmas posed by the eighteen-year war and occupation in Southern Lebanon. Based on Ron Leshem’s novel, If There’s a Heaven, and nominated for an Academy Award.

Dolphin Boy (2011) by Dani Menkin and Yonatan Nir.

Provides a basis for questions about societies within Israel, trauma, psychology.

Precious Life (2010) by Shlomi Eldar

With the help of a prominent Israeli journalist, Precious Life chronicles the struggle of an Israeli pediatrician and a Palestinian mother to get treatment for her baby, who suffers from an incurable genetic disease.

This production thoughtfully examines the religious beliefs and practices shared by Jews, Christians, and Muslims to illustrate how many individuals in the Abrahamic faith communities are dealing with historical conflicts yet remain dedicated to facilitating understanding and respect. Three Faiths, One God captures a broad range of voices and ideas of ordinary people and respected scholars in the interfaith field. The program contrasts the religious practices of the three faiths, including the rituals of fasting and marriage.

Map 2: The Separation Wall (blue line). None of the Palestinian West Bank is part of Israel under international law. However, the separation wall is not on the West Bank’s border, but meanders deeply into Palestinian territory and puts large swaths of the West Bank on the “Israel side” of the Wall.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY MISSION COUNCIL

COMPassion, PEaCe AND JuStICE

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)

VIA OVERNIGHT DELIVERY

April 19, 2011

Mr. Douglas R. Oberhelman
Chairman and Chief Executive Officer
Caterpillar, Inc.
100 NE Adams Street
Peoria, IL 61629-1430

Dear Mr. Oberhelman:

Greetings to you. My name is Brian Ellison, I’m a pastor of a Presbyterian church in the Kansas City area. I’ve served for twelve years here and during that time have also served on a variety of committees at the national level of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). I am serving currently as chair of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), and I am a director of the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

As you are probably aware, at the direction of our General Assembly, our committee has been working for the past seven years with several companies in whom we invest, including Caterpillar, Inc., to address a number of concerns about the ways those companies are profiting from certain pursuits in Israel and Palestine that we believe have contributed, directly or indirectly, to suffering in that troubled region. The conversations between CAT and our committee have not always been productive. Indeed, our representatives and predecessors—yours and mine—have made very little progress in finding common ground or achieving even modest agreement on ways the company’s otherwise positive commitments to human rights could be lived out in this part of the world. The negative outcomes of past attempts at conversation (or, sometimes, the absence of conversation) have adversely affected both the company and the church, including the thousands of Presbyterians in the Peoria area whose families and congregations include Caterpillar employees at every level of the company.

I would like for us to try to change that, and I’m asking you for the opportunity to meet. I’d like to meet with you personally or with representatives at a high enough level of the company who have the ability to speak with authority on matters of company policy and, potentially, help bring about real change. Our committee is willing to have this conversation with a new openness to the company’s efforts when they are undertaken sincerely and forthrightly.
